Iowa City man charged with assault

An Iowa City man was charged Monday with assault with the intent to commit sexual abuse. Armando Resendiz Mejia, 23, reportedly took a female juvenile to an apartment at 332 Ellis Ave. Sunday night. According to court documents, Mejia removed his clothes and lay down on top of the girl, pinning her down when she resisted and, at one point, putting his hand down her shorts. Mejia then blocked the doorway until the girl screamed and pushed him away, allowing her to escape, records state.

A preliminary hearing has been scheduled for May 14 at 2 p.m.

Opportunity at Iowa Program receives $90,000

The UI Opportunity at Iowa Program, in conjunction with the UI Graduate College, has received a $90,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education to support the Minority Opportunity Research Experience Program.

The grant will give 19 African-American, Latino or American Indian undergraduates the opportunity to participate in an individualized research relationship with a full-time UI faculty member.

Russia searches for pilloined assets

WASHINGTON (AP) — American corporate detectives are helping Russia track down vast fortunes slipped out of the country by corrupt officials before and after the collapse of the Soviet Union.

"We've already found apartment buildings, hotels, ships, art collections, physical assets of various kinds," said Jules Kroll, head of the New York company hired by the Russian government.

Yegor Gaidar, Russian deputy prime minister, called it "privatization by officials for their personal benefit." He said money was hidden in foreign banks and investments by "individuals and Soviet organizations."

Bosnia appeals for foreign military help

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — The new republic's leaders pleaded for foreign military help Monday as shells rained on the heart of their mountain-ringed capital, smashing into the television and assembly buildings, a mosque and the 1984 Olympic Village.

"Citizens of Sarajevo... the town of Sarajevo is on fire! I appeal to all citizens who love this town to come out wherever there are fires and try to put them out," an unidentified fire official said on a Radio Sarajevo broadcast.

European Community monitors sought to arrange a cease-fire, but were hampered by disconnected telephone lines and what they characterized as irrational impulses guiding the warring parties.

New bill allows for student input on fees

Brad Hahn
Daily Iowan

The heavily debated Education Appropriations Bill passed the Iowa Legislature Sunday night with the inclusion of language creating a student fee committee at each of the public universities, and adding two student representatives to the Iowa College Student Aid Commission.

The portion which discussed the student fee committee has been heavily debated over this past month. It narrowly passed the Iowa House Education Appropriations Committee, by a vote of 11-10. It then was debated heavily in the House before passing. It has spent the last two weeks in conference, but has now been approved.

Under the final wording, a committee consisting of five students and five administrators will meet to discuss any proposed student activity fee changes at the university and make their recommendation to the student government.

The student government will then give their opinions on the committee's decision to the president of the university. The president will write his comments and send all the opinions onto the Iowa state Board of Regents. The regents, as before, have the final say in the matter.

United Students of Iowa Executive Director Ben Stone said the provision will benefit students when issues such as the mandatory computer fee and health fee arise.

"The original version of the bill (before re-working in conference) was better from a student's perspective, but that's what you deal with when you want to get things passed," Stone said.

The other portion affecting students adds two student representatives to the Iowa College Aid Commission. In the past there was only one student representative.

Under the new legislation, one representative will be from an independent institution, one from a community college and the third will be the executive director of the United Students of Iowa.

Stone said this aspect will help students gain credibility.

"This gives students the ability to have someone they've picked sit on the committee," he said. "It establishes credibility and gives students more power."

USI Representative Dave Stark from the UI agreed the bill was helpful to students.

"We're pretty pleased. This gives us some control that we didn't have in the past," Stark said.

IOWA LEGISLATURE

Lawmakers expect budget will provide fiscal stability

Associated Press

DES MOINES (AP) — The $3.47 billion state budget approved by the Iowa Legislature should put the state on solid financial ground for the rest of the decade, majority Democrats said as they left the Capitol early Monday.

Republicans said they were preparing to reopen the bitter budget battle within weeks.

"I think it's inevitable that we'll return here in two or three weeks to do it all over again," Senate Minority Leader Jack Rife, R-Durant, said.

"Our top priority was solving the state's budget problem. We solved it," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Hutchins, D-Audubon.

The budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1 is more than $200 million over this year's spending total and includes a $274 million sales tax increase not yet endorsed by Gov. Terry Branstad.

Tax increase opponents said it faces a veto from Republican Branstad, who could force the Legislature to return for a special session.

Branstad criticized the Legislature's budget but declined to say whether he would veto it.

Democrats said Branstad has no choice but to accept the tax increase and spending plan.

"This governor's going to sign a tax increase," said Sen. Al Sturgeon, D-Sioux City. "He's waiting to sign a tax increase because he doesn't have a plan and never has. He's trying to look reluctant."

Faced with runaway state spending, the 1992 Legislature approved new spending curbs aimed at creating a state rainy day fund of $150 million or more in this decade. In the process, legislators made it more difficult for education and social service programs to get state aid.

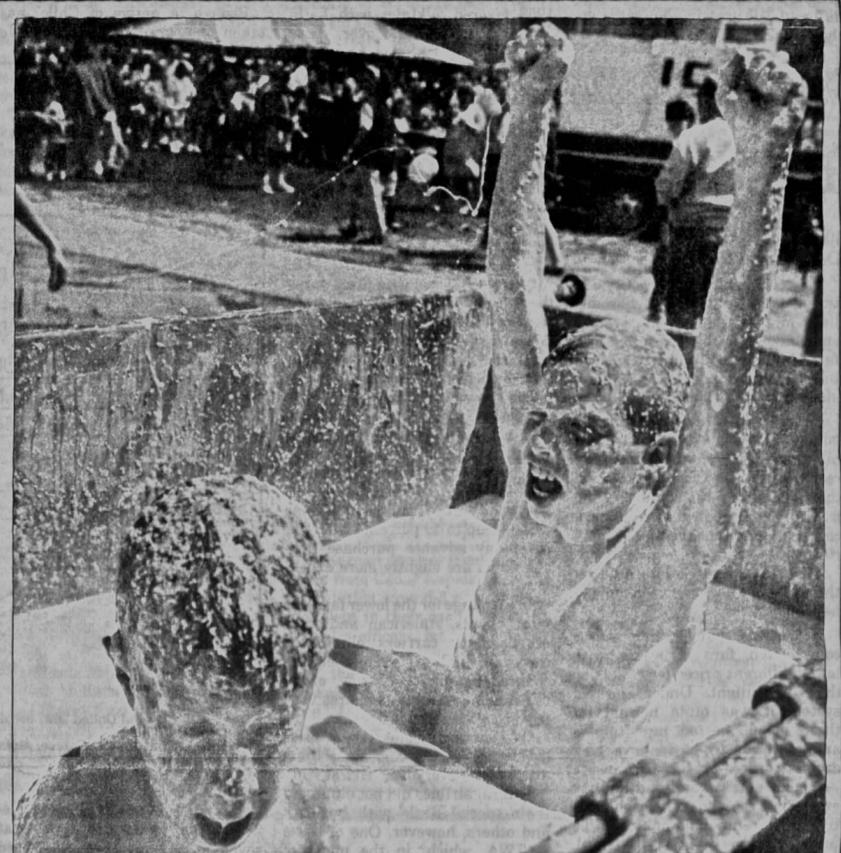

Most state spending programs were held steady for the fiscal year beginning July 1, with more than $100 million of the sales tax revenue used for court-ordered state employee pay raises.

The Legislature Monday approved a $102 million pay increase for state workers that for the first time draws distinctions between unionized state workers and non-union workers.

Legislators granted pay increases of about 9 percent for workers covered by union contracts and 6 percent for those not covered.

The Iowa Supreme Court has ordered the higher increase for union workers. State budget problems make 6 percent all that can be financed for the rest, legislators said.

Legislators bargained until dawn over dividing the money between unionized and non-union workers and rejected Branstad's proposal to spread the court-ordered increases to all workers that would cost $107 million.

MEDICINE

Safety of cancer-fighting drug tamoxifen questioned

Kelly Hassenstab
Daily Iowan

A national study of the preventive uses of tamoxifen has raised concerns about the safety of the anti-cancer drug, but investigators from the UI Hospitals and Clinics say the reactions are unfounded.

Tamoxifen is being tested in a nationwide study for its ability to prevent the development of breast cancer in women at high risk for the disease.

An article published in the April 25 issue of Science News states that although tamoxifen has been successfully used in treating patients with breast cancer and other forms of cancer, the drug has been shown to cause liver abnormalities, including tumors, in laboratory animals.

According to Science News, Gary Williams, medical director of the American Health Foundation, said several studies suggest that "tamoxifen is being handled in the liver like a chemical carcinogen, not like a hormone."

The idea that an anti-cancer treatment itself might actually cause cancer has provoked a negative response from scientists and activists who want to limit the use of the drug in healthy populations.

Adriane Fugh-Berman, a Washington, D.C., physician, was also quoted in the article.

"We're afraid these tamoxifen intervention trials are really going to set a precedent for experiments in disease substitution — a concept we don't like," Fugh-Berman said.

But Dr. Peter Jochimsen, UI professor of surgery and principal investigator of the National Cancer Institute study, said the results cited cannot accurately be applied to human patients.

"The data suggest that tamoxifen may cause liver abnormalities in rodents," Jochimsen said, "but they administered very large doses to thousands of tiny animals, and found tumors in some of them."

LOS ANGELES

City begins recovery in wake of riots

Scott McCatney
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Schools, shops and skyscrapers reopened in this military-occupied city Monday and a curfew was lifted as Los Angeles struggled to emerge from the nation's deadliest riots of the century.

Troops remained stationed throughout looted and burned neighborhoods. But Mayor Tom Bradley lifted a dusk-to-dawn curfew, making Monday night the first without tight restrictions.

"I feel good about today and I hope that all of us can sense that feeling that things are coming back into line again," Bradley said.

Overnight, the mostly calm weekend was shaken when National Guardsmen shot and killed a motorist who tried to run them down. That shooting, the first by troops on riot duty, plus eight deaths reported to the coroner Monday, brought the toll to 55, authorities said.

Officials said three of the newly reported deaths were the result of

Forum sparks discussion on racism, police brutality

Eric Detwiler
Daily Iowan

Over 100 people outraged by the acquittal of four Los Angeles police officers in the beating of motorist Rodney King gathered Monday night in the Union.

The purpose of the forum, according to mediator Dan Clayvon, was to discuss possible ways to respond to racism and police brutality in the interest of justice.

"This is not a white thing or a black thing; this is a human thing," Clayvon said. "And it affects each and every one of you. I'm sure you've seen it. I'm sure you're appalled by it. You see it on TV and you see it everywhere."

The first half-hour of the meeting was an open discussion over differing views on the verdict and the aftereffects of the violence.

"I don't think it's black vs. white," said Brian Davis. "It's not. It's right vs. wrong now. It's across racial lines now. When we all watched those 89 seconds of tape, that's when our society hit bottom."

Later people in attendance recounted episodes of police violence they had witnessed and heard about. "We're talking about police brutality and what we can do about racism," Clayvon said. "We're looking for solutions. I'm not pulling any punches. I'm just going to the root."

One of the solutions suggested at the meeting included a proposal for the formation of a group that would focus on the problems of police brutality and racism. By the end of the meeting the group had a name — Anti-Racist Mobilization.

Audience members also proposed collecting and publicizing local instances of brutality, informing the press and protesting on a local level against brutality. According to participants, future meetings are being planned.

"The problem with our society is we're built on checks and balances," Clayvon said. "Old money rules. We need to change our mindset, people."

COLLEGE OF EDUCATION

'Cinderella' stories highlight cultural diversity

Susan Kreimer
Daily Iowan

Once upon a time Cinderella lost her glass slipper only to find it replaced by a charming prince.

Although the story of Cinderella is popular among children in the United States, the tale has caught hold in many other countries where it has been adapted to suit the language and the culture — just as the slipper fit Cinderella's foot.

The UI College of Education has organized a display of children's books in the curriculum lab to highlight the diversity of folktales like "Cinderella" around the world.

The exhibit opened April 20 and will run for three weeks. The college will also display photographs of classrooms of children in different cultures in showcases on the second floor.

The intent is to make the presence of international students in the college more apparent, according to Kathy Bartlett, liaison to international students and co-coordinator of the display with Tong-Ai Zhang, a doctoral student from China.

The exhibit will show the similarities between cultures, said Paul Retish, professor of special education and coordinator of international education.

"Every culture has a Cinderella story. . . That's what we all have in common — being a child at some point in our lives. . . It makes for a commonality of interpretation," he said.

But recurring themes, which include family and lessons in morality, vary in their interpretations by each culture, Bartlett said.

In Colombia, the literary movement after the Cuban Revolution of 1959 favored folktales with Latin American characters over those with classic European heroes, said Zayda Sierra, a graduate student in the college.

Reading the new tales helps Latin American children relate better to their heritage, said Sierra, a mother of two young girls.

"The books break with the classic tradition of a simple woman becoming a princess," she said. "We have to teach our Colombian girls who live in difficult conditions of life that no charming prince is going to rescue them."

Pictures, as well as stories about another culture, can create images in the reader's mind about its people.

"Images help people see another culture," said Claudio Pizarro, a doctoral student from Chile who will showcase some of his photographs of Chile and Cuba in the Lindquist Center.

Pizarro, a native of Chile, has taken photographs of children. He has captured color images of seventh-graders forming a line in a Chilean school and of sixth-graders cooking in a Cuban school.

"To show children is to show how the future is going to be," Pizarro said.

Displaying photographs of children and schoolrooms around the world will allow international students and Americans to exchange cultural values. The exhibit will make American students question what they see in the pictures, Pizarro said.

"We cannot expect to make people sensitive through pictures. It's only an attempt, but a picture can make you think," he said. "It's a motivation to search for more information, to approach a foreigner and talk to them."

"Hopefully," Pizarro said, "these pictures will help Iowa people become more interested . . . in people from another part of the Earth."

FLY NOW, SAVE NOW

Restructuring, price cuts mean lower fares

Jude Sunderbruch
Daily Iowan

The recent restructuring of domestic airfares by several major airlines and price cuts from several smaller carriers have resulted in a fare war that could mean savings to students who plan ahead and shop around.

American Airlines fired the first volley in the latest fare war last month when they completely restructured the vast majority of their domestic fares while slashing many prices, according to American Airlines spokesman Marty Heires.

"Customers were telling us that the system was just too complex," he said.

Before the change, there was a complicated fare structure with many different prices for tickets on the same flight. Under the old system it was quite normal for three people seated next to one another on a flight to have paid different prices for their tickets.

Business travelers had to pay exorbitant rates for full coach fares that were refundable and could be purchased on the day of travel. Others on the flight who could plan ahead and had purchased their non-refundable tickets a month before while agreeing to a multitude of other restrictions might have paid less than half the full coach fare.

Within days of its introduction United Airlines and other major carriers matched American Airlines' restructuring. However, several smaller carriers struggling to stay afloat amid bankruptcy proceedings have retained their old fare system while lowering prices.

This challenge was met by American and other carriers in many markets.

"There were some TWA fares, U.S. Air fares, and America West fares that we matched," Heires said. To remain competitive with no-frills Southwest Airlines, American has retained its old pricing system in that market, he said.

The new system consists of four categories: first class with fares that are 20 percent to 50 percent lower, full coach fares that can be purchased on the day of travel that are at least 38 percent lower, 14-day advance purchase tickets that are up to 49 percent lower and seven-day advance purchase tickets which are slightly more expensive.

In exchange for the lower fares for most people, American and most other major carriers eliminated corporate, military and other discounts. In addition, they eliminated some of the other fares they used to offer.

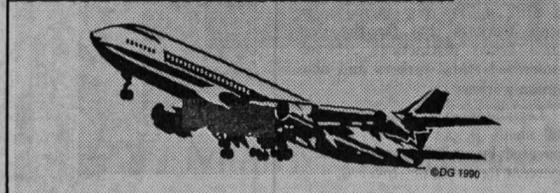

"We wanted to make these fares as low as possible and make them available to everyone," Heires said.

Several airlines did not eliminate their special deals with business and others, however. One of these is TWA, which, in the midst of bankruptcy proceedings that permit it to keep flying, has tried to position itself as a major player in the important business traveler market. In addition to its special agreements, TWA has been aggressively lowering its fares.

"We're still lowering in many markets. We're still providing value to the customer," a TWA spokesperson said.

Annette Combs, manager of Hawkeye World Travel, Plaza Centre One, said some of the new fares are cheaper, while others are about the same as they were before the restructuring. She said that one important benefit of the restructuring is that seven- and 14-day tickets that used to be non-refundable can now be exchanged for tickets on a different date for a $25 fee with few restrictions.

"The really big difference is that you can change the travel dates," she said. "They're more user friendly."

While most major airlines offer some form of student discount for international travel, there are few domestic student discounts.

There are exceptions, however. Council Travel, the travel division of the Council on International Educational Exchange, has long been known to provide extremely low rates for students traveling overseas if they have an International Student Identity Card, issued by CIEE.

Additionally, Council Travel can book students with the card on domestic flights, often at prices below those offered to the public.

Council Travel can also make special arrangements for students flying overseas, according to Jennifer West of Council Travel.

"With most of our student fares you can fly into one city and out of another, and in on one airline or out on another. We have that flexibility," she said.

THEATER DEPARTMENT

Students to see further discount in ticket costs

Betty Lin
Daily Iowan

In an effort to make the theater more accessible to students, the UI theatre department will be lowering its discount ticket rates for the 1992-93 season for students and senior citizens.

According to Victor Mashburn, director of theater relations, approximately 11,000 people attend theater productions during the academic year. Of that number, approximately 60 percent are UI students.

"We feel that it is beneficial for the student to be exposed to the theater," he said.

Mashburn said the department hopes to better accommodate students wishing to attend theater performances by making prices more affordable.

The new ticket rates will affect both individual and season performance ticket prices for students and senior citizens only. Ticket prices for faculty, staff and local residents will remain the same, according to Mashburn.

Tickets for individual performances will be lowered to $5 compared to this year's price of $8, while several different season packages will also be offered.

The "Encore" package includes two seats to all five Mainstage productions and will be offered at a discounted price of $30, compared to the current price of $44.

For $18.75, a five-play package, which entitles the ticket holder to one ticket to each of the five Mainstage productions, may be purchased at a savings of $11.25 from this year's price.

The final reduced package that the theater department is offering is the three-play package for $12. This year's price was $19.50.

Also new next season to ticket holders will be a "Freedom Card," which will enable a person to purchase a season ticket with the added freedom of selecting the particular performance dates one week prior to opening night.

The department is hoping there will be a corresponding increase in attendance due to the lower prices for tickets, Mashburn said.

"We are genuinely determined and committed to making the theater a part of a student's life," Mashburn said.

Mashburn admitted that lowering the ticket rates will be a "real gamble" for the department since the theater department has also been hit with budget cuts.

"We finance our productions and education programs through our box office," he said.

Next season's productions will include "Mother of Us All"; "Scarlet Letter"; the second piece of a trilogy titled "Marathon Dancing" by Ann Bogart, a top director in the United States who will be at the UI for a seven-week residency; "Buried Child"; and a production from the UI Playwrights Workshop.

CAMPUS BRIEFS

A weekly summary of news at the nation's college campuses.

Protesters march on Indiana's student paper

About 200 people marched into the newsroom of the University of Indiana Daily Student newsroom Thursday evening to protest a photograph the newspaper was considering using in Friday's issue.

The photo was taken Thursday afternoon during a rally that protested the acquittals in the Rodney King beating case.

The group, which included members of the Black Student Union, was angered by the photo which showed a white man carrying a Malcolm X sign. Members of the group said they were upset because the photo showed a white man as a dominant image in the rally.

The photographer who took the picture failed to get the man's name after taking the photograph. He called the Black Student Union hoping that someone there would be able to identify the man in his photo.

The editor-in-chief of the Daily Student told the group the newspaper decided before the group arrived not to run the picture.

The group applauded but then voiced other complaints about the newspaper's coverage — or lack of coverage — of minorities.

The white man in the picture said the Daily Student staffers are racist without knowing it.

University of Illinois at Chicago greets called racially insensitive

Fraternity and sorority members at the University of Illinois' Chicago campus might face disciplinary action next week because members might have been racially insensitive during a Greek Week contest.

Alpha Phi Alpha, the only African-American fraternity at UIC, filed a complaint against the Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity and the Gamma Gamma Gamma sorority, complaining about one incident in which fraternity members used "black face" for a lip-synch contest.

Alpha Phi Alpha members also complained about costumes that sorority members wore during their performance.

During the Greek Week event, Sigma Alpha Mu members donned black face makeup and performed a scene from the movie "The Blues Brothers." Members of Alpha Phi Alpha said the portrayal of Ray Charles was offensive.

Gamma Gamma Gamma members were said to have had intentions of acting out animals in the jungle, such as monkeys and gorillas, for their lip-synch of "The Lion Sleeps Tonight."

They also painted their faces black, but removed their makeup before performing at the request of campus programming managers.

Sigma Alpha Mu has apologized for offending people. Gamma Gamma Gamma could not be reached for comment.

Georgia employee charged with theft claims university violated payroll rules

An attorney for a botany department employee arrested in late April said he expects to prove in court that the department attempted to compensate his client for her overtime work outside regular payroll channels.

Attorney Ed Tolley said this was revealed in the University of Georgia's internal investigation, which led university police to arrest Katie Bishop, a botany office manager, on a charge of felony theft by deception. She posted $5,000 bail that afternoon.

Tolley said that Bishop wasn't guilty and that she never took unauthorized money.

Bishop, who has worked for the university for 19 years, was suspended without pay from the department during a monthlong investigation. The investigation began after the university accounting office found a questionable $5,559 consulting payment to Bishop's nephew.

Bishop's arrest warrant said she had falsified documents to obtain the money for her nephew. University police said the penalty for theft by deception is usually more than a year in jail.

CHEATING

Advisers can aid accused students

Estela Villanueva
Daily Iowan

Panic and worry may be the first reactions of a student accused of cheating, but academic advisers can help if students need someone to talk to about the incident.

"I think when students are accused it is distressing to them and they might very well talk it over with their academic adviser," said Juliet Kaufmann, director of the undergraduate academic advising center. "What we like to do is to listen to what the student has to say in as supportive a manner as we can, and inform the student about their rights and the procedures the university has in place."

Students who believe they have been wrongly accused can also discuss the rights they have. Advisers can then direct these students to academic misconduct policy statements in university manuals describing the proper grievance procedures, Kaufmann said.

"When I talk with students about cheating, they've been more concerned about the immediate situation. They are concerned with what will happen in the class and what effect it will have on their academic progress," Kaufmann said.

Advisers can also help students who witness cheating. Many students become upset when an incident occurs in a course where the grades are curved, and other people cheating might have an effect on their grades.

Cheating brings up the ethical issue for students who witness the act of deciding what to do about it, Kaufmann said. Only the student realize that copying papers or using "Cliffs Notes" can be considered cheating and have caused students serious trouble, Kaufmann said.

While academic misconduct can be broken down into cheating and plagiarism, there is no university-wide definition of these two actions.

"The way that our academic misconduct system is set up, each individual academic college is authorized to resolve cases of cheating as well as to define the aspects of cheating," said Tom Baker, assistant to the dean of students. What one college considers academic misconduct may differ from other colleges since each devises its own policy.

"I suspect it would have to do with fact that each college has its own curriculum and the nature of the classes in each college would differ," Baker said.

Cheating is partly an academic issue, but also an educational issue in letting students know what fits the definition of cheating, he said.

"As far as things like plagiarism, the concerns may vary from college to college because of the different nature of the writing requirements. There is more research in the history department than in other departments so the issue of plagiarism is more of a concern there," he said.

Kaufmann emphasized that students need to be aware of what may be considered cheating.

"Sometimes students say they wouldn't have done it if they had known it was cheating," she said. "It is always hard to tell if some students need to be educated about what academic misconduct is and what isn't."

can solve the ethical problem according to his or her own conscience, she said.

"They feel that students are gaining an unfair advantage by cheating. They frequently feel they ought to do it (tell the instructor about cheating) but are hesitant to get into what they perceive would be a difficult issue," Kaufmann said.

Some students talk to their advisers because they don't know how to report the cheating.

"Students are often not aware of the university procedures and rules and often are intimidated," Kaufmann said. "They don't know where to start with this and for that reason might hesitate. They also don't know what the consequences would be for themselves."

One of the difficulties for all students is that they may not understand what academic dishonesty involves. Some students don't Touting placards proclaiming "West High Students for Justice" and shouting "Fight police brutality," about 60 West High School students walked out of classes Monday afternoon to protest the Rodney King assault trial verdict.

Students traveled from the school to the Pentacrest, through the Pedestrian Mall to the Iowa City Police Department, to the Old Capitol Center and back to the Pentacrest, with half as many ending the march as had started.

West High senior Robert Moore said the purpose of the walkout was to show support for King, and to show unity between blacks and whites at West High.

"There's a lot of anger," Moore said. "I don't think people are here

"I don't think people are here just to miss classes."

just to miss classes. We're here for Rodney King and to show our unity. This would be a long walk just to be out of a class."

Dylan Zastrow, a freshman at West High, said he helped organize the walkout by putting up fliers in the school cafeteria.

"In our American studies class we saw a video of what was going on in Los Angeles," he said. "We thought they were doing riots for the wrong things."

Others saw the walkout as an opportunity to let their voices be heard.

"We just want to get people's attention and let them know we're not just stupid little kids who don't know what's going on," freshman Emily Holmes said.

For some, though, the walkout was an excuse to skip class, as several left the rally to get food and drink.

"At first I came to get out of class," sophomore Jeremy Prouty said. "But once I got out here, I realized what was going on. Now I'm out here for the cause."

West High Principal Jerry Arganbright said the school will not take disciplinary action against the students, but any absence from class resulting from the walkout will count as an unexcused absence.

"I'm a strong supporter of students having a right to say something about what happened in Los Angeles," he said. "I just hope it doesn't impede their academics. That's the only thing I'm a little disappointed in."

Brooks fans camp out, jam phone lines for tickets

Associated Press

WATERLOO — Country music fans camped out at the Waterloo Greyhound Park waiting for Garth Brooks concert tickets to go on sale Monday morning.

Deb McKernan, Karen LeVelle and Stacey Everhart were first in line outside the grandstand doors when tickets went on sale at 7 a.m.

McKernan and her friends, who drove from Cedar Rapids, arrived in Waterloo around 5 p.m. Friday and slept in their car until track security officers let them take their spot in line.

"If they would have said two weeks ago he was going to be here, I would have been out here," Everhart said.

Greyhound Park security officers and Waterloo police directed the busy traffic. Field Sgt. Lowell Young said the crowd was well-behaved.

"These people really are to be commended," Lowell said. "They must be good country fans to listen and not risk any problems."

The Sept. 18 concert at the greyhound park was sold out by mid-morning Monday.

VEISHEA

Task force to explore alternatives to festival

Anne Johnston
Daily Iowan

The future of the student-run festival Veishea, a 70-year tradition at Iowa State University in Ames, may be in question after a Campustown riot Friday night in which 27 people were arrested, approximately 34 injured, and minor property damage occurred.

"To have what happened Friday night overshadow all of the wonderful aspects of Veishea pains me greatly. I'm very disappointed," ISU President Martin Jischke said. Although Veishea may not be canceled altogether, Jischke said he will be putting together a task force to look into alternatives.

"At this point, all options are open," Jischke said.

Ames Police Chief Dennis Ballantine said that he hesitates to call Friday night's incident, which involved an estimated 8,000 people, a riot.

"What they had in L.A. was a riot — what we had was a drunken brawl," Ballantine said.

Although he said the Ames police force was better prepared for handling such a disturbance having experienced the first Veishea riots four years ago, Ballantine said Friday night's crowd was friendly at first and he was somewhat surprised by the evening's turn of events.

"The crowd just swelled around midnight," Ballantine said. "We had a few hundred and then all of a sudden we had a few thousand."

ISU freshman Vaseem Baig said that shortly before midnight, students attending parties on opposite sides of Welch Avenue began shouting "Less filling!" "Tastes great!" at each other and lobbing beer cans back and forth. He said some students then sat down in the middle of the street to block traffic.

"All options are open."

Martin Jischke, ISU president

Ballantine said the arrest of one of these individuals, who was drunk and jumping out in front of cars, seemed to change the mood of the crowd.

"That seemed to be the catalyst, but if it hadn't been that it would've been something else because they were already fired up with the party atmosphere," Ballantine said.

Ballantine said things went downhill from there, literally and figuratively, as the growing crowd headed down Welch Avenue to the busy four-lane Lincoln Way. He said four or five cars were flipped over, street signs were uprooted and the windows of some Welch Avenue businesses were smashed.

"Even the ones that weren't actually doing the damage or throwing the stuff at the police officers were certainly cheering them along," Ballantine said.

Ballantine said several serious fights broke out within the crowd.

"There were people getting ganged up on and getting the crap kicked out of them, basically," ISU senior Kevin Fehr said.

Fehr, who joined the crowd after leaving a bar on Welch Avenue, said the people involved reminded him of "lemmings."

"People would start running one way and then the other," he said. "If you asked anybody in the crowd why they were there, nobody knew. It had nothing to do with the Rodney King thing as far as I could see. It was all just pretty stupid."

Ballantine said that at the high point of the disturbance, there were approximately 8,000 people, maybe more, blocking traffic on Lincoln Way. It was then that the decision was made to use tear gas in order to disperse the crowd.

"We had people that were getting beaten severely inside the crowd. We couldn't even get ambulances to them and they were laying in the street bleeding," Ballantine said. "We had to do something, and that's what we decided to do."

"I thought it was crazy. It was good at the start — it was just a good time, but then it got out of hand," Baig said.

In order to prevent a repeat performance of Friday night, members of the Veishea Central Committee distributed fliers Saturday afternoon urging students to keep everything under control.

The Ames police, who had about 45 officers stationed along Welch Avenue Friday night, beefed up their presence to 150 officers Saturday night with the help of other law enforcement officials from the area.

Ballantine said the officers, many clad in riot gear, kept people moving on Welch Avenue Saturday night, warning people not to congregate. Although 122 arrests were made for minor violations Saturday night, he said things were relatively quiet.

"We felt it was reasonably successful," Ballantine said.

WOMEN IN MEDIA

UI professor to discuss privacy, press freedom

Betty Lin
Daily Iowan

Protection of victims' rights and privacy in photographs will be among the topics discussed Wednesday afternoon during an address to the Iowa City/Cedar Rapids Chapter of Women in Communications Inc. by guest speaker Carolyn Dyer, a UI associate professor and associate director of the School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

Women in Communications Inc. is a national organization committed to the advancement of women in all fields of communications and to upholding the First Amendment rights and responsibilities of communicators.

Dyer's address, "Freedom of the Press vs. The Right to Privacy," will touch on the important First Amendment issues that face the media daily.

"There are many problems with the news media interpreting the First Amendment so absolutely, said Dyer.

"It is interpreted from the experience and court system that has been dominated by men for many years," she said.

Dyer will focus on women's rights of privacy during cases of rape and other serious crimes.

"The concerns of women in privacy mostly have not been very well considered by courts and the news media is not very considerate of anyone's privacy — women in particular," she said.

Among those considerations, Dyer said, are the identification of a rape victim, details of the assault and photos of the victim in the news media.

Dyer said it is important for people to recognize that there are two types of people.

"The experiences of men do not always cover all the experiences people can have," she said.

Recent public cases such as the Mike Tyson and William Kennedy-Smith rape trials will also be discussed during the address, said Dyer.

"There needs to be more consideration of privacy by the news media," Dyer said. "I am not convinced that more law is the answer. I think that the media can take it on themselves."

5 killed, 6 injured in van crash

Associated Press

EARLHAM, Iowa — A van carrying 11 people from across the country swerved out of control and overturned along Interstate 80. Five people died and the six others were injured.

All but two of the occupants were thrown from the van as it rolled over and over, the Iowa State Patrol said. The van strewn debris for 50 yards along the busy highway before coming to rest in the median.

State troopers said the eastbound van went out of control as it was passing another vehicle just west of Earlham in Dallas County on Sunday.

Dr. Francis Garrity, deputy state medical examiner, said the van was one of three traveling from Denver, Colo., to Chicago, Ill. The passengers worked for a company called Total Dedication Inc. and were selling magazine subscriptions, Garrity said.

Five of the injured were hospitalized in Des Moines.

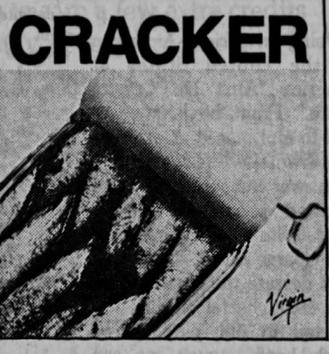

The State Patrol said most of the occupants apparently were not wearing seat belts.

AMERICAN SOCIETY

A re-evaluation is in order

In recent history we have come to learn more and more about the horrifying truths which constitute American society today. Each week's passing brings us new revelations of travesty after disgusting travesty.

Rodney King's police attackers found themselves acquitted of all charges, sending the message that police officers have the right to savagely beat an obviously defenseless black man (inflicting nerve damage and permanent injury), and that they have the right to do so even after that man has obeyed the officers' orders, dropped into the prone position, and attempted to place his hands behind his head.

The CIA has the right to assassinate a president of the United States if that particular president poses a threat. Evidence supporting this conclusion has amassed in such mountains of incriminating data that only the obtuse and those frightened of what this means about America today could possibly deny it. Doubters may ask the 147 people who were too close to the assassination of JFK; those who knew too much and who were murdered for it.

The Supreme Court's recent decision to legalize housing discrimination based solely upon race begins a cycle of backpedaling human and civil rights; "separate but equal" terminology and regulations could easily be resurrected by this maneuver.

The Census Bureau's Center for International Research's utter fabrication of statistics concerning numbers of Iraqi casualties resulting from the gulf war is slowly beginning to surface. New figures, amounting in some instances to as much as 20 times the official count, were revealed by Beth Osbourne Daponte, who was dismissed as a result of the contradiction between official and factual statistics. As DI editorial writer Tom Hudson pointed out, it matters not whether you supported the war; the fact of the matter is that, once again, our government is lying to us, and that we, the people, generally don't give a damn.

It has been said that the best way to gauge a society is through its music; frustrated rumblings in the underground have become more pervasive of late:

- "Fight The Power," Public Enemy.
- "Black man, white man, yellow man; we need a revolution to rip the system," KMFDM.
- "Execute economic slaves," Skinny Puppy.

How many bodies need to be piled up before our eyes before we even begin to question our government, our society? It has already been enough in Los Angeles, Atlanta, Seattle and many other cities where violence ran out of control this past week over the legalized abuse of one citizen. What all of this tells us is what a few have known for some time: A sweeping re-evaluation of our government and society is in order. If we do not at least question authority, abuse of the people will continue.

LETTERS

Rodney King

To the Editor:
Before everyone continues their tizzy over the verdict on the Rodney King trial, I ask that you stop for a moment and think about what you really know about the case.

I am willing to bet that many of those who are upset over the not guilty verdict have no idea what went on in the trial, especially those rioting in downtown Los Angeles, but for an 81-second videotape. These people are simply responding to the pictures they have seen on the television news, shows which are all too willing to provide a controversial story that brings race relations into the forefront. After all, this is the type of story that sells advertising space. The jurors on the other hand, sat through a three-month criminal trial; they undoubtedly heard a great amount of evidence that many do not know about or would choose to ignore.

For example, do you know that there were two other black men in the car with Rodney King, neither of whom resisted police or were abused by them? Do you know that King led the police on an eight-minute car chase at over 100 mph, during which time the police learned that he was a parolee convicted of robbing a store using a tire iron? Do you know that the police used a tazer against King, releasing 50,000 volts of electricity through him, which should be enough to paralyze a person, and King still resisted after being hit with the tazer twice?

All the videotape shows is the tail end of the incident, it tells you nothing about what happened before the camera started rolling. The officers may have been entirely justified — you just can't tell.

I am certainly not condoning the behavior of the officers. If they beat Rodney King without provocation, they deserved to be convicted, but you can't convict the officers without all the facts. The Pentacrest rally did this, as did the rioters in Los Angeles who have murdered 10 people to date. They say that this verdict demonstrates the racial injustice which exists today. It does not. It says that there is not enough evidence to convict the officers.

This is not an injustice. If there is any injustice in this case, it is that a motorist who led the police on an eight-minute high speed chase had no charges pressed against him. I bet you know who that motorist is, with or without the videotape.

Apology

To the Editor:
Kim Painter owes an apology for her absolutely insensitive comment, "The Louvre will still be there tomorrow, provided the PLO doesn't blow it up" (DI, April 20). While she's at it, she can further apologize for offending those of us who have respect for the Palestinian people.

After that, the DI can ask Jim Rogers where he comes up with some of his statements like, "... the anti-abortion movement is a movement driven by blue-collar women ..." (DI, April 23), when it is perhaps more valid to say it's driven by blue-collar, uneducated men. Given the opportunity, I could cite many, many examples of problems with the "World According to Jim Rogers."

And as for me, I am bored to death reading Painter's weekly diary highlighting her personal life, and Rogers' weekly assaults on middle-of-the-road politics. Get with it, DI, and fill this space with some decent journalism.

The social dilemma of writing

It's always interesting, if not necessarily amusing, to have your past works rise from the archives and smile at you. Called the "I told me so," effect, it's something I've repeatedly had to experience this year — after I wrote last December that writers don't live in a vacuum and they're responsible to some extent about what they write.

Since then — and sporadically before that — letters published in response to my writing have painted a portrait wherein this columnist is a kid badly in need of education, who opposes free speech, who goes out every Thursday night for a one-night stand (without any protection, to boot), who should rather write for Penthouse and is, in general, insensitive. Meanwhile, out on the street, I'm usually told by people — some of whom I know, some I don't — who'd rather speak than write, to ignore all the negative response.

The vacuum paradigm works both ways, however, and it's not good practice to ignore feedback that could be beneficial. But more often than not, it grieves me to see how my arguments are incredibly twisted and simplified in letters, just so the writer can battle a point that I didn't even make in the column, or offer a baseless and vengeful depiction of my persona. That's fine; we have freedom of speech. It's fine, because in many cases I set out to criticize, disturb, or offend people when I think they need to wake up. I can almost ignore a response from one of those because it's only predictable. What I can't ignore is when I offend people without meaning to at all; that's bad form on my part and rightly deserves an apology.

I'm talking, of course, about a column I wrote about Weeg not too long ago, where I used Auschwitz as a metaphor for the graduate experience. In a similar fashion, Roger Waters had used the theme in his last project with Pink Floyd; his was a morbid piece, mine was satirical. What Waters and I both did was grab the most striking image we could find to make a connection in people's minds, a connection to emphasize our main point, which had nothing to do with the Holocaust in itself.

One of the responding letters asserted that I could not have drawn a similar parallel using the image of a Southern plantation with slaves. When I read that I thought, I would have, if I'd thought about it — for I'm a slave of Graduate College requirements that have a tendency to go overboard. And I presume it too may have sparked outrage, especially with what's happening after Rodney King, regardless that with the contempt I have for the discrimination blacks face, I wouldn't think of trivializing their plight. Then I thought, I may have used the Bhopal disaster, I was writing my thesis on that, and maybe that would have trivialized international capitalism's willful disregard for human life, which I outlined in my work. I don't know if Waters got any flak about his song, but I sure got my share for having supposedly trivialized the Holocaust — maybe because satire is much more offensive or maybe magical realism is a particularly dangerous area (as evidenced by the Salman Rushdie case.)

The striking thing is, close to 20 people (professors, journalists, activists, students) I talked to failed to grasp the motive behind such strong response. Of course, they all happen to be non-Jewish, which shows there's a gap of understanding we need to address. The gap was evident in the letters too, because it was said I didn't care about Jewish pain and Jewish death, and if I had relatives who died in the Holocaust, I wouldn't have thought it was funny. The attitude expressed by these words — besides implying that I may care about other people's pain but not Jews' and effectively labeling me as an anti-Semite, a name recklessly attached to anyone from Hitler to humanitarian opponents of Israel's politics — serves to compartmentalize Jews against everybody else, in that you have to be Jewish to truly care. It may be debated whether this attitude emerged after the Holocaust, or it comes from centuries of wanton oppression, or it starts at the very beginning when the term "chosen people" was first used, possibly and needlessly sowing the seeds of antagonism.

My problem is that I cannot even begin to be racially conscious. I can't understand why people discriminate or kill on the basis of race — or anything else, for that matter — all around the world. Specifically, I can't understand how a bunch of idiots can set out to prove the Holocaust did not happen, and funnel their filthy money, seriously hope to convert even one single person. Those are absolutely beyond me, though clearly racists and racism proliferates, and clearly I am told that I have contributed to that. Even though I'm the only columnist here who recently devoted a column to Jewish culture. Even though I come from a country where higher education underwent a true Renaissance in the 1940s thanks to Jewish professors fleeing the Nazis. Even though I made fun of Weeg, and not Auschwitz. The damage is done.

Not only do I apologize to Jewish readers whom I made flinch by grisly references to painful memories, I also apologize to other ethnic groups that I may have insulted had I picked another metaphor.

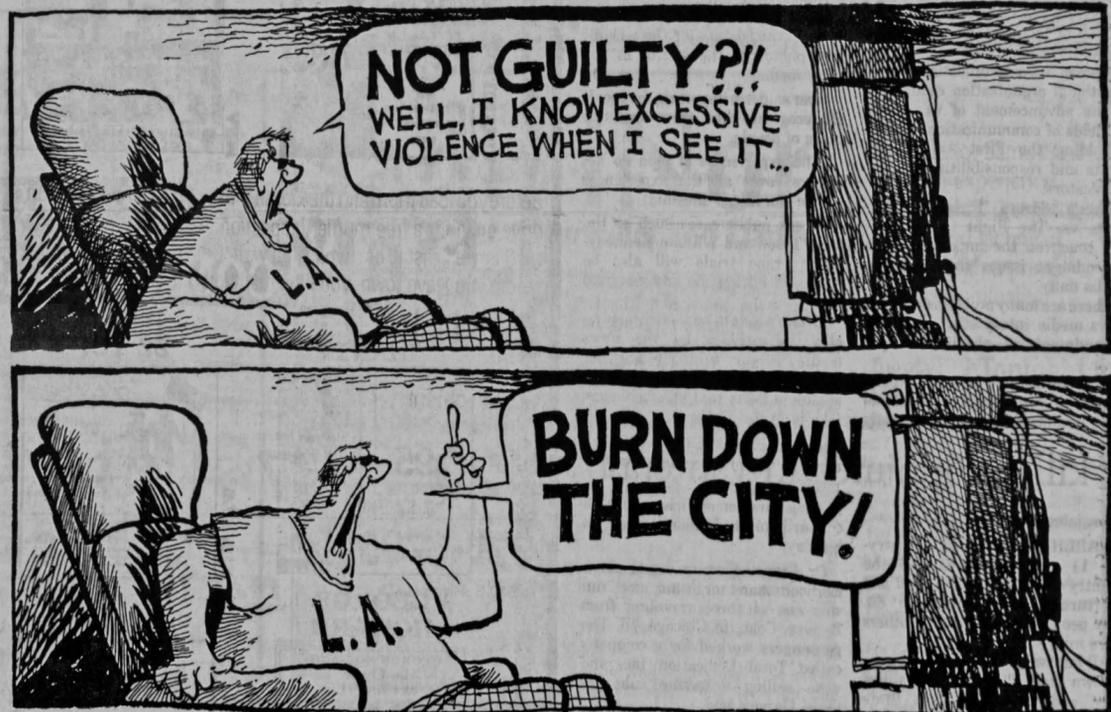

A sidebar that needs immediate mention here is that black humor is fast becoming a minefield, thanks to politically correct backlashes against discrimination — a phenomenon which I may like to feel detached from, but one that influences my frames of reference nevertheless. Just last weekend, when I was training for the dragon boat races, words started falling into place in my head. We are slaves. The boatmaster beats the drum and we row. Tall waves whip our backs, and we row, and still we row, row, row, away and out of Africa... Demeaning the African-American experience of slavery, extermination and oppression? Or simply another stream of consciousness piece, as harmless as "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock"? It's not an easy judgment to make.

GUEST OPINION

The reality of being an African-American

Being an African-American in the United States of America "Ain't No Crystal Stare." From birth, we are lied to and placed at a severe disadvantage. We are told that we can grow up and become president of the United States of America just like George Bush. We are told that despite the many obstacles that chattel slavery has erected in our path, if we work hard enough we can also live the American dream. All we have to do is pull ourselves up by our boot straps like Clarence Thomas. America, stop your vicious lying and speak the truth. No matter how hard we black people work, America is going to limit what it wants us to accomplish. African-Americans have been systematically forced to reside on the last rung of society.

We all know that George Bush did not have to utilize federally funded programs like Headstart and Upward Bound to help supplement an inferior education. However, he is definitely spearheading the movement to get rid of them. There would be no need for these so-called special treatment programs if African-Americans were treated equally from the beginning. How long are a people supposed to listen to lies? How long are we supposed to listen to our European counterparts tell us that racism and discrimination is over in America?

The predicted life span of an African-American man is 64 years old and steadily declining. Those of us who are fortunate enough to work a decent job will not be able to reap the benefits of social security. Yet we are supposed to believe that we have reached the end of the rainbow.

The predicted life span of an African-American man is 64 years old and steadily declining. Those of us who are fortunate enough to work a decent job will not be able to reap the benefits of social security. Those of us living in urban cities such as Chicago and Detroit would have been safer fighting in the gulf war instead of living in our own communities. Yet we are supposed to believe that we have reached the end of the rainbow.

Doesn't America know that we black men are five times more likely to be convicted of a criminal offense than our white counterparts? Doesn't America know that there are more black men in prison than in college? True, we African-Americans probably cannot completely blame the "system" for our current crisis, but we refuse to allow the "system" to continue to completely blame the victim.

Just like America has chosen to have selective amnesia when teach-more sophisticated form. Instead of the bright-skinned blacks living in the master's slave quarters, it is now the educated college graduates of all different shades working in corporate America. As long as we do as we are told, everything will be all right. The more we can imitate our white role models, the more successful we will become.

Despite the civil rights movement and affirmative action, we African-Americans are still discriminated against across the entire spectrum. No matter how hard African-Americans work, America will continue to see what it wants to. The media will continue to perpetuate the negative stereotypes African-Americans as they always have. Even though African-Americans only make up 12 percent of the U.S. population, the media lead their viewers to believe that there are more African-Americans receiving public assistance than whites.

When will the lies stop and the truth be told? When will America acknowledge that most of its success is based on the exploitation of African-Americans and other people of color? As represented by the recent riots in Los Angeles and other cities, African-Americans are willing to gain equality by any means necessary. America, wake up before you burn down.

WHITE HOUSE

Administration blames riots on 'liberal programs'

Terence Hunt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House promised up to $600 million in federal aid Monday to help rebuild riot-scarred Los Angeles and blamed decades-old liberal welfare programs for the anger that exploded on the streets.

"We're now paying a price," White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said as the administration began putting a political spin on the cause of the unrest and proposals to deal with it.

Decrying liberal programs that "redistribute the wealth or that deal with direct handouts," Fitzwater said urban problems require "a conservative agenda that creates jobs and housing and home ownership and involvement in the community."

He refused to name any specific programs that the White House considers to be failures, although he was asked to do so repeatedly.

With more than 12,000 troops and federal law enforcement officials still in Los Angeles helping maintain order, President Bush said he was "very pleased that it's calmed down out there."

"We will do everything we can to support the people out there, to make things tranquil and then to help get to the core of the problems," Bush said. He met with Cabinet officials to discuss steps that can be taken quickly.

The president will visit Los Angeles Thursday and Friday on a trip planned before the riots. Originally the trip was to have focused on trade, but Fitzwater said,

"We've knocked everything out of the schedule. We are starting over."

Bush declared Los Angeles a disaster area Saturday night. Fitzwater said the Small Business Administration would make $300 million available in low-interest loans to help repair burned-out stores and the Federal Emergency Management Agency would make up to $300 million in cash grants. Damage estimates exceed $700 million and are still climbing.

"The majority of the cost will clearly be paid by the state and the city and the people there," Fitzwater said.

The White House beefed up security as 500 young people demonstrated on Pennsylvania Avenue to protest the acquittals of four white police officers in the videotaped beating of black motorist Rodney King. The announcement of the verdicts triggered the rioting.

Some of the White House demonstrators threatened to scale the fence and cursed police standing guard, but the crowd eventually moved off without incident.

The White House began drawing political battle lines over responsibility for the riots. "This is a political year and there's no doubt about it, that everybody is going to have their own solutions," Fitzwater said.

Even Barbara Bush gave her opinion. "The Democrat-controlled Congress has got to put aside politics and act for the benefit of all the people," she said during a visit to a child-care center in Hobe Sound, Fla.

CONGRESS

54 House members plan to retire this year

Kim I. Mills
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The head of the House bank investigation and one of Congress' most prolific bad-check writers announced Monday they won't seek re-election, joining a list of House retirees that is already the longest since World War II.

Rep. Matthew McHugh, D-N.Y.,

who led the Ethics Committee probe of the bank, and Rep. Bob Davis, R-Mich., who wrote 878 overdrafts, said separately they will not return next year.

They bring to 54 the number of House members voluntarily retiring this year. Six more have lost primary challenges.

The bank probe that found 325 House members had written more than 24,000 overdrafts in a 29-month period has been a key reason why so many members are retiring. But other lawmakers are leaving because of a general dissatisfaction with government or because redistricting has carved up their turf.

McHugh, 53, who has served in Congress for 18 years, announced his decision at a news conference in his hometown of Ithaca, N.Y. A copy of his statement was released in Washington.

"I will admit to some pain and frustration when I find myself frequently put in the position of defending my character simply for being a member of Congress," he said. "There is now too great a gulf between my hopeful belief in what our institutions can be and the public perceptions of them."

He complained of "many impediments to change: divided government; uninspired leadership from the White House; an increasing tendency by some in politics and the media to focus on petty partisan or insubstantial issues; and an unwillingness on the part of many in this country to face up to our fundamental problems."

Davis, a seven-term Republican, was the third-worst abuser of the House bank, with 878 checks written against insufficient funds. His bad checks totaled more than $344,000. At one time, he had an overdraft of $13,146.

Davis, 59, has been the subject of heavy criticism at home for the check-writing scandal. He also has drawn headlines for his financial woes and a messy divorce. It was later disclosed he was living with a 27-year-old woman whom he later hired to work on a House committee.

Davis becomes the sixth of Michigan's 18 House members to announce his retirement; McHugh is the second of New York's 34 House members.

DRUG SAFETY

suckers didn't die just from the toxicity of the amount they were given," he said.

Jochimsen said the National Cancer Institute confronted the problem in the initial research of the possible preventive uses of the drug, but determined that the risk to humans was minimal.

"This was all very strongly debated by NCI before the study ever began," he said. "Millions of women have taken tamoxifen as a treatment for breast cancer for extended periods of time, and no major problems have developed."

Mary Spaight, UIHC nurse coordinator for the study, said the study cited in the Science News article is one of many that uses large doses and small animals to make inferences to human populations.

"Almost any agent given in large amounts will cause tumors and other problems," Spaight said. "They gave small rodents 180 percent of the normal dose given to humans."

According to Spaight, the opponents to the study "are really just grasping at straws to protest this. The National Cancer Institute is a very overprotective organization."

Spaight compared the reaction to tamoxifen to the initial outcry over artificial sweeteners. Opponents claimed that the sweeteners caused tumors in lab animals, but no conclusive proof was given to show harm to humans.

Despite the return of routine for millions, Los Angeles remained far from normal as more than 7,100 heavily armed National Guardsmen, Marines, police and federal agents maintained order.

The cities of Long Beach and adjacent Signal Hill kept their curfews in effect until Tuesday morning.

At hospitals, more than 200 of the 2,300 injured needed intensive care.

Residents of riot-ravaged neighborhoods lined up at bus stops and at food distribution points where bags of donated groceries were handed out.

"I've been living on peanut butter and crackers," said Mack Coats, a blind man who lives near a looted and burned Food 4 Less store in the ravaged area of South Central Los Angeles. "I was living without power until just now and all the food in the refrigerator spoiled."

Larry Jackson and his 2-year-old daughter were the first through the line.

"We've got to get something for the babies to eat," Jackson said. "We've been living on sandwiches."

resented by the USI executive director, who is picked by the USI representatives from each campus. The representatives are chosen by all students who choose to join the USI. Stone said it is his hope that this will get more students involved in the USI.

"Whoever students choose to hire as executive director of USI sits on the commission. If that person doesn't represent students well, they have the power to remove him," Stone said. "I hope this will bring more scrutiny as to how I represent students and I hope it will get more people involved in USI."

Stone said in order to pass legislation such as this, a lobbying organization like the USI is necessary.

"To get things done there you have to have an organization which has a mechanism to be there every day working and talking with these people. (Legislation) just disappears from that building and you need to have people there keeping an eye out," Stone said.

As the Legislature adjourned at 6 a.m. Sunday, no representatives were available for comment.

Portions of the bill are still subject to a possible line-item veto by Gov. Terry Branstad.

Gymnasts honored

All-Big Ten gymnast Chris Kabat was named the winner of the Most Valuable Gymnast Award, the team announced Monday at Iowa's annual banquet.
 Kabat established a new school record in the all-around compulsory with a score of 113.35.
 Other award winners were: Paul Bautel — Outstanding Senior and Academic Excellence; Garry Denk — Most Originality; Chip Greaves — Most Improved; Mitch Connor — Most Consistent and Don Brown took the Coaches Appreciation Award.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Jackson may jump

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Jim Jackson spent the weekend with his parents in Toledo, discussing whether he will return to Ohio State for his senior season or make himself available for the NBA draft.
 Jackson, a 6-foot-6 junior swingman, has until May 10 to declare his intentions.
 Jackson, an All-America, has said he will not discuss his decision until a formal announcement is made. That might come as early as Wednesday.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Games to expand to pay-per-view

NEW YORK — ABC Sports announced Monday that in addition to college football games being available on a regional basis via the ABC Television network, others can be seen on a pay-per-view system.
 For example, under the pay-per-view plan, Big Ten fans who live outside the area that will receive a Big Ten 10 game on ABC, now will have the option to watch ABC Sports' Big Ten games on pay-per-view.
 The cost per game would be reportedly between $5-$10.

Curry's friends mourn

INDIANAPOLIS — Shock, numbness and sadness were the feelings expressed Monday by members of the Indianapolis Colts during an emotional private memorial service for slain defensive lineman Shane Curry, said the minister who led the service.
 "We don't want Shane's memory to die in vain," the Rev. Ken Johnson said after the service at the team's headquarters. "As professional athletes, they have a responsibility now just to send a message that it's time to stop the violence."
 A murder charge is pending against a 15-year-old boy accused of killing Curry.
 Curry, 24, was shot in the head about 1 a.m. Sunday in a nightclub parking lot dispute. An unidentified youth faces charges of felonious assault, murder and possession of a counterfeit controlled substance.

BOXING

King accused of swindling Tyson

NEW YORK — A Senate investigation into professional boxing has shifted its focus to the business practices of Don King and the Racketeer-Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, according to a published report.
 New York Newsday reported today that the federal investigation comes amid allegations by Joseph Maffia, King's former chief financial officer, that the promoter stole millions from former heavyweight champion Mike Tyson through improper deductions from his purses.

Gibson may call it quits

PITTSBURGH — Kirk Gibson, acquired by the Pittsburgh Pirates during spring training to help fill the void created by Bobby Bonilla's departure, was placed on waivers Monday and said he probably will retire.

Former Iowa assistant men's basketball coach Bruce Pearl addresses the media in Evansville, Ind., after accepting the head coaching position at Southern Indiana Monday.

Pearl named S. Indiana boss

EVANSVILLE, Ind. — Bruce Pearl, known for recruiting big time players who excel in Big Ten basketball, became head coach Monday at Southern Indiana with a promise to continue pursuing top talent.
 Pearl, an assistant to Iowa coach Tom Davis for six years, said his move from Division I-A Iowa to Division II Southern Indiana did not mean he would sign players of lesser ability.
 "This is not a Division II-caliber education you get here, this is not a Division II-caliber school and I don't want it to be a Division II-caliber basketball program. So, the only question for any player I recruit is 'Do I want to play Division II basketball,' because he's going to be good enough to play Division I basketball," Pearl said.
 "I'm not going to lower my goals and lower my sights. Maybe we're not going to get all the kids we go after because they opt to go to the other Division I schools."

 Pearl succeeds Lionel Sinn, who led the Great Lakes Valley Conference team to a 10-18 record last season.
 He was chosen over two other finalists: Indiana University-Purdue University coach Andy Piazza and Kentucky Wesleyan coach Wayne Boultinghouse, a former USI head coach.
 Athletic director Donald Bennett said Southern Indiana officials liked the full-court pressure and fast-break style of offense Pearl implemented at Iowa.
 "I'd like this to be a team the community will embrace. Our fast breaking pressure defensive style I think will appeal to students and to faculty and fans of basketball in the Evansville area," Pearl said.
 He said that on a team with most of last year's starters returning, his ability to play such a strategy would depend on how much talent reserve players have.

During Pearl's stay in Iowa City, the Hawkeyes received five NCAA tournament berths. They advanced to the elite eight in 1987 and the sweet 16 in 1988. Iowa also placed eight players in the NBA during that time.

But Pearl also got embroiled in a dispute with Illinois over the recruiting of Illini player Deon Thomas. Pearl had recruited Thomas and tape recorded a telephone conversation in which Thomas admitted receiving a car and cash to sign with Illinois.

Pearl gave the tape to the NCAA. Thomas denied getting the inducements and sued Pearl for his role in provoking an NCAA inquiry of Illinois recruiting practices.

The NCAA found no wrongdoing in Thomas' recruiting. The lawsuit is still pending.

Pearl also recruited Acie Earl to Iowa. Earl, who will be a senior next season, set school and Big Ten records for blocked shots last season.

The Chief hails over Cleveland, 104-98

Chuck Melvin
 Associated Press

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Once again, the reports of Robert Parish's demise were premature.
 Boston's 38-year-old center bounced back from two miserable performances by scoring 27 points and grabbing eight rebounds Monday night as the Celtics beat the Cleveland Cavaliers 104-98, tying their Eastern Conference semifinal series 1-1.
 Parish made only two of 12 shots and totaled six points in the Celtics' previous two playoff games. At his age, every slump is perceived as a crisis — by everyone but his teammates.
 "He answered every question after he played bad," Kevin McHale said. "He answered questions about being too old. He answered questions about Brad Daugherty being too good for him. Today, he played well and he'll let others do the talking."
 Despite aggravating his sore left ankle in the third quarter of Saturday's loss to the Cavs, Parish sank 13 of 18 shots while helping limit Daugherty to 22 points on 7-for-15 shooting. Daugherty scored only two points in the fourth quarter.
 "Robert Parish is a vintage player, and he played like fine wine tonight," Cleveland's John Battle said. "He's a veteran, but he's young at heart. They shot the ball extremely well, and our intensity went up and down because of it."

 Reggie Lewis scored 26 points and McHale finished with 18 for the Celtics, winners of 12 of their last 13 games. Larry Bird has missed all 13 games because of his sore back.
 Boston, which plays host to the Cavs in the next two games Friday night and Sunday, trailed 76-75 entering the fourth quarter. But a 16-6 run, capped by Parish's two inside baskets, gave the Celtics a 91-82 lead.
 Cleveland closed to 91-87 on a 3-pointer and two foul shots by Mark Price before McHale sank a jumper that quieted the sellout crowd of 20,273 with 4:44 left. The Cavs got no closer than six after that.
 Price scored 20 points and Larry Nance and Battle each had 14 for Cleveland, which lost for the seventh time in its 22 home playoff games.
 The Celtics, who made 43 percent of their shots in the 101-76 series-opening loss, improved to 59 percent in winning Game 2. The Cavaliers lost despite shooting 52 percent.

Boston center Robert "Hail to the Chief" Parish puts up two of his game-high 27 points over Cleveland's Mike Sanders in the Celtics' 104-98 playoff win Monday night.

NHL

Chicago takes 2-0 advantage

Associated Press

DETROIT — Chicago took a 2-0 lead in the Norris Division finals as Jeremy Roenick had a goal and an assist in the Blackhawks' 3-1 victory over the Detroit Red Wings on Monday night.
 The Blackhawks, who have allowed only a total of three goals in three straight road games, won for the fifth straight time in the playoffs.
 The Blackhawks will host Games 3 and 4 on Wednesday and Friday nights.
 First-period goals by Roenick and Greg Gilbert gave Chicago a 2-0 lead and Steve Larmer made it 3-0 in the second period.
 Steve Yzerman scored a third-period goal for the Red Wings, who also fell behind Minnesota 2-0 in the semifinals before rallying to eliminate the North Stars in seven games.
 The Red Wings were 5-1-2 against the Blackhawks during the season, 3-0-1 at Joe Louis Arena. The Red Wings finished first in the Norris Division and third overall in the NHL with 98 points, 11 ahead of

SOFTBALL

Gophers entertain Hawkeyes

Jay Nanda
 Daily Iowan

The Iowa and Minnesota softball teams have had two weeks to reflect on the last time they met. But those two weeks have moved at different paces for each team.
 For the Hawkeyes, their 1-0, 6-0 sweep against the then-No. 17 Gophers signified a fast leap over Minnesota for second place in the Big Ten.
 For the Gophers, the losses meant an almost complete shutdown of one of the conference's top hitting clubs. As a result, tonight's twinbill rematch at the Bierman Softball Complex in Minneapolis couldn't have come quickly enough. The Gophers have been waiting for payback time against the Hawkeyes.
 "We practiced today with a new attitude. We're refocused and ready to get after it," first-year Gopher coach Lisa Bernstein said Monday.
 The conference-leading Hawkeyes (30-18, 17-5) played near-perfect softball in sweeping the Gophers at the Hawkeye Softball Complex April 22. The pitching duo of senior Terri McFarland and Karen Jackson each hurled a two-hitter, combining for zero walks and 17 strikeouts.
 Furthermore, in a confrontation between last year's co-Big Ten

Terri McFarland

Players of the Year, Jackson held Gopher second baseman Kari Blank to three harmless groundouts.
 Minnesota (15-7) never had a baserunner reach third base in the doubleheader, making their objectives tonight very obvious.
 "We've gotta go out and play our game and score some runs," Bernstein said.
 But Iowa knows that if it is to lengthen its one-game lead over Michigan and two-game margin over the Gophers, it will have to employ the same philosophy.
 "We're gonna have to really work to keep their offensive attack down and we have to be able to expect ourselves to come out and score runs," Iowa coach Gayle Blevins said. "We just have to come out and play our game and have our approach because that sets a special tone for us when we play like that."

Backlund relishing banner year

Erica Weiland
 Daily Iowan

Coming into the 1992 season, a lot was expected of Brett Backlund. And the senior pitcher/infielder expected a lot of himself.
 After all, Backlund set a new Iowa single-season strikeout record (94) last spring, then passed up an opportunity to turn pro in order to return to Iowa for his senior season.
 Plus, Tom Anderson, the Hawkeyes' No. 2 pitcher last season, signed with the Houston Astros last summer after his junior year, leaving Backlund as the top returning man on the mound.
 All the factors were in place for Backlund to have a stunning season. But many — including Backlund himself — didn't know how good this year would be.
 "I wanted to have a good season," Backlund said. "I had a lot of confidence and high expectations coming into the season. But it's turned out better than I thought it would."
 Against Michigan State last Saturday, Backlund tied the school record for wins in a season as he took his 11th of the year. With that victory, he also tied the Iowa mark for career wins (25).
 The righthander is also on track to break the school record for season winning percentage as he is currently 11-0. The mark of .875 was set by Bill Drabmel (7-1) in 1980.
 Backlund currently boasts a 1.44 ERA and 61 strikeouts in 82 innings of work. He has also played designated hitter or third base in almost all of the Hawkeyes' games, and was recently tabbed the country's top two-way (pitching and batting) player by USA Today.

 The Salem, Ore., native credits his achievements this season partly to his mental attitude. His approach is to stay focused but to know when to leave the game at the ballpark and not worry about things that are out of his control.
 "If you worry constantly about things that happen, that makes it more difficult to show up the next time," Backlund said. "You can only control so much of the game. Other players control their parts, and you have no control over that. It makes it easier when you realize what you can and can't do."
 Marty Brauch, a former Hawkeye pitcher/infielder and Backlund's roommate, said he can tell Backlund has a good attitude about baseball.
 "Brett's definitely focused on what he has to do, but he's the type to leave it at the field," Brauch said. "Even when the team gets bludgeoned, Brett can take a look on the bright side and focuses on what's ahead."
 "He concentrates on the things he can control. He always wants the team to be successful, but he knows that sometimes you just have to let the chips fall where they may."
 One problem with having a great year, though, is that people are now expecting Backlund to consistently perform well. While the 6-foot-0, 190-pounder pushes himself to compete at a high level, Backlund said sometimes people's expectations add extra stress.
 "People expect me to win every time out, and lately they've been more concerned about me giving up a run, not even if the team wins or I win," said Backlund, who threw 27 innings without giving up an earned run. "That's a lot of added pressure."

 All of Backlund's successes point to some exciting opportunities when this season ends, including a possible berth on the Olympic team and being chosen in the draft.
 "I haven't put much thought into the season ending," Backlund said. "We have a big weekend ahead at Minnesota. It's a do or die situation, so I haven't thought much about what happens after the season ends."
 "There's the draft and the Olympic trials. But my thoughts aren't on what I can't control but on what I can control, like the game Friday."

SOFTBALL: Gophers looking for payback

 "Having enthusiasm has gotta be a key for us, coming out and really jumping on them to begin with and keeping energy through the entire game," added freshman Heather Grim.
 Blevins will be looking to kill two birds with one stone tonight at the expense of the Gophers. The fifth-year Iowa coach, who was also last year's National Softball Coach of the Year, needs one more win for her 200th as a Hawkeye and two more victories for her 500th overall.

But she doesn't expect them to come very easily tonight.
 "They're gonna have a different kind of confidence playing at home," Blevins said of Minnesota.
 "Their pitching is not outstanding but gets the job done for them," she added. "They have a good defensive team but in the past, they've been able to score a lot of runs. My concern has been to prevent the big inning."

 Bernstein also foresees a hard-fought tussle.
 "Both teams know what they want," she said.

NHL: Belfour, Roenick pace Blackhawks

 the second-place Blackhawks who were eighth overall in the league.
 The Blackhawks' defense held Detroit to only three shots on goal in the second period and Chicago had a 23-13 edge in shots after two periods. Chicago finished with a 28-25 edge in shots.
 Steve Smith set up Roenick's goal. He knocked the puck off the stick of Steve Chiasson, then bounced it off the boards to Roenick, who skated in alone on Tim Cheveldae.

 Roenick moved left, drawing Cheveldae out, and scored his fifth playoff goal with a backhand shot just 1:07 into the game.
 Brian Noonan skated behind the net and passed to Gilbert, who was standing at the right corner of the goal. Gilbert rapped the puck under Cheveldae's glove at 14:13 for his first goal of the playoffs.

 Larmer appeared to have another goal in the final minute of the first period, but referee Denis Morel didn't see it and replay officials in the press box couldn't get the attention of officials down at ice level before play had resumed.
 NHL supervisor John D'Amico told pool reporter Cindy Lambert of The Detroit News that video judge Bill Clements picked up the head-set to call downstairs, to let them know he was reviewing the play. D'Amico said no one downstairs answered the call. D'Amico said offensive officials for the game were from St. Louis.

 A goal would have been awarded, D'Amico said.

Brewers muster only one hit vs. Fernandez

Associated Press
CHICAGO — Alex Fernandez pitched a one-hitter for his first career shutout, allowing a second-inning double to Dante Bichette on Monday night as the Chicago White Sox beat the Milwaukee Brewers 7-0.
 Fernandez (2-2) struck out seven and walked one. After Bichette's hit, he retired 21 consecutive batters before walking Paul Molitor with one out in the ninth. Milwaukee's only other runner was Robin Yount, who reached in the first on a throwing error by shortstop Estaban Beltre.
 Ricky Bones (1-1) gave up four runs and five hits in two-plus innings.
Twins 6, Red Sox 1
BOSTON — John Smiley pitched seven shutout innings against Roger Clemens to gain his first victory for Minnesota, leading the Twins over the Boston Red Sox 6-1 Monday night.

 Smiley (1-2), winless in his first five starts for the Twins, allowed three hits, walked five and struck out one before Bob Kipper and Carl Willis finished with one-hit relief.
 Smiley was traded from Pittsburgh to Minnesota during spring training while Kipper, a teammate on the Pirates last season, signed with the Twins in December as a free agent.
Pirates 12, Reds 5
PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Pirates, 1-0 losers the night before, tied a club record with an 11-run sixth inning keyed by Jose Lind's three RBIs and two hits apiece by three players in a 12-5 victory over the Cincinnati Reds on Monday night.
 The Pirates, who have had a succession of big innings this season en route to their 17-7 start, sent 16 batters to the plate and produced nine hits in the sixth off four pitchers.

 The big inning came on a night when the Pirates promised two free tickets to every fan in attendance if they won.
Tigers 6, Angels 2
DETROIT — Bill Gullickson won his fourth straight start, allowing seven hits in 8 1-3 innings Monday night as the Detroit Tigers beat the California Angels 6-2.
 Gullickson (4-2) struck out four and walked one as Detroit won its third straight game, matching a season high. Mark Leiter finished.
Braves 6, Cubs 1
CHICAGO — The Chicago Cubs finally scored against the Atlanta Braves.
 Not that it mattered, because the Braves won their fourth straight against the Cubs as John Smoltz, Mike Stanton and Juan Berenguer combined on a five-hitter in a 6-1 victory.

 The Cubs had been shut out three times by the Braves last week and went 34 innings since last July 28 in Chicago without scoring a run against Atlanta.
Royals 11, Indians 6
CLEVELAND — Mike Macfarlane and Keith Miller hit two-run homers as the Kansas City Royals beat the Cleveland Indians 11-6 Monday night and won for only the fifth time in 24 games this season.
 Kansas City, which began the night with just a .214 average and 70 runs, banged out a season-high 15 hits and broke double digits in runs for the first time since last year. The Royals have won consecutive games for only the second time this season.

Glavine, Cone and Felix win Player of Week awards

Associated Press
NEW YORK — Atlanta's Tom Glavine and David Cone of the New York Mets, each of whom pitched two consecutive shutouts, were named co-Players of the Week in the National League on Monday. California's Junior Felix, who drove in 12 runs and batted .375, was named Player of the Week in the American League for the period ending May 3. Glavine blanked the Chicago Cubs 5-0 April 27 and the Mets 3-0 May 2. He pitched a total of 18 innings, allowed 11 hits, walked three and struck out 10.

Clippers give faithful reason to be cheerful

Wendy E. Lane
Associate Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Los Angeles Clippers fans and players, emotionally spent from four days of violence and destruction, finally had something to cheer about.

For the first time since rioting erupted in Los Angeles, there was a sporting event. It wasn't in L.A. proper, the violence having forced a move to placid Orange County, but it was close enough to count.

The Clippers beat the Utah Jazz 115-107 Sunday to stay alive in their first-round Western Conference playoff series. The fourth game of the best-of-5 series was originally set for Thursday, then postponed to Saturday and finally moved from the inner-city Sports Arena to the Anaheim Convention Center.

After four days of watching their city wage war against itself, Clippers fans made the trip to Anaheim looking for a diversion. For many, it was their first outing since the outbreak of arson fires, looting and assaults Wednesday following a jury acquittal of four white policemen in the beating of black motorist Rodney King.

"I haven't been out of the house at all before today. Where would you go?" said Edwina Hardy, a season ticket-holder wearing a T-shirt reading, "It's Hip to Clip." "It was the worst weekend of my life. But this is more like it."

Because the unrest chased the Lakers to Las Vegas and postponed four Dodgers games, the Clippers were the only game in town.

Despite the relocation of the game, it was like the Clippers had never left their 15,800-seat home court. Clippers management shipped the floor and music system 35 miles to Anaheim and even brought along the ushers. Most season ticket-holders sat in their usual seats.

The cozy 7,400-seat Anaheim Convention Center wasn't quite full, drawing 7,148. But it was raucous and loud. Fans were given small towels bearing the Clippers logo that they waved furiously. Some brought signs cheering the team, in the playoffs for the first time in 1976.

"The fans made it so great for us," Clippers forward Charles Smith said. "It was like a college-type crowd."

Prior to the outbreak of unrest, 11,000 tickets had been sold to the game. Fearing a lack of space, the Clippers set up a closed-circuit television feed in a building next to the arena. It turned out it wasn't needed.

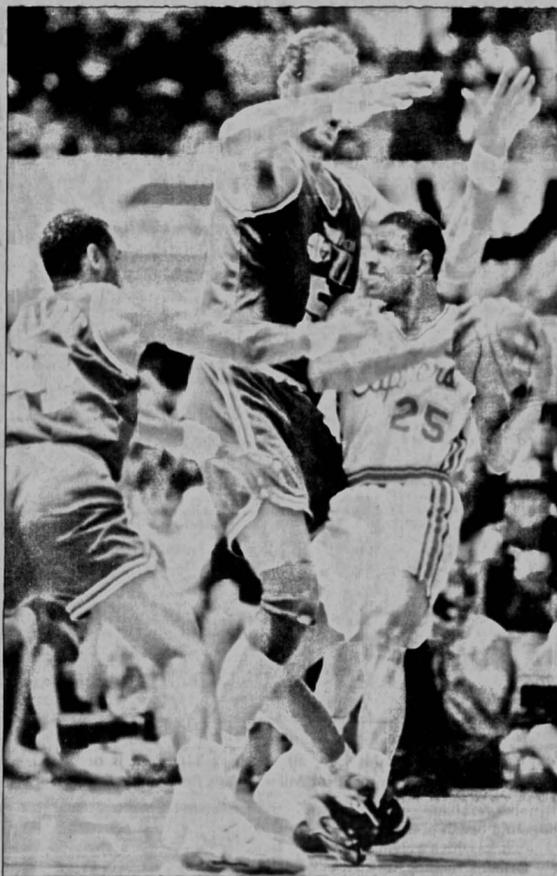

There were no disturbances reported in the racially mixed crowd, police said, but a motorcycle escort accompanied both team buses from and back to Los Angeles.

Fans and players alike viewed the game as a much-needed break from the hopelessness of the past few days.

"It's good to get back to doing normal things," said Jeff Goyer of Los Angeles, "and forget about the troubles."

Clippers center Olden Polynice, who took time out Friday to help clean up a fire-ravaged neighborhood, said the game proved again that sports can bring people of different backgrounds together.

"We needed something positive, and this was it," Polynice said. "A lot of guys had emotions pent up. This was just the medicine we needed."

Utah's Mark "Mount" Eaton may have stopped the Clippers' Glenn "Doc" Rivers (25) on this possession, but he couldn't prevent L.A. from giving their Anaheim fans a 115-107 win Sunday in their playoff series.

"Everybody was cheering for one thing. We had blacks and whites together."

But thoughts of the violence that claimed at least 46 lives and injured more than 2,000 were never far away. Public address announcer Rory Markas called for a moment of silence before the game started.

"We ask you to pause and reflect on how each of us can make this truly one nation with liberty and justice for all," he said.

Road warriors dispel home ice advantage

Associated Press

So much for the home ice advantage.

Friendly crowds and familiar surroundings didn't matter much as the second round of the NHL playoffs began with all four home teams — the New York Rangers, Montreal, Detroit and Vancouver — losing their opening games.

Playoff strategy for road teams facing the first two games in enemy territory has always been to get a split there and head home even. Pittsburgh, Boston, Chicago and Edmonton all accomplished that in the first games of their series against the Rangers, Canadiens, Red Wings and Canucks.

Now the burden is on the home clubs, who all face must-win second games unless they feel comfortable hitting the road down 0-2 in a best-of-7 series.

The recovery challenge continues Tuesday with Boston at Montreal and Pittsburgh at New York. The other two series — Chicago at Detroit and Edmonton at Vancouver — resumed Monday night.

The pressure is particularly heavy on Tuesday's two home teams.

The Rangers haven't won a Stanley Cup in 52 years and with the best record in the league this season, fans were convinced this was the team's best shot in some time. So the disappointment over a 4-2 loss to Pittsburgh in their opener hung heavy.

"When you're down 1-0 at home, you're always fighting for your lives," said Pittsburgh's Kevin Stevens, who had a goal in the opener.

The good news for New York is that it marked the first time in six Stanley Cup series that the Penguins had won an opening game. And they're the defending champions.

For the Canadiens, losing playoff games is never easy, especially at home where the city considers the Cup part of the team's manifest destiny. Montreal has won more playoff championships (23) than any other NHL team, but just one since 1979.

The Canadian crowd, never known for its patience, got positively ornery with hometown goalie Patrick Roy in the 6-4 pasting the Bruins administered in the opener. They booed him after he surrendered a goal on the first Boston shot and five scores on the first 18.

"They have a right to do that," Roy said. "They paid their money and if they're mad, they have a right to show it."

LeBlan(k) carries Team USA vs. Poland

Nesha Starcevic
Associated Press

BRATISLAVA, Czechoslovakia — Once again, Ray LeBlanc is about the only defense the United States team has.

LeBlanc has spent most of the World Hockey Championships trying to make up for the numerous mistakes by his defenders. He was more than up to the task on Sunday, posting his second shutout of the tournament with a 5-0 victory over Poland.

"If we had more time on European rinks, maybe our defense would be better. But we don't have more time," coach Tim Taylor said after a victory that put Team USA close to clinching a place in the top four in Pool A and a berth in the quarterfinals.

Taylor said Team USA had been trying hard to improve defensively.

"The two shutouts are a tribute to the team's hard work (to improve the defense). But defensively, they are not getting the job done."

LeBlanc, whose goaltending led the Americans to a fourth-place finish in the Olympics, made 26 saves, many of them superb as he was often left to fend for himself against unchallenged Polish forwards shooting from point-blank range.

If the defense struggled, the offense didn't. Dave Jensen, a left wing from the AHL's Maine Mariners, had two goals and one assist.

The Americans led 2-0 after the first period, but were scoreless in the second when LeBlanc single-handedly held off the Poles.

"We played well in periods one and three, but Poland outplayed us in the second period and we were fortunate to escape without conceding a goal," Taylor said. "We got a very strong goaltending performance, but defensively, we gave up a lot of scoring chances."

Penguins, Bruins look to go up 2-0

Associated Press

Pittsburgh at New York Rangers (6:35 p.m.). Pittsburgh brings a 1-0 lead into Madison Square Garden after a 4-1 victory in Game 1.

Boston at Montreal (6:35 p.m.). The Bruins try for two straight at The Forum after winning 6-4 in the series opener.

STREAKS

Pittsburgh is 5-0 all-time in playoff games against the New York Rangers. . . . The Penguins' 4-2 victory in Game 1 of the Patrick Division finals was their first in a series-opener in six tries and ended the Rangers' streak of five straight wins in the first game of a playoff series.

SHOTS ON GOAL

Montreal goaltender Patrick Roy allowed five goals on the first 18 shots at him. Roy, a two-time Vezina Trophy winner, was beaten on the first shot he faced in each of the first two periods.

SWINGS

Pittsburgh, which allowed 20 goals in its first four playoff games, gave up just nine in its next four, and won all four games.

STARS Sunday

— Joe Murphy, Oilers, scored at 8:36 of overtime to give Edmonton a 4-3 victory over Vancouver in Game 1 of the Smythe Division finals.

— Tom Barrasno, Penguins, stopped 35 of 37 shots as Pittsburgh beat the New York Rangers 4-2 in the opener of the Patrick Division finals.

SIDELINED

Shayne Corson, who has bruised ribs, missed Montreal's game Sunday against Boston with what was officially listed as a wrist injury. He's expected back for Game 2 of the Adams Division finals.

SCOUTING

Ray LeBlanc, whose goaltending helped the United States finish fourth in the Winter Olympics, stopped 26 shots as Team USA beat Poland 5-0 on Sunday at the World Hockey Championships.

SPEAKING

"A lot of what happened out there tonight is not going to happen again so we'd better forget about this one. They looked tired at the end — and that's not going to happen again." — Boston goaltender Andy Moog after a 6-4 win in Montreal.

SEASONS

May 5
1966—The Montreal Canadiens beat the Detroit Red Wings 3-2 to capture the Stanley Cup in six games. Henri Richard scored the winning goal at 2:30 of overtime when he was tripped and slid into the net with the puck underneath him. Detroit goaltender Roger Crozier won the Conn Smythe Trophy after posting a 2.17 goals-against average in 12 games.

CHICAGO BEARS

Will dreams come true for Fridge II?

Mario Fox
Associated Press

LAKE FOREST, Ill. — Louis Age is a giant of a man with some big dreams.

Eventually, the 6-foot-7, 340-pound Chicago Bear rookie hopes to turn his personal tragedy — witnessing his mother's murder when he was a youngster — into a life of helping city youths stay out of trouble.

But first, Age will strive to make the Bears' roster — a big task for a late-round pick from a small school that ran the option. He wasn't even invited to the NFL tryouts.

"Maybe if I came from a bigger school and had been seen on TV, I would have been drafted a little higher," said Age, picked in the 11th round on April 27, the 304th player of 336 selected.

Age, now 22, was 12 and his parents owned a restaurant in New Orleans when his mother was slain by a home invader.

"I knew the guy," Age said during the Bears' minicamp last week. "He was an employee of my parents."

Age and his younger sister were raised by their father, also Louis — a New York Jets offensive guard in the mid 1970s. They have a step-mother now.

The shooting led Age into choosing criminal justice as a major when he went to Southwestern Louisiana in Lafayette, the same college his father attended.

He said he would like to work at a youth center.

"I was thinking about going into work with juveniles," he said. "I like kids and I'd like to help kids."

He says New Orleans, like all U.S. cities, has a serious crime problem.

"There are a lot of kids doing wrong," he said. "There's always kids on the streets all the time at night.

"If they only had more youth centers, more athletic events. If they had somebody to help with school, it would really help out."

Age had his own problems in school.

"He is no dummy, but because of his personal tragedy and being a big, pleasant guy who played football, he always got promoted along in school," Bears personnel director Bill Tobin said. "He might have been better off being held back."

"I've had his poster in my room. . . I've always looked up to him."

Louis Age

Age's college entrance exam score was low and he had to sit out his freshman year of football eligibility in 1988.

"I was a little immature when I went to college," Age said. "I don't think I was ready."

Age did well in the classroom, however, and now lacks only 25 credit hours for his degree. If he makes the Bears, he plans to finish at Chicago's DePaul University.

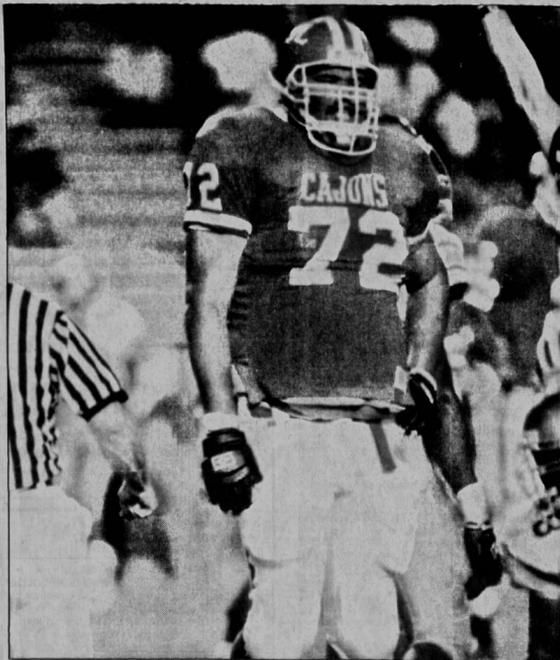

Despite his size, Age wasn't a regular starter until his senior year at SW Louisiana. Then he really blossomed.

"I've never seen a player improve so much in one year," Bears scout Jim Palmer said.

Age has a simple explanation for the turnaround.

"I just wanted to play and got better," he said.

The offensive lineman has a 5.2 clocking in the 40-yard dash, a

Associated Press

Chicago draft choice Louis Age, all 6-foot-7, 340 pounds of him, is hoping to make a huge impact for Mike Ditka's Bears this season.

20-inch vertical jump and a 320-pound bench press.

Age works with a weight trainer in New Orleans, hoping to shed several pounds and play at 335 pounds. The Bears may want him to lose even more.

"That will be determined by our medical staff, trainer Fred Caito and our coaching staff," Tobin said.

Age has always been the biggest player on his teams in high school and college, but in Chicago, he has a fellow 300-plus-pounder in William Perry.

"I've had his poster in my room since he joined the Bears," Age revealed. "I've always looked up to him."

Now, the 6-2 Perry can look up to the 6-7 Age.

NEW YORK METS

Murray prefers to let bat do all the talking

Jim Donaghy
Associated Press

NEW YORK — No one will ever accuse Eddie Murray of campaigning for a place in the Hall of Fame.

Since joining Baltimore in 1977, Murray has kept a low profile. He's been described as aloof, distant and sometimes curt. He's also been one of the game's best clutch hitters the last 16 years.

When New York Mets general manager Al Harazin signed Murray to a free agent contract last November, he didn't really care if Murray was mum most the time. He wanted him to drive in runs — not make friends.

During the Mets' first week at home, a reporter wanted to talk to Murray about switch-hitting.

"That means I can hit right-handed and left-handed," Murray said.

End of conversation.

Murray makes it a point to choose his words carefully and not overanalyze what's going on. If there's something to say he'll make it short and not always sweet.

After trading Murray to the Dodgers prior to the 1989 season, the Orioles announced they would retire his No. 33.

When asked about that Murray said, "What am I supposed to say?"

Murray doesn't really have to say anything now because his career numbers are starting to speak volumes.

In Atlanta on Sunday, Murray became the 24th major leaguer to hit 400 home runs. It was an occasion that even caused Murray to reflect on a career he once called "just a job."

"It's a pretty decent number," Murray said.

What about 500 homers?

"I don't know. That's something to think about," said the 36-year-old Murray. "If I can stay healthy. . ."

A lot of people play this game and not many have 400. I probably would be more proud of passing Mickey. I don't know if I can catch him."

BALTIMORE ORIOLES

Ripken trading personal glory for wins

David Ginsberg
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Cal Ripken has always said he'd trade his impressive statistics to play on a winning team. This season his wish has come true.

Ripken, the 1991 American League MVP, was batting .258 with just two homers and 12 RBIs through Sunday. Yet the Baltimore Orioles were in first place, so the nine-time All-Star hasn't exactly been moping over his slow start.

"When you're winning, you don't have time to think about whether you're hitless in your last 10 at-bats or 8 for 10," he said. "All you're thinking about is what you can do in your next at-bat to help the team win."

"Your whole focus is on that one game. You derive so much more satisfaction from winning than from anything else."

Ripken hit .323 with 34 homers and 114 RBIs last year en route to becoming the first AL player ever to win the MVP award with a losing team. Baltimore finished sixth (67-95).

"I'm not getting as many hits as I would like and I'm not having as many consistent at-bats as I would like, but I can feel it coming on little by little," he said. "Hopefully, things will fall into place real soon."

He's headed in that direction. It took Ripken 12 games to boost his average over .200 and he didn't get his first homer until the 20th game of the season. But he's 19 for 60 (.317) with 11 walks over the last 16 games.

"I've gone through home run droughts, RBI droughts, and droughts where I haven't gotten any hits throughout my career," Ripken said. "All I know is that it always seems to eventually turn around."

Everything seemed to work for the 31-year-old shortstop last season, when he achieved career-highs in average, homers and RBIs. He was also named the MVP of the All-Star game and won his first Gold Glove.

The most fulfilling part was that it came after his worst year in the majors. In 1990, Ripken batted .209 through June 13 and had to rally to close with a career-low .250 mark. It seemed like he tried a new batting stance every week in an effort to snap out of it.

This season, Ripken isn't nearly as concerned over his cool start. He's found a stance he likes, is sticking with it, and said he is still profiting from last year's storybook season.

"Coming off last year, when I finally found some consistency in my hitting and just had a remarkable season, my confidence level is still pretty high," he said. "Even though when you're going bad you feel like you'll never get a hit, at this stage right now I feel some things are coming along. I'm not too concerned."

And neither is Orioles manager Johnny Oates.

"Don't judge anyone on their start, or their finish. Judge them over the whole year," Oates said. "Cal's not swinging as consistently as he was last year, but before the season's over, he'll be there."

For now, though, Ripken couldn't care less if his name is not among the leaders. Just as long as the Orioles are.

"There's nothing better than playing on a team that's winning, where you don't have to hit 30 home runs or drive in 100 runs," he said. "The only focus is what you have to do today to help the team win."

One thing's for sure: Ripken will be in the lineup, doing just that. Barring rainouts, he will play in his 1,600th consecutive game on Wednesday, the second-longest streak in major-league history behind Lou Gehrig's 2,130.

PLAYWRIGHTS FESTIVAL

In a scene from "The War Boys" by UI playwright Naomi Wallace, Dave Drayer (left), Brant Peitersen and Luke Douglas (right) shine a bright light on racism.

Plays travel the border & I-80

Today's schedule of Iowa Playwrights Festival events:

- 1:00 p.m. Cameo reading: Maggie Conroy (Studio)
- 1:30 p.m. Post-reading discussion (Studio)
- 2:00 p.m. Guest profile: Julia Miles, producer, Women's Project (Studio)
- 4:30 p.m. Workshop performance: "80" by Mike Geither (Studio)
- 6:30/9:00 p.m. Performances: "The War Boys" by Naomi Wallace (Theatre B)

"uniquely American," Geither answered. "Absolutely. It has a lot to do with that travel myth that was laid down by the Puritan culture that first came to this country, the idea that you can go somewhere and leave your troubles behind you, when in fact all you end up doing is taking them with you. That's American literature in a nutshell."

Geither's previous plays include "Fish CPR," performed recently at Riverside Theatre, and "Map of My Mother," performed at the UI. Three of his plays have received stage readings at the Cleveland Public Theatre.

"I guess my work is probably always about loneliness," he concluded. "I want the audience to understand that they're living in a very lonely world. I know that's a bleak thing, but I want them to be aware of their situation. In the long run, I think people want the truth, though they may not in the short run."

Also appearing tonight is Naomi Wallace's "The War Boys," directed by New York guest professional Bryna Wortman. Wortman, who referred to Wallace as "an extremely talented, very unique voice," described "Boys" in equally glowing terms.

"The play on a very realistic level is about three men guarding the Mexican-American border. But on a metaphorical level, it's about class consciousness and political change. It's about physical and sexual abuse of women and people of the underclass, people who are different. It's about racial bigotry. It's about game-playing in America. It's a very strong political play, yet it's about three young men having a good time. And it's really the bonds between these three men who have been friends for a long time, and how they work out their demons. It's a very arresting play, a very strong play that takes place on many levels," Wallace said.

Wallace, whose first play was selected for the 1989 O'Neill Playwrights Conference and who has won the Discovery Award for poetry, said the idea for the play came partially from a real organization known as the Light Up The Border Brigade. The Brigade would park on the Mexican-American border and illuminate it with car headlights, watching for illegal immigrants. Wallace explained that American culture, especially television, treats violence as sexy and encourages racism. "There's a recurring question throughout the play of 'So, how do you spell relief?' Often, the answer is 'with racism,' as people of color are used as scapegoats," said Wallace.

Certainly in the wake of the Rodney King acquittals and the L.A. riots, "War Boys" has a timely message to offer.

Admission to "80" is $3; Admission to "War Boys" is $6 ($5 for UI students, youths and senior citizens). All other Iowa Playwrights Festival events are free and all events are open to the public.

Korean percussion quartet at Hancher

Shayla Thiel
Daily Iowan

Tonight's audience at Hancher Auditorium will find out what "puk" and "ching" are all about when SamulNori, a Korean quartet of virtuoso percussionists and dancers, takes the stage at 8 p.m.

"Nong-ak" is the Korean performing tradition which originated as part of the social festivals and spiritual rituals surrounding planting and harvest. Nong-ak is the unique cultural tradition for which SamulNori was created to preserve and promote.

As the tradition of Nong-ak developed, it became the specialty of traveling ensembles of dancers and musicians throughout Korea who elevated Nong-ak into a virtuoso art form. However, this rare art has fewer than 100 members still performing today. Each of the four members of SamulNori, developed in 1978, comes from a family steeped in Korean tradition.

In Korean, the word SamulNori means "mastery of four instruments." These four instruments are traditional drums and gongs — the "puk," the "ching," the "changgo" and the "kkwaeng-gwari" — whose playing is accompanied by the performers' exuberant vocalizations.

CONCERT PREVIEW

Buddy Guy will show the stuff legends are made of tonight in a SCOPE-sponsored show at Hubbard Park.

Double bill showcases past, present & future of the blues

Peter Coppock
Daily Iowan

Damn right, Iowa City will have the blues tonight as guitar legend Buddy Guy and the up-and-coming Blues Traveler wail through Hubbard Park in a concert starting at 7:30.

Appreciated more by musicians than the public, bluesman Buddy Guy is slowly getting the attention he deserves after more than 30 years of blistering performances.

Just ask Eric Clapton who has gone on record as saying, "Buddy Guy is by far and without doubt the best guitar player alive. . . . The way he plays is beyond anyone." And Clapton has since put

And you thought the dollar-a-head blues jam at the Yacht Club was a good deal. Tonight blues legend Buddy Guy and legends-to-be (?) Blues Traveler will leave IC audiences wishing that they'd never have to hear another cover of "Long Tall Sally."

his money where his mouth is by making a guest appearance on Guy's celebrated new release Damn Right, I Got The Blues. The recording is on the Silverstone label — the same folks who recently gave bluesman John Lee Hooker his best showcase in decades with The Healer.

Hailed by many as the "truest" Buddy Guy record made to date, Damn Right should go a long way toward rectifying the relative obscurity of a guitarist whom Jimi Hendrix once canceled a gig just to hear.

Until his untimely death in 1990, the more visible contemporary blues master Stevie Ray Vaughan took every opportunity to credit Guy — Vaughan's hit tune "Mary Had A Little Lamb" is a Buddy Guy classic.

A Southerner by birth, Guy established himself on the Chicago blues scene in the late 1950s. There he cut his eyeteeth with blues greats Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf. In the '60s Guy made recordings for the fabled Chess label with Otis Rush and Magic Sam that defined the "West Side" Chicago sound.

The '70s and '80s found the gutsy guitarist mostly on the road performing all around the world, with an occasional, albeit disappointing, stop at the recording studio.

But with the '90s Buddy Guy is back, and in a big way. It seems certain now that one of the most exciting and charismatic musicians around will never again be lost in the vague obscurity of anonymous one-night stands.

Joining the venerated bastion of the blues for their concert in the park will be the young New York-based band Blues Traveler.

This intense new quartet has enjoyed a Deadhead-like-subculture-word-of-mouth-type-cult-following since their first self-titled release in 1990. Not adhering to any specific musical style, Blues Traveler has made highly powered performances with jamming and improvisation the hallmark of their sound.

The Travelers have made their sophomore recording for A & M records with the release of Travelers and Thieves, which features guest artist Gregg Allman on keyboards and vocals.

The group's lead singer and mouth-organist John Popper is as much a comedian as a singer, and cites his major influences as John Belushi and Paul Butterfield. And as far as encapsulating the sound of Blues Traveler, Popper merely states, "It's our own."

And the band does travel. In the last year alone they have hit the road with the likes of Jerry Garcia, Santana, Little Feat, Lynyrd Skynyrd, the Neville Brothers and the Allman Brothers.

So if you've got the blues bad, or you want to hear some bad blues (and by that I mean bad in the sense that bad is good), you'll want to make it to Hubbard Park next to the Union tonight.

Tickets for Blues Traveler and Buddy Guy can still be purchased for a mere $12.50. They are available at all Ticketmaster outlets and the University Box Office. Tickets may also be charged by phone at 1-800-346-4401 or (319) 335-3041.

MOVIE REVIEW

Swayze doctors up the slums in Roland Joffe's 'City of Joy'

Kevin Ruby
Daily Iowan

Must we always take cultural precision into account when watching a film, or should we focus upon the generalized morality that rides through its exotic backdrop? I pose this question because it is one that I can never answer, and especially with morality / political / locale-prostituted conglomerates like "City of Joy," starring Patrick Swayze as a disillusioned doctor who gets a second wind while practicing shoeing medicine in the slums of Calcutta. The film is generally enjoyable, but people may be hesitant to accept its simplicity in this day and age of political correctness and multicultural awareness.

Swayze plays Dr. Max Lowe, who in the opening scenes holds a job as an emergency room surgeon. After witnessing a nurse pull the plug on a small child, Lowe can no longer stand the hospital where he works, where upper management is all too willing to cut budget / life support where it seems necessary. He travels halfway around the world to Calcutta, presumably to drown his confused soul in whiskey and apathy. It's kind of odd that the Lowe character picked Calcutta of all places, but what the hell, I'm willing to suspend my disbelief.

Lowe's vacation plans are intruded upon by two others. Hasari (played by Om Puri) is an Indian farmer who, in less than 24 hours upon arriving in Calcutta, has all of his money stolen and is enslaved as a rickshaw driver by a man simply known as "the Godfather." Hasari and his family move into the same slum village occupied by Lowe and Joan Bethel (Oscar-nominee Pauline Collins), who runs the local hospital clinic.

When Bethel learns that Lowe is a doctor, she implores him to work at the clinic. Lowe is hostile at first, but after a visit to a leper community nearby, he begins to have second thoughts.

A lot of the story is very predictable. When Lowe's necklace is stolen by one of the chief thugs that runs the local slums, you can bet it will pop up again toward the end of the film. And when Hasari is humiliated by "the Godfather"'s son, you can rest assured that he will get payback time in a scene not unlike most "good vs. evil" constructs.

The negative commentaries ring all too familiar. Films like "City of Joy" are frequently slammed for filtering a non-Judeo-Christian culture through dependable, wholesome white heroes like Swayze. The argument implies that with such emphasis on these pearly white protagonists, the cultural and political message get lost through the Anglicized viewpoint.

Director Roland Joffe does allow room for two political standpoints in "City of Joy," where one man's rickshaw is his prime source of pride and dignity, as well as bread on his family's table. Do we feel the same way about our Miatas and Corvettes?

To those seeking political absolution, "City of Joy" would probably not cater to your ideological preferences. The film is more about morality than Indian culture or the horrors of the Calcutta streets (though both of the latter are sufficiently represented in this film). It's a little lightheaded on content, and a little softened in sentiment; yet somehow Joffe and company manage to pull it off. "City of Joy" is a simple message of human compassion crosses all cultural barriers, while acknowledging such differences between them.

Taking it easy on the MSG: A taste of IC Chinese food

Meishel J. Lent
Special to The Daily Iowan

It's Tuesday afternoon and you have one hour to grab a bite to eat before your 1:30 class. And you've decided that just for once you'd like to pass up on that stale, cold and crusty burger at the Union Station, and treat yourself to a delicious, fresh, hot, exotic lunch at a real restaurant.

Suddenly you get a great idea to try Oriental food! But, you have two small problems: Oriental places are infamous for charging astronomical prices, and you only have an hour — make that 55 minutes — to eat lunch. Hopefully, I can offer you solutions to these problems. I took the liberty to review every Oriental restaurant in the city.

All the ranking was done according to my first impressions during my first unannounced visit to each restaurant.

Notes of interest: Aoeshe serves mainly Japanese, some Chinese and a few Korean dishes. This elegant restaurant features a sushi bar serving 15 different kinds of fish; patrons are greeted by a real wooden bridge in front of a large, working water mill inside the restaurant.

China Palace features an all-you-can-eat lunch buffet and dazzling decor.

Chung's also has an all-you-can-eat and is decorated with brilliant paintings the previous owner painted himself.

Easyplace is the most unique of the bunch and the newest addition to the group; every order is prepared fresh in cholesterol-free oil.

Saigon lies directly across the street from Chung's and features second-story seating and a large Vietnamese cuisine selection.

Yen Ching is part of a nationwide chain and the oldest and largest of the group, featuring extensive decoration and the largest menu selection of the seven restaurants.

The Wok, although my least favorite, was voted to have the best food in the city by an Iowa City marketing firm last year. That's the way the fortune cookie crumbles.
