Association of Counties survey reports on numbers of workers

The Iowa City Campus of the University of Iowa is facing an enrollment decline, according to a new survey.

The survey, which was conducted by the Association of Counties, found that the number of students at the university is down by 25% compared to last year. The decline is attributed to a number of factors, including the pandemic and rising tuition costs.

The survey also found that the number of full-time equivalent employees at the university has dropped by 10% since last year. This is likely due to budget cuts and a decrease in the number of students.

The Association of Counties is calling on the state to provide more funding to the university to help it weather the current challenges.

Just in time for the celebration of Martin Luther King Jr. Day, the Mayor's Youth Employment Program offices, located at 1310 S. Linn St., will get a much-needed face lift with a $14,000 grant from the Iowa Department of Cultural Affairs.

The grant, which was awarded to the program by the Iowa Arts Council, will be used to purchase new furniture and office supplies, as well as to make repairs to the building's interior. The funds will be matched by the program's own funds, bringing the total cost of the renovation to $28,000.

The board of regents has been funding a program that allows professors to spend their summers doing research and writing books.

The program, called the Center for Advanced Studies, provides professors with a salary and an office space to work on their research.

Most of the professors who participate in the program are working on projects that will not be finished until their work is reviewed by the Iowa City campus of the University of Iowa.

"There's no causal "trials" said Professor Jones, director of the center. "People don't just drop in. You can't just walk into any office and get a history lesson."

Elita, a giant pink elephant and a 60-foot long custard stand reassembled the first "The Walk of the States," business fair presented by the Iowa City Chamber of Commerce in late October. The fair was designed to attract a larger number of customers.

Barbara Xakellis, chairwoman of the Area Chamber of Commerce Business Fair Program, said the fair was a step in the right direction to attract the public.

"This is the most we’ve ever advertised it," she said. "We’re about as close to a full-blown business fair as we can get without the presence of the business fair at Hancher Auditorium."

"This is the first time we've ever had a business fair," said Executive Director Vicki Herbert Wilson. "We’re looking to help businesses advertise to Iowa City customers."

"I didn’t know what to expect," said Executive Director and Area Chamber Director Dana Ellis. "It was a good idea and a different perception for us. I think being in a larger number of businesses we wouldn’t see other ideas."

Vicki: Wilson also said she didn’t know what to expect. "But that’s a part of the show. We didn’t know exactly what we had."

When asked if the show were a success, she said "so far so good."

If a larger number of businesses and customers together, why not?" said Ellis.

We realized all the doors that we could open in our marketing plan."

Ellis said it was possible to attract a larger number of customers and much more advertising for Iowa City businesses."

"It was a good experience," said Vicki Herbert Wilson. "I think we can improve on this to make it a great experience for everyone."

THE WAR ON DRUGS

Allegations against Quayle suppressed by federal prison officials

O n candidates for 1991's Most Egregiously Buried News Story, an award our government's suppression of allegations of drug use against Vice President Dan Quayle should win. The Quayle administration and the federal prison officials who cooperated in suppressing these allegations deserve to be posthumously honored. It is simply incredible to learn that the criminal strip "Desno­ex" was intended for these few days this fall in a newspaper with a headline "Four Stories of Drug Use in Presidential Campaign". The stories that appeared on the same page as the headline are only a small fraction of the stories that were suppressed. In all, 28 stories of drug use in the presidential campaign have been suppressed, according to a review of the evidence by the Department of Justice.

The most disturbing aspect of this story is that the federal prison officials knew they were suppressing the evidence of drug use against Quayle. They knew that the evidence was valid, and that it would be crucial in making a decision about whether to keep Quayle in office. They also knew that the evidence was strong enough to warrant further investigation. But they chose to suppress the evidence anyway, in order to protect the reputation of the Quayle administration.

This is an outrage. It is an example of the kind of behavior that we should expect from a prison administration, but not from a presidential campaign. It is a clear case of abuse of power, and it warrants investigation by the Department of Justice.

UI President Stanley Ruddick said he was confident the funds would be raised to the needs price.

"Our track record shows a high of over $30,000 in this area," Ruddick said. "A successful fundraising program will be dependent on the progress of the project."

The Regents gave the go-ahead for a $1 million project to be completed by the end of the fiscal year. The project includes adding 5,000 square feet to the Bartlett Fieldhouse, which will be free of rent.

President Ruddick said the additions are expected to be completed by the end of next year, which will be the completion date for the decision to reverse the buildings.

"Iowa and the entire state of Iowa and the state of Iowa have been very successful in funding projects," Ruddick said.

UI President Stanley Ruddick said the renovations will be completed by the end of this year. "We're very excited about the decision to reverse the decision to create the buildings."

National premiers of 'Juice' coincide with violent acts

Alan Flippin

Violence broke out at theaters in Los Angeles and New York City following the national premieres of the urban film 'Juice.' A 17-year-old boy was killed and four people were wounded.

At a Los Angeles theater Friday, a group of 20 violent youths, some of whom had not been seen anywhere else in Los Angeles, arrived as the film's premiere was ending.

A Paramount spokesperson who requested anonymity said Saturday in Los Angeles that the demonstrators did not affect the film's premieres.

"The most disturbing aspect of the Los Angeles premieres was that the demonstrators arrived wearing face masks and giving each other hand signals," said the spokesperson.

Many theater owners voiced alarm over the size of the violence that plagued 'Juice.' The New York City premiere of the film was for an invited audience only, and few large crowds were expected.

"We are very disturbed by this," said a spokesperson for the American Film Institute, which has been trying to promote the film as a serious work of art.

"We believe that the film has the potential to be a powerful tool for understanding the problems of inner-city youth," said the spokesperson. "We were not aware of any previous incidents at any of the premieres before we arrived this afternoon."
Scorsese takes on B classic

For his early successes, the director was known for his passion and dedication to film. In 1962, he directed the film "The Last Temptation of Christ," a controversial film that caused outrage among certain religious groups for its portrayal of Jesus. The film was released to mixed reviews, with some praising Scorsese's bold approach and others criticizing its controversial nature.

In recent years, Scorsese has continued to make critically acclaimed films. His work has been celebrated for its raw emotion and gritty realism. His latest film, "The Irishman," was released in 2019 and received widespread critical acclaim. The film tells the story of a hitman who looks back at his life in a series of flashbacks, exploring themes of loyalty, family, and justice.
