New measure to raise living costs 3.8% if approved

Brad Hahn
The Daily Iowan

UI students living in residence halls and family housing may soon face a room and board increase if a proposal from the UI is approved by the Iowa state Board of Regents. If the measure is passed, the average student in residence halls will be assessed an increase of 3.85 percent, while family housing residents will see a 3.8 percent increase in living costs.

A student living in a double occupancy room with a 20 meal per week board plan will have their rates raised by $118, or 3.7 percent.

Director of Residence Services George Droll said the increase is primarily based on labor, food and utilities costs, which have increased due to inflation. A portion of the increase will also go to long-range maintenance and improvement of the residence halls.

Compared to past years, the newest increase is mild. Last year there was a 5.6 percent increase for students living in a double occupancy room with a full board plan. The two years prior saw increases of 7.7 percent and 7.3 percent, respectively.

UI students can take heart in the fact that they are not the only ones who may be paying more next year. Iowa State University and the University of Northern Iowa have also proposed similar measures. However, UI students will still pay the highest rates out of the three institutions.

UI sophomore and Currier resident Andrea McAlister said while

Man found dead in Prairie du Chien Road

A 26-year-old male was found dead in an undeveloped section of Prairie du Chien Road in Iowa City Sunday afternoon.

The Iowa City Police Department responded to a call at 1:11 p.m. after the deceased's vehicle was found abandoned at 1810 Prairie du Chien Road. After a 20-minute search, police officers and the man's father found the body. The police said it does not appear there was foul play.

Medical Examiner T.T. Bozek is investigating the incident. The man's name is being withheld until notification of his next of kin.

Railroad overpass to be closed

The railroad overpass on American Legion Road, which is approximately four miles southeast of Iowa City, will be closed beginning today, the Johnson County Secondary Road Department has announced. The bridge is under contract to be replaced and will remain closed for approximately four months. A detour will be marked.

Jewelry store employees stop robber

Employees at Herten and Stocker Jewelers, 101 S. Dubuque St., foiled an attempted burglary Saturday by detaining a would-be thief until police arrived.

Richard E. McCord, 53, address unknown, was charged with second-degree robbery at 10:41 a.m. by the Iowa City Police Department.

One employee was injured as they detained McCord for police.

Arrest follows recovery of stolen car stereos

A 17-year-old Iowa City juvenile was arrested last Thursday after Iowa City Police recovered 65 pieces of stolen automobile stereo equipment from his possession.

A total of 95 pieces of stereo equipment had been recovered by the Iowa City Police Department within the last few weeks.

Police confirm that most of the seized items are from automobiles in the Iowa City area and estimate the equipment to be worth at least $10,000.

Man gets theft, drug possession charges

How much wood would $23,925 get removed?

A lot more than five trees, according to Iowa City police.

Michael E. Bauer, 32, address unknown, was charged with first-degree theft after charging a 75-year-old disabled veteran $23,925 to remove five trees from his property between Sept. 11 and Jan. 14. According to police reports, other local tree removal businesses would charge between $2,100 and $4,400 for such a job.

Bauer was also charged with possession of a schedule I controlled substance and forgery for writing a $5,000 check to himself from someone else's account.

PETITION CIRCULATED

State asked to drop Street case charges

Jon Yates
The Daily Iowan

An eastern Iowa man has collected over 5,000 signatures requesting that charges be dropped against those involved in the Jan. 19 traffic accident that killed Hawkeye basketball player Chris Street.

The petition, started by Calvin Colony of Oxford, Iowa, asks for the state to drop charges brought against the driver of the snowplow involved in the accident, Charles Pence, and Street's girlfriend, Kimberly Vinton, who was in the car with Street.

"I think the charges are morally wrong," Colony said. "Charging Pence with speeding, what's that going to prove? What do they have to gain by charging Kimberly Vinton with a seatbelt violation?"

Colony said he doesn't know any of the people involved in the accident, but felt compelled to start the petition because he believed the

BLIZZARD WORST THIS CENTURY

Winter storm buries East Coast

Michael Mokrzycki
Associated Press

The blizzard that paralyzed much of the Eastern Seaboard whirled through New England and eastern Canada and headed out to sea Sunday, leaving at least 101 dead from Cuba to Quebec and shattering records with as much as 4 feet of snow.

Among the victims was a man found frozen to death in Alabama. Many others suffered heart attacks while shoveling snow. Three died, four were missing and three were rescued after a Honduran freighter sank in stormy seas off Florida.

About 70 travelers remained stranded in a tunnel on a snowed-in highway in Virginia on Sunday night, a full day after the storm passed through, while 100 hikers hunkered down in shelters and tents in the mountains of east Tennessee and dozens of others were missing in North Carolina wilderness.

Electricity was out for nearly a million customers up and down the coast; many didn't have heat either. Thousands more people were stuck in airports and shelters.

The calm after the storm was windy and bitterly cold — as low as a record 2 degrees in Birmingham, Ala., and a wind chill of 40 below zero in Vermont — threatening to freeze crops in the South and slowing the storm cleanup.

"When is it going to stop? Every time I throw a shovelful of snow, it blows right back in my face," said Bill Loomis of Stuyvesant Falls, N.Y., 25 miles south of Albany.

Rain followed by cold turned snow on New York City's streets into "rock-hard piles of ice," Sanitation Commissioner Emily Lloyd said. The task now, she said, is "not just carrying it away. Now it's chipping and carrying it away."

Airports in Atlanta, Washington, D.C., New York, Boston and other cities slowly began reopening, but there weren't many flights, and air travel around the country was backed up.

Interstate highways throughout the storm's wide swath also were cleared, though plow crews had to contend with blowing snow. The American Red Cross had 600 shelters open in 20 states.

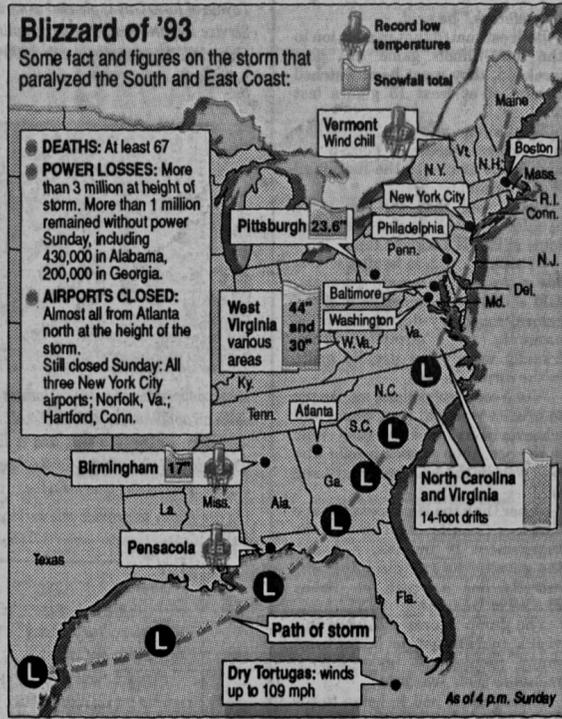

At least 18 homes toppled into the sea on New York's Long Island, and four were close to collapse on Nantucket in Massachusetts. About 200 homes along the North Carolina coast were damaged and may be uninhabitable, the Army Corps of Engineers said. Roads and homes were flooded and beaches were scoured along the Gulf Coast and along the Atlantic up through New England.

Worse coastline damage had been expected in the Northeast, but by the time high tide came during the night, the wind had shifted, coming from the west and pushing water away from the coast.

"A miracle came out of nowhere," said Bragdon Hanson, an emergency manager in York County, Maine. The coast had been especially vulnerable because a devastating three-day Nor'easter in December had leveled protective dunes and breached barrier beaches.

"It's a kiss compared to what we were expecting," said Pam St. Jean, a hotel bartender in Hampton Beach on the seacoast in New

Gays speak out against military code

Yokota Masuo
The Daily Iowan

Following the path of his grandparents and parents, who served in World War II and the Vietnam War, respectively, Chuck Ross didn't have the slightest reservations about dedicating his youth to his country when he was 19.

"It's just the way I was brought up," the UI undergraduate said. "Everybody in my family back to the American Revolution served the country."

Ross' dream to protect and serve the United States, however, was smashed into pieces when the U.S.

Marine Corps conducted an investigative "witch hunt" and found out that he is gay.

When the Corps arrested Ross' friend on charges of drug abuse, his friend was asked to make a list of gays and drug abusers. If Ross' friend had failed to provide this list, he would have received a dishonorable discharge. Ross' name surfaced on the list and he was kicked out of the military because of his homosexuality, not because of his sexual conduct.

Ross felt rejected by Uncle Sam. "I lost a lot of my faith in the

POSSIBLE POLITICAL INFLUENCE

10% homosexual population believed misleading number

Yokota Masuo
The Daily Iowan

Although it is widely believed that about 10 percent of the U.S. population is homosexual, some leading experts claim that the number seems to be inflated because of political reasons. Recent studies suggest that the gay and lesbian populations may be somewhere between 1 and 7 percent.

From his office in Chicago, Northwestern University Professor Michael Bailey said, "Ten percent is almost certainly overestimated." Bailey is quite well-known for his "twin study" in 1991, which attempted to connect homosexuality and genetics. Recent studies indicate that 4 percent of men are gay and about 1.5 percent of women are lesbians, he said. "These numbers aren't unreasonable," Bailey said, "but I wouldn't be surprised if they are a bit lower than that."

UI political science Professor Michael Jogerst, who is also a gay rights activist, said that the gay community has sought security in the higher numbers.

"In a sense of political reason, they may feel the numbers give them more legitimacy as a significant minority," he said.

Gay and lesbian organizations have generally backed up the 10 percent argument based on research conducted by Alfred Kinsey, the father of sexuality, who interviewed 12,000 male volunteers between 1938 and 1947.

INSTRUCTOR KEEPS UNIQUE DECOR

UI prof's collection tribute to life, work

Jon Yates
The Daily Iowan

A sign hanging in his office reads "Wildlife Refuge," and if the porcelain hippos, pink-and-blue plastic pigs or wind-up monkeys are any indication, the sign is fairly accurate.

"I've always had an interesting office," he explains as he looks around a room cluttered with baseball trophies, a worn Spalding basketball and casts of fat-bellied, jolly men that he likes to call his "Buddha collection."

But for Tom Walz, a UI professor of social work, his office is not merely a collection of tacky trinkets; it is also a tribute.

The office used to belong to Walz's close friend and colleague John Kraft, who died two years ago. The room lay dormant for some time before Walz decided to move into the facility Kraft once used.

Now, every day, Walz is reminded of their friendship.

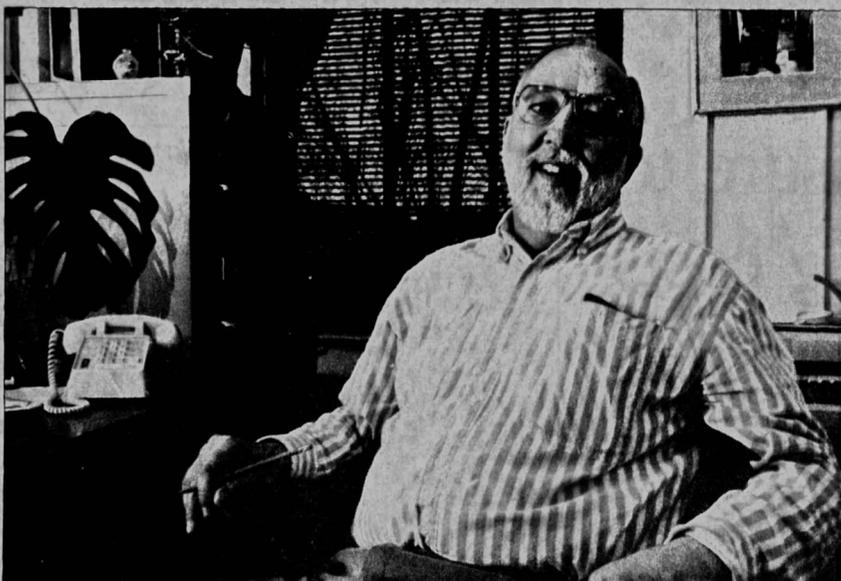

"A lot of this stuff was his, I just added some of my things to it," he says. "He had this wonderful kind of tacky, art-deco taste and I sort of like it. It's kind of mocking academia."

But while his office, housed deep behind Wild Bill's Coffee Shop in North Hall with a stunning view of the Iowa River, can be viewed as both a refuge and a tribute, it is also heavily steeped in the present.

The phone rings constantly and traffic trickles in from the coffee shop at all times. Walz is, to say the least, a busy man.

Having spent 20 years at the UI, he has developed a relationship with the community that is strikingly visible.

It was he who set up the coffee shop 18 years ago with friend and future screenwriter Barry Morrow ("Rainman," "Bill"), which has been the subject of two major movies and is run completely by persons with disabilities. Walz now serves as the faculty liaison for the shop, picking up doughnuts and pastries every morning and overseeing the daily running of the business.

"One of the true highlights of my life was the association with Bill," Walz says of the man who originally ran the shop. "That was a great eight years."

Bill Sackter, who was diagnosed as being mentally retarded at age 7, died nine years ago, but his legacy has lived on through the movies and the coffee shop.

"When our handicapped people come to work for us, we ask them to teach us," Walz says. "Bill was part of an effort to make what we called a kind of milieu of education where the environment is the education, where just being in school teaches you along with what you learn in class."

In class, Walz uses his environment liberally, spending part of the three-hour lecture to speak to the class a whole, interspersing videotaped material with his lecture before breaking the 30-student class into small groups for the rest of the time.

"I'm kind of a media freak," he confesses, as he prepares for his next lecture based, appropriately enough, on social work and the media. "If you can entertain and educate, that's a good way to teach. If you can pique their interest, then they're much more interested in what you have to say."

"You have to entertain or you're dead," he continues. "The sense of medium is very important."

It is a concept that has taken him around the world and around the state, as he currently serves as director of the UI's social work program in Des Moines.

He is also one of the pioneers of social work in Russia, a country that has only recently, since Perestroika, recognized the need for social work.

Currently, Walz is in Perm, Russia, to help set up one of the first schools of social work in that country.

"It is satisfying to have an opportunity to do this," he says. "I think I am one of the first North Americans to ever have a chance to speak to Russians about social work."

But while his work may take him around the world, Walz says his heart is still in Iowa.

"I feel very Iowan and very Midwest," he said. "I like the rootedness of it all."

Back in his refuge of an office, the stacks of paper on his desk seem out of place among the stuffed Opus dolls and the Freddy Krueger-like busts.

But for Walz, he has undoubtedly found his niche.

If you've had an interesting professor in a class here at the university, write to us and tell us about it. We may interview him or her for a new series of features.

Students' lives on hold for NCAA tourney

Terry Collins
The Daily Iowan

It's back. The annual spring rite of passage for basketball junkies everywhere: The return of March Madness.

The next two weeks will mark the traditional period when basketball fans of all kinds unite to see whether the teams selected for the NCAA tournament make it to the Final Four. It is also a time when some devoted fans put everything else in life on hold for the sake of college basketball.

"Regular everyday activities get replaced by watching basketball games," UI sophomore Mitch Moore said.

UI junior Tim Cox, who, along with about 95 others in his residence hall, participated in a block seating plan at Carver-Hawkeye Arena this past season, agreed.

"I will miss everything from class, study time to sleep, possibly," he said. "But I didn't mind missing anything because it was cool being close to the game, especially with the Hawks."

UI junior Jeff Williams attributes his basketball addiction to a fun season as well.

"It was pretty entertaining hearing Ace Earl's father screaming at the referees," he said.

Both estimated that in addition to the Iowa-Illinois game this past weekend, they must have watched a total of at least 15 games last week.

"We even watched Saturday night's game between Boise State and Idaho at one in the morning," Williams said.

Cox added that the group he usually watches games with are some of ESPN's biggest fans.

UI sophomore Lisa Lemp, who is one of the group's female members, said she loves keeping track of the games, especially during the tournament, and admitted that friendly wagers are usually made in the form of a pool.

"For a couple of dollars, we can try to predict who will beat whom and whoever wins takes the cash. This is the best time to seek people who beat you in the pool last year," she said.

Other than the Hawkeyes, Lemp said her favorite team to win the tournament is Indiana, although the guys in the group say that she secretly has a crush on Bobby Hurley of Duke.

The group figures that once this year's tournament is under way, many people will make adjustments to their schedule.

"Last year, I had to listen to the Hawkeyes play in the NCAAs while driving Cambus," Moore said. "People once in a while would ask me the score."

UI sophomore Nick Kicharantha said he has a Monday-night class that he will probably skip in order to watch the championship game.

"I try very hard not to miss too many games with my friends," he said.

USI SPONSORS PANEL

Forum featuring state legislators lets students express concerns

Molly Spann
The Daily Iowan

About 25 UI students, angered over teaching assistant salaries and the continuing rise of tuition, questioned a responsive group of Iowa legislators in the Union Friday evening.

"The Legislative Open House," sponsored by the United Students of Iowa, was designed to give all students a chance to voice their concerns about the UI to Iowa legislators, according to Rachel Kindred, USI campus director.

"Students have not only the right, but the responsibility to communicate their feelings and needs directly to the legislators," she told those who attended the forum. "Without that information, the legislators can't effectively represent students."

Five UI student body leaders sat on the panel, along with six legislative representatives. Kindred said this was the first time such an event had been held.

Students were given the opportunity to ask questions directly to Iowa legislators for the first half of the event. Topics raised by students ranged from teaching-assistant salaries and benefits to an increased student voice in the Iowa Board of Regents.

Iowa Sen. Paul Pate, R-Marion, encouraged students to become more involved in the legislative process.

"You need to make sure your voice is heard."

Paul Pate, senator

"You need to make sure your voice is heard," he said. "You have to contact your legislators and make sure your voice is heard, and you have to go to the Board of Regents meetings and make sure your voice is heard. If you get the message, you need to keep the pressure on if you want to have action taken."

The second half of the event included a live broadcast of the forum by KRUI radio. During the broadcast, the five UI student leaders addressed legislators on a variety of issues affecting the future of college students in Iowa.

One area talked about in detail was the steps the Iowa Legislature is taking to make Iowa a more desirable place for students to remain and work after college.

"We need to rethink our economic development in Iowa," said Iowa Rep. Mary Neuhauser, D-Iowa City. "This should begin at the universities."

Another topic discussed by legislative representatives and UI student leaders was the lack of diversity in the state of Iowa.

Kindred said she was disappointed, but not surprised, at the small student turnout at the event. "People have a tendency to blame students for apathy," she said. "It's more accurate to put it off on the apathy of the Legislature."

Kindred said students do not believe they have a voice in legislative decisions.

KEEPING A PROMISE

Iowa railroad to maintain service

Associated Press

The Iowa Interstate Railroad is apparently making good on its controversial promise to retain central Iowa east-west rail service in return for a $15 million state loan.

The railroad has struggled in its nine years, but the regional carrier is under new management and posted a $1 million profit in 1992, its best year ever. The Iowa Interstate still owes the state money, but rail officials say the slimmed-down line is apparently on solid footing.

"Anyone who is involved in railroad restructuring knows that this is something that doesn't happen overnight," said Les Holland, director of the Iowa Department of Transportation Rail and Water Division.

"But we feel the Iowa Interstate is inching ahead. They have been building their customer base and improving financial procedures, and they have competent, professional people running their company."

The loan was fought in 1984 as either foolhardy or unfair assistance to a competitor of other carriers.

"We viewed it as inequitable treatment because the state was subsidizing a competitor," said James Foote, vice president of the Chicago and North Western. "But Iowa was not unique in that."

The money went to purchase tracks of the bankrupt Rock Island Lines from Omaha, Neb., to Chicago, including Des Moines, Newton, Atlantic, Iowa City and Davenport. There are spurs to Pella, Cedar Rapids, Audubon and Oakland in Iowa, and to Peoria in Illinois.

The railroad hauls 50,000 carloads a year between its end points, and provides daily service. Corn is the top commodity hauled by Iowa Interstate, followed by steel sheets and coils, lumber, soybeans and other goods.

The railroad, headquartered in Iowa City, has 185 employees, down from 290 a few years ago.

Deadline for committee approval of nonfiscal bills fast approaching

Tom Seery
Associated Press

DES MOINES — This is do-or-die week in the Iowa Legislature. Nonfiscal bills that do not win approval of a House or Senate committee by the end of the week are ineligible for further action. Hanging in the balance are measures to reinstate the death penalty, require parental notification and statistical reporting of abortions, and help out Iowa's struggling casinos and pari-mutuel tracks.

The death penalty and abortion measures have long been supported by Republican Gov. Terry Branstad, who hoped to make a breakthrough this year with the Republican-led House of Representatives. This is the first time in Branstad's 10 years as governor that he has had a Republican legislative chamber.

But abortion and the death penalty are not strictly partisan issues, and House committees have resisted the governor's proposals so far.

Branstad has altered his death penalty proposal in a bid to gain legislative support. He said last week that he would drop a bid to allow execution of 16- and 17-year-olds if that would help win committee approval of a bill reinstating the death penalty that was repealed in 1965.

Many students spend spring break at home

Molly Spann
The Daily Iowan

Although it may seem like everyone's heading south for spring break, a lack of funds or too much schoolwork will keep many UI students at home.

UI junior Inger Hansen said the four papers she has due the week after spring break will keep her busy at home. But Hansen said she doesn't mind not taking a trip. She said her spring break to the Bahamas last year was good enough to last for a while.

"Last year I had so much fun and it's going to be nice to get away from Iowa City as it is," Hansen said. "It's going to be a spring break even if I have to write papers, just as long as I don't have to be in class."

Unlike Hansen, UI junior Nathan Turner said he has never vacationed on spring break. This year he said he plans to stick around Iowa City.

"I don't want to spend the money because I have a lot of other expenses, like paying a computer loan and credit-card bills," he said.

"I am going to stay here and catch up on homework and try to find a summer job."

Turner said that when he does have enough money saved to go on a trip, he'd like it to be longer than a week.

Financial reasons are also keeping UI junior Jeremy Block in Iowa City. He said he is going to work and save money, rather than spending it all.

"It really sucks because I need to get out of here," he said. "Iowa City is driving me wacko because I stayed here all summer and I haven't left for a substantial amount of time."

Block said it's depressing to hear about everyone else's spring-break plans.

"It seems like everyone is going away," he said.

UI freshman Ellen Petasnick also said that it is not easy to hear about the trips others will soon be taking.

"I don't even want to hear about it," she said. "I just walk away, especially because it's 20 degrees here and I love the beach."

FREEDOM OF CHOICE ACT

Limiting pathology

A parental notification law mandating that young women get their parents' permission for an abortion failed, by one vote, to make its way out of a state House committee last week, but supporters of the bill promise to try again this week. Compared to stalking and assassinating doctors, bombing clinics, making death threats and harassing women outside of health-care facilities, parental notification has the benefit of sounding pretty reasonable. Anti-abortion activists claim that since minors need parental permission for most medical procedures, abortion should naturally fall under the review of parents. The idea sounds kinder and gentler, putting women's health advocates and other abortion-rights supporters on the defensive. But, as is typical of the anti-abortion lobby, such laws — in lieu of outlawing abortion completely or of simply killing providers and punishing women — are just run-around attempts to limit access to abortion.

Clearly, mothers and/or fathers should talk about choices with their daughters. Nice if they talked to their sons, too. But most readers, particularly those who are still teen-agers or recent graduates of teendom, know that, in the real world, parents often break over things sexual; it's not news that society is ridiculously confused and hypocritical about sexuality. The problem with parental notification is not that young women need to talk with their parents before choosing (studies show that most do), but that the law would force them to. In some cases, this is out of the question because of an abusive parent, or because of the fear, stigma and shame that still pollutes sex in too many minds.

Sometimes the reason isn't so obvious. Becky Bell didn't go to her parents, as the law in Indiana demanded, before getting an abortion. She couldn't face her mom and dad with the news that she was pregnant, and because she couldn't go to them, she couldn't get a legal abortion in Indiana (where judges are notorious for refusing to grant judicial overrides). More than anything, she did not want to let her parents down. She died of a botched outlaw abortion at the age of seventeen. This was not in the dark ages before Roe, this was in 1988. For the purity of a myth of family, the good citizens of Indiana thought they did the right thing in putting a parental notification law on the books. But for them, Bell might have graduated from college this spring. Her parents, who were unaware of the law at the time, now lobby across the country to prevent citizens in other states from being as concerned as the people of Indiana.

Parental notification reminds us that those who militate against abortion are primarily concerned with controlling sexuality. Minors, being most vulnerable under law, are a natural target. The anti-abortion crowd view women and men in starkly essentialist terms: To them, women are naturally breeders, a resource to be regulated like any other productive property. When women refuse these terms, they are labeled selfish, unfeminine and, finally, murderers. Women defined as nothing more than the sum of their parts (the ultimate anti-abortion argument), really don't need any rights or privacy; this explains why patriarchy and anti-abortion go hand-in-hand. The misogyny extends to the fetishization of the fetus (most abortions end pregnancies at the embryo stage, but an embryo doesn't have quite the propaganda appeal of a little pink doll), biology transformed into a political weapon far more valued than any woman. Any surprise that a loathing of sexuality, particularly female sexuality, saturates the rhetoric of the anti-abortion-rights minority?

The terrorism in Pensacola is the inevitable result of a twisted moral absolutism that calls abortion "baby killing." Anti-abortion activists in Iowa have yet to reduce themselves to this extreme of pathology, even though anyone who has ever witnessed the protesters in action can see how close to the surface the frenzy is. They certainly don't need further whittling away at abortion rights to inspire them on. Call or write your Legislature today to keep abortion safe, legal and accessible in Iowa; while you're at it, tell your representatives in Washington to support the Freedom of Choice Act and clinic protection laws.

KIM PAINTER

Where the high and the mighty fall short

Lately, you have probably noticed that many of your casual conversations end with the unsettling observation that "it's getting really weird out there." Indeed it is. Between the World Trade Center bombing, the Waco standoff, and the shooting of Dr. David Gunn in Pensacola by an anti-abortion demonstrator, weird is getting to be too mild a descriptor. And "out there" can be defined as closer to home all the time.

These incidents are not happening in a vacuum, they're just the ones happening in our nation's backyard. The new weirdness holds thrall over the entire planet. Last week, on the same day they covered the murder of Dr. Gunn, The New York Times ran an article on an anti-abortion crackdown. It's not exactly a government crackdown, though it will be overseen by a government. As with so many current blights on the world, an impending reign of intimidation in Poland stems from organized religion.

In Poland as in our own country, religious worthies with attitude are on a rampage. It so happens that in Poland, the bulk of the pressure to overturn long-standing liberal policies with regard to abortion comes from the Catholic Church. They are playing a less subtle hand there than they have in the United States, and many Poles are frightened.

The description of what happens in Poland these days reads like any story of the slimy behavior of people who wouldn't know what belief meant if it came up and slapped them.

"Lawmakers approved the (abortion restriction) measure in January after heavy lobbying by the Roman Catholic Church and in a climate of such emotion and intimidation that virtually all state hospitals had already stopped performing abortions. Gynecologists who perform the procedure say they are targets of threats and attacks by militant anti-abortion campaigners."

Sound familiar? The Times continues, "Three weeks ago, three gynecologists found their cars smeared with red paint. 'We're so intimidated,' one said. 'When I go to a party I don't admit what I do for a living. We're called Hitlerites, Nazis. Our doors are painted red with the slogan, Here lives a murderer.'"

The Polish church is increasingly flammable about leading the government by the nose. Poland's Roman Catholic Primate is Jozef Cardinal Glemp. In the weeks leading up to the vote, he made an appearance in Parliament to perform the highly symbolic ritual of handing out Christmas wafers. His action left many unwilling to oppose the church's stance at the January vote.

Still some loyalists insist that the church is "teaching," not "ruling," on abortion and contraception. Ask a few Catholic gynecologists in Poland whether they feel they have "learned" to stop discussing their profession, or whether they have been bullied into silence. If you believe the Catholic Church merely functions as a teacher to its flock on issues of abortion and contraception, you will believe anything.

In Poland, as in our own country, the church is divided. Ninety-five percent of Poles identify as Catholics. The majority of that group disagrees with the "teachings" of the church on abortion and contraception. How they feel about emotional blackmail and physical intimidation is not recorded.

Here in the good old U.S.A., one of the members of Rescue America said of Michael Griffin, Gunn's confessed murderer, and Dr. Gunn that they were "both victims of abortion." Wrong. Michael Griffin fell victim to a delusion, a delusion inspired by religion. It indicated to him that he and his fellows had the power to force a country to forego its commitment to individual freedom. If only they can make their case convincing enough. Or be sufficiently intimidating. Or pull a trigger enough times at close range.

As for Dr. Gunn, he was the victim of a cheap thug. You may think the thug had high ideals. You are entitled to that opinion, but please explain how a murderer who kills with a head full of high ideals is any better than Jeffrey Dahmer. You can't, because he isn't. Remember: There is a difference between the following statements. Abortion is murder. Shooting a 47-year-old man dead is murder. The first statement is an opinion. It is an opinion on which many equally educated and well-meaning individuals sharply differ. The second is incontrovertible fact. Dr. David Gunn is dead, because one man believes that abortion is murder. That man's act, and the motivation behind it, lies about as far from heaven's gates as you can get.

It is, perhaps, a long way from Pensacola to Poland. And admirers of Jozef Cardinal Glemp may be deeply offended at a comparison to confessed killer Michael Griffin. Or David Koresh. Or Nidal Ayyad and Mohammed Salameh. But just once, the comparison needs to be made because they have one terrible thing in common. Holy rollers and hellions alike think they can bring about a change in humanity's outlook and behavior by ruling — using violence or papal edict, guns or Christmas wafers — rather than by teaching.

It would be nice to see an instance of someone who believes in God and who is content to teach virtuous behavior by example rather than bomb, gun or edict. Mother Teresa certainly counts as one. So do the far more numerous and anonymous volunteers who hold hands, rock babies, and act as sibs to troubled youngsters from troubled homes. They don't get a lot of press. The inroads they make in the face of massive social problems are tiny. But their examples tower over the corruption of the visible and powerful as surely as the example of Gandhi towers forever over the degradation of Stalin.

Great moral teachers are neither cowards nor bullies. They are people filled with a quiet belief that allows them to make a difference. If we ever come to live in a world where abortion is not a necessary option, and where God's most visible servants do not rule with the good book in one hand and a gun or a threat raised in the other, we will have these humble teachers to thank.

LETTERS

Article unfair

To the Editor:
I was disappointed to read the inaccurate, one-sided and sloppy article titled "Instructors' oral skills still causing problems" on the front page of the March 3 DI.

For an article which places a great deal of blame on language problems in the Department of Mathematics, it is a violation of elementary journalistic practice not to check with that department before going to press. A professor and a teaching assistant in our department were unfairly maligned without any chance to respond. Indeed, since the issue of oral communication is at stake, it is only common sense that some oral communication with these people be attempted. This, regrettably, was not done. The English language abilities of the people mentioned are in fact excellent; both are hard-working and conscientious individuals deeply concerned about teaching. More fundamentally, holding individuals up to public ridicule is a serious matter.

There are several inaccuracies in the DI article. The course labeled "Statistical Analysis" there is not even a mathematics course. The complaint "to the math department" mentioned in this article was never made. In addition, complaints were registered in the article about a "Quantitative Methods" course. The quantitative methods course for which the quoted student was registered is not even in the Mathematics Department. But the worst aspect of the article is already present in the headline: "Instructors' oral skills still causing problems." The DI simply judges the issue and makes a final statement, without checking any facts, or even getting a decent sample of opinions.

We in the Department of Mathematics take considerable care to provide high-quality instruction to a very large number of students. Perhaps the article, this letter and other letters on the issue will ultimately be of benefit if people can be encouraged to come to the place where problems can be addressed.

Oral skills problems 'disgusting'

To the Editor:

The continuing problem with oral skills at the UI is disgusting. Proficient exposition is so fundamental to the teaching process that the problem never should have existed; but it's been around for at least 35 years and probably since 1847.

Any member of a class can gage an instructor's grasp of the English language as soon as the instructor steps to the podium — the rigamarole described in the DI article of March 3 is a sham. If you're interviewing a person for a teaching job and he mashes his words then he doesn't get hired. It's that simple.

In addition to being proficient with the language, all candidates for teaching positions, even those whose native tongue is English, should be screened by a panel of Toastmasters. In my own time as a student, the fog level in some classrooms was so high that it was a waste of time to attend the sessions. A professor who consistently sends his students to the chalkboard to fumble around instead of doping out the material is an on-the-job retiree.

These problems would go away in a hurry if the state Legislature were to curtail funds in proportion to reported babbled and deadbeats.

I've been a member of the university community off and on since the 1950s as a staff member or student. I think I understand what Jesus felt when he wept over Jerusalem.

Math Lab can help

To the Editor:

In response to the article by Timothy Connors ("Instructors' Oral Skills Still Causing Problems," March 3 DI), I would like to point out that for those students who feel they need more support than the traditional classroom offers, the Department of Mathematics maintains the Mathematics Laboratory as a supplementary aid to those students enrolled in the "Math Lab courses." The Math Lab is not a replacement for the regular lecture or class discussion. Its purpose is to supplement the mathematics courses listed below and to offer students further explanations regarding homework problems and other concepts which students find particularly challenging.

This is a "drop-in" lab so that appointments are not necessary. The Lab is staffed with professional staff, faculty and graduate student teaching assistants. A wide variety of teaching styles is offered to students who use the Lab. It is not necessary that their instructor be on duty, nor is it necessary that an instructor for their particular course be on duty.

Free tutorial service is available to students enrolled in the following courses: 22M:1 Basic Algebra, 22M:2 Basic Algebra II, 22M:3 Basic Geometry, 22M:5 Trigonometry, 22M:15 Mathematics for the Biological Sciences, 22M:16 Calculus for the Biological Sciences, 22M:17 Quantitative Methods I, 22M:19 Elementary Functions, 22M:25 Calculus I, 22M:26 Calculus II, 22M:35 Engineering Calculus I, and 22M:36 Engineering Calculus II.

If students are enrolled in one of the courses mentioned above and need additional support, they are encouraged to visit the Math Lab in 314 MLH.

Students' listening skills still causing problems

To the Editor:

In response to the DI's March 3 article, "Instructors' oral skills still causing problems," I would like to suggest a different perspective on the problem. Obviously, something must be done, since revamping the system two years ago, apparently hasn't changed much.

What about the responsibility of the listener, or in this case the U of I student? Listening comprehension, is such a vital skill in the learning process that there are those in pedagogy who advocate that it be taught as a separate course, at the pre-college or pre-secondary level. Let's imagine for a moment how this course would be set up.

As a graduate student in pedagogy and an instructor of foreign language, I could envision including variations of English. You know, the accented English, the high speed English, the grammatically correct though non-colloquial (therefore non-recognizable to most native speakers) type of English. You know, the kind that is on the TOEFL exam. Why, we could even use the DI's article last week which celebrated the semantic differences of the use of "piss" between British and American language culture.

When I took the GRE's I did not prepare my study of English grammar or vocabulary with any of the effort I would have had to put in if it had the content of the TOEFL exam. Fortunately, as an undergraduate I had enough non-native English speaking TA's that I was able to pick up more diverse and complicated grasp of the English language that I did not have to put my time into such study.

Unfortunately, this wasn't foolproof. Upon entering graduate school, my courses which weren't taught in my target language of Japanese, were taught by native English speaking "professors." It was here that I started to wish TOEFL was required for myself. Because there was no one to complain to when my "professors" ran the course at a high speed and used such an unfamiliar vocabulary, that my grades did suffer. Furthermore, there was no TA, non-native speaking or otherwise, who was accessible through office hours and is still committed enough to making certain that the students do learn the material by taking the time to explain it to help me through such crises. However, because I had been exposed to such diverse inputs of the English language, my listening-comprehension skills had been sharpened to the point that I took special care of what vocabulary I didn't know how to understand let alone use, I was able to get acceptable grades.

The point is that there is an archaic, non-communicative test out there and it is called TOEFL. It receives partial blame and needs to be changed. Also, there is responsibility on us as listeners/learners who are not trained with adequate listening skills. Until English competency evaluation changes and we are appropriately trained in listening skills, which may not be before you get your BA, I would suggest increasing your own listening skills by taking special note of words or phrases you don't understand. If you can't get the grasp of them in class go to the office hours and the discussion groups. I've never been turned away by a TA, but insolence of professors has more than dampened my attitude. Whether you go to graduate school or not your increase in linguistic and social nuances will be heightened. Quite an accomplishment for an institution of post-secondary learning, wouldn't you agree?

FBI plans to wait out Branch Davidian cult

Mitchell Landsberg
Associated Press

WACO, Texas — The FBI's strategy in the Branch Davidian siege is becoming evident: Isolate David Koresh and his cult followers, deprive them of a media pulpit, wait them down and intimidate them.

Now the question is: Will it work? Given the volatile circumstances, no one can say with certainty. But cult experts and veteran hostage negotiators seem to agree that the FBI's tactics make sense, and could lead to a peaceful end to the standoff, which began in bloodshed on Feb. 28.

The federal agents have already passed the first test of a successful negotiation "because nothing else terrible has happened," said Robert Loudon, the former chief of hostage negotiations for the New York Police Department. Now they must be prepared for a long, frustrating standoff.

Since negotiations began, 21 children and four adults have left the Branch Davidian compound near Waco. Koresh has said 105 people remain, including 17 children.

At this point, Loudon said, the watchwords for the negotiators should be "safety and control."

The FBI has implicitly affirmed that.

At a news briefing Sunday, spokesman Bob Ricks said the agency was still working toward a peaceful solution. And, he said, "We are trying to reinforce to them that we are in charge of the situation. That the compound is under the complete control of the government... (and) that they are impotent in their ability to control their everyday lives."

Ricks has said the FBI controls all communication in and out of the compound, as well as its electricity. And lest the point be lost, the government has Bradley fighting vehicles and Abrams tanks to reinforce its overwhelming advantage.

Bits and pieces of the negotiators' strategy have come out in the daily news briefings held by the FBI and firearms agency. One key, Ricks has said repeatedly, is to deprive Koresh of the ability to get out his messianic message.

Initially, the FBI tried the opposite tack, allowing Koresh to broadcast an hour-long sermon in exchange for a promise to surrender. But Koresh reneged on his end of the deal, and the FBI shut off his access to the news media.

Bosnian government rejects U.N.-backed peace proposal

David Crary
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Serb artillery rained more shells on Srebrenica on Sunday, and the U.N. peacekeeping commander holed up in the battered Muslim enclave reported the situation was desperate.

Some legislators in Bosnia's Muslim-led government rejected a U.N. peace plan in favor of unspecified proposals planned by President Alija Izetbegovic. A Bosnian Serb official said earlier in the day that his side, which also is unhappy with the U.N. plan, wanted a delay in further peace talks.

U.N. officials said Gen. Philippe Morillon spent his third day in Srebrenica trying to negotiate safe passage for an aid convoy and evacuation flights for the wounded. Shelling and fighting also continued in Konjevic Polje, another surrounded eastern village, Bosnian radio reported. There were conflicting reports on whether it had fallen to Serbs.

A World Health Organization expert who walked through war-ravaged eastern Bosnia to get to stranded refugees accused Serb forces of purposely shelling civilians and U.N. personnel trying to help them.

Speaking at a news conference after returning to Zagreb, Croatia, Dr. Simon Mardel of Britain said that up to 30 people were dying daily in Konjevic Polje and Srebrenica, mostly from shelling but also from malnutrition.

Momcilo Krajisnik, the speaker of the Bosnian Serbs' self-proclaimed parliament, said the legislature must discuss the plan before its delegates return to talks with rival Muslims and Croats. His comments were reported by Tanjug, the state news agency of Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

STORMS

Hampshire, which got up to 35 inches of snow inland.

But in the South, the storm was at least as bad as forecasters had warned it would be.

Florida, struggling to recover from Hurricane Andrew last summer, was strafed by tornadoes and other severe weather, and at least 26 people died. The Gulf Coast suffered extensive flooding, while boats were flung ashore in Tarpon Springs. President Clinton authorized federal aid for 23 counties in Florida.

Birmingham, Ala., got 13 inches of snow within 24 hours — more than the city had ever gotten in an entire winter.

At least 200 travelers took shelter inside control rooms in two tunnels along Interstate 77 at the Virginia-West Virginia line on Saturday night, said John Redmond, spokesman for the Virginia Department of Transportation. The National Guard picked up about half of them by Sunday night, he said.

Guardsmen rescued 70 people Sunday stranded in mountainous east Tennessee but about 100 others were stuck in shelters along the trail, said Army National Guard Col. Larry Shelton.

"Everybody has been smart enough to stay put when they got stranded," he said. Food and blankets were dropped to six campers near Tellico.

Among other dramatic rescues: National Guard helicopters ferried 100 teen-agers and counselors to safety from a camp in Caesars Head, S.C. And rangers rescued about half of a 103-member Michigan school group in Great Smoky Mountains National Park in North Carolina, but were trying to find the others.

At various times during the storm, more than 3 million customers lost electricity.

The monster storm formed Thursday and Friday over the Gulf of Mexico, and early Saturday it covered nearly the entire eastern third of the United States, with its outermost bands over Cuba and the Canadian Maritimes.

the increase won't affect freshmen residency, she thinks it may be an issue for other students.

"Most of us are watching our pennies and in an apartment you have more control over what you pay for," she said. "Right now I don't know what I'm paying for... I feel like I'm being victimized for living in the dorms because they say it's cheaper, but it's really not."

The residence halls need to be improved before any rate increase is addressed, UI freshman and Currier resident Rob Hallberg said.

"The dorms aren't in that good of shape and some people are unhappy with them already," Hallberg said. "Any increase in cost will make students look at living elsewhere."

The rates are kept as low as possible, Droll said, but there will always be a number of people who will move out.

"According to exit interviews, the price of residence halls is not the primary reason why people leave," Droll said. "It's usually just for another living situation."

UI graduate student and Student Association President-elect John Gardner said the rise in family housing costs will come as a blow to those residents. He said the housing offers little in the way of

"It's an economic slap in the face and there will be no services," Gardner said. "This is going to hit hard."

It's a no-win situation, Gardner said.

evidence compiled by officials was inconclusive.

The charges, filed March 4, stem from the Jan. 19 accident in which Street's car was struck by a Johnson County snowplow driven by Pence as Street and Vinton were leaving a team meeting at the Highlander Inn on Highway 1 in Iowa City.

Pence was charged with driving 52 mph in a 45 mph zone, and Vinton was charged with failure to wear a seatbelt. Colony said he started accumulating names on the petition about a week ago and has since received letters and phone calls from all over eastern Iowa.

"It's been almost 100 percent in favor of what I'm doing," he said. "I haven't had any negative input at all. Charles Pence needs to know that there are people out there supporting him. Up to this point, it was all one-sided," Colony said.

"Now it's time for the other side to be heard."

Colony said he plans to submit the list to Iowa City City Attorney Linda Gentry, who officially filed the charges two weeks ago.

Gentry said the signatures will probably have little impact in the case and declined to comment on the content of the petition because the litigation is pending.

"You don't file charges based on popular opinion," she said. "You file them according to the law."

"I have sympathy for the people involved but that doesn't dismiss me from my duties," she said.

STATISTICS

The National Gay and Lesbian Task Force in Washington, D.C., relies solely on the Kinsey study to support the 10 percent number because no new reliable research has since been conducted.

Tom Smith, a researcher of sexual behaviors at the University of Chicago, said that the credibility of the Kinsey report is largely questioned these days.

The Kinsey research is more than 40 years old, he said. Kinsey's sampling — weighted toward institutional populations like schools, prisons and hospitals — does not represent the general population, Smith said, adding that Kinsey ranged his figures of homosexuals from 4 percent to 37 percent depending on their definitions.

However, some people affiliated with gay organizations read the figures higher than 10 percent.

Barry Schreier, a member of the education committee of UI Lesbians, Gays and Bisexual Staff and Faculty Association, said, "Most people who conducted follow-up researches of Kinsey say that the number is underrepresented and that the true number is closer to 14 percent."

Smith disagreed, saying that he has never heard a claim higher than 10 percent. "I don't know a single scientifically reliable study to produce numbers like those."

Smith has directed four continual studies on human sexual behaviors since 1988 at the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago. Out of a total of 5,300 people, he found that 2 percent of sexually active men reported exclusively homosexual activity in the preceding year — women registered 0.7 percent.

Yet, Schreier denounced Smith's figures on the grounds that the definition based on sexual behaviors isn't suitable to measure homosexuality and that the numbers are underrepresented due to reluctance of some people to identify themselves as homosexuals.

Though there isn't any hard fact on the numbers of the gay population to date, some experts struggle to look for trustworthy figures without political influences.

Bailey said, "It shouldn't matter politically, if something is right, it's right. Whether it is 1 percent or 50 percent, if it's wrong, it's wrong."

Some gay rights activists at the UI don't think that playing a number game is a wise tactic to attain their goals.

Jogerst said he is not too concerned about the numbers because an argument for civil rights and equality of any minority is not based only upon its percentage in the population.

"We've never heard someone say, 'Now you have 5 percent of the population, so we'll give you an equal protection under the law' or 'We'll stop discriminating against you,'" he said. "That's just silly."

MILITARY

sodomy.

But the political climate concerning gays and lesbians in the military seems to be changing since President Clinton marched into the Oval Office, promising to lift the ban with an executive order.

After facing a fierce storm of opposition from the Joint Chiefs, the Clinton administration compromised to send the Pentagon a memorandum of instruction this January, which was considered to be less enforceable than the executive order.

The memorandum of instruction ordered the services to stop questioning recruits about their sexual orientations, finish exploring soldiers' sexual orientations and cease the practice of discharging those who admit their homosexuality.

But the future of uniformed gays and lesbians will remain fluid until June when President Clinton plans to issue the executive order to end homosexual discrimination in the military.

Although Clinton announced his intent to lift the ban in January, some people in the military still object to having out-of-the-closet gays and lesbians there because they may become a threat to discipline and national security.

While UI undergraduate and Army reserve David Mastio said he will follow any order from top, he added that he opposes the expected executive order from the commander in chief.

Mastio said he has not discovered any case where gays and lesbians caused problems in the military so far, but said he anticipates some negative consequences because of the lifting the ban.

"The biggest reason that they shouldn't be in the military is because they will have a negative impact on the performance of the unit," Mastio said. "They have a possibility to disrupt the lifestyle that is necessary for military cohesiveness."

Mastio said as long as homosexuals stay in the closet, he has no problems. Once they are allowed to come out, he said, it might increase sexual tension among soldiers which would hamper their duty to protect the country.

"I just don't think having a possibility of sexual tension in that environment is acceptable," Mastio said.

UI undergraduate "Dave," who wished to remain anonymous, is a uniformed gay in the reserves and he disagrees.

"Gays have been always in the military," he said. "Tell me where gays and lesbians hamper the abilities to defend the country."

Dave said he places high credit on Clinton, who is fighting for gays' civil rights in the military.

"When Clinton lifts the ban, it will create an environment where people feel comfortable with who they are," he said.

Contrary to his reverence to the president, Dave finds it is difficult to pay similar homage to General Colin Powell, who is said to have threatened to resign if Clinton admitted gays and lesbians in the military.

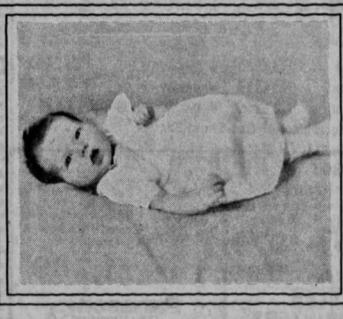

"I have a very hard time respecting General Powell, who is in the position because of equal opportunity," he said. "When he climbed up to the top of the ladder, he pulled it up behind him."

Dave said discrimination against gays and lesbians is no less rational than that against African-Americans before 1948. Yet, in January Powell denied any meaningful parallel between the two groups, saying homosexual lifestyle is a matter of choice.

Dave disagreed, adding, "Both of them are discriminations based on something you have no control over."

Ross said he did not choose to be gay. "I never asked to be gay, I never wanted to be gay, but there is nothing I can do about who I am."

It shouldn't come as much of a shock that Iowa women's basketball coach C. Vivian Stringer got a No. 2 seed in the NCAA tournament announced Sunday.

"We were surprised," said. "It's interesting we were ranked No. 8 last year and got a No. 2 seed this year and got a No. 2 seed."

Iowa and Ohio State finished the Big Ten tie for both teams claiming the 16-2 and 24-3. The Hawks received the automatic bid because Iowa played in the national tournament last season and State did not. Ohio State No. 1 seed in the East with Penn State at a No. 2.

The Hawkeyes will be the first round winner of the first round between Tennessee Tech and Tennessee, which will be Wednesday. The game will be played Saturday in Columbia, Tenn., or Norfolk, Va.

For women's NCAA bracket see "Scoreboard."

Should the Hawkeyes travel to their opening game, they will come home to Carver-Hawkeye Arena for the Midwest Regional on March 25 and 27 for the go to the Final Four in Atlanta.

Iowa added the regular season win over Minnesota Friday with a 63-59 win over Carver-Hawkeye Arena forward Toni Foster. Foster added 24 points, eight rebounds and jump ball. Tia Jackson added 16 points.

With the win, the Hawks share their sixth conference title with the Buckeyes, who have won seven league crowns in the last decade.

Iowa received the No. 2 seed in the Midwest region because of the 1-seeded Tennessee. Lady Volunteers claimed the seed even though Vanderbilt won the automatic bid out of the Southeastern Conference.

Stringer said the Midwest will be full of talent.

Fourth-seeded Iowa going to Nashville

Will face NE Louisiana in first round Friday

John Shipley
 The Daily Iowan

Tom Davis took his Big Ten video library, stuffed it in a bag and brought it to Carver-Hawkeye Arena Sunday afternoon. He wanted to exchange it for tapes of Iowa's first-round opponent in this year's NCAA tournament.

"The bag is going to be empty going home," Davis said.

Well, almost. There was one tape of Northeast Louisiana, and that's what Davis will have to go on as his fourth-seeded Hawkeyes prepare to play the 13th-seeded Indians Friday in Nashville, Tenn.

Game time is to be announced. If the Hawkeyes win, they will face the winner of the game between No. 5 seed Wake Forest and No. 12 seed Tennessee-Chattanooga.

Iowa nabbed the No. 4 seed in the Southeast regional by winning eight of its final 10 games to finish 22-8 overall and tying for third in the Big Ten with an 11-7 conference record.

Northeast Louisiana earned its berth by winning the Southland Conference. The Indians (26-4, 17-1) beat Texas-San Antonio in the championship game last week, 80-66. It's the one game Iowa has captured on video tape.

That shouldn't be a problem for Northeast Louisiana coach Mike Vining. Iowa has played on national television five times this season.

"They'll have as many tapes as they want of us. But that may hurt them; they'll be overprepared for us," Davis joked. "Too much information is dangerous sometimes."

Maybe Davis knows something no one else does; he definitely knows how to prepare for first-round NCAA tournament games. He's never lost one, going 5-0 in his seven years at Iowa. This one may not be as easy as it appears.

The Indians are making their fourth straight tournament appearance. Two years ago they were in Minneapolis with Iowa, losing to Duke before the Hawkeyes did. Last year, Northeast Louisiana lost to Harold Miner's USC team in the first round.

"They're not going to be in awe of playing Iowa or playing in the NCAA tournament," Davis said. "They're going to come in believing they can beat us. They're going to want to do more than be there, they're going to want to win the ballgame."

The Indians start four seniors and a junior, none taller than 6-foot-6 center Maurice Stephens. Ryan Stuart, a 6-4 forward, leads the team in scoring with 21.2 points per game and all five starters average in double figures.

The Indians also lead the nation in field goal accuracy at 52.4 percent.

"That's one thing that jumps out at you," Davis said. "That's pretty impressive."

The teams have one common opponent — Mississippi State. Iowa beat the Bulldogs, 69-54, in the championship game of the Amana-Hawkeye Classic last December. The Indians lost to the Bulldogs, 75-67, in early February.

But Northeast Louisiana has already beaten a No. 4 seed this season. The Indians beat Arkansas, the No. 4 seed in the East regional, in Little Rock, 87-78.

Davis expects an up-tempo game from the Indians.

No. 2 seed puzzles Iowa

Hawks travel to winner of ODU-Tenn. Tech

Roxanna Pellin
 The Daily Iowan

It shouldn't come as much of a shock that Iowa women's basketball coach C. Vivian Stringer was a little disappointed with the NCAA tournament seedings announced Sunday.

"We were surprised," Stringer said. "It's interesting that we were ranked No. 8 last year and got a No. 1 seed. This year we were ranked No. 2 most of the year and got a No. 2 seed."

Iowa and Ohio State finished in a tie for the Big Ten title with both teams claiming records of 16-2 and 24-3. The Buckeyes received the automatic bid because Iowa played in the tournament last season and Ohio State did not. Ohio State has the No. 1 seed in the East region with Penn State at a No. 3 seed.

The Hawkeyes will play the winner of the first round game between Tennessee Tech and Old Dominion which will be played Wednesday. The game will be played Saturday in Cookeville, Tenn., or Norfolk, Va.

Should the Hawkeyes survive their opening game, they will come home to Carver-Hawkeye Arena for the Midwest Regional March 25 and 27 for the right to go to the Final Four in Atlanta.

Iowa ended the regular season with a 16-3-59 win over 9-9 and 14-12 Minnesota Friday night at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Senior forward Toni Foster led the Hawkeyes with 24 points and eight rebounds and junior guard Tia Jackson added 16 points.

With the win, the Hawkeyes share their sixth conference title with the Buckeyes, who have won seven league crowns in the last decade.

Iowa received the No. 2 seed in the Midwest region behind No. 1-seeded Tennessee. The 27-2 Lady Volunteers claimed the top seed even though Vanderbilt got the automatic bid out of the Southeastern Conference.

Stringer said the Midwest region will be full of talent.

"I clearly know that our region is loaded," Stringer said. "We have more teams ranked in the Top 10 than any other region in the country."

Along with the No. 2-ranked Lady Volunteers, the Midwest region consists of the No. 4 Hawkeyes, No. 7 Auburn and No. 18-ranked North Carolina.

Stringer said she doesn't understand the factors used by the tournament selection committee in choosing pairings.

"I don't think it takes a mathematical genius to question how Stanford, who was ranked eighth, got a No. 1 seed in the West,"

IOWA TRACK

Twice just as nice for Morris

Doug Cappel
 The Daily Iowan

Tracy Dahl Morris became Iowa's first two-time national champion in women's track, as she successfully defended her 5,000-meter national crown at the NCAA Indoor Championships Friday in Indianapolis.

Morris also became only the third individual champion in any sport at Iowa and set a new school record in the process. Her time of 15:49.42 bettered the previous record of 15:55.45 set by Nan Doak in 1985.

"I was a little bit more confident this year in regards to knowing what to expect at the meet," Morris said. "The first time I was in awe of it all, but this time I knew what to expect and I knew my competitors."

Coach Jerry Hassard couldn't agree more.

"I was happy to see her retain her title," Hassard said. "She went in confident, and she had a tough act to follow after winning last year."

Morris also felt satisfaction in winning her second straight title.

"There are so many good runners that can win on any given day, so I was really happy I was able to defend my title," she said.

En route to winning the title, Morris defeated the top two finishers from last year's cross country championships and finished less than two seconds from the meet record.

"There was some great competition," Hassard said. "She beat some of the top distance runners in the country."

As the race progressed, Morris increased the pace of the field and her last mile was faster than her first.

"We started out at a pretty good clip and as the race got towards the end, I knew that I had to keep pushing it," she said.

In the shotput, Iowa's Lisa Van Steenwyk, who was coming off a Big Ten championship, came away with her best NCAA performance, finishing eighth with a toss of 49'8".

"I'm happy to see Lisa make the finals of the NCAA Championship," Hassard said. "She didn't get the throw she wanted, but I know she can better that mark outdoors and really make a breakthrough."

Louisiana State's Danyel Mitchell took the crown with a throw of 55'5 1/2".

On the men's side, Anthon Maybank returned for his second try at a national crown in the long jump and came up just a little short. Maybank jumped 25'10 1/4" to take fourth place, but claimed all-American honors for the second straight year.

Erick Walder of Arkansas took the title with a jump of 27'4".

"Almost all of last year's field returned this year, and it was one of the toughest competitions that they have had in the NCAA's in years," Coach Ted Wheeler said.

"It's a real fantastic achievement," Wheeler added. "He went in with almost no preparation, and I'm pleased that he competed against such a tough field and finished fourth."

The men and women now head into the outdoor parts of their schedules, with the men traveling to Arizona and the women to Florida, both on March 20.

Schillig's Hawks keep rolling, win 5-4

Joel Donofrio
 The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's tennis team won its fourth straight dual meet Friday at the UI Recreation Building, beating Minnesota 5-4 in a hard-fought Big Ten contest. The Hawkeyes improved to 8-1 overall and 2-0 in the conference with the victory.

After splitting the six singles matches, the Hawkeyes took control in doubles, taking two out of three matches for the winning margin. Iowa's No. 1 team of Laura Dvorak and senior Andrea Calvert blew out their opponents 6-3, 6-0, while Rhonda Fox and Nikki Willette prevailed at No. 2 over Golden Gophers Kathy Wayne and Jennifer Marques 6-1, 7-5.

"Ever since the Milwaukee Classic, Laura and I have found a really good chemistry between us in doubles — we're communicating and working together real well," Calvert said. "We're both playing much more aggressive; now instead of relying on them to make errors, we're creating them, putting the shots away."

Iowa coach Micki Schillig was quite pleased with the play of her three doubles teams.

"We worked really hard on doubles this week, we've been working hard on doubles, so it's good to see the results show up today," Schillig said. "Rhonda and Nikki are a good team, and I was confident in them even though Minnesota has been strong at No. 2 and No. 3 doubles. No. 1 played just excellent today — it didn't matter who Laura and Andrea would have played against, they were on a roll."

In singles, Dvorak, Calvert, and Fox posted victories for Iowa. Playing at No. 4 singles, Fox came back from a set down to beat Dana Peterson of Minnesota 4-6, 6-1, 6-3.

"I was really pleased with Rhonda's attitude," Schillig said of the Hawkeye junior. "She can sometimes get emotional and get down on herself, but she stayed up; she didn't let it rattle her that she lost the first set."

"My serve finally came through for me, I finally began playing intense," Fox said. "I have had a lot on my mind lately with the change in the lineup (due to Sasha

HAWKEYES: Davis expecting fast tempo

"From looking at their scores, it's obvious that they're a pretty high-scoring ballclub," he said. "They're averaging 87.8, so that's a pretty good pace. So I would guess it's going to be an up-and-down game. We run ourselves, so I would guess it's going to be an aggressive ballgame. I don't know who that would favor."

Davis is happy to be playing Friday instead of Thursday, when half of the tournament games will be played. The Hawkeyes finished out the season playing four games in seven days, going 3-1.

"I've never coached as many games in so little time against as many good opponents with so much pressure on as we've just gone through," Davis said.

Iowa finished the season over the weekend with a 63-53 win over Illinois. Also last week, the Hawkeyes beat Wisconsin and Northwestern and lost at Purdue March 6.

"The physical fatigue of playing the games is one thing, but the mental fatigue of constantly being under pressure... that kind of wears on you, too," Davis said. "We'll work on conditioning this week, but there won't be that mental pressure for a few days. We can kind of rest and be in a more normal light."

Three of Iowa's four seniors scored in double figures in the win over the Illini, who received the No. 6 seed in the West. Val Barnes led the Hawkeyes with 16 points, followed by Acie Earl's 14.

Wade Lookingbill, who scored 10 points in his final Iowa City performance, likes Iowa's chances this year. The forward from Fort Dodge is making his fourth trip to the tournament.

"You hope to play your best basketball right now. We showed some signs of that Wednesday against Wisconsin and then yesterday against Illinois," Lookingbill said. "If we can put a couple of good games together, you never know what can happen."

Boros' injury), so I'm just happy we got the win."

Sophomore Dvorak raised her season singles record to 19-7 with her 7-5, 6-1 victory over Gopher Susan Culik. In the second set she was all over the court, running down Culik's crosscourt shots and hitting them back for winners.

"I just gained confidence as the match went on, I became more patient than in the first set, when I was too nervous and rushing my shots," Dvorak said.

"Laura struggled in the first set, she didn't feel real good about her forehand," Schillig said about her No. 1 singles player. "She didn't give up on it; she stayed after it and sure enough she played great in the second set. She looked like she was on a mission, she was just untouchable."

Schillig hopes her team can continue to play with the intensity

SOFTBALL

Hawks leave Florida tourney with 3-2 mark

Kris Wiley
 The Daily Iowan

Bad weather shortened play for the Iowa softball team at the South Florida Tournament in Tampa, but the Hawkeyes finished the weekend with a record of 3-2 and raised their overall mark to 6-3.

Iowa started off with a 14-0 blow-out of North Carolina-Charlotte on Friday. Team tri-captains Dawn DeVore and Christa Davis each recorded triples and senior Kim Davis homered in the victory.

Junior transfer Alisha Nelson picked up her first win as a Hawkeye, giving up two hits with one walk and eight strikeouts.

"We totally dominated the game," Hawkeye coach Gayle Blevins said. "I was pleased to see us come out so strong."

Iowa then fell in the second game of the day to Hofstra, 5-4 in nine innings. Kristy Gleason started on the mound but was relieved in the second inning by junior Karen Jackson.

Blevins said the Hawkeyes had a number of opportunities to win the game, but became "apprehensive" and lacked confidence at the plate.

The Hawkeyes came back and finished the day with a 7-4 win over Central Michigan. Iowa jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the first inning, but Central Michigan followed with four runs in the second. The Hawkeyes scored the tying run in the third and added three more in the fourth.

Jackson grabbed the win, relieving Nelson in the second inning. She allowed two hits with no walks and six strikeouts.

"One of the things we have trouble with is allowing a lot to happen in one inning," Blevins said after the first day of competition. "We need more confidence at the plate and we saw that in the third game. Defensively we played extremely well in all three games."

Because of weather delays, Iowa played just one game on Saturday, losing to No. 6-ranked Florida State, 3-0 in five innings.

With the Seminoles ahead 3-0 in the top of the fourth, the Hawkeyes loaded the bases with one out but were unable to score in the inning, a factor Blevins said changed the rest of the game.

"It was a huge momentum switch at that point and would have given us a chance to go ahead," Blevins said. "They would have had a whole different game on their hands."

Jackson took the loss for the Hawkeyes, giving up three hits in the contest.

The Hawkeyes had a sluggish start in their last game of the tournament on Sunday, but defeated Georgia Southern, 6-3.

Jackson pitched a flawless game in relief of Nelson. She struck out 10 and improved her record to 4-2 on the season.

Overall, Blevins said the Hawkeyes did not make as much progress during the trip as she had hoped.

"We can attribute that to just not being as assertive as we needed to be," she said. "No team is good when they play apprehensively."

Blevins said there are a number of things the Hawkeyes need to work on, including composure and pressure situations, before they travel to California on their Spring Break trip March 23-28.

"We need to be consistent and have better defense and assertive pitching," Blevins said. "I need to get them ready to handle the pressure of the game."

Records tumble, does low

Karen L. Karaidos
 The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's gym team broke four school records its last home meet of the Saturday night while losing to Michigan State, 191-30-191.

"It was disappointing to meet, but I have nothing but respect for our team," Coach DeMarco said. "This is our high score of the year, four records were broken, but more impressive was the composure in which we competed."

Freshman Kim Baker agreed though the Hawkeye team put in a great effort. "I think we did really well all turned in great performance," Baker said. "To be ready to meet, we just need to have consistency and on hitting routines, six on each event."

Baker broke her eighth record in her first season. Her first place record of 9.85 on vault replaces her previous record of 9.80 set on Feb. 27. She also overtook her record on the all-around with a 38.90, her first place.

"Kim Baker is one very young lady," DeMarco said. "The kind of individual you want to see excel. She's talented and has an outstanding work ethic. A perfect combination for success."

Junior Meredith Chang's 9.80 on the uneven bars broke her previous record of 9.775, her first place. Shelly took second with a 9.65. Baker tied for third with Blotcher and Ruth Aguayo of Michigan State.

Records tumble, so does Iowa

Karen L. Karaidos
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's gymnastics team broke four school records in its last home meet of the season Saturday night while losing to Michigan State, 191.30-191.00.

"It was disappointing to lose the meet, but I have nothing but praise for our team," Coach Diane DeMarco said. "This is our second high score of the year, four school records were broken, but even more impressive was the confident, spirited way in which our team competed."

Jodie Gray on the balance beam.

Freshman Kim Baker agrees that even though the Hawkeyes lost, the team put in a great effort.

"I think we did really well and we all turned in great performances," Baker said. "To be ready for Big Tens, we just need to work on consistency and on hitting all 24 routines, six on each event."

Baker broke her eighth school record in her first season as a Hawkeye. Her first place score of 9.85 on vault replaces her previous record of 9.80 set on February 19. She also overturned her record in the all-around with a 38.90 to put her in first place.

"Kim Baker is one very gifted young lady," DeMarco said. "She's the kind of individual you just love to see excel. She's talented and also has an outstanding work ethic, the perfect combination for success."

Junior Meredith Chang's score of 9.80 on the uneven bars broke the previous record of 9.775, putting her in first place. Shelly Burns took second with a 9.65 and Kim Baker tied for third with Jodi Blotcher and Ruth Aguayo, both of Michigan State.

Hawkeyes finish a forgetful 14th at Fripp Island Invite

Karen L. Karaidos
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa men's golf team completed 18 holes Friday in the 54-hole Fripp Island Invitational before competition was suspended due to inclement weather.

Ball State took first place in the 20-team tournament with a total of 310. Virginia Commonwealth came in second with a 311, while a 322 put Illinois in third. The Hawkeyes came in 14th place after tallying a 339 in a tournament they would rather forget.

"As an individual, I thought I hit it good, but I had a few bad holes which led to the score I didn't want," said Brian Wilson, who shot an 81, the best tally for the Hawkeyes. "As a team it was disappointing because we had high expectations from last year and hopefully we can forget about this tournament and go on with our expectations."

Sophomore Sean McCarty, who shot an 87, agrees that it is best for the team to put this experience behind them.

"I just think we need to keep working as hard as we were before this tournament and continue doing what we were doing," McCarty said. "And kind of maybe forget about this tournament and focus on the tournaments coming up and doing well in them."

Carpenter's horror yarns blend intellect, splattering special effects

He's the one who gave us "Halloween."

Ian Corwin
The Daily Iowan

Horror/Schlock is in its death throes. I'm downright pissed. There's a lot of stuff to choose from these days — "The Omen Part 18," "Attack of the 50-Foot Pudding People," "My Stepmother is a Gun-toting Marxist," ad nauseum. The horror genre has sadly lost its punch, and the only way to get shock thrills anymore is to watch reruns of "Green Acres" with the sound off while broadcasting distorted Jimi Hendrix tunes on the stereo.

We need a savior — someone to lead us out of the murk of the low production values and mind-candy plot lines that have shouldered their way into the video stores of late. A writer/director who can scare us, gross us out, yet still punch the right buttons on our intellectual circuit boards, so we don't feel guilty for watching an hour and a half of some whacked-out dude hacking up young virgins with a machete.

The Messiah? John Carpenter, naturally.

Low-key and hypercynical, Carpenter has left his mark in the annals of horror flicks. Today, I'm recommending three of his most successful and quietly brilliant films — "The Thing" (1982), "Prince of Darkness" (1987) and "They Live" (1988). They all have one thing in common — they all provide great narrative frameworks for Carpenter to explore his favorite theme: the "Everyman" and his never-ending battle with the hidden forces of the establishment.

"The Thing" is Carpenter's hair-raising remake of the 1951 classic about a visitor from space that arrives at a remote Arctic outpost and creates trouble for the crew stationed there. In the original film, the creature turns out to be James Arness as a man-sized vegetable that needs human blood to reproduce.

Carpenter sticks to the original source material (an obscure short story called "Who Goes There?") more closely than his predecessors, in that he makes the thing a shapeshifter that absorbs human beings and hides in their outer forms. He's able to play off this in grotesque ways, with puns, in-jokes, and more disgusting special effects than you'd care to count.

Kurt Russell (director's fave, to be seen in "Escape from New York" and "Big Trouble in Little China") slides through the film as Carpenter's working-man/hero MacReady, trailing a string of tequila and bad jokes a mile long. Wilford Brimley is divinely eccentric as Blair, the station's local sage, and David Clennon takes a sedate turn as the stoner Palmer.

"Prince of Darkness" has more going for it than just a pulsating Carpenter soundtrack. In this overlooked chiller, the Son of Satan is entombed in a bronze cannister and protected by a sect of the Catholic Church known as the "Brotherhood of Sleep." It turns out whoever crashes in close proximity to the chapel has freaky dreams about Armageddon and now science wants to study the oddity.

A group of students, led by the spectacularly bad acting of Jameson Parker and Carpenter-staple Victor Wong, move into the church for a night to scope out the situation, and... yes, all hell breaks loose.

If it weren't for the interesting ideas that Carpenter toys with here, this would be just another eccentric showcase for blood, guts and Alice Cooper. Not only does the director play around with the notion that God, Christ and Satan were extraterrestrials, he makes the son of Satan a liquid that can enter humans and take them over (déjà vu?). Again, the idea of hidden evil and authority.

But with "They Live," Carpenter achieves "Master" status. I mean... Rowdy Roddy Piper and Keith "Platoon" David in a 10-minute wrestling match? Rock 'n' roll!

Based on a story by Ray Faraday Nelson, "They Live" is about facing just how extensive "The Establishment" is, and confronting it with big guns. Aliens have made a deal with upper-class Earthlings — the snobs get all the cash they can use, and the visitors get their pick of middle- and lower-class humans for livestock and slave labor.

It gets so much better. In order to assure that the Aliens' presence is not discovered by the masses, an extensive network of subliminal broadcasting equipment has been set up, providing the aliens with human disguises and constantly reminding humans to "Watch TV" and "Spend Money."

Enter Roddy Piper, as a drifting construction worker who stumbles upon a human underground movement that can see the aliens and their messages with special sunglasses. Piper's performance is surprisingly passable (for a pro wrestler), and the aforementioned Keith David is riotous as a co-worker who befriends Piper. The scene in which Piper tries to convince David to put on the glasses and "shed his ignorance" is classic.

Carpenter's come a long way since "Halloween" made Jamie Lee Curtis a star — he's created some of the most thrilling movies ever, while remaining speculative and playful concerning the "Powers that Be." He's given us all a thing or two to think about and issued us a challenge to stand up against the system. Roddy Piper says it best in "They Live" — "I've come here to chew bubble gum and kick ass... and I'm all out of bubble gum."

Videotapeworm is a weekly column on new, old and monolithically obscure video releases that runs Mondays in the Art & Entertainment section of The Daily Iowan. After spring break: Al Pacino — the unsung hero of '70s cinema.

Noon Hour Performances This Week At The Bank!

ART

This wool Çuval, or storage bag, from Elmadag, Central Anatolia, is one of the 19th and 20th century weavings by Turkish nomads now on display in the UI Museum of Art exhibit "Family Holdings: Turkish Nomadic Flatweaves."

Turkish nomadic weavings exhibit provides aesthetic, cultural education

A symposium related to the exhibit will be held April 1-4.

Michelle-Therese Forcier
The Daily Iowan

The Middle East has always brought to mind visions of sheiks, harems and nomads. Their romantic lifestyle has been the theme for many a silent movie, in which the damsel in distress is taken away to a desert tent stocked fully with fluffy pillows, beautiful rugs and exquisite blankets to be wooed by the Valentino-ish Arabian prince.

Now you can see these items for yourself at the UI Museum of Art. "Family Holdings: Turkish Nomadic Flatweaves," on exhibit now through May 19, features more than 50 19th and 20th century storage bags and weavings by Turkish nomads.

The museum's sculpture court holds a special treat for all visitors. Directly below the skylight, a traditional nomadic black tent has been erected. Inside the tent, all the weaves and place settings are positioned for normal, family use. The result is captivating. Although the tent itself is dark, the bright colors and designs peek out at you. These designs are intricately conceived and masterfully woven. The maker of one wall hanging featuring such a design reversed the inner circular pattern along the middle — an incredible display of dexterity and talent.

The saddle bags, spindle bags, food cloths and storage bags are dyed in rich burgundies, brilliant navy blues, whites, creams, yellows and reds as dark as blood, displaying the Sumak, Kilim, Zili and Cicim weaves. The Heybe / Saddle Bag from Eastern Anatolia Kurdis / Van / Hakkari (from the early to mid-20th century) is an example of how beautiful an everyday object becomes in the hands of these culturally rich people.

Adding to the mystery are faded fold lines in some of the weaves, which point to the normal, utilitarian use of these "artistic" creations by the Turkish nomads.

Two other exhibitions, "Nomads of the Plains," and "American Roads," will run concurrently with "Family Holdings." "Nomads of the Plains," on exhibit through May 9, features 19th-century ledger drawings by the Kiowa, Sioux, Crow and Cheyenne American Indian tribes, documenting their lives and histories. Also displayed in this collection is the work of the artist calling himself "Old White Woman."

"American Roads," a series of photographs from the museum's permanent collection, will be exhibited through May 19. This eclectic collection ranges from the humorous photo titled "Exhausted Renegade Elephant" by Joel Sternfeld — an Ektacolor print of an elephant lying in the middle of the road — to the portion of Robert Flick's "Sequential Views" series done in silverprint.

In conjunction with the exhibits, a symposium titled "Representing Nomadic Cultures" will be held April 1-4. Topics from "The Visual Arts: Woven Dreams, Moveable Houses and the Blacksmith's Craft" to "The U.S. Today: Nomads in Our Midst?" will be discussed. For more information call the UI Center for International and Comparative Studies at 335-0368.

Iowa Brass Quintet's UI concert tonight will feature works by Persichetti, Wilder

The Daily Iowan

The UI School of Music's Iowa Brass Quintet will perform a free concert tonight at 8 in Clapp Recital Hall.

The program will open with an arrangement of "Trois Chansons" (Three Songs) by Debussy. This impressionistic piece, written in 1893, was based on a sensual text by French poet and novelist Pierre Louys.

Next the quintet will perform arrangements of several works from the Renaissance, starting with a song by French composer Claude le Jeune. Le Jeune's music is known for its rhythmic vitality, derived from the metrical rhythm of the text. The quintet will also perform a Renaissance Pavane and "Variations on the Romanesca," both by unknown composers. The centerpiece of the performance will be the "Parable for Brass Quintet" by American composer Vincent Persichetti, who is known for an eclectic style combining classical, romantic and contemporary idioms. The "Parable for Brass Quintet," one of Persichetti's major works, is one of a series of 14 parables written for various ensembles and solo instruments.

After intermission, the quintet will perform the Brass Quintet No. Three by Alec Wilder, a composer of popular as well as concert music. Wilder wrote music that was played by Benny Goodman and Jimmy Dorsey, and his style is a mixture of jazz, classical and popular music of the 1950s and '60s.

The quintet will close the program with "Four Sketches" by Anthony Plog. A professional trumpet player, Plog borrowed from several famous 20th-century works for "Four Sketches," including themes by Prokofiev and Bartok.

The Iowa Brass Quintet — David Greenhoe and Barbara Deur, trumpets; Kristin Thelander, horn; George Krem, trombone; and Robert Yeats, tuba — performs original music and transcriptions for brass. All but Deur are members of the UI School of Music faculty.

The quintet performs a concert on the UI campus each semester. In addition, they perform on tour throughout the Midwest and at musical events around the country. One recent tour included a performance at the Music Teachers National Convention.

Rappers arrested for allegedly assaulting chauffer

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Two members of the rap group 2 Pac were arrested Saturday for allegedly assaulting a driver who complained they were using drugs in his limousine, police said.

Tupac Shakur, 21, of Newhall and Charles Fuller, 23, of Richmond were each held Saturday in lieu of $15,000 bail. They were arrested for investigation of assault with a deadly weapon, said police Sgt. John Zrofsky. 2 Pac was taping a segment for the show "In Living Color" at Fox Studios in Hollywood when the two returned to the limousine during a break around 2 a.m., Zrofsky said.

He said the driver complained when the two sat in the car's front seat — a violation of the limousine company's policy — and allegedly used an illegal drug.

"They apparently got angry and pounced on him and beat and kicked and stomped on him," he said.

The drug wasn't identified and the two weren't charged with drug possession.

Mother Nature deals bad hand to Griffin's riverboat casino

Associated Press

METROPOLIS, Ill. — Merv Griffin seems to be attracting the wrong sort of element to his riverboat casino.

The former talk-show host stopped by for Saturday's grand opening, only to be greeted by high winds and chilly temperatures that forced the ceremony inside.

When Griffin visited the boat last week, flood waters covered part of the parking lot.

The $7.5 million Victorian-style gambling boat has been operating since Feb. 23 on the Ohio River. Officials in Kentucky, which claims virtually the entire river from bank to bank, earlier had threatened to seize the boat because gambling is illegal in that state.

Police identify body
Iowa City police have identified the body found on Prairie Road Sunday as Leon E. Lyven, 26, 4434 Taft Ave. Lyven was killed from a self-inflicted shotgun wound.

Police started searching for Lyven Sunday after his car was abandoned at 1810 Prairie Road.

Services will be held at 10 a.m. Thursday with burial at Andrew Presbyterian Church, 2600 W. Memorial. Burial at Memory Gardens Cemetery, 1000 W. Memorial, will be Wednesday, March 17, from 8 to 8 p.m. at the George L. Funeral Home. Memorial services can be made to the Memorial Bible Fund.

UI invites you to meet interim dean candidate
Meetings with Michael Lynch, a professor of history at the University of California-Irvine and dean of the College of Liberal Arts, are scheduled for today.

An open meeting with Lynch will be held from 10:30 a.m. in the Northwestern Union. An open meeting with faculty and staff will be held from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. in the western Room as well.

College of Medicine names interim dean
UI President Hunter Raetz and Vice President for Academic Affairs Peter Nathan announced Monday that Dr. Richard Lynch will be interim dean of the College of Medicine beginning May 1.

Lynch is currently a professor and head of the Department of Pathology. He will succeed Clifford Williams, who has served as dean since September 1991.

Lynch's appointment will be in effect until a permanent dean is selected. A committee chaired by Richard Williams, professor and head of the Department of Urology, has been identifying candidates who will begin actively screening applicants as soon as possible. Lynch's appointment for health sciences is not expected in June.

UI researchers get $820,000 grant
UI researchers have received a four-year, $820,000 grant to develop a comprehensive power-plant design and construction.

The research, funded by a Iowa investor-owned utility, Power, Iowa Electric, International Power and Iowa-Illinois Electric and the Electric Research Institute of Palo Alto, Calif., will look at water river sediment problems, a major plague power-plant intake structures.

Prosecution concludes case in King beating
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Prosecution concluded its case against four white officers in the King beating trial Monday, with testimony from final witnesses suggesting a cover-up of brutality began with the first police officer.

The prosecution took 11 days over three weeks to present its case.

Sgt. Stacey Koon's attorney, Salzman, had said prosecutors failed to prove "malicious intent."

The prosecution was led by Lt. Patrick Conmy, water manager of the Police Department's Foothill Division when King was beaten. He said when King reported the beating he mentioned that King was with batons while on the street and never indicated King was seriously hurt.
