Hey! Do you know who you're calling?

The telephone number provided by UISA for its "Home for the Holidays" advertisement in Monday's Daily Iowan was incorrect. For more information on the inexpensive lift home, call 335-3860.

Search begins for finance vice president

A national search has begun to find a new UI vice president for finance and university services. UI Vice President for University Relations Ann Rhodes said the position is the UI's top financial post and it is hoped that someone will be named by July 1. The new administrator will replace Susan Phillips, who left over a year ago to become a governor of the Federal Reserve Board. Currently, the position is held by University Treasurer Douglas True on an interim basis. Rhodes said the new vice president will be responsible for UI business functions and some of the university support functions.

Ark. health chief is Clinton's surgeon general

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — President-elect Bill Clinton has asked Arkansas Health Director Joycelyn Elders to become the U.S. surgeon general, and she has accepted, a Democratic source said Monday.

Elders, a liberal and often-combative member of Clinton's state Cabinet since 1987, was offered the position over the weekend, said the source, speaking only on condition of anonymity.

Elders, 59, a Little Rock pediatrician, would replace Dr. Antonia Novello as the government's top health officer. Elders would be the second black and fifth woman chosen for high-level position in the Clinton administration.

Annual AIDS cost may reach $15 billion by '95

WASHINGTON (AP) — The cost of treating Americans infected with the AIDS virus could rise some 48 percent, to $15.2 billion a year, by 1995, health experts told a Senate panel Monday.

"The widespread use of expensive drugs has contributed to the high costs of treating persons with HIV," said Fred Hellinger, a financing specialist with the U.S. Public Health Service.

Some 1 million Americans are infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, and 250,000 have been diagnosed with AIDS. Of that quarter million, more than 160,000 have died. No one is known to have recovered from the disease.

The number of patients newly diagnosed with AIDS each year could reach 97,800 in 1995, he said.

Boy asks Santa for food for mom, job for dad, trip to heaven

PORT ANGELES, Wash. (AP) — Thad wrote to Santa seeking food for his hungry mom, a job for his dad and help getting to "Heaven" so his parents won't need to feed him.

Many people are now hoping to rescue Thad and his family.

If they can only locate them, "We'd sure like to find him," Clallam County Sheriff's Sgt. Monty Martin said Monday. "I think this is the year that everyone goes out to make Christmas happy. We'd sure like to make this kid's Christmas happy."

Educators who have seen the letter guess the letter-writer, who signed only with the name "Thad," is a child between third and fifth grade.

Search to fill health sci. post set back

Charles Putman had been offered the job, the UI said, but negotiations broke down.

Brad Hahn

The Daily Iowan

Negotiations to appoint Duke University's Executive Vice President for Administration Charles Putman the new UI vice president of health sciences have fallen through.

Putman had been offered the position last week by UI President Hunter Rawlings, said UI Vice President for University Relations Ann Rhodes, but there were issues on both sides that couldn't be worked out.

No information concerning the specifics of the negotiations was

"It looks very unlikely that any of the other three will be named."

Ann Rhodes, UI vice president available Monday. Neither Putman nor Rawlings were available for comment.

Rhodes said there are no plans to name a new vice president in the immediate future. The July 1 target date to fill the post is still possible, she said, but less likely.

It is unclear how far back in the process the administration will go, Rhodes said, but none of the other three finalists are expected to be appointed.

"It looks very unlikely that any of the other three will be named," Rhodes said. "But I'm not 100 percent sure. The president will be meeting with the vice presidents in the immediate future to discuss this."

Despite the regression in the search, Rhodes said she is confident the UI will end up with a more-than-qualified administrator.

PROBLEMS HAVE ACCUMULATED

UI's maintenance needs total $53 million

Brad Hahn

The Daily Iowan

The UI reported needs totaling over $53 million in deferred maintenance, more than the other four state higher-education institutions combined, according to the Iowa state Board of Regents' annual report.

The high dollar sums come from many years of inadequate funding for normal maintenance and building renewal, according to the report.

UI Vice President for University

Relations Ann Rhodes said the neglect has resulted from both insufficient funding and expanded demands on the maintenance budget.

Keeping up with fire-safety codes and keeping lab areas up to date, combined with the lack of money, has contributed to the current situation, Rhodes said.

The regents have developed a five-year building program in an attempt to meet the needs of all the institutions. In addition, the Iowa Legislature provided $20

AGENCIES SAY INCREASE WELCOME

Donations to Somalia on the rise

Jude Sunderbruch

The Daily Iowan

As relief workers await the arrival of multinational forces to defend food shipments on their way to the drought-ravaged interior of Somalia, officials from the U.S. headquarters of many aid agencies report dramatically increased donations.

Bill Garrett, a spokesman for the U.S. Committee for UNICEF, said reports from the field indicate that while the situation is better for the starving in and around Somalia's capital of Mogadishu, few successes have been seen in the more remote areas of the country.

"There has been virtually no improvement in the outlying parts of the country away from Mogadishu," he said.

Bandits still reign supreme in parts of these more remote regions where aid workers and food convoys have yet to receive the support and protection of multinational forces, according to many on-the-scene accounts.

CARE spokeswoman Hope Rosenberg agreed the situation has yet to stabilize, but she said some supplies have reached Baidoa, considered by some to be the last refuge of many bandits because multinational troops have yet to arrive there.

"Things have been tough and go," she said. "Yesterday a convoy of trucks got out to Baidoa."

Associated Press

A Somali woman, weakened by the ravages of starvation, clings to a tree in Baidoa Monday while waiting for food at the Red Crescent feeding center.

Hope Rosenberg, spokeswoman for CARE

Somalia has been hampered by bad weather, and no one is sure when the build-up of forces will be complete.

"They're deploying as quickly as possible," he said. "As quickly as our assets can get them there."

Furthermore, Sammons said there are no exact dates for the arrival of troops to the outlying regions of Somalia.

"It all depends upon how operations go from here on out," he said. "There's no specific timetable of the troops to be anyplace."

Although relief workers eagerly await the arrival of these forces, CARE spokeswoman Hope Rosenberg said her organization is aware of the need to deploy forces with proper support and careful planning.

"We fully understand why it would take some time to get down to Baidoa," she said. "They're going slowly, but they're doing it that way so they can do it properly."

Janet Torsney, a spokeswoman for Save the Children in the United States, said relief organizations are grateful for the arrival of the multinational forces, but added that eventually a political compromise must be found in Somalia.

MISCEGENATION TABOO STILL EXISTS

Interracial marriages still face opposition

Yokota Masuo

The Daily Iowan

When Richard Loving, a white man, and Mildred Jeterwere, a black woman, were married in 1958, they were apprehended in Virginia and accused of violating the state's anti-miscegenation law, a felony, and faced up to five years in prison.

The case, Loving vs. Virginia, was fought until 1967, when the Supreme Court struck down the laws barring interracial marriages in Virginia and 15 other states.

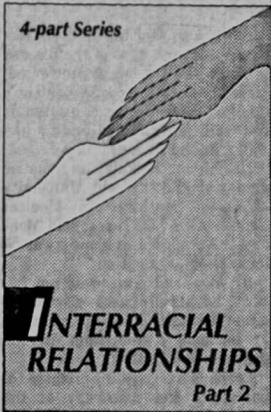

When it comes to black-white relationships, those between black women and white men often fail to be fully covered in the mass media. However, 25 years after the anti-miscegenation laws were abolished, today's relationships between black females and white males still remain vulnerable, most commonly because of white parents' rejections.

UI undergraduate Leslie Allen, who is black, has been dating a white Marine stationed in California, for about three years.

They are planning to hold a wedding ceremony in January 1993 in California, but Allen's boyfriend is determined not to invite his father to their ceremony.

"His dad cannot stand it, he hates me," Allen said. "He just thinks I'm not good enough for his son because I'm black."

"His whole father's side of the family thinks Tracy is lowering himself to date someone of my color," she continued. "I don't want to see Tracy hurt because his father is pushing himself out of his son's life because of me."

The support from his mother and Allen's parents will allow them to maintain their relationship. According to Allen, her future mother-in-law is supportive of them because she knows they love each other.

"My parents don't care about the color of skin," Allen said. "They have been totally liberal and supportive from the beginning." Marriages between black men and white women far outnumber those between black women and white men. Of the 211,000 black-white marriages in 1990, 71 percent was between a black man and a white woman and 29 percent between a black woman and a white man.

MEMBERS ENTHUSIASTIC

Ski Club to hit Colorado slopes over break

James Anderson
The Daily Iowan

Snow is difficult to avoid in December. But members of the UI Ski Club are willing to make an annual winter pilgrimage to find it. "The ski club has been around for quite a few years as a way for people from the Midwest to ski over Christmas and spring break," said Ski Club Social Coordinator David Navarre. Navarre said the big outings for the Ski Club are during Christmas break and spring break. From Jan. 2-10, a group of 54 UI Ski Club members have chartered a bus to Winterpark, Colo. A trip to Utah is scheduled during spring break. "It is a cheap way to go if we arrange for a bus," Navarre said, adding that a week of skiing costs $230-$330.

The Ski Club also makes day trips to Sundown Ski Area in Dubuque and Chestnut in Galena, Ill.

Navarre said that anyone who skis or wants to ski is welcome to join the UI Ski Club.

"All ski levels are encouraged and beginners are always welcome," said Navarre.

UI Ski Club President Shawn Johnson, who has been a club member for four years and a skier for eight, said a big part of the club is getting people together with a common interest.

"It is more just for people to get together as a club," he said.

Johnson said arranging the trips are not difficult and that the club works through a travel agency to get the best deal possible.

"It is not hard to put the trips together, but getting the money from students is," Johnson said. He added that anyone interested in making the trip to Winterpark still can, but the chartered bus is filled.

Of the ski trips Johnson has taken, he said the spring break trip to Jackson Hole, Wyo., was a memorable one, but not for the fabulous skiing.

"The trip to Jackson Hole was kind of weird because the snow was terrible," Johnson said. "It got hot during the day and the snow turned into one foot of slush."

As a result of the bad snow, Johnson said "two or three" club members "got their shoulders knocked out" and one person had to have arthroscopic surgery. He added that the partying on the trips is "usually pretty good."

STUDY FOCUSES ON URBANITES

Historian says not all Iowans share farm heritage

Roger Munns
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Not everybody's grandfather hitched up the one-horse plow and set out to tame the hard prairie.

And there are plenty of Iowans whose grandmothers never came near a wood-burning stove, never butchered a chicken, never put up homemade preserves to last the winter.

"This is Iowa and our agriculture history is an important heritage," said Jody O'Mara, an amateur historian.

But it doesn't apply to everybody, and O'Mara is out to find some more imports, like herself, to tell their stories.

"I just decided I didn't ever, ever again want to hear how to make soap from lye," said O'Mara, 67, who grew up in suburban Indianapolis, Ind. "I love that part. But I've had enough of it."

"Those are great stories, but there are many of us who don't relate to them at all."

"My grandmother worked in Chicago. She would take a drink and smoke cigarettes. It's such a long way from the grandma down on the farm."

O'Mara said she knows from personal experience that there are lots of stories about Iowans making soap and surviving long winters. But there aren't many stories about Iowans who grew up in big cities, watching sparks spray from the trolley line or running after the ice-cream man.

As a volunteer at the Iowa City-Johnson County Senior Center, 28 S. Linn St., O'Mara said groups of seniors often gather to discuss oral or written histories.

So she is spreading the word. If you're an Iowan whose heritage is nowhere near a farm, give her a call.

She already has two responses, one from a woman who grew up in Chicago, and a man who grew up in Washington, D.C.

"He talked about going to the reflecting pool and being chased off the Capitol grounds," she said.

Older people are likely to be children of the Great Depression.

"It seems like the Depression on the farm was not the same. In urban areas, we actually saw people selling apples in the park," she said.

O'Mara came to Iowa in 1947 when her husband landed a job at the UI. They moved to a farm and stayed for 37 years. After her husband died, she moved to Iowa City.

"I loved the farm. If you are in Iowa, it's important to live on a farm," she said. But she'd like to hear from Iowans who grew up in areas where the farm was only in stories.

PHYSICIAN CITES EVIDENCE

Dr.: Dickens' Tiny Tim suffered from kidney disease

Malcolm Ritter
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Tiny Tim, the fictional child whose ill health adds poignancy to the 19th-century tale "A Christmas Carol," apparently suffered from a kidney disease that made his blood too acidic, a physician suggests.

Dr. Donald Lewis studied Tiny Tim to show medical students how to diagnose children. The symptoms were revealed in the original manuscript of Charles Dickens' 1843 classic, illustrations in later editions and movie adaptations.

Dickens could not have known about the kidney condition — distal renal tubular acidosis (type I) — because it was not recognized until the early 20th century, Lewis said. But therapies for such symptoms were used during Dickens' day and could have treated it.

Medical College of Hampton Roads in Norfolk, Va., and a pediatric neurologist at the U.S. Naval Hospital in Portsmouth. He discusses Tiny Tim in the December issue of the American Journal of Diseases of Children.

Here's his evidence and analysis:

■ Tiny Tim was short but apparently proportioned normally. Dickens referred to Tim's father, Bob Cratchit, as little, so Tim's stature may have been inherited.

■ Tim had only one crutch, so the disease affected one side of the body more than the other, maybe a result of bone fractures.

■ His spells of weakness, his withered hand and limpness when riding on his father's shoulders suggest a problem with the nerves that lead from the spinal cord to the muscles.

■ He apparently was supposed to die within a year, because the Ghost of Christmas Present told Ebenezer Scrooge that "none other of my race will find him here" during presumably annual visits.

■ Yet he did not die after Scrooge opened his rich purse and, no doubt, found the best doctors around. So the disease must have been treatable with therapies available at the time.

Lewis consulted medical textbooks of Dickens' day and found that children with Tim's symptoms would have received alkaline solutions, which would counteract the excess acid in his blood. Tim's improvement would have been rapid, Lewis said.

While there are several plausible diagnoses, Lewis said, the treatable kidney disorder fits most neatly and fulfills "the hopeful spirit of the story."

Dr. Donald Lewis studied Tiny Tim to show medical students how to diagnose children.

The wedding must go on — Bride Louis "Maggie" Larkin, center, and bridegroom Andrew Carroll, pose Saturday with National Guardsmen at a Nahant, Mass., reception hall. The guardsmen helped Larkin and her wedding party out of her flooded home in time for her wedding.

PROBLEM FIXED ITSELF

Computer failure halts registration

Tad Paulson
The Daily Iowan

Part-time UI students attempting to register for Saturday and evening classes next term ran into a temporary roadblock Monday morning, when a computer-system breakdown cut off access to the UI registration network for several hours.

The breakdown, which lasted from 8 a.m. until noon, affected three UI buildings — the Union, the Alumni Center and the International Center. Registration for part-time students began Monday.

"The problem seemed to cure itself before it was ever fixed," said Daryl Sawin, assistant director for hardware and systems software at the UI Administrative Data Processing Service.

Sawin said ADP and UI Office of Telecommunications employees responded to the breakdown shortly before 8 a.m., but the problems stopped before they could determine what was wrong.

"We had a subchannel on the broadband causing problems," Sawin said. "The broadband is divided into a lot of frequencies,

"The problem seemed to cure itself before it was ever fixed."

Daryl Sawin

and it turned out that the frequency for the International Center was having problems."

Part-time students have priority in registration for spring classes and may register by phone, in person or via ISIS through Dec. 30. Full-time students will be allowed to register for evening classes starting Jan. 4.

Shari Zenor, information specialist at the Center for Credit Programs, located in the International Center, said her office was forced to ask people to call back later in the day to register because of the computer breakdown.

"We kept encouraging people to call back," Zenor said. "Now that the computers are back on-line, we're swamped."

This is the first year that phone-in registration service is available.

"In general, people were pretty understanding," Zenor said. "People knew it was a larger problem than our office."

Saturday and evening classes are generally designed for part-time students, Zenor said, who have "multiple roles and have other commitments." Zenor estimated there are nearly 3,000 part-time students at the UI.

MEMBERS TO FOCUS ON ABUSE OF WOMEN

Men's group aims to end violence

Sara Epstein
The Daily Iowan

Ending Men's Violence, a new local group comprising mostly of males, is hoping to further educate other men about responsible behavior towards women.

Michael Shaw, co-founder of the group, said he feels men need to be the ones to tell other men that certain behaviors — especially violent ones — are not acceptable.

"We want to get across that violence is abhorrent, in particular violence against women," said Shaw, a psychiatric nursing assistant in the Child Psychiatry Unit at the UI Hospitals and Clinics. "It doesn't make sense to me that there's so much condoned, accepted violence against women."

Shaw hopes Ending Men's Violence, which is a local chapter of the national organization, will find ways to stop the victimization of women by men through education. Membership, currently about 20, is open to women, but Shaw would like men to be the major component.

"We need women to bring their voice to us, but we need to do the work," he said.

Co-founder Jim Kinley said Ending Men's Violence would also like to reactivate the Women's Transit Authority, a program which gave women rides home on weekend nights and was run by the Rape Victim Advocacy Program. It was discontinued last year due to budget cuts.

he added.

"There is a sexist ethic in our society that allows these sorts of behaviors — we have to change that," he said. "Women aren't creating the problems, we are. And we don't have to behave that way."

Both Shaw and Kinley have female friends who have been sexually assaulted or who are scared to walk home at night, which prompted them to take action.

"I don't have a complete understanding, but an awareness of what damage can be done," said Shaw, who's been trying to start such a group for several years. "I guess it just came to a personal level — I wanted to help my friends."

Currently, the group is meeting about once a month at various locations in Iowa City. Although interest is building slowly, Shaw said he hopes Ending Men's Violence will last.

"When a man deals with an issue in an empowering way, people say, 'That's just men being men.' Well, I can't accept that, and I want to change some of that thinking," he said.

"We want to get across that violence is abhorrent..."

Michael Shaw,
co-founder of Ending
Men's Violence

Kinley, an Iowa City resident, explained that the group will use education to get men to question certain behaviors, such as telling sexist jokes. The group will speak to various groups, such as UI dorm residents, and is planning on sponsoring an information table in the Union next semester.

SOCIAL SCIENCE CENTER FLOURISHES

Bright future predicted for UI institute

Jude Sunderbruch
The Daily Iowan

Looking back on the past five years since the creation of the UI Social Science Institute, the facility's director said much has been accomplished and a bright future exists for the social science research and training center.

Professor Arthur Miller, director of the institute since its inception in 1987, said the fact the institute has enjoyed growth in a time of tight fiscal constraints is a positive sign.

"Given that we not only survived, but grew, during the past five years of retrenchment and budget problems, I'm quite pleased," he said.

The institute has three primary goals, according to Program Director Mary Losch: training students, collecting original data, and providing survey research facilities for the UI and the surrounding region. In addition, the institute conducts the well-regarded Heartland Poll of Midwestern political trends.

By using an advanced computer interviewing system, Losch said the institute employs graduate and undergraduate students as interviewers to conduct research projects for both UI faculty and outside contracts.

In addition, the institute maintains an ever-expanding base of computer data sets that faculty and students can use for research projects.

"We have thousands of data sets that were collected from around the country and, in fact, around the world," she said. "We've increased our number of data sets considerably."

While some of that data originates in research projects here at the UI, much comes from studies conducted elsewhere, according to Miller.

"Most of the data that we have in our archive comes from the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research," he said. Based at the University of Michigan, the consortium acts as a national clearinghouse for data sets.

While much smaller, the UI institute compares favorably with facilities at the University of Michigan, regarded by many as the center of public policy research in the United States.

"The usage of the archives has increased dramatically in the past several years," he said. "In terms of data utilization, we're second only to Michigan."

Losch said she has a positive outlook for the institute.

"We are very pleased and we think that we will continue to grow as faculty and staff learn more about us and our capabilities," she said. "By and large, the best advertising we have found is the people who've worked with us."

Miller said he hopes the number of interviewing stations can be expanded to provide shorter completion times for surveys, an improvement that could attract more outside customers for the institute's services.

"We'd like to bring in more external funding to the university," he said.

BOARD DEFYING JUDGE'S ORDER

Group: Regents going ahead with WOI sale

A lawsuit, won earlier this year by Iowans for WOI-TV, blocked the sale of the television station.

DES MOINES — The Board of Regents is ignoring an Iowa judge's order by continuing to work on the sale of WOI-TV, according to a group fighting to keep the station at Iowa State University.

"When a judge tells a party within his jurisdiction to stop, he means stop," Glenn Norris, a Des Moines attorney for Iowans for WOI-TV Inc., said Monday.

The group won a lawsuit earlier this year blocking the proposed sale of the commercial television station to a New York investment group. The Board of Regents has continued work with the Federal Communications Commission to transfer the station's license to the prospective buyer, the group charged.

"Now they're violating and ignoring a court order," said Thomas Beell, a board member of Iowans for WOI-TV Inc.

The Board of Regents is appealing District Judge Ronald Schechtman's order blocking the sale, but an Iowa Supreme Court ruling is not expected for several months. Iowans for WOI-TV filed papers Monday asking the Supreme Court to send the case back to Schechtman for a specific order blocking further work on the sale.

"It is our hope that Judge Schechtman will have an opportunity to review the actions being taken and in effect modify his order," Beell said.

Board of Regents officials were not immediately available for comment. Staffers said regents Executive Director Wayne Richey and President Marvin Pomerantz were out of town Monday.

Norris said he hopes the Supreme Court will rule within three weeks on the request to send the case back to Schechtman, who in his initial ruling scolded the Board of Regents for pushing the sale despite opposition.

"We characterized the Board of Regents as a renegade agency during our trial last summer," Beell said. His group's petition to the Supreme Court calls the board's latest actions "a flagrant contempt of the district court order."

Chinese church meets students' spiritual needs

Kristi Nixon
Special to The Daily Iowan

Jason Chen didn't come to Iowa City 25 years ago with a mission. But today, he leads a mission among students from overseas at the Wesley Foundation.

Chen started the Chinese Church of Iowa City for students from China, Singapore, Hong Kong and Taiwan in 1982. Between 50 and 60 students attend the church every week.

"It gives them a sense of security and purpose," Chen said. "Yet it meets their spiritual needs although they are unconscious of it."

Chen came to Iowa City from China in 1967. In 1971, Home Ministries, a volunteer organization he worked for, asked him to become campus minister for the Christian Reformed Church. Chen then started working with Christian Reformed and international students.

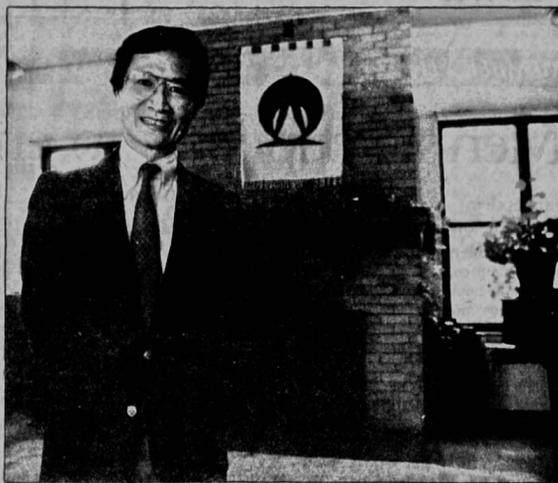

Three years later, he started a Bible study for Chinese students, which he emphasized was an interracial group.

"We called ourselves the 'little brown-white-black-yellow' church," Chen said.

The Bible study lasted for five years, until 1979. The reason the study group ended was because the scene on campus had changed, Chen said.

"There came to be a tension on campus between American and international students," Chen said. "American students had more of a suspicion of foreign students at that point in time."

In 1982 there were about 20 students interested in forming a Chinese Church, he said. At first, the church met on a monthly basis, but after three months it began to meet weekly.

"There was some tension about starting the church because some of the students who would come were already in conservative Anglo churches," Chen said.

The majority of students attending the church are from Hong Kong, with a smaller group from Taiwan and Singapore. Few people from China attend the church.

"Religion is against the law to practice in China," Chen said. "Most students from China come to the church because they want to be around others who know their language."

The services at the church are bilingual. Every other Sunday, Chen preaches in Chinese and a student translates into English. A student translates into Chinese when he preaches in English.

Each student who attends the church has a different cultural and religious background. James Kuan, a student from Taiwan, and his wife, Chen Ching Ya, said they became Christians through missonaries who came from Hong Kong. Mandy Cheng, a student from Hong Kong, said she became a Christian after attending evangelist Billy Graham's revival in Hong Kong with some friends who were Christian.

On the other hand, Tim Li, a student from Hong Kong, was raised a Christian by his parents.

"This is not common among my people," Li said. "Not more than 2 to 3 percent of the population is Christian."

These students have a common reason for participating in the Chinese Church.

"It is a place of friendship," Kuan said, "... a place that encourages us to learn the English language and teaches us leadership skills in the church."

The church is a community where its members can share a common language, culture and faith, Cheng said.

"Chinese Church is a place of encouragement," she said. "It is a feeling of home."

$3 MILLION COMPLEX BEING CONSIDERED

Councilors hear plan for new plaza

Lynn M. Tefft
The Daily Iowan

Developer Jim Glasgow presented his plan for the new Carnegie Plaza to the Iowa City City Council Monday night, saying he hopes to have the $3 million apartment, retail and office complex completed by Aug. 1, 1993.

The plaza will be located at the corner of College and Gilbert streets, on the site of the present Old Public Library parking lot. It will feature one floor of retail shop and office space and four floors of apartments.

The structure will be one story taller than a similar one presently located at the corner of Burlington and Gilbert streets.

Although there will be underground facilities, Councilor Randy Larson questioned whether there would be adequate parking spaces to accommodate merchants and residents.

There is room for 150 occupants in the apartments, Glasgow said, and only 45 parking spaces. However, he said he does not anticipate this being a problem with the new Chauncey Swan parking lot being constructed at the corner of Washington and Gilbert streets.

Planning and Community Development Director Karin Franklin said arrangements to allow more permit parking in the ramp can be made if necessary.

The council will consider a resolution approving the plan at tonight's regular council meeting.

In other business, the council discussed the adoption of the Iowa City Historic Preservation Plan, which is on the agenda for tonight's meeting.

Historic Preservation Commission Chairman Douglas Russell assured the council that with the new amendments, the plan does not bind the city to any specific commitments.

HEARING DATE STILL NOT SET

Branstad anxious to see Welsh case conclude

The governor wants the Senate to wrap up the matter before the next legislative session, when a new committee will take over.

not scheduled a meeting to consider new allegations against Welsh, a Democratic senator from Dubuque. Convicted embezzler Steven Wymer has said he paid Welsh to obtain state laws favorable to Wymer's investment businesses, which included the Iowa Trust Fund.

The fund failed a year ago when investigators discovered that more than $75 million invested by Iowa local governments was missing. Wymer later pleaded guilty to fraud and other charges in the case and awaits federal sentencing in California.

The Senate Ethics Committee is trying to arrange testimony from Wymer and two Iowa Trust officials. Ethics Committee lawyer Patrick Roby has urged the committee to finish its work before the 1993 Legislature convenes Jan. 11. A new Ethics Committee would take over on that date, and some members have said they are unsure whether the new committee would have authority to take over the Welsh case. Welsh resigned as Senate president earlier this year and was reprimanded by the Senate for allegedly using his legislative influence to help the Iowa Trust Fund seek investments in Iowa. Welsh was a commission salesman for the company. He has denied Wymer's allegation that he worked inside the Legislature to try to change state investment laws for the Iowa Trust Fund.

Branstad also criticized the Legislature's ethics reform effort in the wake of the Iowa Trust Fund case. He said legislators left loopholes in the law for themselves while putting too many restrictions on local government officials.

Local officials are trying to get exemptions in the new ethics law. They claim financial disclosure reports and limits on contacts with interest groups are unnecessary at the local level.

"I think in one case they went overboard and in another case they didn't zero in enough on the problems," Branstad said.

DES MOINES—The Senate Ethics Committee still has not arranged a new hearing in the Joe Welsh ethics case. On Monday, Gov. Terry Branstad prodded members to get the matter resolved.

"They need to get this out. They need to make a determination. They need to take the appropriate action against anybody who's guilty of wrongdoing, and then put in place rules that prevent this type of thing from happening again," Branstad said at his weekly news conference.

AVIATION AUTHORITIES INVESTIGATING

Pilot of crashed plane unsure of what went wrong

Associated Press
CEDAR RAPIDS — The pilot of a twin-engine plane that landed in a farm field near the Cedar Rapids Airport said Monday he was unsure what went wrong.
 All seven people aboard escaped serious injury in the incident Sunday night, authorities said.
 "Everybody looked good and all of a sudden I got in some trouble," said Wayne Lynch, 34, of West Branch, the pilot of the twin-engine Cessna 402-B.
 "When I realized I was in trouble I kept the wings level and slid to a stop. Everyone walked away from the airplane," Lynch said in a telephone interview, just before being discharged from Mercy Medical Center.

 Investigators from the Federal Aviation Administration arrived Monday to inspect the plane.
 Lynch said he had yet to be interviewed by the investigators.
 Asked if he knew what caused the plane to land in a field about an eighth of a mile short of the runway, Lynch said, "to be honest with you, no."
 Lynch called it a "hard, forced landing." The plane remained upright, but he said the landing gear sheared off.
 "I got beat around a little bit," he said. "It could have been a lot worse."
 The plane is owned by Dwyer Air Charter of Mason City, said Larry Mullendore, the airport director at Cedar Rapids.

 Lynch said he was a former Dwyer pilot and was about to return to the payroll. He said he had arranged to borrow the plane for a private flight with six friends.
 Originally, airport officials reported there were two crew members on the flight, but Lynch said he had no co-pilot.
 Mullendore identified the passengers as Daniel Saxon of Iowa City and four West Branch residents — Troy Budreau, Leonard Moore, Michael Siesseger and Stephen Murphy.
 The pilot and five of his passengers were taken to two Cedar Rapids hospitals. A seventh person, whose name was not released, did not require hospital attention, Mullendore said.

 Lynch, Budreau and Saxon were held overnight for observation and released Monday, hospital officials said.
 The plane skidded to a stop shortly before 6 p.m. Sunday, Mullendore said.
 Within minutes, eight rescue vehicles surrounded the crumpled plane.
 Rescuers had to contend with mud and snow, with some equipment getting stuck as it tried to leave the field.
 Mullendore said he did not know if foggy weather was a factor in the crash, but said the pilot had received control tower approval to land using instruments instead of by sight.

COMMERCIALISM

Christmas jeers

At the risk of sounding like Ebenezer Scrooge, the 1992 Christmas season has, as usual, lost its splendor. While Christmas should be a time of hope and peace, in the United States at least this season annually devolves into a testament to greed.

Every year Christmas becomes awash in commercialism. Instead of admiring the beauty that should be the focal point of this time of year, Christmas is inevitably exploited by merchandisers who are trying to make a quick buck. From the endless Christmas commercials, the ridiculous TV specials and the countless other ways the holiday is exploited, somehow the hopes and dreams that should be associated with Dec. 25 become synonymous with Salad Shooters, Chia Pets, and "A Very Brady Christmas."

Is it really necessary for Christmas to be the time of year when people max out their credit cards so they can buy gifts that people don't want half the time? Is it if you believe the hype surrounding this time of year. And it isn't just Christians that perform financial silliness at this time of year. The Jewish holiday of Chanukkah which starts Dec. 19, has become a holiday where gifts are exchanged. In truth, this is a very minor festival, which has been propped up in the United States to compete with Christmas. Simply put, the attention paid to Chanukkah is much more than necessary.

Unfortunately, the Christmas season is an example of blatant commercialism, which happens to be a side effect of capitalism. Commercialism exists in all forms of society. Spike Lee makes a terrific movie about Malcolm X, yet the merchandisers make millions by selling T-shirts, caps and other stuff to capitalize on the interest of the movie. No matter how you feel about the man, is this the proper way to commemorate him? This type of sleazy commercialism has been around probably since the day after Adam Smith invented capitalism. There is no way around it, but that does not stop the bitter taste that is left in a person's mouth after being subjected to it.

This article was not intended to trample on anyone's religious beliefs. It was just a reminder of how the Christmas season has become so commercialized that inevitably a good part of what should be the greatest time of year gets thrown into the hands of the merchants of greed. It may be a necessary evil of Adam Smith's system, but it is an evil that makes a person say "bah, humbug."

LETTERS

Enough is enough

To the Editor:

In response to Myron Wright's letter to the editor (DI, Dec. 2), I would like to comment on a few of his statements and accusations. To begin with, he childishly attempts to degrade Michael B. Clark's character. Letters to the editor should not be used as a method of personal attack on an individual, but as a means of presenting new ideas or opinions.

In reference to the actual letter, I am sure I speak for many when I say I am tired of references to Mr. Clark's impeachment hearing. Mr. Clark was found not guilty by an overwhelming majority in each of the three senates, and that should be the end of it. While Wright may wish to see Clark guilty, we work within a democracy and through majority rule. Don't you think that it's time to move on? Dwelling on this incident cannot serve any useful purpose, and frankly, makes you appear a sore loser.

As for why the impeachment failed, you automatically assume that there was some kind of conspiracy. As a UAS senator, I resent the fact that you accuse me and my fellow senators of lacking the cognitive ability to make our own decisions. Considering this was the first senate meeting for many of the senators, including myself, most were unaware of who was even being impeached, let alone his political beliefs. Did it ever occur to you that the senate found Mr. Clark not guilty based solely on the evidence (or lack thereof) presented during the trial? Perhaps you should examine the facts instead of being so paranoid as to assume some kind of "political alliance" forming between us senators and Mr. Clark, or anyone else. Most UISA senators have far too much integrity to abandon the truth as your callous allegations imply.

I do agree with you that more people need to get involved with their student government, but not because of a threat by the "right wing" making a mockery of it. As you should well know, very little, if any, UAS legislation has any potential political bias. If everything follows the UISA constitution, then it passes. Being a liberal, conservative or socialist should have no bearing on the funding of student groups or other UISA matters.

Furthermore, what is this PAC you speak of in the UISA? I assume you believe me part of this "PAC" based solely on the fact that I am friends with Mr. Clark. Being friends and sharing political beliefs are two very different things, Myron, and for all you know I may share more of your political ideology than Mr. Clark's. The only PAC I see in the UISA is a group of students trying to help out their fellow students through programs and such, not a plot by the right wing to take over our university. This is the only "not-so-hidden" agenda I see. Maybe you should spend more time trying to work with us and less time trying to degrade Mr. Clark.

Mr. Wright claims that attempts to silence Mr. Clark are "poppycock." But that is precisely what Myron Wright's baseless charges attempt to do. Michael Clark has every right to say what he believes. Is free speech not what our country is about? Your plea for people to simply disbelieve what Mr. Clark has to say shows just how close-minded you are, Myron Wright. I do not believe Mr. Clark is some kind of bigot, for having conversed and debated with him on several occasions, he has never called my ideas or beliefs wrong, simply different than his own. This is more than I can say for you. It appears that it is you who is trying to get rid of the opposition, not the other way around. If voicing your opinion is "dishing out hateful rhetoric," then all you have said is also hateful rhetoric, and not your opinion.

As for Mr. Clark's accusation that you have a personal vendetta against him, it would certainly appear that this accusation has foundation. Why else would you spend so much of your time and energy in trying to silence Mr. Clark and remove him from the UISA? Is student government supposed to represent all ideas and people, or just the narrow-minded opinions of Myron Wright? No one wants to hear any more of a long-past impeachment hearing. We just want to get things done. I do not see anyone except you trying to get rid of diverse ideas and opinions. Perhaps you should use some of your tremendous energy trying to help the students of this university, which should be your goal as a UAS senator, instead of wasting our time and yours trying to satisfy your own personal goal of removing Michael

Time for liberals to stop crying wolf

It didn't take very long. The first American troops arrived in Somalia less than a week ago, food shipments have just begun to reach the interior regions of the country, and already we're hearing complaints that U.S. participation in the operation is racist, that it smacks of colonialism. What do people want? Would it be less racist to watch as hundreds of thousands of Somalis starve to death? Does American intervention necessarily equal colonialism simply because the food is being delivered in military convoys?

Obviously not. It's foolish to arbitrarily condemn all forms of U.S. military intervention. And it's time for liberals to stop looking at U.S. foreign policy as inherently jingoistic and recognize that military intervention is, at times, not only a viable option, but is a moral imperative as well. There are a number of regions in the world where the United States and the United Nations should intervene militarily, and Somalia is one of them.

It is true that in the past the United States imperialistically used its economic and military supremacy to dominate the internal politics of many Third World countries. American foreign policy was often driven by the desire to protect capitalistic interests and to contain communism; there was little concern for human rights or democracy. Following World War II, U.S. foreign policy in the Western Hemisphere often relied on CIA-financed military coups against Latin American governments that were hostile to capitalism. In fact, U.S. policy probably helped destabilize governments in at least Cuba, Guatemala, Nicaragua and Chile.

And, of course, these are not the only examples of U.S. imperialism, and realistically they probably won't be the last. Therefore it is essential that U.S. intervention is not accepted blindly, that the true motivation for the action is clearly determined.

However, it is equally important to not cry wolf every time the United States decides to use force in a foreign country. U.S. intervention does not always imply U.S. imperialism. Those people who necessarily equate the two lose their credibility.

How can the U.S. and U.N. military operation in Somalia seriously be compared to colonialism? The United States is intervening with military force, but this action is clearly being carried out for humanitarian reasons.

There is no suggestion that the military will in any way attempt to establish a pro-U.S. government or any other form of national government. The mission is simply designed to create "a secure environment" so that U.N. relief workers can safely deliver food supplies. It is hard to argue that President George Bush has ulterior motives about Somalia, especially given the fact that he will soon be out of office; and there is no indication President-elect Bill Clinton will extend the military operation.

In fact, the U.S. government has already stated that U.S. military activity could be completed within 90 days. In addition, this is not simply a U.S. action. It falls under the auspices of the United Nations and involves military forces from a number of different countries.

Of course, some people are trying to associate the lack of intervention in Bosnia-Herzegovina as evidence of racism in U.S. foreign policy. But the arguments to support this claim are lame. In fact, the two major arguments used to support this position are actually contradictory.

One side argues that the United States is willing to intervene in Somalia because Western leaders view the Somalis as ignorant Africans who cannot govern themselves; the United States, they claim, would never impose its will on a European country.

But the other side argues that the lack of military intervention in Bosnia proves that U.S. policy is racist because it ignores the Muslims who are being slaughtered in Bosnia; a nonracist government would intervene. So regardless of how the U.S. handles the situations in Bosnia and Somalia, someone on the left is going to claim that it is racist.

It's foolish to make a blanket statement about U.S. intervention in other countries. While it is definitely true that much of U.S. foreign policy after World War II did contain elements of racism and a blatant disregard for other cultures, this does not mean that all future acts of U.S. intervention will be imperialistic.

Look at what is happening in Somalia. It is a tragedy of gigantic proportions. We can't sit idly by and watch as millions of Somalis suffer; that would be barbaric. Nor can we expect to end this suffering without military intervention. The warlords who control Somalia apparently have little concern for the people around them. Simply dumping food into Mogadishu will not alleviate the problem.

So we have little choice. We send in troops and do it for the right reason: to save lives. We deliver food to the people of Somalia and then we leave the country — hopefully in better shape than we found it.

Confused

To the Editor:

I have decided that I am finally going to conform. I am going to become a liberal. I have succumbed to the pressures and the norms of Iowa City. With this new lease on life, I can look at life in a whole new way. Things will be so much clearer with my new freedom.

The most important thing is that becoming a liberal I will be a nonconformist. I will not be under the norms of society. I can fight against censorship, and then censor schools from teaching creationism, or allowing prayer in schools. I can fight for a woman's right to an abortion over the rights of an unborn child (fetus, this is part of my new politically correct vocabulary). I can then turn around and join the ACLU in the fight to allow young children to divorce their parents. I can work diligently for nationalized health care. People will have a right to health care, that is the right to not have a doctor of their choice and to wait months for care that is received in days now. I thought I was supposed to be for choice anyway.

I'm starting to get confused. All my beliefs contradict one another. I am really getting confused . . . HELP! . . . You know I think I will go back to being a conservative. At least my beliefs make sense.

I must speak to the equality vote results of Nov. 3, 1992. I believe all people, German, Asian, African, Indian, English . . . female and male are created equal. I cannot believe Iowans voted against gender equality. How can we look at our daughters and granddaughters and not see them as equals under the Iowa Constitution? I am truly disappointed in those Iowans who continue to feel women do not deserve the same basic rights under the law as men.

Many have stated, "Women are equal in Iowa, so why do we need

Bullets yes, but haircuts

To the Editor:

A friend and I were talking recently and I mentioned that sometimes I wished I was in the military.

"That's crazy!" he said. "You're too old and can't shoot worth spit. I ought to know, I've hunted with you enough times."

Yeah, I guess I just wasn't born to be a good soldier. But I only want free haircuts."

"I've got news for you, buddy," my friend retorted. "Uncle Sam doesn't pay for haircuts. Bullets yes, but haircuts, no way."

"Is that right? Shows how much I know. But at least soldiers have clean heads. The last time I was in the barber shop I was next in line after a guy whose hair was long and greasy on one side and shaved on the other. After his hair hit the floor, I swear it was still moving! And they were going to use the same clippers on me. I left so fast I barely heard the guy telling them to charge it to his account with New Wave. I guess he was on his way to a student senate meeting."

"Well, it's just like you to look to the government to pick up the tab for your haircuts, man. And there isn't much they can do with it anyhow. You weren't born with the right shape of head."

"Yeah, you're right as usual. I'd better go now. Rush Limbaugh is coming on soon and I promised my daughter I would take her to see Santa Claus. Now there is a guy who could use a trim."

"Who? Rush or Santa?"

FEW SOLUTIONS OFFERED

Clinton drills experts at economic summit

Tom Raum

Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — President-elect Bill Clinton quizzed titans of business, eminent economists and advocates for the poor on Monday in a nationally televised conference he said would help him make the "tough decisions and hard choices" to restore U.S. prosperity.

Taking copious notes and frequently engaging participants in give-and-take, Clinton said the conference had drawn together "the most distinguished and diverse group of Americans ever to meet to discuss our economic promise as well as our economic problems."

Clinton told the opening session of the two-day conference there was no simple way to promote growth and new jobs while cutting the budget deficit, "but I think we can do it. Let's go to work."

Participants, too, were eloquent in laying out the severity of the problems that will face Clinton when he takes office next month but offered little in the way of fresh solutions.

The gathering — part seminar, part town hall, part call-in show — was held in the Robinson Convention Center in downtown Little Rock. Some 320 "presenters" were there, chief executives of major companies alongside labor leaders, economics professors, small business people, consumer advocates and others.

The six people Clinton had named to top economic posts had seats along with other invitees at desks spreading out from his in a huge circle. Vice President-elect Al Gore was at his right hand.

Clinton, who had problems with his voice in the presidential campaign, was growing hoarse by midafternoon. But the president-elect, sitting behind a cardboard sign that said simply, "Bill Clinton," remained animated in his interest, sometimes gesturing with his glasses in his left hand. When sessions ran long, he shortened the breaks, admonishing everyone to hurry back.

"I thought it was a good show," said Paul Krugman, economics professor at MIT, of the opening session. "It's not a discussion. It's a show. But it's a better show than I thought it would be."

Presentations were wide-ranging, from Ford Motor Chairman Harold Poling's declaration that his company spends more on health care than on steel to Nobel Prize-winning economist Robert Solow's conclusion that the economy's sluggishness "is not just a short-term glitch."

"Without a strong recovery, it will be a lot harder to solve the long-run problems of the economy," said Solow, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Clinton agreed and said that

Associated Press

Secretary of the Treasury designee Lloyd Bentsen listens to speakers during a Monday session of President-elect Bill Clinton's two-day economic conference in Little Rock, Ark.

despite some recent encouraging reports on the "economy's short-term health," it was still too early to assume "that we're out of the woods."

Calling the $4 trillion national debt "an economic ball and chain dragging us down," Clinton said the decisions he must make in putting his economic plan into action will require much soul-searching.

He also heard a plea for the nation's poor, from Marian Wright Edelman, president of the Children's Defense Fund. She said that while it is a tragedy that thousands are starving in Somalia, "it is a human and moral travesty that 14.3 million children are poor in the richest land on earth."

With a guest list of nearly 330, the conference included an afternoon 800-number call-in segment and was carried by C-SPAN and by National Public Radio.

The televised coverage was made more vivid by dozens of colorful charts and other graphics.

LANDSLIDE EXPECTED

Small ceremonies mark Electoral College's vote

Jill Lawrence

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nation's real voters cast their ballots Monday in a presidential contest with zero suspense. A Bill Clinton landslide was as inevitable as grumbling about the cumbersome Electoral College system.

Clinton and running mate Al Gore were expected to receive 370 of 538 electoral votes from electors who participated in ceremonies Monday in 50 state capitals and the District of Columbia.

The Electoral College events ranged from perfunctory document-signing to elaborate meals, with electors generally paid mileage and a small fee to show up. New York and Missouri staged fancy lunches. In South Dakota, perks were limited to commemorative pens and framed photographs.

"I would have provided a sack lunch except for the fact that I've got to catch a plane in 12 minutes," joked South Dakota Gov. George Mickelson, one of the state's three Republican electors. The other two lunched in the Capitol's basement cafeteria.

Arkansas staged an equally modest but nonetheless emotional event for the official crowning of its native son. Its six electors cast their votes for the Clinton-Gore ticket during a 14-minute ceremony in the Old State Supreme Court Room of the Capitol. Harold Jinks of Piggot, Ark., called it "one of the proudest moments of my life." He is nearly 87.

In New Hampshire, where Clinton salvaged his candidacy with a second-place primary finish, state Democratic Chairman Chris Spirou also got emotional. "Who would believe that a shepherd boy from the mountains of Greece... would be voting for the leader of the free world?" asked Spirou, a naturalized citizen.

Some Democrats couldn't help exulting at a victory they consider long overdue. "To think that 16 years we waited for a day like this," said Helena Degnan, 86, of Providence, R.I. "This was a red-letter day in my life."

There were, of course, many states where Republican electors were voting for a defeated candidate. Some joked about it.

"I've ridden some dead horses into battle, but this may be the deadest," said Jerry Lammers, the retiring majority leader of the South Dakota House.

Emily Phillips of Columbia, S.C., showed up for her ceremony wearing a sweatshirt that read: "Don't blame me. I voted for Bush."

And in Tallahassee, Fla., the president's son Jeb told electors: "In our hearts, we all know the people of Florida made the right decision when we supported George Bush."

PROSECUTION'S CASE CALLED INADEQUATE

Dr. cleared of torturing DEA agent

Linda Deutsch

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — A doctor whose kidnapping by U.S.-paid bounty hunters in Mexico raised tensions between the two countries was declared innocent Monday in the torture and murder of a federal drug agent.

"There has to be stronger evidence than you have offered to find that a man is guilty of kidnapping, murder and torture," U.S. District Judge Edward Rafeedie told prosecutors. "This does not rise to the level required to get this case to the jury."

The defendant, Dr. Humberto Alvarez Machain, grew red-faced as the judge announced his decision. His eyes filled with tears and he stood up as his attorney, Alan Rubin, leaped to his feet and embraced him.

Alvarez's lawyers said they expected him to be freed by the end of the day after paperwork was completed. The trial of Alvarez's co-defendant, Mexican businessman Ruben Zuno Arce, will continue.

"This was a courageous decision," Rubin said. "The easy thing to do would have been to dump it and say let the jury decide."

Prosecutors had argued that when Camarena was kidnapped and tortured by Mexico's drug lords, the kingpins had their favorite doctor, Alvarez, inject him with drugs to keep him alive for further torture and interrogation.

But Rubin said there were no puncture marks or drug residue in Camarena's body to prove the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent was injected. Nor were there fingerprints to link a syringe found at the torture house to Alvarez, he said.

The only physical evidence that Alvarez visited the house where Camarena was tortured was a set of his fingerprints on a plastic dry cleaning bag found in a closet. Rubin noted there was no evidence of when the prints might have been made.

Assistant U.S. Attorney John Carlton had implored the judge to allow the case to go to the jury, noting that a witness had placed Alvarez at the house where Camarena was killed and told of seeing the doctor washing hypodermic needles.

But the judge said Alvarez's mere presence in the house wasn't sufficient to show that he was a conspirator in murder.

DEA Administrator Robert C. Bonner said the government didn't agree with Rafeedie's ruling but added, "We respect it and will abide by it."

Justice Department officials wouldn't comment. Seven other people have been convicted in U.S. courts in the Camarena killing and more than two dozen were convicted in Mexico.

Rafael Caro Quintero, the drug boss who is said to have ordered the killing because raids organized by Camarena were disrupting his drug operations, is serving a 40-year sentence in a Mexican prison.

ISRAEL SETS TERMS

Proof of hostage's condition demanded before negotiations

Marcus Eliason

Associated Press

JERUSALEM, Israel — Israel said Monday it would not consider bargaining for the freedom of a border policeman until his Islamic fundamentalist kidnappers prove that he is unharmed.

As security forces hunted for Sgt. Maj. Nissim Toledano and Israelis voiced shock at Sunday's abduction, an organization claiming to represent the kidnappers repeated the offer to trade Toledano for a jailed Islamic leader.

The kidnapping in the central Israeli city of Lod aroused alarm among Israelis at the apparent emergence of an Islamic foe capable of striking in the heart of the Jewish state.

It was the latest in a series of exploits by the Islamic Hamas movement which is boosting its stature in the occupied territories against the larger, more secular PLO.

Israeli hard-liners blamed the violence on concessions offered in the Washington peace talks, saying they made Israel look weak. Moderates called for peace talks to be speeded up to undercut the fundamentalists, who advocate the destruction of Israel and are boycotting the negotiations.

Police Minister Moshe Shahal told Israeli TV the government would not address the question of negotiating with the kidnappers until it knows "who the kidnappers are, and after it has received evidence and proof that Nissim Toledano is being held by them, that he is well, that he is healthy and alive."

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, speaking on television after meeting with Toledano's family, said Islamic extremists were trying to derail peace talks. He and Toledano's family called on Jewish Israelis to remain calm and not disrupt the talks.

But hundreds of Jews went on an anti-Arab rampage in the Arab section of Lod, where Toledano, 29, was kidnapped as he walked to work. Israel radio said three rioters were detained.

Israel sealed the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip and placed large areas under curfew, while concentrating its search for the kidnappers in Lod and the coastal plain south of Tel Aviv.

A statement signed by the military wing of Hamas said Toledano would be killed Sunday night unless Hamas spiritual leader Sheikh Ahmed Yassin was freed from prison. The deadline passed with no news on Toledano's fate.

On Monday a Western TV journalist got a phone call from someone calling himself Mohammed from Gaza who said Toledano "will be dead tonight" if Yassin was not freed.

For Israel, one face-saving solution might be to release 57-year-old Yassin on medical grounds. Yassin must use a wheelchair because of a boyhood accident. Dr. Mahmoud Zahar, his former physician, said he suffers from complications of his paralysis.

The sheik, who founded Hamas, has been in prison since 1989, serving a life term for manslaughter.

Dr. says man was beaten to death

Jim Irwin
Associated Press

DETROIT — A man fatally beaten by police was hit so hard that part of his scalp was torn off, a pathologist testified Monday at a preliminary hearing to determine if four officers should stand trial.

And a friend of the dead man testified that he saw one officer swing a flashlight at him as though he were swinging a golf club.

At least 14 blows to Malice Green's face and head ripped loose part of his scalp, damaged his brain and finally caused his heart and lungs to fail, Dr. Kalil Jiraki testified during the first day of the officers' hearing.

"The cause of death was obvious," said Jiraki, who examined the 35-year-old Green's body the day after the beating and ruled he died of blunt-force trauma to the head.

No single blow was fatal, but enough were struck to bruise the brain, make it bleed and cut off its control of breathing and pulse, said Jiraki, an assistant medical examiner for Wayne County.

Undercover officers Larry Nevers and Walter Budzyn are charged with second-degree murder. Police Sgt. Freddie Douglas is charged with involuntary manslaughter and willful neglect of duty and Officer Robert Lessnau is charged with assault with intent to do great bodily harm.

Nevers and Budzyn face up to life in prison if convicted. Douglas could be sentenced to 16 years and Lessnau up to 10 years. The four have been suspended without pay.

Green was black and all of the officers but Douglas were white, a fact that has strained race relations in predominantly black Detroit and led to protests by civil rights groups and churches.

Several police officers who took turns sitting behind the four defendants during Monday's hearing said they were there to support their colleagues. Friends and relatives of Green sat behind the prosecutors.

Authorities have said Green, who was stopped outside a suspected crack house, was beaten when he made a fist with his hand after reaching for an object.

Green, who had an enlarged heart, had been drinking and using cocaine on the day he died, according to a toxics report.

Ralph Fletcher, who also testified, said Green was struck after police who stopped him asked to see his driver's license and he reached for his car's glove box, then made a fist with his right hand.

Budzyn then struck him repeatedly with a flashlight as Fletcher and other bystanders pleaded with Green to drop whatever he was holding, Fletcher said.

Green struggled with Budzyn, then fell onto his back on the front seat of his car while Nevers went around to the driver's side, Fletcher said. He said saw Nevers swing a flashlight "like a golf club" and heard a cracking sound, but didn't actually see any blows land.

Fletcher said he left the scene briefly but returned in time to see that an ambulance and more police had arrived.

Documents reveal government buried contaminated soil in Alaska

T.A. Badger
Associated Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Residents of the northwest Alaska village of Point Hope know what it takes to eke a livelihood out of the harsh Arctic.

Many of their skills focus on staying fed — chasing bowhead whales and walrus, hunting migrating caribou herds, picking murre eggs off cliffs high above the rolling Chukchi Sea.

Now, there's a premium on knowledge of nuclear radiation: In September, the government revealed it buried 15,000 tons of soil contaminated with radioactive isotopes at Cape Thompson, 25 miles away, as part of a research project in 1962.

The 450 residents of Point Hope and those in nearby communities regularly hunted and gathered and traveled through the area and are angry about the nuclear waste.

"Most of the individuals are still upset," said Point Hope Mayor David Stone. "They want to get back and get even somehow."

There is an above-average cancer rate in Point Hope, but officials have attributed it to smoking and diet. Villagers now fear it may be related to Project Chariot and above-ground atomic testing that may have damaged their food chain.

Beginning Tuesday, officials of the U.S. Department of Energy, the state Department of Environmental Conservation and some nuclear specialists are scheduled to spend four days conducting educational workshops.

The project was declassified in 1981 but it wasn't until this year that University of Alaska-Fairbanks researcher Dan O'Neill publicized documents he inadvertently found through a Freedom of Information Act request.

In 1962, Eskimos successfully fought a federal government plan to use a nuclear blast to create a harbor out of ice at Cape Thompson. But that year, the U.S. Geological Survey went ahead with a secret plan to bury the radioactive soil, which included more than 43 pounds of nuclear material from a test blast in Nevada.

million in bonding authorization for 1992 deferred projects.

Rhodes said the additional funding has made it possible to begin work on the projects. In order to decide what is most vital, the UI Physical Plant prioritizes each project.

The UI reported to the regents that 67 percent of its current deferred maintenance list is of high priority. Most of this work involves roof and window replacements.

UI Physical Plant Director George Klein said the priority list is arrived at by the building maintenance staff through discussions with Physical Plant field workers.

"It's not a formal survey," Klein said. "But they work there every day and know the buildings better than anyone."

Rhodes said in order to prevent such a backlog in the future, the UI is asking the Legislature for more money.

"People we've talked to in the Legislature, and the regents, have been very understanding and sympathetic," Rhodes said. "There just hasn't been a lot of money to throw at it."

The UI Physical Plant does a good job of recognizing problems, Rhodes said, but could have better control of the situation with more funding.

"The Physical Plant has done a good job of identifying needs and planning," Rhodes said. "If we get additional funding we can handle the situation even better."

Klein said if it wasn't for the backlog of work, the Physical Plant would be able to do more preventive maintenance.

"We have close to enough money to do current ongoing maintenance," Klein said. "If only we could get caught up."

getting security, but we need a more stable political situation," she said.

One ironic positive aspect of the massive media attention focused on the multinational forces' deployment has been the increased attention on Somalia's plight. Torsney said that her organization had received 10,000 phone calls since October, while in the last week alone it has received 5,000.

"I think people just pick up the phone," she said. "They want to be a part of it," she said.

According to CARE spokesman John Mohrbacher, the announcement that the world was sending forces to Somalia sparked a large increase in contributions, which he said are greatly needed because CARE has already spent far more than planned in Somalia.

"In an emergency we spend first and ask questions later," he said.

MARRIAGES

Donnarae Maccann, a professor of the UI African-American World Studies Program, attributed the fewer marriages between black females and white males partly to "preoccupation of beauty" created by the media in this country.

Since people of any race are accustomed to seeing white models and actresses in magazines and on television, "some white men don't understand black beauty," Maccann said.

Some UI authorities on the U.S. race issue say that a pairing between a black woman and a white man tends to be regarded as less problematic.

Professor Adrian Wing of the UI College of Law said people are more used to seeing a white man with a black woman than vice versa.

"It's more accepted because from the time of slavery, white men had black women," Wing said.

But people today don't necessarily associate those couples with a slavery image, she said. Without studying American history, even a child can sense that white-black female relationships are more acceptable, Wing added.

Although a pairing between black females and white males tend to be more acceptable in society, some black women are forced to give up their relationships with white men because of white parental denials.

Lisa Porter, a black UI undergraduate, dates people regardless of their races and has had three white boyfriends. But all their families disapproved of the relationships because of the color of her skin.

"They reacted in a pretty much similar way," Porter said. "They were so biased and prejudiced about the race that they couldn't see our relationships past their prejudice."

The families didn't say anything to her directly, Porter said, but they accosted her boyfriends behind her back and told them not to bring her to their houses.

Porter has not been too vexed by these negative reactions, she said, because they stem from a lack of understanding that people are not different because of race.

She said the disapproval from those families results from the fact that this society is divided by skin color, which is wrong in her opinion.

"We need to redefine ourselves and look at people, not the color of their skin," Porter said.

Asked about the possibility of dating another white man in the future, she said, "It's not like if there is a white guy, I won't date him. It just depends."

She said white family rejections are a sign of their ignorance about the race issues. "Everyone is not ignorant in that matter."

Michigan rolls over Vikings

Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Juwan Howard and Chris Webber each scored 21 points to lead No. 6 Michigan to an 88-56 victory over Cleveland State on Monday and spoil the homecoming of two former Wolverines.

The game marked Cleveland State coach Mike Boyd's first return to Ann Arbor since leaving his job as a Wolverine assistant coach to take the Cleveland State job two years ago. Boyd is now 0-2 against his former team.

Also making a return visit for Cleveland State (1-1) was Sam Mitchell. Mitchell started seven games for the Wolverines as a freshman in 1990-91 before transferring midway through his sophomore year to Cleveland State last January. Mitchell finished with 14 points.

Michigan (4-1) used its size advantage to dominate the boards, outrebounding the Vikings 51-24.

Cleveland State stayed within striking distance until Howard scored six straight points to cap a 10-2 run that gave Michigan a 51-30 lead six minutes into the second half. The Vikings never came closer than 19 points after that.

No. 7 Seton Hall 88, St. Peter's 54

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Terry Dehere scored nine of his 27 points in a game-breaking 19-2 run and No. 7 Seton Hall rolled to an 88-54 victory over St. Peter's on Monday night.

The victory was the fourth straight for Seton Hall (7-1) and its seventh straight over the Peacocks (3-2), who were limited to 35 percent shooting from the field.

Seton Hall broke the game open from 3-point range. The Pirates hit seven of their first 13 shots from downtown, including three during the big run that started after Oyang Merriman's basket got St. Peter's within 27-25 with 3:14 left in the half.

Seton Hall, which hit 20 of 29

Michigan guard Michael Tally and Cleveland State center Shawn Fergus fight for a loose ball during the shots in the final 20 minutes, put the game away by scoring the first nine points of the second half.

Minnesota 93, Texas-San Antonio 75

MINNEAPOLIS—Townsend Orr and Chad Kolander combined for 23 first-half points Monday night, sparking Minnesota past Texas-San Antonio 93-75 for the Gophers' third straight victory.

Minnesota (3-0), playing without injured forward Randy Carter, never trailed in the game and the Roadrunners (1-3) could get no closer than 12 points in the second half.

Gophers coach Clem Haskins briefly reinserted four starters with 8:30 left in the game, and Minnesota pulled away comfortably.

Orr, who finished with 14 points, sank two consecutive three-pointers to start a 13-point Minnesota run with 5:01 left in the first half, putting the Gophers up 39-19 less than 2½ minutes later. Kolander scored five of his 13 points in the run.

Voshon Lenard led five Gophers into double figures with 20 points, making six of the seven shots from the field in the second half.

Jason Walton added 12 and Arriel McDonald had 10 for the Gophers.

Iowa women move to No. 4

Associated Press

Iowa continued climbing in the Associated Press women's basketball poll this week, moving up one spot to No. 4.

Iowa used big wins over West Virginia and UNC-Charlotte in last weekend's Amana Hawkeye Classic for this week's climb. It is the highest Iowa has been ranked since Dec. 24, 1989.

The Hawkeyes (4-0) upset then-No. 4 Maryland on the road to move from seventh to No. 5 in last week's poll.

Tennessee is still everybody's top choice, followed by Stanford and Vanderbilt in today's Associated Press women's basketball poll.

Meanwhile, Tennessee Tech entered the poll at No. 22, its first appearance since the final ranking of the 1990 season, while Nebraska entered at 24th. The Cornhuskers have one previous appearance at 19th in December 1986.

At the top, the Volunteers (4-0) were an unanimous choice for No. 1 for the second straight week. Coach Pat Summitt's team received 71 first-place votes and 1,775 points from a nationwide panel of coaches.

Stanford (4-1), which dropped to No. 2 last week after losing to Tennessee, fell a little further back with 1,684 points. The Cardinal can regain lost ground next Monday when it travels to Knoxville for a second meeting with the Volunteers.

Vanderbilt (5-0), which beat Bowling Green and won at then-No. 21 Alabama on Sunday, had 1,619 points.

Virginia (6-0) moved up a spot to No. 5 and Maryland (4-1) climbed a spot to No. 6.

Western Kentucky (3-1), which lost at Tennessee Tech, fell to seventh Louisiana Tech (4-1), which was upset at unranked Northeast Louisiana, but recovered to beat then-No. 9 Mississippi at Oxford, fell from 10th to 11th.

Iowa men stay put after ISU victory

Associated Press

For the first time in three weeks, Iowa failed to move up in the Associated Press men's basketball poll.

The Hawkeyes (5-0) started the year ranked No. 11 and moved to 10th and 8th after wins against overmatched opponents. Iowa whipped its toughest opponent thus far Saturday, beating Iowa State 78-51, but the Hawkeyes remained at No. 8 in the nation as the top eight schools Monday all retained last week's rankings.

To see something new, check No. 25. That's California, a team which hasn't been ranked in 32 years.

The last time the Golden Bears (3-0) were among the ranked was December 1960, when they were coming off an NCAA championship and runner-up finish the previous two years under coach Pete Newell. They won the first five games in 1960 and were 8-2 before a four-game losing streak.

It hasn't all been lean in the interim for California, but there's been unprecedented excitement level in the Bay area since coach Lou Campanelli brought in freshman sensation Jason Kidd.

"You want to take some steps as a young program and this is one," Campanelli said Monday when told of the ranking. "But this is something I don't know if we have earned since we've only played three games. People recognize the players we have. I'll tell the players we have to recognize what we have done during the season."

The 6-foot-4 Kidd isn't the only freshman starter in the backcourt; he's joined by 6-2 Jerrod Haase. Up front, there's senior Brian Hendrick, who's coming off a major knee injury, and sophomores Alfred Grigsby and Lamond Murray.

"I was concerned with the preseason rankings," Campanelli said, referring to one magazine's No. 9 rating for California. "I think the kids have handled it all pretty well. I told them, and I will again, that we haven't earned anything. Wait until after the season. Then you'll see where you belong."

Duke (4-0) was again No. 1, getting 38 first-place votes and 1,598 points from the nationwide panel of writers and broadcasters. Kan-

Kentucky, Indiana, North Carolina, Michigan, Seton Hall and Iowa held the Nos. 3-8 spots for the second straight week.

Oklahoma, which won three games last week, jumped from a tie for 11th to ninth and Florida State held 10th.

Georgetown, which was tied with Oklahoma, stayed atop the Second Ten and was followed by Arkansas, UCLA, Syracuse, Arizona, Purdue, Georgia Tech, Tulane, Cincinnati and Nebraska.

The final five was Louisville, UNLV, Michigan State, Connecticut and California.

Louisville's drop was the biggest of the week as the Cardinals (1-2) fell from ninth after losing to Vanderbilt and Kentucky, the latter a 20-point loss at home.

Connecticut (3-1) returned to the rankings after a one-week absence.

Memphis State, which lost its first three games, dropped from the poll after being selected No. 8 in the preseason voting.

MAJOR LEAGUES

Owners pave way for lockout

Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Baseball owners sent notices to government agencies last week that open the possibility of the second lockout against players in four seasons.

The notices, required 60 days in advance of a lockout, were sent Friday to the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the New York State Mediation Board. Richard Ravitch, president of management's Player Relations Committee, said Monday the notices weren't a step toward a lockout but were sent on the advice of his lawyers.

"They are totally devoid of any policy significance. They are merely contract formalities, what is required by the law and by our contract," Ravitch said. "They represent no change in the decision taken last week in Louisville. I was told by the lawyers to sign them and get them in."

Owners voted 15-13 last week to reopen their labor agreement a year early instead of letting it expire after the 1993 season. Donald Fehr, head of the Major League Baseball Players Association, said Monday that in response he will meet with players next month in Florida, Arizona, California and the Caribbean to prepare strategy.

Fehr said he wanted players to be ready, but couldn't predict if owners would call for a lockout, which would be baseball's eighth work stoppage in 22 seasons.

"My belief still is they will follow Dick Ravitch's advice, whatever it is, when he gives it," Fehr said of owners.

Ravitch and Fehr held separate news conferences 90 minutes apart to discuss the report by baseball's economic study committee, which spent two years examining the sport's finances. The committee recommended the elimination of salary arbitration and lowering the service time needed for free agency to three years from six, but didn't propose the salary cap that owners say they want. It also recommended owners start sharing ticket receipts and local broadcast money.

Ravitch said this fall's free-agent signings — over $400 million committed to them thus far — showed the current labor agreement was flawed.

"People are going to spend whatever they have because under the current system whatever comes in goes out," he said.

Ravitch also questioned the wisdom of the current signings without criticizing individual teams. "I'm not either pleading poverty on their behalf or arguing they should be the objects of sympathy," he said.

Fehr said owners' reluctance to increase the percentage of revenue they share among themselves was the key problem. Financial figures released with the report show teams shared 26 percent of their total 1991 revenue of $1,537,395,000.

"If the clubs are unwilling to change their own system in a meaningful way and they say that the small-market clubs need help, the only place they can come to for help is the players," Fehr said.

The report says the highest-revenue club in 1991 took in $98 million, while the lowest took in $39 million — matching the player payroll of the Oakland Athletics.

The financial statements showed teams got 34 percent of their money in 1991 from gate receipts, 22 percent from national broadcasting and 20 percent from local television and radio. It also showed 51 percent of expenses were on major league players, 13 percent went to scouting and player development and 12 percent went to administration.

package million to the catcher until the weekend, when the New York Yankees proposed a $17 million deal.

Money has never been my major focus," Steinbach said. "I would like my fair share, but I've never been one to jump on just the dollar amount. It's more the concept of what the A's have meant. They've stuck with me for 10 years and I felt a sense of loyalty. They came in with a very sensible offer."

In other deals Monday, catcher Bob Melvin agreed to a $1.35 million, two-year contract with the Boston Red Sox and infielder Tom Foley agreed to a $360,000, one-year contract with the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Also, pitcher Mike Bielecki agreed to a minor-league contract with the Cleveland Indians and pitcher Jamie Moyer agreed to a minor-league contract with the Baltimore Orioles.

Meanwhile, Wade Boggs' agent continued talks with the Los Angeles Dodgers and the New York Yankees.

Cowboys miffed over call

Denne H. Freeman
Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson talked to the NFL office three times on Monday about the officiating in Sunday's 20-17 loss to the Washington Redskins but said he was asked not to comment publicly on it.

"I had discussions with the league about the calls in question, but I'm unable to make comment except to clarify the rules," Johnson said.

Owner Jerry Jones and Johnson say they remain opposed to instant replay, even though it could have saved the Cowboys twice Sunday on a disputed play against the Washington Redskins.

"I'm still not for instant replay because I like the flow of the game the way it is," Johnson said. "But this loss was the hardest I've had since I've been coach of the Cowboys. This was as big as a playoff game."

With the Cowboys ahead 17-13 and 3:14 remaining Sunday, Troy Aikman tried to pass out of his end zone, but was hit by Redskins lineman Jason Buck. Aikman's arm appeared to be moving forward as the ball fell free.

Running back Emmitt Smith picked it up, then lost it. Washington safety Danny Copeland recovered in the end zone for the game-winning touchdown in a

Associated Press

Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman appears to be in the process of passing from his own end zone in the Cowboys' 20-17 loss Sunday. When Aikman lost the ball, it was ruled a fumble. The Redskins recovered for the winning touchdown.

20-17 victory.

Jones said he didn't think instant replay — removed from the game this season after six years — would have mattered because the call was so close.

"It probably would have been ruled inconclusive," he said. "You couldn't tell for sure at which point Troy released the ball. The replay wouldn't have been clear enough for a positive call from the replay booth."

Johnson, who ranted and raved from the sidelines about the call, said he doesn't like instant replay "because it slows the game down. It does look like it was an incomplete pass, though."

Asked if he was upset about the call, Johnson said he was "upset about a lot of things," including four Dallas turnovers.

Kotite: Joyner to be disciplined

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Rich Kotite said Monday he will discipline linebacker Seth Joyner for his public description of the Philadelphia Eagles coach as a "puppet" of club owner Norman Braman.

"I'll do what I have to do," Kotite said at his weekly news conference in the aftermath of Joyner's derogatory statements about him, the Eagles owner and quarterback Randall Cunningham.

"But it's going to be of a private nature and not at a forum like this," Kotite said. "I will handle it."

Joyner last week told the New York Times that Braman cared only about making money, not winning. He said the owner replaced coach Buddy Ryan after the 1991 season to install Kotite as a puppet.

Joyner also blamed Cunningham for Ryan's firing, declaring that the quarterback pushed for Kotite as a replacement.

"I told Randall he would pay for what he did," Joyner was quoted as saying. "I don't know if him missing all of last year with a knee injury was it. But God works in mysterious ways."

Joyner, who has maintained a silence since he criticized Kotite's play calling in the Nov. 15 loss to Green Bay, said after Sunday's Eagles' 20-17 overtime victory over Seattle, "I was misquoted."

"I should have learned my lesson and not said anything, because it's amazing how you guys take little things and piece it together the way you want. I'm not doing any interviews, man."

Kotite said his feelings weren't hurt by Joyner's remarks.

"I've been here almost two years as coach and I'm getting to where I don't worry about my feelings and don't get concerned with it. Most important, we're 9-5 after facing a lot of adversity and it's how we finish that is important."

Trump starts battle with commissioners

Darlene Superville
Associated Press

TRENTON, N.J. — The commissioners of the NBA and NHL urged legislators on Monday not to legalize sports betting in New Jersey, while casino owner Donald Trump said Atlantic City's gaming halls need the extra revenue.

The chairman of the Assembly Financial Institutions Committee, Somerset County Republican John Penn, said he would hold the bill for consideration at a later date.

Trump, who owns three of Atlantic City's 12 casinos, made a rare appearance at the committee hearing to support the bill, which could bring millions of dollars to his gaming halls.

"Atlantic City is in very deep trouble," Trump said. "This industry may not exist if it's not allowed to continue to grow."

NBA commissioner David Stern said legalizing betting on sports games will "only make matters worse."

"Our fans, for the most part, aren't point-spread fans," said Stern, who was accompanied by Gary Bettman, an NBA senior vice president who will become NHL commissioner on Feb. 1.

"The issue here is whether the state should lend its seal to teaching kids about gambling and turning them into gamblers," Stern said. "You don't legalize something just because there's illegal activity."

Associated Press

NBA Commissioner David Stern speaks out against legalized sports betting in front of the Assembly of Financial Institutions in Trenton, N.J., Monday.

Lawmakers revived plans last month to put the question to voters in the 1993 election. It had been dropped for lack of support.

IOWA STATE

Orr wants amends made to Big Eight

Associated Press

DES MOINES — Iowa State coach Johnny Orr wants to make amends to the Big Eight Conference.

Orr was disappointed with the Cyclones' effort in their 78-51 loss to Iowa of the Big Ten last weekend. He's hoping for a better performance when his team plays at Big Ten power Michigan next Saturday.

"I hope we can go up there and make the Big Eight proud," Orr said Monday during the league's weekly conference call. "We let the Big Eight down last week. I hope we can make up for it."

Orr, a former Michigan coach, will send his team against the sixth-ranked Wolverines at The Palace in Auburn Hills — home of the Detroit Pistons. The game will be telecast nationally by ESPN.

It will be Orr's fourth game against Michigan since he left in 1980. He's 2-1 against his old school with the loss coming in Ann Arbor, 101-78 on Dec. 2, 1989.

Orr doesn't look at his return as anything special, though.

"I've been gone long enough. I know it won't be much of a homecoming," he said. "The big thing is (playing) Michigan. That will be a challenge."

Adding to the challenge is Friday night's home game with Mercer. Iowa State tried to get Mercer to change the game after being offered the TV date with Michigan, but the Bears couldn't find another time to play it.

Thus, Orr and his players will fly out of Ames late Friday night and get to Michigan about 1:30 a.m. The game starts at 7:30 p.m. Michigan time.

"We had the opportunity for the Big Eight to play this game so we went ahead with it," Orr said. "I think we'll play much better."

The Cyclones will have a new lineup the next time they play.

MOVIE REVIEW

Rob Reiner's 'A Few Good Men' mixes comedy, intrigue, drama

The intricate plot puts it far above Hollywood's norm.

Sonja West
The Daily Iowan

Director Rob Reiner couldn't have asked for a more advantageous time for President George Bush to focus the country's attention, once again, on the importance of the military.

The arrival of U.S. troops, mostly Marines, in Somalia last week coincided perfectly with the release of Reiner's courtroom drama about a few honorable Marines who suffer under dishonorable leadership.

In "A Few Good Men," Reiner and the star-packed cast tell a serious story about nobility and codes through an effective mixture of comedy, intrigue and drama.

Tom Cruise stars as Daniel Kaffee, a novice naval lawyer with a reputation for flashy plea bargaining. He is assigned a case involving the death of a Marine at the U.S. base in Guantanamo. His clients, two Marines from the base, are accused of ruthlessly murdering the unpopular soldier. Kaffee, however, begins to discover that they may have only been carrying out orders from their superior officer Col. Nathan Jessup (Jack Nicholson) to "train" the private, but things went very wrong.

Also interested in the case is JoAnne Galloway (Demi Moore), Kaffee's superior officer in charge of internal affairs. Kaffee's legal opposite in every way, Galloway convinces Kaffee, who's never taken a case to trial, to pursue the risky case in court.

"A Few Good Men" touches on several interesting topics, including friction between different sects of the military. At one point Kaffee, a naval officer with a strong dislike of boats, is told by one of the Marine officer (played convincingly well by Kiefer Sutherland), "I just love you Navy guys. Whenever we have to go someplace to fight, you always give us a ride." The rigidity of the Marines vs. the extremely casual attitude of Kaffee is also emphasized.

One refreshing thing about a cast filled with very well-known actors is that it's difficult for anyone to steal the show. Cruise gives a balanced performance which proves he is maturing to a point where he can easily handle comedy, drama and realism. Nicholson — an attractive bad guy who fortunately doesn't completely dominate the relatively few scenes in which he appears.

Moore holds her own with a confusingly written character who flip-flops between being domineering, submissive, ignorant, intelligent, competent and naive.

Reiner is also continuing to prove his ability as a director. When added to his past films like "Misery," "When Harry Met Sally," and "This is Spinal Tap," "A Few Good Men" shows that Reiner's talent has yet to find its limit.

One of the strengths of "A Few Good Men" is that it sticks to the business at hand. The absence of a romantic subplot or fight scenes isn't noticeable or missed. The case is fascinating and multifaceted, and the ending is relatively unpredictable.

"A Few Good Men" is a strong film in many ways. The plot is unique when compared to recent Hollywood movies, and the stars are there for their talent — not their names.

Twyla Tharp, Baryshnikov collaborate in 'Cutting Up'

Michelle-Therese Forcier
The Daily Iowan

Despite what Tom and Roseanne Arnold keep telling the world, they're not the first to bring culture to Iowa. Iowans are not wowed by the mere fact that they have a television program. What does impress an Iowa audience are stars of unsurpassed skill, dedication, experience and talent honed to the point of perfection.

Twyla Tharp and Mikhail Baryshnikov, who will be in Iowa City tonight and Wednesday to perform "Cutting Up" in Hancher Auditorium, are the stars that will wow the veteran Hancher audiences.

"The dance fans in this area are really excited," said Winston Barclay of Arts Center relations. According to Barclay, Tharp's choreography has been seen by Hancher audiences on several occasions. Her company has performed here and the Joffrey Ballet has performed her works in Iowa City on one of their many visits.

This will be Baryshnikov's first visit to this community. If first impressions can be measured, Iowa City usually becomes the performer's dream audience, demanding a return to this artistic community.

This performance is the first time in the 16-year collaborative history the two have together that Tharp will join Baryshnikov on stage. She has long contributed her choreographical efforts to his dancing prowess and has received the 1992 MacArthur Fellowship for "exceptionally gifted individuals." Tharp and Baryshnikov began their collaborative efforts in 1976 when she created "Push Comes to Shove" for him.

The performance lasts two star-filled hours and consists of three acts. There are sequences in the performance where both dancers break the rhythm of the dance to do a kind of walkabout around the stage.

The audience can expect to see much more than classical ballet. As if to thumb their noses at the growing risk of injury and age, they hurl themselves into every kind of dance. This demonstration should be nothing less than amazing. Although describing the two as such has become clichéd, their performances, both solo and in collaboration, demand it every time.

Tharp enjoys poking fun at the ballet and has kept it in mind when choreographing some of the works in this performance.

This is evident in Act 3, which incorporates scenes named after nightclub such as The Palm Court, 1917, The Rainbow Room, 1953, and Morton's LA, 1992. In Morton's LA, Baryshnikov interprets a Sinatra song from an earlier work titled "Sinatra Suite" which Tharp created for him. The other clubs are self-explanatory as to what the audience can expect as far as tone and style of dance are concerned.

Act 2 is perhaps the most serious performance of the night. It features Sinfonia movements by the 18th-century Italian composer Pergolesi. The two should complement each other beautifully.

This show seems to offer everything from the most serious of composers and choreography to a schtick of the high-school prom in a piece titled "Homecoming."

Some of the musical selections in "Cutting Up" are "As Time Goes By," "I Get Along Well Without

You," "Song Without Words," which is sung by Chet Baker, and "Ferry Cross the Mersey," a pop classic by the Pacemakers, as well as recordings of Jerry Lee Hooker and Louis Armstrong performances.

The music is not limited to recordings. Sterling Smith, the company's music director, has composed selections for the performance as well.

The crew is just as famous as the cast in the performance. The set designer is Obie Award-winner John Arnone, the designer of the rock opera "Tommy." The lighting is by David A. Finn, the designer of the special effects for the closing ceremonies of the Los Angeles Olympics, and Jennifer Tipton, who has won nearly every major award for theatrical lighting design. The fashion designer of the year in 1990 and 1992, Isaac Mizrahi, designed the costumes for the event.

Tickets for today's and Wednesday's 8 p.m. performance for the extreme upper balcony are still available. Prices are $50 for non-students and $40 for students. Call Hancher Box Office at 335-1160 for more information.

ANTIQUITY & MODERNITY

Contrary to popular belief, elitist literature is accessible

E. B. Holtsmark
The Daily Iowan

"quidquid agunt homines, votum timor ira voluptas gaudia discursus, nostri farrago libelli est."
"Whatever people do — their hopes, fears, angers, pleasures, joys, their busy doings — that's the olio my little book is."
— Juvenal, "Satire" 1.85-86

These lines in the programmatic poem of the Roman satirist Juvenal (circa A.D. 47-130.) capture the thematic catholicity of the passages from ancient literature addressed in these columns during the past months. Let me bring this semester to term with the following metapiece.

Classical Greek and Roman literature has often been held up as the "ne plus ultra" of a recondit highbrow mode. This is an understandable, but unfortunate, and more often than not, false point of view. It is unfortunate, because this academic insolence probably scares off a lot of people who would actually be surprised at how much they'd enjoy reading and pondering larger portions of much of the material I have been discussing. It is also understandable, because it has been incorrectly assumed that one must learn ancient Greek and Latin in order to profit from this literature. Well, it would be nice if you wanted to make that kind of commitment (and you can do it right here at this university!), but it's not necessary. The happy fact is that there are numerous excellent translations of the great authors of these two great literatures available in drugstores and supermarkets for less than a strawberry shake and hamburger, and they are more nourishing and less ephemeral in the bargain.

I would also like to offer a thought or two about the inchoate claim often made in our egalitarian age that the study of the ancient classics is the most unconscionable kind of "elitism" (itself a semantic Proteus). If by this term is meant that few people today can read ancient Greek or Latin, then the claim is true — these are not easy languages to learn, for unlike so-called difficult languages like Chinese, Russian and Japanese, ancient Greek or Latin must be entirely memorized: you go to Japan, Russia and China and learn their languages naturally, but you can't go to ancient Athens or ancient Rome to do that. But then the charge of elitism (which equals "few people do it") is a truism as trivial as it is uninteresting, akin to pointing out that water is wet, and as uninterestingly applicable to neurosurgeons and superb basketball players as to classicists. But if by "elitism" is meant that these literatures and these cultures are divorced from the realities of contemporary men and women living out complicated lives in the modern world, then the charge is as crudely idiotic as it is demonstrably false. Have you ever lost a friend or family member to death? Had problems with a parent? Been happy or unhappy in love? Been on the receiving or giving end of war? Struggled to excel? Thought about social injustice? Had children? Reflected about your humanness or lack of it?

Think about "elitism" in that. Have you really been reading these columns since August?

I conclude here with much deserved thanks, first, to Annette Segreto, the editor of The Daily Iowan, for sufficiently liking my proposal for these pieces on intersections between classical antiquity and contemporary modernity to give me the valuable space in the paper; second, to Sandy Breiner, arts editor, for her cheery, courteous and upbeat handling of my material; and third — and most important — to the many readers who have spoken to me, written letters and even called me on the phone from out of town about this column. It has been more than gratifying to learn that these little essays, whatever their merit, offer stimulation to so many readers from so many different backgrounds — an index perhaps to the universality of the thematic threads that tie the columns together into what I hope is an emerging and coherent unity.

Finally, I am happy that I shall have the opportunity to continue these weekly contributions in the spring. There is no dearth of material here. After all, I have at my disposal for selections well over a thousand years of unsurpassable literature that speaks in two undying and unsurpassably beautiful languages to the fundamental human cares of us all — "quidquid agunt homines, votum timor ira voluptas gaudia discursus, nostri farrago libelli est."
Professor E. B. Holtsmark's column appears Tuesdays in the Arts section.

GOSSIP

Comedian Steve Martin takes turn for the serious

His new film, "Leap of Faith," is certainly a stretch for this wild and crazy guy.

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Steve Martin said he hopes to make serious movies as well as comedies — and his current film "Leap of Faith" is a start.

"My goal is that one day, somebody will say, 'Steve Martin is in a drama,' and people will say, 'So what?'" he told the Orange County Register in an article published Sunday.

In "Leap of Faith," Martin plays a conniving preacher who fleeces the flocks while performing fake miracles. While Martin draws on his background as a standup comedian for the role, it isn't exactly comedy, he said.

"I don't want to make a movie where the audience goes to see it and it's a downer," Martin said. "Drama doesn't have to equate with downer. This role has flash and pizzazz mixed in with all the emotion."
