5-year-old boy injured in accident

A 5-year-old boy received multiple injuries Saturday evening after he was hit by a car driven by an Iowa City teen, who was also injured in the accident.

Eric Ebinger, 5, 730 Third Ave., was taken by ambulance to the Emergency Treatment Center at the UI Hospitals and Clinics after being struck by a car operated by Kevin Lovell, 17, 2905 Wayne Ave., at 700 Third Ave. on Saturday at 6:09 p.m. Lovell was also taken by ambulance to the emergency room at Mercy Hospital.

The conditions of both Ebinger and Lovell were unknown at press time.

Woman charged with second-degree burglary

A Coralville woman was charged with four counts of second-degree burglary Thursday after an investigation was conducted by a joint Burglary Task Force which included the Iowa City, Coralville and West Branch, Iowa, police departments.

Amy Marie Vinton, 21, 634 12th Ave., Coralville, was arrested for repeated burglaries occurring from June until August from storage units and construction sites in Iowa City. Over 100 burglaries in Iowa City, Coralville, Cedar Rapids, Marion and Davenport were uncovered during the investigation.

After three search warrants were used on a residence in West Branch, various items from the burglaries were seized.

Long wait: 110 years for a baby girl

FARGO, N.D. (AP) — It took 110 years, but the Westerholm family finally has a newborn it can dress in pink.

Skylar Dae Westerholm was born Thursday, breaking a string of 16 boys born in the Westerholm family during the past 110 years.

The father, Bill Westerholm, who also is the stepfather of two daughters, has three brothers — Douglas, John and Tom. They've had seven children, but not one girl. Their father was an only son; their grandfather was one of four brothers.

Oops, the flag's upside down

ATLANTA (AP) — With a Canadian team in the World Series for the first time, baseball committed a diplomatic gaffe by flying the country's flag upside down in ceremonies before Sunday's game.

Officials quickly issued an apology "to the people of Canada and to all baseball fans for the unintentional improper display of the Canadian flag."

The flag, with a big red maple leaf on a red-and-white field, was carried onto the field with the Stars and Stripes by an Army color guard from Fort McPherson, Ga.

The maple leaf was displayed with the top of the leaf pointing downward, instead of skyward.

Regents to hear smaller tuition-raise options

Regent Tom Dorr and student representatives plan to submit counterproposals.

Jon Yates
The Daily Iowan

Debate over a proposed tuition increase at the UI continues as student representatives and at least one member of the Iowa state Board of Regents plan to submit counterproposals at Wednesday's meeting in Cedar Falls.

Regent Tom Dorr said he will push for a tuition increase of 2.5 percent for both resident and nonresident undergraduate students at the three state universities — an increase considerably lower than last month's proposed 4.98 percent tuition increase for resident undergraduates and 7.48 percent to 7.57 percent increase for nonresident undergraduate students.

Dorr said he will make his counterproposal because he doesn't think tuition needs to be increased as much as the regents have proposed.

"It's exasperating an already exploding cost situation," he said. If the proposed 4.98 percent to 7.57 percent increases are passed, resident UI students will pay an additional $104 a year, while non-residents will pay an extra $528 annually.

Dorr said he is hopeful his proposal will result in a lower increase, but a memorandum from the board office is recommending the board approve the earlier proposal.

Dustin Wilcox, president of the UI Student Assembly, said he would support Dorr's proposal, which is even lower than the UIASA's proposed 3.2 percent across-the-board increase.

Wilcox said both his and Dorr's counterproposals are more equitable because they do not increase nonresident tuition at a higher rate than resident tuition and they do not exceed projected price indexes.

In 1992, both the Consumer Price Index and the Higher Education Price Index increased at a rate of 3.2 percent. According to a regents policy, resident undergraduate tuition will not increase at a rate higher than the change in the HEPI.

The tuition increase will be voted on Wednesday, and Wilcox said he will again be on hand to plead for a smaller increase. Regardless of which proposal is agreed upon, the tuition increase is scheduled to go into effect in the summer of 1993.

If last month's proposed rates are approved, the UI will receive a projected increase in revenues from tuition of over $5.1 million. Of that, $4.3 is earmarked for undergraduate education with the rest set aside for student aid.

Regents members said that revenues generated by increases in graduate students' tuition will also be applied to undergraduate education.

CHANGE IN CHINA

Politburo OKs new group of leaders

Kathy Wilhelm
Associated Press

BEIJING, China — The Communist Party, holding what is likely to be its last congress under paramount leader Deng Xiaoping, approved a new, slightly younger group of leaders on Sunday that excluded ranking hard-liners.

The congress closed with a resolution praising Deng and endorsing his policy of adopting capitalist practices to preserve Communist rule.

Red flags and a huge hammer and sickle decorated the Great Hall of the People, where delegates chose the 319-member Central Committee. Then the delegates stood to hear the "Internationale," the anthem of the shrinking world communist movement.

The Central Committee ratifies major policy decisions, and party leaders hope the new one will ensure a smooth transition after the death of Deng and other revolutionaries who have dominated the party for more than a decade.

But previous efforts at arranging a succession have failed, and there is no guarantee it will work this time.

Deng, 88, did not attend the congress, but was its dominant force. He and the other party

CAMPAIGNING WITH CAUTION

H. Clinton tells Dems. not to be complacent

James Anderson
The Daily Iowan

DES MOINES — Making sports analogies and invoking references to Major League Baseball, Hillary Clinton, wife of the Democratic Party's presidential nominee, strongly cautioned Iowa Democrats against overconfidence in the final two weeks of the campaign.

Speaking to 1,500 Democrats who gathered for their annual Jefferson-Jackson Day fund-raising dinner Friday night, Clinton told Iowa Democrats not to become complacent in their efforts on behalf of her husband because of encouraging national poll numbers and his performance in two presidential debates.

"It is not over till it is over," Clinton said. "There is never any way to predict what might happen."

Clinton said if Democrats are not careful, the result of the presidential election could be resolved like the seventh game of Major League Baseball's 1992 National League Championship series, in which the Atlanta Braves rallied for three runs in the bottom of the ninth inning to defeat the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Seizing upon the campaign themes being emphasized by her husband, Clinton echoed her husband's attacks on the economic policies of President George Bush, calling for fundamental change and an end to "trickle-down" economics.

"I don't think people will argue with the quality of life in Iowa, but the lack of an economic strategy," Clinton said. "It is impossible to stand up with a straight face and defend the economic policies of the last 12 years."

Clinton said that on Nov. 3, it will not be enough for her husband and Sen. Al Gore merely to win, but that they must win by a large margin so there can be a "clear" agenda for change.

UI's minority retention rate low

Jon Yates
The Daily Iowan

Minority enrollment at the UI is increasing, but the number of minorities completing requirements for a degree at the UI continues to be lower than that of the rest of the student population, according to a series of reports released Friday.

One report, which will be presented to the Iowa state Board of Regents Wednesday, shows that minorities now comprise 7.91 percent of all UI students, meaning the UI is nearing its goal of 8.5 percent minority enrollment.

But a separate report shows that only 46 percent of black students and 52 percent of Hispanics who entered the UI in the fall of 1985 graduated within six years. Those numbers are well below percentages for the entire class of 1985, of which 67 percent graduated within six years.

The numbers create a paradox in which the UI is able to recruit, but not retain, minorities.

According to UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Peter Nathan, many minority students are unable to pay for their education themselves. While minorities may receive initial scholarships and grants, that money may not be available as the student comes closer to earning his or her degree, he said.

"Part of the problem is in support," Nathan said. "If we can't provide added support for minority students, some may have to drop out and work to get the money they need."

Lisa Porter, executive officer for the Undergraduate Collegiate Senate, said the low number of minorities graduating may also be due, in part, to a lack of support from the Iowa City community.

"The community itself doesn't support keeping minorities," she said. "It offers nothing for them."

Porter said it is often tough for minorities to adjust to the Iowa City community, which does not cater to them.

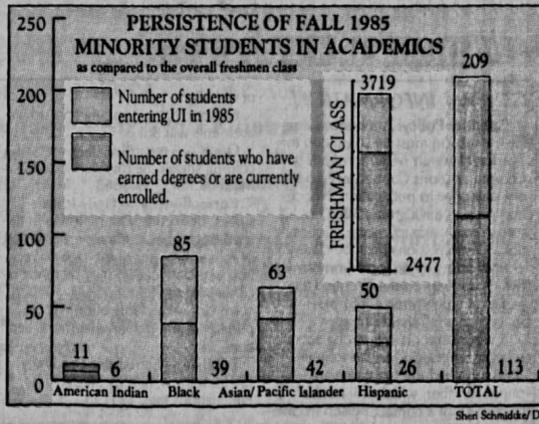

While graduation rates are low for minorities at the UI, they are even worse at the other two state institutions. According to the report, 30 percent of blacks entering Iowa

State in 1985 and only 14 percent of blacks entering Northern Iowa that year graduated within six years.

Nathan said he was pleased that the number of blacks graduating from the UI was high relative to the other state universities, but added that a 46 percent graduation rate means there is still work to be done.

The percentage of UI freshmen who are minorities is also significantly higher than at the other two state universities. According to the report, 8.24 percent of freshmen at the UI are minorities, compared to 7.06 percent and 4.17 percent at ISU and UNI, respectively.

LOCAL GROUP PROMOTES TRAIL

Al Goldis/The Daily Iowan

Bicyclists embark on a ride along the Iowa River near Coralville heading for the Union Saturday morning. Sponsored by Friends of the Iowa River Scenic Trail, the ride is intended to promote the development of a continuous, multipurpose recreational trail along the Iowa River.

FIRST bicycle ride draws large turnout

Lesley Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City community members of all ages turned out in large numbers to participate in the FIRST Annual Community Bicycle Ride Saturday morning.

Feather Lacy, organizer and chairwoman of the event, which raised nearly $4,000, said the ride went wonderfully.

"There were about 100 participants in all. About 70 to 80 started at the official start of the ride and more joined us along the route," she said.

The ride, sponsored by Friends of the Iowa River Scenic Trail, was intended to promote the development of a continuous, multipurpose recreational trail along the Iowa River, according to FIRST Vice President Terry Dahms.

"I think we did accomplish our primary objective," Dahms said. "We helped to create a lot of community awareness about the trail."

The official ride, beginning at 10 a.m., went from the Heartland Inn in Coralville to the Union, but Lacy said several riders continued on to Hills, Iowa, and Riverside, Iowa.

Dahms said cold morning temperatures may have caused fewer people to participate, but that once the ride began, the coolness was not a factor.

Participants ranged in ages from the very young to senior citizens. Lacy said there was a 6-year-old who rode to Hills and back, and several other children who rode along in bike seats.

Dahms said that there were also a few Rollerbladers and walkers who participated.

"We were glad to see them get involved because the trail isn't just for bicyclists," he said. "This trail is good for people, for businesses and for the environment."

Dahms said the trail will allow people to be safe from traffic and will not pollute the environment.

"I think of this whole project as Iowa City's 'Field of Dreams,'" Dahms said. "If you build this trail people will come in droves to use it."

FIRST member Bob Sayre said the community is behind this project.

"Everybody is very eager to support this trail. We had support from the city as well as community members and Iowa City businesses," he said.

Lacy said all participants contributed the requested $5 fee for the ride.

"The people are really excited about the trail," she said. "The ride drew lots of attention for its need. Several participants want this to become a semiannual event."

ARTS & CRAFTS AT UNION

Thieves' Market showcases Midwestern artists

Mary Geraghty
The Daily Iowan

Artists from all over the Midwest competed for the 72 available spots in the first of this year's three Thieves' Markets held Sunday.

The event was sponsored by the Fine Arts Council, a nonprofit organization which uses the entry fees paid by participants for student art grants, according to UI senior and council member Cari Corwin.

A jury selected the participants based on the three sample slides sent in by each interested artist.

May Grant, an artist from West Des Moines, Iowa, who has participated in the Thieves' Market before, said it was "not the hottest show" she attended during the year, but one of the nicest.

"I think of Iowa City as appreciating the fine arts," she said. "Even if the people don't buy anything, at least they are interested in looking and communicating about the art."

Grant also said she likes that the Thieves' Market is held in the Union. "The fact that it is held in this building adds to the environment," she said.

Jeff Easley of rural Iowa City said he has been displaying his work at the Thieves' Market for 10 or 12 years. He likes that it is held indoors because he doesn't have to

However, Easley said he liked the indoor setting at the Union, although it affected his decision on what he tried to sell.

Easley, who makes jewelry and builds furniture, said he brings his hand-crafted jewelry to the Thieves' Market because people can carry it. He assumes that people will have to park far away and won't want to carry large, bulky items through the fair.

The Fine Arts Council's informational literature about the Thieves' Market says that only handmade items may be sold. No commercially formed items, antiques, or molded works are accepted.

The council chooses one piece of art to purchase at each fair and raffles it off at the end of the day.

1,400 brave cold to participate in Hospice Road Races

The nationally known races even attracted participants from six other countries.

Yokota Masuo
The Daily Iowan

Although the temperature dropped to near Arctic levels, over 4,000 brave participants gathered in downtown Iowa City to take part in the 16th annual Iowa City Hospice Road Races.

Peg McElroy Fraser, director of the races, described the sunny, cool and windless morning "ideal running weather."

It was announced before the races, which started at 9 a.m., that about 4,000 runners, walkers and wheelers were going to participate in the races, including representatives from six foreign countries, such as New Zealand and Scotland. The oldest participant was 80 years old and the youngest, 3 weeks.

The Iowa City Hospice Road Races are recognized nationally as an event for "everyone with a cause." They consist of several races: a half-mile event for children under 7; a mile fun run for all ages; 5K and 10K walks and runs; a half-marathon run; and one-mile, 5K and 10K wheelchair races.

There were some elite runners invited to take part in the races, but most of the entrants were amateurs who enjoy jogging and walking every day.

Ruby Jedlicka, from Solon, Iowa, has been walking the 5K in the race for more than 10 years. "I'm excited to join the race," she said before the start. "It's nice to have the races not only for participants, but for the agencies to receive the pledges."

UI graduate student Neal Baker said he was satisfied with his time of 18 minutes, 15 seconds for the 5K run. "It's a good chance to shape yourself up and have fun running with your friends," he said.

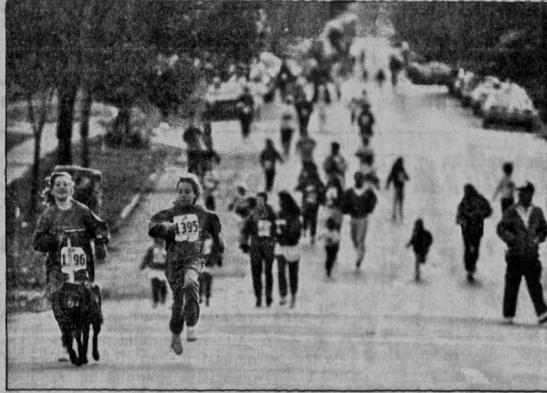

"This was my first time to join the races, and I'll do this next year," Baker said.

The races were "a tremendous success" this year because the participants amounted to some 4,400 — 500 more than last year. The total pledges were about $109,000 which exceeded the $106,000 last year, according to McElroy Fraser.

The finish of the female 10K race between Katherine Evans, of Fort Collins, Colo., and UI graduate Jennifer Brower, excited McElroy Fraser the most this year.

worry about the weather. Most of the other shows he participates in are held outside, he said.

"There is more of a festival atmosphere in outdoor shows," he said.

Al Goldis/The Daily Iowan

Racers head down College Street for the finish line of the 16th annual Iowa City Hospice Road Races one-mile fun run Sunday morning.

"They ran literally neck and neck to the finish and Jennifer came in first," she said.

Mira Lutendorf of Iowa City was the top female finisher in the 5K wheelchair race with a time of 1:57:38. James Moore of Iowa City was the first male finisher in the 5K wheelchair race with a time of 26:02.

Tim Hacker of Madison, Wis., took the 10K as the top male finisher with a time of 29:25. Jennifer Brower of Iowa City was the top female finisher in the 10K with a time of 34:32.

The female winner of the half-marathon was Julie Wilson of Iowa City with a time of 1:26:22. Vincent Magnotta of Iowa City was the male winner of the half marathon with a time of 1:12:53.

RALLY HIGHLIGHTS PLIGHT

Gathering reminds IC of difficulties in Bosnia

Anne Johnston
The Daily Iowan

Brisk winds and temperatures in the 40s, a small group gathered on the Pentacrest Friday to call attention to the plight of the victims of war-torn Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Although the cold limited the turnout to a dedicated few, organizers said it served as a reminder that winter will soon begin in Bosnia, where United Nations officials have estimated that hundreds of thousands could die of starvation or exposure.

"If the Serbs don't kill them first, the cold will," said speaker Zebun Noormohamed, a member of the Muslim Students Association.

According to Associated Press reports, at least 14,000 people have died in fighting and more than 1 million are homeless since ethnic Serbs took up arms against Bosnia's majority Muslims and Croats, who voted Feb. 10 to secede from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

Holding a posterboard with pictures of suffering Bosnians, Noormohamed called upon President Bush to take notice.

"I want to introduce him to the widows and orphans in Bosnia, and the men who are standing in lines, waiting to have their heads shaved before being shipped off to concentration camps," she said. "I see them starving, I see them anguished and in pain. I want him to do something and I want him to do it now."

Although the demonstration was sponsored by the MSA, representatives of the local Jewish and Christian communities spoke as well.

Rabbi Jeff Portman of the B'Nai B'Rith Hillel Foundation and Agudas Achim Congregation compared the situation in Bosnia to the Holocaust of World War II.

"Five decades ago, a holocaust of mass proportions occurred in the world, and after that holocaust the world community got together, wrung its hands and said, 'This will never happen again,'" Portman said.

"This is, my friends, another holocaust. Why do we have to wait for it to end, and then say 'We could have done something?'" he said.

Rev. Blake Richter of St. Andrew Presbyterian Church said he felt humbled to be at Friday's demonstration because "part of the atrocities are caused by people who purport to share a faith with me," referring to Orthodox Christian Serbs.

"This is a matter of great shame and I think the Christian community is especially called upon to say this is simply intolerable," Richter said. "There can never, ever be a reason to kill in the name of Christ."

Saleem Noormohamed of the MSA said the diversity of speakers was meant to demonstrate that the conflict in Bosnia is not a Muslim-Christian issue, but rather a human one.

"It is incumbent upon all leaders and all people of all religions to take action," he said. "History is going to judge us as human beings depending on how we act now."

Organizers said the rally for peace in Bosnia was one of several being held across the nation Friday.

SCHOLARS COME TOGETHER AT UI

Art history symposium one of top 3 in nation

Susan Kreimer
The Daily Iowan

Nine art history scholars from universities around the United States congregated at the UI Art Building Saturday for an all-day symposium where they presented papers covering topics from ancient times to the 20th century.

The eighth annual symposium, which was organized by the UI Art History Society, has been rated by Rutgers University as one of the top three graduate art history symposiums in the country.

In his opening remarks Saturday morning, UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Peter Nathan said participating in a "symposium of this magnitude" is a "most impressive undertaking."

He said he hopes that in a few years the symposium will have become large and prestigious enough that any graduate student aspiring toward a tenured position in art history in the country will be required to have presented a paper at the event.

"It will be a benchmark for establishing your credibility as an art historian," Nathan said.

UI graduate student Jane Stone, symposium chairwoman, said the readings committee had to "narrow down" the selection of 25 to 30 abstracts to 10 of the best papers which were received from graduate students from across the country. Of those 10, nine presented their papers.

She said the symposium provides a good exchange of information in art history, where everyone "is working with a variety of methodologies and exploring a variety of fields."

In selecting the papers, the readings committee looks for the "best and the brightest out there who are doing cutting-edge research," according to Nancy Mortensen, president of the Art History Society and UI graduate student in art history.

The act of researching and documenting a subject and sharing the information with one's peers "increases the set of human knowledge," Mortensen said.

"The symposium enlivens intellectual interaction within the department," she said. "The whole idea of scholarly pursuit is not only to exchange information within your own campus but with people outside it."

David Ehrenpreis of Boston University said the symposium allows graduate students to interact with scholars at their level and see how research is conducted in other parts of the country.

Jane Blocker of the University of North Carolina agreed that it's good to get away from one's home institution and become exposed to different approaches other scholars are taking in their work.

An object of art can spark different questions from different scholars, according to Nanette Thrush of Indiana University.

Students were allowed 20 minutes to present their papers, and 10 minutes to field questions and receive feedback from the other students.

Thrush said feedback is helpful because the audience can look "for holes" in the speaker's theory.

"It's the best kind of classroom situation you can have — because you have an educated audience and speaker sharing information," Thrush said.

Kimberly Ann Jones of the University of Maryland at College Park said a critical response is important for starting scholars who want to eventually publish their work in an art history periodical.

"It's a way of trying out material and seeing if it works," she said.

The warmth and camaraderie of their peers reaffirms the scholars' commitment to art history, Jones said.

"You have excitement and you want to share it — that's what keeps you going through all the years of hard work."

Lt. gov. urges spreading knowledge, support of ERA

Associated Press

WATERLOO — Iowa Lt. Gov. Joy Corning said Saturday it is unfortunate the debate over the state's proposed Equal Rights Amendment has been mired in discussions about politics, abortion and gay rights.

Speaking at an ERA fund-raiser at the Waterloo Club, Corning said equal rights in not a "maybe matter" for interested voters.

"I urge you to find some method to spread the word that the fine constitution that we already have in this state can become more just and more appropriate, and more nearly reflect the kind of common sense, down-to-earth, realistic people that we Iowans believe we are," she told those at the rally.

Corning scoffed at suggestions by those opposing the ERA that the amendment would cause women to leave their husbands, kill babies or practice witchcraft. She said that hasn't happened in the 16 states that have already passed the amendment.

"We can reasonably hope ERA will stamp out discrimination in employment, college scholarships and sports opportunities," Corning said. "The amendment will not convince anyone that men and women are the same, merely equal."

Corning also said the ERA will most likely impact child-support determinations, child-custody suits, parental duties and the right to recover damages in court.

Corning said she wants people to talk about the ERA in the waning days until the election.

"Do not be hesitant to broach the subject of how important equality is," she said. "Remind your friends, neighbors and relatives that the ERA is on the ballot... and they should not leave a voting booth or turn in a ballot without giving attention to the ERA amendment."

REPORT SHOWS UI IMPROVING

Female faculty members still paid less than men

Jon Yates
The Daily Iowan

Faculty salaries at the UI rank high in relation to comparison groups, but female faculty members continue to be paid a lower salary than their male counterparts, according to a report released Friday by the Iowa state Board of Regents.

The report shows the average faculty salary at the UI for 1992-93 to be around $56,800, fourth best among the UI's comparison group of 11 universities, which is a three-place improvement over last year's seventh-place ranking.

UI faculty women earn between $20,000 and $20,000 less than UI faculty men in similar positions, the report shows. Although the salary differential varies according to position, women are paid a lower salary than men in every faculty category, including professor, associate professor and assistant professor.

Both male and female 12-month professors at the UI earn an average salary of over $120,000. The report shows that 12-month professors are the most similar in salary,

Two universities in the comparison, Ohio State University and the University of Michigan, reported no increase in salary for 1992-93. The average faculty salary at Michigan is about $4,000 more than that at the UI, while Ohio because two regents were absent, would allow health-care coverage for gay and lesbian partners of UI faculty and staff.

In other regents actions, the board will receive a status report on a series of proposals made in September by representatives of American Indian students.

The proposals, which will be voted on in December, include a waiver of nonresident tuition for American Indians, the establishment of an American Indian ambassador, and the establishment of an American Indian Study Program at the UI.

The board will also receive an annual report on student financial aid. The report shows that last year, the UI distributed $123.8 million in student aid to 20,810 students, including grants, scholarships, student employment and loans to students or parents.

... Women are paid a lower salary than men in every faculty category, including professor, associate professor and assistant professor.

with women earning around $2,000 less than men in this category.

According to Tom Bauer of University Relations, 354 UI faculty members earn over $100,000 a year.

The UI also ranked second in its comparison group in average salary increase this year with a 5.5 percent increase. Only the University of Wisconsin, with an increase of 5.6 percent, ranked higher.

State's average salary is approximately $2,500 less.

In regents actions on the docket for Wednesday's meeting in Cedar Falls, the board office is recommending approval of the proposed change in the UI's health-insurance plan to cover domestic partners.

The proposed change, which was tabled at last month's meeting

STUMPING IN WATERLOO

Jackson: Clinton lead too big, Bush 'losing without class'

Mike Glover
Associated Press

WATERLOO — Jesse Jackson, stumping for Democrat Congressional campaigns and signing up voters, said Saturday that President Bush is not just losing the election but "is coming apart."

"Bush is losing the race and losing his dignity," Jackson said.

But Jackson rejected suggestions that Democrats are beginning to take the election for granted, saying the campaign is still focused.

"The campaign will not slow down, the stakes are too high," Jackson said at a Waterloo news conference and during an interview.

Jackson was the latest prominent Democrat to sound a warning against overconfidence in the days since the second presidential debate.

Following that debate, in which Democrat Bill Clinton scored well, many strategists argued that Clinton's double-digit lead is simply too large for Bush to overcome in the final two weeks of the campaign.

Jackson swung through northeast Iowa to register voters in Water-loo's black community and to bring along Democratic Rep. David Nagle for a boost.

That voting group will be crucial in Clinton's quest and could be decisive in Nagle's photo-finish campaign against Rep. Jim Nussle in the 2nd District.

Jackson appeared at a jammed church, urging a massive turnout for Democrats Nov. 3.

Asked about Bush's passive performance in the second debate, Jackson said simply, "He is coming apart."

"George Bush seems resigned to defeat," Jackson said. "But more than losing the race, he's now losing a sense of dignity. He's losing without class."

Bush has been hammering Clinton on character issues for weeks. That attack has not moved the polls.

Jackson said it won't work in the final two weeks.

"At this point, he does not have enough punch in his swing for it to stick," Jackson said. "The more he attacks Clinton's character, rather than to forward his own vision, the smaller he looks."

Jackson argued that Bush and the Republican Party have been captured by the party's right wing. Jackson said that is driving away mainstream voters who formed the base of Bush's 1988 win.

"Apparently he has been obsessed with maintaining Reagan's base," he said. "The center is now unemployed."

Jackson's visit to Waterloo is important for Nagle. Nagle and Nussle are waging a brutal reapportionment-driven campaign that's too close to call.

APATHY DISTRESSES SPONSORS

Low turnout at tax-day rally emphasizes organizers' point

Molly Spann
The Daily Iowan

Whether it was the cold temperatures or just a lack of interest, about five people, other than those sponsoring the event, were all who attended a rally for Taxpayer Action Day late Friday afternoon on the Pentacrest.

Michael Clark, president and founder of the Citizens Against Government Waste-UI Chapter, said he thought the low turnout at the rally was a reflection of the way people feel toward issues such as taxes.

"I think that this is a comment on why we're in the fiscal state that we're in — citizens don't get involved," Clark said. "People don't care so the government does what they want."

Clark said the purpose of the rally was to give UI voters and others in the community an opportunity to voice their frustrations about frugal government spending with taxpayers' revenue.

"We want to open the public's eyes to the amount of waste that exists," he said.

Besides the UI community, Iowa legislative candidates were also invited to attend the rally.

Minnette Doderer and Mary Neuhauser, both seeking re-election in the state Legislature, and Cindy Philips, who is running against Neuhauser for a seat in the state Legislature, attended the rally.

Doderer said although taxpayers' money being wasted on the national level may be a problem, it is not a problem in Iowa.

Dave Mastio, a UI junior who came to the rally, said he attended because he thought taxes must be spent more wisely due to the current economic state which exists in America. Mastio believes many people are concerned about government waste.

"I wish a lot more people would have showed up tonight," he said. "I think that a lot more care than the numbers show."

Citizens must get involved with government spending if they want to reduce government waste, Clark said. One way to curb government waste of tax money is for citizens to tell elected officials that they do not want their tax dollars covering special-interest projects, he added.

A 27-year-old man is suspected of setting fire to the apartment building where his former girlfriend lives.

DES MOINES — Des Moines police issued murder and arson warrants for the arrest of a 27-year-old man accused of setting an apartment building on fire after a dispute with a former girlfriend who lived there.

A father and his daughter died in the blaze, while the woman and dozens of others living at the five-story apartment were able to escape the early Saturday morning blaze.

Charged is Daniel Phillip Butler, address unknown. Police said they had Butler in custody on Saturday but released him before the warrants were issued.

The victims were John Emerick,

40, and his daughter Christine Emerick, 9. Their bodies were found in a stairwell landing.

Police reports show that officers responded to the apartment at about 7:45 p.m. Friday on the complaint of Patricia Weeks, 19. Weeks reported that Butler, a former roommate of hers, had tried to break into her apartment at 7:30.

Weeks told police that Butler had beaten her at least twice before and had been making threatening phone calls.

DRIVER RUNS STOP SIGN

8 injured in weekend car crash

ANAMOSA, Iowa — Eight people were injured in a two-car collision near this eastern Iowa city. A car containing four teen-agers apparently ran a stop sign and collided with another car containing four adults, the Jones County Sheriff's office said.

The accident happened shortly before 8:30 p.m. Friday at the intersection of U.S. Highway 151 and 130th Street, which is also known as Old Dubuque Road.

The "jaws of life" were used to free two teen-agers who were trapped in the back seat of the first car.

Both drivers and all six passengers were taken to the Anamosa Community Hospital. One person was later transferred to St. Luke's Hospital in Cedar Rapids, officials said.

Hospital officials did not immediately release any information on their conditions.

Charges are pending in the accident, sheriff's officials said.

BUSINESSES OPTIMISTIC

Area employment opportunities good despite economy

Jude Sunderbruch
The Daily Iowan

Even as more glum economic data and forecasts were released by the federal government last week, the Iowa City area remains an oasis of relative stability and prosperity, according to local business officials.

Tom Bullington, manager of the Iowa City Job Service office, said the rate of unemployment in the Iowa City area continued to hold at a fairly low level throughout the summer and fall, but could go up as winter begins and many seasonal construction jobs end.

"The outside activity almost comes to a halt," he said. "As far as job openings, they'll no doubt decrease in November, December, January and February."

A recently released report from the Iowa Department of Employment Services showed the total amount of jobless benefits paid to Iowans last month was $15.9 million. The report cited the lull between summer vacation layoffs and cold weather slowdowns as a reason for the lower figure.

Although the September payments total was the lowest of the year, it was $6.3 million more than the amount paid out in the same month in 1991.

While the state of Iowa has generally fared better than much of the rest of the country, the effects of the worldwide economic slowdown are apparent in some corners of the state.

Last week's announcement of job openings at an Amana appliance factory brought over 1,000 potential applicants to the firm's doorstep, about 10 times the number that will eventually be hired.

Many of those applying were employed, but searching for better wages that would provide a higher standard of living — a pattern apparent across the United States as the economy shifts away from high-paying manufacturing jobs and towards low-wage service-sector employment.

Bullington said he did not expect to see a similar increase in manufacturing employment opportunities in the Iowa City area's near future.

"There aren't any significant number of factory jobs available now," he said. "The service ones and health care — they are always good right now."

Many local businesses agree with his assessment and note that no matter how bad the outlook may be elsewhere, the Iowa City area can usually depend on the UI and the UI Hospitals and Clinics to provide strong economic benefits to the community.

Brad Hohl, an operations manager at the Highlander Inn and Supper Club, 2525 N. Dodge St., said business has been going well and the Highlander continues to hire new employees.

"This time of year with the football season Iowa City always attracts a lot of tourists," he said. "I don't know if there's been much of an ill effect; maybe so, but not too much."

Although isolated from some economic trends, the national shift toward huge superstores with massive-volume buying power and ultra-low prices can be found in the Iowa City area as well.

Brad Moore, an assistant manager at the Iowa City Best Buy, 1963 Broadway St., said sales are up and the store is looking to hire more new workers to keep up the expanded volume.

"The doom and gloom you hear on the TV isn't all true. I just don't think it's as bad as people say it is," he said, adding that he thinks the future looks bright.

"People probably feel better about the economy. Our sales have been up 150 percent companywide. We're selling a lot of stuff, and Christmas is coming up."

CAMPAIGNING IN IC

Iowa candidates discuss issues at local Senior Center

Mary Geraghty
The Daily Iowan

Health care and Social Security were the primary subjects of discussion among candidates for state and federal office Sunday afternoon at the Iowa City Senior Center. Nearly 40 people gathered to hear the candidates present their views.

Democratic state Sen. Jean Lloyd-Jones, a candidate for the U.S. Senate, said the way to reform health care is to "cut out waste, hold down costs, and spread out benefits."

Contrary to his opponents' views, Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, said a single-payer health-care program will increase rather than decrease the federal deficit.

"I don't think there is any doubt that health care is going to be the domestic issue of the '90s," he said.

Jan Zonneveld, a Democratic candidate for the U.S. House, said he supports national health care "so that everyone gets what he needs and everyone pays in accordance to what he can afford."

Stuart Zimmerman, the Natural Law Party candidate for the U.S. House, said, "We don't have health care here in America. What we have is sickness care."

Rep. Bob Dvorsky, a Democrat from the 49th District, said, "There are a great deal of problems which will cost a great deal of money any way you do it. The first step is to determine what is costing so much and try to set up a system that deals with that."

Mike Streb, Dvorsky's challenger, said, "I am very leery of universal health care — of simply turning our health care over to government."

A universal health-care program would have "the consistency of the post office and the compassion of the Pentagon," Streb said.

Marc Libants, Republican candidate for the Iowa House in the 45th District, was very careful not to make any promises. "Politicians are very good at promising things, but are often not realistic," he said.

Libants pointed out that although 36,000 Americans are not getting the health care they need, 214 million Americans already receive adequate care. "Let's come up with a program to get health care to the 36,000 who aren't getting it," he said.

Several candidates proposed preventive medical care as part of a national health-care program. Lloyd-Jones said the program she endorses emphasizes prevention and education on a healthy lifestyle in order to keep costs down.

In the question-and-answer session that followed the discussion, the candidates for state office were asked for their views on the proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the Iowa Constitution.

"I am a strong supporter of the Equal Rights Amendment in Iowa," Rep. Mary Neuhauser, a Democrat from the 46th District, said. "A constitution is a document of principles and rights, and the rights of women should be equal to the rights of men."

Rep. Minnette Doderer, a Democrat from the 45th District, said the current civil rights laws are not enough and that she is appalled by the opposition to the ERA.

"If you don't vote for it, I'll blow up your houses," she joked.

Streb said he will vote against the ERA.

"As a principle, I think men and women are equal, but we need to make distinctions," he said. "We're equal but different."

TRADITIONAL CHINESE MEDICINE TOUTED

Herbalist gives presentation on disease prevention, health

Roy Upton is working on a congressional campaign to promote traditional herbal medicine.

Susan Kreimer
The Daily Iowan

Herbalist Roy Upton favors disease prevention over crisis intervention. Low-tech versus high-tech solutions. Individual health connected to environmental health.

"Ever since the germ theory was postulated, our system of medicine has been based on attacking disease rather than strengthening the body to resist it," said Upton in a talk at the Unitarian Universalist Society, 10 S. Gilbert St., Saturday afternoon. The event was sponsored by Iowa City's New Pioneer Co-Op and Frontier Co-op Herbs in Norway, Iowa.

Upton, who is the general manager of an herb company based in California, is working on a congressional campaign to promote traditional herbal medicine and national health care which emphasizes prevention.

Unlike Western doctors, Upton said practitioners of traditional Chinese medicine believe individual health cannot be separated from environmental health.

"What poisons one, poisons the other," Upton said. "If we poison the water that we drink, the air that we breathe and the food that we eat, then we poison ourselves."

According to Upton, each person is made up of a composite of five natural elements — earth, metal, fire, water and wood — and disease results from their disruption. Diagnostic treatments in TCM are designed "to bring these principles back into balance," Upton said.

Most diseases can be affected by diet alone. Upton said a 1971 nutritional study released by the U.S. Department of Agriculture revealed that the incidence of disease can be reduced by 32.6 percent, and medical costs by 36 percent, through dietary changes.

Upton said that despite the amount of money people in the United States spend on medicine, "we're not getting our money's worth."

"Western medicine often just treats the branch, the symptoms of disease, without addressing the cause," he said.

Looking at both the "root" and the symptoms, TCM practitioners devise treatments on the basis of the individual's constitutional makeup, not the disease itself.

They design different formulas of herbs to address each of the causes that make up a disease. Chinese herbal treatments are effective against many common complaints, including stress, digestive problems and colds, as well as chronic illnesses such as cancer and AIDS.

"Western medicine often just treats . . . the symptoms of disease . . ."

Roy Upton, herbalist

The herb reishi has been given to cancer patients to reduce the side effects of chemo and radiation therapy.

The herb ginseng is a tonic which helps the body digest food better and gain more energy from it.

The herb dong quai, known as the "female herb," is used to nourish blood in the body after iron loss during menstruation, and to help circulate blood that is blocked by menstrual cramps, endometriosis and fibroid tumors.

Herbs, which can be used in soups and teas and promote inner peace and physical well-being, are not a cure all. They simply help the "system maximize the ability for survival and protect against infection," Upton said.

He concluded his talk by reaffirming the individual's connection to the world.

"Man is a simple extension of the universe," Upton said. "You cannot heal something without healing the environment."

This week, everybody on campus will be talking about drinking.

Because during National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, your school will host all kinds of activities and presentations focusing on the safe and responsible consumption of alcohol by students of legal drinking age. Among the activities is a "Know When To Say When" poster contest that pays a $5,000 scholarship for the poster that most creatively and effectively promotes responsible drinking.

Sponsored in part by Anheuser-Busch, NCAAAW is about the health, safety and social issues you face when you drink. It's about avoiding abusive drinking situations. And it's about adding to your margin of safety, and that of everyone else, by drinking responsibly.

It's certainly something worth talking about. So why not get in on the conversation.

National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week is the kind of grass roots program that Anheuser-Busch supports to encourage responsible drinking by adult collegians. For more information on this and other programs, contact NCAAAW, Fort Hays State University, 600 Park Street, Hays, Kansas 67601-4099 or your local Anheuser-Busch wholesaler.

DISASTER HITS COLOMBIA

2nd earthquake sparks thermal-bath eruption

Twig Mowatt
Associated Press

BOGOTA, Colombia—The second severe earthquake hit Colombia in two days, rocking cities Sunday and setting off an eruption at thermal baths in the northwest. At least 10 people were killed and scores were injured, news reports said.

About 30 people were seriously injured and many more were missing after mud and steam blasted from thermal baths near the town of San Pedro de Uraba, 124 miles northwest of Medellin, according to authorities cited by Caracol radio. San Pedro residents said houses were buried in the mud.

The earthquake Saturday partially destroyed the fishing village of Murindo, 90 miles northwest of Medellin. No deaths or injuries were reported, but as many as 500 people were left homeless.

In Bogota, the capital city of 6 million, people ran out of their shaking buildings into the streets. Traffic lights were swinging wildly.

The quake measured 7.2 on the Richter scale and struck at 10:12 a.m., according to the U.S. Geological Survey's National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo.

Preliminary findings by the Seismic Institute in Cali, Colombia, said the quake lasted two minutes and was centered about 185 miles northwest of Bogota—almost the same spot as Saturday's earthquake, which measured 6.6 on the Richter scale.

President Cesar Gaviria's office said the quake apparently triggered the thermal eruption, which occurred simultaneously.

Local radio reported that many of the casualties may have been bathers at the mineral baths near San Pedro, where a 1,500-foot mound ejected steam and mud at the baths.

Nelson Poveda, an official at the mayor's office in San Pedro, told Caracol at least 25 people were missing. Javier Diaz, head nurse at the town's hospital, said 16 people were being treated for first-degree burns and nine for second-degree burns.

Poveda said the earthquake cracked roads and cut off traffic to and from the town.

Antonio Claros of San Pedro told Caracol "several houses are buried in the mud and we don't know how many dead there are."

In Bogota, people were still milling in the streets two hours after the quake, clutching their belongings, afraid to return to their homes.

Aftershocks, registering up to 4 on the Richter scale, still rippled through the country hours later.

The quake was felt from the north Caribbean Coast south to the Amazon River, according to RCN radio.

A child died in the northwestern village of Vigia del Fuerte, 100 miles from Medellin, and other children were injured, according to news reports citing the national Red Cross.

In the southern city of Pereira, a woman died of a heart attack after the quake, according to radio reports.

After Saturday's quake, Murindo's medical clinic was severely damaged and the mayor's office, school and library were damaged, official reports said.

Students trapped by increases, aid cuts

José Martínez

Chad Goodwin works at Sears by day and tends bar at night to help pay his way at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. He's bushed, and he's broke much of the time.

The 20-year-old sophomore is one of a growing number of college students caught between tuition increase and financial-aid cuts.

"Over the summer you make the money and try to stay above water until Christmas," Goodwin said. "Then you work over Christmas, get your tax return back and try to last through the spring."

Federal, state and institutional aid rose less than 8 percent last year and the maximum amount available from the federal government's principal grant program fell from $2,400 to $2,300, according to figures released last week by the College Board, an association of 2,800 colleges and universities.

Tuition and other costs rose an average 10 percent at public colleges and 7 percent at private schools last year, the College Board said. To make up the difference, students and their families increasingly have turned to loans. In Goodwin's case, that means $2,500 in loans to cover tuition, books and fees for one year going to school full time.

Living expenses are up to him. "I have enough money to survive, but I had to borrow $5 for gas from my roommate today, and I ended up $18 in the hole after buying groceries," he said.

Goodwin said students like him develop a routine—work, study, then work some more.

Giavanna Alvarez-Negretti transferred to Boston's Emerson College from the University of Puerto Rico, where a single Pell Grant covered her tuition, room and board. But Emerson was much more expensive.

The 21-year-old junior lives with relatives and commutes to school to cut expenses. As a day student, she pays $17,200 a year. To live on campus would have cost $22,550.

"I have $1,600 in work study and $4,000 in scholarships, but the rest is all loans," Alvarez-Negretti said.

Carrying so many loans is not uncommon. In 15 years, loans have increased from making up 17 percent of financial aid to 50 percent, according to the U.S. Department of Education.

"We're in danger of having education for the wealthy, and the poor need not apply," said Joe Langis, executive director of State Student Association of Massachusetts, which represents students in public higher education.

A sluggish economy hasn't helped, he said. Students find fewer jobs available.

"Every cent counts," said Alvarez-Negretti, relaxing after class on Friday before going to her part-time job at a shoe store. "Society expects us to become professionals, and to do that we have to go to school," she said.

Her friend, 19-year-old Brett Nix, had planned to pay his way at Emerson with a small inheritance. But the money dried up after one year. Now Nix works two jobs to pay for a single television-production class at Emerson and two more classes at nearby Bunker Hill Community College.

ELECTION '92

Campaigning and the obscenely fictitious

This has turned into an interesting election year, at least in part due to the tactics which the Bush campaign is currently utilizing in attempting to discredit Bill Clinton. Among other nasty little, below-the-belt, not at all factual attacks on Clinton's character was a quote from an official campaign release linking Clinton's resistance to the draft to a class trip that he took to Moscow. Even during the Cold War's most feverish moments, the most salt-of-the-Earth simpleton in existence would have had to question this bizarre abandonment of common sense; to imply that a candidate conferred with the KGB in organizing of war protests simply because that candidate happened to be visiting another country is absolutely unconscionable. Even a knee-jerk lunatic like Rush Limbaugh would have to acknowledge that such accusations — admitted to be lacking any factual basis — are out of line.

If the Republican presidential ticket is to appear to be less than obviously scrambling, let alone holding its own, this campaign year, it must cease these ridiculous, even laughable accusations and try a bit of standing on their own platform.

Bill Clinton is no superhero flying in to save the day, but he did not give us an oft-repeated "read my lips — no new taxes" pledge; he did not take part in the Reagan administration's alarmingly well-documented October Surprise Committee (which traded arms and influence with Iranians who were holding American hostages in an effort to gain an edge for the Republican campaign); and he did not demand our military involvement in the oil-rich Persian Gulf only to ignore the well-documented human rights violations in the former Yugoslav republics.

The Republican ticket should be aware, once the dust clears this campaign year, that the combination of an oppressive party platform, a partywide line on the opinion that the policies currently in place are working (and that there is no recession), and one very below-the-belt campaign was the combination which removed the Bush administration from the White House.

LETTERS

Turning the other cheek

To the Editor:
These last few months in the presidential campaign have seen the Republicans trumpeting thunderously for a "return to family values." On the last day of the convention we got to see a grinning Bush, flanked on all sides by cheering children and grandchildren, showing the country what a superb family man he really is. But what exactly do the Republicans mean when they refer to "family values?"

The family values, interchangeable with "traditional values," are essentially Judeo-Christian. With this in mind, Bush said of the Democratic National Convention: "(They) took words to put together their platform but left out three simple letters: G, O, and D." And with this in mind, Pat Buchanan, conservative par excellence and admitted admirer of Adolph Hitler said, "There is a religious war going on in this country for the soul of America. . . . It is a cultural war, with Clinton and Gore on the other side, and George Bush on our side."

These Republican tactics are meant to create, it seems, a sort of loyalty test, one that separates the good Christians (Republicans) from the godless pagans (Democrats). In a country of such religious, philosophical, and ethnic diversity as America, such an intolerant view is as ridiculous as it is dangerous. One writer went so far as to call the Republican National Convention a "Ku Klux Klan rally without the hoods."

Paradoxically, it is also a position that contradicts some basic Judeo-Christian values. Perhaps before the Republicans throw the Bible at the (as they would have us believe) godless Democrats, they should read it first. Biblical scripture is filled with stories in which biblical prophets make a point of not blaming the problems of biblical Israel on the pagans; indeed, the Bible tells of people who act with more wisdom than their Judeo-Christian counterparts: Uriah to David, Namach to Gehazi. A biblical scholar notes that ". . . the prophets (are) not to call for a holy war to eradicate the pagans; rather, the prophets call for a change in the directions of the lives of individual Israelites." Perhaps before the Republicans decide to wage a "religious war" on America's pagans, they should heed the actions of their spiritual fathers — the originators of the family values that Republicans tout so highly — and instead call for a change in the lifestyles of American Christians.

The New Republic noted the sad truth of it: Family values is "an icon not for the virtues it implies, but for the people it excludes."

Sentencing too severe

To the Editor:
This letter represents the views of the Iowa City Friends Meeting. As members of the Society of Friends (Quakers), we have a historic concern with the humane and just treatment of those accused of crimes. We believe that recent drug-related sentences in the Federal District Court in Cedar Rapids are so severe as to go beyond the bounds of fairness and decency.

Those sentences include life without the possibility of parole for selling amphetamines, 15 years without possibility of parole for growing and distributing marijuana, and sentences of up to 24 years without possibility of parole for offenses involving cocaine. Under the federal mandatory minimum-sentencing guidelines, these people will serve more time than most people convicted of second-degree murder.

Sentences involving marijuana and amphetamines are particularly disturbing. Many experts believe marijuana to be less harmful than alcohol and tobacco, and amphetamines were widely used by the general public as diet pills until recently. We recognize the great harm done to individuals by the abuse of alcohol, tobacco, and illegal drugs. But we were shocked at the severity of these sentences, which represent personal tragedies for the victims and their families, and which undermine the principle that the punishment should bear some relationship to the severity of the crime.

The large amount of money spent incarcerating these individuals would be better spent on providing treatment on demand for those with drug problems. We call on our elected officials to reduce the severity of federal drug laws, and to eliminate the mandatory minimum sentences associated with such laws. We urge the federal prosecutor in Cedar Rapids to cease prosecuting cases that will result in such cruel and unusual punishment. Finally, we encourage everyone to show compassion and support for the families of these victims of the war on drugs.

KIM PAINTER

10K race with the Type D crowd

There is an important battle for the presidency going on. It is a topic worthy of careful consideration. I have promised several people to give it due prominence in my thoughts. But at the moment, having just participated in my third Hospice Road Races, all I can think of is acquiring the answer to one question: Are Bloody Mary's suitable for direct injection into the musculature of the quadriceps as a relaxant?

The Road Races are a great local institution. They carry national renown as well, as those of you intimate with the proceedings know. A number of runners known as "elites" participate, chiefly because the event provides a half marathon, a rare opportunity to cultivate stamina.

I worked as a volunteer at Saturday's registration. That fact does not make me special. There are people who devote months of their lives to making the day what it is. But since I am about to depict the ugly competitive underside of the Road Races, I want it understood that I do so in a spirit of genuine affection for the day's activities.

As usual, I signed up for the 10K walk. Not so typically, this year I was part of a proud team effort. This was fine with me until about 90 seconds prior to race time. It was then I realized of some teammates that: a) they really were taking their cigarettes with them, and b) they really intended to wear their street clothes. One of them, a fellow I will call Douglas, arrived wielding a 48 oz. travel mug of coffee from QuikTrip. To this motley crew, I — a woman who works out religiously, a Road Racing maven who last year shaved 20 minutes off her first 10K time — was bound by fate.

I swore I would not go Type A on them. I promised patience, forbearance and complete apathy toward our finishing time. We got in line waaaaay at the back, behind the intersection of Gilbert and Washington. I didn't worry.

The gun went off to start the race. Before we at the back could begin to put one foot in front of the other, I saw runners crest the hill at Gilbert and Bowery. Still I maintained my composure, thinking, "This isn't so bad. All that matters is that we finish."

Two blocks into the race I noticed a squeaking noise like bad shopping carts make. Wheels in need of grease were waiting in our vicinity. In fact, a squadron of strollers was arrayed in formation just ahead of us. We were blocked. We were trapped way the hell at the back of the entire Road Races by infants in swaddling clothes. I felt the strategy was possibly deliberate. As we passed Fitzpatrick's heading south on Gilbert, I tapped Douglas's shoulder. "Look. We're blocked." He peered at me as if I was mad. Douglas has put in a winter beard. The visual effect, as he made his way down the street in a leather jacket and khaki trousers, drinking from his travel mug and occasionally lighting a smoke, was sinister. There I was walking with scary, unmotivated people and boxed in by babies. This was not shaping up to be my greatest race.

As we approached a set of railroad tracks, one of the strollers caught a wheel. A tiny nemesis was uprooted and left dangling until mom scooped him back to safety. One of my teammates had caught my competitive germs. He laughed (once he saw the kid was perfectly OK), and said, "OK. We can pass here." We dusted the stroller crowd.

The next big hurdle was simple congestion, caused by the multitude of 5K contestants. It was a mellow crowd, and there was no way for us to pass them until the 5K and 10K courses split, which would not happen for over a mile. Two of my pals lit cigs. During the lull, we noticed part of our team was missing and lagged behind us. From that point on, we became the elites of our team.

And a fine batch we were. We passed one benighted woman, apparently part of a team that was straggling far behind her. Just as we passed, she turned around and called to them in a hapless voice. "Come ONNNNN!" We began to laugh. It was hard not to. We had seen her trotting earlier, when she apparently succumbed to the pressure of being at the rear of the 10K pack and attempted to struggle closer to the front. We focused on easy, manageable goals, setting our sights on nearby clusters of people and passing them.

The 10K people who do not cheat by starting up front with the runners know that once you hit the five- or six-mile marker (the race is marked in miles — don't ask me — it's a sports thing), you begin to be passed by half-marathoners. This provides an excellent rear view of some spectacularly fit individuals. We in the peanut gallery of 10K "elites" ogled quietly among ourselves. "Carry your bags, ma'am?" "Hey — I think we could keep up the pace with that guy, don't you?" "Breakfast in bed back at the Holiday Inn, ma'am? Oh — and just what is that room number?"

Interspersed along the route were stations where splits were called out and cups of water or hot cider dispensed to participants. Most were manned by clever teen-agers making fun of the Iowa City water as they tried to hand you some. One station was different. It featured a huge Charles Grassley sign, with slightly smaller Leach and Nussle signs, in front of which hovered a cranky looking Republican lady. We accepted none of her offerings.

By this time we had dusted our "B team," as we cruelly referred to our pals. We headed up a hellish hill, then turned onto College and into the chute. Painful as it is to be cheered on at the end of a race when you're in the back, we bore up under all the adulation, tore off our tags to hand over to race officials, and graciously accepted our carnations. Yes, they hand you a flower at the end of the race. This is fine if you're part of a pack of underachieving, smoking louts strolling out of the chute. If my legs were buckling at the end of a half marathon and somebody handed me a flower, I just might slap them with it. But for a woman who had just added 20 or 25 minutes back onto her 10K time from last year, it was a fine reminder to stop and smell the roses.

Columbus: deserving of historical honor

The savage attacks on Columbus leading up to the quincentenary of his arrival in the New World are the wildly exaggerated and ideologically motivated screams of an anti-Western Marxist movement that is watching its dreams crumble in the face of reality. The evils that Columbus is indeed guilty of are paltry compared to the evil that his new critics have countenanced in this century.

The true motive of this cunning coven of critics is not a wish to set the historical record straight, but a slavish devotion to denigrating all that has happened on this continent in the last 500 years, Western culture and, by association, the United States of America.

American Indian activists claim that Columbus initiated "a five-century feeding frenzy that has left native people in this red quarter of the Mother Earth in a state of emergency," and others accuse him of making Hitler look like a "juvenile delinquent." Columbus's other alleged crimes include "ecocide, genocide, slavery and oppression." Most of the charges against Columbus are so patently ridiculous that they deserve no notice, but a comparison of Columbus to Hitler, whose war extinguished more than 100 million lives and devastated three continents, would be criminal slander if most of America didn't have a good sense of humor.

The lunatic fringe, who have made this anniversary such an issue, blame Columbus for every evil that has occurred in America since his arrival. This is typical of the extreme left's terminal lack of logic, because if Columbus caused the evil that occurred in America, then he was also responsible for the good.

When I consider what the world would be like today without America's powerful leadership and defense of freedom in the face of fascist and communist tyranny, what my life would be like without all the technological and scientific advances made in America, and how my children would live without either of these, I know that for all America's faults and failures, its successes and triumphs are by far the superior.

The Indians Columbus encountered when he arrived in America were not "Native Americans" any more than I am. Their ancestors were Asians who traveled over a land bridge to North America and slowly traveled south until they were dispersed throughout the American continents. As they dispersed across the Americas, they wiped out the truly indigenous cultures. These new Americans were more numerous and technologically advanced, just as the European colonists who later displaced the Indians were.

However, the Asian immigrants annihilated the real "Native Americans" without remorse or reflection. It is a sign of the strength of our culture that we feel pain for the actions of our ancestors and try to preserve the cultures of those we have defeated.

It is common for those who criticize Columbus to assume that the Indians he encountered were living peaceful, idyllic lives, completely at peace with each other, and in perfect harmony with nature. This is simply not true. According to many historians, slavery was common among American Indians and nearly every tribe powerful enough to have them did. In fact, the Caribs that Columbus encountered frequently ate their slaves and also raped their female captives in order to eat their babies. Most of the alleged slaves that Columbus brought with him when he returned to Spain were former captives of the Caribs who were quite pleased, at least, to no longer be on the menu.

Indians, however, are not at the forefront of the movement to destroy Columbus's reputation. Among those most concerned about the consequences of Columbus's discovery of America is Iowa City's own Iowa International Socialist Organization. These are the same people who still support Castro's Cuba, an enlightened socialist country where the government puts everyone infected with HIV in prison, jails and tortures thousands of those with the gall to demand human rights or real democracy, and who, until recently, had 50,000 troops in Africa defending Marxist dictatorships. These alleged defenders of "the people" also tried to deny or downplay the horrendous crimes of Stalin which resulted in a paltry 50 million deaths. Their blindness and hypocrisy in accusing Columbus of any crime is disgusting. Their true goal is to cast doubt upon Western culture and its penultimate achievement, the United States of America.

Columbus was a man with failings, just as all of us have, who made a great contribution to the world. He deserves to be viewed accurately by history as a man of accomplishment, lofty goals and terrible sins. To view him through the eyes of ideologically motivated "scholarship" whose true goals have nothing to do with Columbus or the discovery of America is a travesty. It does a great disservice to those who accept it as history and to the man who is slandered by it. If some people believe that the United States of America is a blight upon this planet and its people, let them come out and honestly debate it. For me, the United States, even with the horrible sins committed by its people and government in the past, is the greatest nation on Earth. Columbus deserves to be honored for his small part in its founding.

ATLANTA — Now everyone knows the name of Toronto's backup catcher, too.

Ed Sprague became the latest in baseball's week of unlikely heroes, hitting a two-run, pinch-homer in the ninth inning Sunday night as the Blue Jays stunned the Atlanta Braves 5-4 to even the World Series at one game each.

On a night when everything looked wrong for the Blue Jays — the Canadian flag was presented upside down and they were the victim of a bad call at home plate — Sprague made it all right. After a one-out walk to pinch-hitter Derek Bell, Sprague, hitting for pitcher Duane Ward, jolted Jeff Reardon's first pitch over the left-field fence.

It was Toronto's first pinch homer since Sept. 20, 1991, when Pat Borders connected, and made Sprague, along with Kirk Gibson, the only players ever to rally their team from a deficit to a victory with a ninth-inning, pinch-homer. It also was just the second homer this season for Sprague, who did not join the Blue Jays for good until late July.

Ward was the winner and Tom Henke pitched the ninth for a save. Toronto relievers held Atlanta hitless for the final 4 1/2 innings.

Iowa takes driver's seat Hawkeyes top No. 3 Penn State, Michigan

Curtis Riggs

The Daily Iowan

If you want something done right, it's best to do it yourself.

Controlling its own fate and winning the Big Ten were preseason goals of the Iowa field hockey team. At Grant Field this weekend the No. 2 team in the nation, now 13-0 on the season, left no doubt about who was in charge by garnering victories over Michigan and No. 3 Penn State.

The Hawkeyes dominated Michigan by the score of 7-1 on Sunday, running their conference record to 6-0 in the process. Friday afternoon they edged out Penn State 3-2 in an action-packed, double-overtime affair.

Jamie Rofrano's three goals against the Wolverines gave the senior her first career hat trick, but the Hawkeye co-captain found as much satisfaction in her one assist.

"It is a team contribution," Rofrano said. "We pull together as a team and finish the play off as a team."

Freshman Ann Pare had two goals on the afternoon, sophomore Mary Kraybill and junior Heather Bryant got her first goal of the season.

"It's really great to finally finish off a score," said Bryant, who was the Hawkeyes' leading scorer last season.

Coach Beth Beglin said that sleep may come a little easier after the way her Hawkeyes roughed up the club from Ann Arbor.

"I'm ecstatic," the fifth-year Iowa coach said. "It was nice to see a truly total team effort."

Beglin was able to clear the Hawkeye bench against the Wolverines in a game that she said is the best game Iowa has played since the opening weekend of the season.

All-American Kristy Gleason, the Hawkeyes' leading scorer this season, got two assists against the Wolverines.

"I would rather get five assists than five goals," the junior forward said. "I love to pass the ball, it is my favorite style of hockey."

Senior sweeper Amy Fowler also had an assist against Michigan.

The Hawkeyes had 28 shots on goal while the Wolverines had only one. Iowa also out-cornered Michigan 13 to zero. As a result, Iowa goalkeepers Andrea Wieland and Rachel Smith didn't have any saves. Starting Michigan goalie Rachael Geisthardt had 13 saves.

The Hawkeyes found themselves in an unusual position on Friday — they were actually behind before they rallied to beat Penn State 3-2.

IOWA-ILLINOIS

Pyrrhic victory for Hawkeyes

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — A two-game winning streak for the first time this season. A third consecutive victory over a heated rival. A 2-1 record and three-way tie for second in the Big Ten after being gridlocked with eight others the week before.

All of those positives were outweighed by a negative in the minds of the Hawkeyes and Coach Hayden Fry.

A dislocated shoulder suffered by Jim Hartlieb has Iowa's starting quarterback possibly out for the season, a realization that threw away any cause for celebrating a 24-14 win over the Fighting Illini Saturday at Memorial Stadium.

As a result, the Hawkeyes will now have to fly on the wings of backup Matt Eyde if they hope to continue climbing the Big Ten ladder.

"Eyde has to start," Fry said of the Michigan State transfer who completed two of four passes for 15 yards while helping Iowa run out the clock, along with the Illini's hopes, in the final 12 minutes.

But even with his team roster starting to read more and more like an intensive care list, Fry was able to maintain a sense of humor.

"As long as the quarterback can remember which huddle to go to, that's a pretty good accomplishment," he said of sending Eyde into the game.

Hartlieb staked Iowa to a 17-0 halftime lead with drives of 79, 76

But the play Hartlieb will remember most may also have been the last of his collegiate career.

'Cornboys' rob Illini of state pride

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — It may be safe to say that Iowa's 24-14 victory over the Fighting Illini did more than significantly damage Illinois' chances for a Florida Citrus Bowl berth. The Hawkeyes managed to put a dagger in the pride of the Illini campus in the process.

Hawks stay perfect with win over ISU

Michael Watkins

The Daily Iowan

Heading into Friday's meeting with visiting Iowa State, the Iowa women's tennis team had never lost to the Cyclones in 24 meetings. Make that 25.

With straight-set wins across the board in both singles and doubles, the Hawkeye netters drubbed their state rivals 9-0 at the UI Recreation Building. The win upped Iowa's record to 3-0 in dual matches this fall and marked the third consecutive outing without the loss of a set.

"The entire team showed me that they were intense and meant business despite our past meetings with them," head coach Micki Schilling said. "Going into the match, I was afraid that they may have been too overconfident. But that certainly didn't show in their play."

The Cyclones were limited to three games or less by Iowa in each set, and according to Iowa State coach Michelle Conlon, this could well be a trend for the Hawkeye netters this season.

"I think that Iowa is very strong this year," said Conlon, a former Iowa player and graduate assistant. "I can see them in the thick of the hunt for a Big Ten Championship this season if everything goes as it should."

"From what I saw, they should beat a lot of teams this season the way that they beat us. I was very impressed."

First off the court for the Hawkeyes was senior team captain Andrea Calvert, who dominated Iowa State's Connie McGough 6-1, 6-0 in less than an hour at No. 2 singles.

Close behind was last year's Big Ten Freshman of the Year and top seed Laura Dvorak, who eliminated the Cyclones' Lesley Lewis 6-1, 6-1.

In her three dual-matches this fall, Dvorak has given up a total of five games, and no more than two games per set.

"The entire team has just stayed so focused," Schilling said. "We just haven't played any loose points all season."

In her match with Iowa State freshman Ann Backhaus, junior college transfer Rhonda Fox jumped out to an early 5-0 lead en route to a 6-1, 6-1 win at the No. 5 spot. Freshman Sasha Boros took the first nine games in coasting to a 6-0, 6-1 win over No. 4 seed Kristin Dahlberg, while Nicki Willette took care of junior Kristin Becker 6-2, 6-2 in the third position.

Iowa sophomore Kim Isaak also had an easy time of it, coming back from a 1-3 deficit in the second set to defeat Julie Bassman 6-2, 6-3.

FAB FIVE — Iowa women's cross country runners (from left) Christine Salsbury, Jennifer Johnson, Tina Stec, Tracy Dahl Morris and Erin Boland took the first five spots in Saturday's Iowa Invitational, which Iowa won easily. See story on page 3B.

HAWKEYES: Dominate Illini 24-14

nois' Dana Howard kneed him behind the shoulder blade, causing him to lay on the turf in pain for several minutes.

Although he was able to walk off the field, Hartlieb did not return, leaving no doubt as to the extent of the injury.

"The doctors knew because they had to pop it back in," Fry said. "Of all the Hawkeyes, Hartlieb's injury may have been hardest on his brother, John."

"He couldn't talk, he was in too much pain," said Hartlieb, a junior linebacker. "He's done everything he's been asked. I just know how hard the kid's worked and I just know he's my brother."

"As for starting next week, Eyde said, 'There's no pressure, but I'm just going to do a lot of praying.' Tight end Alan Cross, who caught the Hawkeyes' last touchdown Saturday, a two-yard bullet from Hartlieb, said the Hawkeyes will have confidence in Eyde when they host Purdue Saturday.

"You've got to rally around the guys and have some confidence in the guys that come in," he said.

In addition to Hartlieb, the Hawkeyes lost yet another defensive lineman Saturday in Jeff Nelson, who limped away during the second half with a knee injury. But Iowa did get senior nose guard Bret Bielema back.

Bielema had arthroscopic knee surgery Oct. 5 after leaving the Michigan game on crutches and was projected to miss the season.

"It was cartilage that was just locked and the doctors told me that it would be 3-5 weeks, so I just tried to come back as quick as I could," Bielema said.

Iowa handled the Illini in nearly every phase of the game. The Hawkeyes earned 22 first downs to Illinois' 12, outrushed them 205 yards to 83, and outgained them 390 total yards to 217.

The Hawkeyes also ran 78 offensive plays to 56 for Illinois, and held the ball 35:18 to the Illini's 24:42 — 10 minutes under their season average.

Hartlieb completed 18 passes in 24 attempts for 170 yards and two touchdowns. He utilized seven different receivers — none of whom was a hobbled Danan Hughes, who failed to catch a pass for the first time in 25 games.

Cross led the receiving corps with eight catches for 95 yards.

The Hawkeye defense was not to be outdone, however, intercepting starting quarterback Jeff Kinney twice in nine attempts, and recovering a pair of fumbles, including one by flanker John Wright after picking up eight yards on fourth-and-8 with 6:32 remaining. Maurea Crain and Matt Hilliard registered the fumble recoveries, while Doug Buch, Scott Plate and Hilliard each picked off an Illini pass.

"We were confident, but Illinois is a good team and they've beaten a lot of good teams," Hilliard said. "You can't take them as pushovers because they'll stuff it down your throat."

"This was a real important victory for our football team," Fry summed up. "We had a lot of key people injured. That's why it's such a meaningful game, that we could suck it up and play with the courage that we did against a very fine Illinois team."

Beglin said that she felt the team showed a great deal of fortitude in coming back from a 2-0 first-half deficit against the Lady Lions.

Gleason agreed. "Today's game was definite learning experience," she said. "We had to step up and play at another level. I think that showed a lot of character."

Wieland was the main reason that the No. 3 team was frustrated on the day.

"We had opportunities to score,"

Penn State coach Charlene Morett said. "But you're looking at beating a keeper who's the best in the country."

Wieland had eight saves, three of which came in overtime.

"I knew we had to keep our poise because Penn State has a good penalty corner offense," the 1990 All-American said. "But our corner defense is pretty tough."

Gleason opened up the scoring for Iowa on an assist from Rofrano and Tiffany Bybel at the 6:22 mark in the first period. Kris Fillat, also an All-American in 1990, tied the score at 2-2 with a penalty shot with 7:04 left in regulation.

Gleason teamed up with Bybel and Rofrano again at the 13:30 mark in the second overtime to win the game.

"The adrenaline was really flowing," Gleason said of her second goal. "I didn't even feel myself hit the ball."

Her second goal was her 83rd score in 60 games as a Hawkeye. She now is five goals shy of Ann-Marie Thomas, who holds the Iowa scoring record with 88 goals in 107 games.

"Scoring records aren't anything," the Amesbury, Mass., native said. "If it happens, it happens."

Gleason has loftier goals. "What I want is to be a national champion," she said.

The Hawkeyes host Michigan State at 3 p.m. Friday and St. Louis at 11 a.m. Sunday. Both games are at Grant Field.

what you may believe, animosity was not the focus of my piece.

Yet that didn't matter to The Daily Iowan's Mike Rudolphi, who used the opportunity to slam, bash and ridicule anyone and everyone at this university.

For one thing, according to Rudolphi, the Illini were not playing the Hawkeyes, but rather the "Cornboys" (a.k.a., "those good-for-nothing, corn-cob-smoking inbreds from that four-letter school, Iowa").

I suppose it is kind of hard to blame Rudolphi for being upset at the last two (make it three) matchups between the Illini and Hawkeyes.

After Iowa stomped a then-No. 5 Illini team 54-28 on its last visit to Champaign two years ago, and followed that up with a 24-21 thriller in Kinnick, the Illini were in danger of suffering their third straight loss to a team other than Michigan for only the second time in history, and the first since 1970.

Rudolphi went so far as to elevate Iowa over the Wolverines on the pedestal of importance for Illinois football, saying, "There won't be another game like this one on our schedule this season. In fact, even the Michigan games of the past aren't as important to Illini fans."

For that reason, Rudolphi pleaded his readers to help sell out Memorial Stadium because in his opinion, "The fan support has got to be there. If we are to sell out any game this season, this has to be the one."

Of course, his wish was granted. But I would think the decent-sized Hawkeye contingent had something to do with the overall attendance of 70,314 (capacity is 69,000), not to mention the two sets of bleachers that had to be added for the game.

It's kind of funny when I try to imagine myself, or any other writer in this state, begging all of you to support your football team and to come watch the games. But apparently, one Illinois newspaper, or at least a part of it, felt compelled to stoop to such proportions.

It's also understandable for Illinois to feel "an intense hatred" towards the Hawkeyes, seeing that neither Northwestern nor Illinois State can give the Illini much of a game (although, if last year is any indication, that may be changing for the Wildcats).

Illinois-Illinois State just isn't the same as Iowa-Iowa State in terms of brotherly love for one another, so Rudolphi evidently needs to create a rivalry of his own.

"We want nothing more than to beat Iowa. Our state pride is at stake," he says. "If we pull a hat trick and lose three in a row to the Cornboys, our state may never be able to recover."

Unfortunately, because Rudolphi is a beat writer for the Illinois volleyball team, not football team, I did not meet him Saturday.

In a case like this, it's a little tougher for me to be unbiased. But after seeing Rudolphi cite Illinois' 118-85 basketball victory over Iowa last year by saying "a 118-point scoring outburst this Saturday would be enough to quell Illini fans' appetites for revenge," all I can say is: 118 points? Better luck next year, Mike.

Unprepared Hawks lose two on the road

Roxanna Pellin
The Daily Iowan

Perhaps if the Hawkeye volleyball team would have gone into this weekend's matches ready to compete, it would not have dropped two conference matches on the road.

Iowa fell to 9-11 in the conference, 1-7 in the conference after losing to Michigan Friday night and Michigan State Saturday night.

"We just didn't start out playing well," freshman Jennifer Welu said. "That's all it's been this season. We let the other team get ahead. Once you dig yourself in a hole, it's hard to get back up."

Junior Courtney Gillis agreed that Iowa just wasn't ready to compete in the first game against Michigan. The Hawkeyes lost to the Wolverines, 15-12, 4-15, 11-15, 15-7, 15-11.

"It was just really close," Gillis said. "We waited before we started to get going."

"After playing for 2½ hours, it came down to three or four points in the end," Coach Linda Schoenstedt said referring to the fifth game.

Senior Michelle Thompson led Iowa with 14 kills and 11 digs against the Wolverines (13-5, 5-2). Gillis and Welu each added nine kills. Welu set a team and personal season high with nine block assists.

"I knew I was blocking well, but it felt good because the whole team hadn't blocked this well for a while," Welu said.

The Wolverines were led by a cast of strong hitters. Four players reached double figures in kills. Senior Hayley Lorenzen led Michigan with 21 kills. Junior Michelle Horrihan, who led the conference in kills going into the match, added 16 against the Hawkeyes

CROSS COUNTRY

Men take Invite with ease

Kris Wiley
The Daily Iowan

Things went the Hawkeyes' way as the Iowa men's cross country team won both the individual and team title at the Iowa Invitational Saturday at Finkbine Golf Course.

In the double-dual meet, Iowa defeated Western Illinois 21-36 and Coe College 17-46. Western Illinois beat Coe 18-41.

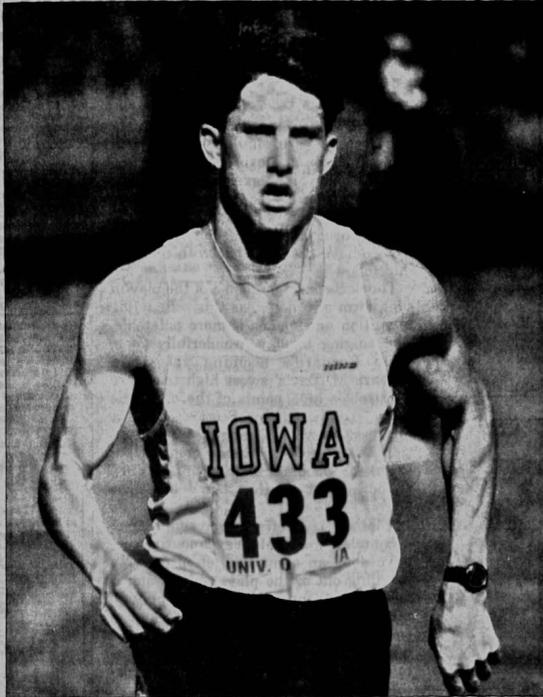

Iowa's Kevin Herd dominated the race and took his fourth individual title in four meets, finishing in a time of 25 minutes, 21 seconds. Teammate Bill Branigan took second place with a time of 26:05. Western Illinois runners Geoff Price and Eric Detmer finished third and fourth, with times of 26:15 and 26:22, respectively. Hawkeye Sean Gale grabbed fifth place (26:34).

Other finishers for the Hawkeyes were Garry Roseman, who finished seventh (26:47), followed by Rod Rerko in eighth (26:57), Marc Roehl in 11th (27:46) and Steve Marshall in 12th (27:51).

Coach Larry Wiczorek said that Iowa went into the meet thinking they could beat the competition and was pleased with the results on the tough Finkbine course.

"I was really happy with the effort of our top five guys," Wiczorek said. "I'm happy with where we're at and I feel really good about us going into the Big Ten meet."

Both Wiczorek and Herd thought that Iowa worked well as a team.

Danny Frazier/The Daily Iowan

Iowa's Kevin Herd won his fourth title in four meets this weekend with a time of 25:21 at the Iowa Invitational Saturday at Finkbine.

"The team hung together," Herd said. "They're learning the pack concept. Team-wise it was an excellent race."

Wiczorek pointed out the consistency and effort of junior transfer Bill Branigan.

"Branigan had a particularly good time," Wiczorek said. "He's been rock solid all season. He seems to be getting stronger and more confident each week. He gives a hundred percent every time."

Wiczorek said that Herd ran very well and that this meet gave him a chance to gear up for the Big Ten race.

"He's coming along so well," Wiczorek said. "On a given day, Kevin is certainly one of the favorites in the Big Ten."

Iowa will have almost two weeks of practice before heading to Champaign, Ill., for the Big Ten Championship on Oct. 31.

"If we keep going like this, we'll be ready for the Big Ten meet," Wiczorek said.

Hawkeyes leaders of the pack

Kris Wiley
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's cross country team dominated the competition and posted a perfect score as they won the Iowa Invitational Saturday at Finkbine Golf Course.

The Hawkeyes posted the first five places, led by senior all-American Tracy Dahl Morris, who won with a time of 18 minutes, 42 seconds. Junior Jennifer Johnson placed second (18:43), followed by sophomore Erin Boland (18:44), junior Tina Stec (18:45) and senior Christine Salsberry (19:01).

Other finishers for the Hawkeyes were freshman Staci Sparks, who finished in ninth place (20:27), junior Martha Vandervoort, who took 13th place (21:27) and senior Jamie Voss, who finished in 23rd place (22:39).

In the team competition, the Hawkeyes scored a perfect 15 to take the title. Augustana placed second with 54 points, followed by Grinnell (66) and Coe (114). Western Illinois did not finish with a team.

The Iowa runners were happy with the showing on their home course.

"We packed," Morris said. "We wanted this to be a group meet with a non-stressful environment and that's what happened. It was kind of fun—we were able to talk to each other while we ran."

"We wanted Christine to be with us, but it was a good training run," team captain Stec said. "It was nice to run on our home course."

While Coach Jerry Hassard was not disappointed with the times, he thought that Iowa could have done better with the team packing.

"Under meet circumstances, our goal was to try to finish five in one group," Hassard said. "We didn't execute that as well."

"Teamwork is an important aspect of racing. This was our chance to draw the fifth runner into the pack. I'd like to see the athletes cultivate the team effort and even emphasize it in some meets."

Hassard said a highlight of the meet was the effort of Vandervoort, who ran a time comparable to that of her finish on the flatter course of Illinois. He also said that Sparks ran a good race.

The Hawkeyes now get a week off before they compete in the Big Ten Championship at Champaign, Ill., Oct. 31.

"We're putting things together that will help us run well at the championship meets," Hassard said.

Stein's 'Mother of Us All' is baffling but beautiful

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

Watching "The Mother of Us All" is a lot like looking through a kaleidoscope. The images, the colors and the patterns are in themselves very beautiful, but any significance detected by a viewer is likely to be a matter of perception. No two people are likely to see the same things.

The UI theater department's realization of "Mother," directed by department Chairman Alan MacVey, is inarguably gorgeous. The lighting design by David Thayer and the whimsical sets by Zeynep Denizci-Bakkal combine to form a non-stop series of rich and haunting images. The direction is competent and clever, and the performances are generally outstanding. Especially notable are Anne Fogarty (starring as Anthony), Adam Whisner (as Jo the Loiterer, a saving grace as the play's sole literalist), and Sean Judge (as the pompous but well-intentioned John Adams). There is no doubt that everyone in this show did their best to make it into a memorable and fascinating spectacle.

Nonetheless, the show's script is a baffling stopping block. Confusing, redundant and nonsensical, it is little more than a word salad, an avant-garde mishmash of hazily linked doggerel. The script mostly consists of phrases brought up, reworked and repeated in cycles. The idea was to give the play a disassociative dreamlike feel, where anything can happen. The problem is, this works all too well — there's almost no basis for reality within the play, no way to translate what the characters are saying into recognizable human events.

For instance, the play opens with a seemingly endless repetition of the lines

"My father's name was Daniel," "Not Daniel in the lion's den!" "Not Daniel!" "Yes, Daniel!" "Daniel and a bear, a bearded Daniel," "My father's name was Daniel." These lines are repeated over and over in various combinations by various characters, first spoken, then sung. As with most of the play, it is not clear what these lines refer to, or what the point is.

Theoretically, "Mother" tells the life story of Susan B. Anthony, the center of a swirling maelstrom of chaotic impressions surrounding the struggle for women's suffrage.

But the self-contradictions and redundancy of the dialogue, which playwright Gertrude Stein renders with minimal punctuation, makes this difficult to follow. A typical line, delivered by John Adams: "Dear Miss Constance Fletcher, it is a great pleasure that I kneel at your feet, but I am Adams, I kneel at the feet of none, not anyone, dear Miss Constance Fletcher dear dear Miss Constance Fletcher I kneel at your feet, you would have ruined my father if I had had one but I have had one and you had ruined him, dear Miss Constance Fletcher if I had not been an Adams I would have kneeled at your feet." It is not unusual to hear such a line several times with minor changes.

Two hours of such lines rapidly becomes a sensory overload. Reading the script, it is possible to find clues, lines that tie together, pieces that work with each other. But people watching the play will have no such luxury, nor time to let one

Other scenes are similarly made clear through action and expression. But overall, the play is confusing, repeatedly deviating from the central theme into a surrealistic no-man's-land where any given character's line is almost guaranteed to have nothing to do with the lines that follow it.

The decision to put some of the play in song form also helps, as this softens the repetition and makes it more palatable. The singing itself is wonderfully done; Robb Barnard's booming voice and Tamara M. Davis' sweet high tones are themselves high points of the play. The score, composed by Scott Smith, is impressively varied, ranging from traditional Americana theme songs like "Yankee Doodle" to careening, dark melodies that fit the show's look perfectly.

"Mother" is an effective presentation of a complex work. MacVey and the cast have done an admirable job of drawing meaning out of the play, and making it accessible to an audience. But only so much can be done to make sense out of something this surrealistic, and it is quite probable that most audience members still won't get it. They'll get something — if nothing else, an appreciation for the play's design and costumes — but whether that something is actually there, or only a matter of each person's own associations and interpretations, is impossible to say.

"The Mother of Us All" plays in Mabie Theatre in the UI Theater Building at 8 p.m. Oct. 21-24, and at 3 p.m. Oct. 25. Tickets are $11.50 ($5 for UI students, seniors and those under 18) and are available at the Hancher Box Office, 335-1160, or in the Theater Building Lobby before showtimes.

series of metaphors and images sink in before the next one begins.

Wherever it is possible to discern shapes and shadows of meaning within the play, it is mostly due to the direction and acting rather than clarity of writing. The scene where pig-snouted men surround a staggering Anthony in a bitter, snowy landscape and fling money at her, chanting, "We are the chorus of the VIP, very important persons to everyone who can hear and see" is clear enough in its implications of chauvinism and privilege.

ions surrounding the struggle for women's suffrage.

But the self-contradictions and redundancy of the dialogue, which playwright Gertrude Stein renders with minimal punctuation, makes this difficult to follow. A typical line, delivered by John Adams: "Dear Miss Constance Fletcher, it is a great pleasure that I kneel at your feet, but I am Adams, I kneel at the feet of none, not anyone, dear Miss Constance Fletcher dear dear Miss Constance Fletcher I kneel at your feet, you would

HANCHER

Channing, Moreno quite a dynamic duo

Michelle-Therese Forcier
The Daily Iowan

Two stars illuminated Iowa City Friday and Saturday night at Hancher Auditorium.

Carol Channing and Rita Moreno delighted audiences with their performance, "Two Ladies of Broadway," an evening featuring the pair dancing, telling anecdotes, and singing some of their well-known songs.

Moreno began the evening poised on a piano. She sang a larger-than-life rendition of "Strike up the Band," to which the audience responded with thunderous applause. Moreno used the short time between numbers to talk with the audience, telling stories from her past as well as little known tidbits of information about certain songs. "One of the meanest words in the theater is flop because it diminishes the efforts of the many people who worked so hard." In this instance she was talking about the musical "Dra't the Cat" and the song she chose to sing from it, "He touched me." Moreno said this song depicted the essence of first love, but it was Moreno the audience loved as she performed. The sound of her voice reverberating throughout the auditorium gave the audience chills.

Not forgetting she is also a comedienne, Moreno referred to herself in costume as a "demented telephone operator at a rhinestone convention," and told us a story about her mother and her eternal struggle with the English language. "Saturday was cleanup day at my house, but ooh noo, my mother couldn't say that, she always used to say, 'It's Saturday, that means it's time to clean the shits.' One day, my mother was walking around the apartment fanning herself and my friend Angela was over. Suddenly my mother stopped and said, 'All right, I'll tell you what we've got to do, we've got to pack a peeknic an go to da bitch!'"

Moreno finally performed the role she is perhaps best known for, her portrayal of Anita in the movie "West Side Story." She sang and danced while the audience oohed and aahed. Her performance of "America" just gets better over the years. She hypnotized the audience with movements that show what Broadway is all about.

The man in the tenth row didn't need the binoculars he'd brought. Channing entered in a shocking red gown. She enthralled the audience with performances from "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" and kept them laughing with tales such as "Callypso Pete." The songs in themselves were amusing, but Channing brought energy and life to each one and made them exclusively hers.

As she changed quickly behind one of her screens, she told us about her favorite time period, the '20s. She came out as "Thoroughly Modern Millie" and looked like a sweet young thing. Her songs ranged from "Hello Dolly" to "Before the Parade Passes By" to the meatier "You gotta' see mama every night or you don't see mama at all" at the end of which, she lifted her skirt and mooned the audience (with her panties intact, of course).

She was every inch the comedienne and lady her fans expected her to be. Putting on her tap shoes, she explained how to achieve her look: "I wear four pairs (of eyelashes) on top and three on the bottom, then I put mascara on top of that and that's how I get that natural look."

One of the most magnificent moments in the production came when she donned a huge feather hat and became Dolly Gallagher, a move which proved that Carol Channing is definitely an original.

Moreno joined her at last and the two sang "Bosom Buddies," a perfect end to an exquisite show. As they sang "Who else but a bosom buddy would tell ya how rotten ya are," an unwelcome curtain ended the show, but not without the audience first giving the stars a standing ovation.

Was it brighter in Iowa City over the weekend? Yes, it was, and the skies will continue to shimmer with the reflection of these "Two Ladies of Broadway," Rita Moreno and Carol Channing.

Betsy Kreder/Special to The Daily Iowan

William Tolliver — DI writer Betsy Kreder recently took a jaunt to the grand ol' city of New Orleans. She decided to mix business with pleasure and visited the Galerie Royale, located one block away from the famous Bourbon Street. The artist, William Tolliver, is a self-taught colorist and is "one of the leading African-American artists in the United States." His works hang on the walls of such famed persons as Shari Belafonte and Kareem Abdul-Jabaar. And just in case you're interested in acquiring one of your own, serigraphs start at $1,400 and oil paintings peak at $40,000.
