Clinton may dispatch U.S. troops to Macedonia

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said Tuesday he is considering sending U.S. troops to the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia as part of a U.N. force to keep the war in Bosnia from spreading. ... The president discussed the possibility of sending troops to Macedonia in a two-hour meeting with senators after returning from a trip to Illinois. ... "It's certainly an option that is active and being considered," Sen. Sam Nunn, the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, told reporters afterward. ... Nunn also said Clinton was interested in the possibility of putting U.N. monitors on the border of Serbia to see if it carries out its promised cutoff of supplies to Bosnia's Serbs. ... Nunn said Clinton intended to pursue the idea with European allies, who have been reluctant to follow the president's call for air strikes against Bosnian Serbs and the lifting of an arms embargo on Bosnian Muslims. Despite the allies' hesitation, Nunn said, "I don't think the president is backing off." ... Questions about U.S. military involvement in Bosnia confronted Clinton during a visit to the Chicago suburb of Bensenville. Challenged by a high-school student to square his call for military action in Bosnia with his Vietnam War opposition, Clinton said there is "much more we can do" without getting mired in a Vietnam-like conflict. ... He said of the idea of peacekeeping troops in Macedonia, "It's been discussed but no final decision has been made." ... Clinton told a gymnasium audience at Fenton High School in Bensenville: "We want to try to confine that conflict so it doesn't spread into other countries like Albania, Greece and Turkey." ... Clinton, shaking hands with a crowd in Elk Grove, Ill., before returning to Washington, was asked several times about Bosnia. ... "The United States cannot go in there and get involved in the civil war," he told one man. But he added that there were other ways for the United States and its allies to pressure the warring parties to end the fighting. ... Several people urged him not to send U.S. troops and one asked Clinton if sanctions would be enough. He said, "They're working, but not quickly enough." ... Meanwhile, Sen. DOUBLE THE FUN

Twins find look-a-like lifestyle beneficial

Kurt Scherf
Special to The Daily Iowan

Sometimes, life at the UI resembles a Doublemint commercial. It can be very confusing for people who run into Cindy and Cathy Terrell for the first time. Because they are twins and are practically mirror images of each other, people are bound to mistake them for each other. It happens so much that it sometimes frustrates the Terrells, both UI sophomores and teammates on the women's gymnastics team.

Al Goldis/The Daily Iowan

In addition to attending the same university where both compete on the UI gymnastics team, twins Cindy and Cathy Terrell, from Garland, Texas, are also roommates.

"You don't want to explain every time somebody mistakes you that you're a twin," Cindy said.

What bothers Cathy the most is people who mistake her for her sister on campus and then try to apologize. "People will apologize for mistaking us, but I don't expect them to know me from a distance," she said.

For sets of twins who have shared everything from birthdays, rooms and clothes all of their lives, it may seem odd that a number of them have chosen to attend the UI together. However, to the twins, staying together and in some cases rooming together appeared to be the logical choice. While being together on the same campus is bound to cause some problems, the twins said the advantages of having their alter-ego here far outweigh any negative aspects.

For the Terrells, the choice to attend the same school was obvious.

"We knew we wanted to stay together," Cathy said. "We thought about splitting colleges so we could get scholarships in gymnastics, but we realized we weren't ready to split apart."

Rooming together was never in doubt either, and looking at the experiences others have had with roommates, Cindy likes their situation.

"I see other roommates who are unsure about what to bring, but we just knew where everything was going to go," she said. "It's just so easy and convenient."

Cathy said some people thought it was weird that they would want to live together, but then put it in perspective. "We know that there's going to be a time when we will have to split up, but we get along so well," she said. "This arrangement works perfectly."

The Terrells said being roommates also helps them academically because they are able to take classes together, which saves money on books and gives them a chance to study together. Then, of course, there is the obvious advantage.

"I would go to a class one week, and she would go the next," Cindy said.

Perfect as the arrangement may seem, there are times when the Terrells get on each other's nerves.

"This year we did get a little more bitchy with each other because I got an injury, she got a boyfriend, and she was never here," Cindy said. Cathy agreed that when they didn't communicate, the problems started. "We found that we got upset when we didn't have time to talk," she said. "If we don't see each other for a day, we can talk forever."

Dating can also be interesting with the twins.

"Guys don't know how one of us will react if they ask the other one out, because they think one of us will be really offended," Cindy said. "We've been told by guys that together we're 100 percent perfect," added Cathy, laughing at the situation.

UI juniors Mike and Dan Abbott, also twins, said they were sick of each other after high school, and therefore decided not to room together. However, they said the bond between them remained strong. The Abbotts have attempted to find their own identities here separate from each other. Dan joined a fraternity while Mike started getting into "the alternative type of thing." Despite the search for independence, Dan said he didn't really mind being so similar to his brother.

"I don't mind having the same identity because it makes me really unique, because no one else has that," he said.

Mike agreed that having a twin here had its advantages. "You always have someone that will be on your side no matter what," he said. "And when I walk up to him, he has to say hi."

Having someone so similar here helped Dan because he said his twin was the one person that truly understands him. Living together for so long, he said it is easy to pick up on each other's feelings.

"He understands what I'm talking about when I've got a problem," Dan said. "It's kind of fun to have someone around who can relate to me."

If the Abbotts have any problem being here together, it would center around their similar taste in women.

"We'll pick out the same girl and say she's cute and then I get mad at him and he gets mad at me," Dan said. "That gets a little frustrating after awhile."

Lutherans don leather for Sunday bike rides

Associated Press

WORTHINGTON, Minn. — If you've got a passion for bikes, a belief in the Lord and a free afternoon to hit the road, "Lutherans in Leather" may be for you.

The loosely organized group of local churchgoing motorcycle buffs tours the back roads of Minnesota and northern Iowa every other Sunday. There are no membership fees or monthly dues.

"I think for a lot of people, they just don't believe being a believer and a biker can mix," said the Rev.

"But there's a part of me that thinks if Jesus came back right now he might even be a biker."

Bob Knutson, reverend

Bob Knutson, pastor of First Lutheran Church and leader of the pack.

"But there's a part of me that thinks if Jesus came back right now he might even be a biker."

As bikers go, Knutson's group is a pretty tame bunch.

Those who are interested simply show up at First Lutheran every other Sunday afternoon at 1 p.m.

to schmooze and cruise. Riders need not be Lutheran.

"This is different than the group down at the local bar," Knutson said. "We don't question their faith. If they have a bike and want to ride with us, we welcome them."

While it's an odd mix to many, about 50 bikers who call themselves regulars find it a comfortable fit.

Sunday morning it's Bibles and dress clothes. Sunday afternoon it's bikes and helmets and black leather vests or jackets.

"It's just nice to be around people who feel the same as we do," said Pam Klatt of Peterson, Iowa, who is a member of a national Christian motorcycle association and who rode to Worthington for the group's bike-blessing service last weekend. "Sometimes you go to a motorcycle meeting, and you're not sure you're going to come out."

Said Knutson, "It's an excuse to ride, and part of the reason for it is to fight the image of bikers."

"People have a lot of stereotypes. People think of bikers with long hair and long beards, but many in our group are grandparents. People think of bikers as young people and rowdy and boozers; our group doesn't drink much at all. People think of bikers as hoods, but most of my bikers, if not all, are very, very quiet people in the parish."

Associated Press

Lutherans in Leather member Arie Boon of Doon, Iowa, prays at the "Blessing of the Bikes" Sunday at the First Evangelical Lutheran Church in Worthington, Minn.

Although the group's main purpose is fellowship and fun, it has a mission of sorts. Group members collect toys and dolls and deliver them to Lutheran Social Service during an annual motorcycle run to the Twin Cities each summer.

Many in the group have the look of the serious biker.

Black leather jackets, vests and chaps are common, jeans and boots typical. Knutson recently gave his wife, Rita, a motorcycle jacket for her birthday; they both plan to buy leather chaps this summer.

Knutson said group members still draw stares from passersby and local merchants.

"If they only knew who we were," he said, smiling.

Opossum rescued from Hillcrest well

Jon Y. The Daily Iowan

A daring rescue from a two-foot cement well Monday morning at Hillcrest Residence Hall left one opossum seriously perturbed and onlookers, well, looking.

The opossum, who apparently fell into the well early Monday morning, is reported in stable condition in a field outside of town.

"I was just helping out another animal," said Animal Control officer Jeff Petrie, who downplayed the incident. "It was just in a situation that it couldn't get out of."

Petrie had to be called in to retrieve the opossum by campus security officers after they were unable to rescue the animal themselves.

"We have special equipment we use that campus security officers don't have," he explained.

The opossum, which was described by Hillcrest Secretary Jennifer Maletke as "small to medium sized and scared," was found hunched in a corner of the ground floor window well, unable get out.

"I could tell it was scared by its body language," Maletke said. "Opossum body language. Someone tried to tell me it was a beaver, but I knew it wasn't because beavers are cute. It wasn't cute."

Petrie said that while opossum, squirrel and raccoon incidents tend to increase in the summer months, people encountering these animals should not be alarmed, but should call the animal control center before taking any action dealing with one.

"Opossums can bite pretty good," he said.

Republican leader suggests limited legislative session

Mike Glover Associated Press

DES MOINES — A Republican legislative leader Tuesday urged that talks about a special legislative session be limited to gambling issues and business tax breaks.

Senate Republican Leader Jack Rife of Durant said a meeting today with Gov. Terry Branstad should be only one step in the process. And he said talks should continue even if officials can't reach agreement in that session.

Most discussions about a special session have focused on gambling, tax breaks and workplace drug testing. Rife said the drug issue is the least pressing.

"I don't sense the ground swell behind that," Rife said.

On the other issues, he said, the state faces an immediate loss of jobs if legislators don't act and they can't afford to wait another year until lawmakers convene again.

A bipartisan group of legislative leaders is set to meet with Branstad to assess the potential for compromise. Branstad has said he won't summon the Legislature back without assurances they can act quickly.

Rife said the issues being discussed generally were approved by one chamber of the Legislature but didn't make it through both. Given that lawmakers were relatively close to approval during the regular session, there should be room for agreement, he said.

MAN POSES AS REPORTER

UI students receive harassing phone calls

Public safety advises residents to hang up.

Susan Winterbottom The Daily Iowan

A recent wave of obscene phone calls to UI residence halls from an unidentified man claiming to be a reporter from Cosmopolitan magazine has some residents feeling embarrassed and victimized.

"It feels like you've been mentally violated," said Christie Midthun, UI freshman and Currier resident who received one of the calls. "It's a little embarrassing because I believed the guy."

According to Midthun, the caller was a man who posed as a reporter from Cosmopolitan magazine doing a phone survey about sex. Midthun said the caller was very "mature and professional" sounding.

"He introduced his full name, and said that some of the questions might be personal and that I didn't have to answer anything I didn't want to," she said. "So I thought it was legitimate."

Midthun said the caller began by asking general questions about her opinion on how many men on campus were having sex, but the questions got progressively more personal.

"He started to ask about my sexual experiences," she said. "Then I started to wonder."

Stacie Kimmen, the RA on Midthun's floor, said other women on her floor have also received the calls.

"Each person only received one call but the first time it happened three or four people got the same kind of call," she said. "I think five or six people have been called altogether."

Kimmen said the calls have been happening for two weeks at least, and possibly up to a month.

Nina Paul, UI freshman and resident on Kimmen's floor in Currier, said she too received a similar call.

"He started to ask me personal questions, and I said 'I'm not going to answer that,'" she said. "When I came home that day there was a message on my machine, and it was really obscene. He said my name — he must have gotten it from my answering machine message. I was really scared."

According to the residence hall coordinators, obscene phone calls are not uncommon. However, some residence halls, including Currier, Hillcrest, Burge, Daum, and Stanley have received reports of calls from someone claiming to be doing a telephone survey about sex.

Cheryl Hoogerwerf, hall coordinator for Daum and Burge residence halls, said she's had "a couple of reports" in her office. Hoogerwerf said the calls, which have been reported within in the last week, seemed to be happening more frequently in Daum than in Burge.

Jill Schafer, Currier and Stanley Hall coordinator, said she has heard of two such calls, which were reported to her within the last week.

"The protocol for any harassing or obscene call is that the student should report it to public safety, their RA and their hall coordinator," she said. "Prank phone calls happen every day — we really encourage people to report it because it can help establish if there is a common theme or if it is the same person calling."

According to figures from the UI Department of Public Safety, five obscene phone calls were reported to the department during April and May. Only one of these calls was similar to the phone survey caller. However, 10 calls were reported in September, and several of those were similar to the phone survey caller.

Students who receive an obscene phone call should end the conversation as soon as they realize it is an obscene call, Sgt. Mary Jo Lessmeier of UI Public Safety said.

"Don't argue or debate with the caller because that's how they get their gratification," she said. "Hang up. If there is an immediate call back, take the phone off the hook."

RECENT SUNSHINE NOT ENOUGH

Johnson County fields too wet for planting crops

Jude Sunderbruch
Business Editor

Although scattered rays of sun have been spotted in the skies over Johnson County in recent days, area fields are still far too wet for most farmers to plant their crops, according to government officials.

While the amount of rain has diminished from the torrents that fell upon Iowa in April, the lack of significant sun and wind has kept fields soggy and unworkable in most places.

Almost every farmer in the region has been forced to sit and wait as their fields slowly dry, according to Dale Shires, extension education director for the Iowa State University Extension Office in Johnson County.

Although the past weekend was filled with sun, it was still too wet for the heavy machinery of modern agriculture to be used.

"I don't know of any fields that were dry enough," he said. "Fortunately, we haven't gotten much rain, so the drying process is continuing."

As a result of the weather delays, the amounts of corn, soybeans and oats that have been planted are far below normal levels. Shires said his service is recommending that farmers refrain from planting any more.

"We probably won't see much more seeded because it's too late for a successful oat crop," he said.

Shires said May 10 is regarded by researchers as the pivotal date when potential yields on corn and soybeans begin to fall and it's really too late for more oats to be put in the ground.

Yet another problem exists in those fields that have begun to dry, said Steve Carson, county executive director of the U.S. Agriculture Stabilization and Conservation Service.

The inclined nature of many Iowa fields causes the land to dry at irregular rates, he said. This has forced farmers to wait for wet patches to dry, even though most of a field may be fine. Like Shires, he has heard of few, if any, farmers who have been able to plant their crops.

"I didn't see anyone in the fields this weekend," he said.

He didn't expect farmers to return that quickly either.

"I still think the ground's too wet," he said. "Sunshine's the opposite of rain, and that's what we need right now."

That could be just what Iowa gets later in the week, according to Chuck Myers, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Des Moines.

"The likelihood for significant rainfall continues to decrease slowly across the state," he said. "There may be some lingering showers tomorrow, but after that the state should get some sun and heat."

Although this is good news for those in agribusiness, it probably won't be enough to solve the problem, he added.

"It's going to take some time to dry out the fields," he said. "What we need is some wind to help the sun out."

Myers said that while five days of 80 to 90 degree weather with a stiff wind would probably be just the answer to alleviate much of the problem, it's unlikely the state will be that lucky.

"We need an extended dry period and I don't see that coming," he said.

School board discusses policy revisions allowing area residents to use facilities

William Pepper
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City School Board discussed revisions to current district policies and boundary scenarios for a new elementary school at its regular meeting Tuesday night.

The board discussed revisions to the policy on "Community Use of School Facilities" that would add a statement saying the district holds an agreement for use of school facilities with the Iowa City Parks and Recreation Department, Coralville Parks and Recreation Department and Kirkwood Community College.

Director of Administrative Services Jerry Palmer said the district encourages public use of its facilities.

"Our buildings are very user-friendly," he said. "In fact, we probably don't have enough of them."

Much of the discussion about the revised policy centered on how much individuals or groups should be charged for using the facilities, and if the fee should be based on whether the planned activities are for profit.

Board member Betsy Hawtrey said that charging different rates could exclude some people from using the facilities.

"I think our schools should be open to all individuals," she said. "Is there no opportunity for individuals who are not hooked into a group?"

The revised policy also adds a statement that outdoor facilities are available to community members on a first-come-first-serve basis.

"We quite honestly cannot monitor the grounds," Palmer said. "We allow the outdoor facilities to be used, but we don't reserve them for anybody."

The policy will have its second reading at the next board meeting.

In other business, the board heard a presentation on five possible scenarios for shuffling the boundaries of the school district to accommodate the new elementary school to be built in southeast Iowa City.

"We have not yet found the perfect solution," Superintendent Barbara Grohe said. "As we've run these different scenarios, there's always one more you can run. In the end someone will have to have their child moved."

Grohe added that at least three public hearings are planned before the final decision is made.

The five scenarios address current and projected enrollments at each of the schools. Scenario A deals with Roosevelt and Horn Elementaries and the new school. Scenario B covers all the schools west of the Iowa River. Scenarios C and D cover the west and south Iowa City elementary schools. Scenario E encompasses all the elementary schools.

The final decision on the boundary changes will be made in November and will be enacted for the 1994-95 school year.

Conditions ideal for mosquitoes

Associated Press

AMES — The excessive rain in Iowa is doing more than putting farmers behind in their planting, flooding streets and damaging homes — it's setting the stage for a bumper crop of mosquitoes, entomologists said.

"If it's nice and warm, they'll do very well. I look for an excellent population early on, say by the end of May and definitely by the first of June. And if it stays hot, we'll have a banner year," Iowa State University entomology Professor Wayne Rowley said.

Rowley said standing water where the insect will breed and temperatures high enough to heat the water and hatch the eggs are necessary for mosquitoes to prosper.

Rowley said there hasn't been much warm weather, but there's been more than enough water.

And if Iowa gets a week of hot weather, Rowley said to watch out. Mosquitoes will begin to show up once the temperature of the water hits 65 degrees.

Billions of mosquitoes are hatched in Iowa in a normal year, according to ISU extension entomologist Ken Holscher.

ACCIDENT STATISTICS HIGH

Board of Supervisors hear report on Sand Road speed limit change

Lynn M. Tefft
The Daily Iowan

County Engineer Doug Frederick said Tuesday that the speed limit should be changed to 45 mph on Sand Road from Iowa City city limits to Napoleon Road.

"It's one of the more traveled roads in the county," Frederick said during his report to the Johnson County Board of Supervisors.

Supervisor Steve Lacinia agreed.

"The area you're talking about is becoming more developed," he said.

Frederick said the Iowa Department of Transportation, following their speed study of the road, recommended a 1,000-foot 45 mph buffer zone. He lengthened the zone to two miles, he said, because of the road's accident history.

Between 1979 and 1991, 90 accidents occurred on the two-mile stretch between the city limits and Napoleon Road, including four fatalities. Frederick said the IDOT does not typically consider these statistics in its studies, but instead just testdrives the road and conducts traffic counts.

Supervisor Betty Ockenfels asked if the new speed zone will be enforceable.

"Do we have adequate sheriff's staff?" she asked.

Frederick assured her that it will be enforceable, adding that red flags will temporarily mark the change in the area.

MAN FRAUDED

Manager of prison term

E. Scott Reckard
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — A money manager who defrauded small cities in Iowa and other states of $105 million, exposing a county regulation of investment advisers, received a possible 20-year sentence, nearly 20 years ago.

Steven D. Wymer, who had used municipal bonds to finance their excess cash, had pleaded guilty to nine felonies. He framed his crimes as abhorrent behavior, the result of an advised attempt to cover a single loss for which he was ashamed.

That snowballed as he lost money from account to account, he told District Judge Richard Gadbois Jr., who sentenced him at an after-hearing.

Probation officers recommended a prison term of 15 years, seven months, to 19 years, seven months. Assistant U.S. Attorney Kawahara urged a maximum sentence, saying Wymer hurt thousands of people over six years, using their funds to buy cars, resort homes, a New Beach, Calif., mansion.

Prosecutors described victim as the Torrance, Calif., city manager, who had a breakdown of $2 million in losses; the Jeff Bank and Trust of Colorado, which lost $38 million from Iowa; and is on the verge of failure of the city of Dubuque, Iowa, which defaulted on $3.5 million it owed the state police and fire retirement fund.

In addition to his guilty plea, Wymer agreed to forfeit his $1 million in assets, repay defrauded clients and cooperate with them as they prepare for lawsuits over the fraud.

MAN DEFRAUDED IOWA AGENCIES

Manager could receive prison term of 20 years

E. Scott Reckard
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES—A money manager who defrauded small cities and agencies in Iowa and other states of $105 million, exposing the security regulation of investment advisers, received a possible federal sentence of nearly 20 years Tuesday.

Steven D. Wymer, who had promised municipalities big returns on their excess cash, had pleaded guilty to nine felonies. He portrayed his crimes as aberrant behavior, the result of an ill-advised attempt to cover up a single loss for which he was ashamed.

That snowballed as he shifted money from account to account to hide losses, he told District Judge Richard Gadbos Jr., who was to sentence him at an afternoon hearing.

Probation officers recommended a prison term of 15 years, eight months, to 19 years, seven months. Assistant U.S. Attorney Jean Kawahara urged a maximum sentence, saying Wymer hurt thousands of people over six years, using their funds to buy sports cars, resort homes, a Newport Beach, Calif., mansion.

Prosecutors described victims such as the Torrance, Calif., city treasurer, who had a breakdown over $8.2 million in losses; the Jefferson Bank and Trust of Colorado, which lost $38 million from Iowa cities and is on the verge of failure; and the city of Dubuque, Iowa, which defaulted on $3.5 million it owed to the state police and fire retirement fund.

In addition to his guilty pleas, Wymer agreed to forfeit his $9 million in assets, repay defrauded clients and cooperate with them as they prepare for lawsuits over the missing millions.

He testified before Congress, describing the Securities and Exchange Commission's meager oversight of him and going into a secret session to reveal how five securities firms allegedly helped his scheme.

In fallout from the case, the House passed legislation last week to step up inspections of individuals and firms that offer financial advice. The bill would allow investors to call a toll-free number to check the advisers' integrity.

The bill would add to the 48 SEC inspectors who oversee 18,000 investment advisers, paying for them through higher registration fees. The advisers now go years, even decades, with no checks by federal regulators after paying a $150 registration fee and undergoing preliminary scrutiny.

Less sweeping legislation has been introduced in the Senate.

Most of Wymer's clients were small cities and agencies seeking a safe investment for excess cash. Wymer promised them big returns on supposedly safe investments, but in reality engaged in high-risk deals that compounded his losses.

Prosecutors said he used client funds between 1987 and 1992 to buy $6.6 million in real estate, 12 cars worth $400,000, $500,000 in securities, a $450,000 plane, and $350,000 in jewelry. He spent more than $29 million — far more than he says he earned and far more than he has agreed to forfeit, they said.

The SEC, which Wymer disparaged as ineffective, finally detected the fraud in 1991, accusing Wymer publicly for the first time in December of that year of wrongdoing at his Institutional Treasury Management in Irvine, Calif., and its predecessor, Denman & Co.

Defense testimony heard in Drake Diner trial

Associated Press

DES MOINES—The gunman in the Drake Diner shootings was wearing a mask when he shot two diner managers during a robbery, defense witnesses testified Tuesday.

Joseph White Jr., 17, is charged with two counts of first-degree murder and one count of first-degree robbery in the Nov. 29, 1992, holdup in which Cara McGrane, 25, and Tim Burnett, 28, were slain at the trendy restaurant near Drake University.

Defense attorney John Wellman called 10 witnesses, many of them Drake basketball players, who were in the diner the night of the shootings.

Four of those witnesses testified the gunman was wearing a full mask.

Wellman asked one witness, Drake basketball player Ray Slater, if he noticed anything about the gunman's face.

"No, because the person that I saw had a mask on," Slater said.

Slater also testified he didn't remember what color the mask was.

ENGRAVING OFFENDS GRANDMOTHER

Quad Cities woman upset by grandson's gravestone

Associated Press

DAVENPORT — The mother of Tonya Nelson says she first will try legal methods, but if that doesn't work, she will use a hammer to chisel away at the headstone on her grandson's grave.

"It's going to come down," said Sandy Nelson, grandmother of 8-year-old Jerry Nelson who was beaten to death last summer.

Nelson said her daughter, Tonya, who was sentenced last week in Illinois to 75 years in prison for her role in Jerry's death, did not give permission to put the headstone on the child's grave at Davenport's Mount Calvary Cemetery.

The Nelsons' objections have nothing to do with the stone itself — just the wording on it.

The marker says: "In memory of Jerry A. Nelson — victim of child abuse. On earth he once graced us. In death he lives eternal life, for he shall no longer suffer."

Sandy Nelson, who lives in Tampa, Fla., said Tena Kelly of Davenport and her child abuse prevention group are using the headstone for publicity. The group was named, "In the Spirit of Jerry Nelson."

"Jerry's death is not an advertisement," the boy's grandmother said.

However, Kelly said Tonya Nelson was in jail when the community banded together and donated money for the headstone. She said she consulted with Tonya's sister, Fern Nelson-Harper, and the child's biological father, Preston LeMaire. They both attended the memorial service when the stone was placed.

"I did what the community requested of me," Kelly said. "They never wanted people to forget that when they walk by that headstone, they know this little boy was a victim."

Sandy Nelson said it doesn't matter what the community wants or if anyone, other than Tonya, gave permission to Kelly.

"Tonya is the baby's mother. She is the only one who can say anything," she said.

She said Tonya, 22, formerly of Riverdale, wants to replace the headstone with one that has a picture of Jerry on it and borrows a verse from the Bible.

Tonya's boyfriend, Douglas Oaks, 26, formerly of Bettendorf, was convicted in Illinois of first-degree murder for killing Jerry and has been sentenced to death.

HUNDREDS WOUNDED

Croats fight former allies for Mostar

John Daniszewski
Associated Press

MOSTAR, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Croats battled Bosnia's Muslim-led army for the western half of Mostar on Tuesday, defying a truce intended to cool renewed fighting between the one-time allies.

Croat forces tried to push the Muslims across the Neretva River to the east bank. On Monday, the Croats captured the army headquarters in the city, which was burned out and still smoking Tuesday.

Many Croats want to unite southwestern Bosnia with neighboring Croatia, making the Neretva the eastern boundary of a "Greater Croatia." Similarly, Serbs dream of linking areas they control in Bosnia and Croatia with Serbia, the dominant state in what remains of the Yugoslav federation.

At U.N. headquarters, Bosnia's government formally requested the withdrawal of 9,000 U.N. peacekeepers and aid workers from Bosnia, saying concern over their safety "now constitutes a significant obstacle" to Bosnia's defense.

Foreign Minister Haris Silajdzic said the request was intended to pave the way toward ending a U.N. arms embargo on the Muslims, who are outgunned by Bosnia's Serbs. Some Western nations say arming the Muslims could provoke Serb attacks on U.N. personnel.

It is unlikely the Security Council will end its work in Bosnia, or lift the arms embargo.

Explosions of artillery shells and heavy machine-gun and sniper fire echoed through Mostar all Tuesday, despite the truce agreed to Monday by Bosnia's Muslim president, Alija Izetbegovic, and Bosnian Croat leader Mate Boban.

Gen. Philippe Morillon, commander of U.N. peacekeepers in Bosnia, was heading to Mostar with the chiefs of the Bosnian army and Croat forces to discuss the fighting, said Dalgeed Bagga, a U.N. spokesman in Zagreb, Croatia.

A spokesman for Bosnian Croat forces, Veso Vegar, said Croats had pushed Muslims back to within 100 yards of the river on the west bank. There was heavy shooting in every direction near the river, and the Croat hold appeared tenuous.

Two mortar shells hit the Croat military headquarters in the city, killing one soldier and wounding another. A Spanish U.N. peacekeeper was seriously wounded by shrapnel while escorting a convoy of blood supplies to a hospital, U.N. officials in Sarajevo said.

Associated Press

U.N. Commander-in-Chief Philippe Morillon (above) talks to reporters Tuesday about Bosnia's formal request for the withdrawal of U.N. peacekeeping forces.

On Sunday, the Spanish battalion in Mostar was forced to withdraw to surrounding hills because of the fighting.

The United Nations has said Croat forces attacked Mostar at dawn Sunday and charged that they were practicing "ethnic cleansing" by herding Muslim civilians out of the city.

Boban, the Croat leader, charged Monday that government troops started the fighting. Vegar said Tuesday that Muslims attacked a Croat patrol in the city, killing one Croat soldier and wounding seven.

"We assume they are being detained or being taken out of the area against their will."

Bill Carak, Army captain

In Zagreb, Zdravko Gavran, spokesman for Croatian President Franjo Tudjman, also blamed the Muslims and said Croatia wanted the fighting stopped.

Eleven Croat soldiers and one civilian were killed and 100 people wounded in Mostar since Sunday, said Dr. Jadranko Barisic, a Croat

Yugoslav leaders set up meeting for Serbs to OK U.N. peace plan

Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Yugoslav leaders announced plans Tuesday for a joint meeting of Serb deputies from assemblies in Yugoslavia and former Yugoslav republics to ratify the U.N. peace plan for Bosnia.

The unexpected call for Friday's meeting apparently marked another gesture by Belgrade to show the West that it is pressuring Bosnian Serbs to sign the peace plan.

Belgrade is eager to show that it no longer backs the Bosnian Serbs in order to win the lifting of U.N. sanctions imposed on Serb-dominated Yugoslavia for supporting their Bosnian brethren's cause.

The Yugoslav news agency Tanjug said Friday's meeting would draw deputies from Serbia and Serb-occupied regions of Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina. It also would include deputies from Montenegro — the only other state remaining in Yugoslavia with Serbia — and members of the Yugoslav federal parliament.

Such a combination would almost certainly produce a majority in favor of endorsing the peace plan, which was drawn up by mediators Cyrus Vance of the United Nations and Lord Owen of the European Community.

It was not clear, however, whether Bosnian Serb lawmakers would even attend the meeting, or if they did, whether they would sign the plan and then uphold it.

Bosnian Serb lawmakers have twice before rejected the U.N. peace plan, most recently last week when they voted instead to hold a referendum this weekend on the plan.

Leaders of Bosnia's Serbs, who have captured about 70 percent of Bosnian territory since they rebelled against a Muslim-Croat vote to secede from Yugoslavia 13 months ago, have refused to sign.

In eastern Bosnia, Ukrainian U.N. peacekeepers began efforts to demilitarize Zepa, one of six "safe areas" declared by the United Nations last week after Bosnian Serbs rejected the peace plan.

Ron Redmond, a U.N. aid spokesman in Geneva, said a trickle of people who fled to surrounding hills to escape Serb artillery attacks on Zepa last week were beginning to return, but were in "very, very bad condition."

There were about 40,000 people in the Zepa area before the attacks, but only a handful were in the town when U.N. monitors arrived Sunday.

More than 134,000 people have been declared dead or missing in the Bosnian war.

military doctor at Mostar's main hospital.

There was no report on Muslim casualties. Michael Boutin of the nongovernmental International Rescue Committee said he assumed there were hundreds of wounded. "There's no way to get to any of them," he said at his group's office in Medjugorje, about 12 miles southwest of Mostar.

U.N. officials said they were concerned about Muslim civilians reportedly cleared out of their homes in Mostar on Sunday.

"There have been a number of civilians taken from their homes," said U.S. Army Capt. Bill Carak, a U.N. spokesman in the central Bosnian town of Kiseljak. "We assume they are being detained or being taken out of the area against their will."

The U.N. Security Council issued a statement late Monday strongly condemning the Croats, saying the offensive was inconsistent with their leaders' signing of the U.N.

Major holds meeting with Rushdie

Associated Press

LONDON — Prime Minister John Major met with Salman Rushdie on Tuesday in Britain's strongest show of support for the author since the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini condemned him to death in 1989.

The two met for about 30 minutes at Major's office at the House of Commons. Iran had warned that it and possibly other Muslim countries would curtail trade with Britain if the meeting occurred.

"This is the most important day of the campaign against the fatwa so far," Rushdie told reporters, referring to the religious edict Khomeini issued in February 1989 that has forced him to live in hiding.

Rushdie, who was born in India but is a naturalized Briton, said the meeting "will send a message around the world, both to allies and to the government of Iran."

WACO, Texas — David Koresch, one of the top aides of the Branch Davidians, died near his cult's compound burned Tuesday, officials said Tuesday. They also acknowledged that the mess leader may not have lied about how many people were inside the fortress.

Like Koresch, at least one other aide — Steven Schneider, handled much of the negotiations during the Branch Davidians' 51-day standoff with federal agents — may have been shot, Justice John Cabanis said.

Two of nine other bodies identified Tuesday also may have been in the compound's "communications room," also considered a kitchen serving area.

Koresch had been shot once in the forehead, although authorities don't know if it was a suicide homicide. Schneider died from a combination of smoke and carbon monoxide with a possible traumatic injury, Cabanis said.

Wayne Martin, an attorney who also played a key role in negotiations, was found in a room more than 20 feet away, said Justice Cindy Evans. His cause of death wasn't released.

Officials said the location of the cult's top three figures provided little insight into what happened at the end of the siege. The Branch Davidians' w

200 workers killed in Thailand factory fire

Michael Haddigan
Associated Press

NAKHON PATHOM, Thailand — Soldiers conducted a round-the-clock search Tuesday for bodies buried in the smoking ruins of a doll factory that caught fire and collapsed as workers scrambled to escape, killing more than 200 people.

It may have been the deadliest factory fire in history. The death toll surpassed the 146 killed March 25, 1911, at the Triangle Shirtwaist Co. factory in New York City.

An Interior Ministry spokesman told reporters that the death toll from Monday night's blaze had reached 213, while Channel 7 TV gave a count of 240.

Human limbs could be seen sticking out of the smoldering rubble as searchers used cranes to lift twisted girders and jagged blocks of concrete from the wreckage. Blackened parts of Santa Claus dolls, novelty figures and other export items littered the site.

More than 100 bodies, some shrouded with newspapers and sheets, remained at the site awaiting identification by relatives.

Some corpses were so badly burned that gender could not be determined.

The government launched an investigation into the cause of the fire, which also injured 500. Prime Minister Chuan Leekpai, visiting the site on the outskirts of Bangkok, said the company had ignored warnings to improve safety.

Most of the victims were young women, who make up about 80 percent of Thailand's low-wage factory work force.

The factory is in the Phuttamonthon area, about 15 miles west of Bangkok.

About 800 workers were in the four-story building where flames erupted in the cloth-cutting area on the ground floor and quickly spread to two other factory buildings. All three structures were destroyed, leaving only one building standing in the complex.

Many of the injured suffered broken limbs when they tried to leap to safety from upper floors.

The prime minister did not elaborate on what safety violations may have occurred at the factory, which employed about 4,000 people and made many types of dolls, most for export.

But Industry Minister Sanan Kojornprasart said he had ordered officials to check into reports that the buildings had only two narrow fire escapes.

Thai television also quoted an unnamed company official as saying the flames blocked one of two exits and workers scrambled to escape through a single door.

Provincial Gov. Prawate Tortrakul said it appeared the fire was caused by a short circuit, although police said the cause remained under investigation.

Executives of the factory's owners, Kader Industrial (Thailand) Co. Ltd., defended their safety policies to television interviewers, saying they complied with government regulations.

The company was described by press reports as a Thai-Taiwanese joint venture.

The modern-looking factory was built within the last five years, according to the Board of Investment, a government body that promotes foreign investment.

Nikhom Chandravithun, a labor activist and former labor department director, said some Thai factories are "death traps" and said he would ask the government to investigate them nationwide.

"We can't let this happen again," Nikhom said.

"There are laws, but there is no effective enforcement," he charged.

He said there already had been three fires at the facility, the most recent just a few months ago.

Justices of the Peace John Cabaniss, right, and David Pareya talk at a press conference Tuesday called to announce the identities of remains found in the Branch Davidian cult compound in Waco, Texas. Two of David Koresh's top aides were identified.

1 of cult leader's aides may have been shot

Jaime Aron

WACO, Texas — David Koresh's two top aides died near him as their cult's compound burned, officials said Tuesday. They also acknowledged that the messianic leader may not have lied after all about how many people were inside the fortress.

Like Koresh, at least one of his aides — Steven Schneider, who handled much of the negotiations during the Branch Davidians' 51-day standoff with federal agents — may have been shot, Peace Justice John Cabaniss said.

Two of nine other bodies identified Tuesday also may have been shot. That means at least eight and possibly 11 of the 16 victims publicly identified had gunshot wounds.

Koresh and Schneider were found in the compound's "communications room," also considered the kitchen serving area.

Koresh had been shot once in the forehead, although authorities don't know if it was suicide or homicide. Schneider died from breathing smoke and carbon monoxide with a possible traumatic head injury, Cabaniss said.

Wayne Martin, an attorney who also played a key role in negotiations, was found in a room less than 20 feet away, said Peace Justice Cindy Evans. His cause of death wasn't released.

Officials said the location of the cult's top three figures provided little insight into what happened at the end of the siege.

The Branch Davidians' wooden compound burned April 19 after FBI tanks pounded holes in the walls and pumped in tear gas. Investigators said cultists set the fires, but survivors said a tank knocked over a lantern.

By Koresh's count, 94 people were with him as the standoff ended. Nine escaped, which would put the death toll at 86 if Koresh's number was accurate.

On April 29, investigators ended their search for bodies, saying they had found 72 who died at the end of the siege. State officials said Koresh probably exaggerated the number of people in the compound with him.

On Tuesday, Peace Justice David Pareya said investigators now believe the death toll could approach 86. What investigators believed to have been three bodies were either parts of other corpses or were debris, and as many as 24 bodies were found in bags previously believed to contain only four corpses, Pareya said.

Many bodies were found in a cinderblock bunker inside the compound where ammunition was stored.

"We're very much unsure of the totals at this point," Pareya said. "We're in the very tedious process of trying to separate the bodies that were meshed together in the bunker-area."

Officials also have found the bodies of five cultists who died in shootouts after agents from the U.S. Bureau Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms raided the compound Feb. 28 because of alleged firearms violations.

GRADUATION

No more pencils, no more books

The UI administration has instituted a campaign in recent years called "Graduate with Class," to minimize the gaudy, stupid and childlike behavior seen in some past graduation ceremonies. Graduating students have been informed of the program through the mail and that the administration wants to encourage decorum to honor the graduates themselves. The family and friends will be informed at the door with posted signs. It is a good idea and evidences the fact that a university can impart knowledge, but not wisdom or respect.

Problems have decreased in recent years, but youthful exuberance still takes over on occasion. The shaving cream, paint, sequins, paper constructions and other pieces of art displayed on mortar boards are said to help family and friends identify individuals amid a sea of black robes. However, they call everyone's name out. Even if the graduate is too drunk or hungover to recognize it, surely a family member or friend will.

Some of the problems the administration seeks to quell are incongruous with each other or make no sense. It is ridiculous to go to the ceremony drunk or sneak alcohol into the ceremony. Cheap "champagne" does not mix well with the intense heat of the auditorium or arena. Sitting in a puddle wearing a black robe only compounds the suffering. Imagine this with a hangover and the intense glare of an airhorn. Ungodly.

Parents and friends contribute as well. It seems that many have yet to realize the difference between the UI and the UI athletic departments. No Carver ceremony has yet completed a wave, but the crowd still cheers wildly for their favorites. Amateur photographers show up and take flash pictures from 400 feet away with Instamatics. Others bring their new toy video recorders and stroll around the arena floor as if some type of press pass came in the box from Sony.

The ceremonies are bearable. If nothing else, they mark the first time in four years (five or six) that you don't have to take notes at a speech. Those who don't see the need for graduation ceremonies should simply skip it and start their party early. One of the marks of an education is recognition of the rights and feelings of others. If you don't care about the ceremony, please recognize that it does mean something for others.

MANDY CRANE

Of squirrels and men . . . naturally

My sister has a rodent problem. "We moved into the apartment and I noticed these squirrels kept coming up to our windows in the dining room." Jon (her husband) said, "Cool, we can feed them."

"Oh, no," I told him. "If we start feeding them they'll never go away." That was in the winter and it was a little easier to keep the windows closed and simply shrug the squirrels away. Now spring has sprung on Amy and Jon and their Alexandria, Va., apartment and the squirrels are starting to act — well — squirrelly.

"We've even started naming them. We named one of them Sheba," she said. Sheba is a black squirrel and thereby part of the majority in the squirrel population in their neighborhood. The other squirrels are "half-breeds," by Amy's account, "intermarrying" with the more common gray squirrels.

"The other day Sheba was sitting there at the window with a look that she just wouldn't leave until she got food," my sister sighed as she started her tale of disaster.

"The upstairs neighbors throw down scraps of food and you can tell the old renters in our apartment did the same thing."

"She'd been there for hours and wouldn't go away. She started to look like she was dying or something. Of course, Jon did nothing but sit and read his paper."

"Finally I got so mad that I grabbed a metal ruler and started banging on the screen, shouting, 'Amscray, you varmint!' at Sheba but she just gave me a look."

"She rose up and held a paw up to her chest as if to ask, 'Moi?'"

"Well, I know how much the squirrels hate the mourning doves around the building so I started to make noises like the birds. You know, 'Hooooo. Hoo-hoo.'"

"That really made Sheba mad. Suddenly she leaps up, spread-eagled on the screen. It didn't take me long to notice Jon and I had correctly named her SHE-ba. Anyway, she's got all four paws hooked on the screen and then just 'Wooosh,' empties her bladder, all over the screen, the inside of the window, the sill, the floor . . ."

"I was screaming, 'AAAAAAGH! Look what that stupid squirrel is doing!' And Jon actually puts down his paper to watch."

"Sheba just kept peeing all over and I was running and getting paper towels and trying to shut the window. She finally stopped peeing and her head was still between the screen and our crank-type window and I started shutting it, saying, 'I don't care, I don't care,' because I was so mad I wanted to kill the thing."

"She got out OK, but then just went over to the next window."

"Jon keeps telling me, 'She's just marking her territory.' I say, 'Fine. Next time she claims our window YOU can clean it up.'"

"It's his fault anyway. He just sits there at the table all the time, talking to them. 'Hello. Hello, there, squirrel!' Ugh."

Listening to my sister's account reminded me of the varmints closer to home. Last summer a friend and I were having lunch in College Park. This was before the city turned the place into one big moldy-looking brownie, with no trees, but plenty of illumination. Squirrels were once rampant there.

My friend Hank is not the cuddly little animal type. Whether it be a puppy or a bunny, Hank is more apt to arch his back and hiss rather than coo. Plus, his idea of the great outdoors is a mall with trees. This makes what happened at lunch that day even more strange.

Just one look at this little black squirrel sent Hank into a tizzy.

"Look. Look at that one. He's just adorable. I'm going to name him 'Sneakers.'"

"Hank, darling," I struggled to point out.

Psychologically raped

To the Editor:

Recently the university community has been psychologically raped of innocence and purity. These virtues were cruelly substituted with their opposites: corruption and trauma. Two phenomena in particular served as examples of this sickening attack. For starters, recall the week immediately preceding Valentine's Day. The Add Sheet contained a gross plethora of "cheesy condom ads." As an example of how condoms are a big lie, the AIDS virus is small enough to permeate their rubber membranes. In a recent study, roughly one-third of the condoms tested (in simulated environmental conditions common to condoms) allowed an unsafe level of virus through, and the other two-thirds allowed at least 0.1 micron (the size of an AIDS particle).

For overall protection (against STDs and pregnancy), one in six condoms fail. These numbers, and the statistic that one in 100 college students has AIDS, prove that condoms are a Trojan Horse. Of course, President Clinton, Surgeon General Jocelyn Elders, condom manufacturers and abortion mills never mention these facts.

Sadly, society has largely bought the rubbish that abstinence until marriage, the only real protection, is possible to practice, a concept which is germane to the propagation of condom pushers. I'm an abstinent at the age of 22, when hormones tend to run quite rampant and the stresses of law school do help, I'm still alive and well — no thanks to those aforementioned condom ads. I believe that this seed of purity I've planted will yield an excellent marriage as a harvest.

This is true for all. The reason I want us to wait is for our own good; He knows (and we often discover) the corrupting, traumatic physical and emotional ramifications of premarital sex. Unfortunately, however, our innocence continues to be raped by the mind control perpetrated by agents of a certain serpent. (Those agents, by the way, are everywhere: they infest the media, the professions, and they even teach our classes.)

The second innocence-bashing phenomenon is the infamous "art colloquium" where students were shown, absent their expectations, a sick film by Franklin Evans containing 20 seconds of homosexual, or sex. In the name of "academic

GUEST OPINION

International students overlooked in budget

The 1994 UI Student Association budget has been a sad and discriminatory story for many associations of UI international students. Students from Indonesia, Laos, China, Hong Kong, Singapore and Palestine are now on the verge of budget breakdowns which will drastically affect diversity events at the UI during the next academic year. Who is defending these students in the UISA? It is unclear.

The figures reveal a doubtful commitment to diversity on the part of the UISA. I would like to give some examples of the artful budget designed by the more than questionable members of the 1992-1993 UISA's Student Budget Auditing Committee. I say questionable because one of the past SABAC members allegedly changed the figures in the budget rankings of the 'Friendship Association of Chinese Students and Scholars.'

Not being satisfied with what could be a serious fraud with very serious consequences for the international students on our campus, this master (or masters) of camouflage failed to file the budget of the Chinese students, who naturally freaked out when they did not see their group's name in the UISA budget list. Of course, this person denied the mistake. Who is going to listen to a group of foreign students with accents? It is their word against the word of a prejudiced person who may still be a UISA senator. Welcome to justice.

I understand the anger of the Chinese students because, although I very much dislike the "foreigner" label, I am a "foreign" student myself. Unfortunately, the Chinese students' case has not been an isolated one in this now vetoed budget. The Hong Kong Student Association got no money at all for their newsletter because it does not reach enough people. Ha! First of all, I am sure they do not inflate the figures as some other groups do. Secondly and more importantly, whoever decided not to allocate any money for their newsletter does not have the slightest idea about the importance of the newsletter as a means of communication and a cultural link between all the students from Hong Kong on campus.

The same thing happened with the Singaporean students, although they received a fortune of $30.15 that will not even cover mailing costs. The newsletter produced by the Singaporean students is sent to many other U.S. universities, and promotes the UI at the national level. What a poor objective compared to the $1,115.61 allocated to the one lecture of the Alliance for the Advancement of Heterosexuality. Of course the speaker (Dr. Judith Riesenman) will need to fly to the UI, spend some days in the Iowa House, eat at Season's Best, and talk to an audience of four or five about the importance of not falling into the sin of homosexuality.

By the same token, international students are told that no festivals with food can be financed. Of course, students from Hong Kong and Singapore did not receive any funding for the Chinese New Year because it has food. It is obvious that somebody who says this has not attended many festivities of the Chinese New Year. The only thing to know about Chinese culture is Chinese fast-food and little more. What ignorance. Aren't the Chinese New Year or Cinco de Mayo as legitimate of cultural events as the Night on the Volga or Oktoberfest? Do the newsletters of the Permiats, Laotians or Singaporean students reach fewer people than the newsletter of the Hawkeye Hunting and Rifle Association? I need to take a deep breath.

These international students are frustrated, and so am I. The promotion of diversity at the UI is at stake if there is nothing done about this unfairness and potential discrimination in the budget distribution. The lack of information is a serious problem here. Many associations of UI international students are not told how to maximize their budget request. The past SABAC committee did not even hold the required budget workshops. The irregularities are blunt, and John Gardner, the UISA president, knows it. He said that the UISA has hired a financial officer to supervise the budget procedures next time. Gardner has also promised to conduct an official investigation on the 1992-1993 SABAC members.

However, I think there is a major point missing here. SABAC members are UISA senators who can also be members of the student groups requesting money from the Undergraduate Activities Senate. By law, SABAC senators cannot act or vote on any budget which affects their own. But what are the control mechanisms to avoid the situation of SABAC senators allocating more money to their own associations? Should we trust them because they are nice guys and nobody is guilty until proven otherwise? This is a joke.

The one thing that can be learned from the controversy on the 1993-1994 UISA budget distribution is that the system favors "political insiders" or student groups who know how to take advantage of it. It seems that the student government (the international student senator included) is not doing a real effort to teach us, the international students, to defend our rights in a system that is unfamiliar to us. One of the Chinese leaders told me that we are not regarded as equals in the UISA system. Don't we pay tuition fees like every UI student (many of the international students paying out-of-state fees)?

I would finally like to remind all the associations of international students to write a budget appeal to John Gardner, UISA president, the Office of Campus Programs, and the Office of the Dean of students. This appeal should state the programs for which the association lost funding, why they are needed, and an earnest request that the UI administration allow the UISA control of its 1993-1994 leftover funds to solve the problem. This appeal should be received by May 31. Let's hope. And, as a Chinese student leader told me, let's also remember that the UI graduate school would be closed overnight without the "foreign" students on this campus. We are important to the UI's objectives of excellence in education.

Look down from the Ivory tower

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the remarks made by professors John Penick and Leslie Schrier last fall about the Teach for America program. This reply is a bit tardy due to the length of time it took me to get the article, but I feel my opinion as a Teach for America teacher needs to be heard.

I teach a self-contained sixth-grade classroom in rural Louisiana. Five days a week I get up at 6 a.m. and go to bed at 11, and virtually every minute in between is spent concentrating on the education of the 27 young people in my classroom. Teaching is a difficult job, and I struggle with it just like any first-year teacher would. But I believe these children are learning from me, and whenever I read arrogant comments like those by Schrier and Penick talking about the irreparable damage I am doing to today's youth, I shake my head in wonder and sadness.

Clearly, Schrier and Penick believe that only teachers fresh from classrooms like theirs at the UI are qualified to teach. That may well be true in Iowa, which consistently finishes near the top among the states in measures of educational quality, and where certified teachers are in abundance. But their suggestion that uncertified teachers be booted out of TFA states like Louisiana, consistently 48th, 49th or 50th in educational measures, makes no sense to anyone who has been to the areas TFA serves.

Take my school, which is well-off by TFA standards. Of the five sixth-grade teachers at my school, only two are certified. If Penick and Schrier had their way, the other three (two of whom are TFA) would hit the road, leaving the two most experienced teachers with classes of 67 students each. Is that really in the best interest of the students? Perhaps Schrier and Penick want a substitute — often little more than a babysitter, and certainly without the rigorous academic background TFA requires — to take my class until a certified teacher comes to town to take over. Wake up, professors! There is a shortage of certified teachers willing to establish themselves in the toughest urban and rural schools — they're all living in Iowa and other places where there are fewer problems in the schools. Who can blame them? By state law, if a certified teacher arrives this summer, he or she could take my job. But I don't suspect I'll have to pack my bags — nobody ever comes.

So, professors, instead of complaining about the damage I'm doing, why don't the two of you come down here and teach. We need intelligent, educated teachers, and I'm sure the kids could learn a whole lot from you. Dr. Penick could do an excellent job teaching science to kids who sorely need it, and there are plenty of openings in Spanish and French which Dr. Schrier could fill admirably. You would certainly do some kids a world of good, and I'd be happy to pick you up at the airport. But until you're willing to actually help solve the problem instead of complaining about those who try, you're the one doing the damage. My sacrifices and hard work to teach children are not "degrading," "offensive," and "a shame," as you say. Your ivory tower criticisms are.

Psychologically raped

To the Editor:
Recently the university community has been psychologically raped of innocence and purity. These virtues were cruelly substituted with their opposites: corruption and trauma. Two phenomena in particular serve as examples of this sickening attack. For starters, recall the week immediately preceding Valentine's Day.

The Add Sheet contained a grossly misleadingly titled "Condoms: A grossly misleadingly titled article." As an example of how condoms have a big lie, the AIDS virus is small enough to permeate their rubber membranes. In a recent study, roughly one-third of the condoms tested (in simulated environmental conditions common to condoms) allowed an unsafe level of virus through, and the other two-thirds allowed at least 0.1 micron (the size of an AIDS particle).

For overall protection (against STDs and pregnancy), one in six condoms fail. These numbers, and the statistic that one in 100 college students has AIDS, prove that condoms are a Trojan Horse. Of course, President Clinton, Surgeon General Jocelyn Elders, condom manufacturers and abortion mills never mention these facts.

Sadly, society has largely bought the rubbish that abstinence until marriage, the only real protection, is possible to practice, a concept which is germane to the propaganda of condom pushers. I'm an abstainer and at the age of 22, when hormones tend to run quite rampant and the stresses of law school don't help, I'm still alive and well — no thanks to those aforementioned condom ads. I believe that this seed of purity I've planted will yield an excellent marriage as a harvest.

This is true for all. The reason God wants us to wait is for our own good; He knows (and we often discover) the corrupting, traumatic physical and emotional ramifications of premarital sex. Unfortunately, however, our innocence continues to be raped by the mind control perpetrated by agents of a certain serpent. (Those agents, by the way, are everywhere: they infest the media, the professions, and they even teach our classes.)

The second innocence-bashing phenomenon is the infamous "art" colloquium where students were shown, absent their expectations, a sick film by Franklin Evans containing 20 seconds of homosexual, oral sex. In the name of "academic freedom" and "artistic expression," Evans and his loyal fan, teaching assistant Megan O'Connell, have raped students of their innocence by foisting pornography upon them with no consideration for the possibility of any traumatic or corrupting effects it may yield upon them.

Would people champion "diversity" and "freedom of expression" so fervently if a student publicly said a Christian prayer in a class? Fat chance. Along these lines the paramount reasoning underlying the Supreme Court ban on public school prayer related to the negative psychological effect that such prayer supposedly had upon select students. What about the psychological damage students suffer when they are forced to view pornography? Why is this trauma, which is infinitely more destructive and corrupting than any that may result from watching someone pray, so easily discarded as "closed-mindedness?" What about the rights of the students to choose what they wish or wish not to see?

Trauma comes with the territory, as a consequence of a closed mind," say the porno-apologists, like the DI's Kim Painter and Matthew Wills. Perhaps Wills, Painter, O'Connell, Evans and all other purveyors and supporters of class porn should form their own colloquium, and show their appreciation for freedom of artistic expression by inviting the likes of Marquis de Sade to come and do class participation acts.

Better still, why not have the above-named individuals leave this hallowed institution to those of us concerned with preserving innocence and pursuing purity. It's time the citizens of this university community stop suffering from the trauma and corruption spawned by the closed-minded liberalism that infests. Evans and company would thrive better at the Playgirl Academy of Pornographic Art anyway.

Budget deceptions

To the Editor:
The budget issue for student organizations is far more serious than it appears: preferential treatment has been given to some groups over others. Based on the facts so far, I believe there has been an intentional deception committed against Friendship Association of Chinese Students and Scholars, an organization with more than 500 members.

The figures on our budget application have been altered without our authorization. As a result, our budget has been grossly cut down from last year's $3,300 to this year's $40. Functionally, the funding for all of our on-going programs including the newsletter, Chinese New Year and June 4 Memorial Conference has been wiped out. The $40 is only for the office fee.

In addition, some of the budget committee members tried all means to cover the deception. During the meeting on May 4, a committee member insisted that it was our organization that asked that the figures be changed. As a result, by using the changed figures combined with the rules of the calculation of funding, our organization was found to deserve that amount because of the low ranking. In particular, he said that we requested that the figure be changed in the February budget hearing.

We proved the falsity of his words by verifying with one of the interviewers the next day. We also asked the UISA office to see our original budget application, which the office failed to produce. However, instead of admitting the error by the budget committee, a budget member still tried to conceal the matter using the passive voice — the beauty of the English language: There was a mistake. But nobody knows and there is no way to know who made it.

Money is precious; the truth is dearer. While I do appreciate the efforts made by the UISA to reallocate funding for our programs, I believe what is involved here is, first of all, an issue of principle. The UISA should take the matter seriously to preserve its accountability and credibility by making a thorough investigation and publicizing the results.

Compassion for all sides

To the Editor:
I appreciated Jim Rogers' column on the murder of the abortionist in Florida (March 19 DI). I, too, was shocked by that desperate act, and further dismayed by the weak response to it of some (certainly not all) leaders in the anti-abortion movement.

I also agreed with Rogers' explanation of why we oppose abortion, and also why we take care to obey the civil authorities. Christians are called to shun lawlessness, so the question for those of us opposed to abortion becomes, "Can we be actively involved in opposing abortion and still be law-abiding people?" I believe the answer is an emphatic "yes!" The problem with active involvement, however, is that sometimes it can lead to activism, which can then escalate into violence and desperation. Mr. Rogers could have mentioned just some of the positive things that pro-lifers are doing effectively every day without becoming activists. True religion, after all, involves more than simply believing the right things, but also doing what is right. Our God calls us to do true acts of love and compassion, because He is a loving and compassionate God.

So how can thankful Christians actively oppose abortion, and at the same time avoid lawless deeds? For one thing, we need to show compassion for all parties in a crisis pregnancy, not just the unborn child. Donating time, energy, money or clothing to a crisis pregnancy center is one place to start; some families have even opened their homes to pregnant women who had no other place to go. Letting elected officials know of our opposition to abortion is another possibility. Even sidewalk counseling, if done peacefully, is a law-abiding way of opposing abortion. By treating all people as beings in God's image, we can offer genuine, life-giving choices to people in crisis situations. Christians must actively show that there are always alternatives to abortion (assuming the mother's life is not in danger). Abortion clinics would then be forced to close, simply because their "services" would no longer be used.

Forum increased communication

To the Editor:

With all of the discussion and letters as of late concerning the math department here at the UI, I felt it appropriate to make known what has transpired recently. On March 30, the Math Club sponsored a forum on the teaching of mathematics. There was a panel of five professors available to answer any and all questions students wished to ask, as well as important education issues students wished to raise. The forum was established in an attempt to build communication between faculty and students, and that is exactly what it did! A wide range of topics were covered including evaluation procedures of individual teachers, as well as of the entire department, hiring procedures for professors and TAs, grading policies, the relationship between teaching and research, and the responsibilities of teachers and students in the learning process.

Many misconceptions were cleared up through thoughtful explanations given by the professors. Similarly, students were able to not only express frustrations, but also give suggestions for better communication and input. One idea presented was the placement of a suggestion box in MacLean Hall so students can anonymously say their piece.

Another idea was the use of midterm student evaluations so the teachers can use the comments constructively during the semester, rather than after the class has ended. Overall, the forum was a huge success! The students appreciated the chance to be heard, and the faculty was grateful for the exchange of ideas. I learned more about the math department in those two hours than I have learned in two years of taking classes. I only wish more students could have been there. Good things are happening and more students need to take advantage of them. It is all too easy to sit back and complain, but few take the initiative to make a change. The Math Club is an organization that provides for that chance, and new members are always welcome. College life offers so much more than a basic education, but too many students do not get involved. The common response is that they are too busy with classes and studying, but as a friend said to me once, "Don't let school get in the way of your education."

Sports coverage complimented

To the Editor:
Well, this is a red letter day! I opened The Daily Iowan Sports section this Wednesday, March 31, and to my amazement all of the articles on the front page were about women's sports. All three of the photographs were connected to women's sports also. Congratulations for good sports coverage.

I have spent years grumbling every time I opened the Sports section and saw the front page dominated by articles about men's sports. I don't mean to imply that men's sports are not important or interesting. However, I have always felt that women's sports are just as important and interesting, and they have not gotten their fair share of coverage. I have been especially annoyed when the women's basketball team was performing so much better than the men's and they still ended up on the second page while the men showed up on the front page.

But it seems that that may be changing. This is the first time I can remember seeing the entire front page devoted to women's sports, and it is about time.

While I am complimenting the Sports section of The Daily Iowan there is another matter that needs to be addressed. I think that Roxanna Pellin has done a superb job of reporting on the women's basketball team. Her articles are always well written, lively and informative. I have truly enjoyed reading them.

So, congrats Mr. Casey, for giving women's sports the recognition it deserves and for hiring Roxanna Pellin.

Senate passes motor voter bill

Lawrence L. Knutson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Giving President Clinton a hard-fought victory, the Senate broke a GOP filibuster Tuesday and voted final approval of a bill making voter registration easier than ever before.

Under the "motor voter" bill, passed 62-36 and sent to President Clinton, individuals would be able to register by mail, when they apply for driver's licenses or public assistance or at military recruitment offices.

"This is a victory for democracy," said Becky Cain, president of the League of Women Voters. "Voter registration will now be easy and available to all."

An earlier 63-37 vote ending the filibuster occurred after Democratic Leader George Mitchell told the Senate its will had been frustrated for months "by a dedicated group of obstructionists," all of them Republicans.

In the end, five more Republicans broke ranks, joining Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., who had been the sole GOP supporter of the bill.

They included Dave Durenberger of Minnesota, who crafted a compromise designed to prevent voters from being coerced into registering with a particular political party when they applied for welfare or other government benefits.

The others were William Cohen of Maine, Pete Domenici of New Mexico, James Jeffords of Vermont and Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania.

Mitchell had asked earlier of the Republicans, "What are they afraid of? Why are they afraid of the people participating in the Democratic process?"

Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas said while the bill was improved by Republican amendments in a conference with the House, it is still bad legislation.

And because it contains no money to pay for its provisions it represents "an unfunded mandate on the already overburdened states," Dole said.

"I can't think of anybody in America who wants this bill," he said. "It doesn't make sense to a lot of people."

Dole and Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., said that despite the changes, the bill still could lead to "fraud and coercion."

But the floor manager of the legislation, Sen. Wendell Ford, D-Ky., said "This bill reconnects the American people to their government."

Durenberger explained that his compromise language deleted a section of the bill that would have required voter registration at unemployment offices and took several steps to see that no coercion was brought to bear against welfare applicants who also seek to register to vote.

"Republicans were trying to eliminate the possibility that people would feel threatened in public assistance offices," Durenberger said.

He said he intervened even though he was not a member of the House-Senate conference that approved the compromise "rather than see motor voter die over this issue."

Blacks angered by police officers' acquittal

Associated Press

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — A grand jury's decision Tuesday not to indict white police officers in the choking death of a black motorist frustrated black leaders and angered the man's widow.

Grand jurors met for four days and heard testimony from dozens of witnesses before exonerating the officers in the Feb. 5 death of Larry Powell, 39, of Dayton, Tenn.

"I feel empty inside. I'm very bitter and very angry inside," Geraldine Powell said. "I think there's no justification for the verdict they came up with."

Her husband was driving near the Chattanooga suburb of Soddy-Daisy when two officers stopped him on suspicion of drunken driving. Investigators said Powell, a former heavyweight boxer, resisted when told he was being arrested.

Five officers responded to calls for backup and, in the ensuing scuffle, Powell was handcuffed, put face down on the ground and a choke hold was used on his neck. An autopsy blamed his death on the choke hold.

The grand jury of 11 whites and 3 blacks said the officers reacted correctly in a difficult situation.

"It is our strong feeling that the names of every one of these officers should be cleared and that they should be exonerated of any wrongdoing in this case," said Marsha Crabtree, grand jury forewoman.

"We feel that in this case these officers were trying their best to do their job in the best way they could, based on their training and experience." The FBI also investigated Powell's death. The FBI report was filed with the Justice Department's civil rights division in Washington, where officials didn't immediately return telephone calls Tuesday.

Chattanooga Urban League president Charles Love said he expected a lawsuit to be filed.

"The community needs to be aware this is not the end of the investigation," he said. "This person didn't die of natural causes, so either someone or some entity is responsible for his death."

An autopsy by medical examiner Dr. Frank King ruled Powell's death a homicide. But he said there was no evidence Powell had been abused.

who supports U.S. military force in Bosnia, unleashed a scathing attack on European allies, calling their lack of action to stop the killing of Muslims there "moral rape."

Biden said the United States might be forced to abandon military options because of the Europeans' reluctance to act.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher, who got little support for Clinton's idea of air strikes or other military action during a recent trip to Europe, plans to discuss the Bosnia situation today during talks in New York with U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali and other officials.

The Clinton administration has been frustrated in its efforts to win allied support for limited bombing strikes of Serbian artillery sites and a U.N. peacekeeping force to which it would contribute 20,000 or so U.S. troops.

Clinton had come to the Midwest in an effort to get away from the Bosnian crisis and to refocus attention on his economic package.

But at a question and answer session with students here after a speech on his proposal to overhaul the student loan system, Clinton was asked why he supports U.S. military involvement in Bosnia when he opposed it as a draft-age student in the Vietnam War.

"That's a good question," Clinton replied. "But I never advocated the United States unilaterally sending troops to Bosnia to fight on one side or the other of the civil war there."

"But I think there is much more we can do to induce the parties to stop the fighting, to do what we can to stop this idea of ethnic cleansing, murdering people, raping children and doing terrible acts of violence solely because of people's religions," he said. "I think that the United Nations, the world community, can do more in that regard."

"That's quite a different thing from what happened in Vietnam, where the United States essentially got involved in what was a civil war, on one side."

He said "there are some remarkable similarities to it that should give us caution," but he added, "That does not mean... that the United States should not consider doing something."

The possibility of sending troops to Macedonia — the southernmost former Yugoslav republic — surfaced as the administration sought new ways to deal with the situation in light of strong European resistance to more direct action.

The Wall Street Journal reported in Tuesday's editions that sending U.S. peacekeepers to Macedonia could possibly be the first commitment of U.S. ground troops to the Balkans.

There is now a United Nations force of about 800 "blue helmet" peacekeepers in Macedonia.

In Washington, an administration official who spoke on condition of anonymity said that having an international force in Macedonia would send a strong message of the world's concern.

BAN

"Instead I was amazed to find that he had no moral or religious problems with homosexuality; he was simply opposed to lifting the ban," he said.

The Campaign for Military Service, an amalgam of groups opposed to the ban, immediately issued a statement saying that prejudice motivated Peck to "sell out his own son to the ignorance and fear."

Efforts to reach Col. Peck were unsuccessful. The Marine Corps public affairs office said he was on leave.

Two top Democrats on the Senate panel, chairman Sam Nunn of Georgia and J. James Exon of Nebraska, have spoken of a possible compromise: not questioning recruits about their sexual orientation, imposing a strict code of conduct and not ferreting out homosexuals.

However, gays would not be allowed to serve openly.

Sen. John Warner, the second-ranking Republican on the panel, predicted that approach — in effect now under Clinton's interim order — will be where Congress ends up on the issue.

Bowing to pressure, Clinton set the interim policy in January. But he also directed Defense Secretary Les Aspin to draw up an executive order by July 15 ending the ban.

Retired Gen. Schwarzkopf, the commander of U.S. troops in the Persian Gulf War, said he could accept that but not the idea of homosexuals serving openly in the military.

"I have no objection to leaving the situation exactly where it is now," he said.

Schwarzkopf, America's war hero, said his opposition to lifting the ban stems from the impact it would have on the military and its ability to fight.

"In every case that I'm familiar with, and there are many, when it became known in a unit that someone was openly homosexual, polarization occurred, violence sometimes followed, morale broke down and unit effectiveness suffered," Schwarzkopf said.

If Clinton goes ahead with ending the ban, Schwarzkopf said the military will follow but there will be little enthusiasm.

"To me, they will be just like many of the Iraqi troops who sat in the deserts of Kuwait, forced to execute orders they didn't believe in," he said.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rik Smits signed a multiyear contract with the Indiana Pacers on Tuesday, the same day he underwent arthroscopic surgery on his right knee.

No terms of the contract were released.

Smits underwent the surgery to correct patellar tendinitis, a common ailment among big men.

Smits averaged 14.3 points and 3.3 rebounds last season, his fifth in the NBA.

Schultz steps down from NCAA

Dick Schultz

Doug Tucker
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Dick Schultz, faced with allegations that he lied about his involvement in an improper loan program at Virginia, resigned Tuesday as executive director of the NCAA.

Schultz announced his decision to step down during a conference call.

A source who asked not to be identified said Schultz' top staff aides urged him to step down for the good of the NCAA. He will remain on the job until a replacement is found.

"If you take this as an admission of guilt, you're dead wrong," Schultz said on the conference call. "I was really concerned that if I stayed on, there was a risk this could damage the credibility of the NCAA."

"And in doing that I felt I'd worked very hard to establish credibility of the organization and I didn't want to be a part of destroying what I had worked so hard to build."

The 62-year-old Schultz, who became the NCAA's top man in 1987, consistently maintained he didn't know about the program which gave Virginia athletes non-interest loans in violation of NCAA rules.

However, three former Virginia staff members said he knew about the program. In addition, a former Virginia athlete and one relative of a former athlete said in a special report that Schultz had knowledge of the loans while he was the school's athletic director.

Even before Schultz' decision, members of the NCAA Presidents Commission said the reform movement which he helped lead would not be derailed.

"The reform movement will continue. It has a momentum of its own," said Richard Bowen, president of Idaho State. "Dick has been a leader in that movement. He has been very helpful. We will miss him if he leaves. It would be an organizational setback, but it will not stop the movement."

This is the first time in the NCAA's history that an investigation has reached into the executive director's office.

"The presidents have taken control. That has been obvious," said Curtis McCray, president of Millikin University and a former member. See SCHULTZ, Page 2B

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan scored 43 points — almost half his team's total — to lead the two-time champion Chicago Bulls to a 91-84 victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers on Tuesday night in the opener of the Eastern Conference semifinals.

Jordan scored 16 points in the pivotal fourth quarter, which the Bulls led 64-63 at the start. He made the lead 68-63 with four consecutive points and later pumped in 10 straight, putting the Bulls in front 83-72.

Jordan, who was 16 for 30 from the field and 11 for 11 from the foul line, entered the game averaging 38.9 points against the Cavaliers in the playoffs. The Bulls have beaten Cleveland in the playoffs two of the last four years.

Game 2 of the best-of-7 series is at Chicago Stadium Thursday night before the playoff shifts to Richfield for games Saturday and Monday.

B.J. Armstrong scored 10 points, the only other Bull in double figures. Gerald Wilkins led the Cavaliers with 19 points, while Mark Price had 17 and Brad Daugherty 15. Bill Cartwright and Scott Williams each had 10 rebounds for the Bulls.

The Bulls showed no signs of being rusty from their week-long layoff as they took an 8-0 lead. Chicago went up 16-12 before a 9-0 Cleveland run, including a 3-pointer by Craig Ehlo, put the Cavaliers on top 21-16. Jordan cut it to 21-20 at the quarter.

Daugherty and Wilkins sent the Cavaliers to a 35-27 lead before Jordan led a 9-2 run to pull Chicago within 37-36. A 3-pointer by Price made it 40-36.

The Bulls finally regained the lead 44-43 on four straight free throws by Jordan. But Price hit a jumper and a pair of free throws for a 47-46 halftime lead.

A 14-4 spree led by Jordan and Armstrong to open the second half left the Bulls in front 60-51. But the Cavaliers countered with a 12-2 burst sparked by Daugherty and John Williams for a 63-62 lead. Scottie Pippen, who finished with 9 points, scored to give Chicago a 64-63 lead going into the final period.

Cubs rally in 10th behind Sanchez

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Role players Dwight Smith and Rey Sanchez handled their duties perfectly.

Smith, playing only against right-handed pitching, led off the 10th inning with a single, his third hit, and scored the winning run on Rey Sanchez's one-out pinch single as the Chicago Cubs defeated the Los Angeles Dodgers 2-1 Tuesday.

Jim Gott (1-1), the fourth Dodger pitcher, had a string of 20 consecutive scoreless innings when Sanchez drove a ground ball through a drawn-in infield.

"I know I only get to play very little," Sanchez said. "It's something I don't feel comfortable with, but then I can't open my mouth. I just have to learn to deal with it." Smith, batting .385 (25-for-65) in 16 starts, thinks he should be able to play against left-handers.

"There is too much made in baseball about left-handed batters not being able to hit left-handers," he said. "Just look at my record in the minors. I played every day and had a respectable average."

Chicago's Rick Wilkins spoiled Ramon Martinez's shutout bid by homering in the seventh to tie the game at 1-1. Eric Karros tripled in the third off Frank Castillo and scored on Jose Offerman's single for a 1-0 Dodger lead.

Jose Vizcaino hit in his 13th straight game, tying teammate Steve Buechele for the best in the National League this season.

Red Sox 4, Orioles 0
BALTIMORE — Roger Clemens pitched a five-hitter for his 35th career shutout, striking out a season-high 13.

Clemens walked two and did not allow a runner past second base until the ninth inning in lowering his ERA to 1.73. It was the 53rd time in his 10-year career that he has fanned at least 10 batters.

Mike Greenwell got three hits and Ivan Calderon hit his first homer as a member of the Red Sox.

Ben McDonald (2-4) allowed four runs on nine hits in 6½ innings for the Orioles, who were stymied in their bid to win a season-high fourth straight game.

Clemens had a one-hitter after seven innings, but Baltimore got two hits in both the eighth and ninth innings. The 13 strikeouts were Clemens' most since he fanned 13 California Angels on Aug. 31, 1989.

Toronto leads the best-of-7 Norris Division final 3-2 going into Game 6 Thursday night in St. Louis. Nikolai Borschevsky, Bob Rouse and Glenn Anderson also put pucks past the Blues' Curtis Joseph, whose ordinary play in this game and in Game 4 — a 4-1 Toronto win Sunday in St. Louis — was in sharp contrast to his near-unbeatable performances in the first three games of the series.

Brett Hull managed the lone goal against Toronto rookie Felix Potvin, who outshone Joseph a second consecutive game.

ment will continue." The executive committee spent three days considering allegations that Schultz, despite his denials, had knowledge of the improper loans while he was Virginia's AD from 1981-87. Schultz, who succeeded Walter Byers as NCAA boss on Sept. 1, 1987, was not accused of any wrongdoing while with the NCAA. The allegations stem from his time at Virginia. For that and other violations, Virginia was stripped of four football scholarships by the NCAA infractions committee last week.

be a part of the solution is what they need at this time." Temple athletic director Charles Theokas said he was not surprised at the reasoning behind Schultz's decision.

Schultz, 62, succeeded Walter Byers in 1987. His 6-year tenure was marked by a far-reaching reform movement and renewed commitment to enforcement.

"The NCAA knows that we in Congress are looking at the way they run things over there and I think the NCAA also knows that they have to give a lot of consideration to equal opportunities for women. . . . I think that they know they're going to have to do something about minority hiring and I think they know they're going to have to do something about improving graduation rates."

As for someone outside college athletics: "I think that wouldn't be a bad idea either. I think that would certainly give a lot more integrity to what the NCAA does because it seems that having an executive director who is a former athletic director, who has friends that his school has been in tournaments and in play against. . . is an impediment to clear thinking."

"I know what Dick Schultz has done for the NCAA," Theokas said. "They've just been tremendous, tremendous years in terms of growth and changing images. I think he's done terrific things. . . ."

"Unfortunately, I think that he was only allowed to be as good as the NCAA membership that is still dominated to a large extent by conservative, big-time athletic directors. And for that reason I think that all of his good intentions

State champions, Irish team members head recruits

The Daily Iowan
Eight swimmers and divers, including two Iowans, three state champions and two members of the Irish national team have signed National Letters of Intent to compete at Iowa next fall. Coach Peter Kennedy announced Tuesday. Heading the class is local star Amy Kaduce. The Iowa Citian was the Iowa state diving champion last season and a two-time Mississippi Valley Conference champion. She was a member of the all-state academic team. The four-year letterwinner from City High plans to study health promotion. She was also recruited by Florida State and Kansas.

Cedar Rapids native Jami Strauss was the 1991 Iowa state champion in the 200 individual medley and the runner-up in the 1990 500 freestyle and 200 IM for Washington High School. She qualified for the 1992 U.S. Open in the 200 butterfly and finished second in that event at the 1991 U.S. Junior Nationals. The National Honor Society student also considered UNLV and Minnesota. Kristin Belleson of Arlington Heights, Ill., was a three-time all-Mid Suburban League and all-state selection. The holder of school records in five events at Rolling Meadows High School recorded the second highest finish among all girls in school history. She swims primarily freestyle and butterfly. An honor student who plans to major in pre-law, she also considered Indiana. Niamh Campbell of Dublin, Ireland, was a distance swimmer for the Irish national team. A four-time Irish Swimmer of the Year, she was also the right wing for field hockey's conference runner-up Alexandra. Kelly McCready of Bloomingburg, N.Y., was a three-time all-American diver at Pine Bush High School. She earned the school's Most Valuable Performer award five straight years and was the 1990 and 1992 New York state diving champion. The National Honor Society student also considered Wisconsin and Ohio State. Nicole Redmond of Oak Park, Ill., was a member of the Illinois state runner-up relay team and four-year West Suburban Conference championship team from Oak Park High School. She is a 100 and 200 freestyle swimmer. The Dean's List and honor student also considered Wisconsin and Illinois. Jessica Riccobono of Ypsilanti, Mich., was an all-America honorable mention and 1992 Michigan state diving champion. The first team all-South Central Conference and first team Detroit News Dream Team honoree was also an all-conference gymnast for Ypsilanti High School. She participated in track and softball. The scholar athlete was also recruited by Penn State. Sonja Statham of Dublin, Ireland, was a two-time Irish junior national champion and a two-time Kilkenny Sports Star of the Year. A graduate of the King's Hospital High School, she was the 1992 silver medalist at the national championship. The breaststroke specialist is undecided upon her course of study. "The Iowa, Michigan and New York state champions will greatly strengthen our diving program," Kennedy said. "We picked one of Iowa's best swimmers in Jami Strauss. She's an excellent all-around swimmer. Strauss and Irish distance ace Campbell are certainly going to build up our distance team. I am very pleased with our incoming class." Iowa opens its season at home Oct. 22 with the U.S.S. Senior Meet.

STAYING LOOSE — Charlotte players Tony Bennett, "Muggsy" Bogues, David Wingate (floor) and strength coach Chip Sigmon share a funny moment at practice for tonight's Game 2 against the Knicks in the Eastern Conference semifinals. New York won the opener, 111-95.

NHL

Super Mario chosen as MVP award finalist

Toronto's Doug Gilmour and Buffalo's Pat LaFontaine join Lemieux. Associated Press
TORONTO — Mario Lemieux, who has overcome treatment for Hodgkin's disease to lead the Pittsburgh Penguins into the Stanley Cup playoffs, was selected Tuesday as one of three finalists for the NHL's Hart Memorial Trophy, awarded to the league's most valuable player. Doug Gilmour of Toronto and Pat LaFontaine of Buffalo also were named. The winners, who already have been selected, will be announced June 17 at Toronto. Wayne Gretzky of the Los Angeles Kings, a nine-time Hart winner, wasn't among the finalists for any award for the first time since entering the NHL with the Edmonton Oilers in 1979-80.

Gretzky: not a finalist

Lemieux led the league in scoring with 160 points despite missing a quarter of the regular season. He won the Selke Trophy in 1988. Gilmour finished with a club-record 127 points in leading Toronto to a 32-point improvement over last season. He also is a finalist for the Frank Selke Trophy as the NHL's outstanding defensive forward. LaFontaine, second in scoring with 148 points, also is a finalist for the Lady Byng Trophy, given to the league's most sportsmanlike player. Pat Burns of Toronto is a finalist for the Jack Adams Trophy as the league's top coach along with Pierre Page of Quebec and Brian Sutter of Boston. Boston's Ray Bourque, four times the NHL's top defenseman, again is a finalist for the James Norris Trophy. Chris Chelios of Chicago, who won the award in 1989, and Larry Murphy of Pittsburgh also are finalists. Teemu Selanne of Winnipeg is a finalist for the Calder Memorial Trophy, given to the top rookie. The Finnish star had a rookie-record 76 goals with the Jets, tied with Alexander Mogilny of Buffalo for the league lead. Other finalists are Joe Juneau of Boston, who had 102 points and a rookie record-tying 70 assists, and Toronto goaltender Felix Potvin, who led the league with a 2.50 goals-against average. Joining Gilmour in the Selke balloting will be Dave Poulin of Boston and Joel Otto of Calgary. Ed Belfour of Chicago, Curtis Joseph of St. Louis and Tom Barasso of Pittsburgh are finalists for the Vezina Trophy, given to the top goaltender. Pierre Turgeon of the New York Islanders and Adam Oates of Boston join LaFontaine as Lady Byng finalists. The Professional Hockey Writers' Association voted on all but two of the awards. The Adams voting was conducted by the Professional Broadcasters' Association and the Vezina by NHL general managers.

BAND PREVIEW

Cedar Falls' Fat Bertha to play thumpin' gig

Ian Corwin
The Daily Iowan

Eddie Murphy has observed that at every family function during his childhood, his obnoxious, mustached and stunningly obese Aunt Bunnie would fall down the stairs in a nearly professional manner. She rolled and rattled, creating new sounds and rhythms all the way down, punctuating them with stylized vocals and nearly lyrical prayers to her Lord Jesus Christ. Murphy muses, "The bitch is falling down the stairs again!"

Regardless of the terminally agile folks out there who won't admit it, we've all been in that precarious position — maybe you're trying to get your bike up the stairs to your crib and you overbalance just a bit to the rear. Your heart beats faster, your free hand flails for a hold, and you utter a stifled "Whoa" as you attempt desperately to regain equilibrium.

Face up to it — that feeling, however horrifying it may seem at the moment, is an adrenal rush of epic proportions (and it's free).

I liken this natural buzz, brought on by the possibility of physical harm, to the rush I got when I saw the band Fat Bertha and the Loveshakers for the first time (they're not threatening — they're just... energetic). It's a pounding, rhythmic onslaught of sound, energy and motion, and like Eddie Murphy watching his weighty aunt slide down the risers, you can't help but crack a smile when you watch them.

Fat Bertha is preparing to fall down the stairs tonight and roll into the Iowa City Yacht Club, 13 S. Linn St., and if the show is as good as their appearance at Gabe's three weeks ago, you'll want to be there.

Granted, the Yachter is a bit of a different venue for this tight, progressive rock quartet from Cedar Falls. There's no mosh pit, nor are there any ceiling beams (at a Gabe's show some months back, lead guitarist/vocalist George Devore hung upside down from the rafters while he wailed out a solo). But there's never any lack of energy down there, and that's what the band feeds on.

Devore and rhythm guitarist/vocalist Jeff Eastman are never short on animation, trading strong guitar licks and growling some of the most surprisingly well-written lyrics I've heard in a long time. Don't let song titles fool you — "Ramen Noodles" and "Chicken-Flavored Popcorn" are kickin' jams despite their labels.

Fat Bertha and the Loveshakers will play a sweaty, joyous gig tonight at the Iowa City Yacht Club, 13 S. Linn St.

The live chemistry that Fat Bertha has developed relies on the raw energy of Devore and Eastman, coupled with a solid rhythm backbone in bassist/violinist (yes, violinist) John Fetter and drummer Marc Barry. They've sold out practically all of their shows at Steb's in Cedar Falls, and it's easy to see why when you take a look at how they infect the crowd with their blend of hard-core grooves and tongue-in-cheek stage presence.

Fat Bertha is live music with a twist of adrenaline, and they're a band best enjoyed on a gut level. I return to my previous analogy — the bitch is falling down the stairs again, and it should be fun to watch.

ALBUM REVIEW

Chameleon Bowie portrays himself on new LP

Tad Paulson
The Daily Iowan

Among the multitude of costume changes, hairdos and attitudes that have composed David Bowie's chameleonesque career, one somewhat obscure detail about the man has always caught my attention — the hue of his eyes, which have constantly appeared in photographs as differently colored, one being blue and the other brown. This seemed... symbolic.

The dichotomy of his eye color always exemplified one simple fact for me — Bowie changes. Bowie consistently (and successfully, more or less) molds himself into new visages and characters, sometimes to befit modern waves of style and fashion, sometimes just because it's what he wants to do and he has the money to do it.

But as I was gazing with barely suppressed glee and anxious anticipation at the cover of Bowie's new album Black Tie White Noise, I noticed something that gave pause to my feverish urgency to flip the CD on the stereo and start leaping about. Bowie, beaming out at me with a half-cracked, self-assuring smile, has two blue eyes.

Such is the unified vision of the dark, swirling, Dante-esque Black Tie White Noise. Bowie's not Aladdin Sane, Ziggy Stardust, Pontius Pilate or the Man Who Fell to Earth — he's doing himself all the way here, assuming no identity or perspective other than his own. It's refreshing, and maybe a little shocking, but it works.

During the course of the album, Bowie takes the listener through a purgatory of a lover's doubts and insecurities ("You've Been Around," "Don't Let Me Down & Down"), peels back and reveals the psyche of tormented souls ("Jump They Say," "Nite Flights"), then ascends to the heavens with the help of an indestructible inner core of optimism and determination ("I Know it's Gonna Happen Someday," "The Wedding Song").

Bowie's got a new sound too, partly due to co-producer Nile Rodgers' keen ear — it's a strange hybrid of atmospheric pop and Parliament/Prince-influenced funk that gives the songs a bouncy, schizoid zip. Big Dave also tries his hand at saxophone playing on Black Tie White Noise, and while he's no Sonny Rollins, his jazzy fills add character to some of the weaker songs (like the sleepy cover of Cream's "I Feel Free").

On "Nite Flights" we feel the wind soaring through our hair as our bodies surge over a huge, glistening city of lights and shadows, an ethereal wall of keyboards and chiming guitar fills sounding like the backroar of a jet airliner cruising and singing beneath our dangling, naked feet. But Bowie chooses to match this heavenly vision with the barely suppressed wail "It's so COLD!"

The rich, oaken timber of Bowie's vocals is not at dispute here; his voice, as always, is so full and so deeply registered it seems he could sing to a packed stadium without using a microphone. It carries, it slides, it hits operatic highs and lows with almost theatrically infused vibrato — it's an old, instantly recognizable voice we've heard howling and crooning on the radio for years.

The album's title track, a fantastically melodic duet with Al B. Sure!, tells of wrestling with the vice grip of world racism, spitting out visceral lyrical images ("Getting my facts from a Benetton ad / Looking through African eyes / Lit by the Glare of an L.A. fire") over a thumpy backbeat and scratchy wah-wah guitar.

"Jump They Say," partly an ode to the suicide of Bowie's half-brother and the album's first single, is like a mad dash through a subway tunnel, the train at your heels and screaming like a hundred-foot-tall saxophone. Bowie bemoans the million schizophrenic voices screaming at once, singing "They say he has two gods / They say he has no fear / They say he has no eyes / They say he has no mouth."

A clarion of keyboarded sax zigzags over Rodgers' chinky guitar clicks and the percussion rumbles and roars in an uptempo, pop-thrash speed reminiscent of Bowie's work with Tin Machine.

The album closes with a vocalized rendition of "The Wedding Song" (an instrumental version opens the album), a tune that shimmers from the first throbbing bass notes to the echoing, coming-and-receding keyboard line. This is the dream of true bliss — white sheets, linen, roses, beds of gold and a lilac scent blowing through the curtains of the matrimonial bedroom, all to bless the day of love and the purity of the union between two extraordinary individuals. The song is obviously a psalm of love to Bowie's new wife, Somali actress-model Iman, and the hope and inspiration in his voice ("I'm gonna be so good, just like a good boy should") may seem a little cheesy, but his open-faced honesty is real enough that we believe him.

The David Bowie of Black Tie White Noise seems to be a man complete, one who has emerged from some pretty scary nightmares to find himself enclosed by the warm, caressing arms of security. It's a reassuring, comforting vision, as unified and coherent as the blue of Bowie's eyes on the cover of the CD.

Trumbo gets posthumous Oscar for 'Roman Holiday'

Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — The late screenwriter Dalton Trumbo, who was blacklisted during the McCarthy era, has been awarded a posthumous Academy Award for the movie "Roman Holiday," 40 years after its release.

Trumbo's widow, Cleo, received the Oscar Monday night before a special screening of the film at the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

It was the second Academy Award for Trumbo. He won a motion picture story Oscar in 1956 for "The Brave One," which he wrote under the pen name Robert Rich.

Trumbo claimed that Oscar in 1975 — the year before he died.

A member of the blacklisted Hollywood 10, Trumbo could not take a screen credit on "Roman Holiday" because he was an accused Communist in the McCarthy era. He enlisted friend Ian McClellan Hunter to pose as the real writer. "Roman Holiday," starring Audrey Hepburn as a princess seeking a normal life, won three Oscars.

Last year, the Writers Guild of America changed the film's official credits to show its true authorship. The Academy subsequently voted to amend its records and present the motion picture story Oscar to Cleo Trumbo.

New anime provides post-finals relief

The films deal with super-powered teens with sexual problems.

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

By the end of this week, most of you, students and faculty alike, will be fairly worn out. After final papers, final projects and final exams the last thing you're going to want to do is think.

Fortunately, there exist any number of helpful aids to not-thinking, the most popular ones on this campus apparently being alcohol and tanning. For those of you that aren't interested in incurring a hangover, cirrhosis of the liver or skin cancer, however, there are other options.

Two recent acquisitions at Tofu Hut Video, 610 S. Dubuque St., are not only guaranteed amusing and mentally undemanding, but also have not yet been proven to cause painful and disfiguring diseases in rats. Both are animated Japanese mini-movies in one of the commoner anime traditions — super-powered teenagers with constant sexual problems.

The first, "Devil Hunter Yokho," stars a nubile 16-year-old virgin obsessed with sex — whether she should have it, who to have it with, and whether having it will make her more vulnerable to demon attack.

As it turns out, she's the last in a line of demon-hunters that spans over 100 generations and a coalition of demons is plotting to destroy her just before they merge their dimension with our own. To fight them, Yokho must stay "pure of body as well as of mind" — which isn't easy when her own mother is handing her condoms and urging her to enjoy herself while she's young. To make matters worse, her clothes have an annoying tendency to fall off in the heat of battle.

But "Yokho" is notable more for its rampant silliness than for the actual story line. Yokho's home life is particularly bizarre — her mother and grandmother tend to engage in pitched battle with improbable weapons over issues like the thickness of the miso soup. The weird, outlandish plot twists and high animation quality that have gained anime such a cult following in the United States are readily apparent here.

Very much in the same vein, there's "Urusei Yatsura" ("Those Annoying Aliens") No. 1, "Inaba the Dreamer." This isn't actually the first in a series; it's the first of a set of movies starring "Urusei Yatsura" characters Shinobu, Lum, and Akaru. Understanding the characters isn't a problem — most are predictably single-minded. Lum, the flying alien woman who always wears the same tiger-stripe-patterned bikini, is in love with Akaru, and wants nothing more than a simple, happy future with him. He, on the other hand, wants every attractive female he's ever met — Lum included — as his personal harem. Consequently, he spends a lot of time chasing women, and she spends a lot of time dragging him around by the neck and zapping him with her electrical powers.

The story is similarly easy to follow, though it does raise questions as to why there are so many weird aliens wandering around town, and how they're all related. In this episode, the trio discovers a key to subspace, accidentally dropped by Inaba, an absent-minded dimensional sanitation worker. Lum builds a door to subspace, and the three meet Inaba and explore a dimension from which they can visit their various possible futures. Unfortunately, all of those futures annoy the three, due to the increasingly ludicrous romantic entanglements they find themselves supposedly choosing. Fights ensue, Inaba falls in love with Shinobu, and all four find themselves pursued by annoyed giant subspace bunnies.

Both "Yokho" and "Urusei" are typical examples of the teen-ager-based areas of anime: fast-paced, farcical, and brimming with comic hyperbole. More to the point, they feature a quirky, offbeat sense of humor that is as distinctly, refreshingly Japanese as Monty Python is British. The plots tend to look silly in print — partially because they're intentionally ridiculous, partially because the ideas don't translate nearly as well in generalization as they do in action — but the visuals, the pacing and the most ludicrous bits of dialogue make both of these videos lively, fun post-finals interludes.

Back to the Drawing Board will return over the summer on a bi-weekly basis. In the meantime, don't think too hard.

UNI instructor faces prostitution charges

CEDAR FALLS (AP) — A city of Northern Iowa instructor accused of paying a 16-year girl to make a pornographic tape won't make deals with prosecutors, his attorney said. Alfred Pelham, 50, of Waterloo is charged with prostitution, two counts of contributing to delinquency of a minor. Pelham was arrested in May after a Des Moines police investigation into outcall modeling agencies. Investigators said the girl whom Pelham paid her $135 a pose in lingerie and make statements at a Des Moines while he filmed her. UNI suspended Pelham pending the outcome of the case.

Farm Aid raises $500,000

AMES, Iowa (AP) — The Farm Aid concert raised $500,000 for farm programs, officials said. Before the concert, organizers Willie Nelson said he hoped to raise about $1 million from pledges. The concert drew nearly 40,000 people, bringing in nearly $1 million in ticket sales, officials said. They also said money from the sales would more than cover the costs of the show and that part sent in by television viewers go to aid farmers. Eight hours of the April 24 concert in Ames were nationally televised on the Nashville Network.

School to have graduation prayer despite warnings

SHELDON, Iowa (AP) — Sheldon school district plans to have a graduation prayer despite warnings from the Iowa Civil Liberties Union by allowing a student to deliver a prayer at graduation. "This is what our seniors and our community is very happy that they decided to pray," Sheldon Superintendent Michael Teigland said Tuesday. But Teigland said the graduation prayer issue would likely be discussed at Monday's school board meeting. The ICLU has said it will sue the school district allowing a prayer has done so twice before — in 1985 and 1986 — and succeeded in arguing that the prayers violated the separation of church and state.

Clinton, Congress may compromise on gay bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lawmakers are voicing increasing support for a plan to permit homosexuals to serve in the military as long as they don't state their sexual orientation. President Clinton, who has ended the 50-year ban on homosexuals in the service, to indicate whether such an approach would be acceptable.

But at a hearing on Tuesday, Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said Congress would accept the repeal, already in effect under an interim order issued by the House in February.

In addition, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and Sen. James Eastland, D-Miss., also have spoken favorably of the proposal. However, personnel who have served themselves gay would not be allowed to serve.
