Legislature sends Branstad budget for Iowa schools

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — The Legislature on Tuesday sent Gov. Terry Branstad a compromise school budget that would increase elementary and secondary spending by $57 million.

The agreement ended an impasse that's snarled the Legislature virtually since it opened last month. Branstad said he would sign the compromise budget into law.

"In order to break the logjam, in order to get over the hump, he has agreed," said aide Gary Steinke. "He's not thrilled."

The compromise plan would set state spending on elementary and secondary schools at just over $1.2 billion, about a third of the state budget.

Republicans and Democrats narrowed their differences to about $1.5 million and struck the final deal late Monday night. The agreement proposed taking about $800,000 from an incentive-based teacher pay program with the rest coming from other budget cuts.

The House approved the school budget 75-21, after approving the compromise on the increase 52-45.

The Senate quickly followed suit on a 48 to 1 vote. The easy approval masked an intense fight.

Sen. Michael Connolly, D-Dubuque, worried that educational quality was being cut "in our passion to balance the budget."

"I hope we're not cutting off our nose to spite our face," said Connolly. "We did the best we could."

Aides said Branstad would approve the measure as soon as it arrived on his desk.

House Democratic Leader Bob Arnold, D-Davenport, said school budgets grow only 2.1 percent under the compromise.

5 missing skiers turn up alive

ASPEN, Colo. (AP) — Five skiers who survived four nights of sub-zero weather and avalanche danger in mountain wilderness turned up in remarkably good shape Tuesday. Two of them told rescuers where they were by calling from a pay phone.

Several hours after the two skied into a remote trading post and made their call, searchers in a helicopter found the others in the mountain back country. Three of the five suffered frostbite, but only two were hospitalized.

Father, son charged with beating intruder

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The videotape speaks for itself, say lawyers for both a man accused of burglary and the men charged with beating him up after he entered their house.

Authorities say Jerry Stanley, 50, and his son, Mitch, 27, had a relative videotape an intruder entering their home with a baseball bat. Ashley County Sheriff Bill Hudson said the Stanleys gave him the tape when he answered their call that they were holding a burglar. He said he could tell from the tape that Shawn Craig, 19, entered the house.

"And I could tell . . . that the Stanleys were waiting for him to come into the house and, of course, they assaulted him beyond making a citizen's arrest," Hudson said.

COUNTY MAY BE LIABLE

Decision pending on Street charges

Thomas Wanat
The Daily Iowan

The decision as to whether charges will be filed in the death of UI student and basketball player Chris Street will be decided this week by the Iowa City city attorney.

City Attorney Linda Gentry said she will be reviewing the case now that the investigation has been completed.

Gentry said she will be speaking with the investigating police officer today.

She said that she was asked by Johnson County Attorney Patrick White to look into the possibility of charges because of the potential liability against Johnson County.

"It would be likely that the county would be named in any possible charges because it was a county snowplow involved in the accident," Gentry said.

Gentry said she will know more in a couple of days but described the potential outcome as "limited."

Street was killed on Jan. 19 when the car he was driving was struck by a snowplow near Highway 1 and Interstate 80.

4 die in U.S. Army helicopter crash

BERLIN (AP) — A U.S. Army helicopter crashed Tuesday while attempting to land at an air base in Wiesbaden, killing four American soldiers and injuring four others, a U.S. military spokesman said.

Lt. Col. Dick Bridges said all the victims were U.S. Army personnel. He did not release their names pending notification of relatives.

Bridges told The Associated Press by telephone from Wiesbaden the UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter was on a 100-mile flight from Stuttgart when it crashed in the Wiesbaden air base about 7:35 p.m. (1:35 p.m. EST).

The cause of the crash was unknown and under investigation, he said.

Thousands rally in Moscow against Yeltsin

MOSCOW (AP) — Rallying behind red flags and portraits of Lenin, more than 10,000 supporters of Communism marched to the Kremlin on Tuesday to denounce President Boris Yeltsin and urge the military to rise against him.

"The walls of the Kremlin are not shaking from our cries. The people inside are shaking!" hard-line legislator Sergei Baburin declared. "Communist demonstrators in months."

Yeltsin was on vacation at his country home outside Moscow, and there was no immediate reaction from his administration to the outpouring of discontent.

AID FOR BOSNIA

U.N. gives president go ahead for airdrop

Nancy Benac
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton won United Nations support Tuesday for a plan to airdrop relief supplies to starving Bosnians even as the administration said it was hoping to bring more countries into the operation.

Clinton and U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali issued a joint statement after an hourlong meeting saying they agreed that such drops would be "temporary and supplemental to land convoys" already delivering relief supplies to Bosnia.

Boutros-Ghali also said after the meeting that he was hopeful U.S. forces would hand over control of relief efforts in Somalia to the United Nations "in the next few weeks."

Associated Press

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali speaks to reporters outside the White House after meeting with President Clinton Tuesday afternoon.

On the Bosnian relief effort, Boutros-Ghali said, "We agreed there is no problem. This would be done in complete coordination between the United Nations and the operation." Earlier, the U.N. leader had expressed concerns about a U.S. airdrop operation separate from U.N. peacekeeping efforts.

An announcement on details of the Bosnian relief effort was expected later this week. Clinton said he was confident the operation could go forward without drawing the United States into a deeper engagement which it could not escape.

"There's no combat implications whatever," Clinton said at the start of his Oval Office session with Boutros-Ghali.

His spokeswoman, Dee Dee Myers, said Clinton and the U.N. leader had reached "complete agreement in terms of the necessity of the mission but the details have not yet been worked out."

Myers said the relief planes would fly without air cover, adding "it is our judgment . . . that there will not be too great a risk."

A senior administration official said the United States was consulting with many other countries to see if they want to join in the airdrop. Only when the number of participants is decided will a decision be made on the exact command mechanism, said the official, commenting on a condition of anonymity.

In their joint statement, Boutros-Ghali and Clinton called on all parties of the Bosnian peace talks to come to New York immediately to resume negotiations, which broke off Feb. 11. U.N. envoy Cyrus Vance said Tuesday he hoped talks would resume by the end of this week.

Boutros-Ghali stressed that the bulk of humanitarian aid to the Bosnians would continue to be delivered by trucks, but said the airdrop plan "will reinforce the morale of the people on the ground."

Clinton, asked about the risks of U.S. planes being shot at by anti-aircraft artillery, said he believed "the risks are quite small."

He rejected suggestions that the relief operation could draw the United States into a deeper engagement, saying, "Not at all, because what we're discussing is very different." He said the effort under discussion was "purely

PUBLIC HEARING HELD

City Council approves rezoning for Menard's

Lynn M. Tefft
The Daily Iowan

After a public hearing on the voluntary annexation of a 19.8-acre land tract located southeast of the intersection of Sunset Street and Highway 1 in Iowa City, the Iowa City City Council voted 6-1 Tuesday night to annex and rezone the land.

Developers John and Allegra Dane plan to use the land for the future site of a Menard's, a home improvement supply store.

"Projects like this one are where money is going to come from in the future for things this community needs," Jack Dane, counsel for the developers, said.

Councilor Karen Kubby voted against the annexation and rezoning, citing her aversion to the "strip" pattern of development in southeast Iowa City.

In other business, a public hearing on the proposed fiscal year 1994 city budget elicited comments from several city board members and residents.

"Our experiences from the past make us ask, have you received our complete budget packet?" Iowa City Senior Center Chairwoman Mary Geasland asked the Council.

Geasland invited the Council to visit the center and assess its needs. She added that reductions in its budget will delay complete facility usage and lead to increased costs later on.

"Where do we fit into the big picture? What is fair and equitable?" she asked, contrasting the increases some city departments

Defense motions for mistrial in Rodney King beating case

Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Defense attorneys moved for a mistrial Tuesday in the federal Rodney King beating trial after a day of turmoil involving accusations against a black woman juror and a legal fight over a defense attorney.

U.S. District Judge John G. Davies didn't immediately rule on the request.

The motions capped a hectic day in which opening statements were delayed after a white jury prospect who was excused from the trial accused one of the black jurors of making prejudicial comments about the defense.

The trial was also thrown into turmoil over the question of an attorney's representation of one of the four police officers accused of beating King.

Davies barred attorneys from disclosing what happened during a secret half-hour hearing with the excused prospective juror.

The mistrial motions only became public because one attorney, Paul DePasquale, said in open court he was withdrawing his motion because his representation of defendant Timothy Wind remains uncertain.

"If you decide to join in the motion you can," the judge said wearily. "Enough motions have been

Mayhem provides thrill for slammers

Dave Strahan
The Daily Iowan
Stop the rock concert! They're trying to kill each other!
Oh, I was wrong. I guess they're just slam dancing.

To the uninitiated, slam dancing (also known as moshing or skanking) may seem like violent, almost random aggression. A good description for the phenomenon might be "utter chaos."

"Everyone will start moving in a circle, and you have a total disregard for your body," Warren Pierce, a UI freshman majoring in pre-business said. "You just kind of fall and run into people."

For most, the utter chaos is the appeal.

"It's kind of an all-out madhouse," Dan Verbeten, a UI sophomore majoring in psychology said. "You can't really describe it. It's just craziness."

Despite the fact that slammers bounce off each other with considerable force, it would be a mistake to assume slammers are trying to hurt one another.

"It's all good, clean fun," said Doug Roberson, talent buyer at Gabe's, 330 E. Washington St., where people frequently slam. "It's not like they're trying to kill each other. It's more a different type of dancing," he explained.

Chris Mathiasen, a UI sophomore majoring in pre-business, agreed that slam dancing is pretty much harmless.

"With slam dancing you can go out and release a lot of energy and aggression," he said.

If the thought of flinging yourself into the mosh pit (jargon for the area in front of the concert stage where slammers dance) is still frightening, never fear. Unlike tornadoes, flash floods and food poisoning, slam dancing doesn't often take innocent bystanders by surprise.

Slammers and slam dancing can still be found in mosh pits everywhere, but it is all good, clean fun.

To begin with, you won't encounter slam dancing at a symphony

"It's mostly a hard-core punk kind of thing," Roberson said, "although it kind of became watered down and more for normal people."

Although it takes a certain kind of music to get people slamming, slammers themselves cannot be limited to a specific group. Con-after 23, but occasionally they'll go out and see what happens," Roberson said.

Despite the best of intentions, sometimes "what happens" with slam dancing is that someone gets hurt.

Common slam-dancing injuries include elbows to the teeth, elbows to the head, heads colliding with other heads and broken glasses.

Roberson said that at Gabe's, slam dancing injuries aren't very serious, and that an ice cube wrapped in a napkin is usually all the attention that is needed.

Despite the risks inherent in slamming, slammers are not likely to swap the violence of moshing with the synchronized moves of the country two-step, or any of the two-partner ballroom dances.

"Slamming may not be for everybody," Verbeten conceded, "but it sure is a lot of fun."

"It's not like they're trying to kill each other. It's more a different type of dancing."

orchestra, an opera, a blues concert or a folk festival. For the most part, slamming is confined to places that play music more outside of the mainstream.

Bands that usually spark slamming include Metallica, Alice in Chains, Jesus Lizard, Superchuck, L7 and Cows.

trary to popular opinion, mohawks, leather jackets and goatees do not necessarily indicate slam-dancer status.

Even though you can't distinguish a slammer from his or her personal looks, most happen to be between the ages of 19 and 22.

SUCCESSOR BRINGS FEW CHANGES

New host chosen for 'Masterpiece Theatre'

Larry McShane
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Queen's English of Alistair Cooke gave way Tuesday to the American wit of Russell Baker, the Pulitzer Prize-winning writer named as the second permanent host of "Masterpiece Theatre."

The surprise choice, coming seven months after the 84-year-old Cooke announced his retirement, won't mean a change in the Public Broadcasting Service show's programming or theme music. Baker will simply assume the duties of host and guide for American viewers of the British productions. "If you're not on television, you're not an American," Baker said in explaining his decision. "All Americans want to be on television. ... That was my dreadful secret. I wanted to be on television."

Baker, who said he was a big "Masterpiece Theatre" fan, was chosen after an international search that included hundreds of candidates, said Rebecca Eaton, the program's executive producer. "Masterpiece Theatre" made its debut in January 1971 with Cooke as host, and is the longest-running weekly prime-time dramatic television series.

It has brought to the United States such British productions as "I, Claudius," "Upstairs, Downstairs" and "The Jewel in the Crown."

Baker will keep his column at The New York Times while handling his new job, which begins in October. He has won two Pulitzer Prizes.

While acknowledging that his demeanor and voice are considerably unlike Cooke's, Baker humbly challenged one description of him as the quintessential American.

When approached about the job a year ago, Baker said, he was flattered but unconvinced.

"My reply was 'I'd like to be the man who succeeded the man who succeeded Alistair Cooke,'" Baker confessed.

Video of Des Moines baby girl winner of $100,000 grand prize

Associated Press

DES MOINES — A central Iowa family has cashed in on a cranky baby girl.

Jonathan Andelson and Karin Stein of Kellogg hit the jackpot Sunday night when a home video featuring their 1-year-old daughter, Maya, was chosen as the grand-prize winner on the ABC television show "America's Funniest Home Videos."

Andelson, Stein and Maya, now 3½, appeared on Sunday night's program, during which host Bob Saget named their video as the $100,000 grand-prize winner. They won $10,000 in November when the same video was selected as a first-prize winner on another episode.

The video was filmed because Stein wanted to send a tape of Maya to the girl's grandparents, who live in Costa Rica.

Maya "was in a lousy mood that day," her mother said. She was sitting on the floor, refusing to cooperate.

But when Stein put in a cassette tape of her instrumental group, which plays music native to the Andes Mountains of South America, Maya began to clap, wiggle and dance around.

The family rarely watches television and only recently acquired a TV set, Stein said.

THE ONE THAT GOT AWAY

Iowa man taken to court for freeing town's catfish

Associated Press

SABULA, Iowa — David Dohrn admits he's the one that let the big one get away but insists he meant no offense.

A Sabula magistrate's jury agreed with him after a one-day trial Monday, finding the 33-year-old rural Clinton farmer innocent of charges connected with the town's big fish story.

"I didn't do anything on purpose to offend the people of Sabula. All I did was let the fish live. If there's a moral to that, I don't know what it is," he said.

Dohrn was accused of stealing a 56-pound catfish that had been on display in the municipal fountain last August. In doing so, he was accused of breaking lights in the fountain, causing $700 in damage.

"I don't know what the fines would have been, but they were looking for $700 to fix the lights. They wanted to charge me for that and for stealing the fish," he said.

He said he merely "liberated" the fish and might have paid the fine for minor theft to avoid a court fight. But he got his back up when the city pursued criminal mischief charges, too. He said he never actually entered the fountain except for dipping his arms under the fish and hoisting the beast away.

The fish got there in the first place when Sabula City Councilman Rodney Strube caught it in the Mississippi River. Strube sold it to a local fish processor, which in turn sold it to the city for $40 as a tourist attraction.

It was there a week before Dohrn, who was camping nearby, decided the fish was in distress.

"It was floating on the top, tipped over at a 45-degree angle, like he was going to die," he said. "I thought, if he's going to die, he should be taken to his natural habitat."

Dohrn said he lugged the fish to the river about a block away, waited for the fish to acclimate itself and watched it swim away.

He said he is an avid fisherman but rarely keeps what he catches.

Investors for effect

Many investors are suggesting tax-free municipal bonds as a option if taxes are increased.

Jude S. Auerbach

While the fate of President Clinton's economic proposal is from certain, many investors brokers are scrambling to adjust their portfolios in anticipation of potentially dramatic changes in the nation's tax code.

The proposed changes in income taxes will focus on reducing deductions across the board, as well as a direct increase in the rate charged those in the nation's top tax bracket.

Additional taxes, like the tax on energy, will also take bite out of the pocketbooks of many middle- and upper-income Americans.

Whether taxpayers support president's plan or not, analysts believe the new proposals will end up raising the average American's tax bill.

Investors, brokers plan ahead for effects of tax code changes

Many investors are suggesting tax-free municipal bonds as an option if taxes are increased.

Jude S. Gerbrich
Business Editor

While the fate of President Clinton's economic proposal is far from certain, many investors and brokers are scrambling to adjust their portfolios in anticipation of potentially dramatic changes to the nation's tax code.

The proposed changes in income taxes will focus on reduced deductions across the board as well as a direct increase in the rate charged those in the nation's top tax bracket.

Additional taxes, like the new tax on energy, will also take a bite out of the pocketbooks of many middle- and upper-income Americans.

Whether taxpayers support the president's plan or not, most analysts believe the new proposals will end up raising the average American's tax bill.

Robert Eisthen, a senior research analyst with Security Corp. of Iowa in Cedar Rapids, said that although the new plan is designed to increase revenue for the government, it won't bring much in if most Americans try their best to avoid the new taxes.

"When tax rates rise, people are going to do whatever they can to avoid higher rates," he said. "The idea is to shift to tax-free investments."

One such investment being lauded recently is the tax-free municipal bond. Eisthen said many have already begun to shift their resources into these and similar investments.

"People are headed into tax-free municipal bonds and tax-deferred annuities," he said.

Jeff Barta, an investment representative with Edward D. Jones and Co. in Iowa City, agreed that tax-free bonds were a good idea, but cautioned investors against putting all their eggs in one basket.

"The old adage of diversification never goes out of style," he said.

However, traditional investments may not be a smart move in today's economic situation of low interest rates, low inflation and slow but steady growth, he added.

Barta, like many in the industry, said putting money into certificates of deposit was probably not a good idea because of the extremely low rates they have paid recently.

"If they need the money in a short period of time, and they have to have it, they're adequate," he said.

Eisthen was even more critical of CD's, which have offered very low rates since the Federal Reserve began lowering interest rates throughout the U.S. banking system in response to the recession.

"There's almost no point leaving your money in the bank at 2.5 percent when you can invest it in a high-quality preferred stock at 8 percent," he said.

However, some stocks are to be avoided, the analysts agreed. Although they generally paid big dividends in the 1980s, the stocks of drug companies have come under harsh criticism recently by Clinton for inflating profits.

"The one area that we have avoided in the last 90 days has been the drug-company stocks," Barta said.

For investors searching for tax shelters, it could be a long quest. As more traditional shelters disappear, Eisthen predicted that real estate could again be a useful way to reduce the size of those annual payments to Uncle Sam.

"You'll see a drift toward other kinds of investments like real estate where the passive losses can be a good deduction," he said.

GETTING LEGAL HELP

Commission defends employees against workplace discrimination

IC's Civil Rights Commission and the state Labor Commission help unfairly treated workers.

Thomas Wanat
The Daily Iowan

So, you've been screwed. Minimum wage doesn't add up quick and whether you know you've been cheated out of untold millions or just a couple bucks there is a place to turn.

Due to a large and diverse student population, Iowa City is a sort of melting pot. Because of this diversity and the consistently large labor pool that many local employers have to choose from there is a risk that somewhere, sometime, somebody will be wronged either by discrimination or unfair business practices.

Human Rights Coordinator for the Iowa City Civil Rights Commission Alice Harris said it is against the law to discriminate against someone because of race, color, creed, sex, age, national origin, marital status, sexual preference or physical or mental disability.

"We also handle housing discrimination when a person or family is refused from renting a house or apartment," Harris said.

She urged people to file a complaint with her office in the Civic Center, 410 E. Washington St., if they felt they had been discriminated against in any way.

"It's worth the effort," Harris said. "It is a way to see that justice is served. We do get results."

The confidential process begins after the paperwork with an investigation of the employer by the commission.

Harris explained employers have the opportunity to come to a settlement that would make both sides happy before a full investigation.

If the employer is found guilty after the investigation they can be asked to do a number of things.

"If the employee was terminated, they can be given their job back, or they could be payed compensation for the time that they were unemployed and looking for another job," Harris said.

She said the next step would be a public hearing where everything would go on public record, yet she added that "things don't usually go that far."

She said that the commission's jurisdiction was over the Iowa City area which would exclude problems on the UI campus, which would be handled by the state. Harris added that state complaint forms can be obtained from her office.

Not everyone who has been wronged by their employer has been discriminated against, sometimes the issue is purely financial.

Larry Dawson, assistant to the labor commissioner for the state of Iowa, said at any time his office has over 1,000 cases pending.

"In a year we might recover $250,000 owed by employers," Dawson said.

Dawson said that there are three main choices available to people who feel they are owed money by their employer:

■ Small claims court in their county courthouse, for small amounts.

■ District court with an attorney, for larger amounts.

■ File a complaint with the Labor Commission of Iowa which will provide free representation in a settlement.

"If it can be proven that the employer withheld pay in violation of the law, up to an equal amount of wages can be awarded in punitive damages," Dawson said.

He explained many people have a misunderstanding about labor laws.

"We have a lot of people call us wanting to know what the law says about breaks and lunches," Dawson said. "There isn't any Iowa law that requires either."

Dawson said that problems involving vacation and sick pay are decided according to the precedent set by the employer.

"Iowa is what we call an employment-at-will state," he said. "As long as an employer isn't in violation of a union contract or civil rights they can do things like reduce wages or change schedules."

Anyone with a pay dispute can call the Labor Commission of the state of Iowa at 1-800-JOB-IOWA.

People who feel they have been discriminated against in the workplace can call the Iowa City Civil Rights Commission at 356-5022.

PROJECT RECEIVES LESS FUNDING

Environmental coalition attempts to reduce legislative budget cuts

Timothy Connors
The Daily Iowan

Members of a coalition of 26 statewide environmental groups are struggling to salvage the Resource Enhancement and Protection program from further cuts this year due to legislative budget slashing.

The REAP program was enacted in 1989 to take the place of several other environmental-enhancement programs. At that time, an allocation goal for the program of $300 million with 10 consecutive annual standing appropriations of $30 million was entered into the Iowa Code.

The Iowa Legislature has never met that goal. Funding for the program has dwindled since it received its funding high of $20 million in the 1991 fiscal year, including money from state lottery-ticket sales. During fiscal year 1993 the program will receive a mere $8.5 million.

The Republican leadership in the Legislature has proposed to shave off an additional $3.5 million for the 1994 fiscal year, according to Kathleen Gannon, administrative assistant to the REAP Alliance.

Even though Gov. Terry Branstad's submitted budget calls for another $8.5 million REAP allocation in 1994, Gannon said more than 40 new legislators were elected on a platform to cut the budget and will be difficult to win over.

"I refuse to be anything but optimistic," Gannon said.

The REAP program won the 1992 Renew America Environmental Achievement Award over 118 other state-sponsored programs. REAP allocations are distributed to local government projects in all of Iowa's 99 counties.

Locally REAP money has funded the Johnson County Soil and Conservation Board's efforts to plant trees and native grasses, projects at Lake Macbride State Park, and an exhibit at the UI Museum of Natural History, among other efforts.

The Iowa City Board of Parks and Recreation has received $65,000 from REAP to finance a project to build hiking trails this summer in Ryerson's Woods near the Johnson County Fairgrounds.

REAP Alliance spokeswoman Anita O'Gare said because past REAP projects have been successful, legislators have mistakenly concluded that funding is no longer essential. She said taking away another $3.5 million from the program would be unfair compared to the cuts other programs have sustained.

"That is a disproportional hit on environmental funds," O'Gare said.

INTENTIONAL ABUSE DENIED

Iowa man goes to trial for murder

Douglas Oaks is charged with first-degree murder and aggravated battery to a 3-year-old child.

Associated Press

MORRISON, Ill. — An Iowa man made life "hell" for his girlfriend's 3-year-old son, who was beaten to death last July, a prosecutor told a jury.

Henry County State's Attorney Larry Vandersnick told jurors Monday he'd prove that Douglas Oaks abused Jerry Nelson and eventually beat him to death.

"The last month of Jerry Nelson's life was unlike any normal 3-year-old's," Vandersnick said in opening statements.

Vandersnick said Oaks shook Jerry and slammed him to a floor last July 29. The youngster died of head injuries two days later at a hospital in Iowa City.

"July 29 was total hell for Jerry Nelson," Vandersnick said.

Testimony was to resume today in the trial of Oaks, 26, of Bettendorf, Iowa. He is charged with two counts of first-degree murder and aggravated battery to a child. His girlfriend, 21-year-old Tonya Nelson of Cambridge, Iowa, is awaiting trial on two counts of first-degree murder, aggravated battery of a child, child endangerment and cruelty to children.

Defense attorney Gene Stockton told jurors that Oaks never intended to injure the toddler and intended to throw the boy on a mattress.

"If he accidentally missed the mattress, he didn't commit murder," Stockton said.

Vandersnick's key evidence was a police videotape of Oaks made the day Jerry was injured.

On the tape, Oaks said he became frustrated with Jerry after the boy wet his pants. Oaks said he threw the boy across the room toward a foam mattress but the child struck his head on the floor.

"I grabbed him and I threw him, but I didn't want him to get hurt," Oaks said on the tape.

Cambridge paramedic Michael Weis described for jurors the large bruises and symptoms of brain injury he found on the boy as he took him to the hospital last July. The boy had 18 bruises, a broken collarbone and brain damage.

Supervisors hold public budget meeting

Victoria Forlini
The Daily Iowan

In accordance with a new law passed by the Iowa Legislature, the Johnson County Board of Supervisors Tuesday night held the first of two public meetings specifically dealing with the fiscal year 1994 budget. If no complaints are received, the budget may finally be approved within the next few weeks.

"I've never seen such a terrible budget year," said Supervisor Betty Ockenfels.

The supervisors have been working with the department heads of Johnson County since late last year to develop the budget. But with a property tax freeze in effect, prioritizing the $28 million budget has been difficult.

There is a projected increase that will be brought in by property taxes because of new properties in the county, but that amount is not expected to ease budget problems, according to one supervisor.

"With a budget the size of ours," said Supervisor Patricia Meade, "the increase just isn't very much." Ockenfels said each department had legitimate requests for increases in their budgets but because of monetary restraints some "didn't get nearly as much as they need."

Although the going has been rough, no complaints regarding proposed expenditures in the tentative budget were voiced at the meeting which was attended by about 40 Johnson County employees as well as the public.

Rusty Martin of Iowa City voiced his concern that the board recently voted down a proposal to televise the meetings, an issue that has been receiving much attention recently.

Meade said that the start-up costs and maintenance of such a service is something the county cannot worry about right now.

"It's difficult when you're weighing the requests of human services and that of televised meetings," she said.

Ockenfels added that priority must go to taking care of the people in the county.

The second public meeting will be held Tuesday, March 2 at 5:30 p.m. in the Johnson County Administration Building, 913 S. Dubuque St.

When the United States and the United Kingdom stand face to face each first notices how ridiculous the other appears. Looking closer, we notice our common features and soon we see that what we share is precisely what magnifies and distorts our perceptions. With less in common, we would have fewer misunderstandings.

Our structures are mirror images of each other, that is, they are reversed. My flat in London was on the second story of a two-story house, or what Brits call the "first floor." The hot-water tap was on the right of my sink and the cold on the left. Doorknobs turned counterclockwise to open and light switches flipped up to turn off and so on. Of course, all forms of traffic keep to the left. Brits and Yanks both are therefore always on the wrong side of the street and always come to the same conclusion — the other lives in a backwards country.

"What's it like then," an English drinking buddy asked me, "to live in a country so young, yet already so outdated it clings only to the English system of measurement?"

"About the same as living in the land of Shakespeare," I replied, "where most of his descendants shun performances of 'The Tempest' for reruns of 'American Gladiators.'"

I was for real or not. "We have a risky habit," I explained, "of saying what we actually mean."

This is why our allegedly nonclass-conscious society has a blatant, clearly defined class system, based simply and entirely on money, whereas John Major's allegedly classless society has an almost esoteric class system based entirely on things like your great-great-grandfather was and whether you pronounce 30 as "thur-tee" or "furdy." Although it is possible to climb the social ladder in England, it is often regarded as a vulgar aberration.

"You Americans," said a co-worker named Belinda, "how can you define class by money? Can't you see the importance of how one is raised or proper background?"

"But what about John Major?" I asked. "He grew up in Brixton and never even went to University."

Belinda smiled at me long enough to say — without actually saying it — my point exactly.

Language differences
The lighthearted ribbing is called "taking the piss." When someone is taking the piss out of you there is no need for you to "get pissed off" — which has the same meaning in both countries. Just tell them to "piss off," or get lost.

None of this is to be confused with "getting pissed," or drinking, which is what we often do to facilitate taking the piss out of each other. Getting pissed is not the same as getting wasted. Brits get pissed, while Americans get wasted. Getting wasted infers drinking so many tiny glasses of cold, fizzy, watery, diet beer that you either throw up on your date and sleep in a bathroom or drive your car into a tree. Getting pissed means drinking so many big glasses of warm, flat, strong, belt-busting beer that you either throw up on your date and sleep in the "loo" or stumble, leaning on trees for support along the way. Once you're used to bulky British beer the American stuff tastes, as we would say, like piss.

But thanks to mega-million dollar marketing, some Brits are learning to drink piss. My friend Fiona and I were sipping real ale in a cozy 18th-century London pub surrounded by young Brits sporting clothing covered with "American" slogans — that no American would be caught dead wearing — and frantically swigging Budweiser long necks. Their synthetic caps and jackets represented almost every metropolitan sports franchise in the United States, often with the wrong colors.

The view from the lead-glass windows was crowned by a jumble of incandescent Pizza Hut and 7-11 signs. A television blaring in one corner of the pub featured Madonna lasciviously and methodically plumbing her various orifices.

"I hate America," Fiona said in my ear. I told her that at times I almost didn't blame her. Fiona continued, "I've always hated America. At University we used to gather and exchange reasons for hating America." Then she reassured me that she liked me before pausing to say, "Actually, I've always liked all the Americans I've ever met."

I tried to explain to Fiona that she liked America without even knowing it, that her impressions were distorted, and that she was seeing only a parody of American culture. I tried to tell her about warm days in the Wrigley Field bleachers, about the Mexican omelet at the Hamburg Inn No. 2 in Iowa City, and about the Replacements. I tried to tell her about good things and real people.

Fiona couldn't hear me. Madonna was too loud. Fiona pointed at the television and said, "I want to go to America, buy a gun, and begin my work by blasting a hole in her and in Billy Ray Cyrus' head!"

"Baby," I said, reaching to take her hand, shouting over the din of the entertainment, "believe me, you'd make a real American."

Editor's note: Dan Raeburn studied on the Iowa Regents' London Program in 1989 and graduated from the UI in 1991. He worked as an editorial assistant in London last year.

ACT MAKES PRESENTATION

Project SchoolNet unveiled at IC School Board meeting

The project would link all schools in the district eventually.

Ferguson added that several local businesses, including ACT and National Computer Systems, have expressed an interest in contributing funds and services to the project.

William Pepper
The Daily Iowan

"I do believe we are blessed in this community with a lot of capability we may not have tapped yet," Ferguson said.

The Iowa City School Board gave the nod of approval to a new plan to increase technology infrastructure in the school district at its regular meeting Tuesday night.

The board gave approval to allow ACT to begin Phase I of the project which includes installing a file server and electronic mail gateway at the Central Administrative Offices, 509 S. Dubuque St., immediately. The remaining phases, installing equipment at each of the schools in the district, would be completed as funding from private or district sources becomes available.

Richard Ferguson, president of American College Testing, unveiled "Project SchoolNet," a four-phase program to link all the schools in the district to an electronic mail service and a file server to distribute information via computer.

Ferguson added that in comparison to other districts throughout the country, Iowa City's technology levels are currently at the same level, or slightly behind most other districts.

ACT began working with the district a year ago to develop a plan for the information network.

He said that for the district to remain on the cutting edge of technology, this project is vital. "It is definitely not a frill."

"I believe very deeply in the need for local businesses to be involved in the schools," Ferguson said.

Superintendent Barb Grohe said the project was an exciting new venture for the district.

The total cost of the project, including equipment and software, is estimated to be between $388,000 and $437,000.

Search is on for a girl to take to work

April 28 is "Take a Girl to Work Day."

Originally intended only for New York, the effort to invite girls from ages 9 to 15 into the workplace is now being organized by companies all across the country.

The purpose is simple: to show girls what people do at work and let them know that adults take their ideas seriously.

Studies have been showing that girls are free-spirited talkers brimming with self-confidence up to about age 9; they lose a lot of self-esteem by the time they reach high school.

I can vouch for that. The idea to take girls into work two months from now originated with the Ms. Foundation for Women. The idea to take girls into work at all originated with parents.

My siblings and I have been going to our parents' offices since we were old enough to realize Dad was gone part of the day.

Dad's jobs have always involved huge machines (usually hydraulic presses) with lots of men in safety goggles pushing just the right buttons on control panels that could make any airline pilot jealous. Every so often we would get to go with Dad into "the shop" and look at the presses, climb the scary steel staircases and swipe earplugs from a dispenser. On weekends, if no one was around, we could pick through the scrap buckets and find hardened plastic pieces that we imagined were shaped like treble clefs or lions. We'd all get to wear our own safety glasses and we'd trip around the plant, a little pack of nerds in search of slide rules.

Then we would have to put the glasses away and follow Dad into his office while he talked to his boss or co-workers. He still has an enormous gray steel desk, set back in an office surrounded by blond wood and frosted panes of glass near the ceiling. The top-middle drawer has always held a roll of Pep-O-Mint Lifesavers and the same drafting brush he used in junior college. The top left drawer used to have a mug or two we'd given him for Father's Day or a birthday. Behind his green vinyl chair are pictures of his once-young family.

We'd sit there and snoop and wait for Dad, my sister and I taking turns dictating memos and punching the buttons for different phone lines. We criticized the boss's wife's choice of office artwork and stuck our fingers in the dirt of the dragon plant Mom gave Dad, checking on the soil moisture.

We used to visit one of my Mom's jobs after school and during the summer, riding up on our bikes and going through the back door, plugging quarters into a machine for cold bottles of Pepsi. Mom worked in a social-work center for migrant workers and brought home the best Mexican recipes, but we only liked tacos back then.

We'd take our pop and say hello, shyly, to all of her co-workers and then make our way up front to her office. She had a big gray desk, too, but her drawers were always full of Lipton Cup-a-Soups and Triscuits. We'd sit and eat and read her phone. Most of the clients in Mom's office spoke Spanish and she was still learning, so she had about five different phrases written out on the bottom of her phone.

"Buenos Dias ... Good Day. Buenos Tardes ... Good Afternoon. Un momento, por favor, no hablo Espanol."

One of my old newspapers had a program that allowed top carriers to come in and work with the editorial staff for a day. The managing editor walked around with a little shadow, in an oxford shirt and tie, and showed the young feller the newsroom and what everybody did. While the real m.e. worked, the junior m.e. sat and watched and asked questions.

I liked this idea but worried that the kid would get bored, or, worse, lung cancer, since the m.e.'s office was the designated smoking area for the newsroom. Then I talked to the guy in charge of promotions.

"So, what did you and your little protegee do all day?"

"We sat around my office and talked a little, then we went downtown and had some beers and bought comic books."

Sometimes, in Mom's or Dad's offices, I'd sit back in her or his chair and try to see what they had to see every day. That is why I am now in journalism school.

That is why I am also opening up the opportunity for any young female journalist in the Iowa City area to come to The Daily Iowan for a day. I already talked to our publisher and he thinks it's a great idea. Check your calendar and ask your parents and write in and explain why you would like to come in on "Take a Girl to Work Day."

I can't promise the stars, but you will get to work with computers, multiline phones, copy machines and lots and lots of really cool office supplies. You will also get to meet really fun people and ask Mitch Martin what it's like to work with me.

Together, we can talk about what it's like to work with men and women in the most high-stress job in the labor force. We can go to lunch.

And we can discuss what you'll do in a few years when you Take a Girl to Work yourself.

UISA ELECTIONS

Making a difference through representation

Even though the results are not official yet, there will be a new UI administration for 1993-94, and it will be led by John Gardner and Micah Hobart. There was a slight increase in the number of votes this year, but the overall interest doesn't seem to have grown much since the 1992 election that brought Dusty Wilcox to the UISA presidency.

A year ago I wrote a similar editorial on a UISA election that was decided by a margin of less than 10 votes. What made the difference was that in 1992 the disinterest was even more evident.

Last year I also wondered whether past scandals had turned people away from the UISA elections. The restructuring of student government was intended in part to fix all that, and Dusty Wilcox and Maricar Tinio's tenure could easily be called successful; this year the process did attract the students' attention.

Maybe this was due to controversial candidates or increased media coverage, but I heard many people talking about this year's election and wondering about its results. But was that reflected in the ballot boxes? No.

The debate held the week before the election focused on the key element in this discussion: Who or what would represent the students better.

Back in my undergraduate years in another school, our student elections were simply a battlefield for young politician wannabees, each a party member and officially representing his or her party's interests. On one hand, campaign money flowed in, media coverage was intense and voter turnout was heavy, partly because the students did feel represented by the major political parties, and because the elections were a major catalyst for national elections. On the other hand, though, the debates never dealt with university-related topics; rather, they were on national economy and foreign policy.

That's why when I came to the UI and saw an independent student government which purported to be just that, the idea seemed truly attractive. But because of that same independence, the level of representation of the UISA is very low. Very few people know the candidates, very few know what they think, what they stand for. What's worse, there is an obvious ignorance of what student government simply is.

Student government must be turned into what it's supposed to be: a body that represents the true majority of the UI and not just a ballot majority. The best way to achieve that is for the new administration to reach out now, not only when campaigning, and make student government and its activities a topic of conversation, a real representative of at least 51 percent of the UI population. If they do that, they will become a positive turning point in UI student government. They have the chance to do it. And I wish them good luck.

ECONOMIC PLAN

An elephant never forgets

Republicans are taking a big risk in dismissing President Clinton's economic proposals out of hand. Their current strategy seems merely to be repetition of the call for more spending cuts without offering any specifics. If the Clinton plan fails, GOP candidates stand to reap substantial rewards at the polls. If the president is successful, however, this era will be seen as a watershed marking the demise of the Republican Party and untold good fortune for the new Democratic Party.

The Republican leadership seems content to hem and haw, while refusing accountability for anything. This strategy sets them up for a political bonanza should Clinton fail. It even seems that they have allowed themselves reason to hope for national failure for their own political gain. By allowing themselves to sink to such a rhetorical low, the Republican Party does a disservice to itself and all Americans. As the loyal minority, they have an obligation to debate passionately as well as reasonably, but so far have shown no inclination to do so.

On Sunday, Clinton challenged his detractors to put up or shut up, saying they should propose their own spending reductions and not merely "talk about doing better." The administration's call was highlighted last week during Senate questioning of Leon Panetta, director of the White House Office of Management and Budget. Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., held aloft a sheet of paper, excitedly claiming it contained 217 cuts which could eliminate nearly $260 billion from the deficit. When Panetta requested to see the list, however, Lott refused.

If this is to be Republican policy, Iowa Sen. Charles Grassley and Reps. Jim Leach, Jim Lightfoot and Jim Nussle should be particularly aware of the consequences of their participation in the charade. If they really believe themselves to be in touch with their constituents, they should think again. According to The Des Moines Register's Iowa Poll, Iowans back the Clinton plan almost 2 to 1, with 76 percent believing that the plan will benefit the nation as a whole.

Lightfoot and Nussle narrowly won tight election battles with superior funding, while Leach ran essentially unopposed when no prominent Democratic candidate stepped forward. Considering that Clinton carried the state last fall, GOP lawmakers should be concerned at least with their own viability.

Clinton made a good call and Republicans should start representing themselves accordingly. The voting public decided that the answer to gridlock was not to "clean the House," but to install a new president. While the GOP may not agree with that decision, it is not their prerogative to quit on the job.

Overt racism alleged at Carver-Hawkeye Arena

To the Editor:

In the five years I have spent at the University of Iowa, I have regularly attended women's basketball games. The crowds have consistently been friendly, supportive and diverse — young children and senior citizens are typically as common as students. However, at recent games I have been bothered by what I can only interpret as a pattern of racism on the part of the arena staff, in particular, the ushers in the yellow jackets who are stationed at about the 15th row before and during the games. Their role appears to be to keep watch over the reserved seat sections, making sure that nonreserved ticket holders don't illegally slip into those special seats. At a number of recent games, I have watched as several of those ushers let white fans go by without checking their tickets, while forcing fans whose skin is black to produce theirs. In one incident, an usher went to where several young black men were already seated and made them move up about 15 rows to the unreserved section. Their former seats remained empty for the rest of the game.

This pattern raises several issues. The most important and troubling is the clear pattern of racism. Is checking the tickets of people of color an arena policy, or simply a personal racist decision? Since I've been watching, I've yet to see a white person asked to actually produce a ticket. They are sometimes asked if they have reserved seats, but are always allowed to pass on their word alone. I'm appalled to see such overt racism in action at a women's basketball game.

The second issue concerns the reserved seating policy in general. When attendance at a women's basketball game is only 2,000 in an arena that holds 14,000, why force half of those fans to sit 20 rows up, when many seats remain empty nearer the court? On the whole, the fans who attend women's basketball games seem to be fair and well behaved. I have never seen anyone refuse to leave a reserved seat when the real ticket holder appeared; why worry about it at all? The crowd's presence closer to the court might give the team an extra advantage, as well as make the game a more pleasurable experience for fans. That more pleasant environment may in turn draw more fans to the games, which are suffering sagging attendance in spite of an excellent season. At least call off the guards at half time, when it is clear that those reserved ticket holders aren't going to show up. And if the policy is going to be enforced, enforce it uniformly over all skin colors.

I hope that the pattern of racism that I and others have begun to notice in Carver-Hawkeye Arena is an individual rather than a policy problem, and that the Women's Athletic Department will put a stop to it. I would hate to think that any University of Iowa organization, much less one that trades on the talents of people of color, would allow racism to flourish within their ranks.

Women's Athletics Department responds

Dear Laurie:

Thank you for your letter of Feb. 12 regarding your interpretation of what appears to you to be racism by members of our staff during women's basketball games. We are always interested in hearing of concerns. It may be helpful for you to know that contrary to what you have observed, problems have arisen when general admission ticket holders sit in reserved seats. Reserved Goal Card holders complain and object to having to ask people to move from seats they have paid for. They feel they should be able to show up at any time during the contest and be able to occupy their seat without creating a disturbance to the fans around them.

You point to a situation where when an usher went to where several young black men were already seated, and made them move up about 15 rows to the unreserved section. We believe you are referring to a situation where the young men, male student-athletes who receive free admission to the game, were sitting in a reserved section when their free admission grants them general seating only. Our ushers are familiar with our fans and recognize general areas where these fans typically sit. We attempted to correct this seating situation at the beginning of the season, but these young men continue to sit in reserved seats.

It is common procedure to check the tickets of those fans our ushers don't recognize as having reserved seats in a particular section. We check tickets held by people regardless of race and we feel your perceived observations of racism are unwarranted. We will, however, keep a close eye on all areas of game management, including spectator seating, to assure no person or group of individuals is treated unfairly. Our track record shows our Women's Athletics Department is committed to equal opportunity and diversity.

We appreciate you expressing your concern and hope that you will continue to support the Hawkeyes.

Sex, censorship and videotapes

To the Editor:
In Nov. 1991 the University of Iowa banned the showing of "Zum Klo" on campus. The university administration was responding to a complaint by some students who thought this film for a German class and were upset because of the depiction of gay men having sex. Even after the state of Iowa ruled that the film was legal, the UI administration still refused to allow the film to be shown. We in the International Socialist Organization chose to challenge the university administration's censorship by organizing a public screening here on campus. Because there was no support for the administration's decision to censor the film, they backed down just hours before the screening. About 150 students, faculty and other people from the Iowa City community showed up for the screening. Some were aware the film had been lifted, others were not and were prepared to defend free speech on campus.

This past week the university received complaints again. This time it was for the presentation by an Franklin Evans of some of his work in a UI Colloquium course in which a short film was shown that included a scene depicting oral sex between two men. In the course of events over the last week, this new controversy was compared to the "Zum Klo" controversy by the DI article (Feb. 9, "UI Main Library Relieved ...") points out the university does not allow "Zum Klo" to be checked out of the library by either students or faculty. It is therefore impossible for this to be used as course material. This is clearly censorship!

In Feb. 10 letter to faculty teaching assistants, Interim Dean Judith P. Aikin warns instructors against showing potentially controversial subject matter in class and being sensitive to students' views (read: avoid anything that reminds people we live in a society where some people have fewer rights than others). She is asking, in other words, that instructors exercise censorship in choosing course materials based on whether the sensitive issues to some people are not.

In the debate over political correctness, the victims of oppression based on race, gender and sexual orientation are blamed for fighting against those who have the power.

It became clear that the German film has been effectively re-banned. As the DI article (Feb. 9, "UI Main Library Relieved...") points out, the university does not allow "Taxi Zum Klo" to be checked out of the library by either students or faculty. Not the whole truth

To the Editor:
(At the time of this writing) it has been almost two weeks since a video displaying two men having oral sex was shown to the Colloquium class in the school of Art and Art History.

We have been told that the university is looking more closely at the matter because several parents and students have complained.

As a student in that class I have had a first-hand look at what has become a circus of misrepresentation and confusion.

First and foremost it must be explained that despite what the class instructor (Megan O'Connell) may say, the students in the class were instructed that they were not to leave the class until they were dismissed. Colloquium is a class graded almost completely on attendance and Miss O'Connell made it quite clear on the very day that the video was shown that we were not to leave the class early. However, when talking with the media, O'Connell stated that students could have left the class without losing any points. O'Connell made a feeble attempt in class to save face by telling the class that we have always been free to leave but that for the purpose of setting up parameters she had told us that it was rude to leave class early. On this point there is very little question. You said it Megan. Live with it. Please don't insult our intelligence and don't try to tell any university administrators any lies because they will know the truth.

Now, I will concede that the showing of a video containing sex acts may not be outside the boundaries of correct class procedure if students are told ahead of time that some material may be offensive and are given the chance to leave class. But that is not what happened. This is not what is or isn't pornography (that's semantics). It is not a condemnation of the gay lifestyle. Those people have a right to their private lives and that's their business. But it is an issue of what we should have to be forced to see in class.

Megan seems to be very proud of the so-called discussion forum which we had in class. But in truth this forum was a complete joke. It was more of a defense than a discussion forum.

O'Connell had five homosexuals sit up at the front of the class and had the students come one by one to the front of the class and wait in line to ask the panel questions. Each panelist tried to answer the questions and then the next student asked a question. There was no chance for the students to discuss anything, they simply asked things. The panelists were constantly chastising any student who disagreed with anything about the video presentation. O'Connell did her best to sidestep every question as to her teaching ideas and stuck to the premise that we could not be good art students if we did not accept the entire world as good.

This three-ring circus did exactly what O'Connell hoped that it would, it lost the main issue in the even greater issues of homosexuality.

O'Connell was never forced to defend herself. In fact, any students who disagreed with her or the panelists were the people who were forced to defend themselves. We could go on with the mockery of our intelligence which took place in that class but it is not needed. We know the truth, Megan. And now the rest of the campus does too. Those investigating the matter should dig deeper than O'Connell's comments because she has proven already that she will lie and twist those lies to suit herself.

Tolerance urged over temper

To the Editor:
It concerns me as a person living in the American democracy that Anglo-Saxon Christians attempt to say their culture is the objective reality of democratic society. It worries me when someone (i.e. Frank Evans) who has dedicated much talent to charity projects fighting disease and ignorance gets punished and his art labeled as evil in newsprint. To me the word "pornographic" means evil, so if art is called pornographic, it means bad or evil art. Do you see?

In my culture I learned that there are many other cultures and that it is a virtue to be tolerant. I can be at peace seeing how an artist expresses in images the concept of two people enjoying each other. Just because I saw "Nine 1/2 Weeks" does not mean I was converted to seeking to buy a motorcycle.

I wish the Anglo-Saxon Christians could hear themselves sometimes the way that others hear them. Much of the human world is not like them. It is not hostile to simply ask for calmer voices and more emotional tolerance, is it?

Hilariously liberal, sick and immoral views

To the Editor:

In response to Kim Painter's article, "A shocker — or just the same old, same old?" I believe Ms. Painter and The Daily Iowan, for that matter, have displayed their one-sided, hilariously liberal, sick and immoral views. Kim, even though you are a proud lesbian, and you wish to press your ideals through such propaganda as the DI, well, that's just fine. Freedom of speech and freedom of the press are things that make this country great. However, I am also free to decide whether or not to buy a DI and read Kim Painter's article. My point is, a freshman is not free to decide which days he/she can attend class without it affecting their grade. Of course Kim is underlining the fact that the film showed gays, thus the big reaction. This is where (you are) wrong. I believe most heterosexuals would be offended in the presentation of a straight pornographic film. Put the blame where the blame is due. The students of the class should have been forewarned as to what was going to be shown. But most of all, when one pays for an education at a state school, I don't feel homosexual, oral sex should be included in the curriculum.

Doing without the violence

To the Editor:

As a member of a medical battalion I lived for weeks in close quarters and never had any problem with gay soldiers. One needn't be gay (I'm not) to oppose the discrimination and violence they face. I was saddened when a gay sailor was recently beaten so badly his mother had to identify his body by a tattoo.

I support Clinton's decision to lift the ban on gays in uniform. But I'd prefer an alternative. How about a worldwide ban on humans entering the military. War is hell and from my perspective the military is an instrument of Satan designed to create hell on Earth.

Opportunities for economic development are being lost as nations continue wasting trillions of dollars on weapons, damaging the environment while killing and maiming thousands of people every year.

With God's help aren't we humans intelligent enough to negotiate peaceful solutions to our problems? By replacing hate and revenge with love and forgiveness we could all learn to live together making the goal of complete international disarmament possible someday.

Church does not 'rule,' but 'teaches'

To the Editor:

Ms. Painter's column on the Catholic Church amounts to Ms. Painter's assessment that the Church is doomed to "extinction," is now in a "spiritual crisis" and needs her advice to survive. One might wonder how the Church managed for almost 2,000 years without her counsel.

Ms. Painter says that the Church's "rulings" on abortion, homosexuality, woman priests, etc. . . are "increasingly difficult for the faithful to accept." First, the Church does not "rule;" it teaches. The Church instructs its members in matters of faith and morals. Second, the faithful, by definition, accept the church's teachings. This is especially true when the teachings are more difficult to understand — because it is only then that acceptance is truly a matter of faith.

Ms. Painter does not write, in fact, of the faithful; she writes of those who reject the Church's teaching and the authority through which it teaches (the Pope). In short she writes of herself, and people like herself, who place their faith in really solid things like Bill Clinton, or Women's Lib — or themselves.

Ms. Painter needn't worry about the Church and its future. There are gloomy spots around us, to be sure (there are lots of Painter types calling themselves Catholic, for example). But Ms. Painter should try not to be so Western-centric. The Church continues to grow in Africa, in India and other parts of the world. Ms. Painter should remember that Catholic means universal. It has been and will be around a touch longer than she.

Proportional representation

To the Editor:

Mr. Franzen in his letter (Jan. 21 DI) was correct in supporting proportional representation (PR) for the election of members of the House of Representatives. PR is the only electoral system that adheres to the principle of one person, one vote.

But I disagree with Mr. Franzen on one point. PR should not be implemented for the House of Representatives. Rather, PR should be implemented first at the local level for city councils and county boards of supervisors. Through such local use, people would become more familiar with the workings of PR, thus building a popular base of support for its application at the state and federal level.

An immediate example of the benefits of PR if it were applied to Iowa City and Johnson County would be more equitable representation of Republicans on the city council and the county board of supervisors. Additionally, perhaps even the Johnson County Green Party would garner representation to these bodies. All parties would be represented in proportion to the votes they receive.

"A majority of the electors would always have a majority of the representatives; but a minority of the electors would always have a minority of the representatives," wrote John Stuart Mill, the English political economist, philosopher and early advocate of PR in his book, "Considerations on Representative Government."

PR is a means through which the people can directly provide themselves with legislators who are more fully representative of their opinions and interests.

Carver Scholars Program
$3,600 Scholarships

If you have "...literally pulled yourself up by your bootstraps and lived the American dream," you may be eligible for a $3,600 Carver Scholarship.

The Roy J. Carver Trust has made a number of two-year, $3,600 scholarships available to students who have persevered through unusual circumstances that normally might have held a student back from receiving a degree.

To be eligible you must:

- ★ Have persevered through unusual circumstances
- ★ Have completed at least 60 hours with a 2.8 or above cumulative GPA
- ★ Be starting your junior year at The University of Iowa in August of 1993
- ★ Have graduated from an accredited Iowa high school
- ★ Be a U.S. citizen

Financial need is considered; applicants must file a Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) in addition to completing the Carver Scholars Program application. The application deadline is April 1, 1993.

To obtain the Carver Scholars Program application (which includes application procedures), contact your undergraduate college or the Scholarship Department, Office of Student Financial Aid, The University of Iowa, 208 Calvin Hall, Iowa City, Iowa 52242-1315, (319) 335-1458.

humanitarian and quite limited."
A senior administration official said the supplies would be dropped on areas controlled by Serbs, Croats and Muslims, likely reducing the risks of Serbian attacks on the relief planes.
Also discussed in the Oval Office meeting were the situations in Somalia and other trouble spots around the world, including El Salvador, Angola, Haiti and Mozambique, Boutros-Ghali said.

The United States is anxious to turn over the Somali relief operation to the United Nations and bring home most of the remaining 17,000 U.S. troops.
"We'd like to see this happen as quickly as possible but as smoothly as possible, and we'll continue to work with the United Nations to make the transition happen as quickly as possible," Myers said.

Pentagon spokesman Bob Hall said the military would take "whatever measures ... that we felt necessary to protect our troops."

made."
The mistrial motions suggested that Davies had decided to allow the accused black woman to remain on the jury.
"The mistrial motion was made on the basis of the judge's determination," is all that attorney Michael Stone would say.
Attorney Harland Braun said the judge had barred comment because "it's such a sensitive issue and we're in such an uncharted area." He said he had never experienced a similar trial situation.
Davies delayed the sequestration of the jury for a day and said opening statements would not begin before Thursday. He told prospective alternate jurors to return today.

Four white policemen — Wind, Laurence Powell, Theodore Brisen and Stacey Koon — are charged with violating the civil rights of King, a black motorist, in a March 3, 1991, beating after a high-speed chase. The beating was videotaped by a bystander.
A state jury that included no blacks acquitted the four of most charges last year in Simi Valley. The verdicts sparked three days of deadly riots in the Los Angeles area.

The federal jury, which was sworn late Monday, included two blacks after the defense lost a bid to remove a black man because the move seemed racially based.
Defense lawyer Ira Salzman rocked the trial with his disclosure that the excused juror had come forward to accuse a black woman seated on the jury of making prejudicial comments.
"This is an attempt to provoke a mistrial after the jury is sworn because the defense is unhappy with the composition of the jury," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Steven Clymer.

BUDGET

"If you give them less than inflation, the fact is you are cutting education," Arnould said. "You have played a political game with the kids of this state."
Rep. Steve Grubbs, R-Davenport, pointed to big Republican gains in last November's elections, gains he said came because voters are ready for the Legislature to begin dealing with budget deficits estimated as high as $408 million.
"You just don't get it," Grubbs said. "You were whipped at the polls last year because of your $408 million deficit."

The school spending fight was the first time legislators have had to set school spending since last year's budget deal eliminated a spending formula that automatically increased state aid.
House Majority Leader Brent Siegrist, R-Council Bluffs, said legislators can't begin to fix state budget woes until they get a handle on school spending. That's because it's such a large part of the budget.
"What we're trying to do here is one part of ending up with a balanced budget," Siegrist said.

The fight has also taken on political significance. The Senate was left in Democratic hands after last November's elections, but Republicans gained a slender majority in the House.
Under last year's budget agreement, the Legislature had until Feb. 11 to bargain a school finance plan but missed that deadline by 12 days.

received with the Senior Center's decrease.
Geasland said the increasing senior citizen population in Iowa City makes further development of the center necessary, but it cannot occur unless the city takes action by amending the budget.
She added many private donations and volunteer help are exercised by the center but eventually those sources will fail to meet increasing needs.

Grant Wood Neighborhood Association President Mary Lewis petitioned the Council to budget for an elevated walkway over Highway 1, presenting signatures from the association and Iowa City school district members, as well as other concerned residents.
Having to cross Highway 1 to get to school threatens the safety of many children, Lewis said, adding that many elderly cross the highway to get to the Sycamore Mall Shopping Center as well.

"We need a safe crossing for everyone," she said. "We cannot be put on the waiting list."
Grant Wood Elementary School Principal Paul Davis agreed. "I think something needs to be done."
The Council will discuss the public input and possible changes to the budget at its March 1 work session and vote to accept the budget on March 2. The budget is due for state approval by March 15.

Separate trial ordered in Bengals' rape case

SEATTLE (AP) — A federal judge has ordered a separate trial to determine the validity of a key piece of evidence in a lawsuit filed by a Spokane woman who says she was raped by Cincinnati Bengals players in 1990.

U.S. District Judge Walter McGovern scheduled a jury trial March 22 on the evidence; a document signed by Victoria C. acknowledging receipt of $30,000 — $3,000 each from 10 players.

Attorneys for the 20 current and former players named in the lawsuit say the document releases all of the accused from liability. The release document, prepared by Cincinnati attorney James Perry, was signed Oct. 5, 1991.

Victoria C. has said a page was added to the document after she signed it and that she agreed to keep quiet, but did not release anyone from liability.

No. 18 Hawkeyes, Lions tip off again

John Shipley
 The Daily Iowan

Under NCAA rules, college basketball teams have to take off at least one day a week. Not a bad rule, Tom Davis says. His team has always taken a day off.

But when you play three games in one week, it's tough finding time to take off.

No. 18 Iowa will host Penn State tonight in Carver-Hawkeye Arena at 7 p.m., two days after beating the Nittany Lions in College Park and three days before hosting Michigan State. The Hawkeyes took Tuesday off, deciding they'd rather have an extra day to prepare for the Spartans.

Why not? They just beat Penn State on the road by 16 points.

But Davis isn't taking this one for granted.

"We didn't beat them soundly, even though the final score may have made it look like an easy win," Davis said of the Hawkeyes' 74-58 victory over the Lions on Monday. "Anybody that observed that game saw a 20-point lead cut down to virtually nothing."

The Hawkeyes (17-6, 6-5) took a 46-26 halftime lead at College Park, only to see the Lions scrape back to within 56-53 midway through the second half on a 23-5 spurt. Freshman Rashaan Carlton had the last 10 points of the run.

"The way Penn State played us in the second half is enough to get your attention," Davis said.

Senior off guard Val Barnes had a career night Monday, scoring 33 points on 11-of-12 shooting, including six 3-pointers. Asked after the game if he was in the mythical 'zone,' Barnes said no.

"I was curious about that response," Davis said. "I guess it depends on how you look at yourself as a player. He's not very demonstrative about his talents. But whatever he was in, I'd like to see him in it again."

Davis said he doesn't plan on any changes for tonight, though he suspects Lions coach Bruce Parkhill might make at least one lineup change.

"Carlton played real well off the bench," Davis said. "He gave them some good production."

Carlton finished Monday with 13 points, including 3 of 5 3-pointers. He had 14 points against Michigan and 16 against Illinois last week.

Center John Amaechi finished with 17 and DeRon Hayes added 15 for Penn State (6-15, 1-12).

"They have good balance," Davis said. "They have Amaechi, who's certainly an inside force, and then they have guys that can stick it from the outside."

Acie Earl had 13 points and 10 rebounds for Iowa. Wade Lookingbill added 11 points, scoring in double figures for the fifth time in the last six games.

Iowa has now won three straight, and two straight on the road. The three-game streak is their longest since losing Chris Street in a car accident Jan. 19.

No. 1 Hoosiers bite the bullet

Perfect conference run ends

Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Jamie Skelton will never make any All-American teams. But at least one coach would vote for him based on the way he plays two nights of the year.

"Skelton gets my vote for all-time All-American against us," said Indiana coach Bob Knight after Skelton hit critical 3-point shots at the end of regulation and with 40 seconds left in overtime of Ohio State's 81-77 upset of the top-ranked Hoosiers. "If he played Indiana 10 times a year, he'd break Jerry Lucas' scoring record here."

Ohio State, winner of only three of its last 11 games, needed several big plays down the stretch to pick up its third victory over a No. 1 team in as many meetings over the last decade.

With the score tied at 77, Skelton, who led Ohio State with 22 points, was wide open from the top of arc and hit his fourth 3-pointer of the game to put Ohio State ahead 80-77.

Lawrence Funderburke later added a free throw as Ohio State moved to 13-10 overall and 6-8 in the Big Ten.

"It's been a tough year for the players," said Ohio State coach Randy Ayers. "They've been through a lot of adversity. This one was for them. They deserved to have a good win over a quality team."

Brian Evans missed a 3-pointer to tie with 11 seconds left and he was tied up on the rebound. The possession arrow favored Ohio State and Funderburke was fouled with 6.8 seconds left, hitting one free throw to clinch it.

Indiana (24-3, 13-1 Big Ten) had a 13-game winning streak snapped and lost the chance to become the first team to run the Big Ten schedule undefeated since the Hoosiers did it in consecutive years in 1975 and 1976.

The victory marked the third straight time that Ohio State (13-10, 6-8) has beaten a No. 1 team. The Buckeyes beat Iowa in 1987 and Indiana in 1983 in its last two meetings with a top-ranked team.

Skelton, who finished with 22 points, hit an off-balance 3-pointer with three seconds remaining to put Ohio State ahead 71-70.

"I didn't think it had them beat. We were up one, but I looked up at the clock and there were two seconds left," Skelton said. "They're the No. 1 team in the county, so I expected them to get a good shot."

With two seconds remaining, Indiana threw the ball the length of the court. But Ohio State's Derek Anderson was called for running over a pick set by Chris Reynolds. That was the fifth foul on Anderson, who had 20 points.

Anderson said, "Greg Simpson yelled at me, but I didn't hear it. I heard something, but the crowd was so loud. The refs knew it was coming because they called it before the clock even ran out."

Then he smiled and added, "But it didn't matter."

North Carolina 85, Notre Dame 56

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Eric Montross scored nine of his 19 points in the first 5:49 of the second half and No. 3 North Carolina overcame a lackluster start to down cold-shooting Notre Dame.

The Tar Heels (23-3) won their sixth straight and avenged an 88-76 loss to the Fighting Irish last season at Madison Square Garden.

Notre Dame (9-15), held scoreless for more than an eight-minute stretch in the second half, has lost 10 of 12 and is 0-7 against ranked teams.

Seton Hall 85, Miami 73

MIAMI — Terry Dehere, the Big East's scoring leader, had 21 points and No. 14 Seton Hall won its fifth straight game.

Seton Hall (21-6, 11-4) leads the conference by one game over St. John's. Miami (9-14, 6-10) is 0-4 against the Pirates since joining the Big East last season.

The Hurricanes had won five in a row at home. They are 6-2 at home against Big East opponents.

Associated Press

Indiana's Greg Graham (20) strips the ball away from Buckeye Derek Anderson Tuesday night, but it was Ohio State who stole an 81-77 overtime victory at the expense of the No. 1 Hoosiers.

Dehere scored 13 points in the first half, 10 during a 17-6 burst that put Seton Hall ahead 39-27 at the break.

Georgia Tech 73, Virginia 61

ATLANTA — Travis Best scored 26 points, including three key 3-pointers in the second half, sparking Georgia Tech to a victory over No. 22 Virginia.

It was the third victory in a row for the Yellow Jackets (15-8 overall, 7-6 Atlantic Coast Conference).

The Cavaliers (16-7, 8-6) dropped their eighth consecutive game in the series they still lead 19-18.

Cory Alexander led Virginia with 15 points.

Kansas St. 67, Oklahoma 63

NORMAN, Okla. — Aaron Collier scored 20 points, and Kansas State rallied from a 16-point first-half deficit to upset listless Oklahoma.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Grant baffled by low attendance figures

John Shipley
 The Daily Iowan

Iowa women's basketball under Coach C. Vivian Stringer has been incomparable. In Stringer's nine full seasons in Iowa City, the Hawkeyes have won five Big Ten championships, been ranked No. 1 in the nation and compiled a 482-108 record.

This season, Iowa has racked up a 21-1 overall record and a perfect conference slate at 14-0 on the way to its No. 2 national ranking.

So why is attendance down?

"I can't analyze what's going on," women's athletic director Dr. Christine Grant said at Tuesday's Board in Control of Athletics meeting. "We've done everything our staff can think of doing."

That includes spending $10,000 on promotions so far this season which, according to Grant, is already $2,000 to $3,000 more than was spent on promoting the Hawkeyes all of last season.

Grant said Stringer has enough to worry about without brooding over her team's lack of fan support. But when the Hawkeyes drew an average of 6,500 to games against No. 6 Ohio State and No. 4 Penn State earlier this month, Stringer turned to Grant and said, "What happened to our crowds?"

At one point this season, Iowa fell to fourth in Big Ten attendance before getting back to second behind Ohio State with a 4,881 average attendance for conference games. In non-conference games this season, the Hawkeyes drew an average of 3,864 fans — about 11,000 fewer than Carver-Hawkeye Arena can hold.

Big Ten basketball may get postseason tourney

John Shipley
 The Daily Iowan

The Big Ten may finally have a postseason basketball tournament by the 1994-95 season.

The Iowa Board in Control of Athletics was told by Big Ten faculty representative Bonnie Slatton Tuesday that conference athletic directors and coaches are pushing a postseason women's basketball tournament, originally scheduled for next season, but pushed back because of scheduling problems.

Slatton, a UI associate professor of physical education and sports studies, said an April 12 deadline for an exhaustive proposal was given to proponents of the tournament.

"It has to outline what the tournament would mean in total," Slatton said. "That includes practice time, banquets — anything that the tournament would include."

"We also want to know what the advantages of having a postseason tournament would be. If it's money, tell us. If it's exposure, tell us. We want them to put forth their best rationale."

Slatton said the Big Ten presidents could vote on the tournament as early as June.

An outline of what the tournament might entail was given to conference representatives earlier this month. According to the plan, the tournament would be played Friday through Monday on the second to last weekend of the regular season. To accommodate the tour-probably playing a little better, or as well as we have since the death of Chris Street," Davis said. "We've had to make some changes and, sure, it's set us back. We've dropped in a few categories; we're not passing as well, not rebounding as well. But I think we're playing better. We're improved."

"These were two big road wins for us," added Davis, whose team beat Northwestern Saturday, 75-63, in Evanston. "We could have lost those games. There's not much difference between Penn State and Northwestern and Indiana."

SPRING TRAINING ROUNDUP

Baseball fever kicks in

Belinda gets hate mail; Schott may visit Reds

Associated Press
 Stan Belinda's mailbox hasn't brought him a lot of encouragement this winter. Giving up the hit that lost the pennant for your team will cause that.
 "I had a lot of hate mail," the reliever said. "But these people were judging my whole career on one pitch. They don't remember the situation I was put in, the debateable calls. There was a whole slew of things that went wrong that winter."
 "Right now, it appears Belinda's career will be remembered for his 2-1 fastball to Atlanta's Francisco Cabrera in Game 7 of the 1992 NL playoffs last Oct. 14. Cabrera lined the pitch into left field for a two-run single.

 "People say I must be awful to give up a hit to a guy off the bench," Belinda said at the Pittsburgh Pirates' camp in Bradenton, Fla. "I sort of felt like a scapegoat all winter. But nobody brought up the situation I came into. I'm not a high-profile closer. I'm not a miracle worker. But I tried my hardest. I gave a hundred percent."

While Belinda was looking behind, the Cincinnati Reds were looking ahead. Owner Marge Schott may stop by camp Friday at Plant City, Fla., before her one-year suspension begins March 1.
 "I have talked to Mrs. Schott this morning and at that time she had not made a decision as to whether she will or will not come," Reds general manager Jim Bowden said Tuesday. "I called her not to talk about that, but then it came up. I would recommend that she does come and meet with the team."

Baseball's executive council on Feb. 3 suspended Schott for one year and fined her $25,000 for using slurs against blacks, Jews and Japanese. Schott will be prohibited from non-public areas of the training camp after her suspension begins Monday.

"We can't let it affect us," second baseman Bip Roberts said. "My focus, and the rest of the guys' focus, is on baseball. I think it makes no difference whether or not she addresses us."

Back on the field, players trying to come back from injuries talked about their hopes for the new season.

"I wasn't able to show them that they could count on me coming back," Dale Murphy said at the Philadelphia Phillies' camp in Clearwater, Fla. "So I think the moves that were made were great."

"I totally understand what they're doing with Wes Chamberlain. As far as my situation, we'll let that take care of itself."

Chamberlain started in left for the Phillies last April but hit .234 and was demoted. He is the front-runner to play right field this season.

Murphy, who needs two homers to reach 400 for his career, has the chance to make $1.45 million if he plays regularly.

"He looks better than any time last spring," manager Jim Fregosi said. "I know it's early, but Murphy shows no signs of having a knee problem."

Kirk Gibson, who will be 36 in May, is back with Detroit. He hasn't had a productive season in the big leagues since 1988, and was released by the Pittsburgh Pirates last May.

"I think Gibby was floundering after he left here," Tigers manager

GEORGE II
George Steinbrenner Rides Back Into Baseball
 Associated Press
KING GEORGE — Yankee owner George Steinbrenner's return to baseball is to be heralded on the cover of Sports Illustrated's March 1 issue. At his suggestion, Steinbrenner posed as Napoleon astride one of his own horses, an Arabian mare named King Miss.

Associated Press
 Atlanta's Deion Sanders enjoys a light throwing session at the Braves' training camp in West Palm Beach Tuesday.

Sparky Anderson said. "He's not that way. As tough as he is, he needs a place like this."

"He needs to be wanted, and he is here. He can yell at me and I can yell at him and he knows it's no big deal, that it'll be all right. Don't tell me Gibson can't help us if he's used right. There's nothing wrong with the man."

Vince Coleman reported to the New York Mets' camp at Port St. Lucie, Fla., and said he hopes he won't get hurt in 1993.

"For seven years, I had no major injuries," said Coleman, a six-time stolen base champion with the St. Louis Cardinals. "To come to the Mets, where you're a newcomer and want to play well, and not being able to play has been very frustrating."

Nomura solo recital tonight at Clapp Hall

William Palik
The Daily Iowan

A three-day UI residency by baritone Christopher Nomura will climax in a concert tonight at 8 in Clapp Recital Hall.

Nomura, a graduate of the New England Conservatory, has performed as soloist with the Boston Symphony in Orff's "Carmina Burana" and Beethoven's Choral Fantasy. He won a Fulbright grant for advanced studies in Germany, a Beebe grant for European studies, and first prize in the 1990 International Vocal Competition of the Mozarteum in Salzburg.

He also won the 1992 Young Concert Artists International Auditions, the Little Orchestra Society Soloist Prize, the Orchestra New England Soloist Prize, and the Paul A. Fish Memorial Prize for Young Concert Artists.

The first half of tonight's program includes four sacred German songs of the Baroque era, five Lieder from Johannes Brahms' Op. 32, including the familiar gem "Wie bist du meine Königin," and three Maurice Ravel Chansons from "Don Quichotte à Dulcinée." The program's second half features songs in Spanish and English, including Samuel Barber's Three Songs, Op. 45, Cinco Canciones Negras by Xavier Montsalvatge and selected recent offerings composed by Richard Hundley and William Bolcom.

The audience is invited to meet Nomura at a post-concert reception in the School of Music lounge.

Tickets for tonight's concert are $10, $8 for UI students and $5 for those 18 and under.

Oscar furor helps 'Crying Game,' 'Groundhog Day' still at No. 1

John Horn
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "The Crying Game," buoyed by a half-dozen Oscar nominations, climbed from 15th to fourth place at the box office.

Bill Murray's comedy "Groundhog Day," however, was king of the box-office hill, finishing first for the second week in a row. It made $9.3 million.

"The Crying Game," a thriller whose Academy Award nominations on Wednesday include one for best picture, made $5.2 million over the weekend, a four-fold increase from the week before. Exhibitor Relations Co. said Monday.

"Towards End" made $751,954 for 18th place, even though the film is in its 50th week of release. Clint Eastwood's "Unforgiven," out for 29 weeks, brought in $1.5 million for 11th. Neither made the Top 20 the week before.
