Elderly woman attacked in Coralville motel

A 73-year-old woman was attacked by a U.S. soldier in her Coralville motel room Thursday night. Karl R. Knutson, 41, of Columbus, Ga., is accused of tying the woman to the bed with leather restraints, using a stun gun on her back and removing her clothing. The woman was able to escape and call for help when Knutson left the room to get condoms from his car, court records state.

Knutson, a U.S. Army sergeant stationed at Fort Benning, Ga., is being held on $51,000 bail. Upon investigating the incident at the motel, police discovered a .357 pistol and a .357 revolver in Knutson's car.

He was charged with first-degree burglary, assault with intent to commit sexual abuse, false imprisonment and carrying weapons.

Pope selects Denver for U.S. visit

DENVER — Pope John Paul II said Sunday he would travel to Denver for the Roman Catholic Church's eighth annual world youth day next year, his first U.S. trip in six years.

Denver edged out Buffalo, N.Y., and Minneapolis-St. Paul to play host to the papal visit, which will coincide with the weeklong youth conference in August 1993.

Comic Sam Kinison killed in car crash

NEEDLES, Calif. (AP) — Preacher-turned-bawdy comic Sam Kinison was killed and his bride was seriously hurt when their car crashed into a pickup that swerved in their path on a desert highway, state police said Saturday.

The pickup struck the car head-on Friday evening on a two-lane highway near the California, Nevada and Arizona state lines, killing the 38-year-old comedian, the California Highway Patrol said.

His bride of six days, Malika, 27, was hospitalized with a concussion, and her injuries were not life-threatening, said Kinison publicist Debbie Baker.

IRA claims deadly bombing in London

LONDON — The IRA on Saturday claimed responsibility for a bombing in London's financial district that killed three people and left more than 90 injured. And it promised more attacks until British troops withdraw from Northern Ireland.

Friday night's business district bombing — and a second suspected IRA bombing at a major traffic junction early Saturday — came on the heels of the Conservative Party's surprise win in Thursday's elections.

Second body found south of Coralville dam

John P. Waterhouse
Daily Iowan

The Johnson County Sheriff's Department on Friday found the second body of the two men who drowned March 17 while fishing on the lower side of the Coralville dam.

The body of Jeff Brogan, 23, of rural Hills, Iowa, was found by Johnson County Sheriff's Department deputies, floating one-half to three-quarters of a mile south of the Coralville dam at 8:15 a.m.

Friday.

Nearly 24 hours earlier, deputies found the body of 18-year-old Justin Ramseyer of Iowa City at 9:15 a.m. Thursday, floating on the north side of the Iowa River near Crandic Park in Iowa City.

The two men were found within 300 feet of each other.

Brogan and Ramseyer were fishing too close to the Coralville dam behind the Iowa River Power Co. restaurant more than three weeks ago when their boat was sucked under the spillway. A third man, Chris Ellis, 23, of North Liberty, Iowa, jumped out of the boat unharmed before it capsized.

"Now that we've found both bodies, the search is complete. The nightmare is over," Johnson County Sheriff Robert Carpenter said.

For eight days after the drowning, several local fire departments and the sheriff's department were actively searching for the two bodies. Divers searched the face of the dam several times after the U.S. Corps of Engineers lowered the level of the water. Volunteers also dragged the waters with nets and a search dog was used as well.

For the past two weeks, the sheriff's department monitored the banks of the river daily from the Coralville dam to Hills.

Carpenter said the bodies were probably snagged under a tree stump or caught in a hole. He said the warmer water temperatures most likely helped the bodies surface by increasing the rate at which they decompose.

"I think this was probably one of the longest search efforts since the '60s," he said. "It was also one of the more extensive searches I can remember."

Fire department volunteers from Lone Tree, Hills, Tiffin, Coralville, Iowa City, Swisher, North Liberty, Solon and Oxford, as well as the Coralville and Iowa City Police departments, assisted the Johnson County Sheriff's Department in the search.

Nearly 3,500 people attended the powwow this weekend at the UI Recreation Building, where 150 participants from across the Midwest performed traditional American Indian dances.

Inter-tribal powwow draws crowd of 3,500

John P. Waterhouse
Daily Iowan

Nearly 3,500 people packed the UI Recreation Building over the weekend to attend the Third Annual Inter-tribal Powwow sponsored by the UI American Indian Student Association.

The carnival-like atmosphere — complete with cherry-flavored Sno-Kones and hot dogs — featured 150 dance participants from as far away as Oklahoma, New Mexico, Montana and Canada.

Tom Farnsworth, a fifth-grader from Helen Lemme elementary school in Iowa City who attended the powwow, said the participants' costumes were "interesting to see."

"I was amazed when I saw the costumes because of all the work that must have gone into making them," he said.

In one of his classes at Helen Lemme, Tom said he studied a unit on American Indians. "I was encouraged to attend the powwow by my teacher... but now that I'm here, I think I'm the only one in my class who came," he said.

He said more people should have gone to the three-day inter-tribal powwow because "there are so many things to see."

His mother, Sharon, said when an event such as a powwow is brought to Iowa City, more people should take advantage of it. "People often overlook what is right in front of them and search elsewhere."

"Last year our family traveled to South Carolina, and we saw some Cherokees," she said, "but when so many different American Indians from across the nation come to Iowa City, why pay money to go anywhere else?"

Shirley Snyder, who used to live on the Navajo reservation in southern Utah, said the annual powwows "keep us all sane."

Moderates appear in control after parliamentary elections

Neil MacFarquhar
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — The government predicted Sunday that backers of President Hashemi Rafsanjani would win a landslide victory in parliamentary elections, bolstering his drive to liberalize the economy and mend ties with the West.

The early results from Friday's voting appeared to be a sharp setback for more radical forces of the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, who have dominated the 270-seat parliament, or Majlis.

Iran's official news media said 55 of the 123 candidates who won enough votes to capture a seat outright were members of the Society of Combatant Clergymen, whose leader is Rafsanjani.

The other 68 decided races were in remote areas and the affiliation of the winners was not immediately clear.

But the fact that the government-run news agency was predicting victory early indicated confidence that the measures Rafsanjani took before the vote to eliminate as many radical critics as possible proved successful.

A week before the election, the Council of Guardians, a 12-man review panel of religious and civilian legal experts, eliminated one-third of the 3,000 candidates.

About 13.5 million votes had been counted in 189 districts as of Sunday, with final results from all 196 districts expected within two days, the Islamic Republic News Agency said. The electorate is estimated at 30 million, with any- See IRAN, Page 7A

IOWA ERA

Activist lobbies for passage

Anne Johnson
Daily Iowan

Nationally known feminist leader Ellie Smeal will address the re-introduction of the Equal Rights Amendment in Iowa tonight at the UI.

President of the National Organization for Women from 1977-1982 and 1985-1987, Smeal remains NOW's national advisory chairwoman and is also the founder of the Feminist Majority Foundation and the Fund for the Feminist Majority.

Smeal, who spent a number of years leading the nationwide ERA campaign, is traveling to the UI and other Iowa colleges to speak on behalf of the Iowa ERA, which will be on the ballot in November. "It's very important. It would help provide more 'oomph' to help fight sex discrimination in employment, insurance and pensions — wherever it appears," Smeal said. "It would give Iowa women a stronger edge in fighting sex discrimination than women in most states."

If it passes, the amendment to the Iowa state Constitution would add the word "women" to a provision that currently reads "All men are, by nature, free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights

Smeal said the effort to promote the Iowa ERA is targeting campuses because the cause is especially significant for college-age women who are graduating and heading out into the job market.

After organizing on college campuses for 22 years, Smeal finds today's college students to be the most active in the women's rights movement.

"They are the most responsive generation because they really want women's equality and they think it's their right. We don't have to convince them — they're convinced," Smeal said.

Opponents' recent claims that "feminism is dead" is merely wishful thinking on their part, Smeal said.

"It's ludicrous, but I frankly feel that in some ways, it serves us that they so delude themselves," she said. "They can fool themselves as long as they want, because as long as they do, they won't deal with reality and we will continue to grow."

Smeal said recent events like the Clarence Thomas-Anita Hill hearings and legal challenges to the Supreme Court's 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision have been fueling the women's rights movement and driving up membership in women's organizations, especially among young women.

She cited last weekend's abortion rights rally in Washington, D.C., with a turnout estimated by U.S. Park Police at 500,000, as just one sign of the strength of feminism in America. The march was organized by NOW and groups including the National Abortion Rights Action League, Planned Parenthood, the

BALLOT ISSUE #1 Amendment to the State Constitution

Issue #1 amends Section 1 of Article 1 of the Iowa state Constitution by adding the italicized words to an already existing provision:

RIGHT OF PERSONS. All men and women are, by nature, free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights - among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing and protecting property; and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness. Neither the state nor any of its political subdivisions shall, on the basis of gender, deny or restrict the equality of rights under the law.

Fund for the Feminist Majority — all of which consider themselves feminist organizations, Smeal said. "How can any movement be dead that can produce the largest march in our nation's history?" Smeal said.

In addition to claiming that feminism is dead, Smeal said its opponents continue to promulgate a distorted image of feminists as radical man-haters.

"What they really want to say is 'Stay home, barefoot and pregnant — let us rule the roost,' but it doesn't work anymore so they try and malign the messengers, who are feminists," Smeal said. "They have found that the only way they See ERA, Page 7A

DOUBLE DARE

UI students get sticky for charity

Peter Hyman
Daily Iowan

More than 100 students covered themselves in ketchup, polluted water, sticky fudge and flour Saturday and stood around in the cold laughing at each other.

"You've just got to whip it, whip it," said the master of ceremonies to the crowd. "It's chocolate fudge and it's very sticky," he continued egging on the contestants.

One participant stood with a cardboard plate up against her face. The plate had a hole in the middle. Her friend dipped a marshmallow in some chocolate fudge and at point blank range catapulted it toward her. She missed.

But it didn't matter as the obstacle race came next. Through tires covered in ketchup, into tanks of cereal, swimming pools of brown water and into tunnels of flour the teams competed against the clock to see who could loom the most absurd in the shortest amount of time.

The mess was part of a game called "Double Dare" — a quiz game where you do better by failing to answer questions because you can dare your opponents to do something stupid. In turn your opponents can double dare you to do something even messier. Either way you were covered in gunk.

"Pizza a dollar each," shouted the master of ceremonies. People did not know whether to buy it or roll about in it. Many did both.

The "fun" was the brainchild of the Alpha Chi Omega sorority and Phi Kappa Theta fraternity and took place at Hubbard Park outside the Union. The money raised — an as yet unspecified amount —

VA MEDICAL CENTER

'Humor cart' offers healing alternative

Lynn M. Tefft
Daily Iowan

In the tradition of laughter being the best medicine, the Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Iowa City has created the "humor cart."

The cart, which includes funny videos, books and audio tapes, will be unveiled during a special celebration at noon Tuesday in the third floor cafeteria of the VA Medical Center.

Gary Strank, chief of Volunteer Services, said the cart is a recreation alternative for patients who cannot participate in other activities around the center.

"Many patients are confined to beds for long periods of time," Strank said. "They can't get up and roam around and do a lot of things that some patients can recreation-wise."

"I think it will take their minds off some of the treatments they may be getting and give them a break from their routine."

Gary Strank, chief of Volunteer Services

After Tuesday, patients will be able to call the volunteer station from their rooms and request that the humor cart be brought to them.

Patients will be able to select from over 20 videos on the cart, including "The Three Stooges" and Red Skelton films, audio tapes of old-time radio comedy, books by comedians such as Bill Cosby, and cartoon books like Garfield and Doonesbury. VCRs and Walkmans are included on the cart as well.

Strank said he feels the cart will brighten patients' days.

"I think it will take their minds off some of the treatments they may be getting and give them a break from their routine," he said.

Ellen Cloyd, assistant chief of social work at the VA Medical Center, brought the idea for the cart back from a conference. The idea was presented to the advisory board of the center's volunteer organizations and approved.

The organizations contributing funds to the humor cart project include the Vietnam Veterans of America of Cedar Rapids, the Women's Bowling League of Iowa City and the Veterans of Foreign Wars of Rock Island, Ill.

Strank said the center averages about 170 patients a day and that most will benefit from use of the humor cart.

"In general, I think that humor, an anecdote or joke now and then, can really lighten up your whole day, and just make you feel better," he said.

After the cart is unveiled Tuesday, funny movies will be played the rest of the day. Other entertainment is also scheduled for the celebration.

Laughter may not be the only medicine patients need, but it can help, Cloyd said in a press release.

"The humor cart will make it easier for our patients to laugh or smile their way to a healthier state of being," she said.

Debates to focus on women and ethnicity

Supported by a Ford Foundation grant, it is hoped the events will raise multicultural awareness.

Lesley Kennedy
Daily Iowan

The UI Race Relations and Cultural Diversity Committee will hold two student debates in the next few weeks on the issue of racial and cultural diversity.

The debates, sponsored by Opportunity at Iowa and the Iowa Forensic Union, are supported by a grant made to the UI in 1990 by the Ford Foundation.

Ford Foundation President Franklin Thomas and a panel of national education leaders announced the grants in an initiative to broaden cultural and intellectual diversity in American higher education.

The Ford Foundation Race Relations and Cultural Diversity Initiative, which includes 19 grants totaling $1.6 million to universities nationwide, responds to the need to prepare American students to live productively and responsibly in a multiracial, multicultural world.

"Most of us have little understanding of the diverse cultures, attitudes and experiences that make up our own societies. Unfortunately, this ignorance about other cultures breeds insensitivity and intolerance in young and old alike," Thomas said in a release.

The first debate will be on the resolution that "discrimination against women in the university environment must be addressed more aggressively." It will be held on Wednesday, April 15, at 7 p.m. in Levitt Auditorium in the Boyd Law Building.

UI students Tiffany Earl, Dana Vavroch, Charles Smith and Mark Van Der Weide will be participating in the debate.

The second debate on Wednesday, April 29, also at 7 p.m. in Levitt Auditorium, will be on the resolution that "education on racial and cultural differences should be more prominently featured in the college curriculum." Students participating in this debate are Jon Brody, Iris Chambliss, Omar Guevara and Ernest Wagner.

"Part of the point of the Ford Foundation grant is to try to reach undergraduates, to try to get them to think more carefully about the different issues of race and culture," UI graduate student and debate coordinator David Cheshier said.

"These debates are designed to reach a broad audience of undergraduates who might not otherwise get involved in such discussions," he said. "We are most definitely not interested in holding events which merely preach to the choir."

Both events are free and open to the public. They will also be broadcast live over the UI's National Public Radio affiliate, WSUI-AM 910.

Since receiving the grant, several initiatives have been taken at the UI:

■ The rhetoric department has organized a reader which brings together multicultural texts and approaches. It is being used on a test basis in several sections of the rhetoric course, with high student approval.

■ The General Education in Literature Program has also initiated a program to better train its graduate teaching assistants in multicultural and diversity issues. This spring it is bringing a number of seminar leaders to the university to coordinate efforts in this area.

■ Last February, Dr. Erwin Chemerinsky, Legion Lex professor of law at the University of Southern California, delivered a keynote lecture to the UI community on issues of racial and cultural tolerance.

■ The Iowa Forensic Union sponsored two debates last spring that attracted a combined audience of 500 undergraduates. The debates focused on the political correctness debate and on the issue of affirmative action.

Other institutions receiving the grant included Boston College, Brandeis University, UCLA, Haverford College, University of Notre Dame, Tulane University and Wesleyan University.

CITY COUNCIL

Street reconstruction project, library funding to be studied

Other items on the agenda include the landfill leakage problem and traffic light installation.

James S. Whitfield
Daily Iowan

A total reconstruction of Kirkwood Avenue from Gilbert Street to De Forest Avenue and the question of Johnson County funding its share of the Iowa City Public Library's budget for the upcoming fiscal year will be among the items discussed during Monday's work session of the Iowa City City Council.

City staff members will be presenting an overview and councilors will be discussing the 1992 municipal construction season and the plans that have been proposed for capital improvements throughout the city.

The projects that have been planned for the upcoming season total over $8 million.

The Kirkwood Street project calls for pavement widening, total street reconstruction and the installation of new storm sewers along the 1.14-mile segment. The cost of the Kirkwood Street project will be just over $1.3 million.

Councilors will hear from City Attorney Linda Newman-Gentry concerning the status of the funding disagreement between the city and the county over how much the county should contribute to the fiscal 1993 budget of the library.

Councilors will also hear a report about the final plans for the new downtown parking ramp to be built off Washington Street between Gilbert and Van Buren streets.

Other projects to be discussed by the council include the landfill leachate control and remedial project. This is due to the notice that was served to the city by the Iowa Department of Natural Resources concerning problems of leakage, contamination and other infractions found by the DNR at the municipal-owned landfill.

A program for the installation of new traffic signals throughout Iowa City will be on the working session agenda also.

Monday's work session will begin at 6:30 p.m. with the regular council meeting set for 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

SALARIES

Same Iowa jobs not keeping up with inflation

Associated Press

DES MOINES — Salaries for most of the service and production jobs in Iowa have not kept pace with inflation over the last 10 years.

Some professional jobs also failed to keep pace and salaries for some occupations actually declined, such as meat-cutter, construction worker and cashier.

"The truly skilled areas have the biggest increases," said Robert Kemp, a Drake University economics professor.

"There's a lot of evidence that education and competency pay off. Everybody out there has a responsibility for career improvement."

"People ought to take a look at these surveys and see where they want to go," he said.

Of 74 occupations surveyed by The Des Moines Register, 54 failed to keep pace with the Consumer Price Index over the last decade. Inflation rose by 50 percent during that period. Most of the data on salaries were taken from the Department of Employment Services' annual wage survey.

Some positions requiring a minimal amount of education actually lost ground over the decade. In 1981, meat-cutters earned $19,802. Ten years later, they earned an average of $17,513, a drop of 12 percent. Similarly, cashier and checkers earned 13 percent less in 1991 than a decade before, down to an average salary of $11,960.

Construction workers, bricklayers and drill press operators also were paid less last year than in 1981.

Many other occupations paid more but failed to keep up with the 50 percent inflation over the decade.

Electricians earned just 2 percent more (up to an average $25,688), while roofers got 11 percent more (up to $20,966).

Salaries of bookkeepers, bus drivers, child-care workers, office clerks, chefs, route drivers, salespeople, tellers, waiters and waitresses, security guards and receptionists all failed to keep up with inflation.

The only job in the service area that beat inflation was payroll clerk, up 54 percent to $18,595. Electronics mechanics, packagers and chemical operators also beat the CPI for the period.

But professionals did better than the others, with surgeons leading the way. The American Medical Association estimates surgeons earned an average of $246,328 last year, a 115 percent increase over the decade.

Teachers kept pace, with salaries averaging $29,424, or up 64 percent.

Family practice doctors kept pace with inflation but no more, earning 50 percent more in 1991 to an average of $107,013. Farmers earned 90 percent more, an average of $29,701 last year, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Attorneys earned about 60 percent more.

Alternative candidate shares ideas, goals with IC audience

Estela Villanueva
Daily Iowan

Her programs may seem revolutionary, but her intentions are based on representation and honesty. Described in her campaign literature as a "41-year-old American, a female, a lesbian, from a working-class background, a poet, a performer, and writer," presidential nominee Eileen Myles believes she has something to offer every voter.

Myles stopped at Prairie Lights Books in Iowa City Sunday to sign copies of her latest book of poetry "Not Me," while continuing her campaign for president of the United States. Myles announced her candidacy last April in response to President Bush's speeches on freedom of speech after the Gulf War.

"If he could appropriate my tool, I could appropriate his. I had a very strong reaction, close to a spiritual experience where I thought, 'I can run.' It was a wonderful feeling to realize that one couldn't stop me, that I was old enough, that it was legal," Myles said.

Myles' platform consists of several issues, one of which is a guarantee to provide health care to every American within 90 days of election. She also hopes to cut defense spending by 75 percent and twist priorities toward domestic spending.

"We don't need (defense spending) if we plan to participate in the U.N., which we don't do. If you look at the U.S.' track record, you and Britain have vetoed every peace-keeping initiative for 20 years. We just don't want world peace. I think that we could cut our defense spending, take care of the country, offer world peace and just become a player," Myles said.

One of the most important changes would come by abolishing income tax, as was promised to the public after World War I, Myles said.

"I would stop income tax outright and tax holdings, properties and IRAs, anything you literally own. If you tax holdings at 1 percent, we would pay off the national debt in a year and three-quarters," Myles said. "What you've got to do is make the people who own America pay for America. They're really getting off scot-free and have been for a long time."

The message is loud and clear for Myles, who said that there is no opportunity for power in America for anyone who is female, poor or gay. She says she offers people representation, something none of the other candidates offer.

"The truth of power in America is all about secrecy. I'm certainly working from the opposite. My program is one of total disclosure. As an advocate of such disclosure and honesty, Myles practices this by writing her own campaign speeches.

"I think people are realizing what they aren't getting. I really do say what I would do. With that, I have nothing to lose, and have the luxury of doing something that the other candidates don't, of making direct statements," Myles said.

"Pretty much when I campaign, what you see is what you get. I'm going to tell you things about myself and you're going to know who the candidate is," she said. "That's actually highly unique at this moment in American politics."

Myles said she feels comfortable with the label of feminist, but described herself as "openly female" in her campaign literature. It's absurd that women are not more appropriately represented in a country where they make up more than half of the population, she said.

Andy Scott/Daily Iowan

Eileen Myles signs a copy of her book, "Not Me" during a book signing Sunday at Prairie Lights Books. Myles is also a candidate for president in the 1992 race.

"Unfortunately, in a few years, we'll get a nice mainstream woman candidate who's been through all the political process and machinery. To my mind, going through the political machinery is like going through the sewers of New York," Myles said. "Who do we get by the time we're finished? I'm for vetoing the mainstream at this point."

Myles said that the way to vote in this election is to vote defensively.

"It's like a big horse race of American politics. Nobody gets anything they want," she said. "I'm running because I want to vote for somebody I want to see in office. I'm offering myself a vote by becoming a candidate."

So far on the campaign trail, Myles said she's gotten great reception from the public.

"I think it's important to run and I'll keep running until the election's over because I think there's room for me, and I think there's a need for me," Myles said. "I think people need to hear something different because of the nightmare we're going through at this point in this country's history. We're just getting the vaguest answers from the vaguest people."

ISU professor speaks on energy conservation

Jude Sunderbruch
Daily Iowan

Iowa State University Professor of Physics Laurent Hodges delivered the keynote address to the annual meeting of the Iowa Division of the United Nations Association - United States in Iowa City Saturday.

Hodges began his remarks by recounting several stories about his experiences in working for energy conservation. He admitted that there were many environmental problems facing the world today, but pointed out that there have been some successes.

"The U.S. doesn't use much more energy than we did 20 years ago, even though the population is bigger and economic activity is much greater," he said.

Hodges attributed that fact to smaller cars and greater use of insulation.

He also noted that because of energy conservation the vast need for nuclear power that was predicted in the early 1970s has not become a reality. In fact, he said, no new nuclear reactors have been ordered in over a decade.

"What happened with nuclear power was that it became very expensive and the industry lost interest," he said.

Hodges described his energy efficient house and offered practical advice about making a home more energy efficient through the use of insulation and specially coated windows.

Before Laurent's discourse a series of speakers addressed the audience on topics ranging from a video on a women's environmental conference to the recent environmental teleconferences. After a lunch at the University Athletic Club, 1360 Melrose Ave, where the meeting was held, the Iowa Division of the UNA presented their annual awards.

The winner in the media category was Victor Arango, director of the teleconferences on the environment.

The citation accompanying the award described how Arango had turned the teleconferences from a small project with only $500 in seed money from the UNA into an international event linking scores of schools.

Arango said that it was much more cost-efficient to link people with satellites than to actually have everyone gather physically in one site.

"You can come together across borders in a very inexpensive manner," he said.

Patty Jones, a UI student and member of the UI Environmental Coalition, said that it was good for members of different environmental advocacy organizations to be able to gather in one place.

"It's nice to be able to communicate with some other groups," she said.

Jones agreed with Hodges' remarks that while everyone may not be ready to totally commit themselves to environmental protection, there are steps that can be taken.

CHICAGO'S ADVANCED PAINTING INSTITUTE

The School of the Art Institute of Chicago celebrates its 125th anniversary with the introduction of a summer painting institute designed to challenge advanced students in an intensive working environment.

Individual critiques from senior faculty help each student confront the complex problems facing artists developing their own personal language.

Rigorous group critiques allow students the opportunity to share what they have learned and to develop a vocabulary for discussing each others' work.

Students are given their own studio space and have daily access to the collection, exhibitions, and libraries of The Art Institute of Chicago.

Prominent visiting artists are available each week to discuss student work and give evening lectures. One day a week is spent exploring the art world of Chicago.

Deadline for application is May 15, 1992.

Senate debates students' role in funding allocation process

Brad Hahn
Daily Iowan

Proposed legislation which would give university students a voice in the allocation of student activity fees may be altered when the Iowa state Senate meets to debate it next week.

The Education Appropriations Bill — which was passed by the House on Wednesday — includes a section that calls for the forming of a committee consisting of five administrators and five students to determine the level of funding of student activity fees.

The committee would then give the proposal to the individual school's student government, which would either pass the committee's recommendation, or send it back. Once being cleared by student government, the proposal would be sent to the Iowa state Board of Regents.

An amendment to the bill, which is still in the drafting stage, will be brought to the floor by Sen. Richard Varn, D-Solon. The amendment would allow university presidents an opportunity to give their view on the committee's proposal. The activity fee proposal would go from the committee to the president, and the president would then make his own recommendation to the regents.

Varn said this way both students and administrators on the committee are getting a say in the issue, and the president also is allowed to express his viewpoint.

"Ultimately the administration has to have the opportunity to say what they think the policy should be. And students should have a say since they're the ones paying the bills," Varn said. "Both sides will get the opportunity to tell the regents what they think it should be."

United Students of Iowa Executive Director Ben Stone said he is willing to work with all sides to come to a compromise on the bill, but he insists that student government must have some role in the process.

"We need to have student government approval or disapproval of the student fees committee," Stone said. "They can't change anything in the proposal, but they have a legitimate right to endorse it or send it back to committee."

Stone said that although it is too early to say, it is possible that the USI would be against a proposal which bypasses student government.

"It's premature for us to say now that if they don't include student government then forget it," Stone said. "But it's quite possible that that could happen. . . . The regents will always have the final say, but it's entirely the idea of shared governance that students and administration work together. This shouldn't be viewed as a threat."

The latest amendment is yet another step in debate over the bill. It barely passed the Iowa House Education Appropriations Committee, by a vote of 11-10, on March 25.

The bill was debated in the House Tuesday night when Rep. Kathleen Chapman, D-Cedar Rapids, made a motion to change the portion of the bill dealing with the student activity fees committee. But, Chapman withdrew the motion before it came to a vote and the bill later passed.

Stone said members of USI will sit down and talk to Varn this week to make sure they maintain a role for student government and give their feelings on the amendment.

IOWA LEGISLATURE

Governor opposes proposed tax increase; state employees' pay raises still unfunded

Lawmakers are still looking for a way out.

Tom Seery
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Republican Gov. Terry Branstad and Democratic legislative leaders remain at a standoff as the Legislature enters its final weeks.

Branstad spent last week traveling across the state telling Iowans that the Legislature is too eager to raise taxes to comply with court-ordered pay raises won by state employee unions. Meanwhile lawmakers stewed at the Statehouse and looked for a politically acceptable way out of the state's fiscal mess.

As this week started, they still had not found one. Senate Democrats plan to meet behind closed doors this week to discuss a plan to raise the sales tax while making the income tax more progressive. Both initiatives face serious opposition.

Branstad has said he is willing to consider a sales tax increase, but has not presented a proposal to the Legislature. At town meetings across the state, the governor has insisted that the Legislature approve a budget reform package, and has accused legislative Democrats of overspending.

"He's out flying around the state criticizing us instead of being straight with us," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Hutchins, D-Audubon. "He's into beating up on unions and Democrats. That's his message."

But Hutchins acknowledged the tactic is producing results for the governor, and he has letters from angry constituents to prove it.

"He's having some impact out there," Hutchins said.

As a result, a sales tax hike that once seemed almost certain to win legislative approval is now in doubt.

"It would be tough right now," Hutchins said.

The Legislature was scheduled to adjourn for the year next week, because expense payments for lawmakers living in Des Moines run out on April 21. If no budget accord is reached, the session could run into May and Branstad has said a June adjournment is not out of the question.

"It's been building for more than a decade, and we're not going to solve it in two weeks," Branstad said last week. "If it takes three weeks or three months, we ought to do it right."

The budget will dominate the remaining weeks of the session, but several other major issues remain unresolved. Included is an ethics reform proposal that would create an independent commission to monitor activities of elected officials. The proposal was drafted by a commission appointed by legislative Democrats, who now want to attach a provision limiting campaign spending.

"They lost their courage when it came to this issue and I think they got lobbied," Hutchins said of the independent group that drafted the ethics reform proposal.

POLITICS

What's wrong?

In observing the campaigns of this year, it is quite apparent that the frustrations of the American people are fervently rising. The media's focus on the campaigns has tainted the image of the candidates to such a degree that we are left with what seems to be the lesser of two evils in choosing a Democratic candidate, and the same old same old with a Republican candidate. All in all, it seems that the United States could come up with better candidates than what we currently have. So what's wrong?

Plato describes quite rigorous standards for leaders in his utopia: They must live like soldiers with no private possessions, for they will be distracted. They cannot have wives or a family, for they would be too involved with those concerns. The key to this society is educated leaders — people who have dedicated their lives to learning and teaching.

But in Plato's ideal society no elections occur. The men and women must prove themselves through years of education. The prospective candidates have already overcome scrutinizing tests for leadership and wisdom. Thus Plato eliminated the fickle voter and thus deception with numbers from the ignorance of the masses. However, only allowing the intelligent to vote would be discriminatory and difficult to implement, for what exactly is an intelligent voter?

Besides the issue of educated voters, we must also face the issue of educated candidates. The word "politics" carries bad connotations, derived from the extensive game of public imagery and scandal. This year, as in the past, the media has revealed character flaws in the candidates. Upon seeing these sometimes trivial matters, people have become discouraged about their voting choices. We are having anybody interested in office walk the media's plank, and not many will survive. So we must realize that the attraction for a career in politics is quite subdued, and thus our choices aren't going to be the cream of the crop. How can better people be encouraged to serve as our leaders?

Most importantly, in a democracy, the voter must be able to recognize an overall good candidate when voting, and the most important criteria are integrity, leadership and intelligence. Any holder of public office must keep the trust of the people and other government members, as well as uphold confidence in his or her decisions and ideals. Their education should provide them with knowledge and reasoning skills to assist them in their resolution of conflict and their formulation of policies.

It seems that the only people that run for office are those that are able to afford the campaign and that desire to fulfill their personal goals. The ethical role model is missing, as well as the true desire to lead. This is perhaps mostly because the voting public cannot recognize the crucial characteristics inherent in its voting choices. In other words, the majority of the voters are fickle and lack appropriate reasoning skills. This is the ultimate risk in a democratic society, and we are facing it. So what's the solution?

Politics needs to be less of a public image, "good-guy" game. As Plato's utopia eliminates the fickle votes, any democratic society needs to as well. Intelligent, educated voters are imperative in choosing strong leaders and in leading a society like ours. They need to see through the mumbo jumbo of public relations, and recognize the truly important characteristics of the candidates. Perhaps then the political offices would be more attractive to those who possess the wisdom and character to pursue them.

To put it succinctly, educated voters and leaders go hand in hand. We need then to be ever so cautious about how we approach education for younger generations and ourselves. Thus, here we have probably the most important argument for stronger and higher education for the world's people.

Theresa Campo Pearson

To the Editor:

Once again, Mike Bunge (DI, April 1) has approached a complex issue and reduced it to a simplistic, if not laughable, editorial of nonsense. Let us add to the tiresome list of Bunge-isms his latest editorial concerning the life and death of Theresa Campo Pearson. How amazing it truly is to watch Bunge sift through the clutter of controversy and locate some ultimate proof everyone else in the world seemingly overlooked. In his latest editorial he reveals that essence which makes us human; a question posed since the first Bunge crawled across this planet. Bunge reveals that we become human when we are named. Mr. Bunge, if a name is all it takes to make one human I am completely astounded you have one. Although I am not even close to the Bunge level of genius, I am almost convinced that there is more to being a human being than having a name.

Bunge continues his weekly nose-dive into sub-mediocrity when he informs his readers: "Her life had all the sanctity and dignity of yours or mine." In lieu of this statement, I finally agree with Mike Bunge when he says: "Dignity is a word that gets thrown around a lot these days." He seems to have thrown it for a 400-mile pass.

It would be astonishing and riveting if Mike Bunge could write one editorial that was not riddled with the inane, unfocused, conservative hype that is quickly becoming synonymous with one word: Bunge.

Thanks, Iowa

To the Editor:

Thank you for all the postcards you sent me. I received a total of 122 and 75 from the Iowa City area. This was more than anyone in my class! I wish I could write to each and every one of you that sent me a personal note. (Maybe some day I will.)

Your notes were all interesting. I learned more from you than my books.

Major disaster for Great Britain

Great Britain effectively became a one-party state last Friday. The Conservative Party won a historic fourth term in the general election. Following three successive victories under Margaret Thatcher beginning in 1979, the party now has a mandate under John Major until 1997.

For large proportions of the population, the result is a disaster. It is a vote for stagnation, for growing inequalities between the rich and poor, and the run-down of public services at the expense of the few who can afford private health and education. It means a half-hearted attitude to European integration and no interest in the environment. Britain will be rudderless, with a nonentity at its head, and a cabinet of sickly accountants lecturing the poor for not being rich, mocking the unemployed for not having jobs, ignoring the old and sick, and keeping quiet when the chairmen of large companies give themselves 35 percent pay rises.

The election result ought to be a great comfort to George Bush. Major won despite the longest and deepest recession since the 1930s, 10 percent unemployment, record home repossessions and record number of businesses going bust. Major also further reassures Bush that you need no vision, no charisma... in fact you need not be able to string a sentence together or have an imaginative thought as long as the opposition is discredited by the press and perceived as being even worse.

Forty-two percent of the 75 percent who voted supported the Tories, barely a third of the population. British democracy is supposed to be served by a system that allows an alliance of the rich and successful third of the country to continually hold office, while the homeless, unemployed and poor are often not registered to vote or are so disillusioned they choose not to.

For the Labour Party a fourth successive defeat is a catastrophe and could spell the end of the party in its present form. Since Michael Foot led the party in 1983 on a platform of unilateral nuclear disarmament and nationalization of public utilities — a manifesto described afterwards as the longest suicide note in history — Labour leader Neil Kinnock, once a left-winger himself, has transformed it into a modern pragmatic centrist party. Its advertising is almost as slick as the Tories' and most pundits thought it had run a better campaign both in 1987 and 1992. The Labour Party emphasized economic prudence and moderation but was prepared to raise taxes to provide better public services. The results in the election however were the same: humiliating defeat. The belief that "it was time to let the other lot have a go" was massively outweighed by those who thought they would make things worse.

There are some explanations for the Labour defeat which were beyond its control. All but three of more than 20 national newspapers oppose the Labour Party and did so more virulently than ever before. Opposition is not confined to the editorial pages but is essential to every news story. The Sun wrote that Stalin would have supported Kinnock. The Daily Mail openly lied about Labour's tax proposals. The so-called quality papers like The Sunday Times led with stories about alleged secret meetings between Kinnock and the KGB. All the top journalists in London have large enough salaries that they will lose by Labour's tax plans. The fact that 80 percent of the rest of the country would have benefited was selfishly forgotten. Since 1987 electoral district boundary changes have meant the loss of up to 20 seats for the Labour Party. The financial district of London is also viciously opposed to a Labour government. Wall Street never acts the same way at the thought of a Democratic president.

But although Labour is right to complain about the press, there are more worrying conclusions to be drawn from the defeat. Labour fought the election on a platform of better public services paid for by higher taxes on those with incomes higher than $37,000. The trouble, I suspect, is that most people, while earning less than this figure, aspire to earning more so are loathe to support higher taxes.

For Labour it won't be enough to think things will be better next time with a new popular leader. People don't want to vote for a party associated with a discredited socialist past and believing in greater taxation. A realignment of the center-left is necessary. The third party, the Liberal Democrats, hoped to make a breakthrough but were once again thwarted by a system where votes are cast for a district and not distributed evenly across the country. Liberal support is too diffuse to pick up seats. It is time that Labour formed some kind of alliance with the Liberals.

Labour now knows it cannot go to the British people and ask to be elected as better managers of a market economy. There needs to be a big idea or dream to capture the voters' imagination.

Today Neil Kinnock is expected to resign as opposition leader after two election defeats. Rather than fighting a leadership battle to pick his successor the party ought to take time out to reinvent itself. The party no longer represents its old constituency of the working class. Yet it has failed to broaden its appeal to the greater numbers who now consider themselves middle class. However much the party emphasized government weaknesses, it failed to put forward an exciting alternative.

There are big issues that can be grasped: constitutional change, a bill of rights, environmental improvements, decentralization and regional autonomy, a future for Britain in Europe, decent public services, and investment in education and training.

In the interests of democracy, Great Britain needs a government challenged by an opposition that has a credible alternative vision so that come election day the British people are prepared to boot out a hopeless ruling party.

GUEST OPINION

Honesty found beneath the glamour

The April 2 lecture by Nobel Laureate James Watson — the opening event of the 1992 Humanities Symposium — did not lend itself to the conventional "speech" story, although, a DI reporter was determined and diligent enough to come up with one.

Undoubtedly, Watson's lecture was not what most members of the audience had anticipated. The great white screen suspended from the ceiling behind the speaker's platform led us to expect slides — probably those surreal and colorful images of genes and other very tiny things made possible by electron microscopy — but there were no slides. The program title, "The Next Ten Years in Human Genetics," promised predictions of future developments. This probably was the subject of the lecture and slides prepared for Watson by his staff at the National Center for Human Genome Research. ("That's how it is when you're at the top of the pyramid," he told the audience. "You haven't been hired to do anything; you're just supposed to be.") But Dr. Watson didn't deliver that lecture. Instead, claiming that he could hardly speculate about the next year, much less the next 10, in human genetics, he announced his intention to speak about the past. His past, to be specific. How and why he came to be where he is today.

I don't think I entirely imagined the dismay on the faces of UI President Hunter Rawlings and Professor Robert Weir, who were seated on the speaker's platform, staring out at the overflow crowd, as Dr. Watson delivered on this stated intention.

Starting out about 40 years back, Watson walked us through the stages of his life as a student (at the University of Chicago, where he learned to "think, not memorize," and where he first became interested in "The Gene"), a scientist (in which stage he went to Cambridge to meet Francis Crick and helped him discover the double helix), a celebrity (after sharing a Nobel Prize for that discovery in 1962), a teacher (at Harvard University), a writer (most famously, of "The Double Helix: A Personal Account" — the title itself a clue to the evening's performance — and of "The Discovery of the Structure of DNA"), and finally bringing us to his present stage, a bureaucrat.

As a bureaucrat, Watson said, he has two big responsibilities (aside from reading speeches written for him by other people): finding ways for powerful egos to work together in a civilized manner, and getting to know rich people. Nervous laughter here from the dignitaries; appreciative guffaws from the riffraff.

Watson returned to the rich people again and again, making a refrain of the question, "Where do you want to put the money?" He made mention of E. coli, roundworms, Drosophila, genetic disease and gene therapy, but had little else for those who came to hear about scientific facts and discoveries — and to see those slides. I felt particularly sorry for a (no doubt talented and gifted) boy of 10 or so who started out sitting cross-legged and eager and ended up sleeping under his mother's coat.

Some members of the audience, it was plain to see, were not merely disappointed. Some were annoyed. Some were embarrassed. I admit to squirming once or twice myself, particularly during the question and answer period, which was dominated by questions of the "Who are we to decide (what genes to study, what conditions to eradicate, what traits to value?)" variety and which was mercifully cut short by Dr. Weir.

Nevertheless, what we heard that evening was far more valuable than a prepared lecture read by a famous biologist. What we heard — and no wonder we squirmed, for we're not used to encountering this in public life — was honesty. James D. Watson offered us several plain, unvarnished, and consequently awkward truths. He told us that he believes in the Human Genome Project because he has always been interested in "The Gene"; that the very difficulty of the project, its monumental scope, is part of what attracts him to it; that he wants to put the resources into this project because it is his; that other scientists who criticize its cost do so, at least in part, because they want the money ("There isn't an inexhaustible supply, you know") for their projects; and — the most painful truth of all — that the course of scientific research is directed neither by altruism nor by some disinterested quest for knowledge, but by two far more powerful, if less romantic, forces: money and ego.

Thus the evening did offer the historical and philosophical reflection the posters promised. The lesson was not in the double helix but in the vicious circle: Scientific research, whether for good or for evil (and who are we to decide?), depends upon funding, which depends upon powerful egos like Dr. Watson's, which depend, in turn, upon continued funding. This situation is a source of dismay to many scientists. (It would be a source of dismay of dismay to Dr. Watson, too, if he weren't the one getting the funds.) We should not be surprised if his talk discomfited others in research and education who are forced to divide their efforts between drumming up funds and pretending they're up to something else, something more philosophical, like sharpening young minds or keeping the scientific spirit alive.

Whether we were engrossed or embarrassed or disappointed by the lecture, whether we support the Human Genome Project or not, I think we should be grateful to Dr. Watson for his public display of candor. Witnessing that phenomenon — even more than shaking the hand of a Nobel laureate or getting his autograph on your copy of "The Double Helix" — may well have been a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

 one over 15 in the population of 60 million allowed to vote.
 With 10 percent of the potential 3 million votes counted in the key Tehran area, all but one of the top 50 vote-winners were members of Rafsanjani's society. His most ardent opponents in Parliament, Mehdi Karrubi, the speaker, and Ali Akbar Mohtashemi, a former interior minister, were far down the list for deciding candidates for the run-off election.
 Rafsanjani's supporters, pushing pragmatic government measures, clashed repeatedly in the previous Parliament with radicals intent on emphasizing religious fervor at home and Islamic revolution abroad.
 The radicals also wanted extensive state ownership of business, while the technocrats argued for a more open economy to deal with Iran's high inflation and unemployment and the lack of reconstruction since the 1980-1988 war with Iraq.
 In Washington, President Bush's national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, said that "I think what you would call moderates seem to have done quite well" in Iran.
 But Scowcroft also said on NBC's "Meet the Press" that a big military buildup by Iran raised questions about Rafsanjani's commitment to moderation.
 Rafsanjani has advocated change since Khomeini died three years ago, and the election was the first chance for Iranians to have a say.

 While Khomeini is still revered as a saint, enthusiasm for the mass rallies and constant political sloganeering born during the Islamic revolution has dimmed.
 Rafsanjani also has gradually loosened the strict enforcement of Islamic laws since the end of the war with Iraq. The religious police who ensured that women did not show any hair and couples did not touch are gone.
 The political slogans that once covered every wall are being painted over. Instead, the city is full of flower beds, and advertising started about four months ago.
 But "Death to America" is still a popular slogan, one area of little change. Radical leaders tried to paint their moderate opponents as U.S.-lovers during the campaign.
 Rafsanjani's government takes the official line that no relations with Washington are possible, but diplomats and Iranians believe Tehran must develop some form of speaking terms with the United States to lure economic investment.
 The United States recently lifted the ban on Iranian oil and represents a vast market for exports like Iran's pistachio nuts and carpets.
 Radicals feel the technology and investment can be obtained from Europe or Japan, but technocrats say the specialized technology needed to find and exploit Iran's oil and other mineral resources is a U.S. specialty.

Entertainment fund highest for State Department

Marcy Gordon
 Associated Press
 WASHINGTON — A few days before allied forces launched a ground war against Iraq, Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney was the host at a reception for Saudi Arabian and other VIPs in the desert kingdom. The February 1991 party cost U.S. taxpayers $8,000.
 Closer to home, there was a black-tie dinner in Washington for Czechoslovakia's defense minister in June 1991. The tab: $9,900.
 In both cases, the money came from a $1.4 million annual entertainment fund allocated by Congress to the Defense Department. The 13 other Cabinet departments each have their own allowance, from millions to a mere $2,000 a year.
 On the high end is the State Department. U.S. embassies around the world share $4.8 million to hold dinners and receptions. Secretary of State James Baker and other top diplomats have an additional entertainment budget, but department spokeswoman Shayna Steinger was unable to provide the amount.
 At the other end, the Interior Department spends about $5 a head on lunches for volunteers.

 Foreign dignitaries are the leading beneficiaries of this publicly funded largess: They get the most lavish entertainment and more of the gifts, such as paperweights and pens emblazoned with a department's official seal.
 The funds are at every Cabinet secretary's disposal, along with the other perquisites — including chauffeur-driven cars, private dining rooms and chefs and, for some, government jets used for personal travel. And each Cabinet secretary can approve use of the allowance by others in the department.
 Cheney's social activities accounted for $202,600 of the $1.1 million that the Defense Department spent in fiscal 1991, according to Pentagon spokesman Glenn Flood. The remaining $897,400 was spent by the deputy defense secretary, the undersecretaries and the other officials within Cheney's office. (The Pentagon did not spend the entire $1.4 million allowance.)
 The Departments of Labor, Education and Interior each receive a relatively modest $7,500 a year for entertaining. Housing and Urban Development gets $7,000 and spent $4,199 in the fiscal year which ended Sept. 30.

 And entertaining by those departments is pretty no-frills.
 The Interior Department spends $75 to $80 for lunches honoring department employees who do volunteer work and outsiders who work as volunteers in national parks.
 That's about $5 for each person attending. Food comes from the department's cafeterias.
 "It's obviously not a very sumptuous lunch," said department spokesman Bob Walker.
 Similarly, the Department of Education puts on modest luncheons honoring school superintendents and teachers of the year.
 Why are those departments' entertainment budgets only a fraction of the Pentagon's social war chest? Government spokesmen say it's because they are involved mainly with domestic issues, while departments such as Defense, State and Treasury deal with foreign officials.
 "We represent the United States to foreign governments and we are involved in major negotiations and meetings where we represent the United States," said Treasury spokeswoman Claire Buchan.
 Officials of the Treasury, which has a $95,000-a-year entertainment allowance, have to negotiate tax treaties and other international agreements, she said. The department spent $39,150 of its allowance in fiscal 1991.

 But the Commerce Department, which works on international trade and promoting U.S. exports, and oversees the U.S. Foreign Commercial Service, has the smallest entertainment fund of all: a mere $2,000. Some agencies within the Commerce Department have their own separate allowances.
 The entertainment budgets of other departments fall between the two extremes:
 Health and Human Services gets $15,000 a year; Veterans Affairs, $25,000; Energy, $35,000; Justice, $30,000; and Transportation, $40,000.
 Some of the VA money buys refreshments for meetings with officials of the Veterans Service Organization and other groups. Each event costs around $40 to $100, according to spokeswoman Donna St. John. Last year, the department spent $78 on wreaths for a ceremony at a war memorial and $150 on three souvenir bowls for Secretary Edward Derwinski to give to visiting VIPs.

 "You wish that everybody would just tell the truth and they would say, 'Well, this is awful — we shouldn't discriminate against women and we should pay them justly' and they would," Smeal said. "But let's not be naive — it will not happen because we have a real opponent. People who profit from underpaying women have a personal vested interest in keeping us down."

In addition to feeling positive that the Equal Rights Amendment will pass in Iowa, Smeal said she believes 1992 will be a breakthrough year for female candidates, who are running in record numbers nationwide.
 "People are fed up with business as usual and politics as usual. They want change and they see women as the change agents," Smeal said.
 Smeal will speak at 8 p.m. in Shambaugh Auditorium.

 There has been a drowning near the Burlington Street dam each summer for the past two years.
 "With the fishing season approaching, we want to emphasize how dangerous fishing on the lower side of dams can be," he said.

 members from AISA organized the inter-tribal powwow "in order to share our culture with the rest of the university community."
 By hosting a Native American Education Conference each October and the annual powwow in April, Snyder said AISA educates the UI community and encourages cultural awareness.
 She said that when AISA hosted its first powwow at the Robert A. Lee Community Center in Iowa City two years ago, there were 600 people who attended the event. In 1991, the audience numbered 2,500.
 "We host one of the biggest powwows in Iowa," she said, "yet every year it virtually goes unnoticed by the UI community." Other than those who may have wanted to use the Recreation Building's facilities, "most people probably didn't know there was a powwow this weekend," she said.
 While some of the dancers who participated in the powwow are from Iowa City, Snyder said the majority of them are from out of state.

 She said in addition to the dancing and singing, the AISA honored its veterans by serving them a dinner Saturday night at the Chicano/Indian American Cultural Center.
 Vendors from Illinois, Iowa, Florida and Oklahoma also added to the three-day celebration with their selections of paintings, bracelets, dreamcatchers, shirts, necklaces and beads.
 Paul Vara, a vendor from Beach Park, Ill., said for 30 years he was a drummer at powwows. For the past two years, he has been selling various beads, blankets and earrings with his family.
 Every week Vara attends powwows in different locations across the Midwest. He said, "I really enjoy meeting people who come from all across the nation."
 "There are many people who have never been to a powwow," said Vara, "but once they go for the first time and see all that it offers, they want to go again."

State to mourn '86 attack; talks concerning sanctions to continue

Nejla Sammaki
Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Libya — Libya announced Sunday it will sever all contact with the outside world for the 24 hours before U.N. sanctions take effect in a confrontation over the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103. Arab leaders, meanwhile, continued efforts to find a way to head off the sanctions, which would include embargoes on arms sales and commercial air traffic to Libya. The official JANA news agency distributed a statement saying Libya would cut all international travel and communication links Tuesday as a sign of mourning for a 1986 U.S. air strike that killed 41 Libyans.

The U.N. Security Council has given Libya until Wednesday, the sixth anniversary of the air raid, to surrender two alleged intelligence agents. The men are charged in the bombing of a New York-bound Pan Am jumbo jet in 1988 over Lockerbie, Scotland, that killed 270 people.

Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy apparently chose to observe the air raid anniversary a day early to avoid the U.N. sanctions overshadowing his gesture.

The Security Council is demanding

Libya surrender the two Lockerbie suspects for trial in the United States or Britain and produce proof it has renounced all forms of terrorism. The council also wants Tripoli to cooperate with France in trying four other Libyans accused of killing 171 people in the 1989 bombing of a French airliner over Niger.

Libya has agreed only to turn over the Lockerbie suspects to a neutral country — an offer rejected by the West. Khadafy denies the men or his government had any role in the bombing.

Libya's foreign minister, Ibrahim al-Bishari, met Saturday with U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali in Geneva and said he offered proposals for ending the standoff. He refused to provide any details.

After a meeting in Tripoli with President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt on Sunday, Khadafy said they discussed new proposals to resolve the dispute. He did not elaborate.

When asked whether he believed the West would attack Libya, Khadafy said, "Not unless they go mad, but then what would be the use of an attack?"

Mubarak, a close ally of the West, has been trying to defuse the crisis through mediation. But Egyptian officials have indicated many times that there was little Cairo could do unless Libya surrendered the suspects.

Elsewhere, the foreign ministers of seven Arab nations planned to meet in Rabat, Morocco, late Sunday to seek ways to defuse the confrontation. The committee was created by the Arab League last month in an effort to avoid an escalation of tensions in the region. Khadafy has always marked the day of the U.S. air raid, which killed his baby daughter in his house in the capital. But this would be the first time he has taken the drastic step of virtually shutting off the country.

Washington said the air raid was in retaliation for Libya's involvement in the bombing of a Berlin discotheque frequented by American soldiers. Two people were killed and 200 injured in that attack.

Officials: Campaign lacks guidance

Terence Hunt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — George Bush's campaign brain trust is having a hard time living up to the reputation of the high-flying trio that put him in the White House.

It has almost become routine: Bush's campaign is criticized as inept and rudderless, lacking leadership and a message. Even within, White House and campaign officials complain about each other's performance, and all worry that the whole operation appears to be drifting.

It's a far cry from four years ago. In 1988, Bush's campaign was propelled by Lee Atwater, a street-smart strategist with a flair for sizing up the voters and finding a message that moved them. Media maestro Roger Ailes supplied the snappy sound bites and tough negative advertising. James Baker managed the campaign, with the extra clout of being Bush's best friend.

Fast forward to 1992. Atwater is dead. Ailes is finished with presidential politics. And Baker is racing around the world as secretary of state.

To run his campaign, the president turned to Robert Teeter, a professional pollster who's been involved in five presidential campaigns and served as a senior adviser to Bush in 1988. It's the first time he's run a presidential race. The campaign troika also includes business executive Fred Malek, one-time president of both Northwest Airlines and Marriott Hotels, and former Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, a longtime Bush pal and national finance chairman of the 1988 Bush campaign.

Long on credentials, they are criticized as short on political smarts — even from fellow Republicans.

"They miss Atwater much more than I ever thought they would," said Lyn Nofziger, director of the White House political office in the early Reagan administration.

"The campaign, unfortunately, is not organized yet," he grumbled. "You don't see any real leadership there. . . . Teeter is a very bright guy. The problem is, nobody over there has ever run a (presidential) campaign."

Kevin Phillips, a political analyst who publishes the American Political Report newsletter, said, "Obviously this is not the all-time political all-American team for the 20th century."

He called Teeter "a white-bread political strategist" who is ill-suited for this year's politics of voter frustration and alienation. Phillips pointed out Teeter's work for defeated Senate candidate Richard Thornburgh, who blew a large lead against a political newcomer in Pennsylvania last year.

Mitchell Daniels, another White House political director from the Reagan years, said Bush is partly to blame for delaying the start of his campaign. "The president could have blown the whistle a couple months sooner than he did," Daniels said. "Suddenly a competitive election sprang up and these guys barely had the phones plugged in before Christmas."

Brushing aside criticism, Teeter said there is no shortage of people who think they have better ideas.

"It's kind of a cottage industry in town here. There are some people who are mad because you don't call them often enough and ask for their advice or have them in often enough — and there are hundreds of them. And you can't do it."

"You've got to keep your mind and your time focused on what you're here for," Teeter said, "and I keep telling the people here we're here for one thing, to win the election on Nov. 3."

Teeter said the primaries "diverted us a little" from shaping a campaign message but "we are back on track now."

He brushed off suggestions that the campaign sorely needs an Atwater or a Baker.

"Sure you miss Atwater, you'd love to have him around. But on the other hand no one person is indispensable and we're well on our way and we're going to run a first-rate campaign," Teeter said.

Protester at U.N. building turns self in

Verena Dobnik
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A woman who said she was protesting the use of taxes to support war surrendered Sunday, one day after dousing her body with gasoline and threatening to set herself on fire in front of the United Nations.

Linne Gunther, 41, of San Lorenzo, Calif., threw several large lighters out the door of a white van parked in front of the United Nations before emerging Sunday morning.

Gunther, who is the daughter of Nobel Prize-winning nuclear physicist Owen Chamberlain, put her hands up and walked stiffly with police into the U.N. Secretariat building before being taken by ambulance to Bellevue Hospital.

"We believed she was serious," said Detective Anton Petrak, one of the police negotiators. "She was repeatedly dousing herself with gasoline throughout the night and she was holding a cigarette lighter in each hand."

Chief of Patrol Mario Selvaggi said she would be charged with attempted arson, reckless endangerment and possession of an incendiary device. Police removed three gallon cans of gasoline from her van.

Gunther drove the wrong way up First Avenue and into the United Nations' circular driveway Saturday morning, nearly crashing into a guard.

She got out, poured gasoline over herself and climbed back in, locking the doors and threatening to ignite herself, said police Sgt. Norris Hollomon. She hung a sign in the windshield claiming she had explosives.

She told police she was protesting American taxes going toward the Persian Gulf War.

Police negotiators covered by silver heat-retardant suits surrounded the van and attempted to talk her out. Several emergency vehicles were on the scene throughout the night. Three of the van's tires were deflated so it couldn't be moved.

"Her moods would shift. At times she would be easygoing and then she appeared agitated," Petrak said. "She was afraid that we were going to break into her van."

Her brother, Darol Chamberlain of Ithaca, N.Y., spoke with her by telephone shortly before she gave up.

Police said Chamberlain's 71-year-old father also had been contacted. The elder Chamberlain, who won the Nobel Prize in 1959 for discovering the anti-proton, is an emeritus professor at the University of California, Berkeley. He began his career doing atomic research during World War II.

Like father, not like son at Indiana

Bob Knight is making headlines again. So what else is new, right? Except this time, it's different. No, the Indiana basketball coach didn't fling a chair across the court during the Final Four. He hasn't beckoned star player Calbert Cheaney for a second mock horsewhipping across the ass and he hasn't canceled another banquet. What he has done is boot his son off the Hoosiers.

Chalk one up for the coach/father/drill sergeant.

Last Thursday, 21-year-old Patrick Knight was arrested and charged with public intoxication and disorderly conduct, which included shouting an obscenity at an officer. The consequence was a not-so-predictable disciplinary action from the elder Knight.

After all, there aren't many mentors at any level, any sport, who would've even thought of kicking off a player for similar behavior — let alone his son.

Can you imagine the often mild-mannered Mike Krzyzewski giving the axe to his son (if he had one)? The same Krzyzewski who scoffed at the possibility of the NCAA suspending Christian Laettner for blatantly stepping on the chest of Kentucky's Aminu Timberlake in the Elite Eight?

How about Pete Rose going to such extremes if he had ever managed Pete Rose Jr.? It would probably be a safe bet that the baseball great would not have delved into such proportions. (One can only hope Mr. Rose wouldn't make that wager himself).

It's too bad none of us could have turned into Casper "the friendly ghost" and wandered off to jail to eavesdrop on the likely ensuing conversation between the Knights.

"Patrick, what the hell did you do now?"

"Aw c'mon, Dad. I was just — hiccup — having a few — hiccup — drinks. What are you gonna do, bench me?"

"Shut your goddamn mouth and sit your ass down! I don't need to smell all that alcohol."

Chalk one up for the coach/father/drill sergeant.

But seriously, the point is that love him or hate him, Bob Knight has solidified his stranglehold on what everyone except Patrick already knew — that the Hoosier basketball program means too much to Knight, the university and the state capital of basketball for him to babysit individuals choosing to be irresponsible for their actions.

In fact, this isn't the first time Knight has taken such procedures. During the 1977-78 season, the coach got rid of three Hoosiers whom he witnessed smoking marijuana at a party.

Sure, there will be some poor saps who will contend, "But how could Knight do that to his son? Isn't his own flesh and blood important to him?"

The answer is: Hogwash, bologna, and whatever absurdity you care to include.

Of course Knight cares about his son. That's precisely why the coach did what he did. What was he supposed to do, reward Patrick with a place in the starting lineup? Maybe he could have slapped him on the wrist and said, "Now son, just make sure it doesn't happen again."

...a break. The younger Knight didn't care enough about basketball or figured he'd get off easy with his father as the coach. But that's where Knight differs from most other teachers in sports.

Bob Knight may not always win points for his manner in dealing with the media, ripping referees or always wearing that same damn sweater on the sidelines. And he cares about that.

Not! What he cares about is bringing forth a message that reads through loud and clear.

Mess with the General and he won't hesitate to grant you a permanent leave of absence.

Iowa still at .500 after split with 'Cats

Jay Nanda
Daily Iowan

When Iowa softball pitcher Karen Jackson entered the seventh inning of Sunday's nightcap at Northwestern's Anderson Field, Coach Gayle Blevins didn't want to see a case of déjà vu. So she had senior Terri McFarland warm up in the bullpen.

And that's where she stayed. On Saturday, Jackson and the Hawkeyes allowed a 2-0 lead to slip away in the sixth inning, only to come back in the seventh for a 3-2 win. But Blevins didn't want to be in the same position again.

"I really wanted to use that as a little fuel for Jackson, to make Jackson determined to be out here," Blevins said of having McFarland warm up.

Apparently it paid off, as Iowa retained their advantage for a 2-0 win, giving the Hawkeyes (16-16, 5-3) a split of the four-game series. Jackson pitched a two-hitter while improving to 6-9 on the year.

"It was good that we gave (Karen) a couple runs," Blevins said. "She's struggled in the late innings but she was more determined, I felt, to work out of scoring opportunities today."

In Sunday's opener, first baseman Christa Davis belted her second homer in four contests over the left field wall, but the Hawkeyes could not make it hold up. The Wildcats scored two in the bottom of the seventh to post a 2-1 win.

"They got some timely hitting," Blevins said of the Wildcats. "I suppose you can give them a lot of credit for being focused and coming up with the big hit."

"We've been trying to cut her down a little bit on her swing," the Iowa coach said of Davis, who has both of Iowa's homers on the season. "I made the comment to her about the fact that she was in a real short, compact position... she needs to understand that she can hit with a lot of authority even out of a compact swing."

Illini take three from Hawkeyes

Erica Weiland
Daily Iowan

Losing three games of a four-game series is rough anytime, especially when it's a Big Ten series. But the members of the Iowa baseball team aren't getting down on themselves now.

The Hawkeyes (15-13, 6-6) defeated Illinois 1-0 in the first game of a doubleheader Saturday, but lost 16-2 in the nightcap. Iowa then dropped both games of the twinbill Sunday, 6-5 and 4-2.

The players held a team meeting following Sunday's games to discuss any problems they might be having. Coming out of the meeting, senior Shane Simon seemed pretty optimistic.

"It seems like one play kills us, like an untimely error or not getting hits in big situations," the outfielder said. "We know what we have to do, and we know we haven't peaked yet. Once we're on a roll and play like we can, we'll be OK."

In the opener Sunday, the Illini (22-11, 7-5) jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first inning. Leadoff hitter Andy Small was walked by Dave Weillbrenner, advanced on a sacrifice by Dave Wohlwend, went to third on a fielding error by Iowa shortstop Steve Eddie and scored on a sacrifice by Larry Sutton.

frame, which again began with a leadoff walk. Illinois scored their final two runs of the contest in the fifth.

The Hawkeyes were scoreless until the bottom of the fifth when they burst into life for three runs.

Senior Tim Killeen led off the inning with a towering home run over the right field fence. Kevin Minch and Shane Simon then hit consecutive singles. Minch advanced to third on an error by shortstop Small; and Simon reached second on an error by center fielder Mike Jurack. A sacrifice bunt by Cory Larsen scored Minch and advanced Simon, who went home on a single by Matt Kraus.

Iowa added a fourth tally in the sixth as Killeen smashed a one-out double along the right field line, advanced on a sacrifice by Minch and scored on a line drive double to right by Simon.

The Hawkeyes pulled within one run in the bottom of the seventh when Eddie and Kraus led off the inning with consecutive walks. With one out, Bobby Morris walked to advance both runners and a sacrifice fly by Brett Backlund scored Eddie. But Killeen struck out to end the inning and leave the Hawkeyes with a 6-5 deficit.

In the nightcap Sunday, Illinois was on the board first with two runs in the second inning. Jurack got aboard on a fielder's choice, followed by a line drive homer over the left field fence by Brian Schullian.

But the Hawkeyes put down a run of their own in the bottom of the second when Simon walked, advanced on a sacrifice by Larsen

Hughes prepared to return

Erica Weiland
Daily Iowan

Even having a cast on his right hand isn't enough to slow down Danan Hughes.

The Iowa center fielder/wide receiver may be even busier now than he was before breaking the middle finger of his right hand during the second weekend of baseball season.

But he's hoping his schedule will change again as he's expected to get his cast off today and could be back in the lineup in the Hawkeyes' series at Purdue next weekend.

"All Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday I'm going to rehabilitate all day if I have to," Hughes said. "Then I go back in Thursday afternoon or Friday morning before we leave for Purdue, and my doctor's going to evaluate my progression and let me know if I can play against Purdue."

"I'm ready to go... It's going to take a lot to keep me out of the games next weekend."

Since breaking his finger while bunting at Southwest Missouri State on March 14, Hughes has stayed active in baseball. Sometimes it's hard to believe that he's right handed, as he takes batting practice by swinging the bat with just his left hand, catches fly balls in practice and practices pitching and pickoff moves left-handed.

MEN'S GYMNASTICS

Hawkeyes headed for Nationals

James Arnold
Daily Iowan

Ohio State and Iowa finished first and second respectively at the NCAA East Regional Men's Gymnastics Championships Saturday at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. The all-around individual champion was Penn State's Adam Carton.

Ohio State led the 10-school pack with a total score of 286.80. Iowa edged out Minnesota for second place, 282.55 to 282.40. Other finishers in order were Penn State, Temple, Michigan State, Michigan, Illinois, Syracuse and Kent State.

Iowa's Chris Kabat placed sixth in the all-around with a 57.15, and fellow Hawkeye Gary Denk placed ninth with a 56.25. Carton led the all-around standings with 57.75 points, nosing out Temple's Don Minicucci, who was one-tenth of a point behind.

Kabat said Iowa's second-place finish was a "total team effort," but not enough to best the powerful Buckeyes.

"Ohio State was awesome, they didn't miss," Kabat said.

NHL

Players' return leaves fans with mixed appreciation

Associated Press

NHL players went back to work on Sunday night. A lot of fans stayed home.

Empty seats were prevalent as the league resumed play following a 10-day strike, the first in the league's 75-year-history.

There were about 2,000 empty seats at Chicago Stadium for the Blackhawks' game against Norris Division rival Detroit — the first time in several years that there wasn't a full house.

"I'm glad they're back, but I can tell a lot of people aren't too excited about it," said Chicago fan Andy Moag. "I had two extra tickets and it was really hard to get rid of them outside. One guy offered me $10 for two $30 tickets. People are waiting for the playoffs."

THE MASTERS

Couples wears green jacket

Bob Green
Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — It isn't just a hot streak; Freddie is for real.

Fred Couples, he of the easy swing and the easy-going, California laid-back manner, confirmed his stature as a golf superstar, the brightest of them all, with a two-stroke victory Sunday in the Masters.

He did it on the strength of a closing 2-under-par 70 — and about two blades of grass.

Those were the sprigs on a steep bank, a few inches above the surface of Raes Creek, that stopped his ball a foot short of backing into the water on the 12th hole.

A brilliantly lofted little chip enabled Couples to save par — and his lead — from that precarious position and sent him into the last six holes at Augusta National with a two-shot advantage.

Couples brought it home in style, in sharp contrast to the putting problems that embarrassed him over the final nine holes of the 1990 PGA Championship at Shoal Creek.

This time he ran in a 10-foot birdie putt on the 14th that all but slammed the door on his challengers and assured the Masters of its first American winner since Larry Mize in 1987.

Couples, now 32 and just reaching his golfing maturity, scored his third victory of the year, the ninth of his career and his sixth since last June.

The $270,000 he collected for this title also gave Couples $1,008,162 already this year, the most ever at this stage of a season.

favorite, powered his way to a 68 and was at 283. He was tied with defending champion Ian Woosnam of Wales, who shot 75.

Couples' short game kept him in front.

He came out of a greenside bunker on the 10th and saved par with a 6-foot putt, then worked his magic on the water-guarded, par-3 12th.

The usually phlegmatic Couples ducked his head and mumbled to himself when his tee shot was in the air. It seemed destined for the water of Raes Creek, a probable double-bogey and still another shift of momentum.

The ball landed short of the green, hitting into the tall grass of the hazard, and rolled down the slope toward the water. But it stopped just short, hung up on a couple of blades of grass.

"It's a miracle it stayed up," Couples said.

And he made the most of it, flipping a wedge short of the pin, within inches of the cup. He tapped it in for a critical par and was on his way.

He saved par after driving through the dogleg and behind a tree on the 13th, got his birdie on the 14th, played the hook he needed on the 15th and made a 4-foot saving putt on the 17th.

After that, it was just a victory march up the 18th fairway, his visor in his hand and a big smile across his face, with wife Deborah, Ray Floyd, a green jacket and a new stature awaiting him.

"If I couldn't win, I'm very, very happy for Freddie," Floyd said.

"It came at my expense — but I predicted it."

tactic," Blevins said. "Unfortunately, it's a play that we should have handled because we've run it a lot ourselves."

In the second game, catcher Diane Pohl and center fielder Kim Davis both reached on Wildcat errors in the first. A double steal then scored Pohl for a 1-0 Iowa lead before a single by shortstop Jenny Roe scored Davis.

Jackson rolled along until the sixth when a pair of walks — one of them intentional — a single and an error allowed the Wildcats to tie it up, bringing on McFarland in relief. But in the bottom of the seventh (a new Big Ten rule states that teams take turns being the home club in a doubleheader), Hawkins could not retire a Hawk-ey.

A walk to Heather Grim, single by Pohl and a pair of fielder's choices gave Iowa a 3-2 win.

"I was real proud of our group," Blevins said. "We hung tough until we managed to get a few hits together."

WILDCATS: Bounce back

giving up just three hits and striking out seven in a 1-0 shutout. He is now 6-0 on the season with a 1.17 ERA and 41 strikeouts.

As a designated hitter, Backlund also drove in Iowa's lone run. In the top of the third, Polson hit a one-out double, advanced on a single by Morris and scored on Backlund's sacrifice fly to right field.

and slid under the tag of catcher Schullian to score on a two-out single by Jay Polson.

Iowa tied up the game in the third when Killeen hit another shot over the right field fence.

The Illini tallied two more runs in the fourth for a 4-2 lead. The Hawkeyes couldn't get anything going, mustering just one hit in the last four innings.

Iowa was led offensively Sunday by Simon (4-for-5, one double, two runs scored and one RBI) and Killeen (3-for-7, two home runs, three runs, two RBIs).

"My hits might have been timely, but I wasn't even thinking of the situations," Killeen said. "I just went up and hit. It was nice but it would have been better if the games would have turned out better."

In the first game Saturday, Backlund shined for the Hawkeyes, inning. But the Illini tied it up in the top of the third with two runs on three hits.

Things got ugly for the Hawkeyes in the sixth as Illinois exploded for nine runs on seven hits and one Iowa error.

The Illini added five more runs in the top of the seventh to stomp on the Hawkeyes 16-2.

Scott Smull took the loss in that contest, dropping to 3-1 on the year.

HUGHES: Helping on diamond, gridiron

Since spring football started March 30, the junior two-sport standout has also been helping the Iowa receivers and quarterbacks whenever he can. Usually he splits his time in the afternoon between baseball and football practice.

Hughes has also been doing whatever else he can to stay in shape.

"I've been running a lot, doing a lot of lifting, trying to stay in shape and keep my legs in shape," said the 6-foot-2, 202-pound junior.

"I've just been going back and forth between baseball and football, helping Curtis (Reed) and these guys out here (at baseball), then running over to football practice, helping some of those guys. That's my role, that's what I have to do right now while I'm hurt."

As Hughes gets closer to returning to the playing field, questions have been arising as to where he'll play. After his injury, second baseman Curtis Reed was moved to center field to temporarily take his place.

But Reed has been performing unexpectedly well, promising that the lineup decisions after Hughes' return will be difficult for the Hawkeye coaches.

Hughes hit .429 with two home runs, three RBIs, seven runs and five steals in the five games he played in. Reed is hitting .341 with 21 runs scored and a team-leading nine stolen bases.

"I don't expect to come in and play right away," Hughes said. "Some people look at me like I'm crazy because I think that way, but you've got to go with who's doing the best right now. You can't go on who's done good in the past. So far Curtis has done the job. Hopefully when I get the chance to come back, I can step in and start where I left off."

For Reed, Hughes' return could mean a move back to second base or to another position in the outfield. The 5-foot-9, 165-pound sophomore said Coach Duane Banks hasn't revealed his plans for the lineup until after Hughes returns.

"Coach hasn't really talked about it; I don't know what he's planning on doing," Reed said. "Hopefully things will work out for the team the way it should. I'm sure he's going to make it so everybody wins in the long run. He's not going to put anyone on the bench that will help us win. I don't really care where I play as long as it helps us win. That's the main goal."

NHL: Players return, fans stay home

Though all 15,842 tickets were sold at Maple Leaf Gardens, only 11,249 — by far the smallest crowd of the regular season — showed up to see Toronto lose 6-2 to the New York Islanders, officially ending the Leafs' playoff hopes. The Maple Leafs had not announced a crowd below 15,075 this season.

Those that did come appeared to support the players more than the owners.

Matt Foso, a 13-year-old season-ticket holder in Buffalo, said he sided with the players "because I think there should be more leniency with free agency and it's good that they have less rounds of the draft."

Fred Grant, a New Jersey Devils season-ticket holder, also backed the players.

"I never lost confidence that it would get resolved. I was solidly in the players' corner," he said.

Grant didn't have much company at the Meadowlands Arena for the Devils' game against Washington. Only 9,374 fans showed up, the third-smallest crowd of the season and the lowest since Dec. 5.

Most of those who came on Sunday were glad that hockey was back.

"We didn't like the strike, but we still support the team," said JoAnn Smerek of Golden Valley, Minn., attending the Blues-North Stars game. "We're glad they came back."

The Met Center, though, was about half-filled, although the game was important to the North Stars' playoff chances.

North Stars owner Norm Green, of course, also was glad the players were back. Green worried that a prolonged strike might have irreparably damaged the goodwill the Stars had built — and as one of the "moderate" owners, he helped push through the collective bargaining agreement.

"Had the strike carried on, probably Minnesota would have suffered the most," he said. "This time to convert enthusiasm shown by the fans into (season-ticket) commitments is crucial to us."

Club vice president Pat Forcica said that fewer than 25 people had asked for refunds to Sunday's rescheduled game, though others still may do so until Saturday.

At the Boston Garden, the quiet crowd of 12,823 for the Bruins' game with last-place Quebec were their smallest of the season. There were only two signs hanging from the rafters: "Congratulations Union!" and "Thanks Andy." Boston goaltender Andy Moog is a vice president of the players union.

Hawkeyes find life grueling on the road

The Iowa men's tennis team dropped a pair of conference road matches over the weekend.

The Hawkeyes lost a grueling 5-4 match to Michigan State Saturday and were blanked by Michigan 6-0 Sunday.

Iowa coach Steve Houghton said Saturday's match took about six hours to complete. The match came down to the third set of the No. 3 doubles, which Michigan State won by two points.

"It was an absolute heartbreaker," Houghton said.

The grueling match against the Spartans may have hurt Iowa's performance on Sunday, Houghton said.

"When you go for six hours and then come out on the losing end, it has to take something out of you,"

he said. "It seemed to me there was something sort of missing today."

Houghton said Eric Schulman was the bright spot for the Hawkeyes on Saturday. The junior gave Michigan State's Kevin Seckel only his fourth loss of the season in No. 4 singles and then teamed up with Klas Bergstrom for the win in No. 1 doubles.

Schulman dropped the first set to Seckel before taking the next two.

"He showed a lot of fight, getting blown out in the first set and then coming back to win fairly easily," Houghton said.

Neil Denahan (No. 5 singles) and Naguib Shahid (No. 6 singles) were the other winners for Iowa.

Iowa (9-6, 1-5 in the Big Ten) is scheduled to next see action Saturday when it travels to Northwestern.

MAJOR LEAGUES

McGwire's bat not enough to beat Sox

Associated Press
D — Jack McDowell weathered a three-homer barrage, including two more by Mark McGwire, and the Chicago White Sox beat Oakland 6-4 Sunday, handing the Athletics their first loss of the year.

McGwire connected for the fourth straight game, giving him five home runs this season, and Jose Canseco also homered for the A's.

Padres 5, Dodgers 4
SAN DIEGO — Gary Sheffield homered and drove in a career-high five runs, including the game-winner with a two-out single in the ninth inning as the San Diego Padres bounced back to beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 5-4 for their third straight victory.

Cubs 4, Cardinals 2
CHICAGO — Hector Villanueva's three-run homer in the seventh inning powered the Chicago Cubs over the St. Louis Cardinals in frigid Wrigley Field.

It was 35 degrees and a 20-mile wind blowing in from center field lowered the chill factor to 15 degrees under a bright, sunny sky.

Angels 13, Brewers 9
ANAHEIM — Rene Gonzales hit a three-run homer and a double in his California debut as the Angels outlasted the Milwaukee Brewers 13-9 Sunday.

Braves 6, Giants 2
ATLANTA — Cy Young Award winner Tom Glavine came within two outs of his second straight shutout, pitching the Atlanta Braves past the San Francisco Giants 6-2 Sunday.

Glavine, who beat Houston 2-0 with a two-hitter on opening day, took a six-hitter and a 6-0 lead into the ninth inning.

Expos 8, Mets 2
NEW YORK — Ivan Calderon homered and drove in four runs as the Montreal Expos banged around Bret Saberhagen and again beat up New York, sending the Mets to their worst start at home since 1962.

Not since their first-ever season, during which they lost a record 120 games, had the Mets dropped their first three at home. Montreal swept the three-game series, outscoring New York 21-4. Last year, the Expos were just 4-14 against New York.

Pirates 6, Phillies 1
PHILADELPHIA — Barry Bonds hit his fourth home run of the season and Zane Smith pitched a five-hitter, leading the Pittsburgh Pirates past the Philadelphia Phillies.

Bonds homered for the third straight game, a three-run shot in the sixth inning off Terry Mulholland (0-2). Bonds is 5 for 16 lifetime against Mulholland with four home runs and eight RBIs.

Reds 5, Astros 4
HOUSTON — Pitcher Tom Browning capped a four-run rally in the fifth inning with a sacrifice fly and Bill Doran drove in three runs as the Cincinnati Reds beat the Houston Astros.

Indians 2, Red Sox 1
RED SOX 3, Indians 0
CLEVELAND — Baseball won't let Matt Young call it an official no-hitter, so he created his own word for it — "Purgatory."

The Boston left-hander pitched a complete game and tossed eight no-hit innings Sunday, but he lost the game — and official credit for a no-hitter — as Cleveland beat the Red Sox 2-1 in the first game of a doubleheader.

In the second game, Roger Clemens rebounded from last week's injury to his right hand and pitched a two-hitter, blanking the Indians 3-0. He struck out 12 and improved to 16-2 with six career shutouts against Cleveland.

header set a major-league record, breaking the old mark of three set four times, most recently when the California Angels were held to three hits by Cleveland in a doubleheader on June 8, 1969.

Mariners 2, Royals 1
SEATTLE — Erik Hanson gave up one run in eight-plus innings as the Seattle Mariners completed a three-game sweep by beating the winless Kansas City Royals 2-1 Sunday.

The Royals' 0-6 start is the worst in the club's 24-year history. Hanson struck out four and walked three in besting Mike Boddicker (0-1), who lost his season's debut. Boddicker gave up six hits — five in the first two innings — in 7 1/2 innings.

Yankees 5, Tigers 1
DETROIT — New York improved its record to 5-0 as Mel Hall had two hits and drove in three runs to help beat winless Detroit 5-1 Sunday. The Yankees are off to their best start since 1988, while the Tigers' 0-6 start is their worst since 1959.

New York needs two more wins to equal the club record of 7-0 set in 1933, when players like Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Tony Lazzeri and Bill Dickey were on the team.

Blue Jays 3, Orioles 1
TORONTO — David Wells pitched four-hit ball over seven innings as the undefeated Toronto Blue Jays won their sixth straight game.

TEXAS RANGERS

Palmer off to hot start for Texas

Associated Press
Dean Palmer, the newest sensation in a Texas Rangers lineup full of hitting stars, has been trying not to think about hitting home runs this season, even though he's connected in his first three games this year.

That's because he dwelled on them too much last season. "Last year I was so uptight because I put so much pressure on myself to do well," he said. "You know you just can't play like that."

Last Wednesday night, Palmer put himself within a Kingdome shot of tying Willie Mays' major league record of hitting a home run in the first four games of a season. Mays homered in the first four games of the 1971 season with the San Francisco Giants.

"He's an extreme talent," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said. "Dean's got a chance to become a real good baseball player."

Palmer said he didn't feel any pressure on himself to equal Mays' feat. "It would be great if I hit another one but we've got a lot of games ahead of us," he said. "Hopefully, I'll hit a lot more. So I'm not putting any pressure on myself."

Palmer's third home run in as many nights came on a 3-2 count against Seattle starter Russ Swan in the second inning of a 13-1 victory.

"I'm just up there this year trying to get myself in a good situation in the count," he said. "Then I can cut loose a little bit where I can try to drive it. But as far as going out and trying to hit a home run, I don't want to get into that routine again."

The Rangers think they have the best offense in the AL. It's a lineup that includes Rafael Palmeiro and Ruben Sierra, who both had 200 hits last season, but is currently without defending AL batting champion Julio Franco, who started the season on the 15-day disabled list with an ailing knee.

Palmer says he learned a lot after joining the Rangers last season. He's trying to live down his reputation of being a dead pull hitter who can really turn on fastballs.

He hit 15 home runs in 81 games for the Rangers last season after being recalled in June from Triple-A Oklahoma City. But he hit only 187.

"I think I'm relying more on my bat speed this year," Palmer said. "I think I try to get myself in trouble when I go up there and try to pull everything."

Palmer ended last season with seven home runs in 18 days for Texas. He reported to spring training in Port Charlotte, Fla., with a relaxed and confident attitude this year.

In 60 games at Oklahoma City last season, he led the American Association with 22 home runs. He also batted .299. He's trying to recapture that feeling.

"I think I'm approaching it the way I approached it in Triple A last year," he said. "I'm going out and having a good time. When I do that, it gives me a chance not to worry about going 0 for 4."

Valentine said he noticed a big difference in Palmer this spring. "He came to spring training and worked on the things he had to work on to get ready for the season with a clear mind and a confluent mind," he said.

TRACK

Brower shines on the track, in class

David Taylor
Daily Iowan

The Iowa men's and women's track squads went into the Jim Duncan Invitational expecting good weather, but found that winter still had some bite to it this past weekend in Des Moines.

High winds and cold temperatures didn't necessarily make for a bad day however, as both the men and women turned in some impressive numbers.

Jennifer Brower

The Iowa women racked up six first-place victories at the meet, led by Jennifer Brower, who captured the 10,000-meter race with a season-best time of 34:55.8. The time also qualified her provisionally for the national outdoor meet.

In addition to her on-field honors, Brower was named to the NCAA all-academic team. To qualify, an athlete must have a 3.25 GPA and finish in the top 15 spots in their district, or be named all-American. The pharmacy major maintains a 3.75 GPA and finished second in the 1991 District IV Cross Country Championships.

Tracy Dahl clocked in at 4:31.91 in the 1500 for the win, and teammate Erin Boland followed suit with a personal-best time of 17:22.2 in the 5000-meter race.

The Hawkeyes continued their mastery of the distance events, as Tina Stec won the 3000-meter race with a time of 10:08.79. The distance medley relay team of Brower, Dahl, Boland and Sheila Galbraith also won with a 12:16.89 time.

In the field events, the result was much the same for Iowa. Lisa Van Steenwyk won the shot put (an event in which Iowa finished 1-2-3) with a toss of 47 feet, 3/4 inches. Teammates Denise Taylor and Laura Kriener took second and third with throws of 45' 9/4" and 42' 8 respectively. Nancy Tessmer also won the high jump at 5' 5/4".

The men also had a strong weekend, recording numerous second and third place finishes and setting two meet records in the 4 x 100 and 4 x 400 relays.

"We had an excellent meet considering the wind was blowing pretty hard and we were away from home," men's coach Ted Wheeler said. "We had some good times and emerged without any injuries, so I'm fairly pleased."

The 4 x 100 team of Brian Thomas, Jerry Fisher, Baylor Goode and Audwin Patterson recorded a 41.10 mark, beating the old record by .02 seconds. The 4 x 400 squad of Goode, Patterson, Gary Falls and Rajeev Balkrishnan clocked in at 3:16.04 for the new record.

"Under the circumstances, it took some superb performances for those relay teams to set new records," Wheeler said. "They had a great day despite the wind."

Fisher also took second in both the 100 and 200 (10.57 and 21.28), and Goode was right behind in both events at 10.68 and 21.29.

Patterson captured first in the 400 at 48.39, and Balkrishnan grabbed second in the 110-meter hurdles and third in the 400-meter hurdles at 14.78 and 55.19 respectively. Garry Roseman turned in a second place finish in the 3000 steeplechase at 9:35.18

"It was kind of cold for hurdles, but Balkrishnan had a fine day and Roseman came through with a big performance," Wheeler said. "All of our sprinters had outstanding times for competing in this type of weather and I feel pretty good about the team right now."

Both teams will compete in the Indiana Triangular next weekend in Indianapolis.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Iowa splits vs. MSU, Michigan

David Taylor
Daily Iowan

With a thunderstorm brewing outside and a powwow raging inside, where is a tennis team to play?

In this case, Cedar Rapids became the place and Michigan became the main benefactor, as the Iowa women's tennis team lost a grueling 5-4 match to the Wolverines in one of the more bizarre scheduling flaps of the year.

The Hawkeyes began playing Michigan outdoors last Friday and seemed to control the match, leading in doubles after a 3-3 split in singles. However, the match was halted due to lightning and with a Native American Powwow taking place on the team's indoor court at the Recreation Building, both teams travelled to Cedar Rapids to complete the match.

"We lost our momentum after the 1 1/2 hour break in play," Iowa coach Micki Schillig said. "We had our chances and everything seemed to be going our way, but Michigan regrouped and we simply didn't play as well as we had been."

The Wolverines wrapped up the match when Frederika Adam and Amy Malik defeated Hawkeyes Cara Cashion and Minna Hatakka 4-6, 6-4, 6-4 at No. 3 doubles.

"I warned the team before we resumed play that the break would favor Michigan, but it didn't seem to matter," Schillig said. "It was a tough loss to take, and we want to blame something, but we really have only ourselves to blame."

Iowa had a day to think over all of the "ifs, ands or buts" concerning the match and found consolation in a 7-2 thrashing of Michigan State

Micki Schillig

Sunday morning. The win improved Iowa to 4-4 in the conference with only two matches left.

"We talked about working on some of the problems we had with Michigan, and our tennis improved 100 percent on Sunday," Schillig said. "We were much more intense and our doubles were exceptional."

Though not as talented as Iowa, Michigan State had a history of dragging opponents down with their emotional, hard-nosed approach. But Iowa laid any thoughts of an upset to rest when they steamrolled the Spartans 3-0 in doubles, after winning in singles 4-2.

"We knew if they played on emotion and got it going we might be in trouble, but we took the fire out of them and ran with it," Schillig said. "Catherine Wilson and Lori Hash looked like old times when they won their match, and they really went after it, especially considering all of the injuries they have had."

Schillig also cited Laura Dvorak and Tracey Donnelley as "outstanding" against Michigan State. Dvorak beat Alicia Leone 6-4, 4-6, 6-4 and Donnelley whipped Kim Andersen 6-3, 6-4.

GOLF

Thomason's squad takes 3rd in Oregon

Curtis Riggs
Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's golf team took advantage of consistent play from all golfers and placed third at the Oregon State Invitational in Corvallis, Ore., over the weekend.

"What was good about this weekend was that everyone was consistent and that someone always made a contribution at the right time," Coach Diane Thomason said.

The Hawkeyes shot rounds of 311-314-315 for a 940 total for the 54 holes. Oregon won the tournament by firing a 915. Washington was second with a 919.

Becky Fuglestad had the seventh lowest score at the tournament, with rounds of 78-77-76 for a 231 total, which was only five strokes off the lead.

"It was nice to finish seventh," Fuglestad said. "It was a good course to play. Everyone on our team had a lot of low scores."

Mary Jo Rollins was leading the tournament after the first 18 holes. She finished with a 74-82-77 for a 233, which tied her for ninth place.

Stacy Boville had rounds of 81-75-85 for a 241. Judy Bornholdt also had a 241 total after shooting 78-80-83. This was Boville's first round of the spring under 80.

Jennifer McCullough shot 83-83-79 for a 245 total. Thomason said that her 79 in the last round really helped the team.

Thomason added that the consistent team play in Oregon will help the squad in future tournaments.

"Every little bit helps our confidence," she said. "All of the kids are very capable of shooting low scores, but until they do it, they don't believe that they can do it."

"It just proves that each one of us can shoot good scores," Fuglestad added.

Hawks capture second consecutive tournament

Curtis Riggs
Daily Iowan

The Iowa men's golf team made it two in a row over the weekend when they captured first place at the Indiana Invitational in Bloomington, Ind.

Last weekend the team won the Purdue Invitational.

The Hawkeyes fired rounds of 292-290-302 for a 884 total for the 54 holes. Host school Indiana was second (891) with Minnesota taking third (900). Wisconsin came in fourth (907) and Missouri took fifth (912).

Other Big Ten finishers were:

Penn State sixth (919), Michigan State tied for seventh (923) and Purdue 12th (947).

Hawkeye Brad Klapprott finished second individually by shooting 73-72-74 for a 219. Sean McCarty captured third place with 70-76-74 for a 220. Brian Wilson tied for 10th place by going 70-74-81 for 225.

Jon Frommelt shot 79-72-77 for a 228 and Ed Lewis went 79-72-77, which also is a 228.

Next up for the Hawkeyes is the Firestone Intercollegiate Invitational in Akron, Ohio, next weekend.

Do it out of respect for the dead. And the living.

Hawkeyes shatter old bars mark

DI wire services

The Iowa women's gymnastics team shattered the team uneven bars record with a 48.025 showing in the NCAA Regional Championships at Columbia, Mo., Saturday.

Iowa placed fifth overall in the meet. Defending national champion Alabama captured the Central Regional title followed by 1992 Big Ten Champion Michigan.

Hawkeye sophomore Meredith Chang made a strong showing in both the vault and uneven bars. Chang's 9.675 score on the vault topped the season-best in the event and tied for fifth place in the meet. Chang also placed fourth in the all-around scoring with 37.975, while sophomore Sandy Stengel placed sixth in the all-around with a 37.675.

CONCERT REVIEW

Weathering a weary crowd, trio performs with aplomb

William Palik
Daily Iowan

A trio of artists from the Santa Fe Chamber Music Festival closed the Hancher Chamber Music Series Tuesday night before a small audience of mostly jaded patrons.

The three musicians — all apparently in their 30s — have previously appeared as soloists in Iowa City and environs. Although their ensemble playing was impeccable, they formed a strange trio. Pianist Christopher O'Riley's tense but accurate technique was accompanied by weird facial contortions and distracting gesticulations. Cellist Carter Brey brought from his 1754 Guadagnini instrument a warm, singing tone which accorded well with his gregarious musical approach and oddly skewed the trio's balance in his favor and away from violinist Ida Levin, who played vigorously near the bridge of her fiddle, but nevertheless produced a rather thin tone.

Beethoven's "Archduke" Trio, Op. 97, exhibited the composer's characteristic tension between sublime artistic inspiration and crabbed, offish instrumental writing. The trio excelled in the pizzicato development section of the opening Allegro moderato, showed poise and finesse in the Andante cantabile, and brought a superb rhythmic sense to the jaunty, colorful concluding Presto movement.

After intermission, the trio presented three pieces by Argentine-born Astor Piazzolla. The spirit of the tango hovered over these recent works, which were occasionally wildly over-written for the piano, and alternated uneasily between fiery temperament and schmalzy neo-romanticism. Piazzolla's highly flavored, distinctly Argentine rhetoric was, to this listener, devoid of musical logic or convincing artistic rationale.

Maurice Ravel's sophisticated, ultra-refined A minor Trio concluded the program with a vivid moodscape ranging from hushed, placid stasis to brilliant washes of virtuosity. The assembled artists executed Ravel's suave, stately pages and his heights of passionate abandon with equal subtlety and grace. It is probably a measure of the superbance of this sort of programming in recent weeks, rather than any fault of the musicians, that the audience response was so tepid. There were no encores.

CONCERT REVIEW

They don't call him "Poundcake" for nothing: Sammy Hagar was sweating the oldies with rest of the graying Godfathers of Arena Rock last weekend at the Five Seasons Center.

Down and dirty Van Halen clean up in CR

The superstars of Van Halen reclaimed the arena and left it in shambles last weekend in Cedar Rapids.

Sizzling solos, showmanship and classic cuts from their most recent albums marked the Van Halen concert in front of a sell-out crowd at the Five Seasons Center in Cedar Rapids Friday night.

Opening the show with "Poundcake" from their latest album, For Unlawful Carnal Knowledge, guitarist Eddie Van Halen, vocalist Sammy Hagar and bass player Michael Anthony raced around the catwalks of their elevated stage. After zipping through three more cuts from For Unlawful Carnal Knowledge, Hagar turned the stage over to Anthony and his custom-built bass, shaped and painted like a Jack Daniels whiskey bottle.

Anthony fingered his way through a collection of bass lines producing sounds that ranged from wavering, flanger-layered feedback to angry, buzzing hornets. In turn, he presented the stage to Alex Van Halen for his drum solo.

Starting with a timpani, Van Halen's drum solo expanded to an all-out attack on his silver 21-piece drum kit, creating a blur in the whirling, flashing strobe lights fixed on him. As he wildly thrashed about with a thundering tribal drumbeat, the drum platform slowly ascended 25 feet. His solo concluded with a salute and a smile for the appreciative crowd.

"Let's go back to 1984," said Hagar as the entire band returned to the stage and Eddie Van Halen pulled the opening power chord to "Panama," lighting up the sell-out crowd of 10,000. Hagar, the "ringer" for the Van Halen party then directed the spotlight toward two women in the upper deck. Encouraged by Hagar and the crowd, one of the women, a platinum blonde in a black skin-tight mini, turned and hiked her skirt just enough to moon the sell-out crowd of 10,000.

After playing 1984's "Jump," Hagar took his turn with a slow, acoustic solo, and then relinquished the stage to Eddie Van Halen.

Van Halen's fingers quickly accelerated down the neck of his seven-stringed guitar, pausing for a few seconds, continuing a few octaves higher and then breaking into an extended version of "Cathedral" from Diver Down. As he simultaneously worked the strings, volume knob and whammy bar, the fans at the front of the stage stood silent and motionless as Van Halen's twisting fingers climbed and descended the guitar fretboard.

Alex Van Halen strode back to his drum kit just long enough to pound a few beats and launch brother Eddie into a dizzying version of "Eruption" in which no part of his guitar went untouched. Van Halen concluded his 16-minute guitar solo with a modest "thank you," and then ripped into their super-sonic cover of The Kinks' "You Really Got Me."

The band closed their first set with "I Can't Drive 55," "Best of Both Worlds," and "Standing On Top of the World." Five minutes later, the band returned to the stage to chants of "EDDIE! EDDIE! EDDIE!"

"It has been a pleasure," said Hagar as they took their stage positions for the encore. "This has been a real rock 'n' roll concert; come on Edward, let's do another one."

Obligingly, Edward cranked up the guitars for two more songs and the encore culminated with a barrage of fireworks and a surging wall of heat produced by a flaming 30-foot oval with Van Halen's "VH" logo ablaze.

It looked as if a bomb had gone off in Van Halen's wake. The Five Seasons Center was a gray, smoky mess and the pit area in front of the stage was littered with broken eyeglasses, smashed watches torn from their bands, assorted empty whiskey bottles and 23 miscellaneous shoes.

"It was a great performance, the showmanship was the best I'd ever seen," said Eric Freese, a liberal arts major at the UI who had attended a Guns N' Roses concert in Chicago the previous night. "The show blew me away. I liked the overall craziness, it was like a bunch of guys getting together to have a good time and bringing a few thousand people along."

Opening for Van Halen were the Baby Animals, an Australian-based band that combines a crunching metal sound with an array of vocal arrangements by Suze DeMarchi, the band's featured performer. With a voice that moved from sultry to angry, DeMarchi lurched across the stage taunting and teasing those in the pit as the rest of the Baby Animals belted out songs from their self-titled debut album.

JIGGERED EDGE

A Life on the Jiggered Edge — Last of the red-hot smart-asses

On the passing of a multimedia madcap . . .

I ran into a friend at Gabe's the other night. I hadn't seen him for a couple of months, much longer than I would have liked. It was fairly late — he'd been helping another friend celebrate his upcoming wedding — and his mop of curly brown hair looked wilder than usual. His boyish, goofy grin, which made him look like a weathered and slightly pickled Alfred E. Neuman, signaled good times ahead.

I met this guy a couple of years ago in a radio comedy class. Although he was nearly 20 years older than the other students, he fit in perfectly. Not because he's immature, but because he's such a smart-ass and dedicated fun-seeker that he seems ageless.

He sat down on the next bar stool with his standard accessories: a bottle of Budweiser in one hand, and a pack of Winston reds in the other. As usual, he started flipping me shit right off the bat. As usual, I reciprocated and we caught up on what had been going on lately.

He's a guy that I, like a lot of people in town, always look forward to seeing. He came to Iowa City around 1970, after serving two terms in the infantry in Vietnam. The next few years, he tried to find ways to make sense of it. He's always said that he considers any time after the war "extra credit," and he's lived to the extremes to take advantage of it fully.

Some remember meeting him at the C.O.D., a bar he helped start in the early '70s. Booking live music became a specialty of his, and many of the most memorable blues and rock shows ever seen here are due largely to him. He moved around the country occasionally, but came back to Iowa City and opened other clubs, most notably Gabe's, and also managed some bands before he decided to concentrate on school a few years ago.

All along the way, he's made some good friends. His goofy charm is infectious. I think he's one of the few truly decent people I have ever known. Good natured, generous, sincere as hell, he still works to find ways to laugh and connect people.

And he never lets you take yourself too seriously. One of his favorite pastimes is luring people into a trap, then finishing them off with his goony, gurgling laugh. And the thing is, you always find yourself laughing too, even when you realize you've been set up.

Like on April Fool's Day, when he called up my girlfriend and made her put Saran Wrap over the toilet, hoping to give me a little surprise when I unthinkingly stumbled in there in the dark. If it worked, she was supposed to say with a shit-eating grin on her face that it was from him.

We talked the other night about getting our misfit house-painting crew together again this summer. I pictured him painting away last year, with a cigarette dangling from his mouth and Rush Limbaugh cranked on the radio. He loved hearing Limbaugh go to the extremes in order to piss some self-important person off. Finally, someone he could relate to.

He told me the other night about finishing his master's thesis in multimedia, and the installation he's working on. And about designing and teaching his first class. It's about how Americans have portrayed Asians in wartime films, something that's really helped him deal with his inner demons. I thought of how he's really done some amazing things for himself the past few years, how through intense effort, he's created balance in his life. I was really glad to see him and told him we'd get together soon.

All of which makes it hard to believe that four days later he died. He collapsed in his studio and was gone in less than an hour.

Writing about him, I can't help remembering what he told me the other night.

"Your columns would be okay if you'd just cut out all that flowery shit," he said.

Once again, he was right, and I was laughing.

So, without the flowery shit, I'm really glad I got to know Mike Evans and I'm going to miss him something fierce. This town feels a lot emptier without him. But I'm also laughing because I know he's set us all up again: He's moved on, and we have to stay here and deal with the assholes. I know he's grinning.
