Iowa teen-ager injured in accident

An Iowa City teen and his motorcycle struck an automobile Tuesday afternoon in an accident still under investigation, according to the Iowa City Police Department.

Kenneth D. Snow, 18, of 215 Amhurst St., was southbound on Morningside Drive when he struck a vehicle operated by Mary Irene Baxter, 73, of 3345 Hanover Court.

Another parked vehicle was also struck, according to the ICPD.

Snow sustained injuries and was taken to UI Hospitals and Clinics for treatment. His condition was unknown.

Mideast peace talks to resume Wednesday

WASHINGTON (AP) — The quest for Mideast peace resumes Wednesday with Israel and the Arabs keeping an eye on U.S. presidential elections that could shape the future of their negotiations, Mideast experts said Tuesday.

A victory by Democrat Bill Clinton, and his certain stress on economic recovery over foreign affairs, could spur the parties to strive for progress in the waning months of the Bush administration, said Martin Indyk of the Washington Institute For Near East Policy.

Guam struck by 2nd typhoon in 2 months

AGANA, Guam (AP) — The second typhoon in less than two months began hitting Guam with strong wind and rain early Wednesday. Schools, businesses and government offices were closed and many residents were in shelters.

Typhoon Brian, with wind gusting to 145 mph, was expected to pass over the southern tip of the island.

By 9 a.m. Wednesday (7 p.m. EDT Tuesday), villagers on the southern end of the island were reporting that they couldn't see across the street because of wind-blown rain.

German Greens founder shot dead by lover

BONN, Germany (AP) — Petra Kelly, founder of Germany's Greens party and once a leading counterculture figure, was slain by her longtime lover who then used his .38-caliber derringer to kill himself, police said Tuesday.

The Greens party started out as an amalgam of leftist fringe groups battling police at U.S. military bases in the early 1980s. At her death, much of Kelly's ecological platform had been embraced by mainstream parties throughout Europe.

The decomposing bodies of Kelly and her 69-year-old companion — former Gen. Gert Bastian, who quit the army to join the peace movement — were found in their house Monday night.

Report: Degrees taking longer than 4 years

Jon Yates

The Daily Iowan

A majority of UI students take more than four years to graduate and a significant number do not graduate at all, according to a report by the Iowa state Board of Regents.

The report, which will be presented at today's board meeting, shows that only 30 percent of all UI students who entered in 1985 earned their degree within four years. Roughly one-third of those entering the UI in 1985 earned no degree, the report shows.

UI senior Dave Masino, who said he will take five years to graduate because he changed his major, believes the notion of the four-year degree is largely a myth.

"There's just so much pressure on college students these days," he said. "Many college students have to work to get through school, and I think the curriculum is getting tougher."

Josh Prieskorn, also a UI senior, said he too, will take five years to graduate due to a change of major and some academic problems his freshman year.

"I had a little trouble my first semester," he said. "But if I had stuck with my original major, I could have done it in four years."

James Linberg, associate dean for the College of Liberal Arts, said that several decades ago graduating in four years was much more common, but today it is often difficult.

"I think the reality of a four-year degree has not been true for a long time and it is not true for a large number of institutions," he said. "That doesn't mean the UI can't do more to help students graduate in four years."

According to a 1989 report by Peat Marwick, the trend toward taking longer than four years to obtain a bachelor's degree is national in scope. The report noted that students are registering for fewer courses per semester, are dropping more courses, and are devoting more hours to employment.

The report also cited rising costs and reduced financial aid as factors in the low percentage of students graduating in four years.

UI senior John Rostek said that he plans to graduate in four years. Rostek said that participating in the Unified Program helped him structure his course load so that it was fairly easy to graduate in four years.

Taking 12 hours of summer classes helped too, he said.

"I honestly think you have to take summer classes if you really want to be sure you can do it," he said. "I was lucky that I didn't have to work full time during the summer."

While the number of students graduating within four years is decreasing, the number of students actually earning a degree at the UI is increasing, the regents' report indicates.

According to the report, 60 percent of the freshmen class entering the UI in 1985 have earned a degree at the UI, with an additional 7 percent earning degrees at other schools. These figures are representative of a 25-year trend in which the number of students entering and then graduating from the UI has risen almost 20 percent.

Of those students entering the UI in 1960, only 42 percent earned a degree at the UI.

The number of students who entered the UI in 1985 and went on to earn a degree is 11 percent greater than the national average for universities and colleges.

UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Peter Nathan said the numbers reflect better preparation on the part of UI students and hard work on the part of UI faculty.

"We're moving in the right direction," Nathan said. See DEGREES, Page 8A

Photos may give clues to MIAs' fate

Jim Drinkard

WASHINGTON — U.S. officials on a weekend trip to Vietnam gained access to a cache of secret information, including thousands of photographs, that could shed light on the fate of Americans missing in action in the Vietnam War, government sources said Tuesday.

"There's a good chance we'll get a lot of cases solved — dozens, hundreds maybe," said one Defense Department official, like others speaking only on the condition of anonymity.

One source said the photographs are all of dead servicemen.

Another official said intelligence personnel are "working night and day" to glean clues to what became of U.S. servicemen believed captured or killed.

If positive identifications are made, families of the missing men will be notified first, the officials said. President Bush is to be briefed on the results Thursday. See MIAs, Page 8A

COUNSELING SERVICES PROVIDED

UI students grieve over recent death of friend

Brad Hahn

The Daily Iowan

Counseling programs have begun for friends of UI freshman Anita Verma, who died at Mercy Hospital late Sunday night. Her exact cause of death is still unknown.

The Iowa City Police Department received an emergency call around 9 p.m. regarding a person in need of assistance at 5502 Daum Residence Hall. The UI Department of Public Safety was contacted at 9:01 p.m. by the ICPD with the mention of an asthma attack. An ambulance was called and Verma was rushed to Mercy Hospital.

The exact time of her death is unknown, but it was prior to 10:30 p.m., said Tom Bauer of University Relations.

The reason for the emergency call was an asthma attack, but the exact cause of death is pending the report by Johnson County Medical Examiner T.T. Bozek.

Verma will be greatly missed by friends, said UI freshman Megan Walsh, Verma's pledge sister.

"She was caring and outgoing," Walsh said. "She was one of the nicest people in our pledge class — always smiling and always happy."

In an effort to help friends deal with the loss, UI Counseling Services has conducted a series of debriefings. A representative met Monday with members of Delta Delta Delta, Verma's sorority. There were also meetings Tuesday with those who lived on Verma's floor in Daum and members of her rhetoric class.

The debriefings have a number of aspects to them, the director of UI Counseling Services, Gerald Stone, said. Counselors first give factual information of exactly what occurred. Then different reactions to the tragedy are discussed, such as numbness, high arousal and grief. Symptoms such as lack of sleep and eating are then addressed. Finally, ways of coping are suggested. Resources are also mentioned for those who would like additional assistance.

Stone said the debriefings allow people to begin to come to grips with their feelings.

"The program is for members to say how they're doing and how

GEARING UP FOR NOV. 3

Organizers hope for big turnout at Smeal's speech on ERA

Timothy Connors

The Daily Iowan

Leaflets on the Pentacrest, leaflets in the mail, posters in practically every campus building. Even posters in restroom stalls. They all focus on tonight's speech by feminist leader Eleanor Smeal.

She will speak to an audience that sponsors hope will fill the 800-person capacity of the Union Ballroom tonight at 8.

"We're ferociously pursuing a full attendance," said Students for Equality organizer duVergne Gaines. "We've been a poster-and-leafleting machine."

Smeal's speech, "The Year of the Woman: Fighting for Equality," will analyze the campaign for the Equal Rights Amendment, the impact of the amendment on equal rights, and the tactics of amendment opponents.

In light of the huge number of women running for office this year, Smeal said she will also speak on "how important 1992 is in breaking the political glass ceiling in government."

For a long time, Smeal said, women have been able to see high-level government positions, but been unable to reach them. "It's only taken us 200 years," she added.

Her speech will also focus on abortion rights as part of her analysis of the campaign of the ERA opposition.

"What the opposition makes us do is fight for a right we already have," she said.

Smeal, who lives in Washington, D.C., is near the end of a two-week ERA campaign trip through Iowa. She has spoken on the campuses of Iowa State University, University of Northern Iowa, Simpson College, Cornell College and Drake University.

"We hope it encourages more students to vote," Smeal said. "This affects their entire future."

Smeal is currently president of both the Feminist Majority Foundation, concerned with exposing opponents of women's equality, and the Fund for the Feminist Majority, which seeks to inspire women to assume leadership roles.

Before assuming her two current presidencies, she served three two-year terms as president of the National Organization for Women. She remains the national advisory chairwoman for the organization.

The Washington Post called her 1985 election to the NOW presidency "an important milestone in the feminist movement's continuing debate over its tactics and direction."

In her first tenure as NOW president, from 1977-1982, the organization's membership grew from 35,000 to 220,000. Its annual budget jumped from $500,000 to $10 million. Within the same period, NOW increased its number of national, state and local political-action committees from one to 81.

Smeal received two presidential commissions from President Jimmy Carter. She was named the fourth most influential woman in the United States by World Almanac in 1983 and one of the "50 Faces for America's Future" by Time magazine.

Sponsors of the speech include Students for Equality, the Women's Resource and Action Center, the Organization for Women Law Students and Staff, and Action For Abortion Rights.

"When you think equal rights, you think Eleanor Smeal," commented Gaines.

Women's Resource and Action Center Director Papusa Molina said Smeal's speech is important because "I think it's important to raise the question why women need to be explicitly written into the Iowa Constitution."

CZECHOSLOVAKIANS VISIT CAMPUS

Educators tour UI, like what they see

Jude Sunderbruch
The Daily Iowan

Representing a country that might not exist a year from now, 10 Czechoslovakian educators spent the last three days touring the UI receiving detailed briefings about its finances and operations.

The educators are university administrators from throughout Czechoslovakia who applied to participate in the program through the U.S. State Department.

According to Tom Baldrige, director of the Council for International Visitors to Iowa City, or CIVIC, the tour was part of a U.S. Information Agency program to foster good will and understanding between different nations.

"They're looking to see how American universities, large and small, public and private, operate," he said.

The 31-day trip began in Washington, D.C., and continued on to

Danny Frazier/The Daily Iowan

A group of Czechoslovakian educators eat lunch in Burge Hall. They are touring the UI and other universities around the country as part of a federally funded international visitors program.

Pittsburg, Pa., and Boston, Mass., before coming to Iowa City. Today, the group leaves for Portland, Ore. They will also visit San Francisco, Calif., and Raleigh, N.C. before ending their visit to the United States in New York.

The central European nation the administrators hail from was one of the first to gain its independence through peaceful methods during the "velvet revolution" of 1989, which eventually swept through most of the satellite states of the Soviet Union.

Today, Czechoslovakia is veering toward a split into independent Czech and Slovak nations at a breakneck pace. While some are surprised by the proposed fracture, progress will continue toward catching up with other Western nations whether the country stays together or not, members of the group said.

"We need time. After 10 years of freedom and peace in Europe we will be even, even in technology," said Jiri Holenda, rector of the University of West Bohemia.

Since arriving on Sunday, the group has visited a local Czechoslovakian church, grilled steaks at a West Branch restaurant, taken a Cambus tour of the UI, and received numerous briefings from university officials about how the UI operates.

Many of the Czechoslovakians had warm words for the UI and Iowa City.

"I prefer such a lovely place," said Holenda. "This is a town for people, not for cars."

There are many differences between how American and Czechoslovakian universities operate, noted Tomáš Hrbek, head of the Rector's Office at Palacky University.

"In Czechoslovakia all the universities are governed by the government Ministry of Education and we have no private funds," he said. "The system here is quite different."

'92 ELECTION DISCUSSED

Scholar notes absence of race issue in campaigns

Jude Sunderbruch
The Daily Iowan

As the 1992 election season comes to a close, noted scholar David Sears reflected, in an address on the UI campus Tuesday, that it has passed with nary a word about race relations.

Sears, a professor of political science and psychology at the University of California-Los Angeles, noted that today racism is being complemented by conservative political views on discrimination and civil rights. As a result, he said, racism is sometimes obscured under the cloak of politically correct speech.

"It's wrong to say old-fashioned racism has completely disappeared," he said.

In his speech, Sears said that while much progress has been made in overcoming the most basic forms of racism, many whites still judge blacks as a group on the basis of a few individual's actions.

"Threats to the group rather than the individual may be important," he said, adding that many whites unfairly view all of black society on the basis of the "black underclass."

Sears contrasted the Willie Horton episode with this year's election,

"It's wrong to say old-fashioned racism has completely disappeared."

David Sears, UCLA professor focusing on the general attitudes of the electorate, as well as more unique political phenomena, such as the candidacies of Pat Buchanan and David Duke.

While many may successfully and justifiably label David Duke a racist, Sears explained, it is harder to convince the majority of Americans that conservative Republican Sen. Jesse Helms is racist because of his opposition to some civil rights and affirmative action legislation.

"Perhaps the Pat Buchanan candidacy of 1992 had some of these elements," he said.

After his remarks, Sears took several questions from the audience. In response to one woman's question about relations between African-Americans and Hispanics in Los Angeles, Calif., Sears recalled the tensions between Koreans, Hispanics and African-Americans during the riots there this spring. He said that while many factors have yet to be played out, relations between the groups are quite bad in many respects.

"It's complicated by the fact that the Latinos at all are not a homogenous group," he said.

However, because Hispanics have been integrating themselves into the community for a long time, they are in many respects better positioned than African-Americans to make the transition to positions of power in Southern California, Sears said.

"There's no question the blacks are going to lose politically," he said, pointing out that large numbers of Hispanics have already begun winning elections there.

In his closing remarks, Sears said that despite all the problems readily apparent today in crosscultural affairs, things are much better than they once were.

"There has, in my view, been real progress in race relations," he said.

TASK FORCE REPORT PRESENTED

Council members agree to focus on problem of faculty spouses' employment difficulties

Brad Hahn
The Daily Iowan

Keeping in mind that "time is crucial," the UI Faculty Council endorsed the main thrust of the Task Force Report on Spouses and Partners at Tuesday's meeting in the Union.

The report, which addresses limited employment opportunities of the spouses and partners of UI faculty members, was endorsed after over an hour of discussion by the council.

Task Force Committee Chairman George Nickelsburg made a brief presentation regarding the report and then answered questions. He emphasized that taking action on the report in a reasonable amount of time is crucial.

"It's time to move and time to move expeditiously," Nickelsburg said. "How the university chooses to act or not act will be a litmus test of the UI's sincerity towards this issue. . . . The time has come to turn talk into actions."

Although there was disagreement over specifics in the report, the vote in recommending the general idea was unanimous.

In other business, Assistant to the Dean of Students Thomas Baker briefly presented his report on a survey of faculty perceptions of drug use among students.

The report, done in cooperation with student health, had mixed results, according to Baker.

He said he was impressed that most faculty members understood that there is a significant percentage of students who abuse drugs, including alcohol.

But Baker also found a couple of misconceptions: Most faculty members believe they can identify someone with a problem, and most indicated they don't know what services the university provides to assist with substance-abuse problems.

Vice President of Academic Affairs Peter Nathan said that while the drug-abuse problem at the UI isn't as large as at many universities, alcohol abuse is above average.

"Alcohol abuse here is significantly higher than at many comparable universities," Nathan said. "We have a big problem and I don't know how many students and faculty realize this."

Also at the meeting, the council discussed council President Ed Lawler's report regarding fee shifting. The report addressed past disagreement on the issue between the council and UI President Hunter Rawlings.

The issue revolves around the division of legal fees if and when a faculty member wins a grievance regarding tenure, promotion or reappointment.

The council will decide what measures to take at their Nov. 3 meeting.

Air in Clinton school will be monitored

Associated Press

CLINTON, Iowa — No specific cause was found for a flu-like illness that hit students and faculty at Longfellow Elementary School, but steps are being taken to monitor air quality in the building, officials said.

Officials found no toxic gases, no problems with the boiler or hot water heaters, no problems with cleaning supplies, science experiments or other chemicals or foreign substances.

Ben Trochil, superintendent of schools, said the school district staff, with the assistance of the Interstate Power Co., Clinton Fire Department, Shive-Hattery Engineers and Architects and Total Maintenance Inc., spent Friday afternoon, Saturday and Monday looking through the Longfellow building.

Students returned to classes Tuesday after staying home Monday. Students and teachers in three second-floor rooms at the school had complained of flu-like symptoms Friday.

TIMO'S OWNER RE

2 former file wage

Chris Pothoven
The Daily Iowan

Although Timo's Rock 'N' Roll Diner, 10 S. Clinton St., has been closed for two weeks, most employees of the restaurant still have received their final paychecks.

At least two former employees of Timo's have filed wage-claim complaints with the Division of Labor Services in an attempt to receive their wages.

Christine Brebes, a University of Northern Iowa sophomore who worked as a waitress at Timo's from mid-May to mid-August, and Toby Eckholt, an Iowa City resident who was a waiter from August to October, have both filed wage-claim forms for around $1,000 in unpaid wages.

"It's a lot of money to me. That's the biggest problem," Eckholt said. "It hits those of us who can't afford to lose that kind of money."

The cases are "currently under investigation," according to Matt Day, an attorney for the labor commissioner who is handling Brebes' claim. Timo's Owner Warren Cohen has until Oct. 22 to contact the Division of Labor regarding information relevant to the matter.

According to Day, the Division of Labor Services can investigate a claim under the Iowa Wage Payment Collection Law. As part of this law, an employer is required to pay all wages owed to its employees by the next regular pay period after termination.

When the restaurant closed October 15, employees were told to pick up their paychecks during the following week. Instead of receiving their checks, however, many were told to contact Cohen's lawyer, Will Titus.

According to Clay Chase, a former waiter and cook who worked at Timo's from its opening last year until the closing, Titus informed them that it was unlikely employees would receive their checks.

TIMO'S OWNER RENEGES ON PAYCHECKS

2 former employees file wage complaints

Chris Pothoven
The Daily Iowan

Although Timo's Rock 'N' Roll Diner, 10 S. Clinton St., has been closed for two weeks, most employees of the restaurant still have not received their final paychecks.

At least two former employees of Timo's have filed wage-claim complaints with the Division of Labor of the Iowa Department of Employment Services in an attempt to receive their wages.

Christine Brebes, a University of Northern Iowa sophomore who worked as a waitress at Timo's from mid-May to mid-August, and Toby Eckholt, an Iowa City resident who was a waiter from August to October, have both filed wage-claim forms for around $200 in unpaid wages.

"It's a lot of money to me. That's the biggest problem," Eckholt said. "It hits those of us who can't afford to lose that kind of money."

The cases are "currently under investigation," according to Marta Day, an attorney for the labor commissioner who is handling the Brebes claim. Timo's Owner Warren Cohen has until Oct. 22 to contact the Division of Labor regarding information relevant to the matter.

According to Day, the Division of Labor Services can investigate the claim under the Iowa Wage Payment Collection Law. As part of this law, an employer is required to pay all wages owed to its employees by the next regular payday after termination.

When the restaurant closed Oct. 3, employees were told to pick up their paychecks during the following week. Instead of receiving their checks, however, many were told to contact Cohen's lawyer, William Titus.

According to Clay Chase, a former waiter and cook who worked at Timo's from its opening last year to the closing, Titus informed him that it was unlikely employees would receive their checks.

"He told me, 'Well, he owes a lot of money, so you probably won't be getting paid ever,'" Chase said, adding that Timo's still owes him about $200.

In a phone conversation, Cohen said he had no comment on the matter. Titus could not be reached.

Many workers also received an open letter to all employees of the Warren Co., dated Oct. 5, in which Titus discussed the restaurant's closing and the unpaid wages.

"Several inquiries have been made to Warren and to myself regarding outstanding payroll," he wrote. "I wish that I could give all of you a positive answer."

According to the letter, Cohen and the Warren Co. lost approximately $500,000 while operating Timo's.

"There was no concern about anything. There was a lot of mismanagement there,"

Krista Laursen, former waitress at Timo's

"Warren and I feel that employees should be first compensated out of any available funds. . . Unfortunately, we were not able to make a sale of the business, leasehold improvement, equipment, etc. This will greatly reduce the funds available," Titus wrote.

The letter also said that the landlord forced the restaurant to close.

However, Chris Doughty, former manager at Timo's, said the business closed because Cohen was tired of the way it was treated by customers.

"Warren was sick of people stealing pictures off the wall and taking other things," he said. "The college students in the downtown area didn't have any respect for the business."

Although he said financial problems did not cause Cohen to close down Timo's, he said the restaurant is now under Chapter 11 bankruptcy.

Several employees said Timo's had apparently been suffering financial and mismanagement problems for several months.

According to Brebes, employees were almost always paid at least two or three days late during the three months she worked there.

"We had to totally fight to get our checks and ask him for them every day," she said.

Cohen began paying employees in cash toward the end, said Chase, because the checks were bouncing. Employees were given little or no record of the hours worked or taxes taken out of their pay, he said.

Deliveries were often paid for in cash from that day's earnings, Eckholt said, adding that once he was denied his already late pay when a distributor came.

"Any business should not have to count on our wages to pay its debts," he said.

"There was no concern about anything. There was a lot of mismanagement there," said Krista Laursen, a former waitress who is still owed at least $100. "All around, everything was pretty messed up."

Doughty disagreed. "We were definitely profitable for a while," he said. "Cohen might have let things slip at the end after he decided to close the place, but we were profitable."

Eckholt said that several of the former employees had originally planned to take some sort of legal action, but to his knowledge only he and Brebes have actually done so.

"That's disappointing. The employer is counting on that," he said.

Besides the wage-claim complaint, Eckholt is considering taking the case to small-claims court, he said.

"I'd rather risk the court fee than just to let it go and say, 'Oh, well, it's only $200. I'll just get another job,'" he said. "I have faith the system will back me up on this."

GERMAN BUNDESBANK CONTROL AT ISSUE

Britain resists common currency

Analysts say fear of losing sovereignty caused Britain to pull out of the European Monetary System.

Yokota Masuo
The Daily Iowan

Editor's Note: This is the second of a three-part series focusing on the Maastricht Treaty.

While Britain struggles to brake the train of European unity, Germany is endeavoring to accelerate it as a major driving force. The two opposing powers threaten to tear the dream of a united Europe into pieces.

The name-calling between the two countries peaked when Britain decided to withdraw from the European Monetary System on Sept. 16. "The marriage wasn't even consummated — and suddenly they were talking divorce," Newsweek reported.

Although the German government blamed the pound's severe devaluation for Britain's poor economic performances in recent years, British politicians blamed it on high interest rates maintained by the German Bundesbank, the country's central bank, which is well-known for its tight monetary policies.

Britain's temporary withdrawal from the EMS was upsetting because the system is viewed as an essential lead-in to a single European currency system. The country's dropout may have suggested that Europe wasn't ready for currency unification.

Paul Roth, an MBA student from Germany, said his country has been unjustly charged with the monetary crisis in Europe.

The crisis was triggered by one of the deepest recessions in Britain since 1930s, he said.

"It's absolutely ridiculous to blame the Bundesbank for the mistakes that aren't their faults," Roth said. "It's easier for British politicians to blame the Bundesbank instead of their own mistakes they have made in the past 10 or 15 years."

He stressed that Germany is not the only beneficiary of the Maastricht Treaty.

"There are lots of countries which are going to benefit more than Germany," he said. "Especially less-developed countries have a higher potential for creation and increase of wealth from the treaty."

UI British history Professor Jeffrey Cox disagreed, saying that Britain greatly fears losing sovereignty and is somewhat hostile toward Germany.

"The problem is the shifting of its control over the currency from the Bank of England to the Bundesbank," he said. "There is also fear that Germany will use the strength inside the European Community to their advantage and to the disadvantage of Britain."

"It's absolutely ridiculous to blame the Bundesbank for the mistakes . . ."

Paul Roth, UI student

Cox said the fear stems from the fact that the German economy is larger and stronger than the British one.

This fear appears to be reasonable to some extent. Some of the economic policies in the Maastricht Treaty sound similar to those of Germany.

"They (the economic policies of the Member States) will be aiming to create an environment of low inflation, economic growth, control of government debt, stable currency and low interest rates," the treaty reads.

"Of course they sound like German monetary policies," said Neville Keery, a senior information professional with EC Commission. "Everybody admires German monetary policies, which have enabled Germany to keep inflation low while growing."

Keery said one purpose of the treaty is to encourage other states to follow the successful example of Germany.

Raymond Riezman, a UI professor of international economics, pointed out that the different courses of the two economies will be a big hurdle for unity.

"Appropriate policies for different countries are tremendously different," he said. "If they have to choose the same currency, they have to choose the same economic course, and I don't see how they're going to resolve the differences."

Riezman thinks Britain will not be the only country in the EC to be reluctant to surrender their autonomous fiscal monetary policies.

"The British have been more realistic about what the problems concerning one currency system are," he added.

However, the EC countries have already experienced a problem at the onset of the European Community.

Britain rejected terms of the 1957 Treaty of Rome, which developed into today's EC. When impressed by the EC's initial success, it finally applied for membership four years later. It was not until 1973 that Britain was finally admitted into the community.

John Conybeare, a UI professor of international politics, said Britain is now doing the same thing as when it refused to join the EC at the beginning of its foundation.

"What the British are saying is that 'we're not going to sacrifice our sovereignty before finding out the results of the monetary union,'" he said.

Conybeare said Germany and France would lead the treaty and create a single currency between themselves. Whether Britain and other countries hitch on to the train of a united Europe depends on several factors, such as inflation rates in their countries and outcome of the two countries.

"It's possible for England to join the monetary union if they can keep their inflation as low as Germany and France," he said.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS MEET

Proposals on farm-building regulations discussed

Victoria Forlini
 The Daily Iowan

Whether or not farmers should be allowed to have feed buildings for livestock on small amounts of property was discussed at the Johnson County Board of Supervisors meeting Tuesday.

The issue was brought to the board by Ron Pennington who came to ask questions about regulations on behalf of an anonymous farmer.

Current Johnson County zoning laws say if the prospective area is less than 40 acres, construction cannot be permitted.

A major point debated by the supervisors was how to help and promote family farmers by allowing more livestock while trying to keep large investment groups off Iowa farmland.

"We have to set up priorities and fight for the farmer," said Supervisor Stephen Lacina. "We can't close the door on him."

In the past, the supervisors have tried to create an ordinance to allow building on privately owned land under 40 acres.

Supervisor Betty Ockenfels said the problem with that is the board

"can't write an ordinance to help everyone," and there could be loopholes or inadvertent exclusions.

Supervisor Dick Myers proposed making such an ordinance conditional. The land would be evaluated at specific time intervals to make sure it is within established guidelines.

Myers said if building is allowed on smaller parcels of land it will "destroy the livestock market for small farmers." But he also does not want to financially hurt family farms.

The question of who actually owns the livestock, farmers or investors, was also brought up. Ockenfels said there is "a concern for keeping the corporations out, but finding a happy medium."

Two supervisors will work with the zoning administration to attempt to draw up an ordinance to clarify the situation.

Grad student tries to alter perceptions of Africa

A brief background on my home country, Uganda is appropriate at this point.

Uganda is a country blessed with rich soil minerals, beautiful climate all year round and a population with a rich heritage. It is one of the few countries where the people and the local languages have continued to exist side by side. There is no one language that dominates the others. Uganda's population is estimated to be 17 million people, 85 percent of whom live in rural areas. The second largest lake in the world occupies the southern border of Uganda. And the famous Nile river flows from Lake Victoria to the north through Uganda.

Unlike most international students, I have had the opportunity of traveling extensively in this country speaking to different groups of people, young and old. One Sunday morning in 1987, I was scheduled to address a church congregation in a small town in Iowa. Before doing so I was asked to talk to preschool children from 3 to 5 years old.

While I was preparing to show them a set of slides from my home country, one little girl, who was 5 years old, raised her hand and asked me, "How did you get the clothes you are wearing?" I was puzzled by the question and so I asked the little girl, "Why?" She replied, "My mom told me that in Africa people do not have clothes, plates, cups or houses." First I made a joke and said that "they could not let me on the plane without clothes; that is why I bought them. I bought them at the airport."

I went on to ask the little girl whether her mother was in the audience. Fortunately she said yes, and I took this opportunity to address the children and their parents on the misconception that people in this country have about peoples of Africa. Then later in the forum for adults I showed slides starting with the capital city. Just to test how imaginative people are I asked them to tell me the name of the city on the screen. One individual said, "That is Des Moines." Another one said, "Cedar Rapids." When I told them that was the capital city of my country, they did not believe me because they had never seen any African country with tall buildings. They all thought that no African country has a city like Des Moines or even bigger than that.

Most people do not know that if one was to be parachuted into any of the African cities at night there would be no difference between them and the cities in this country. When you are in this country you have to be able to withstand ignorance. For example, when I call the international operator for assistance, and I tell them the country I am trying to call, they will usually ask me whether that is a country or a person. I bring this up because I would expect people like the international telephone operators to be able to at least know that Burundi, Uganda, Burkina Faso, the Gambia or Zambia are countries and not persons, as some of them tell me.

One of the most difficult questions I have not been able to answer usually comes from graduate students when they ask me questions like "what language do Africans speak?" This kind of question throws me off balance especially when it is asked by a graduate student. A lot of people in this country do not understand that Africa is a continent with over 50 sovereign states just like North America, South America or Europe, which are continents with different states.

Each country in Africa has its own president. Africa is blessed with a diversity of peoples who have different cultures and languages. Some countries have more than 50 languages. Uganda, for example, has approximately 17 million people who speak more than 40 distinct languages. No more than three languages communicate with each other. Communication between peoples with different languages is virtually impossible without using another language like English, French or Swahili, all of which are foreign to the continent, although some people claim that Swahili is an indigenous African language. This is not an issue today.

On the ignorance of some university students, I was once asked this question: "Do people in Africa really live in trees?" I answered the question with another question: "Do you think the United States ambassadors sent to Africa live in trees?" Just recently I learned from two African students from Kansas and Maryland that these questions are not asked only in Iowa, but all over the United States. The student was asked whether he and his family live in trees and he answered yes and added that the U.S. ambassador to his country lives in a big tree next to theirs.

Some of you readers may think this is comedy, but foreign students, especially Africans, many times are asked stupid questions that sometimes makes it difficult to distinguish between someone who is ignorant and someone who is trying to insult you.

This problem will continue as long as media coverage continues to move in the direction it is moving. The news coming out of Africa is about countries ravaged by war, starvation and military coups.

What is not portrayed are the booming economies of the continent, the beautiful cities with skyscrapers and the most elegant, beautiful women and handsome men on Earth. This is not a joke. Africa has the most beautiful people on Earth.

I should also mention that most Americans who have gone to Africa either do not want to come back home to the United States if they had a choice, or they will want to go back at some point in time to live there. I think American schools — both public and private — should more readily utilize students from the different countries who are currently residing in this country to give lectures and presentations about their countries. Some of us have beautiful slides which we would like to share with our friends in this country, and enjoy participating in programs like the International Classroom Program offered by the Office of International Education and Services.

Recently, the OIES also started a Cultural Consultant Program through which professors, teaching assistants, community leaders and community schools can request speakers for specific topics or programs. This will help to increase awareness among Americans about what goes on around the globe. Editor's Note: Daudi Kalisa is a UI graduate student in the Development Support Program.

PRESIDENTIAL FINISH LINE DRAWS NEAR

Candidates take to road in search of final votes

Bill Clinton summoned supporters Tuesday to "end trickle-down economics" by ousting the Republicans as he set out on the final lap of his marathon quest for the White House. President Bush stressed that character counted as much as the economy, adding that his rival was deficient on that count.

One day after their third and final debate, the campaign rivals thus embarked on a two-week sprint to Election Day, the Democratic challenger working to hold a large lead in the polls while the Republican president hoped for a late turnaround in the race.

Independent Ross Perot was back home in Dallas, Texas, pledging fresh 30-minute televised appeals in his unconventional bid for the White House.

Clinton spokesman George Stephanopoulos conceded that Bush has probably shored up his strength in traditional Republican areas in the past two weeks, but said there was little GOP activity in about 10 states with 150 electoral votes or more. It takes 270 electoral votes to win the White House.

U.S.-CHINA

Out with the old guard

There's a quiet revolution developing in China. It's not a revolution of massive demonstrations or purges behind closed doors. It's more like a removal of a starting lineup for a newer, fresher group of leaders within the Communist Party. What remains to be seen is the effect that these changes will have in China and in its relations with the West.

After the breakup of the Soviet Union, and with Cuba, North Korea and Vietnam ailing from disastrous economic conditions, China is the sole major communist power left on the map.

Once the obvious leader, Deng Xiaoping has for the last few years been the director behind the stage in China's politics. One of the few surviving revolutionaries, he's 88 now, and with worsening health he probably will not be there much longer. His supporters in the party succeeded in what seems to be nominating a succession list and ultimately relegating the older hard-liners to lower-ranking positions.

The key for the United States and the West is that the new leaders are said to be market-reform-minded with some "capitalist" tendencies. Trying to avoid the use of the word "capitalist" as a synonym for open, free-market policies and an abandonment of communism when it comes to economics, Deng Xiaoping has used market policies to keep China's Marxist rule in fairly good standing.

The relationship between China and the United States has indeed developed from the old days of the Yellow Peril to the Nixon trip to Tiananmen Square. After the Tiananmen massacre of the students in 1989, the then-brand-new Bush administration threatened Beijing with all kinds of sanctions. But Bush's good ties with China date back to his diplomatic days in Beijing and eventually he "forgave" China for the massacre. So China once again enjoys the trading benefits of a "most favored nation."

The coming changes may be deep economically speaking, but politically there are no alterations visible on the horizon; the party congress praised Deng Xiaoping's policies and went even further by ruling out any possibility of liberalizing the political sphere.

The big fear of the Chinese leadership is the possibility of a Clinton administration in Washington, for the Democrat has made it clear that he would go as far as reversing the privileged trade status of China if there is no progress toward democracy. China urgently needs the West's cooperation if it is to maintain a steady economic development. If Bush is re-elected, the replacement of leadership will represent how far Beijing will go for now. If Bill Clinton is inaugurated next January, things may not be that easy.

Midterms spawn critique of candidates

It's midterm evaluation time again and, like so many other TAs around the university, I've been grading a lot of papers and exams. I've become a one-woman fountain of constructive criticism in recent weeks, tempering my sterner remarks with positive encouragement.

As anyone who hangs around with me knows, this desire to comment critically on every aspect of the world around me has reached a level of near compulsion. (Sorry guys.) During the recent round of debates, I was totally out of control and began issuing midterm reports to the candidates for their work on a group oral presentation in "American Politics and Election-Year Rhetoric." What follows is an excerpt from these reports.

Bush / Quayle: Group grade — "C minus"
Comments: While your work as a team seems somewhat improved since your last outing, you still have some flaws which must be corrected before I can give you a higher grade. I note with pleasure the results of all of Danny's hard work; while the content of his remarks was somewhat immature, his delivery was, in comparison with his last performance, quite polished. George must also work to improve his delivery and compensate for a lack of charisma with forcefulness. You have both perfected the art of prevaricating with a straight face — practice, practice, practice, huh?
You need to work on content, however; answer the questions posed to you without meandering from the point and complete your sentences. Also, watch the vagueness. My advice for next time: 1) Do not give out page numbers when you misquote an opponent's book. 2) Never look at your watch while other people are speaking; it is impolite and gives the impression that you'd rather be in Kennebunkport.

Clinton / Gore: Group grade — "B"
Comments: While you exhibit a fairly good grasp of the material, your presentation seemed forced and overrehearsed. A certain spontaneity enhances one's credibility, yet at times, Al looked like he had been blown up with a foot pump. You played it smart and avoided the majority of character slurs — negative campaigning is out and you have some weaknesses in this area. Your policy statement was decidedly vegetarian, as in "no meat." Your voices were pleasant, but you failed to say anything new. I liked the technique of working your campaign theme into your presentation, but I thought that it would have worked better if you had gone on to detail more specifically the nature of the changes you urge.

Of all the groups presenting tonight, you are the only one with a comprehensive, realistic package for reform, yet you underplayed this. Why? You underestimate your audience's ability to digest hard data; by tantalizing them with broad sweeps of the rhetorical brush, you encourage them to pin too many of their hopes on you. While this might get you elected, it could also lead to big disappointments when you fail to be all things to all people. And Bill, do something about your hair; you look like Big Boy.

Perot / Stockdale: Group grade — "D"
Comments: There were some real problems with this presentation, but let's first turn to its strengths. You provided a note of levity in an otherwise dull event. (James, the bit about turning your hearing aid off because you didn't want to listen to the other two speakers argue was classic hearing-impaired humor.) The other presenters often were pompous and flatfooted; your folksy approach was a popular hit.

Unfortunately, the assignment was to persuade, not to entertain. When appealing to personal experience, you need to contextualize your remarks so that everyone is familiar with the incidents to which you refer. Otherwise, when you mention acting as the despotic head of a small civilization, you risk sounding like the guy who hangs around the bus station talking to invisible aliens. Also, while brevity is a virtue, being short to the point of seeming uninformed (or uninterested, or cryptic) is not. It was clear that you had not worked on this project as a team. An inability to share responsibility reflects poorly on Ross, while an inability to absorb materials quickly and present his thoughts clearly casts doubts on James. Next time, get together in advance to plan out what you are going to say.

Oh... and boys? Good luck on the final.

Free beer and voter registration

To the Editor:
I saw one of Marc Libant's fliers on his Oct. 8 "Free Beer" gathering. I found it pretty sad that Mr. Libant had to give people free beer to gain their votes. It just shows how desperate Libant is. Minnette Doderer, a Democrat, is a strong incumbent. She has a strong platform, experience, and doesn't need to buy her student votes.

Editor's Note: While The Daily Iowan received several letters voicing disapproval of Marc Libant's promotion at The Airliner, our usual screening process determined that these letters were written by someone other than the signed authors. All letters running in The Daily Iowan are confirmed with their authors before publication.

Beer, Libant and the student voter

To the Editor:
I happened to see an ad in The Daily Iowan on Thursday, Oct. 8. In it, a Republican candidate for the Iowa House of Representatives, Marc Libant, was advertising "free beer" and "voter registration" to everyone at The Airliner bar, because he needed support this Nov. 3. Wow! What an offer — so after a full day of classes I went down to the bar, stood in line outside the door (which I anticipated because of the free beer), and then was greeted by Libant at the door. The candidate, a student himself, introduced himself and without another word, reminded me of the free beer offer. What were his intentions for the event? This was not a "meet the candidate" event or even an attempt to register voters; this was a way to convince college students to vote for him. Libant must think students on the UI campus are beer-guzzling, mindless and irresponsible. Marc Libant was very wrong in having an event like this to get student votes... he owes the entire UI campus an apology.

Animal research required

To the Editor:

Jim Walters in his letter (DI, Oct. 14) distorted the relationship between animal research and preventive medicine, the effectiveness of animal-welfare laws and regulations, and the openness of animal labs. But his most outrageous lies concerned his list of discoveries which he alleged did not use laboratory animals. In fact, his long list of supposed advances without the use of animals consisted entirely of discoveries which required animal research. In fact, many of them involved Nobel-Prize-winning discoveries using animals. I will cover each of them:

■ While some information regarding heart disease and cholesterol was gained from studying human populations, information about how cholesterol increases the risk of heart disease was and is learned in animals. This is equally true for hypertension and stroke. Work in familial hypercholesterolemia requires animals, particularly the Watanabe rabbit. Interested people should consult pages 36 and 37 of the August Discover for an excellent article on this issue written for the nonscientist. Furthermore, the regulation of cholesterol and fatty acid metabolism was established in rats by Bloch and Lynen who won a 1964 Nobel Prize for their work. Little wonder that the American Heart Association fully supports animal research for their preventive mission.

■ The causal link between smoking and cancer was finally made when animal research proved that substances in tobacco smoke caused cancer in mice, and in hamsters that the effect was dependent on the dose. Before this point, we could only prove that smoking was correlated with cancer. As any student of statistics knows, correlation does not imply causation. Without animal evidence, there was no evidence that smoking actually caused cancer. The American Cancer Society also supports animal research.

■ The development of all drugs, including penicillin, anti-depressants, and anti-psychotics requires animal safety and, usually, effectiveness testing. As reported in The Lancet in 1940, penicillin was first tried on infected animals. The work in mice earned the Nobel Prize for Fleming, Chain, and Flornay in 1945. Anti-depressants, which work by acting on chemicals in the brain, were developed through work with animals. Without animal testing of drugs, we can expect more tragedies such as with thalidomide. This drug, which causes severe birth defects in humans and animals, was widely used in Europe with disastrous results. Because the drug was never tested on pregnant animals, nobody knew its effect on fetuses. That is, until thousands of deformed babies were born.

■ In many cases, the discoveries that exposure to some chemicals caused birth defects were first studied in animals. In fact, many such exposures are avoided when these chemicals are studied in animals. Mr. Walters' assertions that such work doesn't require animals is ridiculous. In order to identify a chemical as causing birth defects, it must be shown to cause them. Either we learn this through a relatively small number of animals in controlled experiments, or we must allow a much larger number of people to be exposed and deformed babies to be born in order to get an adequate statistical sample to form a link.

■ The only reason we were able to isolate HIV so quickly is because we already had been studying other, similar retroviruses in animal diseases. Additionally, knowledge of AIDS continues to be dependent on our knowledge of the immune system, which requires experiments in animals, as do experiments designed to prevent and treat the infections that actually kill people with AIDS.

■ Animal research is critical in our fight against AIDS. ■ Molecular biology research such as the discovery of the genetic code and protein chemistry also required both direct and indirect animal research. In 1968, Holley, Khorana and Nirenberg received a Nobel Prize for work in research — interpreting the genetic code and its role in protein synthesis. In addition, other work in molecular biology requires substances from animals including hormones, enzymes, tissue or tissue derivatives, serum for growing tissue culture, digested meat for growing bacteria, and countless other substances. I should know. I'm a molecular biologist, and while I do not use animals in my research, rarely a day goes past when I don't use material from animals.

■ While the discovery of the X-ray machine did not require animals, research into safe doses for medical X-rays did. In addition, development of the CAT scan, which uses X-rays, used pigs and earned Cormack and Hounsfield a 1979 Nobel Prize.

■ Learning mechanisms of trauma didn't require animal research (obviously!), but the techniques to surgically repair it did. In fact, all surgical advances are dependent on animal research. For example, Carrel earned a 1912 Nobel Prize for pioneering work on suture and grafting of blood vessels in dogs.

■ The Rhesus blood-type factor (Rh factor), the plus or minus in a blood type) was discovered in rhesus monkeys.

■ The development of a yellow fever vaccine required the use of monkeys and mice. These animal experiments earned a 1951 Nobel Prize.

■ Virtually all of our knowledge of physiology is dependent upon animal experiments. In order to make discoveries about the physiology of living creatures, we must perform experiments on them. In most cases, this is completely unethical to perform in humans. Animals are critical to physiology whether scientists are studying the brain, heart, liver, lungs, or any other physiological system of the body. For example, Walters claims that mechanisms of hormone action did not require animal research. In fact, in 1971, Sutherland received a Nobel Prize for animal research on this exact topic. The knowledge of hormone action and effects on tissue, discovered in animals, also extends to hormone-sensitive cancers such as in the breast and prostate. Pulmonary physiology, critical to work on respiratory disease, also required animal research.

■ The discovery of insulin, without which the production of genetically engineered insulin (Humulin) would not be possible, required dogs, rabbits and fish and earned Banting and Macleod a 1921 Nobel Prize. In addition, the bacteria which produce Humulin grow on a meat-based broth, and the lab techniques used to get them to produce insulin require animal-derived substances.

■ Contrary to the letter's claims, the physiological and chemical processes of vision were discovered in chicken, rabbits, fish and crabs by Hartline, Granit, and Wald for which they received a 1967 Nobel Prize. In 1981, Sperry, Hubell and Wiesel won a Nobel Prize for discoveries in the processing of visual information by the brain, done in cats and monkeys.

Anyone who doubts the Nobel-Prize-winning animal research referred to above need only consult Robert Leader and Dennis Stark's article, "The Importance of Animals in Biomedical Research," (Perspectives in Biology and Medicine, summer 1987). They are a matter of factual record. Considering how accurate Walters was about these discoveries, I guess we all know how accurate his claims about "other" universities abandoning animal research are. They aren't any more than we are. I don't know where Jim Walters got such blatantly false information, but I have an idea. Many groups opposing animal research publish articles misquoting other sources in an attempt to prove that animal research wasn't responsible for critical discoveries. I suspect Jim Walters got his hands on a few of these anti-research brochures and couldn't resist sharing the misinformation with the public. Well, Jim, get your facts straight; the days when opponents of animals research could lie with impunity are over. Some of us care about the truth.

'Yes' on ERA

To the Editor:
I have lived in Iowa for most of my life, and feel a deep pride and love for this state. That is why it bothers me so much to see purveyors of fear and distortion like Pat Robertson spread such malicious nonsense about the proposed Equal Rights Amendment.

Iowans have a tradition of commitment to equal rights. Iowa voters have a responsibility to translate that commitment into our fundamental law. Let us renew our commitment to equality by voting "yes" for the ERA on Nov. 3.

And shame on Sen. Grassley for refusing to take a public stand on this issue. The proposal would change the state, not the federal constitution, but Sen. Grassley is an Iowan in public service, and Iowans have a right to know where he stands.

IISO members helped

To the Editor:

I take great exception at John Bagby's assertion (Oct. 15 DI Letters) that members of the Iowa International Socialist Organization get involved in the activities of other student organizations solely for the purpose of furthering their own agenda and recruiting members. As the leader of a student organization (Spectrum: The Heterosexual-Lesbian Alliance), I have appreciated and enjoyed the active participation of several IISO members in our group.

Because I do not share their political beliefs, I, too was concerned that their participation might harm Spectrum, but the opposite has proven to be the case. They have without exception been hard-working, creative individuals with exemplary leadership qualities. They haven't ever tried to press their "agenda" on me or anyone else in the group, even when given an opportunity to do so.

I would like to publicly thank the members of IISO who have supported Spectrum, especially throughout National Coming Out Week. Without them, it wouldn't even have been possible.

IISO defended

To the Editor:

As someone who is not a member of the Iowa International Socialist Organization, but who has worked closely with its members in various coalitions over the past two years, I feel compelled to respond to John Bagby's grossly unfair attack in the Letters section (DI, Oct. 15).

Bagby accuses the IISO of "leeching" off the work of others and of thrusting their ideology at audient by attending other organizations' events. Nothing could be further from the truth. While IISO members do attend and make their arguments at meetings called by other groups, they do not act as parasites, but contribute actively to building those organizations. These are the people who can be counted on to distribute the leaflets, post the fliers, make phone calls, and do all the other sometimes tedious — but always necessary — tasks involved in building a successful movement. While IISO members make no secret of the fact that they would like to make their own organization grow, one reason I respect them is that they are willing to work in a constructive manner with people who choose to join, unlike some more sectarian groups. They are also extremely committed, remaining actively involved long after others have decided the issue is no longer in vogue, or that their GPA is more important.

There is also some thinly veiled red-baiting going on in Bagby's letter. Why should the IISO be singled out for attack? Isn't the point of political coalitions to bring together people who might hold various ideologies, but are nonetheless willing to work together on the issue at hand? Are the interests of the group best served by allowing the widest possible variety of perspectives to be aired, enabling people to develop a more sophisticated analysis and learn to argue their own position?

If Bagby doesn't like what IISO members are saying, it would be much more constructive to debate them directly at the meetings in question, rather than making a public attack on a group that does a great deal of hard work and is absolutely essential to left political organizing on this campus. If a meeting is democratically run, people are free to accept or reject any proposals made, so why be afraid of hearing different points of view? We have enough on our hands fighting the whole U.S. government and corporate power structure without engaging in this sort of petty and divisive sectarian wrangling.

Readers dissed

To the Editor:
A reply to Sharon Williams' letter (DI, Sept. 30):

1. Your basic premise states that "society" was responsible for white women being present at your frat party.

2. Further, (it states) that there is a conspiracy between society and the media to brainwash black men into believing that white women are more attractive than black women (your words).

And as a result of the attention those white women received you felt insulted and degraded and left the party with your feelings hurt. You conclude your argument with the warning that if black men don't stop asking white women to frat parties, all black women will flee to the arms of white men.

As to the structure, your argument was based on a false premise; it lacked reason and evidence. Your conclusion was superficial and incoherent with no supporting evidence. Of course we know that man in the final analysis is responsible for charting his own course. Because society said you have to sit in the back of a bus, did you do that? Of course not. And does it take brainwashing to make a man pay attention to an attractive woman? Of course not.

And as to content, you must rethink (it). There is a big difference between fact and truth on one hand, and belief, opinion, taste and preference on the other hand. It's important not to attack and label those with a different opinion than us. Lesson: People are entitled to do whatever pleases them, provided it does not harm anyone else in the process (morality in this context of relationships means harming yourself may be unfortunate, but not immoral).

Sex, violence, and popcorn sales

To the Editor:
Kim Painter's column in the Oct. 5 DI regarding the role of values in the American movie industry makes a good point: Censorship of an artistic medium does not serve the interests of a thinking, open society. Objective decency standards threaten to stifle the discussion of issues that are an essential part of the human experience. She, however, tended to paint all critics of the film industry with a disturbingly broad brush.

Cardinal Mahoney's letter did not make specific references to either "The Silence of the Lambs," Jonathan Demme or Medved's book.

It does not matter whether a person who commented on Mahoney's letter knows Ronald Reagan or not. As Kim noted, Mahoney specifically rejected production codes of old. What he did ask was that movie executives show some discretion in their decisions, take time to consider the impact of their work and try to distinguish between sex and violence to make a point and sex and violence to sell popcorn.

Kim's assertion "anyone who stops to think can argue with that (lifting the quality of motion pictures)" requires a mistaken assumption that

The obvious question then is whose values? What is art and what is a cheap ploy for ticket revenue? Is there any objective "a priori" way to distinguish between the two? Cardinal Mahoney assumes there isn't, which is why he specifically rejects some sort of Hollywood naughty / nice committee. He merely asks directors, producers and movie executives to think a little about the message they are sending with their films and to treat their trade as more of an art and less of a business.

Is this equality?

To the Editor:
A few days ago, I received a letter from the Iowa Women's Equality Campaign signed by Eleanor Smeal as president asking for a generous contribution to pass the Iowa ERA. Before I send my contribution, I would like to have you explain a few things to me and the voters of Iowa.

There are several things that trouble me:

1. Why wasn't the ERA properly publicized in January of 1989 when it was first introduced in the Legislature? Those in attendance at the reading were two homosexual lawyers, Planned Parenthood, NARAL and NOW. This is equality?

2. Sen. Wm. Dielman introduced an abortion-neutral amendment to the proposed ERA and it was soundly defeated. Why? When a similar amendment was attached to a proposed state ERA in 1983 in the Wisconsin Legislature, the pro-ERA groups opposed ERA altogether and it never passed. Why would the pro-ERA groups be opposed to an abortion-neutral amendment when they say the ERA has nothing to do with tax-funded abortions? You might want to check out what Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Connecticut did about tax-funded abortions under a state ERA.

3. The word "gender" is being added to the proposed state ERA. Can you explain to me who or what a "gender" is? Will this word open the door to homosexual and gay rights? Iowa's own state representative Charles Hurlley stated in 1992: "Homosexual marriages would have to be OK'd under the plain reading of the ERA because it says we cannot differentiate on the basis of gender." If homosexual rights have nothing to do with ERA, why would he make this statement?

4. And then about veterans' benefits. The former president of the League of Women Voters, pro-ERA Dorothy Ridings, testified that veterans' preference "would fall in a challenge under ERA" because 98 percent of veterans are men. Of course, female veterans receive the same benefits as male veterans, but that wouldn't satisfy ERA supporters. They would still litigate to abolish veterans' preference because most veterans are men and more men, therefore, receive benefits. I have a real problem understanding why the feminists would want to take away these benefits from our deserving men who defended our great country when they want tax-funded abortions when only women get abortions. This is equality?

5. Tell me why we should have a state ERA, when this could lead to higher insurance rates for women. ERA would require unisex insurance rates. Iowa's Insurance Commissioner David Lyons stated: "I predict (ERA) will eventually result in gender-neutral ratings. . . . When Congress was studying the issue, its actuarial study showed that . . . overall women could lose economically." Predictions are that life-insurance rates for women will rise by 19.8 percent and auto-accident insurance for young women drivers will increase as much as 32 percent. This is good for the women of Iowa?

6. Tell me, Ms. Smeal, with an ERA, will the courts be forced to make mothers pick up an equal amount of child support, even though their custodial responsibility likely prevents them from obtaining comparable jobs.

You will probably tell me that all of these cases will be decided by the courts. We should give the courts a "blank check?"

I do not know how I got on your mailing list, Ms. Smeal, but I do want to thank you for your timely letter. And until I have all these questions answered to my satisfaction, I will wait with sending you my contribution.

End of the 2-party system

To the Editor:
With the inclusion of Ross Perot and James Stockdale in the debate process we are witness to the beginning of the formal demise of the two-party system in the United States. With its demise there must be a systematic replacement, and that system must be the utilization of the single transferable vote in the election of our legislative representatives at the state and national levels coupled with the direct election of the president.

There already is a national organization that supports the implementation of proportional representation at the local, state and national level. The name of that organization is Citizens for Proportional Representation (CPR). Anyone who would like to start a local chapter please contact me. Philosopher / commentator . . .

To the Editor:

I notice that Jim Rogers writes in two formats. One is his "philosopher" style, which I have a very hard time following because I only earned a "C" in philosophy. The other is his "political commentator" style, which is much more entertaining because of his whimsical and good natured skewering of anyone who holds views opposing his, i.e. liberals.

As the probability of a Bush defeat increases Jim has stepped off his philosopher's soapbox long enough to write a few columns of practical political analysis in support of his conservative heroes.

How disappointed I was when it became apparent the Jim the philosopher had returned. I think he was trashing Hillary again. Of course I'm not sure, because not once did he mention any specifics about children's rights or the rights of parents to abuse them just because they choose not to have an abortion.

Continued from Page 1A then there will be a public announcement.

At the Pentagon, spokesman Bob Hall refused to comment on the situation except to promise that, if new information is developed, "we will talk fairly quickly with the families to alert them to the issue."

Another official said the information "may be a whole new vein" of evidence about those listed as prisoners of war or missing in action during that war. It could be especially useful in pursuing the scores of so-called "discrepancy cases," in which servicemen were last seen or heard from alive, but in imminent danger of capture.

"We know it's good, but we won't know how good until we can check it against what we already know," said the official.

A Senate source said between 4,000 and 5,000 photos are in the newly uncovered archives, but many are duplicates, or different shots of the same individuals. And, he said, "They all deal with dead people."

The United States had long suspected that such information, which reportedly includes more than 4,000 photos, existed in Vietnam. But the trip over the weekend to Hanoi by retired Gen. John Vessey Jr. and Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., was the first time its existence has been officially acknowledged.

Vessey is President Bush's special emissary for POW-MIA affairs, and McCain is a former Vietnam prisoner of war and a member of the Senate's Select Committee on POW-MIA Affairs.

The three-day trip was hastily arranged after the United States got word that Vietnam was prepared to cooperate in turning over material it has previously held back.

In addition to the photos, there may be other documentation that could shed light on the fate of POWs and MIAs. That could include reports of aircraft being shot down, prisoner lists or other data, the officials said.

One official said the information appears to be the most important breakthrough in the long POW-MIA effort in two decades.

In a joint communiqué issued Monday, Vessey and Vietnamese officials said accelerated cooperation on resolving the cases of the missing will bring more rapid movement by the United States toward normalization of relations with Vietnam.

The Washington Post first reported the discovery in its Tuesday edition, saying the photographic archive "was discovered by means that officials refused to disclose."

Members of the Pentagon's task force searching for missing servicemen previously described the lack of access to the archives as a serious hindrance. The U.S. group conducts searches and excavations with the Vietnamese for the remains of missing Americans.

On Monday, the official Vietnamese News Agency said Vietnam would expand its help in determining the fate of Americans missing from the Vietnam War by letting U.S. experts study military archives.

The United States has not had diplomatic relations with Vietnam since the Communist takeover of South Vietnam in 1975 and has maintained an economic embargo against Hanoi. U.S. officials have said relations will not be normalized until Hanoi provides a satisfactory accounting of missing Americans.

"The government of Vietnam informed General Vessey it has been conducting a countrywide search of all of its archives for documents, photographs and other material related to American POW-MIA cases and will make all such material available to the United States at its military museums," according to the joint statement issued in Hanoi on Monday.

There are 2,266 American servicemen unaccounted for from the Vietnam War, which ended 17 years ago. Some 1,658 were lost in Vietnam, while the others were lost in neighboring Cambodia and Laos.

NEW HEALTH INFORMATION RELEASED

Study says low-fat, high-fiber diet won't protect against breast cancer

Brenda C. Coleman
Associated Press

CHICAGO — A major U.S. study suggests that eating less fat and more fiber offers no protection against breast cancer, contrary to previous findings.

But a lean diet is still very important to avert other diseases, such as colon cancer and heart disease, the researchers hastened to say.

One critic said the study was flawed, and a government researcher said it may present only part of the picture.

Subjects were 89,494 women in the continuing Nurses' Health Study. Their diets and development of breast cancer were tracked for eight years beginning in 1980, when the women ranged in age from 34 to 59.

Their fat consumption ranged from less than 29 percent of total daily calories to more than 49 percent. Fiber consumption ranged from less than 11 grams per day to more than 22 grams per day. The government recommends 20 to 30 grams a day, about the amount in five servings of fruits and/or vegetables.

A total of 1,439 women developed breast cancer during the eight years, said the study led by Dr. Walter Willett and published in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

"We found no evidence that risk of breast cancer was greater among women with higher fat intakes," said co-author David Hunter, an associate epidemiologist at Harvard-affiliated Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, Mass. "Also, we found no relation between dietary fiber intake and the incidence of breast cancer."

It is the largest and longest-running of five similarly conducted investigations about the possible link between breast cancer and dietary fat.

Orr gets contract extension

AMES — Iowa State has given basketball coach Johnny Orr a two-year contract extension that takes him through the 1994-95 season.

Details of Orr's contract won't change, the university said Tuesday, and his salary will remain $107,352.

Iowa State is coming off one of its best seasons under Orr. The Cyclones went 21-13 and reach the second round of the NCAA tournament, where they lost to Kentucky 106-98. All five starters return from that team.

"I'm more excited than ever about our basketball program and its future," Orr said. "Our program is as strong as it's ever been and I can't wait to work with my coaching staff and players to build upon the tradition we've established at Iowa State."

NFL

Expansion date delayed

CHICAGO — The NFL officially moved back its expansion date to Tuesday when commissioner Paul Tagliabue said for the first time that 1995 is the earliest the league can go to 30 teams.

It was the first time any top league official had flatly ruled out 1994, the target date the league had set for expanding by two teams.

Magic may play more

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Magic Johnson, eager to rejoin the Los Angeles Lakers after a one-season absence, says he will probably play several back-to-back games.

He originally planned to play 50 to 60 games in the 82-game season after doctors urged him to avoid playing on consecutive nights. But on Monday, Johnson said he could easily play back-to-back games in Pacific or mountain time zones.

"I can't tell you how many I'll play, but I've already added one exhibition game, and there'll probably be some I add again. Once the war of the season starts, we'll see what happens."

He made his 1992 exhibition debut against Portland in Honolulu last Friday, playing 27 minutes, scoring five points and handing out 14 assists.

Reardon doomed again by Jays

TORONTO — Candy Maldonado and the Toronto Blue Jays turned Atlanta upside down and moved on top after three games of the first World Series played in Canada.

Maldonado singled over the drawn-in outfield with one out in the ninth inning, giving the Blue Jays a 3-2 victory Tuesday night for a 2-1 lead.

The hit came on an 0-2 pitch from Jeff Reardon, who served up pinch-hitter Ed Sprague's winning two-run homer in the ninth inning Sunday night in Atlanta.

That game was marked by an incident in which the Canadian flag was carried upside-down in pre-game ceremonies. This time, thousands of red maple leaves were sent swirling, all of them rightside-up by Maldonado's single.

A tight game featuring home runs by Joe Carter and Kelly Gruber, a near triple play and a rare ejection came down to the bottom of the ninth inning. Roberto Alomar began the inning with a single off Steve Avery, and stole second while reliever Mark Wohlers was pitching to Carter. After an intentional walk to Carter and Dave Winfield's second sacrifice bunt of the season, lefty Mike Stanton was summoned to face John Olerud.

Sprague pinch-hit and was intentionally walked, and Maldonado met Reardon with a drive over Otis Nixon's head in center field.

Duane Ward pitched one inning for the victory. He relieved Juan Guzman, who allowed one earned run in eight innings. Avery was the loser. The victory made home teams in domes 9-0 in World Series play. Minnesota had the other eight.

Game 1 winner Tom Glavine will start for Atlanta Wednesday night against Jimmy Key.

The game began with the public address announcer at the SkyDome urging Canadian fans to pay respect to the their neighbors to the south. Outside the ballpark, T-shirts depicting upside-down American flags were sold, but it was all good spirited. A U.S. Marine color guard carried in the Canadian flag and Royal Canadian Mounties presented the stars and stripes.

In the bottom of the eighth, Gruber broke an all-time postseason record 0-for-23 slump in a big way, with a leadoff homer to left. Gruber began the day hitless in 22 at-bats — tying the mark held by Winfield and Dal Maxvill — and grounded out and walked before homering.

The Braves lost manager Bobby Cox in the top of the ninth when he was ejected by home plate umpire Joe West. Pinch-runner Brian Hunter was on first with no out and he became the first runner thrown out in 10 steal attempts by Toronto catcher Pat Borders. On the play, Jeff Blauser was called out on a checked swing and Cox threw a helmet which left the dugout and meant his ejection.

Following a familiar theme, neither team did much early in the game. It was 0-0 through three innings as the Braves and Blue Jays did little in their first looks at new pitchers. That's the way it has been all series, as a total of one run has been scored in the first three innings of the three games.

Carter's homer came with one out in the fourth. He was one of the few Toronto hitters to have previously faced Avery — he went 1 for 6 against him in 1990 while in San Diego. Carter's second homer of the series was a 405-foot shot into the lower deck in left.

Carter's connection also gave the Blue Jays home runs in nine straight postseason games this year, an all-time record. Baltimore (1970) and Milwaukee (1982) did it in eight games.

Changing of the guard for quarterbacks

Attention surrounds new starter

John Shipley

The Daily Iowan

He strolled into the football complex alone, hands in pockets and fashionably late, perhaps hoping everybody would be gone.

Forty-five minutes earlier, Coach Hayden Fry compared his release to Dan Marino's and said if Dan McGwire had had his humility, McGwire never would have transferred to San Diego State.

Matt Eyde met the media as Iowa's starting quarterback for the first time Tuesday, admittedly uncomfortable with the idea of being the center of attention.

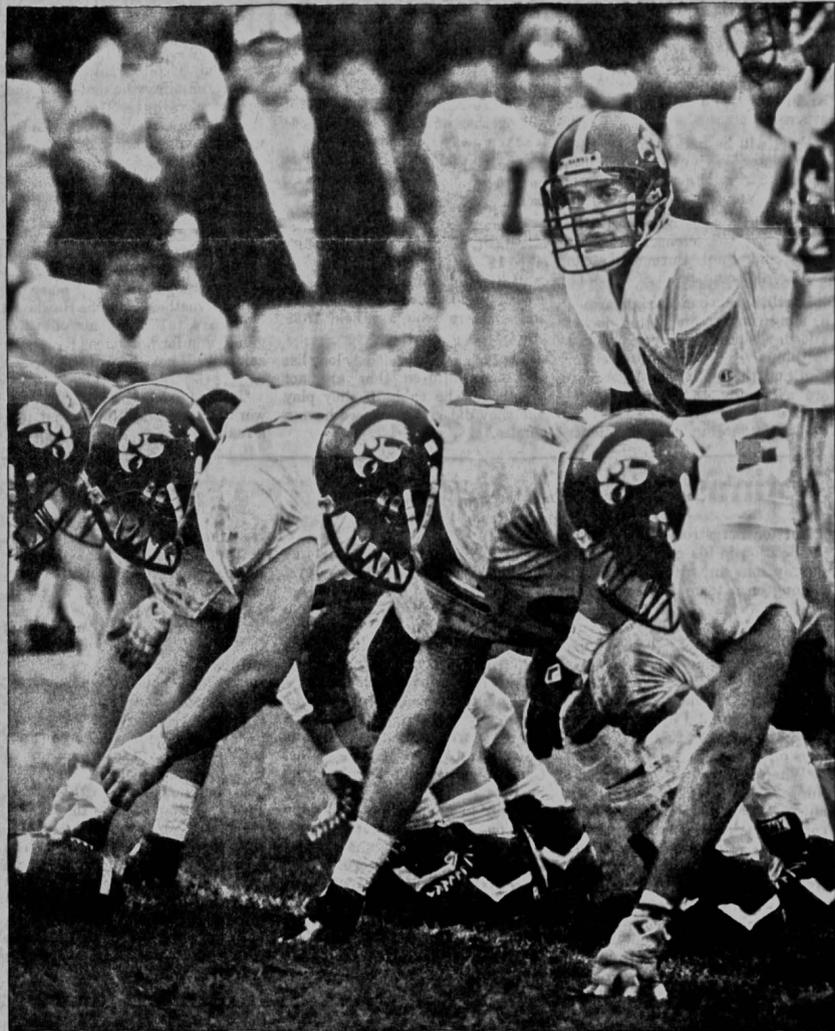

"I don't like to talk too much about my ability," he said. "I like to let my actions speak for my words."

Eyde's story is an interesting one. The son of a Michigan State lineman and living in East Lansing, he becomes the state's top-rated quarterback and turns down visits to such schools as Alabama, Florida State, Illinois and Iowa, committing early to George Perles' Spartans.

He redshirted his freshman year, figures out that the Spartans are more interested in rushing than passing, and decides to break family tradition by transferring. Rather than take a scholarship from a nonconference school, Eyde decides to pay his own way at Iowa, which cannot offer scholarships to intraconference transfers.

After sitting out his first year as a Hawkeye, Eyde suits up and promptly breaks his ankle in the team's first scrimmage, causing him to miss the entire season.

Eyde starts the 1992 season as backup to fifth-year senior Jim Hartlieb, who quickly becomes the Big Ten leader in passing yardage. See EYDE, Page 28

Hartlieb trying to stay upbeat

John Shipley

The Daily Iowan

Iowa won its second straight game last Saturday to move into a three-way tie for second place in the Big Ten, keeping the Hawkeyes alive for a bowl berth at the end of the year. That's the good news.

The bad news is the injury situation went from bad to worse when the Hawkeyes (3-4, 2-1) lost quarterback Jim Hartlieb in their 24-14 win at Illinois last Saturday.

Hartlieb was on pace to give Iowa its eighth all-Big Ten quarterback in 10 years. He leads the league in passing yardage, efficiency and touchdowns and is ranked 15th nationally in total offense. But the fifth-year senior suffered a dislocated shoulder trying to recover a fumble in the fourth quarter when linebacker Dana Howard got there at about the same time.

"There's no way to project at this point how long he'll be out," Coach Hayden Fry said Tuesday at his weekly press conference. "The good news is that he didn't have any injuries other than the separated shoulder. He'll be out for some time, but for how long I do not know."

The loss of Hartlieb is just the latest stumbling block for the Hawkeyes, who started the season 1-4 after losing to No. 1 Miami, No. 3 Michigan, No. 9 Colorado and No. 23 North Carolina State and have lost seven starters to injury for at least one game at one time or another this season.

The Hawkeyes will be playing for a bowl berth when they host Purdue (2-4, 1-2) in their Homecoming game Saturday at 1:05 p.m. Iowa will likely have to win the remainder of its five games to finish See HAWKEYES, Page 28

MEN'S TENNIS

Klas Bergstrom

Swedish native born to play tennis for UI

Michael Watkins

The Daily Iowan

Some babies are said to be born with a silver spoon in their mouth. But for Iowa tennis player Klas Bergstrom, it wasn't a spoon he was holding when he left the womb — it was a tennis racket.

"Tennis was always, and still is, a very big part of my family life," said Bergstrom, a senior out of Osterskar, Sweden. "I had three older brothers who played tennis, and my father was always a big fan. I definitely grew up in what you'd call a tennis family."

Bergstrom got his first taste of the sport at the age of seven, and he grew up playing junior tennis against some of the top players in Sweden. Coming out of high school, he was rated as one of the top-ranked players in his country.

But when the opportunity arose to venture to the United States and play in the collegiate ranks, he wasn't recruited by big-name tennis colleges like USC or Florida.

In fact, he was set on playing tennis "cajun-style" until he heard about a university in the heart of the Midwest.

McCarty garners medalist honors as Hawks take 4th

Karen L. Karaidos

The Daily Iowan

Iowa golfer Sean McCarty captured medalist honors at the Louisville Invitational Tuesday as the Hawkeyes finished in fourth place in the 18-team tournament.

After struggling in their past two tournaments, things finally came together for the Hawkeyes.

"I just think we were more focused and everyone played real solid," Coach Lynn Blevins said. "I think it was a total team effort and I was glad to see Sean play really well and win the tournament."

North Carolina won the Invitational with a score of 603. Second place went to Kent State with a 606. Oklahoma came in third after carding a 610 and the Hawkeyes came in one stroke behind to put them in fourth place.

Iowa came in ahead of Big Ten teams Michigan State and Purdue. Kent State was the only team from the Hawkeyes' district to beat them. Other teams that competed in the two-day tournament included Ball State, Kentucky, East Tennessee State, Marshall and Miami (Ohio).

SPEAKING
"There's no excuse for it. If the U.S. Marines said the guy wasn't sure which way it should go, he shouldn't have been carrying it." — Toronto's Kelly Gruber on the upside-down display of the Canadian flag before Game 2 in Atlanta on Sunday night.

SEASONS
Oct. 21
1973 — Bert Campaneris and Reggie Jackson each hit two-run homers in the third inning as the Oakland A's defeated the New York Mets 5-2 in the seventh game of the World Series.
1975 — Carlton Fisk broke up a thrilling contest with a homer in the 12-inning to give the Boston Red Sox a 7-6 victory over the Cincinnati Reds to force a seventh game in the World Series.

GOLF: End fall season on solid note

Branch, tied for first place after carding a 75-73 for a total of 148.
"Sean McCarty played a great tournament. He played up to his potential and capabilities and I hope that helps catapult him into a great spring," Blevins said.

The rest of the team members also showed their strengths in the last tournament of the fall season. Senior Brian Wilson shot 77-74-151 and senior Jon Frommelt carded rounds of 82-75 for a total of 157.
Playing in his first tournament this fall, sophomore Chad Lydiatt from Kearney, Neb., had a two-day total of 158. Freshman Brad Heinrichs shot a 170.

"Brian and Jon all played solid. All in all it was a good, solid, total team effort to end the fall on and I think this will give us something to build on for spring," Blevins said.

"I think we accomplished a lot of things this fall," the Iowa coach added. "We still need to find out who our fourth and fifth men are and be ready to go when spring comes."

second in the Big Ten and earn the automatic berth to the Citrus Bowl.
The third-place team is committed to the Holiday Bowl, but the Holiday can turn down a Big Ten team with less than an 8-3 record.
As it has been all season, Fry's team is plagued by injuries in the backfield and on the defensive and offensive lines, but the loss of Hartlieb is the biggest.
"The whole team has got to circle the wagons. They've got to rally because their leader is not going to be out there," Fry said. "He accounts for maybe two-thirds, three-fourth of our total offense. . . . The kid was having a tremendous season. But he's gone."
In his place will be junior Matt Eyde, a transfer from Michigan State who has seen limited action this season. The junior locked up the Illinois victory by leading a 55-yard, 13-play drive that ate 5:33 off the clock and finally stalled at the 10-yard line, where Andy Kreider missed a 27-yard field goal attempt.

Eyde will be backed up by Paul Burmeister, a junior from Iowa City, and Mike Duprey, a freshman from Templeton, Mass.
"The big thing, of course, is trying to convince the offense that Matt Eyde and Paul Burmeister can handle replacing Jimmy," Fry said.
Hartlieb, who had his right arm in a sling under his letter jacket Tuesday, said the injury came just as things were starting to click for him and the team. The Hawkeyes are averaging 427 yards of total offense in Big Ten play and lead the conference in passing offense (237.7) and first downs per game (24.7).

"It's tough because I really thought as a quarterback I was improving each week," he said. "We were really starting to put it all together and it's tough to have it taken away from you like that."
"I just have to keep positive and hope for the best. Hopefully I'll be back."
Fry, who is 10-4-1 against Purdue and hasn't lost to the Boiler-makers since 1982, said his team's fortunes continue to rest in the hands of second- and third-string players and starters who are held from practice.
"We have a tremendously long list of people injured that are not practicing," he said. "If they play like they did last week, we have a chance."

That list includes tailbacks Marvin Lampkin and Ryan Terry, who combined for 128 yards last weekend despite limited practice time. Lampkin, who had a turf toe, gained 99 yards on 21 carries.
"If we could ever get them healthy we could really have an outstanding football team," Fry said. "We're a good football team now."
Fry said a few starters may miss Saturday's game entirely, including wide receiver Danan Hughes and defensive lineman Jeff Nelson.
"I feel certain a few of the No. 1s are not going to be back," he said.
As to whether or not the Hawkeyes will have to limit their offensive game plan for newcomer Eyde, Fry said, "We'll have to wait till we see it."
"If we do something that doesn't work I'll say, 'Matt, forget that.' I'm a real complex coach."

BERGSTROM: Optimistic about Big Tens

"I was originally offered a scholarship down in Louisiana, but I knew Claes Ramel, who played for Iowa and was also from Sweden, and he persuaded me that Iowa was a much better place to play and go to school," said the two-time all-Big Ten selection.
"I liked it right away. I thought it was a really nice place, and I liked the coach and all of the guys on the team."
Iowa coach Steve Houghton, who had success in the past with players from foreign countries, especially Sweden, didn't hesitate to give Bergstrom an opportunity.
"I knew that he was a really good player from what Claes had told me, and he knew what kind of level of player we were looking for," Houghton said. "I knew that once I'd gotten a recommendation from him that he must really be good."

But for Bergstrom, whose main competition in his native land was strictly on an individual level, playing on a team was something new.
"I hadn't played team tennis before I came here. It was just great to play and have the guys cheering for me," said Bergstrom, a two-time Hawkeye captain. "I like the fact that I am playing for the team, and that I am playing for guys other than just myself."
"When I first came here, I didn't think I was going to like it very much. I thought that there were going to be a lot of things that I didn't like, and it was going to be a lot different from my home country."
"But I adjusted really fast. I thought that I'd probably take one year at a time and decide whether or not I liked it. But I decided after the first month that I wanted to stay."

Bergstrom has come a long way since those first uneasy days. Starting for the Hawkeye netters at the No. 1 position his freshman season, Bergstrom compiled a 12-13 singles record, including a 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 win over nationally-ranked Martin Dionne of Drake.
He added a 14-4 record and a No. 2 ranking in the Big Ten at No. 1 doubles with partner Thomas Adler, and received the "Most Class" award at the team's spring banquet.
"I try to show some leadership both on and off the court," Bergstrom said. "I want to show that I am really working day after day on the court. I think that it's important if you have a bad day, that you don't take it out on your other teammates."
"He approaches practice every day in a very business-like manner,"

Houghton said. "He doesn't have ups and downs emotionally at all."
"I think that a lot of the time, teams take their cues from the No. 1 guy. He's sort of the one who sets the tone for the team, and I think that it means a lot to the other guys on the team to have someone that they know is playing well, representing the team well, and giving a good effort every time."
Bergstrom's immediate plans for the future are to look for work in the United States once he graduates next May. But with his last spring season around the corner, his mind is on other things.
"I really want to have a good record in the Big Ten, but our team goal is to win the Big Ten this year," Bergstrom said. "We've come close the last two years I've been here, but I think that the team this year has got a good shot at it."

EYDE: Content to be at Iowa

efficiency and touchdowns. When Hartlieb dislocates his shoulder against Illinois Oct. 17, Eyde is promoted to starting quarterback.
His saga is as close to Gothic as a sports story can get, but getting Eyde to say anything about it at the team's weekly press conference was like pulling teeth. Reporters asked him if he felt forced to play at Michigan State, how far he lived from Spartan Stadium as a child, and if it seems like forever since he's started a football game — anything that would give them a good angle.
All to no avail. He wanted to play for the Spartans, never parked cars or sold programs at Spartan Stadium, Duffy Daugherty never ate dinner at his house and as far as starting his first game in four years, Eyde said only, "It's been a while."
Eyde will make his Kinnick Stadium debut Saturday when the Hawkeyes host Purdue for Homecoming.
"I feel fine. I'm confident in the situation," said Eyde, who hasn't started a game since he was a senior at East Lansing High in 1988. "I've got one of the best offensive lines in front of me, great backs and great receivers. Everyone around me is excellent, so I feel great."

Fry, like the rest of his players, expressed confidence in his new starting quarterback, saying, "He eventually is going to be a tremendous pro prospect."
"He just needs to play, I'm telling you. He has the finest release of any quarterback I've ever had," Fry said. "He can just flick his wrist — just like Dan Marino — and zoom, the ball is gone. He can stand there and make that sucker go 80 yards. He's got phenomenal strength in throwing the football."
At 6-foot-4 and 212 pounds, Eyde is three inches taller and two pounds heavier than Hartlieb. He has seen action this season versus Colorado, Michigan and Illinois, completing 6 of 12 passes for 46 yards and one interception.
"We've never had a quarterback that studies the game as much as Matt," Fry said. "He would've played last year had he not broken his ankle the first scrimmage we had."

Eyde said his biggest source of reference this week will be Hartlieb, who got his first start last season after Matt Rodgers was injured against Ohio State. Hartlieb remembers the week prior to his first start, a 38-21 victory versus Indiana.
"I put a lot of internal pressure on myself that week, but I think that helped me play better in the game," Hartlieb said. "My teammates really rallied around me and we got the running game going. . . . Hopefully it will be the same for Matt."
Fry said he won't risk damaging that confidence by pulling Eyde after a few mistakes. He said junior Paul Burmeister will be the No. 2 quarterback, but the job is Eyde's on Saturday.
"Eyde's our starter. We certainly wouldn't put Paul in a difficult situation or if Matt fouls up," Fry said. "I'm not the kind of coach who's gonna jerk him, because that's going to kill his confidence."

"I'm trying to give him every chance in the world. And I've got confidence in Matt, I think he's going to do a heck of a job."
Fry said one of Eyde's strengths has been his willingness to learn the Iowa system, and compared him to another famous Hawkeye backup QB.
"The difference between Matt Eyde and Dan McGwire . . . is Dan never had the humility that Matt Eyde has," Fry said. "If Matt Eyde can't read the secondary coverage or blitz or he makes a mistake, he knows it immediately and he wants to know."
"Dan was too proud. He would never say, 'I didn't know the coverage they were in, or I didn't know who the No. 2 receiver was.' We had a problem with Dan. Matt's completely the opposite. He studies the game."
Eyde said he "made a mistake" when he committed so quickly to Michigan State, but added "I'm in the right place now, so I'm happy."

Giants linebacker listed as a potential witness in trial of convicted cocaine dealer.

Paul Nowak
Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — NBA star Michael Jordan isn't the only athlete who might be called to testify this week in the federal money laundering trial of James "Slim" Boulter, a convicted cocaine dealer. Jordan was linked to Boulter when federal agents seized a $57,000 check from Boulter's bank account last October. The check was signed by Jordan.

Defense attorney James Wyatt also listed New York Giants linebacker Lawrence Taylor as a potential witness. Like Jordan, Taylor is an avid golfer and attended the University of North Carolina.

Meanwhile, prosecutors included former UNC basketball player Al Wood, who played on two NBA teams. According to government documents, all three men have been seen playing golf with Boulter at the Monroe Country Club.

Both sides say the trial, which was scheduled to begin Tuesday, should last about a week. Wyatt refused Monday to reveal the scope of Jordan's testimony. "We are looking forward to trying this case," he said after the jury was selected in less than two hours.

Jordan, a guard on the NBA champion Chicago Bulls, grew up in the state and starred at North Carolina in the early 1980s. He has been subpoenaed as a defense witness, apparently to discuss the purpose of the $57,000 check.

Wyatt has said he wants to show that Boulter makes a living as a stakes golfer, not from selling drugs.

The jury of five men and seven women was chosen Monday morning to hear Boulter's case before U.S. District Judge Robert Potter. Jurors were questioned about their interests in sports, particularly golf, and betting.

The seizure of the $57,000 check was part of the FBI's attempt to establish ties between Boulter and a convicted Charlotte drug kingpin, James Edward Johnson.

Boulter has said the cashier's check, dated Oct. 17, 1991, was a loan to help Boulter, who owns Golf-Tech Pro Shop in Monroe, build a golf driving range.

Jordan has given differing explanations about the purpose of the check. At first, he too called it a loan for the driving range.

Last week, Jordan was quoted by the Chicago Sun-Times as saying the money was to pay off gambling debts. U.S. Attorney Tom Ashcraft has filed court documents also saying the money was for a gambling debt.

Jordan lost the money playing poker, dice and golf while the rest of the Chicago Bulls were at the White House receiving congratulations from President Bush for winning their first league title, the newspaper reported.

Boulter was indicted in February on charges related to cocaine trafficking and money laundering. He has previously been convicted of selling the drug. There is no evidence Jordan knew about Boulter's drug activity, and Ashcraft has said Jordan is not under investigation.

Boulter is charged with twelve counts of laundering drug money for a Charlotte cocaine ring led by Johnson, who is serving a 20-year sentence and is cooperating with prosecutors. After their own probe, NBA officials exonerated Jordan of any wrongdoing. But the league warned Jordan to be more careful in his associations and Jordan apologized.

IC COMMUNITY THEATRE

Play shows that Williams understands women

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

Interested in sociology, family relationships, or the American classics? This and next weekend, the Iowa City Community Theatre meets all three needs in one fell swoop with Tennessee Williams' famed autobiographical play, "The Glass Menagerie."

The play, set in the 1930s, centers around the relationships between a young man, his dissatisfied mother and his physically and emotionally crippled sister. According to director Janie Yates, most of the plot is directly from Williams' life.

"He had a love/hate relationship with his mother... it's a very accurate picture of her," she explains. "She was a real Southern belle. Of course, she didn't live in the time of the Southern plantations, but when she was a little girl she spent a lot of time on one, with blacks to wait on her, so she was used to that life. She married a handsome man, she fell in love with his charm. And he had a drinking problem, and he gambled, and they ended up in St. Louis in a tenement apartment. It just devastated her."

Williams' father didn't leave the family in real life, but Williams, who apparently felt betrayed by his father's drinking and gambling, has the father abandon the family in the play. As a result, the mother has to go to work.

"It's very hard for her. It's just demeaning," Yates explains. "She has to work, and Southern women had not been trained to work."

Her training and background is to look for a husband to provide for her. And unfortunately she takes it out on her children, although she loves them very much.

"It's very realistic, in those terms, of how a family struggles — especially right now, I think, with the economy, and how a woman even in those days can be forced to take care of a family, and yet has no training or background for it at all."

Tom, the son in the play, represents Williams himself. "He has to work in a shoe factory to help support his family, but all he wants to be is a writer, so he doesn't do a very good job at work. He's decided he has to leave, and he's going to join the Merchant Marines." But his mother wants him to stay and help take care of his sister.

"She's so shy she can't function," Yates explained. "Her mother is genuinely concerned about what is going to happen to this girl, because in those days, they didn't have help for the handicapped."

All of which sounds very depressing. But Yates hopes to get around that.

"It sounds pretty dire, and a lot of times it's played that way, but there's humor in it," she says. "So that's what we're trying to do, is to bring out the humor. And there's quite a bit of it, in spite of the overall problems that these people have."

Yates says that the play is often performed in a "very sad, bitter tone," despite the fact that Williams did put funny things into it.

Timm Barnes stars as Tim in the Iowa City Community Theatre's production of "The Glass Menagerie."

"I've done a lot of research on Williams, and he had all kinds of problems in his life. He was homosexual, and at that time people were supposed to hide it, and it was very hard for him, but even during the worst of times, he had this sense of humor... You see it in his letters, and in other people who knew him, who talked about him. I think it's important to bring it out. It makes the play enjoyable, because there's some real wit that shows up, and warmth."

Yates says ICCT chose her to direct because of her interest in a new approach to the play, and because, as a teacher with an interest in Williams, she knows it so well. "He's an excellent writer. There are a lot of Tennessee Williams fans in this area. I don't know if it's because he came to school here, or what, but I think it's one of the reasons the ICCT committee chose the play, because there's a real following here... I think he's a brilliant writer. To me, personally, he really understands women, and how women think. He really gets inside their heads. And his word choice, his imagery — I just admire his ability to write poetically."

"The Glass Menagerie" plays Oct. 23-24, 30-31 and Nov. 5-7 at ICCT, at the 4-H Fairgrounds on Riverside Drive. Tickets are $10, ($9 for students and senior citizens.) There will also be a 2:30 p.m. matinee Nov. 1, for which tickets are $9 and $8, respectively. All other shows are at 8 p.m. Tickets can be purchased over the phone (338-0443), at the door, or at Motts Drugstore or the Robert A. Lee Community Recreation Center, 220 S. Gilbert St.

POETRY READING

U Sam Oeur to read Cambodian poetry

Michelle-Therese Forcier
The Daily Iowan

Going home. For most of us that means a warm, safe place, full of nostalgic and familiar memories.

When U Sam Oeur graduated from the poetry division of the Writers' Workshop in 1968, he returned home to Cambodia. Not long after that he was placed in a concentration camp, and all his books and all his own works were destroyed by a regime bent on creating a new society. His home had become a bitter, cold place; warm familial memories were a thing of the past.

Ken McCullough, an academic adviser at the UI as well as friend and former classmate of Oeur, described Oeur's poetry as, "a chronicle from the time Sam was a teen-ager and took vows about maintaining the spiritual integrity of his country."

When McCullough and Oeur graduated in 1968 from the Writers' Workshop, Oeur went back to Cambodia and the two corresponded regularly. According to McCullough they had planned that of a particular poem overwells them. One such poem is "The Loss of My Twins":

"Deep one night in October '76 when the moon had fully waxed, it was cold to the bone; that's when my wife's labor pains began.

I searched for a bed, but that was wishful thinking; I felt so helpless. Two midwives materialized — one squatted above her abdomen and pushed, the other reached up my wife's womb and ripped the babies out.

What a lowing my wife put up when she gave birth to the first twin.

Very pretty, just as I'd wished, but those fiends choked them and wrapped them in black plastic.

Two pretty girls... Buddho (God)! I couldn't do a thing to save them! murmured my mother.

'Here, Ta (old man)! The midwives handed the bundles to me. Cringing as if I'd entered Hell, I took the babies in my arms and carried them to the bank of the Mekong River.

Staring at the moon, I howled: 'O, babies, you never had the chance to ripen into life — only your souls look down at me now.

Dad hasn't seen you alive at all, girls... forgive me, daughters; I have to leave you here.

Even though I'll bury your bodies here, may your souls lead me, your mom, brother, grandma to a safer place, to a good safe world."

U Sam Oeur's poetry will be read Wednesday at the Arts Center, 129 E. Washington St., at 7 p.m. Ken McCullough will read U Sam Oeur's poetry in English and Oeur will follow with the poem in Khmer chant with Mark Bruckner accompanying on the synthesizer and woodwind instruments.

The pain and agony Oeur and his people suffered is intensely portrayed by the pair as they read the poetry.

at some point, McCullough would travel to Cambodia to translate some folk stories and other literature. In late 1969, McCullough received a letter from Oeur saying, "There's no point writing anymore because everything's censored." In 1976 he was placed in a concentration camp.

In 1984, the English department received a letter from Oeur. According to McCullough, it was the first evidence in years that Oeur, his friend, was still alive. The letter asked for copies of his thesis which was destroyed, along with all his other works, by the people who imprisoned him.

Oeur was stonewalled by many writing programs because, "in the eyes of many faculties, he wasn't a writer because he didn't produce anything. It was Clark Blaise that pointed out, if he wrote anything, he would die," said McCullough. Blaise, director of the International Writing Program, worked to get Oeur into the program. In September, Oeur arrived with only a suitcase full of books.

Oeur's poems, as read by McCullough and chanted by Oeur, are deeply moving. The pain and agony Oeur and his people suffered is intensely portrayed by the pair as they read the poetry — occasionally the two weep when the content

Terrance Simien and the Mallet Boys come to Iowa City to party Cajun style

Tim Rissman
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City Yacht Club is inviting its patrons to "take a little trip south" when it holds its first ever New Orleans/Mardi Gras night tonight, Oct. 21. Festivities start at 4 p.m. and the music starts at 9 p.m.

Complete with shrimp jambalaya, chicory coffee and "Hurricanes" (don't ask!), the Louisiana theme is taken a step further with the scheduled entertainment, Terrance Simien and the Mallet Playboys, a band originating from the Cajun country.

While the band has only just released its debut album, Zydeco on the Bayou (Restless), Terrance and the boys have a long list of accomplishments. Since their beginning in 1984, they have appeared in a motion picture ("The Big Easy"), recorded with Paul Simon, jammed with the likes of Keith Richards and Ron Wood and received more than a little coverage in Rolling Stone — which called its music "... a generous ... serving of boiling-hot squeezebox-and-rub-board workouts."

As the title of the album indicates, the music is strictly zydeco, which is the traditional dance music of the French-descended Creoles who settled Louisiana. The sound centers on the accordion (or zydeco) and the rub board (an old-fashioned metal washboard). The energy level of the music is hard to measure, unless the physical actions of the band and its audience can be used as a sort of measuring device.

Leaping off the stage and jumping through the crowd is a common occurrence at a Terrance Simien and the Mallet Playboys show. Management at the Yacht Club wouldn't come right out and say whether everyone in the bar that night would keep his or her clothes on. Simien's vague summary of the energy level of the shows added to the mystery when he said, "We get into what we do. The music picks us up, you know?" Enough said.

"That the band is part of Miller Genuine Draft's Band Network guarantees a visually and musically exciting show," says Sue Quinn from Miller Brewing Co.'s public relations department. "We have a long history of getting bands who offer a level of entertainment higher than the normal standards." She also adds that the loyal followings of the MGDDBN bands indicates how appealing the music can be.

Hank Miguel, owner of the Yacht Club, summed up the night's entertainment in a different way. "It's a chance to offer music fans in the area a taste of something a little different, but no less appealing."

The evening, he said, is just a part of the celebration of the five-year anniversary of the club. He reflected on the changes and the progress the bar and restaurant has made while he has been owner. "Our music started as a single entertainer who would come in and play for tips, and has progressed to having some of the premiere regional talent play here."

There are many reasons for the positive direction, namely Miguel's willingness to put into the club whatever he got out, the loyalty of his staff and the diverse crowd drawn to the Yacht Club.

Terrance Simien and the Mallet Playboys participate in an evening of Southern fun tonight in IC.

"The Yacht Club has never really been a bar that drew any one specific type of crowd. Rather, it's been the appreciation for good live music, which knows no limitation to one type of group," said Miguel. "Having a night like this is really just to have fun with something a little different, and to thank all of those involved for their commitment. The loyal staff and clientele are the things that have been most rewarding for me."

If you're not ready to get a little loose, you might want to skip this one. But if you're at all familiar with Mardi Gras, be prepared for quite a night. You'll be getting the food, the drinks and the music, and you don't even have to speak French!

Massive violence makes 'Under Siege' just another action flick

Sonja West
The Daily Iowan

There really is no reason to see the film "Under Siege."

It's a waste of time and money, and recent studies have linked the viewing of this film with an increased risk of certain types of nasal cancer.

OK, so maybe that last part isn't true, but it doesn't matter anyway. It doesn't matter what one reviewer says because the people who are going to see "Under Siege" will still go just to see Steven Seagal simultaneously get the bad guys, get the girl and get in a few rounds with a semiautomatic.

This month Seagal portrays Casey Ryback, head cook on the USS Missouri and a former Navy Seal. When the battleship is seized by belligerent terrorists, Casey escapes their clutches and alone must smother their evil plans to sell and detonate several nuclear war heads.

Casey is not completely alone, however, by a lucky coincidence he happens to have Playboy magazine's Miss July 1989, Jordan Tate, for a travel companion.

In an odd plot choice in light of the recent Tailhook scandal, Miss July had been brought on board the Missouri to entertain the crew by jumping out of a cake and performing a sexy nude dance. An enjoyable event, no doubt, for any female crew members who might be aboard, although none were ever shown.

The bunny's role in this adventure would make Susan Faludi cry as the dancer spent most of the film whining lines like: "I'm the girl, why do I have to carry everything?"; "I hate guns"; and "The safest place to be is right behind you Casey."

Miss July's claims to fame are her appearances on a "Hunter" episode and a spot in a Wet 'n' Wild video. She gets easily confused about the situation they are in, and Casey must put things in simpler terms for her. She also manages to get herself into trouble quickly and often.

Some aspects of the film weren't quite so stereotypical. Having the virile hero also be a cook was a somewhat refreshing change. There's something attractive about an action hero who, while locked up in a meat locker as the maniacs in control prepare to blow up Hawaii, yells madly out the door at his guard: "Take my pies out of the oven!"

Casey certainly isn't a peaceful cook, though. "Under Siege" is definitely a very violent film.

Numerous people are killed quickly and without thought by both the good and the bad guys.

"Under Siege" fails in the plot department, fails in the acting department and fails in the character department. The only reason to bother with this movie is to learn the secret answer to burning question "who wins?" People who can live without knowing or have a wild guess about what the answer may be will be $5 and two hours richer. And you never know about that cancer thing.

Prosecutor who inspired 'JFK' dead at 70

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jim Garrison, the pistol-packing prosecutor whose conspiracy theories about President Kennedy's assassination were scoffed at by many, inspired the director of the movie "JFK," died Wednesday. He was 70.

Garrison, who served 12 years as New Orleans district attorney and 12 as a judge on the state 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, was stopped believing that CIA handlers had Kennedy killed to keep the United States in Vietnam.

The cause of death wasn't listed but heart trouble forced Garrison to leave the appeals court on Nov. 1991, three weeks before his 70th birthday and mandatory retirement age.

Garrison is survived by his wife, Leah Elizabeth Ziegler Garrison, sister, five children and one grandchild.

Report: U.S. children suffering, dying needlessly

WASHINGTON (AP) — American children "suffer far too much preventable illness and death," partly because too few are receiving immunizations against disease, according to a report issued Wednesday by the Children's Defense Fund.

The report said that in most states, fewer than 60 percent of pre-school children are fully immunized against polio, diphtheria, tetanus, whooping cough, measles and mumps.

The percentage of 2-year-olds with full immunization ranges from 74 percent in Mississippi to 30 percent in Texas, the report said. Sixteen countries, including Mexico and North Korea, have a greater percentage of 1-year-olds immunized against polio than the United States.

U.S. machinery found at Iraqi nuclear sites

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three federal agencies are investigating U.S.-made equipment found at nuclear development sites in Iraq, a spokesman for the U.S. Customs Service said Wednesday.

The equipment — an electron beam welding machine — was shipped to Iraq in 1988 under a Commerce Department license allowed it to be used only for general military purposes. United Nations inspectors found it after the war at the nuclear site.
