Johnson County offers early voting opportunities

Johnson County residents wishing to vote early in the upcoming general election will be able to do so at several locations throughout the county.

Early voting will take place during the regular office hours of the Johnson County Auditor's Office, Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. The office will also be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday.

Several satellite voting stations will be set up for the convenience of early voters. These will be located in the John Colleton Pavilion at the UI Hospitals and Clinics on Friday from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m.; in St. Peter's Hall in Cosgrove, Iowa, on Sunday from 9:30 a.m. to noon; and in the Senior Citizen's Center, 28 S. Linn St., on Monday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Another alternative is to request an absentee ballot in person and vote at the time of the request.

Additional information about early voting is available from the Johnson County Auditor's Office, 356-6004.

IC 11-year-old responsible for Seville Apartments fire

Investigation into Tuesday night's fire at the Seville apartment complex determined that an 11-year-old Iowa City youth was responsible for setting the blaze. The same youth also started two smaller fires in the same area.

Iowa City firefighters extinguished a fire in a laundry room at the complex, but further investigation revealed that the flames had entered a crack in the ceiling, and been caught in a pipe chase which runs from the building's basement to the roof.

As soon as flames were sighted on the roof, over 80 residents of the building were evacuated. All but the six whose apartments were severely damaged were able to return to their apartments by midnight.

The youth responsible for the fires was released to his parents, and the matter has been referred to the Johnson County Attorney's office.

Trial date set in attempted murder case

A Jan. 11 jury trial date was set at the Johnson County Courthouse Thursday for a 20-year-old Illinois man accused of attempted murder.

Jason Brown, of Gurnee, Ill., is accused of stabbing a man at least five times on Oct. 9, just before midnight. The victim suffered wounds to the chest, torso and back, as well as a punctured kidney.

According to court documents, Brown and the victim attended a party on North Johnson Street and engaged in a fight. Brown allegedly left the scene of the crime and was apprehended later in the evening while in the possession of a blood-stained 5-inch hunting knife.

Rawlings urges participation on anniversary

Jon Yates
The Daily Iowan

It's been almost one year since a disgruntled UI student named Lu Gang took the lives of five members of the UI community, then his own, and left another, UI student Miya Rodolfo-Sioson, paralyzed.

In remembrance of the victims and to help those still suffering from the tragedy, UI President Hunter Rawlings is encouraging all members of the UI community to come together Sunday to help in the ongoing healing process.

"I don't think you can ever fully overcome an event of that magnitude," Rawlings said. "I think we are all somewhat changed as a part of it, partly through our lost innocence."

"I think there was a sense among many people that an event of this magnitude could not happen here, because it is a small, Midwestern town where people know each other and those things only happen in the big cities," he said. "It's quite troubling to realize that they can happen here."

Rawlings praised the UI community's efforts in response to last year's tragedy and said community members can help make the one-year anniversary of the event a tribute to the victims.

"I encourage everyone to participate in one way or another in remembering the events of Nov. 1," he said. "Especially by reaching out to help people who were personally affected, whether they were students or faculty members."

Sunday's activities, including a series of musical remembrances of the victims of last year's shootings, are part of the UI's low-key approach to commemorating last year's event.

"Our intent is to remember and help people remember so that they can discuss their feelings and their responses to the tragedy," Rawlings said. "We don't think it's healthy to repress all of that."

Although physical remembrances — such as a tree planted in front of Van Allen Hall in memory of UI physics and astronomy Professors Christoph Goertz, Dwight Nicholson and Robert Smith, and physics research investigator Shan Linhua, and a walkway being constructed in memory of Associate Vice President for Academic Affairs T. Anne Cleary — are fitting tributes, Rawlings said the continuing counseling offered those affected by the shootings is instrumental to the healing process.

"I think more important than just the physical reminders is the ongoing support that has been offered by the mental-health community to assist anyone who is having problems with the remembrance of the event," he said.

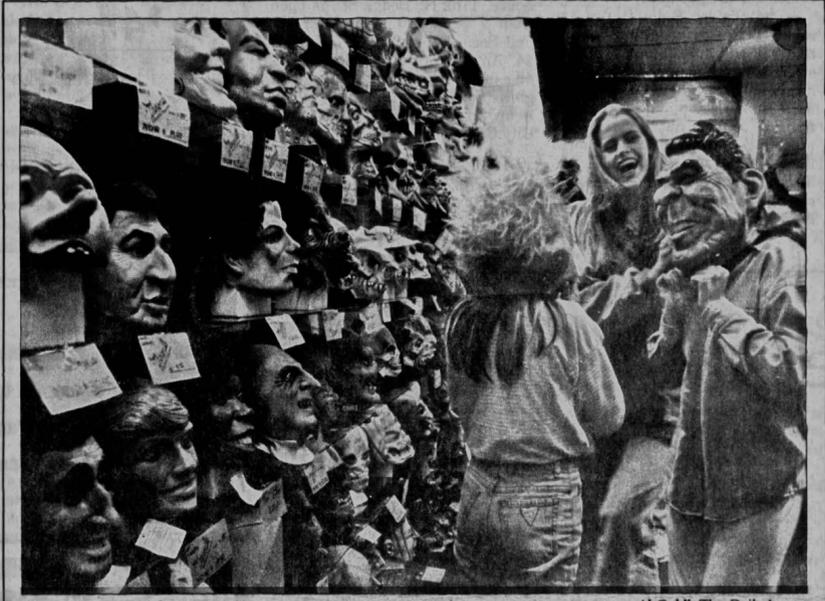

Rawlings also encouraged members of the UI community to reach out to UI Chinese students who may feel responsible for Lu Gang's actions.

"I would like to congratulate the student leaders last year for reaching out to the Chinese students to tell them that they should not feel responsible for this act and to offer them the kind of support they really needed in the midst of a trauma," he said.

Grassley gets approval of Vietnam vets

James Anderson
The Daily Iowan

When U.S. Sen. Charles Grassley addresses veterans groups wanting to know more about those missing in Vietnam, a story of intrigue and skullduggery emerges.

The Butler County farmer tells his account of going toe-to-toe with former Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and the behemoth Pentagon bureaucracy that is keeping secrets on Vietnam veterans who were missing in action or prisoners of war.

"My whole effort is to change the mindset of the Department of Defense," Grassley said. "Families are not getting answers to questions and families of POW/MIA's have a right to know everything the government knows."

Larry Brewer, a Vietnam-era veteran residing in Knoxville, Iowa, said Grassley is making an "honest attempt" to deal with the problems of POW/MIA's. While he usually does not vote for Republicans, Brewer will probably vote for Grassley.

"I think he is a wonderful senator and I have voted for him in past elections," said Dale Ray, a World War II veteran from Boone, Iowa. "He is a true-blue Midwestern-U.S. farming-belt person and his votes are usually my votes."

Dennis Kadner, a Vietnam veteran from Prairie City, Iowa, said that he had voted for Grassley in the past and it looks like he will probably be voting for him again.

"I think Senator Grassley makes a nice impression and has matured," said Mary Warner of Des Moines, who voted for Grassley in a previous election. "But I dropped my party affiliation and I am going to vote for Jean Lloyd-Jones."

Editor's note: These stories are the last two installments in a six-part series on the senatorial race.

Lloyd-Jones campaigns at Amana strike

James Anderson
The Daily Iowan

Traversing Iowa, Jean Lloyd-Jones has logged over 50,000 miles making a case to voters why she should be in the U.S. Senate and why incumbent Charles Grassley should be retired to his Butler County farm.

Entering the "war room" of the striking machinists with a black backpack filled with files and campaign literature slung over her right shoulder, Lloyd-Jones spied a sign stenciled on a board reading: "HEALTH CARE IS A RIGHT NOT A PRIVILEGE."

"We need to get that sign on the strike line," Lloyd-Jones said on her way to show "solidarity" with members of the International Association of Machinists during their recent strike at the Amana refrigeration plant in West Amana, Iowa. Accepting a "Union Yes" button and machinist's coffee mug, which she said would be displayed proudly on her desk in the U.S. Senate, Lloyd-Jones told grogg-eyed strike organizers in the war room that striking is their right.

"Grassley wants them to be able to hire nonunion replacement workers," Lloyd-Jones said. "United we stand."

Upon arriving at the Amana plant gate and shaking hands with union members walking picket lines at the three entrances, Lloyd-Jones made her way in front of a small gathering of strikers and two television cameras.

"We need a national health-care service that covers everyone; it is a right not a privilege," Lloyd-Jones said. "Charles Grassley will not come up with a plan, but will hold a conference and discuss it."

NOV. 1 TRAGEDY REMEMBERED

Memorials planned in honor of victims

Anne Johnston
The Daily Iowan

The first anniversary of last fall's Nov. 1 shootings on the UI campus will not go unnoticed Sunday.

Throughout the day, there will be a variety of commemorative events marking the anniversary, and one organizer says he hopes the events will foster "one giant support group" for the community as it attempts to reflect on the tragedy.

"Last year this whole community was violated and this year the community needs to be healed," said Don Walker, a retired UI microbiology professor.

"I think a lot of feelings are surfacing and a lot of memories are going to come back," he added.

Walker was a close friend of T. Anne Cleary, UI associate vice president for academic affairs and one of the five people killed by disgruntled graduate student Lu Gang. Before taking his own life, Lu also shot UI honors student Miya Rodolfo-Sioson, leaving her permanently paralyzed.

The local action chairman for the November First Coalition, Walker is heading up the group's effort to distribute more than 12,000 baby-white carnations throughout the campus and the community Sunday.

With the help of funds from Hills Bank & Trust, Iowa State Bank & Trust, and First National Bank of Iowa City, the coalition's project is being coordinated by Every Bloomin' Thing, 114 S. Clinton Street.

Although the November First Coalition was formed in the wake of the shootings to campaign for gun-control legislation, Walker stressed that Sunday's flower distribution will be "totally an apolitical gesture," and no group literature will be handed out.

Walker said that originally, the group had planned to distribute about 4,000 flowers. However, as soon as they approached area churches, the project "snowballed."

"This has really exceeded our wildest expectations. It's just totally mind-blowing," Walker said.

Sunday morning, 50 area churches will offer the flowers to their members. Flowers will also be distributed at Muslim and Jewish services on Friday and Saturday.

At 1 p.m. Sunday, pairs of volunteers will begin handing out the flowers at 13 sites throughout Iowa City, including the Pentacrest, the Union, Old Capitol Center, the downtown Pedestrian Mall, the Iowa City Public Library, Sycamore more Mall and New Pioneer Co-Op.

"We hope with 12,000 flowers that as you walk around town Sunday you'll see lots of other people wearing them and maybe somehow this will cause an increase in the bonding," Walker said.

Later on Sunday afternoon, at 4 p.m. — the approximate time of last year's shootings — there will be a commemorative vigil held on the Pentacrest in remembrance of the victims.

Sponsored by the inter-religious Association of Campus Ministers, the vigil is open to anyone wishing to attend. Candles will be provided by the organizers.

"We thought it would be good to provide an occasion in which people can remember what happened and can deal with the loss and the grief in a way which is appropriate for them individually," said Christian Reformed Campus Minister Jason Chen.

Chen said the bell at the Old Capitol will be rung for one minute at the beginning of the 4 p.m. ceremony, and organizers are encouraging area churches to join in with their bells.

In addition, on Sunday evening at 7 in Clapp Recital Hall, there will be a free commemorative concert co-sponsored by the November First Coalition and the UI.

"We think it will be a wonderful way of expressing grief and healing and hope," said Vice President of University Relations Ann Rhodes.

Performing at the concert will be two groups from the UI School of Music.

The choral group Cantores, which specializes in singing Gregorian chant and related repertoires, will perform medieval Latin chants from the Roman Catholic Mass for the Dead.

The La Fosse Baroque Ensemble, a small string orchestra made up of UI students, will perform two pieces by Johann Sebastian Bach and one by Joseph Haydn.

On display in the lobby of Clapp Recital Hall will be a large charcoal etching and a sculpture by local artist Shirley Wyrick, both inspired by the Nov. 1 shootings and their aftermath.

Rhodes said university officials believe the music and art offered at Sunday evening's event will be an appropriate way in which to mark the anniversary of the shootings.

"One thing that came out of this last year was the recognition of strength and support that is in this community, and hopefully this will be a way in which to remember

How to spot a 'good' haunted house

Jon Yates
The Daily Iowan

There's a fine line between being scary and being stupid. To be stupid takes very little. Trust me. But to be scary, I mean really scary, is a difficult task.

The best haunted house I've ever been to was in an abandoned dairy in my home town when I was 6 years old. Infested with rats, bats, cats and other rabid creatures, coupled with enough rusty nails to give passersby tetanus merely through osmosis, crossing the line from stupid to scary took little effort on the part of my home town's Jaycees.

In fact, the damn thing was so scary that I couldn't make it all the way through — they had to let me, screaming and crying, out through a side door.

My sister, who is three years older than I, had no trouble getting all the way through the dairy that year, and has since given me crap about it every Halloween since. To this day, my only explanation for her making it through and me chickening out is the fact that she is a witch. Witches like haunted houses.

It wasn't an age thing. I think if I went through that haunted house today, I'd still run out halfway through screaming and crying. I'm no witch.

You see, a good haunted house knows no age boundaries: It is ageless. So, I've come up with a few rules for distinguishing a good haunted house from a bad one. They are as follows:

■ The Chainsaw Rule: To be a good haunted house, there must be at least one idiot chasing you through the house with a running chainsaw. It doesn't matter that the damn thing doesn't have a blade, it's just a human instinct to be scared of a loud, potentially dismembering instrument. Multiple chainsaws, well, multiplies the effect.

■ The Tammy Fay Bakker Rule: All monsters in the house must outside it.

■ The Age, Height, Weight and Physical Limitation Rule: If there is a sign outside the haunted house restricting persons that are too short, too heavy, too young, or have a history of heart problems, go in. If you feel discriminated against by any of these rules, you should be warned that they are posted for a reason. If you still feel discriminated against, you should contact your local branch of the Affirma-

Rule: Let's face it, kids are wimps. But they generally won't scream or cry in public unless they are really scared. If you see a 10-year-old crying, go in. Anyone older than 15 screaming or crying should be dismissed as unstable.

■ The Sloppy-Drunk College Student Rule: If there is a multitude of drunk, slobbering college students standing in the infinitely long line to get in, leave. The Sloppy-Drunk College Student Rule supercedes the Stand-In-Line-For-Hours-In-The-Cold Rule. Drunk college students have a tendency to throw up in scary situations, and no haunted house is any fun if vomit is involved. Again, you'll just have to trust me on this one.

■ The Adm. Stockdale Rule: If there's a guy dressed up like Perot's running mate, go in. This includes anyone dressed up in a marginally scary costume seemingly speaking in tongues. Also known as the Heartbeat Away Rule.

A good rule of thumb is that the quality of a haunted house is directly proportional to the length of the line outside it.

have more makeup than Jim Bakker's wife. It's not an easy rule to meet, for it is an arduous task, even for monsters, to stay standing with four kilos of Cover Girl on your face. Monsters dressed up like Tammy Fay herself meet this rule unconditionally.

■ The Stand-In-Line-For-Hours-In-The-Cold Rule: There are two parts to this rule; one, that you must have to stand in line for hours and, two, that it must be cold out. This excludes haunted houses in all states south of Missouri (except, perhaps, Texas — all Texans are, by definition, scary.) Standing in line for hours means you're just dumb enough to be scared at a haunted house. A good rule of thumb is that the quality of a haunted house is directly proportional to the length of the line ative Action Office. Haunted houses are a right, not a privilege.

■ The Strobe Light Rule: Strobe lights could make Cindy Crawford look scary. Well, scarier anyway. It's the whole dark, light, dark, light thing. There's a scientific explanation for why strobe lights make things scarier, I just can't remember it right now.

■ The Waiver Rule: If you are required to sign a waiver stating that you will not sue due to stains, sprains or pains incurred at the haunted house, go in. Falling down in a tunnel, stepping on a rusty nail, or being grabbed hard by a monster are all par for the course in a haunted house. So are fake blood stains. A truly good and caring haunted house lets you know when these are possibilities.

BILLBOARD WHISTLES A NEW TUNE

Country music increasing in popularity

Some listeners feel that country music is no longer much different from popular mainstream music.

Sara Epstein
The Daily Iowan

It may seem an inconceivable phenomenon to some, but there's no doubt about it, country music has become more popular.

In early October, country music artists occupied three of the top five spots on Billboard's top albums chart.

Dave Hansen, manager of Discount Records, 21 S. Dubuque St., said that public opinion has become more favorable to country music due to changes in Billboard's rating procedure.

"Country music has always been selling, it's just that nobody accepted it," said Hansen, explaining that a couple of years ago Billboard started determining ratings by actual pieces sold, and not by the particular opinions of record stores and radio stations.

"When people had to acknowledge country music, it became more public and sold more," he said. "It's kind of like the domino effect."

Jim Washburn, assistant manager at Musicland in the Old Capitol Center, said the rise in popularity may be due to the fact that a lot of new country artists, such as Garth Brooks and Billy Ray Cyrus, are appealing to a younger audience.

Hansen agreed, saying that several such artists have "crossed over" to a more popular style, which is more accepted by the mainstream.

"Garth Brooks is not hard-core country," he said.

Although KRUI doesn't reflect the popularity of country music, KRUI Program Director Christopher Calandro said country stations, such as KHAK in Cedar Rapids, are giving others a run for their money.

"Country is one musical format we really haven't touched," the UI senior said. "But KHAK kicked butt in the last ratings; they just slaughtered everybody."

Though KRNA is a popular Iowa City rock 'n' roll station, deejay Samantha Scott said she has received a few country requests. She attributes a large part of the popularity to new marketing procedures.

"They finally started marketing their music like rock," said Scott, agreeing that the newer country music is not the same as traditional country music.

"Billy Ray Cyrus looks like a California stud-muffin," she said. "These artists are dropping the country twang which is also helping them."

It must be, because the Field House bar, 111 E. College St., plays about five country songs a night, according to head deejay Mau Nguyen, and people are enjoying it, he said.

"All different kinds of people are on the floor dancing," said the UI junior. "The music is really general — everyone likes it."

Nguyen feels country music is actually pretty good and has some great lyrics, therefore the popularity hasn't surprised him.

"Country music has been around a long time," he said. "If a country artist comes out with a good song it's going to cross over."

Carl Bonnett/The Daily Iowan
With the new wave of young country artists like Garth Brooks, country music is gaining a larger following among the younger crowd.

In fact, country music was becoming so popular with the Ames college crowd that KSUI, Iowa State University's student-run radio station, began airing a weekly two-hour country music program.

The program's host, ISU senior Scott Pattee, attributes the rise in popularity to the diversity of rock 'n' roll, which he feels has gone in two directions — alternative and metal.

"The alternatives just aren't as good as they used to be," he said. "Country has a different flavor now — it's gone more rock 'n' roll."

However, Pattee doesn't feel country music will sustain its current popularity with the younger generation. He said interest will probably decline but will not "go down as far as it was."

Scott agreed, saying Americans' interests tend to go in cycles.

"I think it will continue getting bigger and bigger and bigger for probably a few years, but hopefully it will be like disco and fade out," she said.

Having worked three years at a country music station, Scott said she has personally observed a relation between country music and heavy drinking, and she says the popularity of country music is reflective of society.

"If we continue in these economic doldrums, you can bet that country music will be popular," she said. "The more repressed and conservative we are, the longer country music will stay riding high."

'America's Most Wanted' to re-enact Gosch abduction

Associated Press

WEST DES MOINES, Iowa — A film crew is in West Des Moines filming an episode of "America's Most Wanted" that focuses on newspaper carrier Johnny Gosch's abduction 10 years ago.

A crew from the one-hour show that airs at 7 p.m. Fridays on the Fox network is filming a re-enactment of Gosch's kidnapping.

Gosch was kidnapped Sept. 5, 1982, while delivering The Des Moines Sunday Register near his West Des Moines home. Eugene Martin, who also was delivering the Sunday newspaper, was abducted near his home in south Des Moines almost two years later. The cases remain unsolved.

Some scenes from the program have been filmed locally.

Don Martin, Eugene's father, also is interviewed on the program, which is to be broadcast Nov. 20.

"This will be a special show dedicated to missing children," said producer Paul Sparrow. "The Gosch case is a very good example of what happens to families and to missing children. There is a sense of frustration, a feeling that it's impossible to get anywhere with an investigation on this."

Students and staff members of the UI, Iowa State University of Northern Iowa, Drake University assembled Union Thursday to hear presentations on alcohol abuse.

The conference was sponsored by the Student Association of the Student Abuse Counselors of Iowa Consortium for Student Abuse Research and Evaluation.

Mark Goldman, chairman of Psychosocial Study Section, National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism spoke on "Longterm Cognitive Deficits in Alcohol Abuse."

Goldman's presentation focused on how alcohol abuse damages the brain and the problems of alcoholics because of this damage.

Goldman said that excessive drinking causes nerve cells, he compared to tree branches, to shrink, impairing cognitive thought.

"What alcohol seems to do is shrink back the branching tree," he said. "The brain speaking to itself all the time."

Goldman said tests on verbal/spatial responses of alcoholics reveal that they are similar to people who have gunshot wounds to the head.

In one test of recognizing faces, respondents with gunshot wounds made 31 errors, while alcoholics made 27 errors. Unimpaired subjects averaged 19 errors.

"In the first few days after stopping drinking, alcoholics are eating very much like people with holes in the head," Goldman said.

In addition, over three months after alcoholics stop drinking, those subjects under the age of 40 tend to revert to normal in verbal and visual responses. However, those over 40 do not revert to normal levels.

Conference examines effects of alcohol abuse

Topics covered included how alcohol damages the brain and its relationship to sexual dysfunction.

William Pepper
The Daily Iowan

Students and staff members from the UI, Iowa State University, University of Northern Iowa, and Drake University assembled at the Union Thursday to hear two presentations on alcohol abuse.

The conference was sponsored by the Student Association of Substance Abuse Counselors and the Iowa Consortium for Substance Abuse Research and Evaluation.

Mark Goldman, chairman of the Psychosocial Study Section at the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism spoke on "Longterm Cognitive Deficiencies in Alcohol Abuse."

Goldman's presentation focused on how alcohol abuse damages the brain and the problems of treating alcoholics because of this damage.

Goldman said that excessive drinking causes nerve cells, which he compared to tree branches, to shrink, impairing cognitive thought.

"What alcohol seems to do is shrink back the branching of the tree," he said. "The brain is not speaking to itself all that well."

Goldman said tests on verbal and visual/spatial responses among alcoholics reveal that they react similarly to people who have had gunshot wounds to the head.

In one test of recognizing and being able to use certain words, respondents with gunshot wounds made 31 errors, while alcoholics made 27 errors. Unimpaired control subjects averaged 19 errors.

"In the first few days after they stop drinking, alcoholics are operating very much like people with holes in the head," Goldman said.

In addition, over three months after alcoholics stop drinking, those subjects under the age of 40 tend to revert to normal in both verbal and visual responses. However, those over 40 do not revert to normal levels.

"The worst time to drink excessively is when you're older," Goldman said.

Goldman said these findings have several implications for therapy techniques.

In the first few weeks of recovery, because of the loss of cognitive ability, alcoholics are not able to make the relationship between excessive drinking and harming themselves.

Goldman said denial among alcoholics is another problem.

"One could not find a more central issue in the treatment of alcoholics," Goldman said.

He said that in the early stages of recovery, denial may be more of a failure to comprehend the problem than a psychological defense mechanism as is commonly believed.

Goldman said alcoholics need to be trained in recognizing their problems, dealing with them in other ways beside drinking, and having the courage to solve them.

"All that stuff is exactly what alcoholics can't do when they first stop drinking," he said. "Maybe what we want to do is wait a few weeks before starting the more psychological types of treatment."

Goldman concluded his presentation by advising counselors who work with alcoholics to consider how much information they load on patients at one time and to work to help patients anticipate problems and deal with them as they come up.

Professor Sharon Wilsnack of the Department of Neuroscience and director of Preclinical Curriculum in Psychiatry and Behavioral Science at the University of North Dakota School of Medicine, gave the conference's second presentation on "Inter-Relationships: Alcohol Abuse, Sexual Dysfunctions and Women."

Wilsnack said until her first study on problem drinking among women in 1981, there were only a few small, regional studies on women, but they were not representative of women nationally.

"We felt it was important to try to do a large national study of women," she said.

Wilsnack focused the 1981 study and the follow-ups in 1986 and 1991 on sexual dysfunction among problem drinkers because there seemed to be a consistent trend among higher levels of drinking and sexual problems.

Wilsnack said studies of 378 light drinkers and 500 moderate to heavy drinkers indicated that young women between the ages of 21 and 30 drink more than older women. The level of drinking continually drops with age.

However, she said lighter drinking — up to four drinks per week — is increasing.

"Even though the overall level of drinking is stable, lighter drinking is increasing," Wilsnack said.

She added that younger women showed a decrease in heavy, episodic drinking, six or more drinks, four or more times per week, from 29 percent in 1981 to 19 percent in 1991.

However, reported incidents of being intoxicated increased from 16 percent in 1981 to 23 percent in 1991, Wilsnack said.

She added this could reflect increasing awareness of what it means to be intoxicated.

Wilsnack said the study indicated that women who were light drinkers tend to feel less comfortable with sexual expression as do heavy drinkers — more than 13 drinks per week. However, moderate drinkers — four to 13 drinks per week — had the lowest levels of sexual dysfunction.

She added that some women may feel that the only way they can express themselves sexually is when drinking.

"Women come to depend on alcohol to mediate sexual dysfunction," she said.

Wilsnack concluded by saying the implications of these findings are not yet clear.

LOCAL FAMILY BUSINESS FOLDS

Mott's to close after 52 years

Sara Epstein
The Daily Iowan

She has to say it at least five times a day.

"Try two doors down at Mott's." Deb Zisko, a cashier at Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St., knows that if any place carries a particular periodical, Mott's probably does.

But starting Christmas Eve, Zisko will no longer be able to refer customers to the store that she herself adores. After being a family business for 52 years, Mott's is closing up shop forever.

Lisa Mott, who owns the store with her father John, explained that closing Mott's means more than just closing a business.

"It's not only the closing chapter of a business, but also a closing chapter of the Mott family," she said.

Lisa's grandfather, Charles Mott, started working as a pharmacist in 1925 at Whetstone No. 3, the drug store which preceded Mott's. In 1940, he bought the store and made it into a family business. When he died in 1988, Lisa and John took the helm.

Ironically, one of the reasons for Mott's success is the main reason behind its closing.

Selling unique foreign fragrances became a Mott's tradition during World War II, said John.

"During the 1940s there was a lot of demand for them, because they were unattainable," John explained. "Nobody wanted to carry good quality fragrances — other stores were only interested in American ones."

Lisa and John Mott

T. Scott Krenz/The Daily Iowan

John said his father pursued these foreign fragrances and proceeded to create a selection unique to Iowa City. However, he added, these smaller fragrance distributors are having a more difficult time finding a large enough market in the United States, and many have decided to discontinue their sales here.

"There just isn't enough of a market for them. Department stores want new, trendy items," he said. "It's just not enough for these companies for what it costs to market."

John said although the decision to close Mott's was a difficult one, in the end it was the right one.

"What else do you do? Start selling things everybody else does?" John asked. Mott's fragrance selection has been the main attraction of the store. He said the newspapers and magazines are popular, but they are merely traffic items, with no real money in them.

Lisa, who is in charge of the fragrances, understands what fragrance distributors are dealing with.

"I'd rather have these companies sell out than mass market, because obviously we feel the same way," she said. "Besides, I couldn't turn around and sell these people what I've been turning them away from all these years — in a family business you're not in it for the money."

In fact, Lisa said she didn't make a conscious decision to work at Mott's the rest of her life when she started 25 years ago.

Lisa had been taking business classes at the UI, but quit school when she realized her grandfather could teach her more than any professor who hadn't ever owned a business.

Neither Lisa or John have specific plans for the future. Lisa said she will take a month off, and John said he's just going to have to find something else to do.

Supervisors agree to settle negligence suit

Victoria Forlini
The Daily Iowan

Johnson County has settled a lawsuit claiming county negligence in removing snow and ice caused an automobile-train accident.

The Johnson County Board of Supervisors at their meeting Thursday approved a settlement for Parker vs. Johnson County, in which the county denied any liability.

John Parker was injured on or around Dec. 28, 1988, when he applied the brakes of his car and slid into the path of an oncoming train.

Johnson County Courthouse records state Parker sued the counties of Johnson and Iowa for "failure to remove snow or ice on the Johnson County-Iowa County line" which caused his accident. The Iowa Interstate Railroad Ltd. was also named as a defendant.

Both Johnson and Iowa counties have each agreed to give Parker $10,000.

J. Patrick White, Johnson County Attorney, said the settlement, which was carried out by Johnson County's insurance carrier, came on the basis of "economic grounds" and not liability.

GROUP TRIES TO RAISE AWARENESS

Halloween party to feature toxic products

Susan Kreimer
The Daily Iowan

As opposed to the serious stand commonly taken in the fight against environmental problems, Environmental Advocates, a local nonprofit organization, will take a lighthearted approach — by "poking fun" at poisonous substances in its first Green Halloween Party, Saturday night.

The event will be held at Old Brick, 26 E. Market St., from 7 p.m. to midnight.

"These are scary times — not only in reference to Halloween — but to the world that we live in. . . . We need to have fun on an environmental level as well because it's so grim out there sometimes," said Chris Soldat, Environmental Advocates chairman, referring to the little progress that sometimes comes from hard work.

To show the disadvantages of using pesticides on lawns, the group will set up a "Toxic House of Horrors" haunted by chemical substances.

"We hope to poke fun at the typical household and the types of harmful chemical pesticides we expose ourselves to every day," said Chris Weir, an Environmental Advocates board member and decorating coordinator. "We're surrounded by chemicals," she said. "The 'Toxic House of Horrors' could be anybody's house."

Outside the house, the group will display plastic green turf to represent the lawn of most homes in American suburbia. Scattered on the make-believe lawn will be typical pesticide containers, which are used to chemically treat lawns in the suburban setting, where "everyone's lawn looks the same," Weir said.

Referring to the chemically treated lawn as "European grass," Weir said a lawn consisting of "native" wild flowers, black-eyed susans, and prairie grass poses less harm to the homeowners, pets and the environment. Exposure to chemical substances has been linked to cancer in pets, she said.

Upon entering the house, Weir said visitors will either meet "live people" or dummies in radioactive suits in the "typical kitchen setting," laden with common household cleaners and detergents which are harmful to the environment.

The chemicals phosphate and phosphorous, commonly found in detergents, promote algae growth and remove oxygen from water once they are released into our rivers and ground water, she said.

As part of its lighter-side-of-the-environment theme, the group encourages partygoers to wear their "favorite environmental costume," whether they decide on a trashbag, a garbage can, or anything else, Soldat said.

"Costumes are not mandatory but certainly preferred in the spirit of fun," he said. "Coming dressed as your favorite recycling bin makes it easier to deal with overcrowded landfill problems. It gives you a break in time before you want to attack the issue again." Prizes donated by local businesses will be awarded to those judged by Environmental Advocates volunteers as wearing the best costume in "each zany category," he said.

"We'll get together as a committee and look at the costumes on parade," Soldat said.

Refreshments and door prizes will also be available. Tickets cost $6 and may be purchased at New Pioneer Co-Op, 22 S. Van Buren St., Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St., or at the door.

U.S. Senate candidate traverses Iowa

Mel Boring has driven his Model A Ford across every county in the state.

Kristin Ward
Special to The Daily Iowan

Twenty months and 1,037 towns ago, an independent candidate for U.S. Senate began his campaign across Iowa in his 1930 Model A Ford.

Mel Boring ventured to the northwest corner of Iowa in February 1991 beginning his well-mapped-out strategy of crossing Iowa in a "county to county, row by row" manner. To date, he has logged more than 37,000 miles in the Model A in his quest to represent Iowa in the U.S. Senate.

This "campaign device," which Boring says is as "gimmicky" as he gets, gets people talking and has provided him with the kind of free press invaluable to a campaign which will spend just $15,000 in the almost two-year period.

The 53-year-old candidate from Rockford, Iowa, who is challenging incumbent Republican U.S. Sen. Charles Grassley, said the U.S. government has "unplugged" the American public.

"One hundred sixty-eight thousand dollars is about 10 times what average Iowans make — that's the unplugged that I want to see plugged back in," Boring said.

An advocate of limiting members of the Senate to two terms, Boring calls the status quo "professional politics gone decadent." His legislative agenda also includes eliminating funding from political-action committees, which he said is a way interest groups have bought the government. He refuses to accept PAC money.

At the kitchen table in his old farmhouse, the candidate was quick to blame the Republican/Democrat tug-of-war for the gridlock in Washington, D.C. Boring said neither major political party has devised a satisfactory plan to eliminate the nation's deficit.

taxes to maintain it. He opposes abortion because it "eats away at family," and is also opposed to the equal rights amendment.

"I won't vote for the ERA," Boring said. "It's not because I don't believe in the things that it's reaching for, but I think it's the wrong approach."

He does not advocate increased gun control, but likes the Brady Bill's efforts to promote a five-day waiting period before people can legally purchase guns.

A graduate of Sterling College in Kansas, Boring said he gets a welcome reception from Iowans but admits there are obstacles to being a third-party candidate. Besides lacking a party label and the core of support and money which accompanies it, he is frustrated with the lack of press coverage he receives.

After a debate this September between five of the nine Senate candidates, including Grassley and Democratic challenger, state Sen. Jean Lloyd-Jones, Boring received what he called an "encouraging" reception. However, he found no mention of his name in The Des Moines Register story on the debate.

Commenting on the September debate and Boring's campaign, Curt Sytsma, press secretary for Lloyd-Jones, said, "Boring is a very bright man. I was impressed and so was Jean."

Boring lives on a small farm near Rockford with his wife Carol, and two of his four children. In 1980, he left the teaching profession to concentrate on writing and is the author of several children's books.

A Pro-

Economy deters Mazda from launching luxury line

Jude Sunderbruch
The Daily Iowan

Proving that the world economic slowdown is truly global and affecting not only U.S. corporations, Mazda Motor of America announced that it will halt the launch of its Amati luxury car division in the United States.

Tom McDonald, a spokesman for Mazda, said that while many factors weighed into the decision, one clearly stood out.

"The main reason was the company analysis of the general softness of the world economy and the luxury car market, and as a result of that, Mazda chose to halt the introduction of the Amati line," he said.

The Amati line had been an attempt by Mazda to move into the increasingly competitive, and very lucrative, luxury car market. Although once dominated in the United States by Cadillac and Lincoln, the luxury car segment was turned upside down in the late 1980s when Toyota introduced its highly successful Lexus line and Nissan rolled out its high-end Infiniti models.

According to Art Garner, a spokesman for Lexus, introducing a new motor car line is not a simple proposition, given the many start-up costs involved.

"It's an extremely difficult undertaking, even in the best of times, to launch a whole new division," he said. "In these times Mazda apparently decided they didn't have the resources to do that."

McDonald said Mazda made the decision from a global perspective, keeping in mind its European and Japanese operations, as well as the American market.

"It's no secret that Japanese companies, especially car companies, have had some problems in their home market," he said. "It's tough medicine, but in the future the end result will be viewed as positive."

In abandoning the Amati entry into the high-end auto market, Mazda will now have to continue to rely on its older 929 model as its premier model for the upper-end market.

"The 929 has been moving, as have all luxury cars, upscale in recent years," McDonald said,

"The 929 will remain the luxury leader of the Mazda franchise."

On the heels of the Mazda announcement came word that the board of directors of General Motors had forced Chairman Robert Stempel to resign. GM, which has continued to take huge losses in recent quarters, has nevertheless attracted attention with several new models, many that critics have hailed as world-class.

Two of these newly revised cars, the Seville and Eldorado models of the Cadillac division, would have been direct competitors of the Amati line had it been introduced.

Vince Muniga, a Cadillac spokesman, said that Mazda would have entered a hard race if it had chosen to introduce the line as planned.

CLARIFICATION

The guest opinion titled "Socialism, Cuba, Columbus and the IISO" in the Oct. 26 edition of The Daily Iowan was printed without the word "central" in the following sentence: "While the Cuban Revolution in 1959 did represent the victory of a genuine national liberation movement, urban workers played no central part in it."

The article titled "Students Against ERA face human rights hearing" in the Oct. 28 edition of The Daily Iowan erroneously reported that the case would be settled at a hearing Nov. 9. Rather, in a closed-door session on that date, the UI Human Rights Commission will determine what action, if any, to take.

DEMOCRAT SLIGHTLY AHEAD IN MIDWEST

Poll: Clinton's lead shrinking

Chris Pothoven
The Daily Iowan

While Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton retains a narrowing lead over President George Bush among Midwestern voters, Texas billionaire Ross Perot has gained increased support since the end of the presidential debates, according to a Heartland Poll released Thursday.

The poll, conducted by the UI Social Science Institute, shows Clinton with 41 percent of the presidential vote preference, Bush with 38 percent, and Perot with 21 percent, according to a three-day moving average of the tracking poll.

The Heartland Poll is based on a survey of likely voters in seven Midwestern states.

"That's a much tighter race overall, but it's deceiving in terms of that overall region," said Arthur Miller, UI political science professor and director of the institute. "It's much more important to look at the state-by-state results."

Clinton shows a comfortable lead in Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Illinois, while Iowa and Missouri voters place him ahead of Bush by a slimmer margin. Bush enjoys a sizable lead in Nebraska and a slight advantage in South Dakota, according to the poll.

Currently, 45 percent of Iowa voters register support for Clinton, compared to 39 percent for Bush and 16 percent for Perot. But Perot's overall support from Midwestern voters has surged since the Oct. 19 presidential debate, the poll shows. It has climbed from 15 percent to 21 percent, although it may be starting to stabilize now.

"In some ways that has to be the big story of the whole campaign," Miller said. "There's been a good deal of discussion about what's happening as Perot picks up strength. Or to put it a different way, is Perot hurting Bush or is Perot hurting Clinton?"

"There's been a good deal of debate and discussion on this point among the journalists and the pundits. Our data tends to suggest that if Ross Perot were not in this race, George Bush would be the one that would benefit," he said.

Although Perot supporters are generally white, male, relatively young, deeply distrusting of government and negative toward both political parties, they tend to rate Bush more positively than Clinton, the poll shows.

On a thermometer rating of zero to 100 — with zero being most negative, 50 neutral, and 100 most positive — Perot supporters gave Bush a 50, compared to only a 39 for Clinton.

Bush is also perceived as being closer to the ideological and issue positions of Perot supporters, such as feelings toward homosexuals serving in the military, government aid to African-Americans, and their position on a liberal/conservative scale.

"Our conclusion is that if Perot were to drop out of the race again or if Perot had never been in this race to begin with, most of those people that are currently supporting Perot would have gone to Bush or would not have voted at all," Miller said.

The economy is clearly the "overarching concern" of likely voters this year, according to Miller.

While 63 percent say the Democrats will deal better with unemployment, 55 percent say the Republicans will respond better to foreign economic competition. Respondents were somewhat evenly divided on the question of who works better on the budget deficit. Thirty-three percent favored the Democrats, 43 percent favored the Republicans, and 24 percent said neither party.

But according to Miller, social and economic issues do not have as much influence on voters as character issues.

While Bush rates highest among Midwesterners and in all individual states on the 'moral' dimension of character assessments, Clinton received higher ratings for the other three character attributes surveyed: leadership, compassion, and the ability to take action and follow through on commitments.

Student group organizes Parents' Weekend

Molly Spann
The Daily Iowan

Taking a break from the planning of many other UI Student Alumni Association projects, this month members have worked on Parents' Weekend, which begins today, and new member recruitment.

A parents luncheon, campus tours, a riverboat, a tailgater before the football game and pictures with Herky the Hawk are some of the events planned for this weekend by members of the SAA.

According to SAA President Kerry Eggesfield, the SAA is solely in charge of Parents' Weekend, unlike other projects on which the organization works.

"We plan it, organize it, and it's all student-run," she said. "We'll start working on next year's Parents' Weekend in February. It involves a whole year of planning."

Eggesfield said that 2,000 parents are registered to take part in this weekend, compared to 1,500 last year. She said the highlight of this weekend will be the tailgater that will be held at the Carver-Hawkeye Arena. An all-you-can-eat pancake breakfast will be featured. Student athletes and local businesspeople have been invited to the event.

"We're offering a lot of things this year that a lot of parents like to do," she said.

Matt Wood, an SAA member, said being involved in events like Parents' Weekend is what he enjoys about being in SAA.

SAA works in conjunction with the UI Alumni Association. Members coordinate the UI Reunion Weekend, survival kits and Hawkeye Visit Days.

Ceci Winter, SAA public relations chairwoman, said that working with the UI alumni is an experience in itself.

Winter said that any UI student who wants to turn in an application may do so by Nov. 13. Interviews will be held Nov. 19 and 20.

Alternative tailgater seeks to promote 'low-risk drinking'

Susan Winterbottom
The Daily Iowan

A pancake breakfast at Carver-Hawkeye Arena Saturday morning will offer UI students an alternative to pre-game activities that often involve drinking.

The "Parents, Pancakes and Pigs-kin" breakfast will last from 10:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. The event, part of parents weekend, is sponsored by the UI Alumni Association and the UI alcohol education program called Hard Choices/Easy Choices.

According to Debra McClung, assistant director of sports promotions, the purpose of the breakfast is to provide a nonalcoholic alternative to tailgating activities.

"Students who are looking for some kind of tailgate activity before the game have an alternative," McClung said. "It's another option to the standard, traditional tailgating activities which usually include alcohol."

McClung said that about 1,200 people are expected to attend the event.

The Hard Choices/Easy Choices program was developed with a $15,350 grant from the NCAA Foundation and underwritten by the Anheuser-Busch Co., which the UI Athletic Department received in March. The program is aimed at helping students make choices about using, or not using alcohol, in a safe manner.

According to Cathy Barnett, acting coordinator of Health Iowa, one of the main purposes of the program is to promote low-risk drinking.

"We know college students drink," Barnett said, "but we encourage healthy choices. We want them to drink in a way that won't hurt them or give them an OWI."

Barnett said that promoting low-risk drinking in addition to encouraging students not to drink at all broadens the scope of the program.

"There are a majority of students on campus who drink," Barnett said. "Drinking isn't bad in itself — it's how it affects you and the choices you make because of it. We'd like to help students make choices about it."

The alcohol education program is "definitely needed" at the UI, Barnett said, citing a survey by Health Iowa in 1991.

"We asked students if they had alcohol in the last 30 days, and over 83 percent said they had." Forty percent said they drove after drinking, and 34 percent said they regretted having sex after drinking, Barnett said. "These consequences made us think we had a problem."

Tickets for "Parents, Pancakes and Pigs-kin" are still available for $3.50 at the Union.

DOCUMENTS REVEAL NEW INFORMATION

CIA knew U.S. exports went to Iraqi defense cos.

Ruth Sinai
Associated Press
WASHINGTON — The CIA knew before the gulf war that at least five percent of U.S. exports to Iraq went to defense industries, but it did not tell the Commerce Department, which approved the sales, documents show.

The Commerce Department approved some $1.5 billion in exports to Iraq from 1985 to 1990, saying most were not designated for military use.

Information revealed Thursday on both sides of the Atlantic indicated that the CIA had information about Iraqi defense-industry purchases both in the United States and Britain.

Many of the Iraqi companies that bought U.S. technology legally turn out to have been military industries with innocuous-sounding names that didn't set off alarms at the Commerce Department. In any case, the department was under White House orders to encourage trade with Iraq. But the CIA, and possibly the Defense Intelligence Agency, knew the true nature of some of the Iraqi companies, according to a congressional investigator's documents obtained Thursday by The Associated Press.

On Jan. 29, 1991, the senior congressional investigator met with CIA officials to ask what the agency had known about 25 of the Iraqi end users listed on U.S. export licenses, and whether the agency had notified the Commerce Department.

F. Douglas Whitehouse, who headed the CIA's committee on technology transfer, said he had run a computer check comparing the 25 end users against a CIA data bank, according to the notes made by the investigator, who also was interviewed on the grounds that he not be identified.

Whitehouse said he had come up with "about five hits" — five companies about which the CIA had information, said the investigator. He said the CIA told him it did not supply the information to the Commerce Department because it was never asked to do so.

Complaints about the CIA's reluctance to share information with other government agencies are legion. The problem was recently underscored in the case of an Italian bank branch in Atlanta, Ga., that approved unauthorized loans to Iraq.

The CIA — responding to congressional pressure — earlier this month admitted that it had failed to provide all the information it had to the judge in the case, and that it had found additional cables in its files in recent weeks.

In a message to agency employees this week, CIA Director Robert Gates said he had asked his inspector general to examine the records system of the Directorate of Operations — the agency's clandestine arm — and to recommend changes that will "put an end to difficulties in responding promptly to congress-sional and other inquiries."

But critics of the CIA argue that the agency has an instinctive mistrust of sharing information with outsiders.

For example, congressional investigators say the CIA knew that Iraqi-owned companies were operating in the United States in 1989 and 1990 under the guise of civilian buying agents when in fact they were military purchasing fronts.

The latest suggestion that the CIA knew about such Iraqi front companies in the United States was provided Thursday. The issue arose at the London, England, trial of three former officials of an Iraqi-owned company — Matrix Churchill — that had a branch in England and another outside Cleveland, Ohio.

Earlier this week, a British official testified that the MI6 intelligence service had infiltrated Matrix Churchill to obtain information about Iraq's defense projects.

To: The University Community

This letter is written to introduce myself to those of you new to House District 45. My name is Minnette Doderer, and I seek reelection to the Iowa House of Representatives. For over twenty years, I have dedicated my life to providing legislative support for education, particularly the University of Iowa, fighting to end discrimination, and for fair tax and insurance laws.

I have consistently fought for the concerns of students. I supported a student on the Board of Regents, and I believe that students deserve access to public education at a tuition they can afford, even if it means we have to find additional resources in our state budget.

Although my days as a student at the UI ended when I finished my degree in economics, I have maintained contact with students, staff and faculty by holding orientations at my home, helping students with papers about politics or public policy, attending student meetings, being a guest lecturer in classes, helping solve your problems as my constituents and by many visits on campus.

My husband and I contributed to funding appeals for new UI buildings. I am a lifetime member of the UI Alumni Association, and I am on the Board of Fellows for the School of Religion. I have helped many of you obtain internships, work on political campaigns, or work in legislative offices. I can do more than listen to, and understand your concerns, because I have the experience and skills to represent your interests in Des Moines and to translate them into public policy.

In 1964, I was one of only five women in the Iowa legislature. I spearheaded the fight for comparable worth, strengthened sexual assault laws, reform of child abuse and spouse abuse laws, and passage of an equal rights amendment to the Iowa Constitution. I am pro-choice. I have worked hard to bring more women into public life.

I attended the Earth Summit in Rio last spring to learn how we can better protect our environment. I am a recognized leader among national organizations of women legislators and serve on committees of the National Conference of State Legislators. I have worked very hard and repeatedly demonstrated my leadership abilities on many issues. Please grant me the honor of continuing to represent you in the Iowa House of Representatives by voting for me on November 3rd.

Sincerely,

FDA DEEMS SIDE EFFECTS NEGLIGIBLE

Depo Provera approved for use as contraceptive

Richard L. Vernaci
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government on Thursday gave women the option of using an injectable drug, Depo Provera, that provides birth control for three months but also may cause weight gain and menstrual irregularities.

"This drug presents another long-term, effective option for women to prevent pregnancy," Food and Drug Commissioner David Kessler said in a written statement.

"As an injectable, given once every three months, Depo Provera eliminates problems related to missing a daily dose," Kessler said.

About a quarter of the women of childbearing age in the United States use the birth-control pill, which must be taken every day.

The Food and Drug Administration's decision followed the advice of an outside panel of scientists who recommended unanimously last June that the drug be allowed for use as a contraceptive.

However, the FDA pointed out that the drug has possible side effects, including weight gain and menstrual irregularities. It also can leave women tired, weak, dizzy and nervous and can cause headaches and abdominal pain.

The FDA's Fertility and Maternal Health Drugs Advisory Committee heard a day of testimony on the drug's side effects before voting that its potential benefits outweighed the risks. The panel considered whether the drug is scientifically linked to breast, liver or cervical cancer.

In 1973, FDA had announced its intention to approve the drug as a contraceptive, but protests from consumer and women's groups during congressional hearings prompted the agency to withhold the approval. FDA again denied approval in 1978, largely because animal studies suggested a link to cancers of the cervix, liver and breast. More recent studies, though, have indicated that the link may not be so strong as previously believed.

The drug, manufactured by Upjohn Co., is already used as a contraceptive in 90 countries.

Dr. Michael Policar, vice president of medical affairs of Planned Parenthood Federation of America, estimated that the drug would cost about $25 per injection. "We've been wanting to use Depo Provera in Planned Parenthood affiliates for years."

Until Thursday, the drug was approved for use in the United States only to treat endometrial and renal cancers. As a birth-control agent, it inhibits the production of the hormone gonadotropin, preventing ovulation.

Upjohn said that although the drug already is available for cancer treatment, the birth-control version is a different formulation.

ELECTION '92

Vote for, not against, a candidate

It would be interesting to find out how many people plan on voting for Bill Clinton simply because they don't want to cast their ballot for President Bush. Even with Clinton's double-digit lead over Bush going into the final days of the campaign, I don't believe it to be an accurate representation of the true support Clinton has. When most pollsters ask questions, those questions are phrased in such a way that a voter can only give support to the three major candidates, and if they give support to some other candidate, they are likely to be marked down as "undecided."

The press has us living in an election state that is either black or white. If we only had the press to go by, one would believe that there were only three candidates running for the White House. But that just isn't true. There are over a dozen tickets running for 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. on Iowa's presidential ballot alone. But you wouldn't know it by reading any mainstream newspaper or watching network television.

Now some will argue that only those candidates who actually have a chance to win the election are being covered. But ask why they have a chance to come out on top; it is because the press comes to them looking for a story, not because they are going to the press hoping to get one. Some also may argue that only those who have the experience to run this country ought to be followed daily by the media. However, some alternative candidates have had more federal or state government experience than Ross Perot. For instance, Andre Marrou, Libertarian presidential candidate, served in the Alaskan House of Representatives and ran for vice president on the Libertarian ticket in 1988.

The all-inclusive labels of conservative and liberal are all but meaningless to most. One cannot chunk over 200 million people into either group A or B, but that's exactly what the press does every four years.

I'm not saying that the press shouldn't be read or listened to when deciding who we will blame in four years for this country's problems. Just don't believe everything you see and hear these final days of campaigning. And above all, don't buy into the belief that the only way to get Bush out of office is a vote for Clinton or Perot. Why don't we change the system rather than just the CEO? Ask yourself who you want as president, not who you don't want as president.

Rich old Texans

In recent weeks, George Bush and Ross Perot have assaulted each other and Bill Clinton with insidious insults, insinuations and allegations, as well as outright lies. This appalling display has left each appearing less presidential in both bearing and judgment. They have not only demeaned themselves, but also the electoral process. How can either of these two men remain in serious consideration as candidates for what has been called the most powerful position in the world?

It has been an unusual presidential election year and the campaigns have taken to the television airwaves as never before. In an effort to bypass the news media and gain access to a mass audience, candidates have appeared on "Donahue," "Oprah," and "Larry King Live" interspersed with the usual unusual guests. Between shows about homosexual transexuals, dwarf-tossing and incest, Bush could talk about family values and the biases of the "liberal media" which he feels depicts him as out of touch.

Bush attempted to spread the unsubstantiated claims of Bob Dornan, R-Calif., and other House Republicans who exploited C-Span to speculate, in the middle of the night while others were trying to end the congressional session, that Clinton may have become entangled with the KGB while touring Europe as a student. Ignoring the fact that 50,000 other Americans traveled in the Soviet Union that year, they decided that Clinton could not have been a tourist, but was instead the willing dupe of the KGB. The president went so far as to use the State Department, and our tax dollars, to investigate files on Clinton and his mother.

Perot's allegations must shame the Republicans with his "world class" inventiveness. Perot claimed that the Bush campaign sought to make public photos which had been doctored to show his daughter, Caroline, in a lesbian act. He further claimed that the Republicans had plans to disrupt the same daughter's wedding and that these efforts forced him out of the campaign last summer.

Perot became agitated when reporters pressed him for his sources and proof of his claims. He became angry when they asked about other so-called plots against him, such as his claim that the North Vietnamese contracted with the Black Panthers to kill him, or when he claimed Texas drug dealers wanted to kill him. As proof, Perot said that five men were once on his lawn, bent on destruction no doubt, but ran away after his guard released a dog. How pathetic that he ever would have been considered to lead this country.

Those two rich old Texans, Bush and Perot, have a rich and varied past together. Not only have they worked together in Texas, but each ascended to national political prominence through President Richard "Tricky Dick" Nixon. Both claimed Nixon was innocent and wound their ways into influential positions in the Republican Party. Perot gave money for the Iran/Contra deal and records show Bush was not "out of the loop" as he claimed.

These two epitomize the sneaky, foul, back-room politics which have disgusted the nation. Now they have added paranoid fantasy to the electoral menu. The chance to rid ourselves of them comes this Tuesday. Make good use of the opportunity.

Unusual places to display one's craft

Forget "Night of the Living Dead," or "Return of the Living Dead," or "Lost Credit Cards of the Living Dead" as you parade around in a costume this weekend. Sunday is the DAY of the Dead.

Largely ignored by American culture, with the exception of those who make a career out of wearing black all the time, the Day of the Dead makes a celebration of lost loved ones, kind of like a Mexican wake; that's it, a Carlos O'Kelly's-flavored march of the deceased.

Giving in to the upcoming funeral fest, my burning curiosity and the change of seasons, I made a trip down to Oakland Cemetery the other day to look at tombstones other than the one under the Black Angel. It's true, there are other people buried there — famous people, even.

Well, much to my surprise, the Black Angel isn't half as exciting as some of those tombstones down there. The stones say all kinds of things, in letters and in pictures. I won't go into detail — far be it from me to offend anyone's family — but I suggest people take a stroll sometime through the cemetery when it's daylight for a change. You won't be disappointed.

The recurring art that struck me deepest were portraits of the deceased. Not Polaroids, either — photos fade; these likenesses are literally etched in stone.

I made a call and found out the artist is local. He's Fred Seger, a former tennis pro and amateur artist, now making a living drawing pictures for Miller Bros. Monuments in Iowa City. According to their cards and their ads, Miller Bros. have been in the memorial-designing business since 1876 and are this area's "Rock of Ages" dealer — a kind of stone. They're also within a mile of Carlos O'Kelly's.

Bert Miller, who sold the business to his son Randy eight years ago, gave me the lowdown on stones and introduced me to Fred, who looks a lot like Wojto from "Barney Miller." Is all this coincidence? Not when you're dealing with the dead, honey.

Miller, Bert that is, said Seger's the only artist of his kind around here. He walked into Miller Bros. five years ago with a portfolio and no idea that his work would eventually become a part of a nationwide trend. "Otherwise I would have been contracted five years before that."

People come in to Miller Bros. with a photo and a rough idea of what they want on a stone and the staff comes up with a final product. Seger has done everything from cows and sheep to wildlife settings, landscapes and aerial views of farms. "We do tons of aerial views."

Good word choice, Fred. Each of the standard-size granite stones weighs in around 1 ton. Seger said he sometimes gets nervous that the stone he's working on may slip from its mount and crush his knees. Ouch.

When not working on his balancing act, Seger is developing his specialty — portraits. He came in to Miller Bros. with line drawings of farmers that sold for $25 to $30 a piece. He's now doing free-hand sketches and collage-style portraits that go on a stone and, with stone and engraving costs added in, sell for around $5,000 or more. He just recently completed a project he estimates at $10,000. Add into this the fact that these are permanent works of art and on constant display — not bad for someone with no formal art training.

"I used to have shows in galleries, now I take people to cemeteries to show my work."

Fun. Seger's work is only part of the total monument process. Customers come in and order stone type and size, what they want written on it and any artwork. Most of the lettering and some of the art is done with a computer that creates a stencil and the design is then sandblasted into the stone for eternity.

Customers may come in wanting a design they've seen sandblasted on other stones and then see Seger's hand-etched sketches hanging around the office. "They're unaware of what can really be done" in personalization, he said.

What can really be done? How about cheerleaders, chipmunks and Chevrolets? How about 18 wheels and a dozen roses? How about cornfields?

So this is a Midwest thing, right? Not according to Seger, who said he's seen this trend on the coasts and then eventually came here. He even suggests it may have first been a "European thing. Soviets, Italians... they're more into monuments and sculptures and they're bringing it here."

Doesn't some of the work seem, well, tacky? "We try to explain it to them, but it's whatever means something to someone. We try to be a buffer, try to put a tasteful quality in things."

Seger's work shows up best on dark stones with names like Royal Mist, African Black and Indian Black. Some work on the dark red and dark brown granite looks good, too. Gray, he said, just doesn't give the right contrast of light and dark.

Despite the funeral formality of his work, Seger manages to make light of his life in the rock business. He dresses casually and works in a well-lit office that blares, of all things, the Rolling Stones.

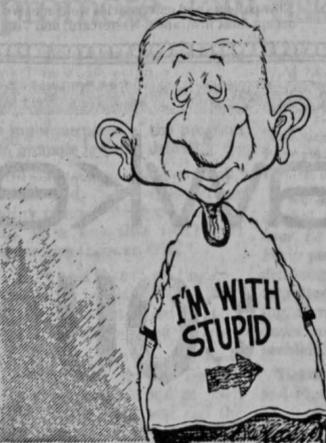

But doesn't it kind of freak him out that surviving spouses have that forboding blank space next to the deceased, like they're just waiting to die?

That's nothing, he says. Some customers commission him to do portraits of both husband and wife, even though only one of them is dead. Younger widows and widowers are now permanently etched into the granite while they continue to live their lives and grow (and look) older.

Pretty Wilde, huh?

Just how biased can the media really be?

"The journalists of the United States are generally in a very humble position, with a scanty education and a vulgar turn of mind." — Alexis de Tocqueville, "Democracy in America."

While charges of media bias are a ubiquitous element of political campaigns in this country, even seasoned political observers are hard-pressed to recall an election where the charges have been made more persistently or loudly.

Particularly among Bush and Perot supporters — as well as from the candidates themselves — the charge of media bias against their candidates is taken as a truism.

Journalists now fight with politicians, lawyers and used-car salesmen for the bottom rung in public-approval surveys of the profession.

Yet while it is almost beyond dispute that journalists are biased in some sense of the word, the impact of this bias on the electorate is much more problematic, and even if an impact were to be demonstrated, that there is any remedy is highly doubtful.

That news reporters do not mirror the political and social attitudes of the public at large is now beyond dispute. Surveys of professional journalists, particularly those in the national media — that is, those reporting for the network news, and print journalists working for newspapers like The New York Times — consistently show that reporters are overwhelmingly more liberal and secular than is America at large.

So, too, in this campaign year, even journalists who admit to being liberal Clinton partisans, like Newsweek's Eleanor Clift, report that the large portion of journalists covering the presidential campaign are Clinton supporters. The liberal magazine, The New Republic, even started a weekly feature titled, "The Clinton Suck-Up Watch." It reports — by direct quotation — the worst of that week's Clinton sycophany within the media.

In the standard argument, the recitation of these facts is sufficient to damn the media as biased. And, to be sure, if all that is meant by media bias is that reporters do not share the same personal political opinions as the public at large, then the charge is true.

Yet those making the charge intend to reach a much broader conclusion. What they intend the argument to imply is that the general leftward lean of professional reporters also somehow distorts the political process.

While this additional charge may ultimately prove to be true, at this point there is little real evidence that it is true. And even if evidence were to come by that could persuade the agnostic to believe the broader charge, Americans would be hard-pressed to do anything about it.

In order for the charge of distortion to stick, two things must be proven: First, that the personal political opinions of reporters biases how they report their news stories; and secondly, that the American people cannot sort out and discount the media's biases.

For too many politicians and political partisans, journalistic objectivity means publishing only stories that repeat the information in a candidate's campaign brochure. Yet negative stories, no matter how inconvenient we might feel them to be for our candidates, cannot be prima facie evidence of journalistic bias. And if the truth be told, reporters rarely fabricate the information in their stories.

The more sophisticated charge of media bias, however, is also the one that is more difficult to get a hold of. The more sophisticated charge isn't that journalists report false information, but that the information they do report tends systematically to portray one candidate in a poor light.

This is the charge that the media are being "unfair" to a certain candidate. To be sure, anecdotal evidence seems to be out there aplenty. The Democratic National Convention seemed upbeat and exciting; the Republican Convention seemed a bit confused and divided. Was this because of the media coverage, or did the media simply pick up on the atmosphere at the respective conventions?

After all, there was much more ambivalence at the GOP convention towards George Bush, evidenced both by the viscerally anti-Bush "Buchanan brigades" as well as by the revolt of the two-martini Republicans on the cultural issues. It was oil and water at the GOP convention. As Reagan proved, and as Bush showed in 1988, a well-run campaign can in large part force the media to put forth the message that the candidate wants to communicate.

Nevertheless, even if the stories themselves are systematically biased, complainers still must show that Americans pick up the bias unreflectively. This is the biggest conceptual leap in the argument. After all, millions of Americans right now would agree that the media are biased. Listen to average Americans and you will hear the media version of stories being discounted severely.

What is needed for this argument to be convincing is a set of carefully controlled studies demonstrating the method and magnitude of the media's bias on public opinion. I have yet to hear of one. And I think that the point is far too important simply to believe an assertion. Voters are more sophisticated than the sophisticates deign to believe.

It is convenient to believe that media bias is the root of all our troubles. It would be convenient for me to blame the stall of conservatism on the media. Yet while I do not believe that the media are blameless, and many times they do not take their commitment to responsible objectivity as seriously as they ought, I remain skeptical of the charge that the media control the thoughts of millions of Americans.

The media are an all-too-human institution. While I have met many reporters to whom I have the greatest respect, most of those I meet have shallow and narrow educations. And many are arrogant, self-righteous, griggish and tedious blowhards. In short, they're like many conservatives I know, and maybe even a little like me.

It simply does not strain my credulity to believe that Bush gets bad press because he has run a poor campaign this year. And Perot, ironically, blames everybody but his own, quirky statements for being responsible for his press coverage. As much as I would like it to be otherwise, it seems to me that they've gotten the media they deserve.

Laws can be changed...

To the Editor:
I have told many that to share with another is a "risky" thing to do; to love another is very "risky" because you bare your most inner self. But to declare that another person is equal to you is the riskiest of all. And maybe it is this part, being equal, which is enough to make people oppose the Equal Rights Amendment. Is it so simple — equality — so pure — so rare.

That is what the Iowa Equal Rights Amendment is all about: equality.
We have a fine set of laws granting equality to women and men in many areas of community life. But they are laws, and are only as good as the support of the legislative body at any given time. I have seen major laws changed in a very short period of time!
While I was president of the Senate, a law was passed which required the governor to appoint, "as nearly as possible," equal numbers of men and women to all boards and commissions. The governor proceeded to flout the law in his appointments to the Board of Regents, stating that he could not find any "qualified" women. In 24 hours, the House and Senate removed the "as nearly as possible" clause and had the bill on the governor's desk awaiting his signature. A law can be changed in a very short period of time!
Remember the helmet law? Passed in one session, rescinded the next year.
Remember hearings over two years to develop a new formula for the schools? The new formula was adopted and implemented — then rescinded when the state ran short of money. Laws can be changed in a very short period of time!
The men and women of Iowa have worked side by side to develop this state and, now, deserve equality in the Iowa Constitution.
What could be bothering the opponents of the Iowa Equal Rights Amendment? A chance for real equality?

Democrats and family values

To the Editor:
Recently, several members of the Iowa House Democratic reform task force unveiled a welfare-reform strategy which would require welfare recipients to work outside of the home in order to receive benefits. Rep. Mike Petersen states that this reform is necessary because the current system promotes low-income families to "languish in dependency and it cheats the taxpayers..."
Obviously, the Iowa Democrats are unaware we are in a recession and jobs are scarce. Perhaps they are also unaware that incentives to businesses to hire welfare recipients will encourage businesses to fire current employees to hire welfare recipients, thus the fired employees are likely to then require welfare benefits. And perhaps the task force is not concerned about who will provide care to the recipients' children, since the task force failed to address the lack of affordable child care.

This hasty effort to somehow force welfare recipients to find jobs that do not exist ties in with the family values theme set forth by the Republicans. Under this scheme a wealthy woman like Marilyn Quayle who stays home to raise her children, works hard and makes a valuable, beautiful contribution to society. She is honored. A woman who works outside the home, often because she has to, is producing the loathsome latch-key child. She is cold and selfish. A poor mother who stays home, raises her children and receives welfare could find a job, but it is too tempting to lay back, basking in the luxurious lifestyle welfare benefits offer. She is dependant, lazy and needs to be forced to get a job.
Apparently, Democrats would like to take the lead in this ugly family values election hoax. With friends like that, who needs enemies?

PAC money-making decisions

To the Editor:
As a family farmer and as a voter, my first concern is the welfare of farmers in Iowa. After much thought, I have decided that the time has come to replace Charles Grassley. I am voting for Jean Lloyd-Jones, and I am urging every friend of agriculture in Iowa to vote for her as well.
I have several reasons for making this decision. The first is that Charles Grassley has been a consistent champion of the "traditional" approach to farm policy — an approach that has driven one third of Iowa's farmers off the land. I have read Jean Lloyd-Jones' farm plan several times, and it offers something that Charles Grassley has failed to offer in all his years of public office — positive ideas for change to keep farmers on the land.
My second reason for endorsing Jean Lloyd-Jones is that, at great expense to her campaign, she has refused PAC money. In my opinion, Charles Grassley's PAC money has biased his vote against family farmers over and over again — and I would like to submit several examples of what I mean.
■ In 1990, after receiving $150,000 from oil companies and other special interests opposed to ethanol legislation, Charles Grassley voted against the original ethanol bill, which would have required oxygenated fuels in 101 American cities. And on the floor of the Senate, Grassley admitted that he voted against farmers "in deference to the concerns of the oil companies."
■ During the debate on the 1990 farm bill, after receiving more than $100,000 from international chemical companies, Charles Grassley spoke out against Circle of Poison legislation, which would not only have protected our children from dangerous pesticides on imported foods, but would have given Iowa farmers the level playing field they deserve.
■ Again, during the debate on the 1990 farm bill, Charles Grassley led the fight to eliminate modest research into sustainable agricultural techniques. The chemical companies that fund his campaign oppose low-ered pesticide use, and George Anthon was right when he reported that Charles Grassley led the "chorus of genuflecting politicians" who bowed to pressures from "the chemical and fertilizer industries."

I realize that Grassley claims to be the U.S. Senate's "only farmer." This claim is false, and therefore an insult to the voters, but even if it were true, I can tell you this: I'd rather have a nonfarmer in the U.S. Senate who shows real concern for Iowa's farmers than a self-proclaimed farmer who has never introduced a comprehensive farm bill and who owes hundreds of thousands of dollars of allegiance to the chemical and pesticide companies.
I've talked to Jean Lloyd-Jones several times. She's a quick learner, and she's got her head in the right place. And I have no doubt she'll vote with the family farmers I care about. I don't care if she never slops hogs, she'll vote right — and that's why she should be the choice of all friends of agriculture in 1992.

Choosing not to vote

To the Editor:
As the election approaches, more and more people are feeling pressure to commit to one of the candidates. Few really want to choose either Bush or Clinton; even fewer now believe that Perot should run the country. But at this point, those who feel they must vote for candidates are having to settle for much less than they want. Those who are leaning toward the Republicans say we should choose the devil we know. Those who favor the Democrats say we should choose the lesser evil.
But even if we do know all we should about Bush's dealings in office, and even if Clinton would be less terrible than Bush — questions that are open to debate — I refuse to help elect either candidate to office this year. I won't choose a devil whether I know him or not; I won't choose evil of any degree. Such a choice — like the choice between an unwanted pregnancy and a backstreet abortion, or the choice between fighting and fleeing an unjust war — is no choice at all.
Nor do I accept the smug, shallow, seventh-grade civics-book cri-

Plaid-shirted hicks

To the Editor:
Real Iowa farmers are a great deal more sophisticated than the plaid-shirted, self-interested hicks Grassley portrays them to be. Real Iowa farmers are more like Jean Lloyd-Jones. They know that the transportation infrastructure is more important to their prosperity than farm subsidies. They know that keeping the Earth healthy is one way to preserve family farms for coming generations. They know that international peace is an important issue in maintaining world markets.
Jean Lloyd-Jones is a real Iowan, a woman of proven integrity, profound intelligence and longtime devotion to leaving the world a better place than she found it. It is time to make Jean Lloyd-Jones our senator because she can more accurately represent who we, farmers and the rest of us Iowans, really are. We won't have to tell Jean Lloyd-Jones that a suit and pumps are the appropriate attire for a senator from Iowa!

CLEAN AIR STANDARDS TAKE EFFECT

New gasoline reduces air pollution

H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — This winter automobiles in most American urban areas will be polluting less, thanks to a cleaner burning, peppier gasoline required by the government. But the new gas will probably cost a little more.

As a result of the regulation that takes effect Sunday, carbon monoxide emissions from automobiles and small trucks will be sharply reduced in 39 urban areas from Boston, Mass., to San Diego, Calif., say air quality experts.

"This is the first big program under the Clean Air Act to go into effect," said Dick Wilson of the Environmental Protection Agency. "It's the first thing the public will actually notice."

Under the 2-year-old law, service stations in the 39 areas, which don't meet carbon monoxide health standards, will be allowed to sell only gasoline containing an additive that provides more oxygen, thereby allowing it to burn cleaner.

The new blend must be used over a four-to-seven-month period, mostly during cold weather, depending on the severity of air pollution. The EPA estimates that the new gasoline will result in a drop of about 20 percent in carbon monoxide emissions from cars and trucks.

Carbon monoxide is emitted from a vehicle's engine as it warms up and, therefore, is a greater problem in winter and in high-traffic areas. Even in relatively mild concentrations, it can cause dizziness, headaches and problems for elderly people with heart conditions.

The new "oxygenated" gasoline blends cut down on carbon monoxide emissions because the gas burns cleaner during warm-up, say EPA officials.

Last year there was concern about whether enough of the additives — either ethanol or a petroleum-based product called MTBE — would be available. But industry officials say no shortages are now expected.

The price, however, is likely to be higher, although it's unclear how much.

Oil companies say it costs 3 to 4 cents more a gallon to produce the oxygenated fuel. Motorists also may have to buy more gasoline because the new blend is less fuel efficient than the old gasoline.

"We've already had a 4-cent (wholesale price) increase" related to the new fuels, said Mel Sherbert, president of the Service Station Dealers of America and owner of two Amoco stations outside Washington. "It's what's been predicted. I don't know if we're going to be hit by another hike."

Retail price spikes have occurred in some parts of the country where the new gasoline has been delivered to service stations. But it's not clear whether the price increases will hold.

"We really don't expect much of a price increase at all," said Geoff Sundstrom, a spokesman for the American Automobile Association, which tracks gasoline price trends.

RIVAL

Rarely missing an opportunity to take a dig at her Republican opponent, Lloyd-Jones continued to take the incumbent to task on health care and told the machinists that 80 percent of strikes include some controversy about health care.

"I've seen her on television and she is facing one of the hardest issues," said Larry Ristine, a striking machinist from Cedar Rapids. "I'm with her 100 percent on that issue."

Ristine said he voted for Grassley in 1986 but will probably vote for Lloyd-Jones this time.

"I'm not voting for Grassley, his track record is not that fantastic," said Mike Limpton, another striking machinist. "Chuck Grassley better watch what he is doing or this woman will walk all over him."

After hearing Lloyd-Jones speak for the first time, Doug Arnold, another striking machinist, said she had her priorities "straight" when it came to people, and in a situation like this, she could really help the strikers.

"Health care is the biggest issue because it affects everyone here," said Larry Tuttle of Belle Plaine, Iowa. "I voted twice for Charles Grassley. I'm definitely going to take a look into her campaign."

Jeffrey Morgan, a service coordinator at the rural employment agency in Conroy, Iowa, where Lloyd-Jones made a campaign stop prior to visiting the strike line, said he thought she was addressing the right issues, but would like to see her be more aggressive.

"I think she is a lot more in touch with people than Senator Grassley and has a commitment for women and people with disabilities," Morgan said.

During a brief but aggressive campaign speech to the UI Young Democrats, Lloyd-Jones put Grassley's positions on everything from his opposition to funding for the National Endowment of the Arts to his acceptance of PAC money through the gauntlet.

"I think she has good ideas. She is pro-choice, pro-ERA, and wants to help middle-class people," said Shannon Quigley, a UI sociology major. "It is great she is campaigning without PAC money."

Sarah Webber, a UI American studies major, said she "connected" with Lloyd-Jones on her issues and that Grassley was a "hypocrite."

"I don't think we are in any danger of peaking too early," Lloyd-Jones said. "We have put all the issues out there and we are not holding anything back."

After being politely pulled from the hamburger line by a staff person, but not until he had shaken two more hands, Grassley and a small entourage made their way into the game as guests of the college president, acknowledging greetings of "Hi" and "Hello, Chuck."

"I've always liked his plain-speaking and clean looks," said Ken Hebron of Indianola. "He did me a big favor when our city was coming to pave a road over my agricultural land."

Hebron said because of Grassley's efforts, he did not have to pay $25,000 for a "block of cement" that would have been placed on his property.

"I hope I am not sounding smug, but I feel pretty good about the election, still understanding that 24 hours is still an eternity in politics," said Grassley, who will work on his farm on this final weekend of the campaign and combine corn if it is dry.

When asked what he might do if Jean Lloyd-Jones pulled any last-minute political surprises, Grassley said: "We are prepared for anything."

R.I.P.

A history oriented trivia game invented, developed and manufactured in Iowa City.

An R.I.P. player's reaction:

Our family played "R.I.P." for the first time at our family reunion this summer. It was the hit of the week. It's true what the directions say--it's not important to know the exact year some famous person died. We almost never did. But we would usually have strong hunches as to the decade, and would often come within three or four years of the correct year.

This is a game for the baby-boom generation and their elders. The longer you've lived, the more you've experienced, the better a player you will probably be. Our family found out that inter-generational teams are the best, so that we had seven decades of memories to draw on.

What makes this game so much fun is the discussions you have with your teammates trying to decide amongst you the most accurate date. Even if you don't consider yourself a "Trivial Pursuit" kind of person, and even if memorizing dates scared you away in history class, you will have fun playing this game!

At 6-feet-10 inches tall, it may be hard to comprehend how Iowa center Earl Earl can be a little frightened into the 1992-93 Hawkeye campaign.

Frightening is more like Iowa's opposition.

"It's almost scary to think I've been here," Earl said Thursday as the Hawkeyes begin their annual Media Day.

In all likelihood, those are probably the sentiments of the teams in the Big Ten — one of the nation's toughest conferences — don't figure to be clowning.

Already the Hawkeyes' frontrunner with 277 points, the senior out of Moore is the nation's leading rebounder, shotblocker as well as the Big Ten's record-holder with 1,000 points in conference games.

That this season will be his last, Earl has his sights set on the NCAA career record blocks, set by Rodney Blair Joseph's (Pa.) from 1985-88.

"It's basically expected of me," Earl said. "It's always been up in your face. There's no reason that I shouldn't accomplish the goal. Of all the things I've accomplished back in the day, I think that this probably has been one of the most important that I do."

Sometimes an unbeaten team isn't all its cracked up to be. In the case of the Hawkeye field hockey team, a perfect mark on Coach Beth Beglin to find ways to motivate her players.

"We are trying to rekindle that initial enthusiasm that we had the first three weeks of the season when they came out like they were shot out of a cannon," Beglin said.

However, attempting to find a restoration hasn't exactly been the form of lively pep talks. Instead, the Iowa coach decided to let her club take some time from the sport.

"It seems like midterms never end," Beglin said. "I decided to let the team rest from injuries. We felt that what we could do is to take the sticks away and tell them to call us, we will call you."

The No. 2 Hawkeyes will add to their 26-game winning streak at Grant Field when they host the Ohio State Buckeyes in a 12 p.m. Saturday.

Must-win for Iowa? Don't mention that to Coach Fry

John Shipley
The Daily Iowan

His team is moving farther and farther away from a bowl bid and closer and closer to a losing season. But Coach Hayden Fry won't call Saturday's game with arch-nemesis Ohio State a must-win situation.

"Is it a must for the fans? Is it a must for the players? Is it a must for the news media? A must for the coaching staff?" Fry asked. "No. Hunter Rawlings hasn't given me an ultimatum."

Iowa beat the Buckeyes last season in Columbus, 16-9, en route to a 10-1-1 finish. But the Hawkeyes (3-5, 2-2) aren't quite the team they were last year and Fry has had a terrible time of it versus Ohio State, compiling a 3-9-1 record, with two of those losses coming at SMU.

As he has in the past, Fry refused to put all his eggs in one basket concerning Saturday's game, which will be televised nationally on ABC at 2:35 p.m. "What happens if we don't win? I don't know if anything is a must," he said.

But phrase the question a little differently, and Fry will give a slightly different answer.

"You can say, 'Is it a must-win in regards to getting a bowl bid?' I'd say yes, I think that is a must," he said. "But whether it's life or death, whether you're going to eat your breakfast the next day, I'd say no."

After winning two straight Big Ten games and climbing to within a game of .500, the Hawkeyes fell to Purdue last weekend in front of 70,397 Homecoming fans. It was the Hawkeyes' first loss to an unranked team and Fry, for the first time, got on his players afterward.

"I really feel sorry for some of the players because some of them were really hustling and doing a good job," Fry said. "But there were not enough of the players that were not carrying out their assignments. ... We had enough breakdowns that it wasn't a good sound football team."

On the surface it appears the Hawkeyes are overmatched Saturday. The Buckeyes (5-2, 2-2) are hot, coming off a 27-17 win at Michigan State during which they trailed by 11 in the second quarter. Iowa is coming off its most disappointing loss of the season.

All-American Earl main cog in Davis' experienced squad

Jay Nanda
The Daily Iowan

At 6-feet-10 inches and 254 pounds, it may be hard to comprehend how Iowa center Acie Earl can be a little frightened coming into the 1992-93 Hawkeye campaign.

Frightening is more like it — for Iowa's opposition.

"It's almost scary to think how long I've been here," Earl joked Thursday as the Hawkeyes held their annual Media Day.

In all likelihood, those are probably the sentiments of the other teams in the Big Ten — only they don't figure to be clowning around.

Already the Hawkeyes' all-time frontrunner with 277 blocked shots, the senior out of Moline, Ill., is the nation's leading returning shotblocker as well as the Big Ten's record-holder with 71 rejections in conference games. Now that this season will be his last as a Hawkeye, Earl has his sights set on the NCAA career record of 899 blocks, set by Rodney Blake of St. Joseph's (Pa.) from 1985-88.

"It's basically expected of me to do it," Earl said. "It's always thrown up in your face. There's really no reason that I shouldn't accomplish the goal. Of all the things that I've accomplished back in the years, I think that this probably has to be one of the most important things that I do."

Earl averaged 19.5 points and 4.0 blocks a year ago for an Iowa team that finished 19-11 and was bounced from the second round of the NCAA tournament for the second straight year by national champion Duke. But his 7.8 rebounding average is something Earl says he will have to improve, even if it means sacrificing a few shot blocks, in order to help the team win.

"In the past two years, my reputation as a shotblocker is there, so I really don't have to build upon that too much," Earl said. "In the past two years as a team, our rebounding has kind of struggled. I might need to (stay in the paint) in the Big Ten games just to set the trend that I'm a rebounder."

Earl has been honored as a preseason first-team all-American by The Sporting News and Playboy. He was also named to the all-Big Ten team selected by the media at the Big Ten coaches' luncheon Wednesday in Indianapolis, joining forwards Chris Webber of Michigan, Deon Thomas of Illinois, and guards Jalen Rose (Michigan) and Calbert Cheaney (Indiana).

But despite the abundance of accolades, the Big Ten's Defensive Player of the Year says that he is taking everything in stride.

"It's too late in my career to think about it, basically, because there's more things that I can be doing for my team than just to dwell upon the personal goals," Earl said. "I don't really think about it too much unless it's brought up. I don't

Iowa looking to make good on third crack at Blue Devils

Jay Nanda
The Daily Iowan

Many college basketball teams might take solace in losing to the eventual national champion two seasons in a row.

For the Iowa Hawkeyes, it's getting old. And now's their chance to change things around.

"Ever since I've been here, the farthest we've been in the tournament is the second round," center Acie Earl said Thursday at Iowa's annual Media Day. "This year, I want to expand upon that and do whatever it takes."

Last season, the Hawkeyes finished with a mark of 19-11 and beat Texas 98-92 in the first round of the NCAAs. But then they ran into a buzzsaw in the Duke Blue Devils and College Player of the Year Christian Laettner, losing 75-62. The year before, Iowa fell to Duke 85-70 after downing East Tennessee State, 76-73.

"You'd like to know that you at least played the best," Coach Tom Davis said. "We just happened to have the unique opportunity to play Duke in the second round the last two years, which was not our good fortune."

This season, Iowa is guaranteed another shot, albeit a difficult one, as it travels to Durham, N.C., and 9,000-seat Cameron Indoor Stadium for a nationally-televised game Jan. 16. And the Hawkeyes say they're ready.

"Losing to them taught us a lot," junior point guard Kevin Smith said. "They're mentally tough, in great shape and they had a goal and set out to do it."

"We're experienced now and we match up with them pretty well," Smith added.

"Losing to Duke has shown us what it takes," forward Wade Lookingbill said. "They're very business-like in what they do but to get yourself in an NCAA position, you have to have a lot of luck and stay healthy."

"Losing to Duke has shown us what it takes."

The Blue Devils return three starters from last season's NCAA champion squad in point guard Bobby Hurley, guard Thomas Hill and forward Grant Hill. Iowa counters with four returning starters in Earl, Smith, forward Chris Street and guard Val Barnes.

"The first year, we had a lot of young guys," Barnes said of Iowa's initial loss to Duke. "Last year, we rested on our laurels."

"You have to respect every opponent," Street sums up. "Duke is big for us. Hopefully, the third time will be the charm."

Gleason, a junior from Amesbury, Mass., said that Ohio State will want to knock the Hawkeyes off because of Iowa's high national ranking.

Beglin said she wants her squad to play the Buckeyes the same way it did at Penn State, but added that it is always tougher to play a team a second time around.

"They are really an aggressive team," she said of the Buckeyes. "They go to the ball and fight hard. If Ohio State beat us, it would be a huge feather in their cap."

Coach Pete Kennedy and the Iowa women's swimming team are taking an unusual approach to the 1992-93 season.

"We have to look at the end, the Big Ten meet, first," Kennedy said. "Second, we'll need to be tough at dual meets and at the same time, have fun."

The Hawkeyes will get the chance to test the philosophy when they host Big Ten rivals Michigan, Penn State and Wisconsin in a dual meet at the Field House Pool today at 5 p.m., then with an invitational meet against the same teams Saturday at 10 a.m.

The Hawkeyes are coming off a 10-2 overall record and a 3-2 Big Ten mark in '91. They finished seventh at the Big Ten Championships.

NHL Today

Toronto at Detroit (7:40 p.m. EST). The Maple Leafs have seven points in their last four games, moving Toronto into a first-place tie with the Red Wings in the Norris Division.

Tampa Bay's Chris Kontos scored his career-high ninth goal in a 4-3 loss to Montreal on Wednesday night. He started the season with 27 career goals in 164 games with the New York Rangers, Pittsburgh and Los Angeles.

San Jose has a nine-game losing streak since its season-opening victory over Winnipeg. Ottawa has lost eight straight since opening the season with a victory over Montreal. ... Edmonton ended a four-game losing streak with a 5-2 victory over Minnesota on Wednesday night. ... Montreal is 5-0-1 in its last six games. ... Washington has a four-game losing streak.

Eddie Olczyk, Winnipeg's leading goal scorer last year, broke out of an early-season slump with his second, third and fourth goals in the third period of the Jets' 7-5 loss to Calgary on Wednesday night.

There were six power-play goals in Vancouver's 4-3 victory over Washington on Wednesday night. Both teams were 3 for 8 with the man advantage.

San Jose rookie Sandis Ozolinsh scored his first NHL goal in the Sharks' 4-3 loss to Detroit on Wednesday night. ... Doug Bodger scored his first goal of the season with 46 seconds left in the third period to give Buffalo a 4-4 tie with Toronto on Wednesday night.

John MacLean and Randy McKay, Devils. MacLean scored his first two goals since the 1990-91 season and McKay scored 48 seconds into overtime to give New Jersey a 4-3 victory over Hartford.

Sergei Makarov, Flames, scored two goals in Calgary's 7-5 victory over Winnipeg.

The North Stars said Wednesday that they will stay in Minnesota, ending rumors the team might be headed to California. Anaheim officials wanted North Stars owner Norm Green to move the team to a new, $103 million, 19,200-seat arena in time for next season.

Dan Currie had a goal and three assists and Shaun Van Allen had five assists as Cape Breton (Oilers) beat Hershey (Flyers) 6-4 in the AHL on Wednesday night. ... Denis Pederson scored with 14 seconds remaining and Jeff Gorman added the game-winner with two seconds left in Prince Albert's 4-3 victory over Regina in the fast at the Big Ten meet and break some of our records. If we do that, everything will take care of itself." The Iowa diving team will also start the season on Saturday. Coach Bob Rydze has only two competitors in junior Jill Oboikovitz and freshman Jennifer Harkness, both walk-ons. "They're working really hard, but it's going to be a long season," Rydze said. "The girls have beginning to take advantage of their overall team speed and also not give up penalty corners to the Buckeyes. Ohio State goalkeeper Sue Willson has collected 60 saves while allowing 17 goals in seven games this year. Iowa goalkeeper Andrea Wieland has registered 55 saves in 15 games this season. She has limited opponents to 10 goals and has seven shutouts this year. Senior forward Kris Fillat is second in goals scored for Iowa with nine. She said that the Hawkeyes will have to hold their own against the Buckeyes. "Ohio State is a feisty team and they are hard to play against," Fillat said. "Some teams are finesse teams and others are not. Ohio State is not."

The Hawkeyes will continue to field a patchwork team Saturday, with several players held out of practice and questionable for Ohio State — including fullback Paul Kujawa and offensive linemen Scott Davis, Matt Purdy and Bill Lange. Also still banged up is wide receiver Danan Hughes, who sprained an ankle against Michigan and has been hobbled ever since. Possibly returning is offensive guard Ted Velicer, who hasn't played since the Wisconsin game Oct. 10. "If you don't practice you can't get any better," Fry said. "But when you say something like that to the general public — who's never been in a ballgame — they think, 'Well, you're making alibis.' They don't want to hear about injuries and things like that."

completing seven of his first eight passes and running for a 23-yard touchdown that was called back on a motion penalty. But he stumbled in the second half, throwing two interceptions that Purdue turned into scores. "For the first game he had a good game. Obviously it wasn't a good game by our standards," Fry said. Iowa has lost seven starters at one time or another this season, but Fry said the loss of quarterback Jim Hartlieb has been the toughest. The fifth-year senior was leading the Big Ten in passing and total offense before spraining his right shoulder at Illinois Oct. 17. "I certainly don't want to make any alibis, but it's pretty obvious," Fry said. "Here's a quarterback that's leading the Big Ten in four or five different categories and suddenly he's gone and suddenly you're starting a guy that hasn't played since three years ago in high school." According to Fry, Hartlieb's rehabilitation was ahead of schedule and the coach said he'd like to keep the Buckeyes guessing on his status. "It's real sad that Hartlieb got hurt. It's even sadder that everybody in the country knew about it," Fry said. "Had we been able to keep it secret during the week, I think (Purdue) would have been a much easier game for Eyde." But Fry said Eyde could not have beaten Purdue by himself. "Obviously he wasn't the only reason we lost," he said. "The blocking wasn't that good, the tackling wasn't that good. It wasn't a good game, that's about all I can say."

to really improve to compete with the other Big Ten teams." This weekend's meet features the defending Big Ten champion Wolverines, who look to be overpowering again this season. Penn State will also bring an excellent dual-meet team and Wisconsin returns a lot of talent that will challenge the Hawkeyes. "Because of the competition, we'll see a lot of real fast swimming," Kennedy said. "It's the first meet for everyone and everybody's just going to go for it." Lewis and Golden both said that the Hawkeyes are enthusiastic about starting the season. "We're doing a little team bonding before practices," Golden said. "We need to keep focused and have high-performance swimming. We're mentally preparing and, except for being a little tired, we're physically ready."

WHL on Wednesday night.

"I think that people forget that every player on Tampa Bay is an NHL player. Everyone compares them to Ottawa, but you can't do that. Ottawa has most young players and minor leaguers. Tampa Bay only has NHL players." — Montreal's Mike Keane after the Canadiens' 4-3 victory over the expansion Lightning on Wednesday night. Tampa Bay is 4-4-1 in its first 11 games.

At least one Iowa freshman can't wait to make a name for himself. Fred Brown Jr. spent most of Iowa's annual basketball Media Day Thursday answering questions concerning his father — former Hawkeye and Seattle SuperSonic Fred Brown Sr., better known as "Downtown Freddie Brown."

The 6-foot-2 guard from Mercer Island, Wash., could have gone to Arizona, UCLA, USC, Penn State or Seton Hall. But he chose his father's alma mater.

"It's added pressure, but I just try to put it out of my mind — block it out, really," said Brown, who averaged 19.5 points a game as a senior at Mercer Island High School. "I have to go out and do what I have to do to make a name for myself — Fred Brown Jr., not Fred Brown's son."

Brown is one of three impressive recruits who will likely see playing time for the Hawkeyes this season. He is joined by Michigan natives Kenyon Murray and Mont'er Glasper.

"The thing I would say about the new players is that some of them are going to have to play," Iowa coach Tom Davis said. "I don't think there's any question about that, it's just going to be which ones?"

"One or two might even start, depending on what kind of shape they're in on Sunday and how practice goes."

Murray is probably the most-touted freshman to hit Iowa City since Roy Marble. The 6-foot-5, 190-pound guard from Battle Creek was named Michigan's Mr. Basketball after averaging 26 points and 10 rebounds as a senior at Central High School.

"Of the freshmen, Kenyon Murray has certainly gotten the most publicity and I feel he is going to live up to that," said Davis, entering his seventh year as the Hawkeyes' coach. "I don't think there is going to be a problem of him not performing at the level of his high school career. What his role will be we're not sure yet."

But Murray seems to have a pretty good idea of what his role will be with the Hawkeyes.

"I'm going to probably start out playing the two-guard," said Murray, who committed to Iowa the day after his in-home visit from Michigan coach Steve Fisher. "They're going to put me on the other team's best shooter. I'll be a defensive stopper this year and a rebounder."

Murray said the decision between Michigan and Iowa wasn't as difficult as it may seem.

"I could have gone to Michigan and maybe won a national title, but where was I going to become a better player?" he said. "I feel this is where I had the best opportunity of becoming a better player."

Glasper, a 6-2, 175-pound point guard from Albion, Mich., also has a good idea about what his role as a Hawkeye will be.

"Leadership," he said. "Leadership and defense and working hard."

As a junior, Glasper played for the state runner-up that lost to Chris Webber's Detroit Country Day. As the lone returning starter from that team, Glasper averaged 27.5 points, six assists and five steals his senior year.

"My main asset was defense. Most of my points came from stealing the ball, or off the press," Glasper said. "We used basically the same press they use here. Our high school usually ran an up-tempo offense — we'd run, push, press."

Murray's high school background is much the same. "We used exactly the same press as they use here," he said.

Junior point guard Kevin Smith says the freshmen will add a lot to a team that finished last season 19-11 overall, 10-8 in the Big Ten and lost to eventual champion Duke in the second round of the NCAA tournament.

"Kenyon Murray is a slasher, Mont'er Glasper is a good point guard and Freddy Brown can really stroke from the outside," said Smith, who likened Glasper to former Hawkeye B.J. Armstrong. "We have some nice additions to this team."

The freshmen won't be the only additions to the Hawkeyes. Sophomore transfer Kevin Skillett and Russ Millard will see their first action in an Iowa uniform and sophomore Jim Bartels is back after redshirting last season. He played in nine games as a freshman.

Skillett was a member of the Gray Team last season after transferring from a Division III school. The 6-3, 180-pound off-guard averaged 17 points a game as a freshman at Augustana. Skillett came to Iowa after brother and former Hawkeye placekicker Jeff convinced Davis to give him a shot.

"He said that if I was good enough they'd give me a scholarship," said Skillett, who averaged 16 points a game as a senior at United Township High School in Silvis, Ill. "I knew that Coach Davis was a man of his word so I came. It's always been a dream of mine to play for the Hawkeyes."

Davis is looking to improve the Hawkeyes' 3-point scoring and Skillett figures that's a role he can fill.

"I'd say that's probably the best part of my game. I've always been a pretty good 3-point shooter," he said. "I'm not the biggest guy, I'm not the strongest guy, I'm not the fastest guy, but I've always considered myself a good shooter."

Millard redshirted last season, a year after dominating opponents at Cedar Rapids Washington. The 6-8, 220-pound forward averaged 21.6 points and 11 rebounds per game as a senior. At the 1990 Summer Slam-'N-Jam Tournament in California, Millard won MVP honors, scoring 26 points and grabbing 18 rebounds.

Millard said his redshirt year, along with the time he spent practicing with his teammates, was a learning experience.

"The intensity level is different. That was the first thing I noticed," said Millard, who quickly learned that he would not automatically dominate like he did in high school.

"My height had a lot to do with that. But now I'm just an average-height player," he said. "You go out and there is going to be a 7-footer you're going to go up against and you might get your shot blocked, whereas I was blocking the shots a couple years ago."

"It's hard at first to accept that, but I like to be faced with a good challenge."

Brown, who plays pick-up games with his new teammates every day, agreed with Millard about the intensity of Division I athletics.

"In high school you can get away with a lot of things," Brown said. "In high school I could basically be lazy and still score 25 points a game. In college, you've got to be playing hard all the time."

Bartels (6-5, 175 pounds) anticipates moving between off guard and small forward and has changed from the slashing, inside player he was at Freedom High School in Wisconsin to an outside scorer. After playing nine games in two years, Bartels is anxious to start contributing.

"I think the opportunity is there, for myself and the team," he said. "I think we can be as good as we want to. As hard as we want to work is as far as we can go."

HAWK-EYETEMS

General information regarding the 1992-93 Iowa men's basketball season:

■ Iowa has been tabbed a Top 25 team by seven preseason publications. The Hawkeyes' highest ranking is 10th by Dick Vitale's Basketball. Iowa is rated 11th by Big Ten Basketball, 13th by Street and Smith's, 16th by Basketball Weekly, 17th by Inside Sports and The Sporting News and 24th by NCAA Basketball Preview.

■ Approximately 1,000 season tickets are still available for Iowa home games. The 17 games, including two in the Amana-Hawkeye Classic, cost $187.

■ The First Annual Black and Gold Basketball Blowout will be Nov. 14 at 4:40 p.m. General admission tickets cost $3 to the 40-minute scrimmage. Door prizes will be given away and there will be an autograph session with the Hawkeyes. Proceeds will benefit the American Cancer Society's "Children with Cancer" program. For more information, contact the Iowa Sports Promotions Office at 335-9431. Also, the Marathon Oil exhibition game on Sunday, Nov. 22 has been moved from 2 p.m. to 3:30.

■ Iowa coach Tom Davis needs 18 wins to pass Rollie Williams and move into second place on the Hawkeyes' all-time victory chart. Davis has a 129-63 record in six seasons with the Hawkeyes and is 403-213 in 21 years of coaching. Williams was 146-141 in 15 years at Iowa. Iowa's winningest coach is Lute Olson, who posted a 168-90 mark from 1975-83.

■ The Big Ten was the nation's premier conference last year, according to Jeff Sagarin of USA Today. This season, seven teams have at least four starters returning. Iowa returns four starters and has been picked to finish either third or fourth in the league by most preseason publications. Michigan and Indiana, both Final Four participants last season, are favored to challenge for the title.

BASKETBALL: Davis pushing for up-tempo style

really read the magazines or stuff like that."

Hawkeye Coach Tom Davis took it one step further, attributing Iowa's high preseason magazine rankings (see page 3) partially to his big man.

"I was surprised by how highly we're being picked by the preseason publications... I think Acie deserves some credit for that," Davis said of his center, who is slated to graduate in December. "You focus in on the one best player, they automatically pick you a little higher."

"I think we'll be ranked in the higher echelon of the conference," Earl said. "I'm kind of glad that we're not picked No. 1 because it would be a lot of pressure on our younger players. It kind of makes us the underdog and I think a lot of times we play well in the underdog role when I look back at my career at Iowa."

But Earl's supporting cast should have even more to do with where the Hawkeyes end up come NCAA tournament time in March.

Besides Earl, Iowa has three other starters returning — junior forward Chris Street, junior point guard Kevin Smith and senior backcourt mate Val Barnes.

Street was third in rebounding in the Big Ten a year ago, Smith ranked in the conference's top five in assists and steals, and Barnes was an all-Big Ten honorable mention selection, as well as its leading free throw shooter (86.2 percent).

Despite Smith's contributions, the Fort Worth, Tex., native says there are many aspects to his game which need to be fixed.

"I have to stay mentally tough," Smith said. "I believe I've matured a lot but I had a lot of inconsistency. One game I'd show up, one game I wouldn't. I learned that you can never get too high and stay in the clouds, and you can never get too low. I have to try to get things together."

Another key returner is senior forward Wade Lookingbill, who redshirted in 1990-91 because of a back injury. Last season, Lookingbill only started three games, averaging 4.7 points and 2.2 rebounds.

"This is my last go-around, which helps to motivate me," Lookingbill said. "I wasn't quite as healthy last year as I wanted to be. But now my back is as healthy as it's been in the last two years." Davis said Hawkeye fans can expect a more up-tempo style from their team, something that may have been lacking a year ago.

"I don't think we ever ran well enough and it all starts with rebounding," said Davis, who lost James Moses, Troy Skinner, Rodell Davis and Brig Tubbs to graduation.

"Improving rebounding will be really important and the additional maturity and experience in the backcourt will help," he added. "I think you're going to see a pretty trim, sleek athletic ballclub."

WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY

Will Hawkeyes be up to challenge?

Kris Wiley
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's cross country team is facing the challenge of the season when the Hawkeyes travel to Savoy, Ill., Saturday to compete in the Big Ten Championship. And Coach Jerry Hassard can't stress enough the importance of the meet to his team.

"We absolutely need a great race at the Big Ten meet," Hassard said.

The No. 24 Hawkeyes will be facing some of the toughest competition in the country when they try to improve on last year's fourth-place finish. Third-ranked Wisconsin, No. 6 Penn State, No. 7 Michigan and No. 18 Michigan State will all run exceptional teams against Iowa.

While Hassard said that the Hawkeyes seem to be in the fifth position right now, he's hoping for a top-three finish.

"We're prepared to compete well against them," Hassard said. "We may be the darkhorse in this meet. We may be better than the poll indicates."

Iowa has spent the past few days establishing a consensus on a team strategy for the meet. Hassard said it's a matter of deciding what they want and going from there.

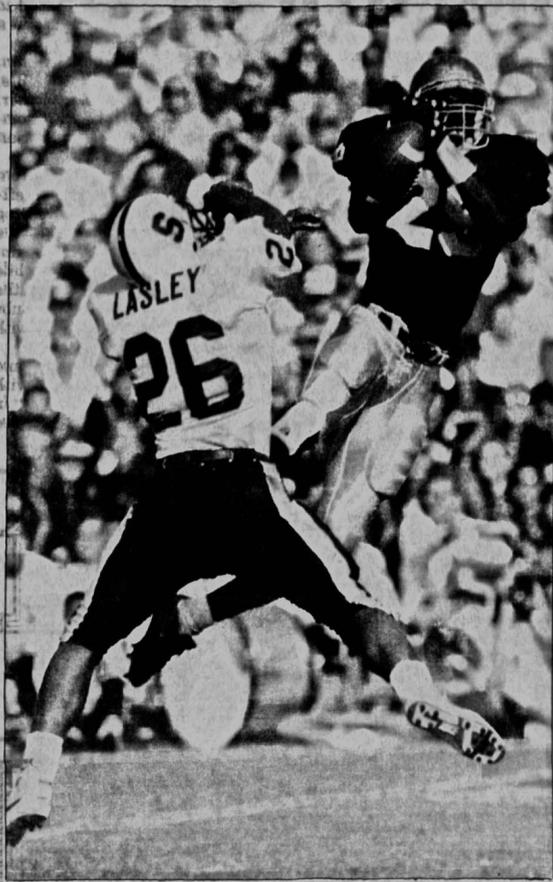

"In the back of all our minds I think that it is an issue of what we want to do as a team," he said. "My job is to facilitate the team to arrive at a decision that is best for them."

This meet is important for the Hawkeyes not only because of the conference rivalry but also because an excellent finish will establish them as a contender for an at-large bid to the NCAA Championships. While the top four Big Ten teams have solid credentials going into the post-season, Iowa will need to beat one or more of those teams to have a better chance of securing an at-large berth.

"I told the team it will be the most important race of the season," Hassard said. "We just have to go for it."

Colorado, Nebraska in Big Eight spotlight

Rick Warner
Associated Press

While Colorado and Nebraska steal the spotlight in the Big Eight this weekend, many college football fans will continue to focus on the Big Two — No. 1 Miami and No. 2 Washington.

Colorado and Nebraska, tied at No. 8 in The Associated Press poll, meet in Lincoln on Saturday. The winner will probably challenge No. 18 Kansas for the Big Eight title and a berth in the Orange Bowl.

The game will feature two contrasting offenses. Nebraska (5-1) is the nation's top rushing team, averaging 348 yards on the ground. Colorado (6-0-1) is No. 4 nationally in passing, averaging 334 yards through the air.

"Certainly, we have different philosophies," Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said.

Miami and Washington have the same record (7-0) and the same goal — repeating as national champion. They shared the title last season, with Miami capturing the AP writers' championship and Washington winning the USA Today-CNN coaches' crown.

Miami puts two long winning streaks on the line Saturday against Big East foe West Virginia (3-2-2). The Hurricanes have won 25 straight overall and 49 in a row at the Orange Bowl.

"It's nice to be No. 1, but we can't worry about the polls," coach Dennis Erickson said. "As long as we keep winning, everything will take care of itself."

Washington goes for its 22nd consecutive victory when it plays No. 15 Stanford (6-2) at Husky Stadium.

Stanford coach Bill Walsh was 0-2 against Washington in his first stint as Cardinal head coach in 1977-78. He doesn't think the task will be any easier this time against Don James' team.

"From a talent standpoint, it's loaded in Washington's favor," Walsh said. "I don't see us having any coaching edge whatsoever, either."

In other Top 25 games, it's No. 3 Michigan at Purdue; No. 5 Texas A&M at Southern Methodist; No. 6 Florida State at No. 23 Virginia; No. 7 Georgia vs. No. 20 Florida at Jacksonville, Fla.; No. 10 Notre Dame vs. Navy at East Rutherford, N.J.; Temple at No. 11 Boston College; Pittsburgh at No. 12 Syracuse; No. 13 Southern Cal at Arizona State; No. 14 Penn State at Brigham Young; No. 16 Tennessee at South Carolina; New Mexico State at No. 17 Arizona; Oklahoma State at No. 18 Kansas; Oregon at No. 19 Washington State; No. 22 North Carolina at Maryland; No. 24 Mississippi State at Kentucky; and No. 25 Texas at Texas Tech.

No. 4 Alabama and No. 21 North Carolina State don't play this week. Michigan will be seeking a record 18th consecutive Big Ten victory at

After getting whipped earlier this season, the volleyball team has learned it hopes will result in intensity in a rematch weekend.

Iowa (9-13, 1-9) hosts Iowa State tonight and the Big Ten Saturday night. Both begin at 7:30 p.m. at Hawkeye Arena.

The Illini (19-3, 9-1) defeated the Hawkeyes in Champaign on 15-6, 15-2, 15-1.

"Realistically, I don't think we can win, but we have ourselves in the position to compete with Illinois," freshman Jenni said.

Freshman setter Lisa said that if the team can play tough defense it will be able to compete with Illinois hitters.

"If we block well and serve the way we did last weekend, we should be able to win," said Dockett. "We need that up."

Winfield leads AP All-Star team

Jim Donaghy
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dave Winfield, the hero of Toronto's World Series victory against Atlanta, joined teammate Roberto Alomar on the 1992 Associated Press all-star team announced Thursday.

Winfield, 41, led all designated hitters with 134 votes in the nationwide balloting of sports writers and broadcasters.

In the decisive sixth game of the Series, Winfield hit a two-run double in the top of the 11th inning as the Blue Jays beat the Braves 4-3. During the season, Winfield hit .290 with 26 homers and 108 RBIs.

Winfield was the oldest player in major league history to drive in 100 or more runs, and the oldest to hit a home run during the post-season.

"I've had some great years in my career but nothing will ever top this," Winfield said. "This is the best team I've ever been associated with."

Oakland's Mark McGwire, who hit 42 home runs, one less than major league leader Juan Gonzalez of Texas, was elected at first base and joined in the infield by Alomar at second base, Cincinnati's Barry Larkin at shortstop and San Diego's Gary Sheffield at third base. Sheffield surprised everyone by hitting .330 with 33 homers and 100 RBIs after being acquired by the Padres during spring training from Milwaukee.

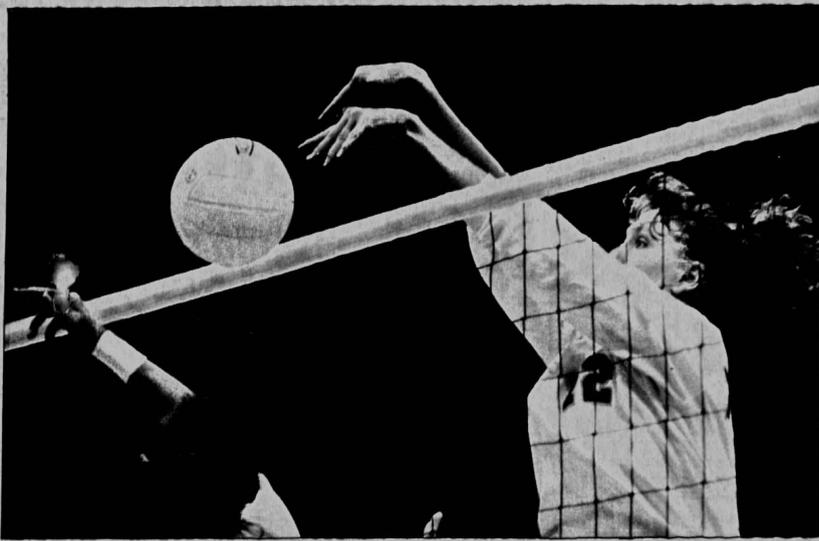

The AP starting outfield has Pittsburgh's Barry Bonds and Andy Van Slyke, and Minnesota's Kirby Puckett. Bonds, the leading candidate for the National League MVP award, hit .311 with 34 homers and 103 RBIs.

Both Bonds and Puckett have filed for free agency and are expected to negotiate contracts for $6 million a year or more.

Philadelphia's Darren Daulton, who hit 27 homers with 109 RBIs, was a landslide winner at catcher. Daulton received 176 votes compared to 12 for Minnesota's Brian Harper.

With 207 votes, Atlanta's Tom Glavine was selected the left-handed starting pitcher and Greg Maddux (115 votes) was elected the right-handed starter. Glavine finished 20-8 with a 2.76 ERA, while Maddux came on strong in the second half for the Chicago Cubs and finished the season 20-11 with a 2.18 ERA.

The top vote-getter was Oakland reliever Dennis Eckersley with 222. Eckersley, who struggled in the playoffs against Toronto, led the major leagues with 51 saves.

Senior Michelle Thompson is one player the Hawkeyes will look to for leadership when Iowa hosts Northwestern and highly-touted Illinois this weekend.

Spikers hope lesson is learned

Roxanna Pellin
The Daily Iowan

After getting whipped by Illinois earlier this season, the Hawkeye volleyball team has learned a lesson it hopes will result in more intensity in a rematch this weekend.

Iowa (9-13, 1-9) hosts Northwestern tonight and the Fighting Illini Saturday night. Both matches begin at 7:30 p.m. at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

The Illini (19-3, 9-1) dumped the Hawkeyes in Champaign to the tune of 15-6, 15-2, 15-1.

"Realistically, I don't know if we can win, but we have to put ourselves in the position to compete," freshman Jennifer Welu said.

Freshman setter Lisa Dockray said that if the team continues to play tough defense it should be able to compete with the quick Illini hitters.

"If we block well and play defensively the way we did last weekend, we should do better," Dockray said. "We need to keep that up."

Illinois, second in the Big Ten, will be led by four conference-ranked hitters. Junior Kristin Henriksen leads the Big Ten with a hitting efficiency of .407. Junior Tina Rogers, senior Kirstin Gleis and sophomore Sue Nucci are also ranked among the conference's top 10 hitters.

In the teams' last match, Henriksen led the Illini with eight kills. "Illinois runs everything so quick," Welu said. "It's really important for me to stay with their middle blocker. That's what I want to do better than what I have been doing."

Welu and Dockray agree that the Iowa offense needs to score more points than in the previous match against Illinois.

"Double figures is something respectable," Welu said. "We need to score so they just don't come on the floor and laugh at us."

Although the Hawkeyes are skeptical about beating the Illini, they are confident they can beat Northwestern. The Wildcats (2-8, 7-14) defeated the Hawkeyes 17-15, 15-5, 15-4 in Northwestern's first conference win.

"Northwestern we can definitely beat," Welu said. "I don't know where we were when we played them the first time. That's definitely a match we can win."

"We were disappointed when we lost to them," Dockray said. "We knew we could have done better."

The Wildcats defeated Michigan State 15-6, 15-13, 17-15 and lost to Michigan 15-11, 15-9, 15-10 last weekend.

Kinder, gentler NHL getting mixed reviews

Associated Press

Peace has finally broken out in the NHL. Fighting is down along with the sticks. And offense is up.

But this "gentler, kinder" league espoused by NHL president Gil Stein hasn't won widespread approval just yet.

Many players and fans are still undecided about the new-look NHL which puts the emphasis on gifted players over goons. Traditionalists are especially upset about it.

"The game is changing," said

Detroit's Bob Probert, known as one of the NHL's best fighters. "It doesn't seem like the same game as a year ago. Some of the penalties are a joke. They're calling everything. It's not the way hockey was meant to be played."

In 106 games through Sunday, fighting majors are down 60 percent from last season. Only five players had been ejected under a new rule that provides a game-misconduct penalty for the instigator of a fight.

UNIVERSITY THEATRES

Carl Bonnett/The Daily Iowan

David Green and Kristina Findley star in "Fixing Gingerbread Cookies," playing this weekend.

'Cookies' is about getting it together

Laura Smith
The Daily Iowan

"Are they going to spend the night together?" This is what Ruth Berger, writer and director of "Fixing Gingerbread Cookies," calls the "dramatic question" of her play, which will be showing this weekend at the University Theatres.

The play is "about a man and a woman, and they're trying to get together," Berger said. "It's their struggle to let go of things in the past that block their way."

Each of the two characters in the play is dealing with internal conflict. "For Liz (played by Kristina Findley), the thing that crowds her vision of relationships is that she's been played," Berger said. "For Rick (played by David Green), it's to let go of the guilt that he couldn't rescue his sister (from death), and his need to rescue Liz from her pain."

Berger uses "Fixing Gingerbread Cookies" to show that the old cliché that "communication is the most important thing in a relationship" isn't always the case. "I'm not knocking communication, but you can't just talk about something and it goes away. You have to stay involved with it and the struggle," Berger said.

The play originated from friends', parents' and Berger's own experiences. "It's got life, I think," Berger said. "It's been fun for the cast, so I think the audience will enjoy that too."

Although Berger said she hopes her sense of humor is prevalent in the play, she wants the audience to recognize "the fight" between the characters. "I mean the fight in a positive, optimistic sense. That even by fighting you triumph in a sense," said Berger.

"Fixing Gingerbread Cookies" will be performed in the Studio Theatre in the UI Theatre Building Saturday, Oct. 31, at 1 p.m. and 4 p.m., and Sunday, Nov. 1, at 3 p.m. Tickets are $1 and go on sale one hour before each show.

READINGS

'PrairyErth' is modern-day 'Walden'

Greg Lichtenberg
The Daily Iowan

At the beginning of "PrairyErth," author William Least Heat-Moon describes standing on one of the Flint Hills in Kansas. He looks out over Chase County, the subject of this massive nonfiction work, and admits that outsiders have often seen the county as "barren, desolate, monotonous, a land of nothing that almost any other place you might name." He wonders to himself what he is doing there. It's a good question. Why visit, let alone document, a county that even he first experienced as "miles to be got over?"

The answer is more complicated than one might imagine. The Flint Hills, he explains, are "the last remaining grand expanse of tall-grass prairie." They preserve, as much as anywhere still does, the land and the life that white settlers found as they came from the East. "PrairyErth" is a geologic term for the soil of the central grasslands, and Heat-Moon has set himself the task of making a "deep map" of everything that has grown in this soil.

He describes the grasses, which can reach a height of 10 feet, and whose height may have provided the evolutionary motivation for primates in Africa to stand on two feet. He interviews many of the 3,000 current residents of Chase County — "roughly as many as in a Brooklyn Apartment" — and discovers that many of those living in this "nothing" are remarkably attached to it. (One survivor of frequent floods quietly brags, "Not everyone gets the chance to live like this.") He reads the old newspapers, explores the removal of the Kaw Indian tribe by "odious methods governments and churches condoned," and considers the effects of the "slavery wars" on Bleeding Kansas. "PrairyErth" is a work of history, but history told on a human scale, as detailed and engaging as a novel.

Perhaps "PrairyErth" is such a pleasure to read because Heat-Moon has paid such loving attention to the apparent emptiness in the middle of the Midwest. He writes, "I came to understand that the prairies are nothing but grass as the sea is nothing but water."

"PRAIRYERTH IS OUR MODERN-DAY WALDEN"

William Least Heat-Moon
AUTHOR OF BLUE HIGHWAYS

He reports his discoveries and observations with discipline and drama, as in this description of a flood: "A few days earlier quiet waters flowed blue-gray, the color of moonstone, but now they climb banks and rip off ledges with mad turnings of earthen roil, and where they join larger streams they meet walls of water and back up until the whole county, its veinings of waterways become a massive thrombus, starts to overflow, and the word goes out by radio, by neighbors in pickups: River's on the rise!" Heat-Moon relates that while researching this book, he realized he was "not a man of the sea or coasts or mountains but a fellow of the grasslands." He has acquired a deep knowledge of this place where he locates himself, and he makes a satisfying guide.

William Least Heat-Moon will read from "PrairyErth" tonight at 8 at Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St. The reading will be broadcast live on WSUI AM-910 and WOIA AM-640.

HANCHER

Smalley has permission to stand in as Franken

Scott Williams
Associated Press

NEW YORK—Stuart Smalley is not a licensed therapist.

He is, however, a member of several 12-step recovery groups, including Overeaters Anonymous, Debtors Anonymous, Al-Anon and Adult Children of Alcoholics. He broke up with his "rage-aholic" girlfriend, Dale, more than a year ago. It's been tough.

Still, he's managed to get his own self-help and daily affirmation program on cable TV, which airs on NBC's "Saturday Night Live" every now and then. And he's on the cover of this month's Sober Times magazine.

Stuart is obtuse, vaguely narcissistic, shy, hopelessly neurotic and co-dependent, and yet he has a certain sweetness and dumb courage. He fails and yet, each time, he picks himself up and resumes his journey of recovery.

Stuart is also fictional. He's the creation of "SNL" writer-producer-performer Al Franken, who also wrote a Dell paperback of Stuart's daily affirmations: "I'm Good Enough, I'm Smart Enough, And Doggone It, People Like Me!"

"It's a long title — but that's OK!" Franken insists, lapsing into Stuart's character. "It's catchy."

See? Already, Stuart has begun to forgive himself for the long title.

Last week, Franken conducted a three-hour "satellite tour" of 25 cities, talking live with news anchors and reporters about his book. Actually, it was Stuart who did the interviews, 'cause darn it, he's good enough!

"There were just a couple who couldn't accept that Stuart was there, not Al," Franken said. "One of them asked me, 'Now, Stuart, what does Al Franken do in his spare time?'"

Spare time? The short answer is that Al Franken has no spare time. His job at "SNL" is full-time. He's co-writing and co-producing Sunday's Nov. 1 election special, "Saturday Night Live's Presidential Bash."

On Tuesday, he'll be "Comedy Central's" anchor for election coverage, a stint he began with the State of the Union speech. Last summer, he logged more camera time during the national conventions than a Big Three network anchor.

"I don't know what I'm going to do on election night," Franken said. "I can draw pictures of the states." Challenged by a doubter, he quickly sketched a map that outlined each of the lower 48. "I don't do Alaska and Hawaii," he said.

Franken also has a screenplay in development with co-writer Ron Bass. It's tellingly titled "Disgruntled Former Employee" and it's a comedy, he said; the final draft should use up his Christmas break.

Franken is a little shy and very delighted when a critical reader compliments his book.

"I think it's the best thing I've ever done," he said. "It has a lot of (12-step) program wisdom, like 'Denial is not just a river in Egypt.' And it has handy survival tips for people from dysfunctional families."

"One affirmation is: 'When I go home to visit my family, I will stay at a motel.' The book's only been out a week, but I've been told that has saved several lives."

Franken, a Harvard alumnus secretly proud of scoring 800s on his math SATs, acknowledges that Stuart is an "extreme example" of the recovery program mentality. That's what makes him funny.

Franken also acknowledges Stuart's less-than-funny origins.

Kathleen Battle stars in 20th anniversary season

An enchanting evening is promised to all.

William Palik
The Daily Iowan

Kathleen Battle, glamour queen of the opera and concert stages, will appear in concert tonight at 8:30 at Hancher Auditorium. The centerpiece of Hancher's gala 20th anniversary celebration, the recital will begin somewhat later than usual owing to the festivities surrounding the event, including refreshments and music in the lobby starting at 7:30 p.m., and post-performance champagne and dessert will be served free in the lobby to ticket-holders. There will also be a dance on the Hancher stage lasting until 1 a.m.

Battle, one of today's most highly acclaimed Metropolitan Opera stars, is prized for her light, silvery soprano and her flawlessly polished delivery of art songs and opera arias alike. Tonight's performance opens with Mozart's "Miserere" (K. 369), and continues with several Robert Schumann gems: "Schneeglockchen," "Der Sandmann," and "Er ist's" from the Op. 79 Album for the Young, as well as "Meine Rose," from Op. 90, and "Auftrag," from Op. 77. Battle will begin her Schumann set with the rarely heard "Singet nicht in Trauertönen."

The first half of the concert will conclude with five songs representing the German Lied at a slightly later stage of development. Richard Strauss's "Schneeglockchen," "Die Nacht," "Ich liebe dich," "Wiegenlied," and "Wiegenlied mit geheim sie halten" are exquisite examples of German art at its finest, albeit terminally florid in style and expression. They should provide the soprano with ample range in which to display her vocal wares, as should the somewhat more obscure Fernando Obradors offerings which begin the program's second half: "La mi sola Laureola," "Al amor," "Del cabelle mas sutil," and "Chiquita la novio."

Battle will conclude with a fragrant bouquet from Dublin-born Victor Herbert, master of the New York pop music scene at the turn of the century. These songs could probably be best described as "formerly popular," and include "Spring Song" from Herbert's 1911 opera "Natoma" (Thine Alone) from "Eileen" (1917), and "When You're Away" from "The Only Girl" (1914). It indeed will be a gala day (which should be enough to satisfy anyone).

Tickets remain available at the Hancher Box Office, 335-1160.

A concert by Metropolitan Opera star Kathleen Battle will be the centerpiece of "For the Love of Hancher," the 20th anniversary season of the UI's Hancher Auditorium.

Fry compares athletics to politics

Iowa coach Hayden Fry on Ohio State coach John Cooper, who has been under constant pressure despite a 5-2 record: "I know John very well. He's a real decent guy and he's proven to be an outstanding coach. He's in an environment much like George Bush is in. And I'm not saying I'm voting for George Bush, but he's in a position where... whereas Bill Clinton is only judged in Arkansas, Bush is judged nationwide.

If you're at Ohio State, and you had Woody Hayes and Earle Bruce there, everyone expects John Cooper to be as good as they were, and maybe rightly so. But that is what John is fighting.

Times are changing, the presidential election is changing... people evaluate differently, so why wouldn't it relate to sports? We are so quick to be negative and jump on people, we forget all the good things that Bush has done for us as president. How many of us have ever been president? We might still be in a war right now. Maybe the communists would still be going full speed over there if not for his actions."

Boilermaker woes

Fry on the teams' performance against Purdue last weekend: "It was pretty obvious it wasn't a very good day on Saturday. I haven't experienced that very many times since I've been here, in regards to the lack of execution on both sides of the ball."

Eyde isn't alone

Fry talking about first-game quarterbacks, and how they have performed for Iowa: "Go back in history and when was the last time a first-time starting quarterback performed well for us? I can only think of one time, and that includes the Chuck Longs and all those other guys." Fry was referring to Tom Poholsky's efforts in a 24-21 win over Michigan State in 1987.

Listen Closely

Iowa coach Hayden Fry gives instructions to quarterback Matt Eyde during the Hawkeye's game against Purdue last weekend. Eyde was making his first start for the injured Jim Hartleb and completed 22 passes, but the Boilermakers beat Iowa 27-16. (T. Scott Krenz/The Daily Iowan)

It ain't over 'til...

Fry commenting on the Hawkeye's uncharacteristic poor play: "We're just trying to keep as realistic as possible. Even with me sounding like it's a funeral, it's not. We're still tied for second place. We're not out of it, we just don't have all our troops. We've got to circle the wagons a little tighter."

You guys got it easy

Fry responding to a question concerning recruiting: "If you think writing a column or finding something that's different to do from day to day is difficult, how would you like to have the task of trying to lure a guy that can run fast from a sunshine state, where he can play and participate in sports every day of the year, up here when they have just as fine academic institutions in the sunshine states as they do here?"

Hawkeye Profile: Jeff Nelson

Formula for success is in preparation

Joe Kenyon
The Daily Iowan

Jeff Nelson has a plan for success on the football field: To prepare as if each play is coming right at him.

It is a formula that has placed this defensive tackle second on the team in total tackles with 65, second only to defensive back Jason Olejniczak's 77. After eight games Nelson has 41 solo tackles, the most on the team, as well as two quarterback sacks and five tackles for a loss.

"It's great to have that many tackles," Nelson said. "Defensive linemen don't usually get that many, but we have played a lot of teams this year that throw the ball a lot."

Part of Nelson's success stems from the fact that he has been able to play in all eight games. On a Hawkeye squad that seems to have suffered more than its share of injuries this season, playing in every game is reason enough to celebrate.

"One reason I'm doing well is that I'm healthy this year; I'm one of the only ones on the defensive line that has played all of the games," Nelson said.

That wasn't the case for Nelson last year. Last season Nelson only played in seven games, missing one early in the season and three more after a hamstring pull against Purdue. The key to this year's success in part is the formula that Nelson keeps going back to.

"I just take one play at a time, and for every play I just feel that he is going to run the ball right at me, so I'm preparing myself every single down — I'm going to make the play."

He says this philosophy helps even when the play goes another way, because he was mentally prepared when the play began.

"If it doesn't come at you, then you react and get to it, you aren't going to be unprepared for it," he said.

Nelson said he has also improved from working on the fundamentals. He said he feels he is getting off blocks better and quicker, and getting to the ball more effectively. He has also gotten considerably bigger and stronger.

Nelson entered the Hawkeye program as a 210 lb. incoming freshman, and now weighs in at 275 lbs.

"With my size and strength increase I am able to do things a lot better," he said.

He also attributes his improvement to the Hawkeye coaching staff, especially defensive line coach Ted Gill.

"Coach Gill has been great," Nelson said. "He teaches technique, and if you execute his technique and read the blocks up front, you'll get to the ball fine."

Getting to the ball is a primary concern for Nelson, but for four weeks last season, his main concern was getting back in the lineup. His pulled hamstring left his status for the rest of the season up in the air.

"There was some doubt about whether I was going to make it back by the end of the season," he said. "But then Ron Geater went down against Northwestern."

Geater's injury left the Hawkeyes with two gaping holes in the defensive line. So Nelson did what came naturally — he worked even harder to get back.

"I kind of pushed it and got back, and I started against Minnesota," he said.

The hamstring hasn't bothered Nelson at all this season. He says that he is aware, however, that an injury could come on any given play.

"I take that into consideration, that every play you go could be your last play, and I guess that confronted me last year," Nelson said. "I found out that my hamstring could go and that was it."

Nelson says if something is going to happen to him, he will be going 110 percent when it does.

"If it happens, it happens. I was going hard, and there is nothing you can do about it," he added.

Another thing Nelson goes hard at is academics. A senior math major, Nelson will graduate in December, and hopes for a job in business, unless something else come up first.

"I think about the NFL. Geater was my best friend last year, and he got drafted by the Denver Broncos, so I know there is always a possibility," Nelson said. "If an opportunity presents itself, I'll take advantage of it," he said. "But if not, I know that I have had a good career and an education."

But first things first — Nelson is concerned right now about finishing this season, and getting the Hawkeyes on a winning track. And when the football and business careers are done, what does Nelson's future hold?

"I would like to go back to school and get my teaching certificate and teach math somewhere," he said.

Some helpful advice for Jeff Nelson's future math students: Do your homework.

Hawkeye Profile: Todd Romano

More confidence is the key for Romano

Don Taylor
The Daily iowan

Iowa fans can still see it if they squeeze their eyes shut and concentrate extremely hard. Tom Nichol and Rob Houghtlin nailing pressure field goals for wins over Michigan. Reggie Roby averaging nearly 50 yards a punt, and kicking off through the opposite side of the field goal posts.

The glory days of Iowa kickers.

But those days are long gone and while fond memories are nice, it's who's here now that matters, and what they can do about a kicking game that has floundered badly for the past few seasons.

Enter redshirt freshman Todd Romano.

Fans may remember Romano from the Kickoff Classic, when the kicker/punter from West Palm Beach, Fla., missed his only field goal try in a 24-14 loss to North Carolina State. He was replaced the week after with Andy Kreider.

But Romano made a dramatic return appearance last weekend against Purdue, booting two extra-points and three field goals, including a 47-yard effort.

Romano's 10 points were not enough to offset the Boilermakers in a 27-16 loss, but his showing gave a touch of stability to the kicking game.

"I was a little nervous, but once I got that first extra-point out of the way, I was fine the rest of the game," Romano said.

"I said to myself 'you did this in high school; there really isn't much of a difference. There is still a snap and a hold, the ball's going to be there and it's the same kind of ball you kicked in high school; just don't think about missing.'"

Miss is something Romano has now done only once this year, the attempt against North Carolina State. He credits a sense of improved self-confidence for last Saturday's performance.

Freshman Todd Romano kicks one of his three field goals last week against Purdue. Romano regained his starting spot, but his efforts were not enough as Iowa lost 27-16. (T. Scott Krenz/ The Daily iowan)

"I was trying to be comfortable and not put any pressure on myself. In high school I was successful and I tried to think back to then, to what my mindset was for every game, each week. I wasn't trying to do everything perfect then, I just went out and did it," he said.

"After the Kickoff Classic I was just hoping that I would get another shot and a chance to redeem myself," he said. "I was still kicking the ball well in practice after that, but I think the missed kick might have shaken my confidence a little bit, especially being my first college field goal."

Romano's kicking caught the eye of coach Hayden Fry as well.

"I was very impressed," Fry said. "The low-line drive (the 47-yarder) wasn't too pretty, but he had the power. The rest of them were good kicks."

Romano was an all-state performer at Newman High School and was mentioned by some scouts as the No. 1 punter/kicker in the nation as a senior. Considering the state he lived in, Iowa may have scored a coup signing him away from powerhouses like Miami, Florida and Florida State.

"I was recruited by Florida State, but basically the reason I came here was out of all my visits, I fell in love with Iowa," Romano said. "Even though there is such a short amount of time in those visits, everything felt so comfortable to me when I came here. The coaching staff and the closeness of the players, and just the area itself."

The ghosts of Nichol, Houghtlin and Roby may still haunt Kinnick Stadium, but there are two things to consider. One, Iowa fans should wake up and realize that a Reggie Roby comes around once in a coaching lifetime. Two, Romano is still a freshman and learning the mechanics of the college game; tougher defenses, more pressure to win games, plus a frenzy of fans to contend with every weekend.

Safety has hopes of dual-sport career

Jay Banda
The Daily Iowan

Marquis "Bo" Porter is one athlete who realizes his gridiron career can end on one play. So it shouldn't come as much of a surprise that he is making plans for a nonplaying future.

"I would like to do some talk shows but if not, I would love to get into coaching," he says.

Listening to the sophomore free safety give his own version of 1992 Hawkeye football philosophy, it appears Porter has already gotten the jump on those with similar aspirations.

"We just gotta come out and work hard, do what we gotta do and things will fall into place," Porter said coming into the season. "It doesn't take a genius to figure out that if you work hard, things will come."

And that's just a sample. But before Porter was lending insight into such theories, he was doing his talking on the football field. Porter showed his diversity as a player in high school, earning honors as a first team all-stater, in addition to a Blue Chip and SuperPrep all-American at defensive back and quarterback.

A two-time MVP at Weequahic High School in Newark, N.J., Porter broke the school total yardage record for a season with 2,091 his senior year. He had nearly as many rushing yards as passing yards (979 and 1,112, respectively).

But Porter says he had an inkling of his ability to play college ball before he was setting secondary-school standards.

"My sophomore year in high school, I realized maybe I did have the potential to go to the next level," he says. "I started programming myself harder and harder, day by day."

His commitment did not go unnoticed, as Porter's characteristics — both on and off the field — attracted the eyes of Hawkeye defensive backs coach Bob Elliott.

"Bo had good values coming in," says Elliott, now in his sixth year at the helm of Coach Hayden Fry's backfield. "He had a strong mom, a strong grandma and a strong high-school coach.

"We (the Iowa coaches) agreed he was a good player, a good athlete," Elliott adds. "In his high school, which was right in the middle of the city, he was clearly the leader of the entire school. He was one of the best students."

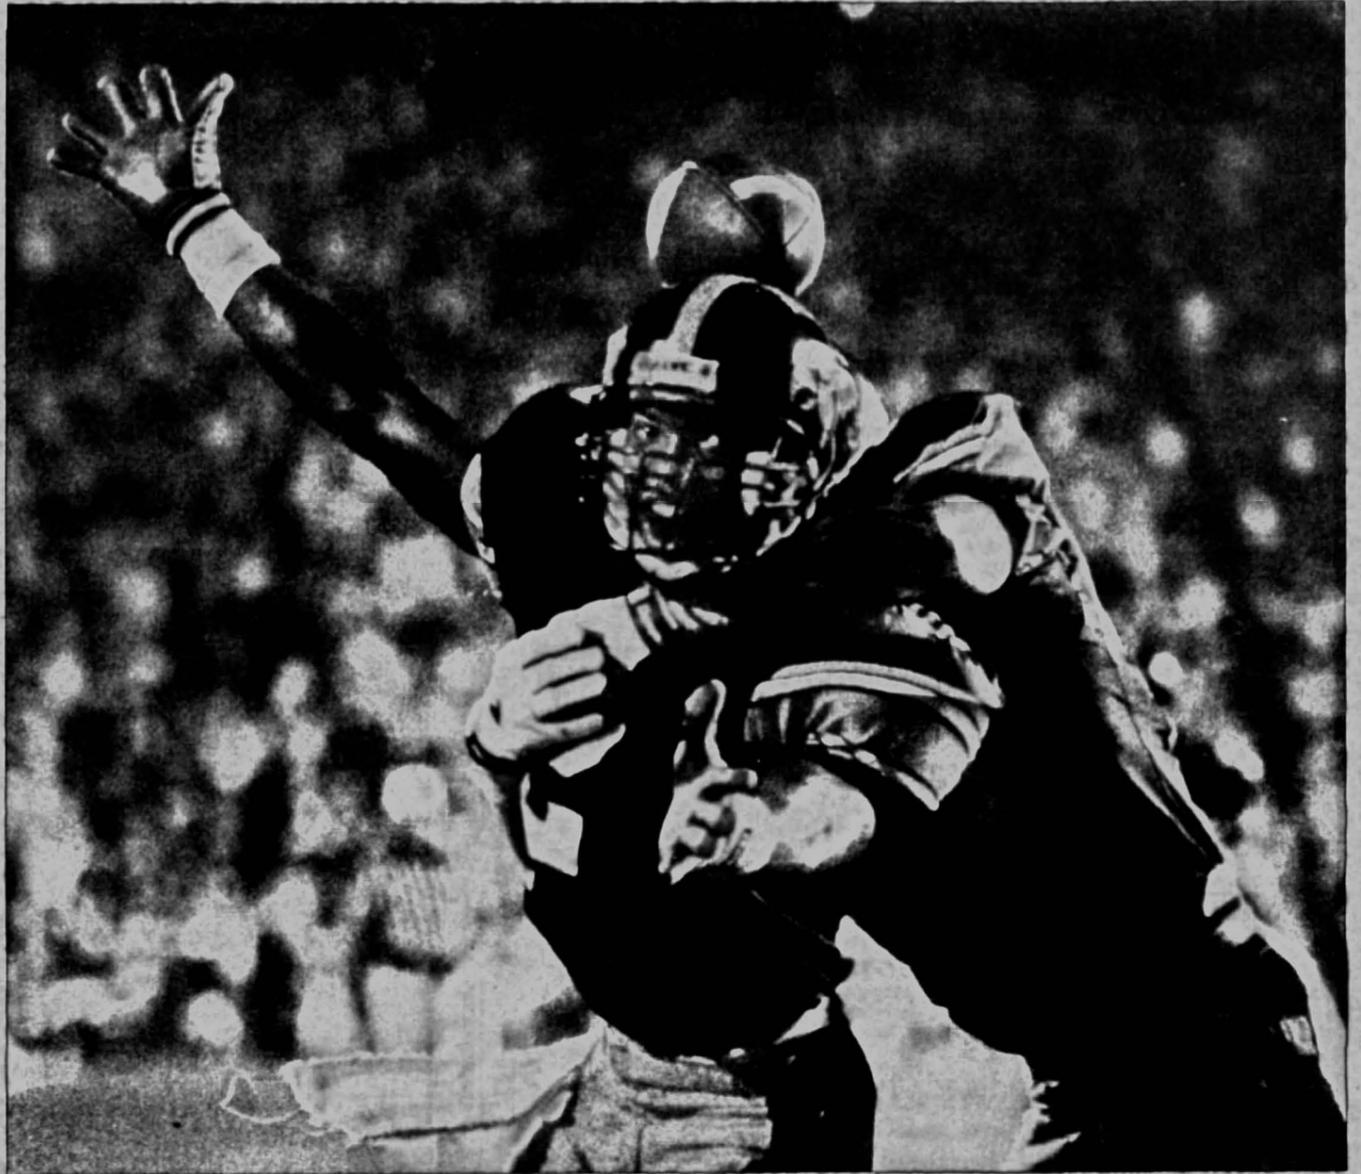

"Bo was so solid. He had visited N.C. State, but then he came to Iowa City and he really liked it," Elliott says. "He knew where he wanted to go."

Once Porter signed his letter of intent, the only unsettled question was on which side of the ball he would play as a Hawkeye.

"When Iowa recruited me, they were pushing me pretty strong as a secondary coach. "I've never really had a father figure," Porter says. "My high-school coaches were my father figures. And Coach Elliott and I, we got a real good relationship on and off the field."

Both Porter and Elliott agree that a significant part of their off-field camaraderie deals with values Iowa players can keep long after their playing days are over.

Hawkeye safety Marquis "Bo" Porter celebrates in the end zone after intercepting a Gino Torretta pass in the Miami-Iowa game earlier this season. Porter is hoping to play both football and baseball for the Hawkeyes, much like teammate Danan Hughes. (Al Goldis/The Daily Iowan)

Yet while Porter had Elliott sold on his potential, the time had come for the Iowa coach to return the favor.

As a recruiter, it was Elliott's job to convince the East Coast native to become a Hawkeye. But according to Elliott, himself a former Hawkeye defensive back, Porter didn't need much persuading.

defensive back all the way. They recruited me from the get-go," says Porter, a broadcast communications major. "I thought about (offense) for a minute ... 'cause I played a couple of All-Star games at wide receiver ... but that's about it."

According to Porter, Elliott is more than a recruiter and sec-

"He teaches us how to deal with adversity," Porter says of Elliott. "Things are not always going to be peaches and creams."

Iowa may have another star receiver

Michael Watkins
The Daily Iowan

Anyone who watched Iowa receiver Anthony Dean leap into the air and pull down the decisive touchdown in the Hawkeyes' 23-22 win over Wisconsin three weeks ago knows that he has big, soft hands.

But what most people don't know is that he has an equally big — and soft — heart.

"I see a lot of kids that are a lot less fortunate than myself, and it really makes me very unhappy," said the second-team sophomore wide-out. "I don't have everything, but I have some things that these kids don't have — like a family and someone to love them.

"That's why if I don't make it to the NFL, I want to go back to my old community and open up a center for the unfortunate kids where I grew up. I've always loved to work with younger people, and I also want to get involved in Iowa City's Big Brothers/Big Sisters program this spring."

Growing up in South Florida — Pompano Beach to be exact — wasn't exactly a picnic in the park for Dean either. He was confronted by drug dealers and witnessed crime almost on a daily basis. But it was his strong family ties and faith in himself, as well as a commitment to athletic and academic excellence that kept him on the straight and narrow.

"It wasn't a great environment by any means," said the all-area, all-county selection at Coconut Creek High School. "There were guys there selling drugs and there was a lot of crime going on. The environment was one that I definitely wouldn't want to bring my child up in. But I understood that my parents were doing the best that has always been so important to me."

Dean grew up surrounded by lots of love and lots of family. He has an older and a younger sister, as well as two younger brothers, one of whom is currently playing football at Butler College in Indiana. He says that it was long-standing family tradition and values that kept him in the game even family and know that somehow it was all worth it."

Having been a star athlete who gathered a school-record 83 receptions for 1,651 yards and 10 touchdowns in high school, Dean was offered numerous opportunities from colleges throughout the nation, among those No. 1-ranked Miami, perennial top-10 Florida State, and SEC—power Florida. But when the time came to choose and sign, Dean looked north and found a home-away-from-home in Iowa City.

"I had a great time when I came to visit, and the people made me feel just as if I were right at home," said Dean, who is currently ninth on the team with eight receptions for 88 yards and the infamous touchdown.

"It was just the overall atmosphere. Here, everyone makes you feel like you're a part of a great family, and that's something that I was looking for while I was choosing a uni-

Anthony Dean leaps to catch a pass against Miami earlier this season. The talented receiver hasn't had a lot of playing time with Danan Hughes and Harold Jasper in the line-up, but it was Dean who caught the game-winning touchdown pass against Wisconsin on Oct. 10. (Al Goldis/The Daily Iowan) they could, and I decided to make the best of the situation.

"People have asked me how I could live around there and not get involved in what was going on. I just tell them that I used school and athletics to keep me away from that — to keep me involved so that I wouldn't get caught up in the crime and drugs. That's one thing that my family instilled in me from a very early age, and that's why family when he wished that he were somewhere else.

"My parents and brothers and sisters have always been there for me," said the 1990 scout team Offensive MVP vs. Michigan. "I give them credit because there have been times when I've been injured and ready to give up the sport. I'd be thinking 'Why am I here and getting myself beat up?'"

"But then I'd think about my versity."

But, despite seeing limited playing time behind Iowa's all-time pass receiving leader Danan Hughes, as well as having only one touchdown and just 105 yards on 10 catches over the past two seasons, Dean says that statistics and points scored don't always tell the whole story.

The No. 2 ranked hockey team improved front of a record crowd at Grant Field last weekend.

1,205 fans crammed into the stands to see Iowa crush St. Louis 7-0. It was believed to be the largest crowd to ever witness an NCAA Division I field hockey game, and broke the old Iowa record of 951 set in 1989.

"Obviously we are ecstatic. In a state that doesn't play the sport, it is amazing for this many people to come out and see a truly great team," Iowa coach Beth Beglin said. "It is an inspiration for the team."

Iowa midfielder Kristy Gleason moved into a tie for first-place on the all-time career goals chart when she scored four goals during the weekend, two against State and two against Penn State.

Volleyball

The volleyball team lost to 11th-ranked Penn State 15-2, 15-9, 15-12 held in Santa Barbara, Calif., and had four qualifying rounds. Senior team captain Andrea Calvert advanced all the way to the third round, winning her first two matches 6-4, 5-7, 6-4 and 4-6, 6-4, 6-3 before losing 6-7, 6-3, 6-3 in round three.

Hawkeye Nikki Willette made it to the fourth round before falling in three sets. Included in her victory total was a win over Suzi Agassi, cousin of Wimbledon champion Andre Agassi.

Iowa freshman Sasha Boros sprained her ankle during her first match and had to default.

"I did want to continue playing, but I didn't want to do any more damage to my ankle," Boros said. "We have the ITCA - Rolex Midwest Regional in a couple of weeks, so I'm just going to concentrate on getting ready for that."

Calvert and sophomore Laura Dvorak won both of their doubles matches, whipping Northern Arizona 6-1, 6-1, and UNLV 7-5, 6-1.

"I think that we showed a lot of people from all over that we are a very solid team," Iowa coach Micki Schillig said.

"We got out there and showed them that we're just as good as everyone else."

"We played much better than the score showed," said Hawkeye junior Courtney Gillis. "If it would have been a rally score match, I think we definitely could have beaten them."

Gillis led Iowa with 16 kills.

Iowa coach Linda Schoenstedt said that she was pleased despite the loss because of her team's readiness to play, something that had been a problem earlier in the sea-

Activities offer variety for mom and dad

Forget the tailgating traditions of hot dogs and beer before kickoff. Tailgating before the Ohio State football game will be given a new twist at the Parents, Pancakes and Pigskins Tailgate, organized for the 1992 Parents Day Weekend.

The Parents Weekend event will be held from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Doors will open at 10:30.

According to organizers, this year's tailgate promises to be different from those held during previous Parents Weekends.

"We've had a tailgater before, but never at Carver," co-chairperson Kerry Eggesfield said. "It's the big attraction, everyone is used to the Union. We wanted something new."

Not only has the location changed, but new programs have also been planned. This year a "shirts and skins" scrimmage will be played by the men's basketball team.

Iowa will also host Ohio State in a field hockey game at noon at Grant Field. The women's swim team will host Penn State and Wisconsin at 10 a.m. at the Parents Day offers many opportunities for parents to interact with students on the UI campus. A variety of activities are planned for the coming weekend, many of which are designed to coincide with the Iowa-Ohio State game tomorrow. (Al Goldis/The Daily Iowan) Fieldhouse.

A wrestling exhibition, pom-pom performance and jazz band entertainment have also been scheduled at Carver.

Unlike in previous years, the tailgate is associated with the CHOICES program which is funded by the NCAA and involves the men's and women's athletic departments.

Kathy Mossman, an academic counselor at Women's Athletic Student Services, said that student athletes will be on hand to help serve pancakes and organize D.A.R.E. volunteers. Drug Abuse Resistance Education is a local group of students in grades 5-7.

"Many of these kids look up to the student athletes and this gives them a chance to know them (athletes) more," Mossman said. "It also promotes healthy lifestyle choices."

"I think it shows how aware we are of the alcohol problem," Iowa gymnast Jennifer Miernyk said. "It's a way that we can show that you can go out and have a good time without drinking."

Miernyk added that the tailgate is also an event to bring the university community closer together.

"It's cool for all of the athletes to get together and meet new people," she added. "I think it's nice for students to have visibility in other areas off the field or court," Mossman said.

According to Eggesfield, attendance to the event may be larger than in previous years.

"It's going extremely well. We're expecting about 1,200 people," Eggesfield said. "That number's considerably more than last year."

Tickets for the tailgate are $3.50 and include all-you-can-eat pancakes, fruit, rolls and beverages.

Tickets are available at the University Box Office or residence hall offices at Currier and Reno.

For those who choose not to attend the game after the tailgate, several options will be offered.

The Student Alumni Ambassadors will host excursions to Main Amara, Hoover Library and Museum, Lake Macbride Raptor Center and an Iowa City Shopping Spree.

The game will also be televised at Carver-Hawkeye Arena to accommodate those who were unable to obtain tickets.

"Unfortunately, since only 1,700 tickets were available for Parents Weekend, many were turned away," Eggesfield said.

Game Preview: Iowa vs. Ohio State

John Shipley
The Daily Iowan

Iowa's Matt Eyde didn't exactly set the record book ablaze last weekend in the Hawkeyes' 27-16 loss to Purdue. But that's not necessarily a bad sign.

"Go back in history in your mind. When has a first-time starting quarterback performed well for us?" Coach Hayden Fry asked the media at his weekly press conference Tuesday. "I can only think of one time, that's including Chuck Long and all those people."

Voice of the Hawkeyes columnist and Iowa football expert Al Grady had the answer.

"Tom Poholsky at Michigan State," he said.

"That's exactly it," Fry said. "That's the only time in my memory where we had a first-time starter do exceptionally well."

Poholsky led the Hawkeyes to a 24-21 win at Spartan Stadium while subbing for an injured Mark Vlasic back in 1986. Fry said the key to Poholsky's success may have been pregame subterfuge.

"We hid that," Fry said. "We let them think (Dan) McGwire or (Chuck) Hartlieb was going to start."

Fry did his best this week to play the same game, refusing to count out injured quarterback Jim Hartlieb.

"I'd like to say he's going to start on Saturday," he said. "But that's just my likes."

Eyde completed 22 of 39 passes for 164 yards. He had a 23-yard touchdown run nullified by a penalty and threw two interceptions — both of which were converted into points by Purdue.

Hartlieb sprained his throwing shoulder trying to recover a fumble against Illinois Oct. 17. Fry said he's ahead of his rehabilitation schedule but that he's "extremely questionable" for Saturday's tilt with Ohio State.

The Buckeyes (5-2) have probably taken Iowa's place as the best of the rest in the Big Ten this season. Michigan is 4-0 in the conference, followed by seven 2-2 teams tied for second place — including Iowa and Ohio State. But the Hawkeyes (3-5) failed to beat Purdue last weekend in a game that would

"I'm getting a chance to get that experience that I'll need once Hughes has graduated," said the 6-foot-1, 185-pound leisure studies major. "That's my job — to be his back-up — and if that means waiting on the sidelines until he moves on into the big leagues, then that's what I'll do."

"I try to use the time during practice to try and improve myself and make each practice an opportunity to go out and become a better ball player. That's what I try to do day-in and day-out."

Iowa coach Hayden Fry also sees this willingness as a team player in Dean.

"I'm a great believer in Anthony and what he's capable of achieving," said Fry, who, in addition to Hughes, has witnessed the feats of former Hawkeye greats Ronnie Harmon, now with San Diego

Chargers, and Quinn Early, a New Orleans Saint.

"He's just a super individual who's willing to do whatever it takes to help the team whenever and however he can."

"It takes a lot more than flashy moves and big catches to be a good football player, and with Anthony, you get the entire package."

Though his career is still in its early stages, Dean says that "The Catch" against the Badgers in front of a sold-out, hungry-for-a-win Kinnick crowd will forever be his hallmark.

"That touchdown let me know that I'm capable of making the big plays, and capable of producing for the team when they need someone to step in," Dean said. "Now it's just a matter of moving on from that and making more and more things happen in the future."

have put them in the driver's seat for a second-place conference finish and a berth to the Florida Citrus Bowl.

Both the Citrus and Holiday Bowls (third-place finisher) have the option to reject teams with less than eight wins. If Iowa wins the rest of its games it will finish 7-5.

"I keep hearing those rumors. But that's never been explained to any of the coaches in the Big Ten," Fry said of the eight-win clause. "Anything we read in the newspapers about how they don't have to take the second-place team or the third-place team, that's all news to the football coaches."

The Buckeyes can win nine games this season, but they still have to play the Wolverines, who have won all their conference games by an average of 32 points. John Cooper's squad has talent, but has been erratic — beating No. 12 Syracuse in the Carrier Dome, then losing to Wisconsin and Illinois to open the Big Ten season — which angered fans in Columbus and incited many to call for Cooper's resignation. Cooper said he's not letting that bother him.

"Life's too short to be unhappy, let me put it that way," he said.

• Buckeye players to watch: Receiver Brian Stablein leads team with 31 receptions for 384 yards. ... Running backs Raymont Harris (340), Butler By'not'e (243), Robert Smith (223) and Jeff Cothran (215) all have more than 200 yards rushing. ... Senior linebacker Steve Tovar is eighth in the Big Ten in tackles with 81.

• Hawkeye players to watch: Receiver Harold Jasper has caught 22 passes for 379 yards and four TDs. ... Alan Cross has tied Danan Hughes for team lead in receptions with 34. ... Defensive tackle Jeff Nelson leads the team in solo tackles with 41. ... Safety Jason Olejniczak leads the team with 77 tackles.

of rewards that can come from that," Elliott says. Then he chuckles as he remembers one more characteristic: "bouncing back — we've been teaching a lot of that this year."

If the talk shows and coaching do not work out, Porter says he would like to "help the kids, do community work, or get a job in a corporate area."

But the 6-foot-1, 185-pounder has more immediate plans after the football season. For the first time as a Hawkeye, Porter will hang up his helmet and pads and don a baseball glove, a la all-Big Ten wide receiver, Danan Hughes.

"We're going to evaluate ourselves at the end of this season and see," Porter says of Hughes, Iowa's all-time leader in receiving yardage, third round draft pick of the Milwaukee Brewers and fellow New Jersey native.

"I should be coming into next spring as the No. 1 free safety and I probably want to do both sports like Danan did his sophomore year."

But for Porter, the task at hand is to help the 3-5, 2-2 Hawkeyes overcome a 5-2 Ohio State team Saturday at Kinnick Stadium — a must-win if Iowa is to avert settling for a bowl game via their television sets.

"We have to correct all the things we're doing wrong 'cause Ohio State is a good team," he says. "We just have to play with more emotion."

Still, an outlook on the remainder of Iowa's once-promising season would not be complete without another intuitive analysis from Porter.

"It ain't where you start," he says, "it's where you finish."

Romano continued from page 7C

Romano himself says that he was somewhat aware of the recent troubles in the kicking game when he was recruited.

"I didn't know exactly what the situation was, but they said that I would have a chance to punt as a true freshman, which interested me. That had a little bit to do with my decision to come here, but really just seeing the place and the people was enough."

Fry offered his own explanation for the Hawkeyes problem kicking.

"I'd say it's probably at least 75% mental, and 25% ability. Kickers and punters have to psych themselves out continually, otherwise they would perform with no consistency."

"We sure aren't telling them to kick it short, or flub it or kick it to their best return man."

Romano agrees.

"By the time you get to this level you've kicked so many footballs, you know how to kick technique-wise. The rest of it is just mental," he said.

"Your body knows what to do, but your mind has to know also. If you let what the fans think bother you, it's not going to do you any good."

The 3 for 4 tally of field goals Romano has now acquired may do a lot to help any problems, especially any that might have to do with confidence.

"I've been kicking the ball well lately, and the Purdue game helped my confidence, but now I have to forget about last week and get ready for this week."

"I know I can't live off this one performance, and I've got to stay focused," Romano said.
