Soul Asylum to play at the Union

The band Soul Asylum will transform the Union into a "Grave Dancers Union" Sunday, March 7 as they headline a Jam and SCOPE production in the Main Lounge, which will also feature the Goo Goo Dolls and another band to be announced.

Grave Dancers Union is Soul Asylum's debut album for Columbia Records, which includes the single "Somebody to Shove."

Musician magazine described Soul Asylum's music as "funky, ragged-at-the edges rock 'n' roll." The Village Voice once called this Minneapolis product the "best live band in America."

Tickets, which are priced at $15, will go on sale at the Union Box Office and Ticketmaster outlets at 10 a.m. Feb. 12.

Patient's widow files suit against UIHC

The wife of a Cedar Rapids man who died due to complications from Hepatitis C has filed a negligence suit against the UI Hospitals and Clinics.

Three months after John Girsch underwent a kidney and pancreas transplant in December 1989, he developed symptoms of Hepatitis C. The suit claims he was infected with the disease by way of a blood transfusion administered during the transplant surgery.

Court documents indicate that Girsch's family had requested that he be given a direct designated transfusion but UIHC treating staff and administrative health care personnel denied them that option.

Girsch's wife Susan is seeking compensation for her late husband's lost wages and the mental anguish caused by his untimely

It wasn't quite as bad as the frat house blaze in "Revenge of the Nerds," but an apparent electrical fire Tuesday afternoon at the UI Sigma Nu fraternity meant three of its members will have to find another place to crash for a while.

The fire, which resulted in an estimated $20,000 in smoke and water damage, was confined to a third-floor room and was probably caused by a lamp that fell onto a couch, which then caught on fire, according to Iowa City firefighter Dale Miller, who inspected the scene at 630 N. Dubuque St.

Two firefighters were taken to Mercy Hospital and treated for minor injuries. The Iowa City Fire Department received a call at 12:39 p.m. that a fire had broken out in the southwest corner on the top floor of the house. Firefighters extinguished the blaze within 10 minutes after arriving, officials said.

Traffic was rerouted along a three-block area in front of the house on Dubuque Street for part of the afternoon as firefighters sprayed water and knocked out windows of the room. Kevin Jansen, president of the fraternity, said the damage was limited to only the one room. "It's not that big of a deal," he said. "We're looking to get things right back to normal."

The occupants evacuated the house soon after the fire started, Sigma Nu Chapter Adviser Scott

Anderson said. "The alarms went off, everyone went to the fire extinguishers and opened doors, and then left," he

Clark guilty of violation, allowed to remain on ballot

Ion Yates

The Daily Iowan

UI Student Association presidential candidate Michael B. Clark has been found guilty of violating student election codes, but will be allowed to remain on the ballot, a spokeswoman for the Student Elections Board said Tuesday.

Kari Susens, adviser to the SEB, said the five-member board deliberated for two nights before finding Clark in violation of section 17.3 of the student election campaign rules, which states that campaigning includes the distribution of written information.

The SEB's ruling came after several students filed charges against Clark during the week of Jan. 25-30, claiming that a letter he sent on Dec. 28 to potential campaign contributors violated campaign rules, which state that candidates can only campaign after Feb.

According to Susens, the board has decided to keep Clark's $100 bond, which all candidates are required to pay in order to run for UISA president and is normally returned to the candidates after the election. In addition, Clark has been told he cannot spend more than $500 for his campaign, one-fourth of the total allowed presidential candidates under campaign rules. In an interview Tuesday morning, Clark said he still believes his actions did not violate elections codes and that he has appealed the SEB's ruling.

"I think it's an injustice," he said. "Any time you censor someone's personal correspondence it's a violation of a person's First Amendment Rights." The SEB will now have seven working days to rule on Clark's appeal, which he said was filed on Monday morning. Susens said the board first heard testimony from Clark last Tuesday, notified of the decision last Friday. "We felt that this violation gave him an unfair advantage resulting in an unequitable election," Susens said of the ruling. "It was a difficult decision on what to do." A letter signed by two candidates opposing Clark for UISA president asking the SEB to allow Clark to run despite the violation weighed heavily in the board's decision, Susens said.

Two parts of the investigation remain open at this point -Clark's appeal and an investigation into whether the letter was sent to students, which Clark denied, Susens said.

PROCEDURAL PROBLEMS EXIST

Gay video deemed artistic, not pornographic by officials

The UI administration determined Tuesday that a videotape presented in the School of Art and Art History was artistic, not pornographic. But the officials also found some problems regarding the presentation procedure in the class, according to Ann Rhodes, UI vice president for University Relations.

"Substantively, the use of this material in this particular class was appropriate within a context of the artwork," she said.

"But procedurally we have some problems. Students should have been warned about the content of the material beforehand," Rhodes continued. "Since the class requires attendance, some students felt they could not leave the class even if they found the material to be offensive

UI Teaching Assistant Megan O'Connell, who asked a UI graduate student to speak in her art class, is expected to apologize to the class Friday for her procedure in allowing the artworks to be voiced a complaint last Friday, said although she still doesn't agree that the presentation was artistic, she will accept the apology. "I expect in the future no one should be forced to watch something like that in a classroom at the University of Iowa," Chase said. "I think people shouldn't put up with it."

As for the contents of class, the UI respects independence and good judgments of faculty members and TAs, Rhodes said.

"We're not going to say that you cannot use a certain kind of material in the classroom," she said. "Under any circumstances, we rely on the judgments of faculty members in determining what is See VIDEO, Page 10A

BEBOP PROGRAM

Local DI entertains listeners with jazz

Tory Brecht The Daily Iowan

Iowa City jazz junkies have turned to WSUI's Jim Dougherty for over 20 years to get their overnight fix of smooth tunes. His midnight to 5 a.m. show, "Jazz and Jim," is the only music program on the station and his voice has been on the Iowa City airwaves since December of Dougherty's mission is to educate and entertain listeners through his extensive collection of jazz LPs, 78s and compact discs.

"I try to offer a background to young jazz fans," he said. "I can afford an opportunity for them to hear some of the origins of what they're listening to now.

Despite the longevity of his program and the positive listener response he garners, Dougherty is not yet ready to call himself a radio legend.

"I know that what I'm doing here isn't brain surgery," he said. "But I feel that if I can entertain somebody or keep them company, then I feel I've been of some Dougherty's love of jazz has been a lifelong affair. He was introduced to the music when he was five by his older brother, who was a trombone player in a big band

A visit to WSUI in 1943 as a child confirmed Dougherty's interest in music and radio.

"At this time it wasn't easy to get into a radio station because of the war," he said. "But the students I saw doing the program would come up with clever introductions to songs, then point to the engineer who would play the record and I thought this was really great."

Although Dougherty often interrupted his family's listening schedule, they continued to encourage him. He landed his first radio spot as a guest disc jockey at age 13 on KXGI in Fort Madison. Soon after that, he began his paid career as a radio man in Muscatine. He was hired by KWPC-FM (now KFMH) to work after school, at night and on weekends as a disc jockey when

"After they offered me the job, the first thing I said when I got off the phone was, 'can you imagine doing such a big thing about doing his that, and getting paid for doing

Dougherty, who claims that once radio is in the blood you can never get rid of it, maintains that he would still do the show for free.

He even enjoys the odd hours and solitude. Every night he rushes around the small studio cuing news tape, checking The Associated Press wire, and checking the pretaped program on KSUI-FM which shares the studio - all while trying to put together his Dougherty has met and interviewed such jazz greats as Ella Fitzgerald, Count Basie, Stan Kenton and Benny Goodman. One encounter in particular sparks memories for him. "Meeting Duke Ellington was a thrill. I asked him if he liked to be adressed as Dr. Ellington, because he had an honorary Ph.D. He said, 'My friends call me Duke, so I expect you to call me Duke.'

"The first two jazz celebrities I met, Cannonball and Nat Adderly, said in reference to my show, Who would ever believe, here in mid-America, that we'd hear all this great jazz?"

But as long as "Jazz and Jim" is on the air, you'd better believe it.

OWI arrests continue to increase in IC area

Thomas Wanat The Daily Iowan

Editor's note: This is the second in a series of three articles about alcohol- and drug-related offenses and their consequences.

Chances are you know how to get out of jail in the game Monopoly, but how about in the game of real

The most common charges that UI students get arrested for and brought to jail on each week are usually associated with alcohol and drugs, yet most students have only Hollywood ideas as to what will happen to them after the Operating while intoxicated, or OWI, (one of the favorite targets of public service announcements in recent years) continues to be the charge people are most often arrested for in the Iowa City area.

Lt. Matt Johnson of the Iowa City

Police Department said he has seen the number of OWI arrests go up every one of the last four years. "I think there are a number of reasons for that. We're certainly better at screening people and we're able to catch more people at earlier levels of intoxication nowadays," Johnson said.

Some people may have grown numb to the "don't drink and drive" message, he added.

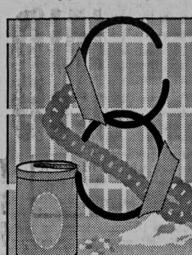

"It's kind of a catch-22," Johnson said. "When people start drinking the first thing to go is their judgment. Then they think that they're armor-plated, that their awareness is heightened and that they won't et caught." But they do.

patrol officers even though they Lt. David Wagner, administrator of the Johnson County Jail, said they had seven people brought in for OWI last Friday alone.

The tell-tale sign that a driver is drunk, according to Sgt. Craig Lihs of the Iowa City Police Depart-ment, is when they are weaving out of their lanes.

"They don't usually stay between the lines and sometimes we catch them simply because they have a taillight burned out," Lihs said. "Another sure clue is if they are driving around with their lights off at night. Drunks seem to forget things like that." After someone is pulled over the police can ask the driver to perform a series of sobriety tests along with offering the option to take a preli-minary breath test, or PBT. The

"A .1 blood-alcohol level or above means that you are under the influence according to the state of Iowa," Johnson said. "Even though it has been shown that significant deterioration of reflexes occurs at a .05 content."

Lihs explained that regardless of the condition of the driver, any passangers in the car are free to

"Even if they are intoxicated we can't charge them with public intoxication because the interior of the car is not considered a public place," Lihs said. "We will call them a cab or one of them can drive if the driver permits it and they pass a mandatory PBT test."

However, it is illegal for passen-gers to consume alcohol or have an open container of alcohol inside the car, Lihs said, adding that it is possible for the police to search the

"We sometimes see passengers in the car stuffing things under seats as we pull up behind them," Lihs said. "That's a sure indication something was going on."

The car won't be towed as long as it can be parked safely, he added.

Wagner explained that anyone arrested in Iowa City, Coralville, on campus or anywhere else in Johnson County would be brought to the Johnson County Jail at 511 S. Capitol St.

After a short elevator ride up to the second floor, a subject would be unhandcuffed and asked to put their hands against the brick wall so they could be frisked immediately for any possible weapons, Wagner explained.

"Anything that we think that could be used as a weapon we try to secure off of the person at this time," he said. "People brought in for public intoxication also have the right to an immediate breath

He explained that people charged with OWI would then be taken down to the "OWI room."

"People charged with OWI aren't really our prisoner until the arresting officer is done with the process and paperwork down in this room," Wagner said.

The room is home to an ominouslooking black machine with one flexible plastic hose coming out of it. On the front of the machine are a few dials and the name "Intoxil-

"Once the officer goes through the calibration of the machine they have the subject blow into this tube," Wagner said.

Wagner explained that the machine prints out the results of the calibration and other diagnostic tests along with the subject's blood-alcohol results for court pur-

Johnson said no subject would ever be forced to take the Intoxilizer

"We can't even recommend that they take it," Johnson said. "That would be giving them legal advice and we can't do that. "However the pitfall of not taking the test is that you have your driving privileges revoked for 240 days instead of the 180 days you'd get if you're found to have over a .1

FACULTY COUNCIL MEETS

Committee to assess improvement

Brad Hahn

The Daily Iowan

As part of the UI's continuing mission to improve undergraduate education and satisfy the Iowa state Board of Regents, a new committee has been formed to define final benchmark statements for the UI Report on Instructional Improvement.

The statements are to provide evaluation checkpoints in the improvement of instruction at the UI. Preliminary benchmarks had been drawn up by another committee earlier this year and presented to the regents at their December meeting. At that time, the regents gave the UI a year to complete final statements.

the new committee by UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Peter Nathan at Tuesday's Faculty Council meeting.

The new committee will start from scratch, disregarding the earlier checkpoints presented to the regents.

"This faculty committee will be working very closely with the appropriate faculty groups in the colleges," Nathan said. "We'll have a set of goal statements that truly reflect a consensus among the faculty."

Squire said the benchmark statements are important because they measure the effectiveness of each UI college's effort.

"There's a task to do and I think not only does it have to be done, Christopher Squier of the School of but I think some good may come Dentistry was named chairman of out of it," Squire said. "The implementation plans of the colleges will not mean very much without some sort of assessment, evaluation or benchmark process." He said there are three phases to evaluation of the UI: the incoming-student, instruction and graduates. "The basic question I think we have to ask is what do we do with what we get here? For our incoming student, what kind of student do we turn out? " Squire said.

Richard Hurtig, who serves on the Education Policy Committee, said the colleges have been in a constant state of having to react to plans. In order for Instructional Improvement to work, he said, faculty need to play a large role.

"I think we're going to have to move from the reactive state . . . toimplementation plans and I think that can only come from the colleges," he said.

ADDRESSING DIFFERENCES

Professor discusses developing ties between Jews, African-Americans

Terry Collins The Daily Iowan

Coming together to work on common problems was one of the themes writer and Professor Julius Lester addressed Tuesday evening in his speech titled "Blacks and Jews in American History.

Lester, the author of 19 books and past winner of The New York Times Outstanding Book Award, touched upon the needs of African-Americans and Jews working together. "It's not about politics, but the lives we live and if those aren't respected then there is a problem," he said.

Lester noted that African-American and Jews have had serious differences citing, "agreement is not a prerequisite, but understanding each other is necessary . . listening to each other is a key ingredient."

Lester said that the histories of pening again. both races began in slavery and both have been subjected to negative stereotypes associated with the devil. He said Jews are able to refer back to Israel, whereas African-Americans talk about living in America as a diaspora. "I can think of no two people who have been condemned by the

As the lecture progressed, Lester compared African-American comedian Richard Pryor to Jewish comic Lenny Bruce, who both use their oppressive plights in their work. They could've been brothers," Lester said.

In describing the differences between the races, Lester said the state of black America has been going under a drastic change since the Emancipation Proclaimation. He also pointed out that last year's Los Angeles riots were due to the city's fragile intra-structure, suggesting that it is capable of hap-

On the topic of prejudice between the races, Lester said if African-Americans are interested in ending racism, then they must end antisemitism. He blames African-American leaders because antisemitism comes out their refusal to believe that Jews faced oppression.

A matter of respect is needed for people to be perceived as who they are as individuals and how they want to be treated, he added.

He added that such alliances as African-American churches and synagogues in major cities are perfect examples of the two groups coming together. "We should enlarge our visions to come

City Council, Airport Commission hear final feasibility study results

Timothy Connors The Daily Iowan

Consultant Steve Benson told Iowa City officials that the municipal airport must be modified to receive any future Federal Aviation Administration grants and recommended two of the six options of the Airport Relocation Feasibility Study prepared by his firm, the Kansas City-based Coff-

Benson presented the finalized feasibility study to a joint meeting of the Iowa City City Council and Airport Commission Tuesday night at the Iowa City Civic calling for the relocation of the Iowa City Airport to a site just outside the southeastern city limits adjacent to Highway 6. The other recommended option called for altering the present airport, moving two runways and shortening the other.

Benson recommended one option

Figures for the two options in the feasibility study have estimated the total cost of moving the airport to be $15.7 million, substantially more than the other estimated $10.9 million needed to alter the airport.

However, considering revenue from selling the current airport property - possible in the relocation option — the feasibility study estimates the city could option while renovation could cost $1.1 million.

Councilor Randy Larson pressed Benson on whether he was sure the FAA would require the airport to alter its facilities before awarding the airport future

"I'm not spending any money until I'm told that," Larson said.

Benson said he could not guarantee the FAA would not award the airport future grants, because the federal agency considers rule waivers for facilities not meeting its standards on a case-by-case

Real estate values increase in U.S.

John D. McClain Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Homeowners in many areas of the nation saw their real estate values appreciate during the October-December quarter as low mortgage rates and rising consumer confidence fueled housing demand, a real estate trade group said today.

Homeowners in Midwestern and Southern markets found the prices of their homes rising 5.5 percent and 4.3 percent, respectively, according to a National Association of Realtors survey of 125 metropolitan areas.

Other markets posting price increases were found in the Northwest and in some areas of the Northeast. But the aftereffects of the recession pushed prices in the Northeast down a whole 0.8 per-

The West suffered a 1.1 percent drop because of the drag of many markets in California, where the economy continued to struggle.

Both first-time and trade-up buyers participated in the fourthquarter boom, Realtors President William Chee said. The Realtors found double-digit sales increases in 39 states in the fourth quarter.

"Consumers have started feeling more confident about buying big-ticket items," Chee added. "We're seeing a lot of pent-up demand being absorbed. People are coming out of the woodwork.

Eighteen metropolitan areas, most of which were less expensive, recorded double-digit price gains between the fourth quarter of 1991 and the same period of 1992.

The Richland-Kennewick-Pasco counties of Washington state recorded the largest median price increase, a 26.1 percent jump to $94,700. Oklahoma City had a 18.3 percent increase, to $67,200, and Spokane, Wash., 18.1 percent, to

"If true theatre occurs when the human condition is illuminated, then theatre of the highest order emerges here."

The national median price wa $103,400, 4.3 percent above that of a year earlier. Sixty-three areas posted price gains exceeding the national increase. The median price means half of the homes cost more and half cost less.

Prices for the single-family detached and attached previously owned homes ranged from $352,000 in Honolulu, a 5.1 percent gain, to $49,400 in Waterloo-Cedar Falls, Iowa, a 12 percent

The Midwest continue be the region with the strong verall residential real estate market Realtors economist John Tuccillo said. Six cities posted double-digit price increases, including a 15.1 percent advance to $82,400 in Akron, Ohio.

In addition to Oklahoma City, Tuccillo said several other Oil Patch areas of the South experienced high price increases.

Ethics committee looks to revise law

Mike Glover

Associated Press

DES MOINES - The House Ethics Committee has quietly renewed debate over establishing an independent commission to enforce a new ethics law.

Committee members are discussing a smaller version of that commission to meet objections to costs that doomed the plan last year.

"It would be a first step," said Rep. Dorothy Carpenter, R-West Des Moines, head of the Ethics

Carpenter's committee last week recommended relatively minor revisions to the ethics law, but it continues to meet to find ways of refining the law.

On Tuesday, the issue of an independent enforcement commission surfaced again.

Under the latest proposal, such a commission would oversee only the executive branch of government. Local officials and legislative ethics would be handled separately.

"I need to know more," Carpenter said. "It is a very interesting

The ethics law, written in the wake of the Iowa Trust Fund scandal, was modeled on a recommendation from a bipartisan commission created by the Legislature. But legislators decided to drop the idea of an independent commission to enforce the law, though that was considered a key point.

Those opposing such a commission said it would be expensive and establish a new bureaucracy. They also said it would infringe on the rights of the Legislature to enforce its own ethics.

The latest proposal would have ethics issues in the executive branch enforced by the Campaign Finance Disclosure Commission.

Parts of the ethics law cover local officials. The committee on Tuesday agreed to make it clear in the revision that local prosecutors would be responsible for enforcing

DES OINES — Most of the governor ts that invested in the eleaguered Iowa Trust Fund will share this week in a $7.1 million settlement of a California claim, the state attorney general's office said Tuesday.

It will be the first time in more than a year that money has been returned to the cities, counties and government agencies that are trying to recover more than $75 million missing from their investment accounts.

But there will be a delay in plans to return $4 million from a settlement of negligence claims with the Iowa Trust's Des Moines banker. Iowa District Judge Michael Streit has set a Feb. 19 hearing on new objections to the Bankers Trust Co.

Polk County has questioned the timing of the settlement, saying it would be prudent to wait to see how big of a loss the Iowa Trust will suffer before putting a limit on the liability of its banker. Marshalltown wants provisions for more recoveries from the bank.

Both Marshalltown and Polk County are subject to claims for recoveries by the Iowa Trust. A bigger settlement would reduce their liability for any share in fund

Streit earlier had tentatively approved the $4 million settlement with Bankers Trust, which has denied wrongdoing. The judge has said it could be years before all claims are settled and that investors are likely to wind up losing

But Streit also had ordered negotiators to revise the wording of the settlement, and the hearing next week will deal with objections to the amended agreement.

Earlier, the court-appointed receiver for the Iowa Trust -Insurance Commissioner David Lyons - had been considering distributing the proceeds of both the California and Bankers Trust settlements at the same time.

Rather than wait for the hearing, Lyons will distribute the California settlement as early as Wednesday "or no later than Friday," said Bill Roach of the attorney general's office, a spokesman for the

The Iowa Trust pooled the idle cash of 88 cities, counties and government entities for investment with an Irvine, Calif., investment firm owned by Steven D. Wymer. Wymer has since admitted taking more than $100 million from his clients in Iowa and other states.

The proposal would require those convicted of sexual abuse to submit to periodic AIDS testing.

Elizabeth Barnhill of the Iowa Coalition Against Sexual Assault described the effort as "wellintentioned" but said it would not do much good and could cause substantial harm.

Victims groups said very few rapes actually result in a conviction, and those that do take months and years to be resolved.

"Unfortunately, the only way a survivor of sexual assault can determine his or her own HIV status is to get tested," she said.

Barnhill worried that some victims wouldn't get tested, assuming their assailant would.

Current said more effective ways of dealing with the issue won't be discussed while legislators focus on testing of rapists.

KOSICE, SLOVAKIA — In late 1989 I was glued to CNN watching the Romanian Revolution. Seeing thousands of protesters buzzing like a swarm of angry hornets and clamoring to lynch Nicolai Ceau-cescu had a hypnotic effect on me.

Mesmerized by the mayhem of the moment, I placed a call to a friend in Washington D.C. and asked her to find work for me as a "political consultant" for an emerging political organization - with admirable intentions - in an eastern European country which had recently overthrown a communist dictator. I wanted to see the madness for myself, but under the protection of diplomatic immunity.

But even though the plug had been pulled on Ceaucescu, the fuzzy, freeze-frame visual of the streets of Bucharest was of Romanian coal miners, with chiseled gray-granite jaws, eagerly leaping out of trucks and wielding pipes and clubs to defend a new communist regime. Less than eager to face the Romanian labor movement, I happily accepted a position with Verjnost Proti

The Slovak sister party of President Vaclav Havel's Civic Forum movement, Public Against Violence, VPN, was a mix of artists, actors, writers and jailed dissidents. In the mold of Havel, they were willing to speak their conscience at the risk of being exiled to a one-room hut somewhere out in the middle of Czechoslovakia under the surveillance of the secret police.

Spending three months with a cadre of idealistic, young, would-be politicians out to save the world or at least to save their country provided an opportunity to see, hear and smell the problems of Czechoslovakia, which had accumulated like a pile of toxic waste during 40 years of communism.

While I missed the Velvet Revolution of November 1989, I was able to come for the party, which culminated in the first free elections in 40 years. But swirling through the vortex of a political campaign with a bunch of dissidents in a campaign office is not the best way to find out what is really happening.

Life in a political campaign is a tainted one, especially when the campaign is being conducted in a foreign language, which to me was an endless string of S's and R's.

The only thing I know about being a foreign correspondent is that to be one, one must go to a foreign country. The rest is instinct. So while the dust continues to settle on the Clinton administration, I thought it was best to leave the United States and go to the two youngest countries in the world the Czech Republic and Slovakia and see what had transpired during the previous two and a half

The once mighty Russian influence in the former Czechoslovakia has been reduced to street vendors in Prague hawking fur hats embossed with the hammer and sickle. And on this particular Friday afternoon, the military-surplus sales-men were clearly being outhustled by those selling vacuum cleaner attachments and Ginsu knives.

In the city of Kosice, the statues of Comrade Lenin and the red stars, which were methodically being yanked out with chains in 1990, have been replaced by a rash of red Marlboro advertisements. The only remnant of socialism I have been able to find here is a woman with an expressionless face perched outside the restroom of the elegant former Communist hotel, with her hand extended waiting to receive payment for use of the bathroom. I was told by a friend who used to work in the hotel that in a case of "free-enterprise-run-amok," when the hotel was sold to a private firm the government tried to sell the bathrooms as a separate enterprise. And like the price of everything else here in Slovakia, the cost of using the bathroom has risen from 50 hellers to two

The champagne of New Year's Eve is starting to wear off and the tears of those who mourned the death of Czechoslovakia are starting to dry. People here in one of the world's two youngest countries are facing the quirky consequences of starting a new nation. To the horror of travelers, there is now a border check when crossing from Slovakia to the Czech Republic and for the last week Slovaks have been scurrying to the bank to exchange their krouns for krouns stamped with the crest of Slovakia.

Like being shot out of a cannon each morning, every day is an adventure in Slovakia. It is comforting to know that if for some reason all hell breaks loose here on the Eastern Front, and I am forced to evacuate from this country, the Romanian border is only an hour by train. Editor's note: James Anderson is a DI reporter who is spending this semester in eastern Europe.

OVERTHROW BRINGS CHANGE

With the end of the Communist regime in Czechoslovakia came changes in education and traveling.

> Editor's note: This is the second in series of four articles this week on life in the Czech Republic and Slovakia and part of a semesterlong series by reporter James Anderson, who is spending this semester in eastern Europe. KOSICE, SLOVAKIA - For the citizens of the former Czechoslovakia, the peaceful overthrow of the Communist regime during the Velvet Revolution of November 1989 served as a historical marker - a marker pointing in the direction of change at virtually all levels of society.

"When we heard of the revolution, we stopped school and the students were chasing the chief of the school, who was a big Communist," said Igor Katka, 25, a student of eterinary medicine in Kosice.

"But everyone in charge of the schools was a big Communist." Katka said life for him has aproved since the revolution and at the biggest change has been in his academic life. "After the revolution I stopped tudying Marxism-Leninism, Katka said. "I had no chance to study anatomy because you had to know everything about Marxism-Kosice Mayor Rudolf Bauer said the collapse of the communist egime completely changed his life.

But with the new freedom inspired by the revolution came new respon-

"The revolution allows me to breathe free, to travel, to discuss and to see the city in connection with my position," Bauer said. "Many spheres of life were taboo before 1989 and after this change they have to be solved." While Bauer is thankful for the changes, he acknowledges that addressing the long list of previously ignored "taboos" in Kosice such as pollution, an inconsistent water supply and a collapsing infrastructure — will be difficult.

Jan Janus, 34, an unemployed craftsman, said that everyone was happy when President Husak, who was loyal to the political leadership in Moscow, left office as a result of the revolution. He said on a general level the most noticeable changes after the revolution were in people's attitudes, and that on a personal level the revolution allowed him to travel without bureaucratic hassle. "If you wanted to travel before the revolution you had to wait one year for a visa, unless you had friends in parliament or the Communist Party," said Janus, who is planning a trip to Greece in mid-February. "Then if you were allowed to travel, it could only be for a month because the government was afraid you would not

Jana Dolakova, 22, who is studying to take her entrance examina-tions for art school, said jokingly that the biggest benefit of life after communism is that she can now chew Wrigley's Spearmint Gum. "Before the revolution there was no choice of products," Dolakova said. "We had great freedom during President Havel's time. They were a nice two years because everything was starting new; people could start a different kind of life or start a business or change

However, Dolakova said that the window of opportunity to make career changes or launch a new business is closing, because as a new country, Slovakia is faced with myriad financial problems. Ironically, the Velvet Revolution, which came to be symbolized by dissident playwright Vaclav Havel's emergence from prison to the presidency of Czechoslovakia, has had an adverse effect on the number of theaters available in which to perform. "There are fewer theaters since the revolution because there is no money," said actress Susan Gregelova, 19. "But before 1989 it was not possible to have a choice of plays because the chiefs of the theaters were not actors, they were Communists, political people.' Eva Bodonorova, the editor of a weekly newspaper in Kosice, said the worst thing about life before the revolution was that it was "impossible" to travel abroad. But while freedom is important to her, she said there are some rough edges as a result of the Velvet Revolution.

People are afraid to walk at night and crime is up," said Bodonorova, who had a television, stereo and telephone stolen from her house last year. "Gypsies are breaking into people's flats because they are not getting their big government subsidies and last week a man was shot with a revolver. That never happened before the revolution.'

Automakers let Clinton handle Japan

Lisa Zagaroli

Associated Press WASHINGTON - American automakers praised Clinton administration promises to address the trade gap Tuesday and dropped their threat to take action against Japanese companies for allegedly dumping cars in this market.

Top executives of Ford, General Motors and Chrysler decided in a conference call to pin their hopes on action by the Clinton administration rather than formally accuse the Japanese of dumping or selling cars here at price tags below those in their own country.

"We consider dumping a serious threat and we will, of course, continue to monitor the situation to assure that U.S. laws are obeyed," chief executive officers of the three companies said in a joint

But they said they were shooting for "broader results" by working with each other and the Clinton administration to address the huge

"We believe that this approach will give the Clinton administration the opportunity to develop its position on trade and jobs," they

The American automakers acted after U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor said this weekend on CNN's "Newsmaker Sunday" the administration would see to it that Japan kept promises to open its home market to imports. "We're going to insist that they keep them," Kantor said. "We're going to enforce the law and enforce agreements." Ford spokesman Bill Day said the three companies "made this determination in their own best selfinterest but did so totally among themselves and without any pressure from the outside whatsoever."

"In our analysis, we've felt it important to give the Clinton administration breathing room to develop its trade policies, but that was solely our determination," he

The unfair trading practices complaint that automakers threatened last month would have been the largest of its kind ever, covering billions of dollars of Japanese

The auto executives said their lawyers assured them the case against the Japanese was strong. To win, the automakers would have been required to convince the Commerce Department the Japanese were selling cars for less in the United States than in their home

They also would have had to convince the International Trade Commission, an independent federal agency, that the dumping had injured the domestic auto industry. If they won, the U.S. government could retaliate with tariffs against-Japanese imports.

Life-prolonging treatment doesn't buy much

CHICAGO - Life-prolonging treatment for critically ill cancer tients costs a fortune and usually buys little extra survival, researchers say. They are urging ctors to be sure patients and families really want it.

Astudy published this week found hat cancer patients who spent any time in intensive care for reasons ther than post-surgical recovery ran up subsequent hospital bills ranging from $82,845 to $189,339 per year of life gained.

Sixty-six patients of the 150 who ere studied died in the hospital, he researchers reported in Weddedical Association.

cost to the nation, there's the personal cost, the cost to the amily," said the lead researcher, Dr. David Schapira of the H. Lee Moffitt Cancer Center and considered only hospital costs. Insurance coverage often is inadequate to cover those plus physician fees and other expenses,

"The medical costs can decimate the savings of the family, three or four decades of savings. They may lose their house and the kids may have to come out of college" for a few weeks of added survival, he

The authors urged doctors to talk with patients and families before starting any cancer treatment that could cause critical illness, and inform them of the possible scenarios so that a strategy can be agreed upon beforehand.

The researchers tracked hospital costs after placement in intensive care for 86 patients with solid tumors such as stomach, breast, lung and genital cancers and 64 patients with leukemia or lymph

Even though many such cancers are curable, some patients get critically ill because of complications from the malignancies or from the aggressive treatments used to fight them.

When cancer patients get so sick they must be admitted to intensive care, life-prolonging treatment may be unwarranted.

"Studies have reported mortality rates of 70 percent to 80 percent for cancer patients admitted to the ICU," they said. In their own study, 34 of the solid-tumor patients, or 40 percent, died in the intensive care unit; so did 32 of leukemia or lymph cancer patients, or 50 percent. The hospital costs per year of life tumor patients and $189,339 for the others, authors calculated. That is far more than the costs of other treatments, they said. Previous studies indicate the cost per year of life gained for chemotherapy for small cell lung cancer is $4,500; for bone marrow transplantation for leukemia is $10,000; for drug therapy for moderate high blood pressure is $11,000; and for breast cancer screening is $30,000.

AIDS STUDY

A false sense of security

Last week, the National Research Council made public a study that states that despite the thousands of deaths and the strong sense of alarm AIDS causes, the disease will eventually have little impact on the lives of most Americans, and U.S. society will see few changes in the way it works.

Considering the wide coverage and exposure AIDS-related stories and prevention campaigns receive in the media, and most notably the growing impression that AIDS remains an almost unstoppable foe, the finding by this 11-member panel did not seem to raise many eyebrows or become a great controversy in a society accustomed to news on AIDS.

Rather, the carefully reviewed conclusion is somewhat of a soothing consolation, a placebo that softens the effect of the widespread killer.

This placebo effect, though, may be misleading. Even though the panel's conclusions show that the consequences of the deep alterations the social and health care infrastructure has experienced are positive, it is also true that they could create a false sense of relief in those segments of society least affected by the disease.

True, public health policies, health care financing, clinical research and voluntary organizations have certainly gained from the plight in terms of organizations and funding.

The study then concludes that AIDS is concentrated among homosexuals, drug users, the poor and the undereducated, calling them "socially marginalized groups with little economic, political and social power." The study also says that AIDS differs from historic epidemics such as the bubonic plague that killed millions in Asia and Europe six centuries ago, making no social distinction in whom it killed. AIDS, again according to the panel, may be more similar to the influenza epidemic of 1918-20, which "left no mark on the social institutions (. . .) of the time."

The most troubling finding of the study, however, is that AIDS will disappear, not because it will be eliminated (we are far from that goal), but because of the social invisibility of the marginal groups most affected by the disease. Could that be interpreted as out of sight, out of mind?

Surely that was not the study's intention, but the peril lies in the fact that those who think that societies around the world have not changed because of AIDS are living in a fairy-tale world. Third World societies, particularly in Africa, are the ones which indeed have suffered the most changes. Perhaps Western societies have suffered less; socio-economic mechanisms have not been altered and society as a whole still functions as it used to, but changes cannot be only measured in those terms.

Changes in mentality and behavior have been profound, even though there are still segments of society which have not altered their ways. And, most importantly, those segments that are in fact most affected cannot be left by the wayside just because they are less visible.

ART FILM

Exposing the mind

Colloquium has been an overwhelming success in challenging the views of its 160 students, as well as the state at large, although it remains dubious as to whether that course's discussions will enlighten. The immediate response to a videotape shown in the UI Department of Art and Art History course, which contained scenes of homosexual erotica, is a typical example of the knee-jerk reaction. Nonetheless, it has spurred discussion of the role of art in society and specifically within the university setting. It has also re-opened debate on appropriate responses to objectionable material in the classroom.

Governor Branstad's office showed no restraint in condemning classroom use of the film prior to review of the surrounding facts. In what was perhaps an overzealous attempt to reassure constituents, spokesman Dick Vohs said, "Once they get to the bottom of this, I'm sure the governor believes they should take swift, clear and effective action to eliminate it and instill better judgment in their instructors." Apparently forgetting that no determination has been made as to whether the film was used in an edifying, educational manner, it seems Vohs has advocated holding a fair trial before getting on with the hanging.

No less of a problem is the aversion many students have to speaking openly with instructors about courses. Indeed, many are so cowed by their perception of professorial power that their initial reaction to any problem is to phone home. Although nearly all students are legal adults and have clearly defined rights within the university, many do not feel up to the challenge of speaking for themselves. The Des Moines Register even quoted Rose Mary Chase instead of her daughter, UI freshman Melissa Chase, as to the content of the film and its relevance to the class although she had no firsthand knowledge.

The linchpin of an education is the ability to articulate one's own concerns and opinions, while understanding those of others. It is ironic and saddening that this current complaint stems from a class designed to expand student notions of artistic expression and promote informed discussion about such expression's role in society. The danger in failing to confront instructors with reasonable objections is that those who believe that they can do no wrong become more overbearing. Those who fear undo reprisals may allow course content to become tame, pallid and boring, impoverishing the education of all.

Some outgrow P.E. years before college:

Funny how I can write it now without shaking in Phys. Ed. Even the name sounded diabolical once. Fizzzzz-ed. That's always how I felt afterwards.

What a unique way to spell "trauma."

My friends and I hated gym class. P.E. was torture for us. It started in grade school with a teacher who would hit us with a wiffle ball bat if we didn't run fast enough around the gym floor. In junior high it was the same teacher, now rattling off the entire rulebook of football before snapping the ball to me and expecting me to know what to do with it. They called it flag football, but I think we all know better. Junior high was also the first time we all had to get naked in front of each other - I mean the girls in front of girls and boys in front of

No wonder adolescents are so screwed up. development, make them sweat and then throw them in the shower together. We all had numbers and had to shout them out as we exited the showers to let the teacher know we weren't in violation of any health codes. The only people who didn't have to shower were those having their periods. For three years I prayed for puberty - just to get out of getting

During high school, P.E. became a focus for our frustration. For those with GPAs that actually mattered to them, a single C in the long row of A's meant a personal defeat, even though it didn't count in the final average.

P.E. class is not a place for the strong-cynic-but-weak-athlete. My sophomore and junior years were spent dodging red rubber balls fired furiously at my head by seniors with scary haircuts, bulging biceps and no necks. And those were the women.

To make things worse, both of those years I had gym first hour. That meant I would wake up every morning, shower, get dressed, feather my hair (I know), and go to school. There I would change clothes, get humiliated in Dodge Ball, undress again, shower again, get dressed again and spend the rest of the day looking like a teenager with first hour P.E. No fun.

Senior year finally brought a reprieve. Our clique was complete and we all had P.E. together during last hour. It was great. The "fun boys" were on the other side of the dividing net in the gym and sometimes we got to do aerobics or play softball together. The best days were Fridays and pep assemblies we wouldn't have to have class at all. We got the best seats in the bleachers and did our homework until assembly.

All this brings me to a recently released study in the American Journal of Public Health. A survey of fifth-grade P.E. classes in Texas schools found that students are moderately to vigorously active for about 10 minutes a week. Most of the time, the study explains, P.E. students are required to watch others or wait their turn.

Now, either my school was very aggressive or very progressive - take your pick. Daily we were bombarded with ball games, like crab ball with that huge white thing we had to kick while walking backwards on our hands and feet. Or scooter relays, where we had to scoot on little boards on little wheels on our little butts. If we ever sat around and watched it was never for very long. In no time at all we were out there, stomping or rolling on each others'

There were some days in junior high and high school that we spent watching each other get embarrassed in the name of Presidential Physical Fitness Tests.

For an entire week, every fall and every spring, I would take the name of John F. Kennedy in vain. We would have the sit-up test at the beginning of the week and I would be incapacitated for the rest of the tests, unable to bend over without agonizing pain. We had the shuttle run, running back and forth for erasers that our teachers absent-mindedly forgot to de-chalk before class. It was hell.

My friend Pam and I longed for w we could sit inside the cozy gym and play nonsweaty games like badminton, backgam-mon and shuffleboard. Sure, we didn't burn off the calories as quickly, but we didn't complain

Now that I think back on it, our laziest days in P.E. were probably spent when the weather

Softball, for example, was a breeze. Pam and I would always get last in line to bat so we could talk and would then take to far, far right field and just sing Beatles songs. During the rare times a ball ever came in our direction I would nod at Pam and she'd trot off and get it. I had to save my arm for writing.

Senior year we had a calisthenics section and each student was supposed to do an exercise in front of the entire class and explain it. One chose jumping jacks, another chose leg lifts. I demonstrated double-chin exercises.

The study says if teachers focus on lifetime activities (they suggest jogging) students could be active 50 percent of the time or more, instead of less than nine percent.

If flexing and releasing your jaw counts as a lifetime activity (and I know many people who believe it does) then I don't think we are in bad

'Image Czarina' doesn't pull her punches

I here can be moments of stress in my line of work. Over the years, I've had slashed tires, bricks through my living-room window and the computer has eaten some of my columns.

But the single worst thing that can happen is to be yelled at over the telephone by an angry woman. Especially by an angry woman who really knows how to yell.

Because I am mild-mannered and a gent, I can't yell back. So when an angry female yells, I am struck almost dumb and can do little more than mumble a few soothing words - "now, now, there, missy," or "darlin', you're just tired" — which seldom helps

That just happened. I'm so shaken that I can barely type these words. But despite my trembling fingers,

To make the experience even worse, the angry female is quickly becoming one of the best known and most influential women in America.

If you pick up a copy of the special presidential issue of Newsweek, you'll see her picture and biography among those the magazine says are the true in-crowd of the Clinton administration.

Culturally diverse? To the Editor:

Why are we so quick to get comfortable and satisfied after someone has begrudgingly given us crambs? It seems to me that the tudent population is buying the myth that the University of Iowa, having adopted a multicultural requirement for its curriculum, has finally become culturally diverse. Just ook at all the different types of groups on campus, right? It's obvious that this university is at the forefront of the culture of the cult the nation, right? Wrong. I submit to you that this institution salong way from having that progressive campus that embraces and tolerates difference. How can an institution claim to be so diverse when its very faculty and staff suffer from a lack of diversity? The evidence is there, and it's quite prominent, especially when departments have to pull instructors from other departments to teach a course in which the latter are not thoroughly rained. This is an exaggerated case of the blind leading the blind. How can students expect a quality education when (the) instructors themselves are not schooled in what they are teaching? This is especially true hen you look at African-American World Studies, for example. The university "can't find" African-American professors to come in and teach some of these classes, so they'll pull someone from another rea, who has an "adequate" background qualifying him / her to teach class. That's just one example, but t's quite prevalent. Students are getting short-changed,

Campus Review writer [sic] of DI corrections

To the Editor:

in quoting Michael B. Clark, either Byron Kent Wikstrom or his copy editor felt the need to add sic to this sentence: "That is why it is essential that the University of Iowa have [sic] ." Since, according to Turabin and others, sic is supposed to be placed after the error, the only possible conclusion is that you guys think Clark should have used "has" instead of "have."

Sorry, wunderkinder (Note: Mr. McNeish phoned to [sic] this himself; the "w" in "Wunderkinder" should be upper case]), but "have" in this sentence is the proper subjunctive form. Since you like highlighting errors so much, it's too bad you can't catch some of your own, including Wikstrom's "an important criteria" in the same column. Try "criterion."

I note, too, that you've now taken to including sic in letters to the editor that you don't consider politically correct, such as Rod Miller's letter where he uses "other's" instead of "others'." Come on. Why don't you just do your job as an editor and make the correction?

Enough said. Go sic'em, boys.

Campaigning for presidency

To the Editor:

Now that the entire question of the campaign letter is behind us, I would like to take this opportunity to address the election itself. On Feb. 15 and 16, students will have the opportunity to select their Student Body President for the 1993-94 academic year. There are four teams seeking this position, but none other than myself and Danielle Bechtold have the experience, ideas or commitment necessary to accomplish the

Over the past year, I have served as the Executive Officer of the Undergraduate Activities Senate. In that position I have seen what is working well in student government and what needs to be changed. No other candidate could possibly have that insight. I have proven that, despite my personal, political or religious beliefs, I am able to work well with all students and get the job done. This has included projects such as the Hawkeye Express Card, Home for the Holidays, and the newly instituted SafeWalk program. As your Student Body President, I will expand upon these successful

Maintaining the status quo is not our campaign platform, however. Danielle and myself have laid out an extensive array of priorities for my administration. These priorities include addressing problems such as requiring that courses be taught by professors, not just TAs, addressing the needs of nontraditional and minority students without reverting to quota-type systems, reinstating the UISA Cooperative Book Exchange, putting to rest the oft-promised issues of Cambus extensions and 24-hour study areas, continuing current work and coming up with new and innovative programs to address the safety of women on campus, and my personal priority will be to reform the UISA budgeting process to ensure that student funds are benefitting the student body, not political or special interest groups.

In addition to these priorities, we are always open to new suggestions and will welcome and encourage all input by students. The goal of my administration will be to make students aware of their student government and get more people involved. I have managed to do this in the Undergraduate Activities Senate and I will continue to do it as the Student Body President. Before the scandals of Pepe Rojas-Cardona, student government seats were the subject of lengthy and hotly contested campaigns, but the scandals frightened people away from student government. I want to see student government at a point next year where all senator seats are filled and contested in elections. I want the job of Student Body President to be based on experience and skill, not popularity and apathy. I want student government to fairly represent students on this campus and do it effectively. All of this is attainable, if the Student Body President has the desire and experience necessary. I have those qualifications and will use them to benefit the students at the University of Iowa.

I realize that The Daily Iowan has brought my character into question, but I strongly encourage anyone who has the slightest doubt as to my intentions or abilities to read my literature that you will be receiving Feb. 12-14 and decide whether the policy platform that I have laid out represents what you think student government should be doing on this campus. If you agree that my priorities should be the priorities of the University of Iowa Student Association, then please go to the polls and vote for Michael Clark and Danielle Bechtold for Student Body President and Vice President. If you have any questions of concerns, please feel free to call me at my home, 354-9438, I will be happy to get back in touch with you. You may also call my running mate, Danielle Bechtold at 353-0329. Either of us will be happy to answer any questions that you might have about our candidacy or student government in

The Student Body President is your representitive to the administration, lowa Legislature and Board of Regents. Please read each candidate's literature carefully and decide which is most qualified to represent you. I believe that I have the experience, ideas and commitment necessary to effectively serve you in the position of Student Body President, but whether you agree with my ideas or not, please remember to get out and vote on Feb. 15-16.

Michael B. Clark Candidate for Student Body President

Motivations for candidacy challenged

To the Editor: Your recent interview with UISA presidential candidate Michael B. Clark (Feb. 5DI) and his now infamous letter to "friends" illustrate the importance of the current student election. In the interview, Clark advocates a "University Commission to Eliminate Waste and Excess." He envisions this commission as restricting funds only to organizations which benefit the entire student body. Compare this statement with his campaign letter which states,

. . . I have managed to get recognition and funding for Students for Life, Students Against Government Waste, Young Americans for Freedom, and the UI Allicance for the Advancement of Heterosexuality.' Well, Michael, which is it going to be? You say in your campaign that you want to restrict funding from small programs, but in your "personal" campaign correspondence you positively brag about your ability to get right wing splinter groups funded in the Senate. Clearly, Mr. Clark is talking out of both sides of his mouth. Or does he really think that the above mentioned groups represent the entire student body? If so, it only further demonstrates how out of touch he is. The real truth of the matter is that the vast majority of the UISA's million dollar budget goes to campus-wide programs like Cambus, SCOPE, the DI, KRUI and Student Video, the UI Lecture Committee and Homecoming Commission. These groups get 80-85 percent of the student fees, the rest is divided among approximately 100 other student organizations in 4 funding classes. None of the money that the UISA allocates comes from state appropriations, as Mr. Clark sug-

Mr. Clark claims to be fighting waste and excess. What is his record on this? The group Students Against Government Waste, which lists Mr. Clark as its principle representative, requested over $8,000 to produce a newsletter. This was part of SAGW's $12,000-plus budget requested for supplemental funding. This request is roughly equal the amount of money actually allocated for all other groups in SAGW's funding class during the regular budgeting procedure. What this shows is that if Mr. Clark had things his way, all the money would go to one group . . . his. His other criterion for funding worthiness centers around enhancing the academic environment. I would suggest that Mr. Clark's own involvement in extracurricular activities demonstrates that even he does not believe that the sum of the benefits of attending the UI are found only in the classroom. Participation in student organizations is a valuable opportunity for students to get hands-on experience working in a group to accomplish goals. By pooling resources through student fees, students and their organizations can create economies of scale to more efficiently realize these goals. And for the $18 in fees, UI students get an incredible return on their invest-

Michael B. Clark wants to end this for some groups because he doesn't like their goals. This is the real reason that he should not be voted for in the UISA elections. As a former UISA Senator, I witnessed his vindictive and conniving governing style and his ideological blindness. The brief examples here are just the tip of the iceberg of how Mr. Clark lacks the basic understanding required to represent such a diverse group as the UI student body. He is unable and unwilling to try to represent the entire student body. He is trying to weasel his way into a position of power to enforce his own sense of morality. His apologists will say that Mr. Clark's religion does not automatically disqualify him. They are right, it doesn't. But the fact that he intends to force others to satisfy his sense of morality does disqualify him. There is no doubt that UISA has its problems. One good first step to eliminate some of these is to vote Michael B. Clark out of office.

Your article on the AFC Championship game made the erroneous statement that the 1980 Oakland Raiders were the only wild card team to win the Super Bowl (a misstatement also made on the network broadcast). In order to refresh some memories, it should be pointed out that the 1969 Kansas City Chiefs won Super Bowl IV after finishing second to the Raiders in the divisional race. Led by quarterback Lenny "The Cool" Dawson and the greatest defense in pro football history (the "Redwood Forest"), the Chiefs worked their way through the playoffs by defeating Joe Namath and the New York Jets (13-6), the division champion Raiders (17-7), and finally the heavily favored Minnesota Vikings (23-7), in what was the final appearance of an American Football League team. RUN! PEOPLE WHO ARE DIFFE-RENT FROM US ARE COMING TO DESTROY US!

No, it's not a Michael B. Clark or a Keith Chiavetta letter, but the mistake is perfectly understandable. These two have clogged the DI's arteries of public exchange so long we have to wonder if they have keys to the print shop. But enough is enough. Surely Michael B. Clark and Keith Chiavetta have had their day. Must the DI continue to print their tiresome, ignorant bleats as often as they emit them? Surely there are other people in this community who write letters to the DI; is it (to use one of C & C's favorite words) "fair" that these two get so much space? I don't even care who you replace them with. Maybe there are other fearful bigots out there capable of writing a letter - maybe we could here from some of them instead. I'm just sick of the Clark & Chiavetta Daily Paranoid Apocalypse Fantasy column. Let's get some fresh views

What do the Hawkeyes need to do to move up from the No. 3 spot they have been locked into for the past three weeks? Iowa women's basketball Coach C. Vivian Stringer said Tuesday she doesn't really

"We know better than anyone that we played well and nobody had to tell us that," she said.

Iowa (17-1, 9-0) beat then-No 6 Ohio State 79-62 and then-No. 4 Penn State 84-59 last weekend, but the Hawkeyes remain stuck behind No. 1 Tennessee and No. 2 Vanderbilt in the polls.

"I'm just enjoying playing well. It doesn't really matter," Stringer said. "I sincerely mean that, we know it doesn't really matter.

"The greatest thing that's ever happened, beyond being No. 1, is to have played as well as we did last week with that level of confidence against two teams that we tremendously respect. When that happens, that goes a long way.

"As far as the pollsters promising No. 1, that is their opinion. That's not nearly as satisfying as for us to have played well, because we know that we did the defense and we executed the offense."

The Hawkeyes, who received a single first-place vote in the poll Monday, will host Northwestern (12-5, 6-2) Friday at 7:30 p.m.

Senior foward Toni Foster led the Hawkeyes in scoring last weekend to earn Big Ten player of the week honors. She earned the honor twice as a sophomore and once last season. Foster scored 23 points against the Buckeyes and 22 against the Lady Lions. She also led Iowa in rebounding with eight against Ohio State and 10 versus Penn State.

Junior forward Necole Tunsil scored 20 points against Penn State and junior guard Tia Jackson added 14. Jackson scored 21 against the Buckeyes and senior guard Laurie Aaron had 16.

Despite the offensive contributions, Stringer said defense is the area of the game she can depend on from the Hawkeyes.

"Defense is the one aspect of the game that can be consistent when all else fails," Stringer said. "Defense requires good hustle and attitude. We understand angles, we understand offenses pretty

"It's a forceful kind of thing. To me, it's like the guys have a dunk. If you are a great defensive team, that's your dunk because it dictates things. Our defense does dictate the offense and we score

Karnishovas and Luther Wright stepped right up.

As Terry Dehere and Jerry Walker struggled, Karnishovas had a career-high 32 points and Wright's 16 points were his most ever in a Big East game. The Pirates (17-6, 7-4) needed the win badly as they had lost five of seven and dropped to their lowest ranking of the season.

"We've been struggling," Wright said. "This is a step in the right direction.'

The step wasn't really made until the second half.

Dehere, the team's leading scorer at 21.1 per game, made just 1 of 9 shots in the first half. Walker, the solid frontcourt player who is considered the heart and soul of the team, missed all six of his shots in the first half.

The Panthers (14-5, 7-5) lost for the third time in four games.

Karnishovas, who was 9 for 13 from the field, finished with 10 rebounds and Wright had nine as the Pirates finished with a 49-38 advantage on the boards.

"I felt great. I was kind of going on my own," Karnishovas said. "My shots were falling and I wanted the ball. I made a few shots and I just kept shooting."

Seton Hall played without starting point guard Danny Hurley, who had the flu.

No. 6 N. Carolina 77, Maryland

COLLEGE PARK, Md. - North Carolina coach Dean Smith moved into a tie for third place on the all-time victory list, notching win No. 759.

North Carolina overcame an early 11-point deficit to move a halfgame ahead of Florida State atop the Atlantic Coast Conference standings. Eric Montross led the Tar Heels (19-3, 8-2) with 17 points and George Lynch had 12.

Smith pulled even with former coach Ed Diddle, who won 759 games in 42 seasons with Western Kentucky, and moved within eight wins of second-place Hank Iba. The NCAA list only includes head coaches with at least 10 years at Division I schools.

The 61-year-old Smith is 759-222 in 32 seasons at North Carolina, including 55-18 against Maryland. Drake 76, Indiana State 74, (2

Celtic, Laker players left off All-Star team

Associated Press

NEW YORK - Imagine an NBA All-Star game with neither a Boston Celtic nor a Los Angeles Laker. Since the first game was played in 1951, it has never happened. Until

The Celtics and Lakers, with a combined 27 NBA championships, were left out Tuesday when the league announced reserves for the Feb. 21 game at Salt Lake City. And none of their players were elected by the fans to the starting teams announced earlier this month.

Among the 14 players selected as backups by coaches in the East and West Conferences were five players making their All-Star debuts. including Detlef Schrempf of Indiana, who is the first European player selected. And while a European plays in the game for the first time, it is the first all-star game ever in which both the Celtics and the Lakers have been left off the team. In fact, the only times

just one of the two teams was represented on the all-star team were in 1978 when no Lakers were named and 1979 when no Celtics were selected. There has always been someone to carry the torch for each team. The string began with sen of the Lakers and Ed McAuley and Bob Cousy of the Celtics in the first game, March 2, 1951 in Boston. It continued through the Laker eras of Jerry West, Elgin Baylor, Wilt Chamberlain, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Magic Johnson. The Celtic run was marked by Bill Russell, John Havlicek, K.C. Jones, Dave Cowens and Larry Bird. Lakers were named and 1979 when no Celtics were selected. Unlike baseball and hockey, the NBA and NFL do not require that each team be

San Antonio, Shawn Kemp of Seattle, Danny Manning of the Los Angeles Clippers and Mitch Richmond of Sacramento, who will play for the West.

Also named as East reserves were Joe Dumars of Detroit, Patrick Ewing of New York, Dominique Wilkins of Atlanta and three Cleveland teammates - Mark Price, Brad Daugherty Joining the four All-Star rookies as West backups were Chris Mullin and Tim Hardaway of Golden State, Dan Majerle of Phoenix and Hakeem Olajuwon of Houston. Mullin will not play in the game because of an injury.

Earlier, fan balloting elected Chicago's Michael Jordan and Scottie Pippen, Detroit's Isiah Thomas, Charlotte's Larry Johnson and Orlando's Shaquille O'Neal to start for the East and Utah's John Stockton and Karl Malone, Portland's Clyde Drexler, Phoenix's Charles Barkley and San Antonio's David Robinson as West starters.

— John Stockton, Jazz, had 18 points and 15 assists in Utah's 108-96 victory over Orlando.

SUPER SUB

Larry Stewart sparked Washington off the bench with 21 points on 7-of-8 shooting in the Bullets' 106-100 victory in Houston on Monday night. It was the Rockets' second straight home loss to one of the NBA's weaker teams, after Orlando, playing its fifth road game in eight nights, was assesed three illegal defense techni-cals in a 108-96 loss at Utah on Monday night.

Lakers guard Byron Scott, plagued by injuries most of the season, broke out with 26 points in Los Angeles' 108-100 overtime victory over Dallas on Monday night. A.C. Green scored six consecutive points during a decisive run in the extra session, keeping the Mavericks winless on the road in 20 games.

Utah's 108-96 victory over Orlando on Monday night continued a pattern of win-one-lose-one for the Jazz. In their last 10, the Jazz have victories and losses.

SUPERB IN DEFEAT

Houston guard Kenny Smith scored 30 points and added eight assists in the Rockets' 106-100 loss to Washington on Monday night.

SPEAKING

"We're finally starting to put it together. We're jelling as a team. We've fought back for a lot of big saves lately. Tonight we showed a lot of guts." — New York's Patrick Ewing after the Knicks scored their first overtime victory this season, 120-115 at Philadelphia on Monday night.

"This doesn't look like the team that won eight in a row. Something is missing. There should be no puzzles. We're past the halfway point in the season. We should know how we have to win."— Houston coach Rudy Tomjanovich after the Rockets lost their second straight after winning 12 of their provious 14.

UI Orchestra concert features Hervig piece

William Palik The Daily Iowan

The UI Symphony Orchestra will present its first concert of 1993 tonight at 8 in Hancher Auditorium. Conducted by James Dixon, the orchestra will perform works by Mozart, Hervig and Franck, with violinist Leopold La Fosse soloing in a new violin concerto.

"The Concerto for Violin and Chamber Orchestra" by Richard Hervig, former head of composition and founder of the Center for New Music at the UI, was commissioned by La Fosse and premiéred last November with the Cedar Rapids Symphony. In many respects a rather accessible work, the Hervig concerto was composed for a small chamber orchestra rather than a fuller ensemble partly to facilitate its performance in and around Iowa.

"This is truly a work for Iowans by an Iowan," La Fosse said.

It is certainly a showcase for UI veterans: La Fosse has served on the UI School of Music faculty since 1972, and Professor Hervig was a departmental cornerstone from 1947 until his retirement in Tonight's concert begins with the "Overture" to Mozart's one-act opera "The Impresario" and concludes with Cesar Franck's voluptuous "Symphony in D Minor." Franck, a Belgian-born French composer, completed his only symphony at age 66 in 1888. As usual, his highly chromatic, deeply upholstered style provoked divergent reactions. With typical Yankee understatement, a reviewer in the Boston Advertiser wrote in the 1890s that "the Franck Symphony is not a hilarious work - charcoal would make a white mark upon the Cimmerian darkness of its first movement."

More recently, Virgil Thomson noted Franck's characteristic movement from stained-glass mysticism to orginstic grandiosity, wryly remarking on the composer's "determination to produce, somewhere in every piece, an apotheosis destined at once to open up the heavens and to bring down the

'Sommersby' new play on Depardieu classic

Sonja West The Daily Iowan

When Jack Sommersby returned after fighting for the Confederate army in the Civil War, the town greeted him with cautious warmth, his young son became confused and his wife met him with suspicious

How well does this woman really know her husband - the man she married, the man she lived with for years, the man to whom she bore a son? Could a woman like this be fooled after his six-year absence, or could she choose to ignore the truth for the sake of happiness?

The recent release "Sommersby" examines these questions which have haunted many people since the real-life identity trial involving the mysterious return of Martin Guerre to his young wife Bernarrde in 16th century France.

The true-life story of Martin Guerre has so entranced the world that it has inspired a play, an operetta, two novels, a historical study and the acclaimed 1982 French film "The Return of Martin Guerre," directed by Daniel Vigne and starring Gerard Depardieu.

"Sommersby" does not claim to be a documentary about Martin Guerre, but the similarities of the two stories are indisputable. The most notable change in "Sommersby" involves the shift of setting from the 1500s in France to the Reconstruction Era in the southern United States. It was a fascinating and effective decision to play out a story of identity confusion against the scene of a war-torn country also in disarray

After Jack's mysterious return, life in the small, destroyed town goes on. But along with his decade-old memories, stories of war and socialist ideals, Jack Sommersby brings hope home with him - hope that people do return, hope that the town can survive, hope that former slaves may someday own land and hope that he and his wife might live blissfully together ... until some suspicions begin to

Although Richard Gere plays the title character, it is Jodie Foster as his wife Laurel who must conquer the challenging character development of a woman fighting for control of her life in a world where women have no power. Laurel is torn between her love for a man she believes has deceived her and her loyalty to a man to whom she owes nothing.

Gere, however, shows little depth as a character who should be disturbingly complex. After shaving his beard, he acts more like a constantly smiling, '90s surfer dude than a weary, war-torn vet-

A surprise performance by James Earl Jones (who can never be in a boring scene) as a Reconstructionmandated black judge adds even more flavor to an already intrigu-

Because it is based on a story which has remained interesting for more than 400 years, "Som-mersby" had to be able to grab the audience's curiousity for two hours. It does that easily and well — but can any remake really be more fascinating than the real thing?

'Jacques Brel' back in NY after 25-year absence

Mary Campbell Associated Press

NEW YORK - After 25 years, a musical revue called "Jacques Brel Is Alive and Well and Living in Paris" is back where it opened, at the off-Broadway Village Gate.

The significance of that requires a look back.

On the fifth anniversary of that Village Gate opening, some 40 people who had performed in the revue there and elsewhere presented a Carnegie Hall tribute to Brel, the Belgian writer of songs on the dark side.

Poet Eric Blau recalls that after the Carnegie Hall tribute, he and Brel, along with songwriter Mort Shuman, went next door to the bar at the Russian Tea Room.

"Brel said, 'How long do you think the show will run?' I said, "Twenty-five years,' " Blau recalls. "He became hysterical. He fell off his bar stool. Literally. We were all laughing. It was a joke. I made a $5 bet with each of them.

"Unfortunately, I can't collect." Brel died in 1979 and Shuman in 1991, both of cancer.

Joseph Neal, who's in the cast now and was in the last cast of the original production, says, "I find the lyrics just as relevant today."

Singer Elly Stone, who got her start singing funny songs in cabaret, sang two dramatic Brel songs in the 1960 revue "O, Oysters," produced by Blau, her hus-

"It was the first time I had ever encountered popular music that tried to address human problems, the human condition, real subjects," she says.

Blau, who translated the two Brel songs for "O, Oysters," says, "I was the first one to put Brel into English.

"Elly was the only one singing Brel in English in the United States. She was hooked. Subsequently I met Mort Shuman, who was a devotee of Brel's." Shuman already was wealthy from writing rock songs. He and Doc Pomus wrote "Save the Last Dance for Me," "Can't Get Used To Losing You" and other hits.

Blau and Shuman translated 26 Brel songs from 150 they studied and created a show to star Elly. Shuman also was in it, his first time on stage.

Family Garden's folk songs deal with children's issues

Eric Fidler

Associated Press

Family Garden (Rounder) - John McCutc-

Family Garden is a winning collection of songs for children and their families from the talented folksinger John McCutcheon.

The songs take on some difficult subjects such as adoption, race relations and phobias - that older children face and understand with warmth and compassion.

On "Happy Adoption Day," McCutcheon welcomes an adopted child: "There are those whose families happen by chance / A mystery their whole life through / But we had a voice and we had a choice / we were working and waiting for you."

Another highlight is "Traveling in the Wilderness," which briefly recounts the stories of Harriet Tubman, Frederick Douglass, Jackie Robinson, and Martin Luther King Jr.

Spider-Femme experiences difficulties in crime fighting as every male around her breaks the law (left) and Daredevil's radar sense is parodied in "Daredame: The Woman Without a Brassiere."

Spoof's Spandex babes titillate, but cleavage offers little humor

Tasha Robinson The Daily Iowan

Somewhere between Playboy and Cracked is Spoofs line of satire comics, all of which feature popular male characters remade as buxom bimbos in tight Spandex. Titles like "X-Babes," "Spider-Femme," "Wolverbroad" and "Superbabe" aim for a fresh look at old heroes and bad clichés, with a little pinup cheesecake thrown in for good measure. Some of them are silly, some are bland. Most are even funny - at least in small

Of the nine titles Daydreams, 1141/2 E. College St., has in stock, all but one are $2.95, 30-32 pages long (with the same six-page ad spread in the back) and all B & W art. The exception, "Spider-Femme," which is printed on cheaper paper, is $2.50, and is in Almost all of the titles are written by Mike Halbieb, which is odd considering how dramatically the level and sophistication of the humor varies from title to title. "Daredame," for instance, spoofs "Daredevil" in a lightweight manner with a character who developed a "radar sense" in her boobs after being hit in the chest with a barrel of radioactive waste. "Justice Broads" is a little more pointed, with a takeoff on DC's death of Superman saga ("Fifty years of tradition, and it comes to this? A tastelessly drawn puddle of gore on an empty city street?") Both are half-silly, half-funny and fairly cute. "CyberFemmes," on point out that "CyberForce" is ripped off lock, stock and mutant powers from "X-Men," is extremely heavy-handed and repetitious.

Several of the titles take jabs at their own content with references to the frequent pinup posing and average breast size of the characters; others are aimed more generally at well-known comic conventions. "Wolverbroad vs. Hobo," for instance, makes fun of superheroes' propensity to casually destroy entire cities while battling, and the facile manipulation of plot loopholes designed to pull two titles together into a crossover

But this is also covered in "X-Babes" and "Justice Broads." And all the points made in "Cyber-Femmes" are remade in "Wild-C.H.I.C.K.S." in exactly the same way. Halbieb even directly rips himself off by stealing the "Dare-dame" plot from "Spider-Femme," whose title character has radar hips. (Having been bitten in the tush by the same spider that got Peter Parker, she experiences "a tingly sensation" in her hips whenever danger threatens, offering plenty of justification for orgasm jokes and close-ups of tingling buttocks.)

The amount of repetition between titles is in fact the single biggest problem with the Spoof line. Despite the fact that the basic premise of every one of the comics is the same, and almost all of them are self-contained, thus limiting the writers to brief, easily wrapped-up stories, there's still a wealth of material available to be parodied. But very little of the potential humor is being mined. The satire in these titles is rarely biting, and barely satirical; it's safe, mild humor, heavily spiced with safe, mild sexuality.

The probable reason for the dearth of material is the emphasis on (excuse the pun) titillation in the artwork, which unsurprisingly centers on the scanty clothing and hyperendowment of the female characters. But most of the art is unexceptional, though some titles are significantly better drawn than others. (One treat to look for; "Wolverbroad," "Superbabe" and "Spider-Femme" all feature inset origin stories drawn by satirist Fred Hembeck.)

The best way to approach the Spoof line is probably to pick up the one or two single issues based on your favorite characters. Any more than that, and you run into heavy overkill. Almost any one of these comics is funny on its own; more than one is redundant, and the whole line taken together is just annoying. A single joke can only be stretched so far. With "Batbabe" and "Spider-Femme vs. DENIM" now on stands and "Imp-Unity" coming up, however, it looks like Spoof is planning to push that joke far past its limits.

"Ya' can't bring logic into this, this is marriage - it's like the Middle East, there's no solution.

This is just one of the lines the feisty character Shirley bounces into the audience in the onewoman play "Shirley Valentine," which is entering its third week on the Riverside Theatre stage.

Playing Shirley, an English housewife, Jody Hovland keeps the bellies of the audience tense with laughter as she lays out one-liners with impeccable timing and auda-Hovland tells the audience about the life of Shirley Valentine with sad anecdotes, from her headmistress refusing to acknowledge her intelligence to her husband and children taking her for granted or ignoring her altogether.

The mood of the play is kept light with philosophical jokes, like "Why is it that when someone says they love you that gives them the excuse to treat you worse than someone they only like?"

From the beginning of the play, Shirley is confronted with a problem. Her feminist friend Jane has became a feminist, Shirley says, "One day Jane came home and found her husband in bed with the milkman. The milkman. Ever since then she's been a feminist and," she adds, "she never takes milk in her tea."

Shirley knows her place as an obliging wife and knows she cannot o. She remembers a time in her life when she used to fearlessly jump off of rooftops.

"I'm afraid of everything now," Valentine says to the yellow wall in her kitchen, the only thing in her life she knows will acknowledge her presence.

Valentine finally leaves for Greece, without telling her husband, at the end of the first act - causing cheers to erupt in the audience.

At the opening of the second act, she reappears on a beach in Greece, clad in short, close-fitting white pants, a striped halter top, a big floppy hat, sunglasses and a silk robe given to her by a neighbor who admired her courage. Her outfit is completed by a red flower tucking her graying hair behind

Spike Lee miffed about Mike Tyson's imprisonment

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS Spike Lee visited Mike Tyson in prison and said the former heavyweight champ "got railroaded."

Lee, whose films include "Malcolm X" and "Jungle Fever," said he and Tyson spoke on Monday at the Indiana Youth Center, where the fighter is serving a six-year sentence for rape.

"Look at what happened to Mike, then look at what's-his-name, Kennedy. He's walking free. Mike's in the slammer," Lee said, referring to William Kennedy Smith, the nephew of Sen. Edward Kennedy who was acquitted of rape in 1991.

beauty-pageant contestant in Indianapolis in 1991. He was sentenced last March and could be eligible for parole in two years.

"I'm just praying that he won't have to wait another two years to get out on parole," Lee said before speaking at Butler University as part of the school's African-Tyson was convicted of raping a American History Month program.
