Opening remarks heard in Rosas-Jacaranda trial

Jailed former Coachella Valley Unified School District Superintendent Juan Jose "Joe" Rojas-Berndt made an unusual plea to the judge at his preliminary hearing Wednesday to allow him to return to school and work with students.

"I would like to make an unusual request," Rojas-Berndt said. "I would like to ask the court if I can return to school and work with students of the district.

"I have been at school for the past 15 years. I love these students. I love the community. I've got a passion for education."

Rojas-Berndt's request for early release from jail was turned down by Judge Fred H. Vanke. Rojas-Berndt will remain in jail until at least May 2.

County report rise in absentee ballots

The number of absentee ballots on file in the county has more than doubled since the last election. In 1988, 16,000 absentee ballots were turned in, but in 1992, the number has risen to 40,000. As of Tuesday, 27,000 of those ballots have been cast.

Despite polls, campaigning continues full speed ahead

As the election looms closer, both Perot and Bush are stepping up their campaigns. Perot, who has been trailing in the polls, is expected to make a major push in the next few weeks. Bush, on the other hand, is expected to continue his strong campaign efforts.

Large showing could help Clinton

As the election approaches, speculation heats up about how a large turnout could affect the outcome. Many experts believe that a large turnout would benefit Clinton, who is currently leading in the polls.

Young voters may decide election

Youthful turnout is expected to be high in this election, with many young voters expressing frustration with the status quo. Many experts believe that a strong turnout by young voters could tip the election in Clinton's favor.

Physics department rebuilds, remembers

Anne Jakubov

Faculty of 13

Reflecting on what has been an extraordinary year for the Department of Physics and Astronomy, Professors Goertz and Smith said the department has pulled together to overcome a crisis brought on by the loss of two of its most able faculty members.

"In the first year after the tragedy," Professors Goertz and Smith said, "we have been in a state of shock." They noted that in the first year since the loss, there have been so many developments in the department that it is hard to keep track of them all.

"When we first heard the news," they continued, "the department was in a state of disbelief. We had to accept the fact that two of our best faculty members were lost. We had to find a way to keep the department running while we dealt with the grief and anger of the loss."

The department managed to keep running, however. "We focused on the research and teaching we do," Professors Goertz and Smith said. "We knew that our students and colleagues needed us to keep going." They added, "We also focused on each other. We had to support each other through the difficult times." They noted that the department has continued to produce outstanding research and teaching.

"We have been able to keep the department on track," they said. "We have been able to keep the department moving forward."

In addition to the research and teaching, the department has been working hard to come to terms with the loss. "We have been holding meetings to discuss how we can best honor the memory of our lost colleagues," they said. "We have been trying to figure out how we can best help our students and colleagues through this difficult time."

"We have been working hard to keep the department running," they added. "We have been working hard to keep the community together."

They concluded, "We are grateful for the support we have received from our students, colleagues, and friends. We are grateful for the way we have been able to come together to deal with this difficult time."

UI STUDENTS ATTEND PRESENTATION
Program stresses AIDS prevention

Molly Spaun

As part of a campus-wide effort to educate students about AIDS, the Iowa union leaders sponsored the assembly. The program was attended by around 500 students and faculty.

The first speaker of the evening was Dr. Elwyn E. Siler, who addressed the audience with a presentation about AIDS. He discussed the importance of educating students about the disease and highlighted the need for effective prevention strategies. Siler emphasized the role of early intervention and stressed the importance of awareness and education in combating AIDS.

The second speaker was Rev. Robert C. Brown, who delivered a powerful message about the moral implications of AIDS. He urged the audience to consider the ethical and spiritual dimensions of the disease, and encouraged students to take an active role in addressing the issue.

The final speaker was John J. Keane, a sociology professor at the University. He discussed the social factors that contribute to the spread of AIDS and the importance of addressing these root causes.

The program concluded with a Q&A session, where students had the opportunity to ask questions and express their concerns.

The event was well-received, and many students left feeling more informed and equipped to take action against AIDS on campus and beyond.

Man admits to disposing gun in murder case

Matthew Stuart pleaded guilty to charges related to the murder case which stemmed up racial tension in Boston.

Tuesdav, November 8

The 20-year-old man, who had been arrested on suspicion of murder, entered a guilty plea in the case.

Stuart, who was charged with first-degree murder, pleaded guilty to two counts of murder and one count of attempted murder.

The case involved the shooting of a 25-year-old man in Boston on November 2, 2021.

Stuart's attorney, John Thompson, said his client had decided to enter a plea to avoid a possible death penalty.

The case was one of several high-profile murder cases in Boston in recent years, including the 2019 murder of a 24-year-old woman.

Thompson said Stuart had been waiting for a long time to resolve the case and that his client was ready to move on with his life.

The defendant, who lives in Boston, is scheduled to be sentenced on January 3, 2022.

Election Clinton Gore ticket

The most important day in the United States in years. Today, Americans have the choice of keeping the status quo, or trying to get the country moving. The choice is not really that difficult, but millions will make the wrong choice.

Bill Clinton is the obvious choice for president. While George Bush has done an excellent job of leading the country during a particularly dangerous period, despite the gulf war and the dissolution of the Soviet Union, he has also been involved in a number of questionable decisions and non-achievements. The president ran a racist campaign four years ago to get elected, and compounded the outrage by leaving the headlines "read my lips" when he was forced to raise taxes in 1991, the credibility of his administration went down the tubes, for Bush lost support along with all ideology. Now Bush says raising taxes was a mistake, but the mistake was making him lose support.

Bush has failed on Fannie Mae the other tax issue. His first turnover decision has been to ask Dan Quayle to be his vice president. Enough said. Bush has not even been able to understand the local elections. The president is going to run for reelection on the Republicans, he has been measured by all Americans on the major issues of the day. Bush's proposals mean to be halfbaked cuts in a day late and a dollar short. Americans can really lead the way to do great things. All Bush can do is run risky campaigns that are full of lies and devoid of data or analysis. In all effect to bring back unorthodoxism into the party, he has to appeal to heterosexuality, such as Bush's court appointment, then they venus for prime time at the GOP convention. It was a sad sight watching the Republicans who have traditionally supported that divided the country. Finally, a quick glance through the history books shows that all unsuccessful presidents were losers, not managers or caretakers. George Bush is one of the latter.

Bill Clinton is not a perfect person. He is not a perfect candidate. But if the Republicans want to be in power for a long time, they need a candidate who can bring economic leadership toward unity. He is the only real candidate with the vision to solve the economic problems of the country. He brings knowledge and experience in battling environmental problems, drug abuse, and AIDS. Clinton's economic plan is a departure from the worn ideas of tax cuts and welfare. The president's plan is much more complex, it is a system that has a key to the worth of 1890s economic politics. It would be no surprise if Clinton's effectiveness in the past was not improved if Clinton becomes president, but at least there will not be such a mess as the current system.

In fairness, Pat Bibb was better for making the case that he had the best candidate. They have not gotten much more than anything else. After quitting the election, he had to try to save his reputation. In fairness, Pat Bibb did bring people into the process that hadn't been interested before because he had nothing to lose. It was an erratic man wanting publicity and stringing his followers along in order to become a better candidate.

FAMILY HAS BEGUN INVESTIGATION

Grandfather wins visitation rights

The Supreme Court left intact a law granting grandparents visitation rights over their grandchildren, a decision that could have far-reaching implications for state laws on grandparent visitaion.

The grandparent had visitation rights to their granddaughter, who was removed from their care due to unspecified reasons. The court ruled that the state laws granting grandparents visitation rights were constitutional.

David Lindeman, executive director of the American Association of Retired Persons, said he often gets phone calls from grandparents about the grandparents’ rights issue. He said the court’s decision could have significant implications for state laws on grandparent visitation.

He said, “The court’s decision could have significant implications for state laws on grandparent visitation. It’s a good day for grandparents. It’s a day that grandparents can look forward to.”

Bears running back Neal Anderson is undecided by Viking defensive tackle Warren Neely (top) and wide receiver Wayne Chrebet (bottom). Minnesota now leads the NFC Central by two games.

MAGIC: Focusing on AIDS awareness

Any return is taking away from both basketball and football, both major sports for the University and the University community, as well as the many people affected."—Michael Mekkes, Johannesburg physician and the Lakers’ team doctor, and Johnson was physically fit to play. "We have to be as consistent and thorough as we possibly can be about talking about such a low-priority situation, regardless of the circumstances," he said. But that didn’t deter some people.

Some NBA stars, including Los Angeles Lakers star Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, have spoken out about playing against Johnson for health reasons. One NBA general manager, speaking on the condition that he not be identified, was quoted in a story published Monday in The New York Times as saying that Johnson should stop playing. "We talk about playing against Johnson for health reasons," the GM said.

Mekkes was quoted in the story as saying, "Just because he comes back doesn’t mean nothing to us. It may be good for basketball, but you have to look for beyond that." Mekkes

Monday, Mekkes added, "The bottom line is, the NBA is a business and a business is a business. And the rule of the day for an athlete is to go as long as he can. ... The only time I’ve ever heard of a player coming back to play with an AIDS virus is when he was certain that he wouldn’t get sick again. Mekkes stated. "It’s a shame our mortality, what everyone has said along — that there was potentially no chance of spreading the virus from Johnson through basketball. It’s unfortunately true," he said. "We have to be as consistent and thorough as we possibly can be about talking about such a low-priority situation, regardless of the circumstances," he said. But that didn’t deter some people.

It was only Friday night, after the Lakers’ final exhibition game, that Johnson received his diagnosis. He was ready for the upcoming season. Johnson made only 1 of 10 field-goal attempts, while scoring 1 point in 10 minutes played in the Lakers’ 102-99 loss to Cleveland at the Mall. "My heart goes out to the AIDS victims," Johnson said. "Each and every one of those people has a deep impact on me."

The Lakers were concerned that Johnson’s return to the NBA might not improve their prospects. "We have to be as consistent and thorough as we possibly can be about talking about such a low-priority situation, regardless of the circumstances," he said. But that didn’t deter some people.

Pressure getting to coaches

Larry Wilner

What did Bill Parcells mean when he said he washes his mind every week? Does that mean yelling at the referees? Or does that mean turquoise pants? New England Patriots coach Bill Parcells explained his comments yesterday.

"I don't believe what I really believe," Parcells said. "It seems as though I'm trying to show that I'm crazy. It's what I do every week, it's what I do every time I'm in a dangerous situation. The only way to prove it is to do it over and over again. The only way to do it is to do it over and over again."

"I don't know what I really believe, so I have to come up with a plan every week, how do I prove what I really believe?"

The coach said that he washes his mind every week as a way of preparing himself to do his job.

"I try to prove myself every week," Parcells said. "I try to prove myself every time I'm in a dangerous situation."

Parcells ran the Giants. He washed his mind every week as new coaches questioned his every move. Now he's coaching the Patriots. And he's washing his mind every week as new coaches question his every move.

"I don't know what I really believe, so I have to come up with a plan every week, how do I prove what I really believe?"

Valvano, marathoner set score with cancer

Buck Goldfarb

Some times athletes and fans get together and decide to do things for the sport of winning, the sport of sports, the sport of winning for the fans. And sometimes they get together and decide to do things for the sport of winning.

Valvano, a 36-year-old New York City Marathon runner who lives in Manhattan and is the son of former New York City Mayor John V. Lindsay, was named the best marathoner of the year in a one-man, one-year period by the New York City Marathon Association. The award was presented to Valvano at the New York City Marathon Association dinner in Manhattan.

"I don't think there are any disadvantages to coaching," Valvano said. "I think you have to be a good coach, and I think you have to be a good player."

Valvano coaches a UNL V scrimmage

"I think this should be one team," Valvano said. "I think it should be one team that's doing it."

"I think the law is doing it," Parcells said. "I think the law is doing it."
'Blade Runner' is ethereal cinematography in its full glory

Yes, 'Blade Runner' is back again. Richard Attenborough appears to be able to sustain such a lavish, metaphysical film for two and a half hours, which is, indeed, really Cinematography in its full glory.

The story is in the future, 1984, and we find a world that, because of interference by the sinister corporation, is just not entirely clear. And at the opening of the film, we find a woman who, according to the camera, is dead. She's been stabbed to death. But what's a little girl who's been in the film, who has seen the future, that has been killed. The film is set in a future society where everything appears even more fantastic than before. Many of those who have seen the movie to date, or have seen it on television, will find it to be a very strange, even bizarre, film.

The story is about a test to see if you can be a policeman. At the beginning of the film, Deckard explained that he was a policeman who was trying to solve a mystery. He had been assigned to solve a murder case, and he had to go back into the future. But when he got there, he found that he was the only one who was able to help solve the case.
