COSTS DEPEND ON MAJOR

Books by the pound weigh students down

Jon Yates
The Daily Iowan
February pork bellies are down, corn prices are up, and, after a day of heavy trading, textbooks are reportedly holding steady.
It's not exactly a buyers market. Buy high, sell low — it goes against all the laws of good business sense.

"I wouldn't have had the faintest idea how much textbooks would have cost per pound. But the cost of textbooks today has gotten very expensive."

George Herbert,
manager

Well above the average cost, West's book hit the scales at about $34 per pound.

"I'd buy a hell of a lot of ramen noodles, wouldn't it?" he said in disbelief. "I could have food for a year."

Or, after a few years, a brand new car. At $5.25 per pound, a 1993 Chrysler LeBaron sounded like a better deal for some students.

"I'd much rather spend my money on the car," UI senior Susan Miller said after viewing a list of the cost of selected commodities per pound.

"Then again, you can't replace your education," Miller continued, waxing philosophic. "Ask me again in 20 years, when I see how much money I'm making."

For a majority of the 10 students who were stopped outside the University Book Store Tuesday afternoon and asked to weigh their books, the average cost of their textbooks per pound — $15.80, to be exact — was, well...

"A little steep," UI junior Paul Rempfor said. "I think the UI's making a lot of money."

Although the sample was small, University Book Store Manager George Herbert said he was not surprised textbooks cost more per pound than, say, a McDonald's Quarter Pounder.

"I wouldn't have had the faintest idea how much textbooks would have cost per pound," Herbert said. "But the cost of textbooks today has gotten very expensive."

Herbert said the $15.80 price per pound found by adding the total cost of 10 students' books and dividing by the total weight of the book probably doesn't take into account a lot of variables that may affect the cost of books, such as a student's major.

Some majors, such as those in the sciences, will often require books that cost more than other majors, Herbert said. Some books just cost more than others, too, he added.

Take, for instance, a book titled "Interpreting the Third World Politics, Economics and Social Issues." At a little over one pound, its cover price of $55 is probably at the high end of the price scale.

But for Alice Oleson, a UI sophomore majoring in English and anthropology whose average cost per pound of textbook was around $12.70, her Tuesday book-buying expedition was not so bad.

"I think it's a pretty good deal," she said as she lugged her books away.

"I just accept it because there's not a lot I can do about it," UI graduate student Kristin Baum said about the price of her books.

"Really, though, I think it's worth it in the long run."

Of course, so are 32 pounds of bananas.

BUSH PACKS UP

Moving out of White House is found grim task

The Bush administration finishes clearing out the White House in preparation for the Clinton era.

Paul Recer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration is being stuffed into boxes, loaded onto vans and moved into history. For the last to go, there were empty desks, empty feelings.

"Everybody's cried a little," said one rear-guard staffer at the White House. "But it's time to leave."

Boxes were piled on desks or in hallways throughout official Washington, as more than 3,000 political appointees made way for the Clinton era.

Some of those departing held parties, more like wakes, to mark the end of their Washington service. Addresses were exchanged, memories recalled and promises of continued friendship made.

"We have to leave so they can come in and clean. I just have a couple of more boxes and then I'm gone."

Katja Bullock, White House staff

Staffers in the executive mansion were told to pack up and try to leave by last Friday. Katja Bullock, who worked in the White House 11 years for Presidents Reagan and Bush, said she doesn't remember the great house being so quiet.

"We have to leave so they can come in and clean. I just have a couple of more boxes and then I'm gone," she said.

Earlier, she said, every scrap of paper from the Bush years was archived, boxed and shipped to Texas. One day, scholars at a planned presidential library in College Station will sort through it all to accord a better view for history.

But for now, White House workers dusted, vacuumed and washed while Bullock filed memories in a box.

"I've been very impressed by the orderly way it has all occurred," she said. "But I guess that's what makes us different from a banana republic. That's the strength of our system."

The symbols of duty's end for White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater were two beige telephones, one of them cracked. The phones had been connected to special White House lines at Fitzwater's home, but on Tuesday he brought them to the office.

"The White House phones are gone," Fitzwater told reporters in his barren office. "I'm out."

At the Treasury Department, just east of the White House, plastic-shrouded furniture lined the walls of the third floor "power corridor."

Deputy Secretary John Robson, the No. 2 official in the department, unhurriedly packed personal items and artwork. Neatly folded banners, mementos from government service in various departments, sit on a couch with the bright green and gold treasury flag on top. There's paperwork on a desk, but not much.

"Change is good," Robson said. "It can be painful, but it's good."

"Of course," he added, "you would rather leave under your own steam."

La Verne Ausman, administrator of the Farmer's Home Administration at the Department of Agriculture, sat in an office stripped of personal items, trying, he said, to get through the last of his paperwork.

Amidst the bare hooks where photos once hung, there still was a picture of Bush.

"He's president until I leave," Ausman explained.

At the Department of Health and Human Services, an official worked alone at a copying machine. When the paper jammed, he struggled to correct the problem. Once such chores were done for him, but now the executive hallways of HHS are deserted.

The official fixed the jam and started making copies of his resume. A reporter commented on

VEISHEA organizers focus on family-oriented activities

Associated Press

AMES — Organizers of the VEISHEA festival said Tuesday the theme of this year's student celebration is "Feeding the Future."

"We look at 'feeding' from many different angles, from food to educating young adults to building self-esteem in children," said Scott Lee, co-chairman of the event.

The festival, to be held April 23-25, is on probation from university officials after melees broke out last year and in 1988. Last year, police in riot gear were called in to quell the disturbance and more than 140 arrests were made.

The violence may have been "a blessing in disguise," Lee said.

DM streets paved with garlic, not gold this winter season

Associated Press

DES MOINES — Des Moines streets have taken on a new flavor. Garlic salt.

Tone Brothers Inc., the Des Moines spice business, had several tons of garlic salt that didn't make the grade. Rather than just dump it, they delivered it to Des Moines snow-plowing workers.

Public Works crews mixed the salt with sand and spread it on neighborhood streets during the recent snowstorms.

The largest ingredient is sodium chloride — the same basic salt the city always uses — so it worked great, the crews said.

George Stone, a Tone vice president, said some salt was too finely ground, some had the wrong ingredients. That's when Beth Shonts, the Des Moines Metropolitan Area Solid Waste Agency's first industrial and commercial recycling coordinator, stepped in.

"We kept three tons of stuff from the landfill," Shonts said.

Des Moines residents probably couldn't smell the success, though, because the spice was used in a mixture that is 90 percent sand.

112 SYSTEMS PURCHASED

Macintosh computers to upgrade UI centers

Thomas Wanat
The Daily Iowan

Students may notice some shiny new Macintoshes appearing on desks across campus as they return from break.

Far from a culinary delight these 112 new Apple Macintosh IIsi computers will be the latest upgrades to many of the Instructional Technology Centers at the UI.

According to Chris Pruess, manager of the user support center, the Weeg ITC in the basement of the Weeg Computing Center was overhauled with 28 of the new color Macintosh computers even before the semester began.

"We purchased 21 of the computers for the Weeg ITC with money from the student computer fee," Pruess said. "An additional seven we purchased with Weeg money so we could just finish it off."

Pruess explained that the new Macintosh computers all featured five megabytes of RAM, an 80 megabyte hard-drive, 14-inch color screens, and a 3 1/2 floppy disk-drive that are capable of reading both Macintosh and IBM disks.

"We'll also be upgrading six IBM PCs with IBM PS/2's," Pruess said. The $1,508 Macintosh computers replace older black and white models and will give many students access to more powerful machines, Pruess said.

The new machines will also be upgraded soon to include better networking capabilities that will further speed up students work, she said.

Mike Jenn, a project analyst at Weeg, said that identical new computers will be added at the Union ITC later this week in addition to ITC's at Burge Hall, the International Center, Jessup Hall, Mayflower Hall, Music Building, North Hall, Nursing Building, Pharmacy Building, Phillips Hall and Quadrangle Hall.

The Union ITC will be closed the morning of Thursday, Jan. 21 for the installation of the computers.

The student computer fee, included as part of tuition for all UI undergraduate students, will pay for 105 of the 112 new computers according to Pruess, at a cost of approximately $158,340.

The large number of Macintosh computer purchases are a result of recent price cuts by both IBM and Apple companies. Pruess added that polls conducted at ITC labs on campus showed that 80 percent of students prefer the Macintosh.

Joan Bender uses one of the newly installed Macintosh computers at the Weeg Instructional Technology Center Monday afternoon. Over 100 new computers are in the process of being installed.

Jacob Hugart, a user consultant at Weeg, said students have not made many comments on the new computers. "Students just sort of assume that new hardware will show up," he said.

Hugart said the new computers are definitely faster and nicer than the ones they replace.

"I just hope we don't have a lot of people playing games on the color screens," said Hugart.

CAUSES EXAMINED

Number of reported rapes down in '92

Brad Hahn
The Daily Iowan

Reports of rape dropped by approximately one-third and total crisis calls were cut by almost 50 percent from last year, according to a second quarter report released by the Rape Victim Advocacy Program.

The 21 rapes reported were nine less than reported in the first quarter of this year. The second quarter consists of totals from October, November and December.

While the numbers appear to be encouraging, RVAP Public Education Coordinator Ashley Sovern said last year's numbers were the highest in the last five years.

"The numbers dropped from last year, but they're pretty consistent with the years before," Sovern said.

Crisis calls dropped to 95, compared to 186 in the second quarter last year, and 118 calls in the first quarter of this year.

However, lower numbers do not necessarily mean less rapes, Sovern said.

"I'd hate for people to look at this and say 'Oh, the problem's over,'" she said. "It's hard to tell... I don't think that there are less rapes going on."

Sovern pointed to a couple of possible contributing factors to the lower numbers. There has been internal RVAP shuffling, with one counselor leaving in mid-November, and RVAP hasn't advertised as much as in prior years — instead turning its energy towards other programs.

"It's possible that there were less rapes, and that would be wonderful," she said. "But last year it didn't necessarily mean there were more rapes, but an increase in reports. Maybe this is just a decrease in reports."

There still exists a trend of backlash against women, Sovern said.

"It's clear from the number of sexual harassment reports, and we've had a lot of women having problems with the legal system and having charges filed," Sovern said.

Statehouse leader looking for a place to put smokers

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Senate Republican leader Jack Rife on Tuesday said he'll ask that a Statehouse room reserved for nursing mothers be converted to a smoking area.

"We'll try to continue to preserve the rights of individuals and see that people are treated decently and humanely," Rife said.

Department of Public Health officials have set aside a first-floor room at the Statehouse as a lactation room, and it is in the part of the building where Gov. Terry Branstad has banned smoking.

Rife said he will speak with Branstad about switching the room over to a smoking lounge, a move he says makes sense because it is isolated and would limit complaints about secondary smoke.

"There needs to be an area for those state employees who smoke, so we don't force them out in the cold weather on the sidewalk," said Rife, a smoker.

Report: 78% of teaching grads hired

Chris Pothoven
The Daily Iowan

UI teaching graduates continue to show a high success rate in finding teaching-related jobs, according to a recent report from the UI College of Education.

Released by the college's Educational Placement Office, the annual report says 78 percent of the UI's 1992 teaching graduates have found teaching or teaching-related positions.

Half of the 1992 graduates are in full-time teaching positions, while 28 percent are part-time or substitute teachers, or hold teaching-related jobs.

Although the percentage of graduates finding work in the education field has decreased slightly, compared to rates of 84 percent in 1989 and 81 percent in 1990, UI teacher education administrators are still pleased with the report.

"The decrease is something we're not real worried about because there are a lot of factors affecting the job market, such as a poor economy, tight state budgets, declining enrollments and staff reductions," said Rebecca Anthony, teacher placement coordinator for the Educational Placement Office.

"We've always had one of the strongest placement rates of the Big Ten schools, so we feel real comfortable about that," she said.

Of the other 22 percent, 11 percent are employed in nonteaching jobs, 5 percent have returned to school and 6 percent are still unemployed.

The latest figures attest to both the quality of the students and the quality of the UI's teacher preparation program, Anthony said.

"I think we have some of the best candidates in the nation," she said. "UI teaching graduates make up a flexible and adventurous group. They are literally everywhere in the world, and many will bring skills and talents back to the state of Iowa."

Students benefit greatly from the semester-long student teaching period required by the UI, compared to shorter terms at many other schools, Anthony said.

"The full semester of student teaching gives students a really good opportunity to practice their profession," she said.

IC City Council upset over plan to construct new road for school

Lynn M. Tefft
The Daily Iowan

Tempers heated up and disagreement erupted at Tuesday night's Iowa City City Council meeting, following a presentation by Roland Weimer, who displayed the Iowa City School Board's plans for a new elementary school on Rohret Road.

Councilor Randy Larson was angered because he felt the city was not given adequate notice to raise funds necessary for the construction of a road to the new school, and added that the board has not offered to help pay the price.

"I am frustrated about the school board choosing a site without a road leading to it, and then not contributing to the cost of a new road," Larson said.

Iowa City Mayor Darrel Courtney pointed out that there is a road to the site but that it is in questionable condition.

"Unless we want busloads of kids on that road, we have to build a new one this summer," Larson said, referring to the board's plans to complete the school by the fall of 1994. "We have to come up with $3 million on a month's notice." Courtney defended the school board's position, saying he has discussed the issue with them.

"They had a lot of things to consider," he said. School board member Al Leff arrived later in the meeting, after hearing Larson's remarks on the simultaneous television broadcast of the meeting.

"It's a little bit discouraging as a school board member spending that much time choosing a school site and passing a bond referendum, and then being harangued like this," Leff said.

Many factors were considered in choosing the site, Leff said, adding that he resents being accused of giving the council short notice.

"We don't have the luxury of planning to the Nth degree. We have to respond to growth," he said.

Larson argued that other sites with better roads could have been chosen, with less burden on taxpayers.

"There's all kind of land on Mormon Trek," he said.

"Oh, be serious," Leff responded. "Look at the demographics we looked at, with the student population and other factors."

Courtney ended the argument, which was not an official part of the council agenda, but included in public discussion time.

"We were going to have to come up with the money to build a road out there eventually anyway," he said.

The council will take official action as necessary according to the development of the site.

In other business, the council voted to continue at the Feb. 23 meeting, a public hearing on an ordinance adopting the 1991 Edition of the Uniform Plumbing Code, with amendments. The additional time will allow various city boards to discuss effects of the amendments.

DEBATING ETHICS

Republican leader disturbed by union assisting Democrats

Although the assistance didn't violate the new ethics law, Republicans felt it set a bad precedent.

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — The head of the House Ethics Committee is grumbling about assistance a big state worker union gave Democrats during an assault on Republican education plans last week.

Rep. Dorothy Carpenter, R-West Des Moines, said the aid didn't violate the state's new ethics law but said it sets a bad precedent. Democratic leaders said the complaints show their criticism hit home.

"I understand why they are upset," said House Minority Leader Bob Arnold, D-Davenport. "They can't take a punch very well."

Though the amount of money involved is small, Carpenter said the issue is important.

Last week, House Republicans proposed cutting $10 million from Gov. Terry Branstad's school finance package, the first big fight of this year's session.

Within minutes of the proposal's approval by the House Education Committee late last week, Democrats prepared news releases attacking Republicans.

The news releases were for local news organizations in the districts of selected lawmakers. Democrats enlisted the aid of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees to fax the releases.

Union president Don McKee said about 60 items were faxed.

Poll shows Iowans back decision to commit U.S. troops to Somalia

Associated Press

DES MOINES — Iowans overwhelmingly support President Bush's post-election decision to commit American troops to the famine-relief effort in Somalia, a new poll says.

The copyright poll published Tuesday in The Des Moines Register says that at the same time, Iowans are split on the question of whether the task should be considered complete when food and supplies are distributed in Somalia, or when peace is fully established among feuding warlords.

The poll says 75 percent of Iowans say Bush did the right thing when he decided to commit troops to the relief effort in Somalia. Only 18 percent say the commitment was a mistake; the others are undecided.

Interviewing for the poll started nearly four weeks after the first U.S. troops landed in Somalia on Dec. 9.

Officials express satisfaction with the progress in Somalia. Leaders of 14 warring factions have agreed to begin peace talks, and U.S. officials have started the process of turning over the relief effort to United Nations control.

The poll says 46 percent of Iowans say the time to bring the troops home is when it becomes clear that food and medicine can be transported. But 45 percent say the Americans' job won't be over until peace is restored to the country that collapsed into civil war two years ago.

UIHC IMPROVES ACCOMMODATIONS

Eye Institute construction nears completion

Lesley Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

UI Hospitals and Clinics will soon complete a visionary capital replacement program that began in the early 1970s to replace out-dated patient accommodations.

The $34.5 million Eye Institute and Family Care Center is currently under construction and is scheduled to be completed in 1994 as the final phase of the program, according to UIHC Information Director Dean Borg.

"The Eye Institute will be on the first floor of the five story building," Borg said. "The upper four floors will be used for other patient services."

Borg said those services will include an Ear, Nose and Throat and Dental Institute, Iowa Women's Health Center, Geriatrics Clinic and other specialty clinics conducted by the Department of Internal Medicine.

The lower level of the facility will accommodate a multidisciplinary family care clinic and ambulatory renal dialysis suite. The Eye Institute will also include an ambulatory care clinic, patient examination and treatment rooms, laboratories and faculty offices.

"The building will eventually be linked to the Pappajohn Pavilion by a skywalk and an underground walkway," Borg said.

Completion of the Eye Institute will provide more space for clinic patients in the Department of Ophthalmology, now located in the crowded 1926-era General Hospital.

Head of the Department of Ophthalmology Thomas Weingeist said the number of patients using the existing clinic has increased more than 60 percent in the last 10 years with approximately 62,000 patients served annually, according to a UIHC release.

"The building is internally funded by UI Hospitals," Borg said. "There is no state capital funding whatsoever."

The replacement program has included construction of the Boyd Tower, Roy J. Carver Pavilion, John W. Colton Pavilion and John Pappajohn Pavilion. Upon completion of the new building, the UIHC will have invested $468 million in the program.

The project architect, Hansen Lind Meyer, has designed 20 eye centers in the United States.

KEEPING UP WITH CRIMINALS

State patrol to begin using semiautomatic weapons

In order to keep up with criminals, the Iowa State Patrol will begin using stronger firepower.

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Highway Patrol troopers are preparing to trade in their revolvers for more lethal weapons in a bid to match the firepower they face on the streets, lawmakers were told Tuesday.

"A lot of the criminals out on the street are probably better armed than the troopers," said Betsy Dittmore, a spokeswoman for the Department of Public Safety.

"If the criminal has 10 shots, you don't want to run out at six," said Richard Vohs, a spokesman for Gov. Terry Branstad.

So, Iowa troopers will be switching to "user friendly" 12-shot semiautomatic weapons, replacing the standard-issue revolvers.

Dittmore brought the issue to a joint House-Senate budget committee to keep legislators informed about the plans, which have been studied since last year. The Legislature last year asked officials to study the issue of which guns the officers should carry.

"The uniformed officers of the department traditionally have been issued revolvers," Public Safety Commissioner Paul Wieck said in a report to the committee. "The revolver until a few years ago was the weapon generally carried by most law enforcement officers."

Wieck noted that "this trend is dramatically changing" as police across the nation find criminals increasingly well armed.

After concluding that the switch to a semiautomatic weapon was justified, a panel of 10 uniformed police officers evaluated 26 weapons ranging from 9 mm to .45-caliber guns.

"A minimum of 500 rounds was fired from each weapon," Wieck noted.

"If the criminal has 10 shots, you don't want to run out at six."

Richard Vohs

The panel settled on a Smith and Wesson .40-caliber, to be carried in a cross-draw holster.

The committee concluded that the "weapon is very user friendly and easy to operate" and its double-action "makes the transition from revolver to semiautomatic safer and more efficient."

"Frame size is adequate for the .40-caliber ammunition, yet compact enough that officers with small hands may safely operate the weapon," the report said.

Dittmore said she didn't have precise figures on the cost of switching handguns for the 450 Highway Patrol officers. Also switching will be state narcotics officers, Division of Criminal Investigation agents and capital security officers who patrol the Statehouse grounds.

Healthnet system to aid in search of health sources

The Daily Iowan

UI students, staff and faculty working in the health sciences field will soon have a faster and more efficient means of finding library health information materials. Healthnet — the computerized information system — has been coordinated by University Libraries and is scheduled to go into service this semester.

The service will provide unlimited campuswide access to all journal citations in Medline, a comprehensive biomedical science database, as well as databases in health planning, hospital administration, nursing and other fields. The information system is expected to support teaching and research activities. When using Healthnet, users will not have to pay a fee for each individual search.

"Enhanced access to the literature of the health sciences by UI students, faculty and staff will result in improved levels of research, education and clinical care on campus," said David Curry, head of the Hardin Library for Health Sciences where the system will be housed. "The search software in the system selected has been designed both for novice users, providing detailed help messages to guide the individual to appropriate terms, and for expert users."

Sheila Creth, a UI librarian, said, "The whole campus will benefit from this cooperative project among University Libraries, the health science colleges, university hospitals and the university administration."

"This new service is an excellent example of library staff members working with other campus units to find creative methods to respond to the need for scholarly information at the University of Iowa," she said.

Healthnet will be cooperatively funded by the Colleges of Dentistry, Medicine, Nursing and Pharmacy and the UI Hospitals and Clinics, as well as University Libraries. Additional contributions have been made by the UI Office of Academic Affairs and the Office of the Vice President for Research.

Clinton appoints staff for State Dept. posts

Barry Schweid
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President-elect Clinton turned to cloistered think tanks and urbane retired diplomats to fill top State Department jobs on Tuesday. He also broke tradition by creating a senior post to help shape foreign policy on environmental, human rights and refugee issues.

The new job, assuming Senate confirmation, will be filled by Tim Wirth, a liberal Colorado Democrat who retired from the Senate last year. He is best known for his commitment to environmental issues and now will be able to help formulate an approach to preserve the planet.

Peter Tarnoff, who was a top aide to Secretaries of State Cyrus Vance and Edmund Muskie in the Carter administration, was named undersecretary for political affairs. It is the third most powerful job in the State Department.

Tarnoff is president of the Council on Foreign Relations, a New York-based private research group that publishes Foreign Affairs magazine and tries to foster international understanding of foreign-policy issues.

Winston Lord, a former U.S. ambassador to China who was sharply critical of the Bush administration's go-slow approach to human rights abuses there, will return to the government as the assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific affairs.

Lord is a former head of the Council on Foreign Relations. A council board member, Strobe Talbott, an author and journalist who translated the memoirs of the late Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev, was named to a new post to coordinate aid to the Commonwealth of Independent States — the former Soviet republics — and to Eastern Europe.

Talbott, who had been rumored to be in line to be U.S. ambassador to Moscow, was a Clinton classmate in the Rhodes Scholar program of the 1960s. Another graduate of the program, Stephen Oxman, was named assistant secretary of state for European affairs. He is a lawyer who worked in the Carter administration for Secretary of State-designate Warren Christopher.

Another sensitive post, head of the Near East bureau, went to a holdover, career diplomat Edward Djerejian, a former U.S. ambassador to Syria who helped arrange the Mideast peace talks and has quietly nudged Arabs and Israelis to work out compromises to their conflict.

Latin American affairs will remain, at least temporarily, in the hands of Bernard Aronson, a conservative Democrat who has held the post of assistant secretary during the Bush administration. A Cuban-American lawyer, Mario Baeza, had been slated for the job but was not on the list of appointees announced Tuesday.

Also, Dennis Ross, a top aide to former Secretary of State James Baker, is expected to be retained at least for six months as a senior consultant. He played a leading role in setting U.S. policy both on the Middle East and the Soviet Union.

Ross headed the policy planning staff. That job is going to Samuel Lewis, a former U.S. ambassador to Israel who is currently president of the United States Institute of Peace, a government-financed research group that promotes peaceful settlements of international conflicts.

Other appointments included:
■ Career foreign service officer George Moose as assistant secret-

Saddam's cease-fire promise met with skepticism

John King
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President-elect Clinton, hours away from inheriting the volatile standoff with Saddam Hussein, greeted Iraq's cease-fire offer on Tuesday with skepticism and bluntly warned that defiance would trigger more military strikes.

"We need to see Iraq change its behavior," Clinton communications director George Stephanopoulos said in a terse response to Saddam's announcement. "We need full compliance with the U.N. resolutions."

Saddam's sudden promise to stop firing at allied aircraft patrolling the no-fly zones over Iraq raised hopes of reduced tensions in the Middle East when Clinton, untested in global and military affairs, takes office at noon Wednesday.

Clinton himself said nothing publicly about Iraq. But, speaking for him, aides pledged a continuity in the hard-line U.S. policy as the hour approached when the Bush administration's two-year confrontation with Saddam would become an instant Clinton administration foreign policy dilemma.

Advisers said Clinton was weighing an array of options from the Pentagon and his own camp, including the possibility of expanding military responses to Iraqi violations to targeting Saddam's troops as well as missile sites and other military installations.

Some advisers privately expressed relief at the prospect of a cooling-off period and an inauguration day free of military action.

EDUCATION

Moving out of the 19th century

Former House Speaker Tip O'Neill used to say "All politics is local," and Iowans should keep that in mind this spring while watching the Iowa Legislature. The most local politics of all could interfere with the Legislature's ability to deal with Iowa's education budget, which makes up a third of all state spending.

As the session began last week, House Republicans moved to cut $11.5 million from Governor Branstad's proposed education budget. That budget was already cut to the bone, and the House Republican proposal is starting to chew on those bones. Yet a huge potential area for savings is likely to be ignored.

William Lopley, Branstad's director of the state Department of Education, says there are too many small, substandard rural school districts in Iowa. They're expensive to operate, and can't provide the classes, programs and technology larger schools can offer. Money that could go to teachers and textbooks instead pays for administration and maintenance that's duplicated a few miles down the road. And with Iowa's open enrollment law, small schools are losing their best students to nearby districts that offer a wider variety of courses for college-bound young people.

Branstad's director of the state Department of Education says there are too many small, substandard rural school districts in Iowa. Money that could go to teachers and textbooks instead pays for administration and maintenance that's duplicated a few miles down the road.

Iowa and next-door Wisconsin are almost identical in geographic area, and Iowa has 2.1 million fewer people. Yet Iowa has almost exactly the same number of school districts (397) as Wisconsin. As far as can be measured, Wisconsin students rank alongside Iowa's among the best in the nation. It seems clear that school consolidations would help, not hurt, the quality of education in Iowa.

Small towns don't give up their schoolhouses, courthouses and high school teams easily, and talk of mergers raises tempers at corner cafes. Branstad visibly distanced himself from his Education Director's ideas last year. The state Senate, splitting along rural vs. urban lines, barely reconfirmed Lopley.

Subtle changes in Iowa's reapportionment law between 1980 and 1990 led to the creation of more rural districts in the 1991 redistricting. That's in direct opposition to Iowa's population trends in the 1980s, when rural areas lost more people than Iowa's cities. Between redistricting and Republican gains, there are more small-town rural lawmakers in Des Moines than there were in the last session. That may make the Legislature less able to address this issue candidly.

It's easy to feel sympathy for rural concerns. Schools are a source of community identity and pride. Yet these same rural voters are concerned about property taxes, the state budget, and educational competitiveness. Consolidating small schools may hurt some pride and some politicians, but in many cases it's long overdue. Iowa's schools need to move out of the 19th century and into the 21st, but some of the smallest districts may not be capable of doing that. Let's hope our legislators are.

MANDY CRANE

Angels won't be wearin' these rred shoes

I saw these red shoes the other day.

When I was a little girl I used to play "dress up" with my friends. My mom had a pretty little party dress that we used to love to fancy up with a bunch of now-vintage accessories. My favorite extra was an old pair of red pumps. These weren't just any old pumps, these were the "crunch your toes till they bleed" style popular in the late '50s and early '60s. They were just the right color of red to match the lipstick on all those models on the covers of Dad's old jazz albums.

I loved these shoes. I used to walk around for hours in our basement rec room (this was the '70s), clicking away. Whether they be on the feet of the ultimate boss or the teacher from hell, these shoes were power.

Was it their bone-crushing design? Well, it helped keep them on my feet. Was it their glass-ceiling crashing height? Well, I've rarely had any problems looking down my nose at anyone. Or was it their color? Red. A dark, sinister red that breathlessly said, "Not quite scarlet, not quite maroon. Red. Just red. Dark red." These were shoes of a red that should be spelled with four letters — rred.

These shoes were not made for children. Well, the '70s grew to a close and come the '80s I was getting grown-up shoes of my own, or at least that's what I was told.

They still turn up from time to time. The ghastly clogs with the leather kilties that could knock down any freshman within 50 yards. The faux suede earth shoes with GASS spelled out on the sole — for Kinney, the Great American Shoe Store. When we were in high school my sister and I used to dodge Kinney shoes like the plague. If you stopped to look at anything the salesmen with the commission complexes could talk you into anything.

Mandy's First Heels were these little jobs with wooden soles and leather straps over the toe and around the ankle. Pumps just weren't in fashion then. I tried walking around for practice but the half-inch strap was no match for the support from the pumps I had been weaned on. The sculptured carpeting was also a far cry from the smooth-painted basement floor.

I wore those shoes throughout high school because after one look too many into my mother's closet I vowed I would never be like her — I would keep my shoe purchases to a minimum.

It's easy to be without heels in college, particularly now. Seeing a woman in a fancy dress and big, clunky shoes is the norm, no longer an oddity. However, the day has still not arrived that allows most women in after-college professions to wear their Birkenstocks or Doc Martens to the board room. Thus, the pump temptation lives on.

Over my many years of professional employment and charge accounts, I've at last accumulated a shoe collection to rival Mom's. I have black pumps, patent leather pumps, taupe pumps, bone pumps, gray pumps and gold lame pumps. I thought I had found THE pump several years ago — a little Joan & David two-tone number, patent leather on top, fake crocodile on the bottom and heel.

My hesitation after the purchase was erased when I showed them to a male colleague and he sighed, "Wow. If I was a woman, that would be my shoe." (And he was STRAIGHT!)

The other day I was with my roommate buying yet another pair of pumps, this time in black suede with a little platform on the sole and an intimidating 3-inch heel. Too mod. While waiting for the sales clerk I picked out a pair of black "hard shoes," the kind of shoes this kid named Sherman used to have to wear in second grade. Anyway, there I was, four shoes to the wind, so to speak, when I saw these red shoes.

They were way up high, ruling over the other shoes on the top shelf. I had to stand on my tip-toes to touch them.

They're red. Not the dark rred of my childhood

BRIDGETT WILLIAMS

Armchair view of the Bush administration

As you all know, this is a highly significant month for our nation. The world's attention will be focused on us for one day as we engage in a public ritual of great social and cultural import. This orderly transition of power, the passing of the torch from a group which has dominated the scene for the last decade to another band of men eager for the chance to prove their worth, the glitz, the pageantry, the TV coverage... rarely has one event so neatly captured all that I love and hate about America. I am referring, of course, to the Super Bowl.

You wouldn't know it to look at me, but I am an armchair jock. I'm a danger to myself and everyone around me when I play anything more strenuous than Yahtzee, yet I can kill hours watching ESPN. My first love is pro baseball. As a former Cleveland, I've dubbed myself a "Cubs-Fan-In-Training"; I can talk for hours about why the Indians have yet again expressed their latent death wish by trading their best players to Toronto. I look to each spring with a lemming-like hope that this time something will be different. Baseball is a full-fledged pastime — something to enjoy and linger over on a sunny afternoon with one's friends. It's a game of simplicity and grace, with few penalties. You either catch the ball or you don't; you either hit the ball or you don't. Mistakes are immediately obvious and there can be no shifting of blame.

Pro football is a different type of game entirely. For one thing, baseball players won't stand out in a downpour; they call the game and wait for fair weather. Football, on the other hand, is a test of blind devotion carried on in all types of conditions. It's all about macho, this war over land. That's right — when stripped of headphones, shoulder pads, and beer commercials, it all boils down to two groups of guys fighting over a piece of ground that neither will ultimately get to keep. They take orders from a tactical commander who will never take the field himself. Teams are led by a man whose arm is called a "gun" and whose passes are called "bombs." If someone gets hurt, a new recruit takes his place and the game goes on. The sideline becomes a MASH unit to patch up prize players and send them back out to take some more punishment. In the last 10 years, football's become a high-tech business, with special space-age equipment (legal) and steroids (NOT!) used to give teams advantages in strength and speed. For all its goofy charm, pro football has some pretty sinister undertones — not too hard to see why it became such an immensely popular sport during the Cold War.

Football is full of rules which everyone tries to circumvent and penalties which are invoked by third parties who can only see and hear a fraction of what's happening on the field. The game is designed so that in most situations, only a sophisticated observer will know exactly who screwed up; a dropped pass might actually be a bad throw or the result of a dumb play called in from the sidelines. A fumble might just be the natural consequence of a tooth-jarring tackle. Both sides tell their own stories, appeal to the officials, mug for the audience at home. When things start to go bad in one game, one can try to sack the opposing quarterback. When things start to go bad in a lot of games, it's time to fire the coach. It's easy to see why football talk is so readily appropriated by top officials in the military and the federal government. The parallels between the pursuits are almost too easily drawn.

Yet, the government doesn't really work like a football game, although at times one wishes it would. Take a simple penalty like delay of game. If the team with the ball screws around too long, they are penalized for wasting everyone's time. If the same rules applied to politics, what would be the penalty? According to Associated Press reports, White House officials found Bush's Iran-Contra diaries early last fall but did not report their existence to investigators until after the election. Analysts believe that Bush may be covering for himself and Reagan, but does anyone believe that we're actually going to prosecute two former presidents? Regardless of President Bush's guilt or innocence, his actions bespeak an unbecoming sneakiness which casts his actions in a suspicious light. In football, he'd get a five-yard penalty. In politics? Wait and see.

One of my favorite penalties is pass interference. When a defender makes it impossible for the receiver to catch a pass, the offensive team gets the ball where the interference occurred. Logically, of course, one can argue that it can't be known whether or not the pass would have been caught; the point is that the offense must have the opportunity to do so. Again, apply the rules of football to the Bush administration. The executive branch has interfered in ways both legal and questionable in the conduct of the Iran-Contra investigation (pardoning people before they've been found guilty or even charged, etc.). The latest scandal involves the direct defiance of two federal appeals court orders which instruct White House and National Security Council staff members to back up their computer records before they leave office today. These records, considered vital to the Iran-Contra case, are in all likelihood off to the great byte bucket in the sky even as I speak.

How about it, sports fans? Pass interference? If the government played by football rules, Special Prosecutor Lawrence Walsh's job would have just gotten a lot easier — instant conviction for everyone who destroyed documents vital to the investigations. As it is, I'm afraid that the Bush White House has just gone out winning one more for the Gipper.

Heartfelt thanks

To the Editor:

As you know, the past month has been a very difficult one for me and my family as we try to put our lives back in order after the sudden death of my husband, Bill.

I have been overwhelmed by the cards and letters that continue to come to my office and home, offering words of comfort and encouragement. Your kind and generous donations to the Bill Stringer Scholarship Fund would have truly touched him.

While I am trying to respond to all who showed their concern, there were many cards without return addresses simply signed, "A Hawk-eye Fan." One of the reasons Bill and I chose to move our family to Iowa 10 years ago was because we knew we would be living and raising our family in a community and state that are filled with loving, caring people. I can honestly say with all my heart that this is true. The messages you've sent and the prayers you've prayed for me and my family during this difficult time have moved and touched me in ways I can't put into words.

I ask that you continue to support me, my family and my team as we go about living our lives without our husband, father, brother and trainer. He was our biggest fan and supporter, and would want you to continue to do that for us.

Again, from the bottom of my heart, thank you for caring.

Telling the whole story

To the Editor:

I found the guest opinion by a coalition of Greeks "discuss(ing) some of the aspects of the so-called "Macedonian" issue" (Nov. 9 DI) to be factually accurate but somewhat misleading. To defend Greece's claims may be noble, but by failing to discuss Greek policy in its entirety, the opinion ignored its more disquieting ramifications.

While enforcing a strict oil embargo against the Republic of Skopje, Greece has also, on the other hand, been aiding the murderous Belgrade regime in securing its own supply of fuel, essential to Serbia's war aim of "cleansing" the entire region. It has become painfully clear that, despite its denials, Greece will do what it takes to help Serbia in squashing any independence movement that is burgeoning in Skopje. Sadly, it would seem that Greece is also not above "the enemy of my enemy is my friend" mentality that is now pervading the region.

It is somewhat disingenuous for Greece to base its opposition to the recognition of Skopje (unless the republic refrains from calling itself Macedonia) upon the principle that no people have the right to violently impose their will upon another, while at the same time supporting Serbia's murderous efforts. My concern is not the validity of the facts presented in the above mentioned opinion, but to point out that it failed to state the whole picture.

Regardless of which side of the debate one is on, actions that lead to violence cannot be tolerated. The wider issue at stake is not the ultimate fate of Skopje or Macedonia, but how we as human beings choose to decide that fate. We cannot let our ethnic biases and passions cloud our better judgement at the expense of the commonality that is our shared humanness.

TFA's mission a noble one

To the Editor:

It is perhaps unremarkable to hear those who earn their livings by dispensing pedagogical prowess criticize a program that appears to circumvent the well-established, traditional path to professional teaching positions. What is disturbing, however, is the off-handed and cynical tone Drs. Schrier and Penick adopt in dismissing a program which may in fact have some merit, and do some good.

Teaching for America (TFA) draws candidates into classrooms which are shunned by teachers emerging from the education establishment, however well prepared those teachers may be.

Professors Schrier and Penick seem to be oblivious to the fact that TFA cannot replace a teacher on a whim. The program simply recruits, trains and showcases prospective candidates, who are hired under existing provisional certification policies, by the school principals themselves. I, for one, have faith in the abilities of principals to make shrewd decisions in exploiting valuable human resources — particularly those principals presiding over schools like the ones described in Johnathan Kozol's "Savage Inequalities," which have in some cases had trouble obtaining supplies as rudimentary as toilet paper. Moreover, many TFA candidates will be required to complete formal university teacher training while employed by the various TFA school systems. Students cannot even be considered by the program if they cannot meet standards for academic achievement. Of the 8,600 students who have been considered for the program, only 1,800 of them have been placed so far. (One wonders what the ratio of applications to seats is in the college of education, where those not "born to teach" are "weeded out").

It is unfortunate that a student like Pete Colarco, fresh from the rigors of a difficult, scientific, undergraduate training may be dissuaded from entering the talent pool. Here is a student who may have gone on to make a difference in the life of a deserving, underprivileged urban or rural child, had he not been impressed by glib phrases like "bag of tricks" emanating from the venerated halls of academe. It would be gratifying to learn that Mr. Colarco finally would return to an urban school system after he invests more of his years and more of his dollars in teacher education. But can we count on him to be noble enough to apply his fine credentials in a school system like those served by TFA?

Will he choose to teach in dangerous, dilapidated and inadequately supplied classes of 35 or 40 under-prepared, often difficult students, in favor of classes of 15 or 20 excellent, healthy students, in attractive and safe suburban schools, where he may be paid tens of thousands of dollars more for his efforts? While Dr. Penick may be unwilling to trust his children in the hands of neophytes like Pete Colarco, it is more certain that few children of Ph.D.-holding educators will be entrusted to the TFA schools where Mr. Colarco might have done some good in the fall. Dr. Schrier is absolutely correct when she admonishes that "they would never be doing this in any middle class, affluent suburbs." They don't need to.

Just as the medical establishment has failed to cure the common cold, so has the educational establishment failed to insulate urban school children from the cold sociopolitical wind which chills their development and freezes the class structure into which they have been innocently embedded. It may be that the energy and idealism of young, middle-class college graduates could fuel the indignation required to rock the ivory towers. Perhaps such rumbling could raise those on top from their torpid, dismissive defense of the status-quo, and awaken in them a deeper sense of the political and social responsibility that their visibility requires.

Talent and energy available for growth of Public Access TV

To the Editor:

Thank you for your coverage of the Nov. 19 Broadband Telecommunications Commission hearing on the cable TV franchise. I would like to make one small correction to your coverage. The public access studio is not the size of an apartment bedroom — it is the largest of our 3 rooms in the Iowa City Public Library, and is really more the size of a living room. The control room was the bedroom-sized room I referred to when I addressed the Commission. Seven different production functions take place there, with seven different kinds of equipment in that one room: two sets of editing equipment, two computers used for video graphics, a dub station, the switcher bay for the studio, and the cablecasting equipment (as well as our videotape library).

Since we are the only video business in town offering low cost production, access to equipment, the opportunity to gain valuable media production experience, and a chance to use the First Amendment Right of free speech, our small space is used to the maximum and then some. More television has been made and shown in our studio than anywhere else in Iowa City. With more space and a bigger budget, Public Access Television, Inc. can serve the community better — which was the reason our producers addressed the Commission. We have the talent and the energy to grow, but we need additional resources to do it.

If your readers want to know more about us, they are cordially invited to join the crowd in our tiny little electronic version of the one-room schoolhouse.

Thanks again for your article.

Genetics and behaviors

To the Editor:
William Stosine's letter of Wed.,

Dec. 9, clearly explains the difference between those that have attacked me and myself. Mr. Stosine warns me not to mistake the obscene number of column inches devoted attacking by character as a sign of respect. Name-calling, allusions to racism, sexism, and bigotry, are not what I generally call respectful and that was the point I was trying to make in my last letter. I respect ANYONE'S opinion, but apparently those who have spent so many hours bashing me in the DI do not.

Mr. Stosine even quotes my letter that stated that I "respect everyone's right to exist and live privately," but then attempts to relinquish my right to a political opinion because of my personal respect for Pat Robertson and work with the Christian Coalition. I believe that falls under the category of associational preference, Mr. Stosine. I am not involved with Keith Chiavetta's Alliance for the Advancement of Heterosexuality, but I do respect their right to exist, just as I respect the right of our numerous pro-homosexual groups to exist. Mr. Stosine and his ilk seem to think that anyone lobbying for "family values" issues is somehow less protected by the First Amendment than themselves. It seems to me that the only one of the sexual preference groups encountering anything resembling "oppression" on this campus is Mr. Chiavetta's group.

To sum up the activities of which I have been accused: Yes, I am a member of the Christian Coalition (read freedom of religion and association). No, I do not condone violence of any kind against anyone for any reason other than self-defense. No, I do not despise homosexuals, in fact a number of people whose opinions I greatly value are homosexual. No, I do not believe that anyone should be degraded, ridiculed, or personally attacked in these pages (I may have been as guilty as others in the past, but this is a request for everyone to stick to issues, not personalities). Yes, I do believe that homosexuality is a behavioral choice. The studies Mr. Stosine cites are inconclusive and refuted by an equal number of studies that show homosexuality is caused by environmental factors. Regardless of their scientific validity, these studies show a genetic predisposition to homosexuality. The decision to act upon that predisposition cannot be refuted as a personal behavioral choice. Numerous studies with more valid results have shown that alcoholism (is) based on a genetic predisposition, but no one would be so preposterous as to claim that an alcoholic has no choice but to drink and should thus be a member of a protected class.

I am sure that this is not the end of this continuing saga, however I would encourage future and current letter-writers to confine their comments to issues, opinions, and facts; and avoid personal attack and innuendo. Intellectual discourse is what a "liberal" education should be all about, not a public practicum for a career with the National Enquirer. I appreciate all opinions and consider them equally when deciding on an issue. Personal attacks are not a form of argument, but a lack thereof.

No 'Motown granddaddy'

To the Editor:

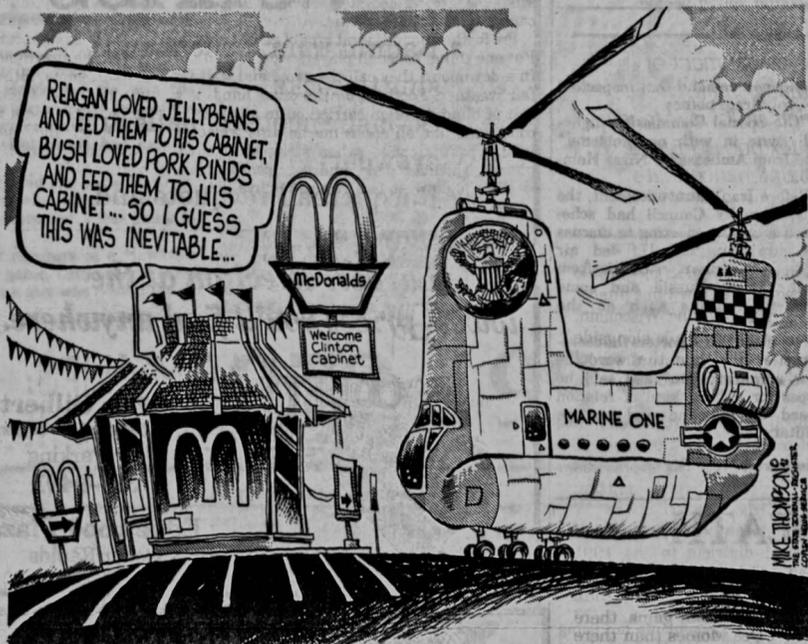

There is no excuse for journalists getting simple and readily available facts wrong. When arts columnists do it, it displays ignorance of a subject on which we are supposed to trust their judgments.

In "Soundtrack only adds to success of 'X'" (Dec. 1 DI), Kevin Ruby refers to Quincy Jones as a "Motown granddaddy." Quincy Jones never worked for Motown. He has a jazz, composing and arranging career dating back to 1950. He was musical director of Barclay Records in Paris in the 1950s, a vice president at Mercury Records in New York from 1961-68, in 1969 he went to work with A & M Records in Los Angeles. Throughout he continued to record his own music, produce for those labels and others, work on film scores, and myriad other things. The successes of the 1970s and 1980s that made him well-known to pop audiences were as a hit-maker and producer, sometimes for A & M, sometimes as an independent, with such artists as the Brothers Johnson, Donna Summer, Chaka Khan, Rufus, and Michael Jackson. Whatever work he did with Motown was as an independent producer, not as an artist under contract, an employee, or an executive.

All of this information and more is readily available in any one of a number of encyclopedias of popular music, not to mention that there are books about both Motown and Quincy Jones. Do your homework.

Clinton promises changes in government

Terence Hunt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—On the brink of his presidency, Bill Clinton pledged Tuesday to inject a spirit of innovation in government and said, "I desperately want to make a difference." A mood of excitement and high expectations filled the capital.

Half his Cabinet received preliminary approval, and Clinton filled out his State Department team to confront a rash of global crises, in Iraq, Somalia and Bosnia.

Asking the prayers and support of friends and foes alike, Clinton said, "I face daunting challenges too great for any person's mind to comprehend or wisdom to judge or strength to meet alone."

He visited the grave sites of John and Robert Kennedy, his early heroes and political models, and knelt in prayer. He told youngsters that as a child, "There were times when I wanted to be president . . . but I'm not sure I thought I ever would be president."

At noon Wednesday, before an audience of hundreds of thousands of people, Clinton will recite a 35-word oath and become America's 42nd president. Fifteen minutes earlier, Vice President-elect Al Gore will be sworn in. Both men will begin the day worshipping at the Metropolitan African Methodist Episcopal Church, a prominent black church.

Clinton's last day as a private citizen was filled with celebration and reflection, last-minute preparations and final rehearsals. He spent several hours polishing his inaugural address.

Spokesman George Stephanopoulos said the speech would run about 20 minutes and sketch broad themes rather than specific policies.

After criticism of the slow pace of Clinton's appointments, Stephanopoulos said the incoming president had 110 Cabinet nominees ready to go. He also said Clinton would sign executive orders.

Aides said Clinton would create a national economic council and formalize previously announced standards of ethical conduct. Other orders are expected Friday — the 20th anniversary of the Supreme Court's landmark abortion decision — to rescind Bush administration restrictions on abortion counseling at federal clinics and lift the ban on fetal-tissue research.

Thousands of people paid between $100 and $1,000 for tickets to a presidential gala featuring such stars as Elton John, Barbara Streisand, Aretha Franklin, Chuck Berry, Judy Collins and the Alvin Ailey Dance Troupe. The rock group Fleetwood Mac reunited for the performance.

Sidewalk vendors did a brisk business selling souvenir buttons, shirts, plates and cups. Inaugural stores had waiting lines of customers.

Clinton began his day by paying solemn tribute at the graves of the two slain Kennedys. He placed a white rose at each burial site and bowed his head in silent prayer. About 20 members of the Kennedy clan joined him.

President Bush, meanwhile, held a farewell lunch with Vice President Dan Quayle and said goodbyes to his aides. Bush invited Rev. Billy Graham, who will deliver the invocation and benediction at Clinton's inauguration, for dinner and a night at the White House.

White House walls once filled with pictures of Bush stood bare, spruced up with a fresh coat of paint.

At the Capitol, stand-ins for Clinton and Vice President-elect Al Gore, with white name tags draped from their necks, went through the motions of Wednesday's ceremony at the west front of the Capitol as photographers and broadcasters checked camera angles.

man. It urged the incoming president to stop allied bombing raids and to adopt a more conciliatory approach to Iraq.

"You succeeded in the elections under the slogan of change. This means that when the American people chose you, they chose change and rejected current policies," Abdul-Jabbar Mohsen wrote in the government-run newspaper Al-Thawra. "Iraq is not an enemy of America and does not want to be."

Clinton has supported Bush's handling of the dispute.

Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams called the cease-fire offer a "helpful sign." But he said Iraq had to remove weapons that threaten allied planes over the no-fly zones, and must stop hindering U.N. weapon inspections.

Later, however, the United Nations accepted the Iraqi offer to let weapons inspection flights resume without conditions.

"We will restart our flights as soon as the commission deems it feasible," said Rolf Ekeus, the executive chairman of the U.N. Special Commission responsible for destroying Iraq's weapons of mass destruction under terms of resolutions that ended the Persian Gulf War.

The flights have been delayed for two weeks because of a series of Iraqi conditions, including a now-abandoned demand that inspectors use only Iraqi planes.

"The Special Commission flights will come in with no problems," said Iraqi Ambassador Nizar Hamdoon.

Before Iraq's announcement, the U.N. Security Council had scheduled a private meeting to discuss the situation. The U.S.-led air raids have drawn criticism from Arab states, Russia and some Western nations such as the Netherlands.

Hamdoon told reporters the cease-fire offer is a "gesture toward the new administration" and said he hopes for a "new kind of relation based on dialogue and not on military force."

explained, "The Iowa City Airport lives on these grants."

After the Feb. 9 public presentation, the commission will hold a public meeting at the Iowa City Public Library to discuss the plan on Feb. 16. A decision could be reached on the matter by the members of the city council-appointed commission as early as that meeting.

City council cooperation will also be required should the land need to be annexed. On Feb. 23, the council will decide whether to annex and commercially zone a piece of farmland for Menard's, a lumber company. If the land is zoned commercially, it would conflict with the airport zoning needed for one of the three airport relocation sites.

Blum indicated that federal funding — which could pay for more than half of the proposed project's costs — would not increase the federal budget, but that it would be taken from tax revenue normally set aside for such expenses.

Commission members expressed anticipation for the planners of Kauffman and Associates to interpret and elaborate on the different options and hope that the consultants would be able to answer their own questions on Feb. 6.

Hawks will see Rainbows in '94

HONOLULU — Iowa is the first team to commit for the 1994 Rainbow Classic basketball tournament.

Iowa also is the first to take advantage of the NCAA revision to the so-called "Hawaii exemption" that allows teams to play in Hawaii once every four years without having the games count against their 27-game limit.

The new amendment that was approved last week at the NCAA convention in Dallas allows teams to play in a University of Hawaii-sponsored tournament every four years without having a team's appearances in other tournaments in Hawaii count against them.

Hawaii officials had argued that the number of possible tournament teams was shrinking because schools had to wait for four years to come back, then maybe four more if they played in a preseason tournament or one in Alaska, since both those situations also were covered by the old exemption rule.

Hansen formalizes relationship with WHO

DES MOINES (AP) — Former NBA player Bobby Hansen is getting more involved in broadcasting.

Hansen has signed a 15-month contract with WHO stations to do color commentary on radio broadcasts of college and high school basketball games, plus weekly pieces for WHO-TV.

The former Iowa player has been doing color commentary on WHO's Iowa basketball broadcasts on a game-by-game basis this season. A contract signed Friday formalizes the relationship and extends it through next season, WHO general manager Joe Lentz said.

Hansen played with the Chicago Bulls last season. He began his pro career with the Utah Jazz, then was traded to the Sacramento Kings. The Bulls obtained him from the Kings early in the 1991-92 season. They released him last summer.

Hansen's contract would not tie him down if he gets another shot at the NBA.

NFL

Pats looking at Parcels, Ryan

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The low-achieving New England Patriots search for a high-profile coach is likely to end this week, with Buddy Ryan and Bill Parcells heading the list of candidates.

There are no indications either is being considered for the other two NFL coaching vacancies, with the New York Giants and Denver Broncos.

The Boston Herald reported Tuesday that Ryan, who coached the Philadelphia Eagles from 1986 through 1990, was "currently a heavy favorite." It described Ryan and Parcells as the leading candidates.

A coach is expected to be named by the end of the week, according to the Herald and a Patriots source.

BASEBALL

Howe being sued by own attorney

KALISPELL, Mont. (AP) — Steve Howe, a New York Yankees relief pitcher, is being sued by his lawyers for unpaid legal bills.

In a suit filed in state district court, attorneys Pat Sherlock and Stephen Erdi said Howe owed them $31,847 in fees covering their services after his December 1991 drug arrest.

They contend Howe has broken repeated promises to pay his bills. The suit seeks interest on the debt from Sept. 14.

Howe has been suspended from baseball seven times for drug or alcohol problems, but regained his eligibility each time. Howe, who had been a free agent, signed a $4.2 million, two-year contract to stay with the Yankees in December.

Chris Street

The Daily Iowan

Chris Street, a UI junior and member of the Hawkeye basketball team, was killed in a car accident Tuesday night as he returned from a team meal at the Highlander in Iowa City.

Tonight's game against Northwestern, scheduled for 7 p.m. at Carver-Hawkeye Arena, has been postponed. Saturday's game at Penn State is tentative.

Sports information director George Wine said Street, who would have been 21 on Feb. 2, was returning to campus when his car collided with a dump truck with a snow plow at about 7 p.m. on Highway 1, north of I-80.

Coach Tom Davis and his staff met with the team, which had been scheduled to practice, late into the night Tuesday.

Street, a 6-foot-8 forward from Indianola, led 14th-ranked Iowa in rebounding with 9.5 per game and was scoring 14.5 points per contest. He was named the CBS co-player of the game in Saturday's loss at Duke after he led the Hawkeyes in scoring with 14 points and grabbed eight rebounds.

Street also set the all-time Iowa record for consecutive free throws in the game at 34.

Street, who was a business major, made an early commitment to Iowa while at Indianola High School, citing fierce loyalty to the Hawkeyes. He was the Gatorade Circle of Champions player of the year and a Hoop Scoop top 90 prospect who received letters from schools all over the country. But Street had decided early to attend Iowa.

"I got a ton of letters," Street told The Daily Iowan in 1991. "But I really couldn't tell who recruited me hard because I said that I wasn't interested. I was going to Iowa."

Street was posting his best numbers as a Hawkeye this season. During the Duke game, CBS analyst Billy Packer said of Street: "There's a guy who could play in the NBA."

Dallas defensive coordinator says he's tough enough

Denne H. Freeman
Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — He has something of a temper. He's a player's coach and a master strategist.

No, the Chicago Bears didn't rehire Mike Ditka.

But they did pick a guy in the Ditka mold when they hired Dave Wannstedt, defensive coordinator of the Dallas Cowboys, as their new coach on Tuesday.

Wannstedt is an all-out competitor who has difficulty at times masking his emotions. His players love him. And there's not an offense in the NFL that has fooled him for long.

"Dave Wannstedt has come a long way and will be an outstanding coach in the NFL," best friend and Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson said. "I can remember playing racquetball with him years ago when I was an assistant coach at Pittsburgh and Dave was trying to figure out what he wanted to do. He was as tough a competitor as there was and I told him he ought to be a coach some day."

Little did Johnson realize he would be working for him. Johnson lost his good right arm when Wannstedt finally landed a job.

"It's an emotional day for me," Johnson said.

Once Chicago jumped into the bidding war for Wannstedt, who has led the Cowboys to the No. 1 defense in the NFL, the New York Giants stood little chance.

Chicago was deemed an excellent choice for Wannstedt's family and Wannstedt is a strong family man.

Wannstedt didn't want to go against Johnson twice a year in the NFC East. He knew that their friendship couldn't stand the strain.

"Dave knows me better than I know myself," Johnson said. "It wouldn't have worked."

Also, Wannstedt has a temper but not of legendary proportions like Ditka's or Johnson's for that matter.

"He's basically an even-keel guy," Johnson said. "But he does get frustrated at times like all coaches do. He'll have to learn to adjust the controls on his emotions."

Johnson said the players love to play for him because of his enthusiasm.

"The players rally around him,"

Johnson said.

"Coach Wannstedt is a great guy to play for," said defensive tackle Tony Casillas. "You know going into a game you are going to be prepared."

Wannstedt is excellent at developing players. The 1991 season opened for Dallas with six starters at the 11 positions and the Cowboys got into the playoffs.

This year, Wannstedt had a rookie middle linebacker and a rookie left corner starting for the NFL's best defense.

The Bears aren't on the Cowboys schedule next year.

So what happens when Johnson and protege Wannstedt meet?

"The master never teaches too much," Johnson said.

Ditka's successor a player's coach

Joe Mooshil
Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Chicago Bears dipped into Dallas for another hands-on, emotional coach Tuesday, picking Cowboys defensive coordinator Dave Wannstedt to replace Mike Ditka.

Ditka turned the Bears into Super Bowl champions after he came from Dallas 11 years ago, and now the Bears want Wannstedt to work the same magic. That job starts after the Cowboys play the Buffalo Bills in the Super Bowl on Jan. 31.

"It's the right opportunity and right time," the 40-year-old Wannstedt said. "I'm anxious to get to work. The only drawback is the two weeks we have to prepare for the Super Bowl."

Wannstedt has been credited with rebuilding the Cowboys' defense into the league's best; Dallas held opponents to 15.2 points and 245.8 yards per game in the regular season.

Bears president Michael McCaskey announced Wannstedt's hiring two weeks after he fired Ditka following a 5-11 season marked by the former coach's flareups with McCaskey, players and fans.

"This is a historic day for the Chicago Bears, the passing of the torch," McCaskey said at Tuesday's news conference.

Wannstedt and Ditka have similar backgrounds. Both grew up in Pennsylvania, played college football at Pittsburgh, and went to Chicago from assistant coaching jobs at Dallas.

Wannstedt's description of his coaching style is similar to Ditka's. "I'm a hands-on coach, enthusiastic, emotional. A players coach," Wannstedt said.

McCaskey took his time before firing Ditka but moved swiftly in hiring Wannstedt, who was a leading contender for the New York Giants job.

"The talks were very intense in New York," Wannstedt said. "That was as far as it really went."

He said taking the Chicago job was an easy decision.

"It all starts at the top," he said. See WANNSTEDT, Page 2B

WANNSTEDT: In mold of Ditka

 "You surround yourself with people who are committed. After several meetings with Mike, I feel comfortable, and I'm very excited about the direction that the Chicago Bears will take in the '90s."
 McCaskey declined to give specifics on Wannstedt's "multi-year" contract.
 Wannstedt won't discuss his plans for hiring assistants until after the Super Bowl, although Cowboys offensive line coach Tony Wise, a close friend, could also be headed to Chicago. Wise won't comment until after the Super Bowl.
 "I need the respect and like to have good rapport with players," Wannstedt said. "I know the Bears are very talented, but you always look in all areas for improvement."

 Wannstedt followed Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson from the University of Miami in 1989. The Cowboys were 1-15 that season but improved to 7-9 in 1990, 11-5 in 1991 and 15-3 this season, including playoff wins against Philadelphia and San Francisco.
 "I'm sure some of the fans will wonder if I'm tough enough to be in Chicago," Wannstedt said. "I'm tough enough and I'm looking forward to the challenge."

 Johnson has nothing but praise for Wannstedt, who has also served as assistant head coach since last January.
 "Dave Wannstedt and I have been together 16 years, and we're extremely close personal friends," Johnson said last week. "He will do an outstanding job. He's a tremendous coach and the players love to play for him. We will miss him."
 Wannstedt played offensive tackle for Pitt from 1970-1973, serving as captain of the 1973 Panthers. Chosen in the 16th round of the 1974 entry draft by the Green Bay Packers, Wannstedt spent his only season on injured reserve.

 During Wannstedt's tenure as defensive coordinator at Miami from 1986-88, the Hurricanes held the opposition to 2.2 yards per carry and 10.9 points a game. Under Wannstedt, the Miami defense produced six All-Americans and 11 NFL draft picks, including five in the first two rounds.
 Ditka built a lowly Bears organization into Super Bowl champions in 1986 but was never able to duplicate the feat despite four more trips to the playoffs.

Barkley forced to wait for fate

Hal Bock
Associated Press
NEW YORK — Charles Barkley will have to wait another day to hear what the price of his latest breach of the NBA's behavior code will be: a fine, a suspension, or both.

Rod Thorn, the league's vice president of operations and dean of discipline, deferred any action Tuesday after Barkley's post-game tirade and pursuit of official Jim Clark following Phoenix's 106-103 loss to the New York Knicks on Monday.

Barkley vaulted over the scorer's table to chase after Clark at the end of the game. Perturbed by calls all game long, he complained loudly that he had been fouled by Anthony Mason on a last-gasp 3-point shot that turned into an airball. When Clark warned that the outburst would cost him money, Barkley went wild.

Teammate Tim Kempton tried to restrain him but Barkley was having none of that, stepping onto and then leaping off the sideline table as he chased after Clark. He did not quite clear the obstacle, knocking out the courtside computer scoring system as he bounded toward the exit ramp. It did not interfere with his pursuit of Clark.

He never did catch the official, who was blocked by Madison Square Garden security. It was probably a good thing — for everyone concerned. When he was asked if he intended bodily harm to the man in the striped shirt, Barkley said, "Are you serious?"

All he wanted was a few words. His play-by-play of the episode was matter-of-fact.

"I told him he called a bad game, that they called a bad game, him and his buddies," Barkley said. "He told me, 'That's going to cost you money.'"

At that point, Barkley said he lost it.

"I went off on that," he said. "Don't threaten me with money. You can't control me with money."

Not that the league hasn't tried to before.

Last season, when he was with Philadelphia, Barkley was fined $10,000 and suspended for one game for spitting at a fan. In 1990, he paid $39,000 in fines, including a $20,000 charge for a fight with Detroit's Bill Laimbeer and another $5,000 for a running bet he had with Mark Jackson, then with the New York Knicks, over who would make big plays in games between the two teams. The year before, his fines totaled $45,000.

A year ago, Thorn reflected on Barkley's continuing conduct problems. "It seems that with Charles, it's a continuing thing," he said. "It just keeps happening. He's just got to cut it out."

And that was before Thorn nailed him with the $10,000 fine for the spitting affair.

SUPER BOWL XXVII

Buffalo opting for the silent approach

John F. Bonfatti
Associated Press

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — The Buffalo Bills will try anything to change their Super Bowl luck — even the silent approach.

Unlike past seasons, when their penchant for speaking first and thinking later got them in trouble, the Bills are allowing others to talk while they concentrate on winning.

The Bills, losers of the last two Super Bowls, said trash talk by playoff opponents Houston, Pittsburgh and Miami helped motivate them on their path to a Super Bowl matchup against Dallas on Jan. 31.

"We learned a lot last year in the Super Bowl," nose tackle Jeff Wright said, referring to the Bills' 37-24 loss to Washington. "You can't talk a good game. You've got to show up. Maybe we talked too much and didn't show up."

Last year, several Bills popped off during the week leading up to their game against the Redskins. Defensive end Bruce Smith was angered by hate mail he termed "racist," running back Thurman Thomas crusaded for more respect, tight end Butch Rolle complained about lack of playing time and defensive end Leon Seals wanted out of Buffalo.

Maybe the talk had no impact on the game, but the Bills say they've learned it's wiser to remain silent. "I think experience helps, and maturity, and that's what's happened here," center Kent Hull said after the Bills' 29-10 win over the Dolphins in the AFC championship.

It was the Dolphins' bad-mouthing of the Bills that pumped up Buffalo.

"The guys who were doing the talking — Louis Oliver, Bryan Cox, Marco Coleman — these are young guys," Thomas said. "They-

Associated Press

With a 96-yard rushing effort against the Dolphins in the AFC Championship, Buffalo's Thurman Thomas isn't likely to be complaining about a lack of minutes this time around in preparation for Super Bowl XXVII.

"We've got to be more careful what they say because if you say stuff about an individual or an organization or a team... all it does is motivate the players and that's exactly what it did for us."

Added Jim Kelly: "You look at our ballclub, we've been through it so many times. I know there were a few times where we might have been doing the talking, but the Dolphins are young. They'll learn."

Ken Davis said the Bills have learned — "the hard way over a number of years. You can't talk about what you've got to do. You've got to do it."

"I think we're more mature overall," Davis said. "We know what to expect so you're kind of more low-key about things."

Hull said the Bills will use past Super Bowl winners as examples.

"I thought the Giants were a class act. I thought the Redskins were a class act," he said. "Not to say that we weren't, but I just felt they handled themselves very well. There's no reason for the quality of people that we have on this team that we can't be a class organization." Coach Marv Levy has long stressed to his players that they refrain from making provocative statements.

"I think they've learned, unfortunately, to be much more vanilla in their dealings with the press and public," Levy said. "I think if they're too forthcoming, it comes back to haunt them. And I think they've learned that. I think it's essential that they learn that."

Smith said the Cowboys talk but "their talk is much different from some other players' talk, such as maybe Oliver. When they do talk, they talk with respect for the opposing team and at the same time, they like to compliment themselves. There's nothing wrong with that."

Levy said his players have "handled themselves magnificently" during the playoffs. Still, he had some advice regarding Super Bowl pronouncements.

"I told them to let their playing do their talking, don't let their talking do the playing," he said. "You look awfully foolish if you talk big and don't deliver."

Johnson happy with Bears' choice

Denne H. Freeman
Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — Jimmy Johnson was glad Chicago hired his best friend Dave Wannstedt and he needed to have it done Tuesday before distractions crippled the Dallas Cowboys' Super Bowl preparations.

"I'm proud and happy for Dave," the Cowboy's coach said. "We've been around each other off and on for 16 years and this is an emotional time for Dave and myself. He will do an outstanding job."

Johnson said he gave Wannstedt permission to pursue the Bears job "because I didn't want him to wait until after the Super Bowl. Once he relayed to me which way he wanted to go, I wanted it done the first day."

"My mind was on the inevitable. It was inevitable that he would become a head coach and when it became obvious he would be I wanted it done."

Johnson said he knew it was unusual for an assistant to be allowed to chase a coaching job in the middle of Super Bowl preparations.

"We haven't always followed the accepted pattern around here," Johnson said. "I knew Dave had a career and a family to think about. I've had to adjust my staff before but of course this will be tougher." Wannstedt will stay on with the Cowboys through the Super Bowl and Johnson will name a new defensive coordinator later. It was expected to be either line coach Butch Davis or secondary coach Dave Campo.

Offensive line coach Tony Wise could be going with Wannstedt to Chicago but won't comment on it until after the Super Bowl against Buffalo on Jan. 31.

In fact, Johnson said that scenario might have severely tested their friendship.

"I wanted Dave to go where he would have been happy and New York would have been fine," Johnson said. "But looking back at it, our relationship would have deteriorated if he had been in our division. He is one person who understands me probably better than I understand myself. I think our relationship would have diminished."

Johnson gave the players Tuesday and Wednesday off.

"Once Dave gets back here we're talking Buffalo, no more Chicago talk," Johnson said. "We've got to get all of our hard work done here. We've got to get in our game plan. We've heard at the Super Bowl there are more distractions than you ever imagined. That's why we want to put everything in this week. We may add a few wrinkles next week but we want the game plan down."

Dallas linebacker Ken Norton said, "We'll miss Dave next year and whoever replaces him has some big shoes to fill. He has set the standard and his system is in place and I think it can still be successful."

"We know coach Wannstedt will be successful and we'd be surprised if he was anything else."

Wise and Wannstedt are very close. They even do a radio hamburger commercial together in Dallas.

"That's something we can discuss after we play Buffalo," Wise said. "I haven't talked with anyone about going anywhere."

While the New York Giants also were after Wannstedt, it became apparent that he wasn't going to accept a job in the same NFC East division with the Cowboys.

BACK TO THE DRAWING BOARD

'Maus' serves as textbook and comic book

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

Welcome back. It's the beginning of yet another semester, and once again time for the obligatory half-dozen trips to Long Line Hell at the University Book Store. But while you're fighting the crowds to get to that last copy of a needed textbook, you might take the chance to pick up something fun to read between cram sessions. The University Book Store's collection of graphic literature is small and eclectic, but well worth a look.

The best of the lot is being used as a textbook for Rhetoric and Interpretation of Literature — Art Spiegelman's two "Maus: A Survivor's Tale" books (Pantheon Books, $12 each, $9 used). Partially from Spiegelman's perspective, partially narrated by his father Vladek, they present the story of Vladek's experiences with the Holocaust, from the first coming of the Nazis to imprisonment in Auschwitz to the end and aftermath of World War II. Spiegelman's somewhat minimalist line art portrays the Jews as mice, the Nazis as cats.

The book is a rich mix of painful history, Spiegelman's reactions both to his father and his own work on "Maus," humor and bitterness. It's an unflinching biography and autobiography of two generations' reactions to one of the most horrible events of this century.

To avoid leaving students without books they need for class, it would be polite to wait until later in the

Art Spiegelman/Pantheon Books

Art Spiegelman's two "Maus: A Survivor's Tale" books, which tell the story of one Jewish man's experience in World War II and Auschwitz, portrays Jews as mice and Germans as cats. It's one of several graphic works available at the University Book Store.

semester before buying these — but do buy them. (Or borrow them from a friend taking rhetoric. Or check them out of the Iowa City Public Library.) They're worth looking into for a number of reasons; they were major contributors to the growing acceptance of graphic works as actual literature, they tell an important story in a format anyone can understand, and they're extremely well-written and entertaining.

But wait, there's more. For the Trekkie herd, the bookstore sports a collection of Star Trek books, including the "Debt of Honor" graphic novel (DC Comics, $14.95, 96 pages) by old "X-men" hand Chris Claremont, in which Jim Kirk teams up with Klingons and Romulans to fight toothy critters straight out of "Alien," and "The Best of Star Trek" trade paperback (DC Comics, $19.95, 240 pages), a collection of some of the better issues of DC's "Star Trek" comic.

Also of interest to science-fiction fans is the "Ray Bradbury Chronicles" series (Bantam Books, three 80-page volumes, $10 each), in which Bradbury's short stories are adapted in a number of styles by different artists. Of special note are the contributions of "Watchmen" and "Give Me Liberty" artist Dave Gibbons (in "Come Into My Cellar", book two) and "Hell-raiser" artist John Van Fleet's beautiful work in "Dark They Were, and Golden-Eyed" (book one).

But the best deals take some hunting. Graphic novels and comic collections occasionally show up on the bargain tables; I picked up a copy of the Michael Saenz/Peter Gillis 1982 graphic novel "Shatter" for $2.98 earlier this week. "Shatter" is worth a look if you can find it. The convoluted cyberpunk plotline balances out stiff dialogue and overdone characterizations. There's also a certain novelty value involved — the entire book was drawn and lettered on a Macintosh, using MacPaint. The art's fairly good despite the older technology, though use of a nondot-matrix printer would have helped considerably.

The University Book Store isn't a comics shop by any means. But if you're a student, you're likely to be spending some time there this week. Take the chance to pick up something you want to read — it'll at least give you something to do while waiting in that line.

Tasha Robinson's column on comics, animation, and the graphic medium runs Wednesdays in the Arts & Entertainment section. Next week: The Vertigo debut.

Love Songs For the Hearing Impaired (Def American) — Dan Baird.

Every once in a while, it's nice to be reminded that rock 'n' roll can be a very simple art — a few chords, a leering sense of humor and some people who like to make a lot of noise.

Dan Baird, late of the Georgia Satellites (remember "Keep Your Hands to Yourself"?), offers up his solo debut, Love Songs For the Hearing Impaired, that's a rip-snortin' album of good-time rock 'n' roll.

'Alive' about human spirit, not cannibalism

Sonja West
The Daily Iowan

There's more to the film "Alive" than watching some people eat dead people.

Although the commercials for "Alive" would like to make you think that cannibalism is the entire plot, climax and purpose for the film, it is actually a movie about human endurance and survival.

"Alive" is based on the true story of a team of college rugby players en route from Uruguay to Chile in 1972. Due to bad weather, their plane crashes somewhere in the Andes Mountains, killing most of the crew and several passengers. At first the crash scenes may seem unrealistic, but then again what does a plane really look like after the wings and tail have been torn off?

It is in this sad piece of wreckage, in the middle of nothing but vast whiteness, that the majority of the film takes place. With such a limited set it sounds like the film could easily turn dull, but it doesn't.

The characters go through several immediate reactions to the crisis. Some take the initiative and help the wounded — doing what needs to be done. Others go into shock, and some become hostile. Only a few cry. Several more die.

The dwindling number of survivors then begin their wait to be rescued. A wait that turns from being horrifying to unbearable to unthinkable to impossible.

The different characters in "Alive" never really become distinguished from one another. They all have names like Nando, Antonio, Roberto, Gustavo, Federico and Alberto. Although a few individuals do stand out as "the insane mechanic guy" or "the guy who looks like Dave Barry," the characters are seen mostly as a team of people trying to survive together.

The celebrated cannibalism scenes luckily do not live up to all of the hype. They eat their dead quickly within the first half of the movie, discuss it a bit and then never really mention it again.

Based on the book of the same name by Piers Paul Read, the plot to "Alive" is not one normally seen in the theater, but the type of story usually spit out as another tragedy-of-the-week, made-for-TV movie.

Despite the grizzly topic of "Alive," it is not without its light moments. Occasionally the victims joke about their situation, "No, I insist. I'll pay for the pizza. You go and get it."

The issue of religion is also loosely woven throughout the film. Coming from a largely Catholic background, the survivors at first pray for the dead, but eventually they pray for the living.

Based on the book of the same name by Piers Paul Read, the plot to "Alive" is not one normally seen in the theater, but the type of story usually spit out as another tragedy-of-the-week, made-for-TV movie. It worked much better as a film which is supposedly accurate. One of the real survivors, Nando Parrado, worked on the film as a consultant overseeing details such as the exact brand of cigarettes they smoked and the same color of clothes worn by the victims.

"Alive" is not a horror film about people attacking corpses like ravenous dogs, but a decently-produced portrayal of how a few real people overcame unreal odds.

THEATER

Terminal Tower a winner

The play is a finalist in the American College Theater Festival.

Michelle-Therese Forcier The Daily Iowan

Ah, the good old days, when women were dames and men took care of the business. That's the crime business.

Peter Ullian, a graduate student in the Iowa Playwrights Workshop, captured the essence of the 1930s era in his play, "In the Shadow of the Terminal Tower."

"Terminal Tower" was one of the best productions of the UI Theatre had in the fall semester of 1992. Anything ranked among the best at the UI cannot help but be recognized, at least regionally, as was this play. The play was a winner in the 1992-93 competition of the American College Theatre Festival and will compete against five other plays, chosen among 120 entries in the Midwest.

If the "Terminal Tower" wins at the regional competition in Minneapolis, it will be produced in the national ACTF showcase this spring at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C.

The play revolves around Elliot Ness (of "The Untouchables") in his post-Al Capone days, as he strives to stay in the public spotlight by taking a position as public safety commissioner in Cleveland's derelict and crime-ridden streets.

Ness faces his worst nightmare, not living up to his public image, when he repeatedly fails to catch a serial killer whose prey are the homeless of Cleveland. Ness is also haunted by the spirit of Al Capone, who is somehow now a part of Ness' psyche. Although the plot is thick with murder and intrigue, Ullian keeps it light and enjoyable with dark comedy and Depression-era music.
