New budget allows salary increases

The funding granted to the UI by the state was increased 3.6 percent this year.

The increase will allow the UI to address its major priorities, including improving undergraduate education, UI Vice President for University Relations Ann Rhodes said.

The regents will meet and discuss the budget proposal on Wednesday when they come to Iowa City for their monthly meeting. The regent salary report recommends that the board approve the policy of restraint for the administrators, but not apply it to faculty.

Brad Hahn
The Daily Iowan

UI administrators said they were pleased with the preliminary budgets released Friday, which show a 4.1 percent increase in the general UI budget.

That increase brings the budget to approximately $290.5 million, around $185 million of which comes from state appropriations. The state funding was increased by approximately 3.6 percent this year.

The UI general university budget is the amount of money allocated to the 10 UI academic colleges and their programs.

"This allows us to move forward with salary increases and move forward in our top priorities," Rhodes said. "You can always hope for more, but it's about what we expected."

Rhodes said after a couple of years of reversions and other complications, it is a relief to have a complete budget worked out.

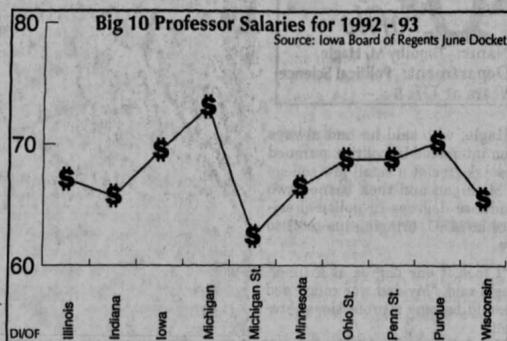

Also included in the budget information is a proposal to increase UI faculty salaries by an average of 2.5 percent. Rhodes said the increase was modest, but not a surprise.

There is also a move to hold down salary increases for top administrators to no more than an average of 1 percent. Top administrators include deans, associate vice presidents and vice presidents.

"Every effort should be made to ensure that faculty salaries of our universities is competitive," the report reads.

UI salaries have become highly competitive with other Big Ten universities. The UI currently ranks third in professor salaries, averaging $69,500. It ranks second in average assistant and associate professor salaries, with $50,400 as the average associate professor salary and $42,800 as the average for assistant professors. These rankings show a drastic jump over past years. Only eight years ago, the UI was ranked ninth in professor salaries and seventh in both associate and assistant professor salaries.

IC school named after Irving Weber

The Iowa City Community School Board voted unanimously Tuesday to name the district's future elementary school after Irving B. Weber, a lifelong resident of Iowa City and a local historian. Weber was also a former school board president. The new school will be located on Rohret Road in southwest Iowa City, and construction is expected to be completed at the beginning of the 1994 school year. The official name of the building will be the Irving B. Weber Elementary School.

IC man surrenders after 2-hour standoff

Johnson County Sheriff Officers took part in a two-hour standoff Saturday night after responding to a domestic violence report at Lot 170, Holiday Trailer Court, in North Liberty.

When they arrived, officers were advised that there was a lone male in the trailer, and that he was armed with weapons. Officers secured the trailer and evacuated nearby trailers while waiting for the man to come out.

After almost two hours, 33-year-old Karl Kloubec surrendered and was charged with two counts of going armed with intent, a class D felony. Kloubec was taken to Johnson County Jail. He has since been released on $13,000 bond.

Ottumwa man missing in Mississippi River

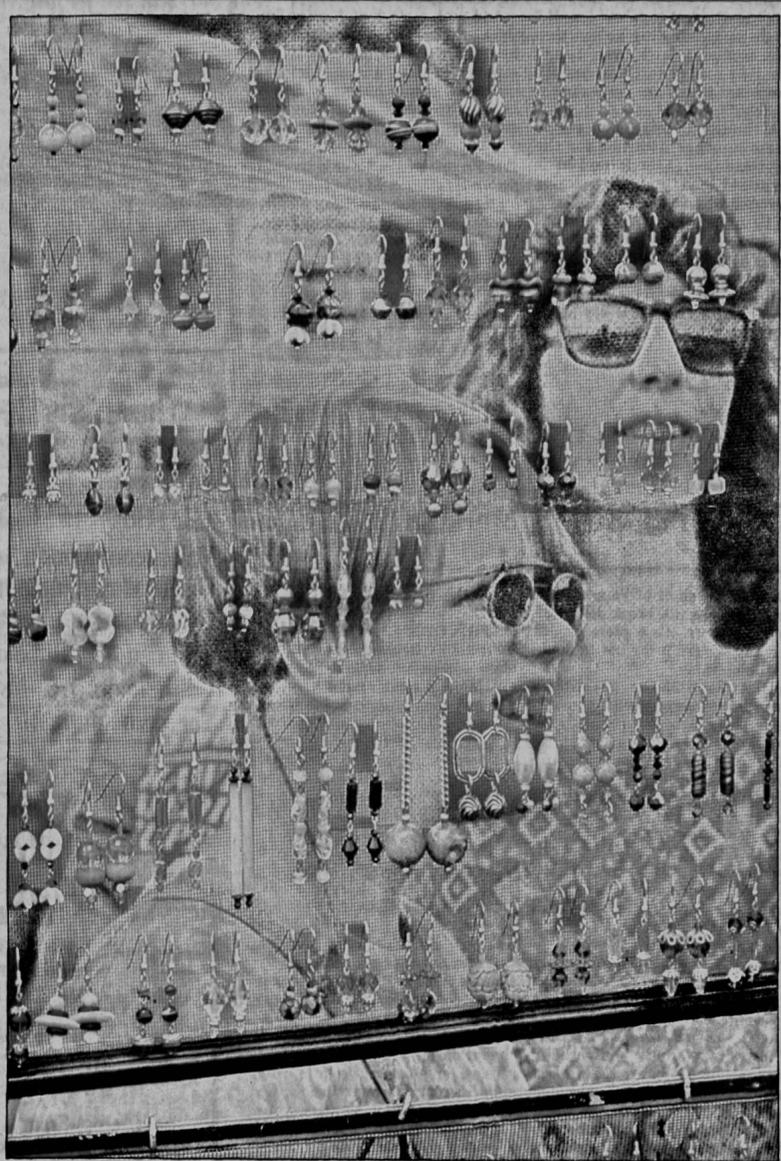

OQUAWKA, Ill. (AP) — Divers found no trace of an Iowa man who was thrown into the Mississippi River when a pleasure boat was rammed by a towboat.

Missing is Dick Elliott, 62, of Ottumwa. Rescue officials searched the river Saturday night and Sunday, but did not find him.

Henderson County sheriff's officials said that Elliott and five other Iowans were aboard an 18-foot motorboat when its engine stalled shortly before noon on Saturday. The boat was then run over and capsized by the towboat Margaret Brent.

STUDENTS BROUGHT ABOUT ELECTION

District C voters to elect councilor

Joel Donofrio
The Daily Iowan

While local politicians and city council candidates have differing views on how involved students should be in Iowa City politics, students who live in District C can be heard by participating in Tuesday's primary election for city councilor.

Only District C voters are eligible to participate Tuesday, choosing which two candidates will advance to the citywide special election for councilor on July 13. According to Johnson County Auditor and Commissioner of Elections Tom Slockett, any previously registered student who currently resides in District C can vote. "Students who have moved into or moved within the district can go to the precinct where they currently live, change their address and vote on Tuesday," Slockett said. He added that since 56 percent of the district's population is made up of students, turnout should be light since most students are out of town during the summer.

Slockett also felt that June was a "strange time to hold an election," another factor that could result in lower turnout.

According to council candidate Kenneth Wessels, some Iowa City City Council members were angry that students were largely responsible for bringing about the election at all. Wessels collected 775 signatures, many of them from students, to file a petition calling for an election to fill out the two-and-a-half years of Randy Larson's term. After Larson resigned April 13, the council had decided to appoint a replacement for Larson — a decision overridden by Wessels' petition.

"I've been promoting student voting since 1977, and I definitely feel students have a place in Iowa City affairs," Wessels said. "I collected many of the 775 signatures from students, and it angered the city council that, basically, it was student power that brought about their election. I feel proud to get students more involved in this community's affairs."

Candidate Bruno Pigott encouraged students to participate in the election as well.

REGENTS ADDRESS ISSUES

Board to examine notification policy

Brad Hahn
The Daily Iowan

While at times it may be necessary to use controversial material in the classroom, faculty members have an obligation to warn students before any presentation is made, according to the UI draft policy on use of sexually explicit materials.

The policy, which is not yet in final form, will be presented to the Iowa state Board of Regents at their monthly meeting in Iowa City on Wednesday.

At their February meeting, board members requested that the three regent universities devise policies related to the general issues concerning notification of students when sexually explicit material will be used. The request was in response to a controversy a film shown in a Colloquium class in the UI School of Art and Art History and containing a homosexual sex act.

The new UI policy comes in the form of an amendment to the policy on professional ethic and academic responsibility in the University Operations Manual. It recognizes that at times materials that may be considered shocking or offensive are necessary, but also states that faculty must warn students before using the material so students can make an informed decision about whether or not to attend class.

It further states that if there will be considerable use of such material throughout the semester, students should be told no later than

PAKISTANIS FIRE FIRST SHOTS

Pakistani soldiers kill 14 Somali protesters

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Pakistani soldiers unleashed heavy gunfire Sunday on a crowd of Somali protesters for a consecutive second day, killing at least 14 people, including children, and wounding 30.

American AC-130 gunships later launched another round of shelling, hitting targets apparently linked with warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, the alleged mastermind of ambushes that killed 23 Pakistani peacekeepers and wounded 59 others on June 5.

Dozens of blasts echoed through the night as the high-tech, four-engine planes began hitting what appeared to be two targets, including an arms depot, in southern Mogadishu. The raid ended about 90 minutes later.

It was the third attack in three days. On Saturday, aircraft shelled a suspected weapons site belonging to Aidid's chief financial backer.

The protests and strikes show the volatile nature of the city more than six months after U.S.-led forces arrived to try to restore order and protect relief efforts.

Earlier in the day, the United Nations said it will continue its campaign against the warlord.

UI professor teaches with varying degrees

Sara Epstein
The Daily Iowan

He happened upon law school because a friend urged him to take the LSAT with him one day. "I had nothing else to do on a Saturday morning," said UI political science Professor Tim Hagle, who had already earned two undergraduate degrees at Michigan State University. "And I did quite well."

Professor Profile
Name: Timothy M. Hagle
Department: Political Science
Years at UI: 5

Hagle, who said he had always been interested in politics, pursued a law degree at a small law college in Michigan and then earned two graduate degrees in political science at MSU, bringing his total to five.

"I took it one degree at a time," Hagle said. "My dad was concerned I would become a professional student."

Now he's a professional teacher. Having grown up on a dairy farm in Michigan, Hagle said he was attracted to the small-town atmosphere of Iowa City when he joined the UI faculty in 1988.

Hagle teaches four classes a year, the most popular being one on constitutional law.

"We deal with a lot of cases. I run it like law school, but I don't emphasize law so much as politics," he said.

Though he requires students to present material to the class on a certain day, he gives them the option to pick which day — a choice not given in law school.

"Some students are nervous, but most seem to enjoy it," he said. "If nothing else, they'll have to do it later if they go to law school."

For the most part, class material

David Greedy/The Daily Iowan

Residing at 368 Schaeffer Hall is UI political science Professor Tim Hagle, who is often in his office until after 10 p.m. on any given night, being kept company mostly by around 100 CDs.

is very practical, but Hagle admits that his tests are notoriously hard.

"Constitutional law is just a huge area," he said, adding that his class tends to focus more on civil-rights liberties. "We discuss a lot about what you read in the newspaper every day — we talk about it in that context. But I expect more than memorizing and regurgitating. The test questions are designed to make people think."

In a department dominated by Democrats, Hagle said he has served as the "department Republican" for the past five years. He got a lot of grief from his colleagues while George Bush was in office, but now the tables are turned and he admits Clinton's low approval rating has him feeling somewhat smug.

"Clinton has been breaking promises left and right — he's just not handling things very well," Hagle said. "Whether he can turn that around, I don't know. I can't say I feel sorry for him, but it's scary that things are unraveling so quickly."

Although Clinton has yet to name another nominee for the Supreme Court, Hagle said he is surprised that Clinton is steering toward a white male.

"Clinton has got to pick a woman, given all the things he's said," he said.

Of course, not everything in a political science professor's life is political. When Hagle isn't teaching or doing research, he keeps in shape by biking, hiking and playing racquetball.

And with a stack of degrees five thick, (that's one bachelor of arts, a bachelor of science, a juris doctor, a master of arts and a doctoral degree) Hagle is hoping to find a house this summer in which to store them.

Times change. People change. Newspapers change.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Now's a good time to ask that journalist out on a date. You know you want to. Come on, journalists are people, too. Sure, they're gross, slimy and they make a lot of stuff up, but they need love every bit as much as, say, doctors and lawyers. And, yes, they're poor and rarely shower, but, hey, this is your damn horoscope and you're superstitious and all, so...

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) That little itch may be telling you something. Strongly consider a career change. Or don't. Hell, we don't care. There's a lot of money in cow

GEMINI (May 21-June 21) A long-lost love will reappear and make your life a living hell all over again. With Jupiter's moons in line with Venus, this may be a good week for you to stay in bed and think of all the opportunities that have passed you by.

CANCER (June 22-July 22) Go crazy this week. Really. Do something impulsive. Why not? With only a couple weeks to live, what could you possibly do wrong? Stay out late, get stinking drunk and tell your boss to cheese off. And, hey, why not eat some pork? It's the other white meat.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Bathe regularly and change your deodorant — you're beginning to get a little rank and your friends are starting to notice. Expect something in the mail. Turn on the charm for that special someone (who, incidentally, respects you about as much as toe jam).

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Take every penny you have and invest it in pork bellies, then wander the streets aimlessly, a broken, poverty-stricken shell of your former self. Your car will break down, but don't despair, it's a piece of shit anyway. You're lucky not to die in the damn thing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) After a temporary loss of vision, you will regain your sight and the ability to see the ghost of an ancient ancestor who will give you valuable advice. Ignore it. Times have changed and some crochety old hag has nothing on a society so rich in culture that it can support a fourth TV network.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21) Take a gamble, it will pay off. Of course gambling is illegal and you will spend 10-15 in Anamosa, but, hey, you know the consequences. You may lose control of your bodily functions for a short period of time. Basically, stay in bed and take your nutrients intravenously.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Those dizzy spells you've been experiencing lately are the work of family members who are poisoning your food. Relax, within the week, your body will build an immunity to the toxins. Ask a love interest in the movies, but don't make those damn clicking and grunting noises while the rest of the audience is quiet.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your ability to see the best in others is once again exploited by society. Make a commitment knowing full well you're just going to break it (the self-deception crap is getting a little old). Add a major vice to your repertoire, it'll add some spice to an otherwise dull and boring existence. Play more tennis.

Cracker Jack celebrates 100 years of corny prizes

CLIFF EDWARDS
AP Business Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Forget the peanuts. Crack the popcorn. Think prizes.

Cracker Jack is nothing without the sweet anticipation millions of people have felt as they tore into a box of the glazed popcorn and peanut snack, hoping the prize hidden inside would be "a good one."

It's been around for 100 years and a centennial celebration is set to begin Wednesday at — where else? — a baseball game at Chicago's Wrigley Field.

More than 17 billion prizes have gone into the boxes over the years, such as whistles, games, spin-tops, yo-yos, brooches, joke books, instant tattoos and miniature pinball games.

F.W. Rueckheim introduced his peanuts, popcorn and molasses treat at the 1893 World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago. It was a hit but had no name.

The name didn't appear until several years later, after a salesman tasted the confection and exclaimed: "That's a cracker jack!" which is slang for "fantastic."

Sailor Jack, modeled after Rueckheim's grandson, and his faithful dog, Bingo, didn't appear on boxes until 1918.

CITY COUNCIL RACE

Expansion debated by candidates

Joel Donofrio
The Daily Iowan

The race to replace Randy Johnson's seat on the Iowa City Council will come to a head Tuesday, when District C voters among Kathy Moyers, Bruno and Kenneth Wessels.

With only three candidates filing the May 27 filing deadline, Tuesday's primary and the June election will narrow the field by one. The top two primary finishers will advance to the city's special council election on June 14 to determine who completes two-and-a-half years of Johnson's term.

Kathy Moyers, 417 Hudson Ave., is a 42-year-old independent who believes economic planning is key to maintaining Iowa City's growth.

"If we want to maintain the quality of life and high level of services provided by Iowa City government, we have to maintain the planned, careful economic growth the community currently enjoys," Moyers said.

When reminded that not everyone — including her opponents — is in favor of encouraging rapid growth for Iowa City, Moyers replied that she's seen the alternative.

"I'm from Cherokee, Iowa, a town that had nearly 10,000 people when I graduated from high school. Today, the town's population has fallen to 5,000. There are no homes, stores and a dead estate market," Moyers said.

"Meanwhile, Johnson County is growing in population and City's revenue grew by 3 percent last year," she added. "We have a pocket of prosperity while population has been dropping across the state. In order to keep that, the council needs to maintain growth in both the business and residential areas."

CITY COUNCIL RACE

Expansion debated by candidates

Joel Donofrio
The Daily Iowan

The race to replace Randy Larson's seat on the Iowa City City Council will come to a head Tuesday, when District C voters choose among Kathy Moyers, Bruno Pigott and Kenneth Wessels.

With only three candidates meeting the May 27 filing deadline, Tuesday's primary and the July 13 election will narrow the field one by one. The top two primary finishers will advance to the citywide, special council election on July 13 to determine who completes the two-and-a-half years of Larson's term.

Kathy Moyers, 417 Hutchinson Ave., is a 42-year-old political independent who believes careful economic planning is key to maintaining Iowa City's growth.

"If we want to maintain the quality of life and high level of human services provided by Iowa City's government, we have to maintain the planned, careful economic growth the community currently enjoys," Moyers said.

When reminded that not everyone — including her opponent Wessels — is in favor of encouraging rapid growth for Iowa City, Moyers replied that she's seen the alternative.

"I'm from Cherokee, Iowa, a town that had nearly 10,000 people when I graduated from high school. Today, the town's population is down to 5,000. There are empty homes, stores and a dead real estate market," Moyers said.

"Meanwhile, Johnson County is growing in population and Iowa City's revenue grew by 3 percent last year," she added. "We are a pocket of prosperity while population has been dropping across the state. In order to keep it that way, the council needs to maintain growth in both the business and residential areas."

Bruno Pigott

Moyers has served on the Iowa City Public Library Board of Trustees since 1989, the Chamber of Commerce Community Leadership Council since 1992, and was the co-chairwoman of May's 67-cent Physical Plant and Equipment Levy renewal effort and last December's school bond referendum. Both were approved by voters. Moyers graduated with a bachelor of arts degree in English from the UI in 1972. She and her husband, John, have two children, Peter, 15, and Anna, 12.

Bruno Pigott, 629 E. Jefferson St., Apt. 1, has three major priorities he believes the council must address: opening up Iowa City government, maintaining thoughtful growth, and holding down costs.

"I don't believe that input from citizens should begin and end with election day," Pigott said. "If elected, I plan to hold regular office hours as well as go door-to-door to get people's opinion on neighborhood issues."

Pigott also feels the council should work more closely with the UI administration and its student government leaders.

Like Moyers, he noted how Iowa City's human services are made possible by economic growth. He stressed, however, that jobs and community services run side-by-side on a two-way street.

"Jobs and people come to Iowa City because it's an attractive community, with a clean and healthy environment to work and live in," Pigott said. "Protecting the integrity of neighborhoods and the environment can help spur growth. There can be a balance."

Finally, Pigott said that the council must work to hold down costs, and give up unnecessary projects, such as expanding the Iowa City airport, in favor of goals that affect more citizens.

"I don't think too many of us own airplanes, but over 50,000 people own library cards," Pigott said. "There's a long list of capital improvements to be made, and we should prioritize these according to how many citizens benefit."

Pigott, who is single, has worked as a legislative aide for three U.S. Congressmen: Dennis Eckart, Pete Visclosky and Bob Carr, and currently holds a job doing research and organizing conferences at the Stanley Foundation. Locally, the 30-year-old Democrat is involved in Iowa City Community Theatre, the Riverside Theatre, Iowa Special Olympics, and is a board member of Environmental Advocates.

Kenneth Wessels, 724 N. Dodge St., is a 45-year-old Democrat who isn't convinced that rapid growth in Iowa City would be beneficial. He sees two major problems caused by the area's "massive rate of expansion."

"First, by expanding the zoning for businesses south of Burlington Street, there has been increased traffic flow, and this brings on recommendations for street-widening," Wessels said. "The city's infrastructure can't stand the strain. It hasn't been able to handle this highly concentrated boom of apartment complexes and businesses."

Wessels also feels that Iowa City's high growth rate is threatening the environment. In particular, he believes that wetlands on the northeast side of town are in danger of disappearing.

"Any type of intrusive growth or development between I-80, Regina High and Highway 1 will cause major erosion. These wetlands could be destroyed by the growth that is already in the planning stages," Wessels said. "The city has this information, studies that show the risks of development on the Northeast side. The other candidates, who are pro-development, either aren't informed or they're slanting what they know."

Wessels, who has been a cable television producer since 1987, served as an Iowa City Board of Housing Appeals judge from 1973-76. He graduated from the UI with a master of arts degree in English in 1985 and a bachelor of arts in English in 1980, and he served in the UI Student Senate. Wessels and his wife, Deborah, have two children, Emanuelle, 14, and Victor, 11.

ALCOHOL VIOLATIONS CITED

2 IC bars faced with license suspensions

The businesses have been charged with serving alcohol after hours.

Tom Wanat
The Daily Iowan

The liquor licenses of two downtown Iowa City bars will be up for review in July as a result of numerous liquor violations.

The state Alcoholic Beverage Division has announced that it will hold two separate hearings on July 22 in Ankeny, Iowa, to decide if they should suspend the liquor licenses of the Union bar, 121 E. College St., and The Field House bar, 111 E. College St.

Both bars have been charged with selling alcohol after hours and allowing minors to be served, in addition to receiving a myriad of lesser alcohol violations, including dozens of underage drinking charges on their premises.

Although Iowa City code doesn't allow for liquor license suspension as a penalty for serving alcohol to people between the ages of 18 and 21, the charge of serving alcohol after legal hours is much more serious.

Sgt. Craig Lihs of the Iowa City Police Department added that likewise, a charge for serving alcohol to persons under 18 would be more serious.

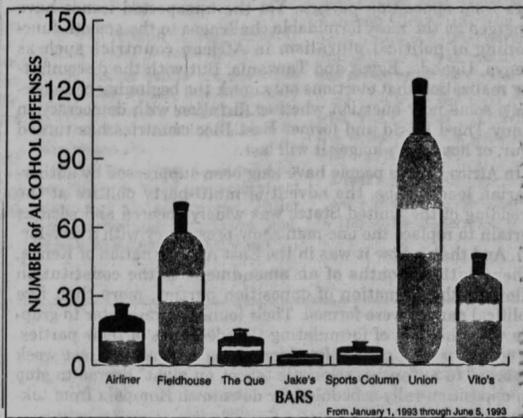

"As far as we know, though, none of these charges have involved anyone under 18," Lihs said.

The hearings come after the Iowa Attorney General's Office filed a violation for serving alcohol after hours.

Police records show:
•The Union bar was charged with prohibited sales and acts on April 2, 1993, at 2:22 a.m. when several people were found drinking alcohol inside.

•The Field House bar was charged with prohibited sales and acts on March 21, 1993, at 2:20 a.m. when eight people were found drinking alcohol inside.

Police originally asked that action be taken on the bars in April when several letters were written to the state Alcoholic Beverage Division due to their high numbers of alcohol violations.

TAMA CASINO TO EXPAND

Iowa's American Indian-run gambling halls enjoying sudden success, profits

The Associated Press

DES MOINES — An announcement that the casino near Tama, Iowa, will soon double in size has underscored a simple fact about American Indian-run casinos in Iowa — they're making loads of money.

"We're earning a profit of about $1 million a month," said Vincent Bass, chairman of the Winnebago Tribal Gaming Commission. The Nebraska-based Winnebagos operate the WinnaVegas casino near Sloan in western Iowa.

About 600 people work at the casino, most of them American Indians, and Bass said that gambling has brought sudden prosperity.

"People are driving cars now who couldn't afford it in the past. Indian gaming came along and now we're doing things that in the past 200 years nobody could do for us," he said.

He said the tribe has already paid off its newly renovated 43,000-square-foot gambling hall, which received more than $6 million in improvements, and is considering various investments.

Officials of Iowa's three gambling halls say their 24-hour-a-day casinos are jammed with so many patrons that attendance could reach from 3.8 million to 4.4 million gamblers a year.

Experimenting with democracy

If there is an area in which the United States and the West have been decisively successful in the post-Cold War era, it is in popularizing democracy as an attractive system of government and facilitating its adoption in many parts of the world. A substantial part of this success is owed to the fact that the United States has made political democratization and economic liberalization prerequisites for its international assistance.

But barely two years after the Third World and former East Bloc countries were marched into the new world order, new ordeals are surfacing in many countries whose conception of democracy relied on the false premise that it starts and ends with the holding of elections. This mistaken notion of democracy did not include plans on how to appease radical Muslims operating under the umbrella of a political party, nor did it provide for a contingency fund which would be used to buy defectors from opposition parties. Yet the unexpected issues have emerged as the most formidable challenges to the smooth functioning of political pluralism in African countries such as Kenya, Uganda, Egypt and Tanzania. But with the discomforting realization that elections only mark the beginning of democracy, some may question whether flirtation with democracy in many Third World and former East Bloc countries has turned sour, or how much longer it will last.

In Africa, where people have long been suppressed by authoritarian leaderships, the advent of multi-party politics at the prodding of the United States was widely cheered and seen as certain to replace the one-man show-presidency with a free-for-all. And that is how it was in the East African nation of Kenya, where within months of an amendment to the constitution allowing the formation of opposition parties, more than five political parties were formed. Their founders were later to grapple with the task of formulating the ideologies of their parties. In neighboring Uganda, President Yoweri Museveni last week resorted to an uncharacteristic "shoot on sight" decree to stop an opposition rally scheduled for downtown Kampala from taking place.

It is true that much of the original obsession with democracy is on the wane in the wake of the belated realization that democracy, like all things, has its cost. If democracy has its cost, so too, should leadership. It should be incumbent on the United States, as the remaining superpower, to employ the same techniques and resources used in globalizing democracy to make it work.

Memo from the Editor: Read & enjoy

It's with a huge collective sigh of relief that we were able to get this issue of The Daily Iowan - Volume 125, Number 1, to be exact - out to you, the readers. Today's paper officially marks the beginning of our 125th year of publication, and was produced on a brand-new system of Macintosh computers. While this may not mean a whole lot to our readers, for us it means going from the dark ages of newspaper production to having one of the best-equipped papers in the state. However, getting used to doing things the "new way" has been no easy task, and we think it's something of a miracle that we got this one off to the presses.

My name's Loren (I'll be the editor for the next couple hundred of these things) and I'd like to introduce you to some of the changes you'll be seeing in this product this year - many of them in this issue. The first difference you may have noticed is in the flag. It's a little bigger, it's been centered, and has been modified to highlight our 125th anniversary. The weather box has been moved to the top of the newbriefs column. Some of the other major changes:

•The features page. Page 2 - where the majority of our feature stories appear - now has its own editor. Jon Yates, whose name you may already be familiar with, will fill this new position. This is where you can expect to find the really weird, fun, creative, experimental-type stuff typical of a lot of college newspapers (check out today's "horoscopes," for example).

•The Viewpoints Page. We'll be taking the best quotes in each issue and highlighting them in the box to your left called, well, "Quotable." The cartoon "This Modern World," tentatively scheduled to run once a week, will be another welcome addition. Also, the Letters-to-the-Editor policy has been slightly modified. The maximum word limit has been set at 400, and only one letter per author per month will be printed. Every effort will be made to run every letter we receive, which should now be possible, as the Viewpoints section will now get an extra half-page every day. (For the summer, this section will run on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.) The DI will continue to offer a wide range of opinions from all ends of the political spectrum in this forum.

•Expanded Arts & Entertainment coverage. During the summer session our papers are usually smaller than during the fall and spring semesters. Traditionally, the A&E section runs opposite days we print the Viewpoints section, on Tuesdays and Thursdays. However, this summer A&E will run on Fridays also. For the fall, we're looking to set aside an extra full page on Fridays for this section.

•The sports pages. This new technology has enabled us to provide a more consistent Scoreboard section, which will now feature additional box scores, expanded standings and more statistics in general. Sports columns will run at least once a week on the front of this section.

•Color. Lots more of it. One of the many keen advantages of our new system will be the ability to process color photos faster and at a cheaper price. I'm hoping that by fall we'll be running full color on the front page nearly every day.

•Graphics. A greater emphasis will be placed on creative design and graphics work this year. You'll be seeing more artwork splashed around within our pages and more stuff in color to complement color photos. An assistant graphics editor may be hired in the fall if our new Graphics Editor, Olivia Ferguson, gets too overworked during the summer.

Those are the biggest changes we're scheming about for now. We're still kicking around a lot of other ideas, such as a "gripline," where readers will be able to phone in anonymous comments on an answering machine, and "person-on-the-street" interviews on various topics for the Viewpoints Page. We ran a couple of excellent photo essays last year, and we now would like to try doing them about once a month. Oh yeah, and Jim's back, hanging out in the Daily Break.

As I alluded to earlier, this is our 125th year of publication, and to commemorate the anniversary The Daily Iowan will be holding a reunion for all former DI staffers July 30 and 31 here on campus. A special 12-page reunion edition will be published also, and will be included in the July 30 issue of the DI. It should be a great read, even if you've never worked here.

Though we're a little anxious now about this year and the changes it will bring, we're also very excited. A lot of the improvements in this paper will be obvious, while others will be more subtle. My overall goal here is to keep The Daily Iowan an innovative, fresh, "must read" sort of product. Hopefully we'll always inform, entertain, please and anger - but never bore. This is one of the top college papers in the country, and a lot of times we even manage to outdo the local and area competition. All of this for only a nickel a day of your mandatory student fees - half of what you pay for your student government.

Staff turnover at the DI is pretty high, and we're always accepting applications. So if you've ever dreamed of shooting photos fieldside at Kinnick on game day, bugging a university administrator at home on a Sunday (with good reason, of course), or telling 40,000 readers what you really think of the UI's laser building, now's your chance. Stop by the newsroom, 201N Communications Center, pick up an application, and have a chat with one of the departmental editors or myself - I'll be available for most of the hours between noon and midnight if you have any questions or concerns. My phone number is 335-6030.

And just in case you were wondering, I probably won't be writing a weekly column or anything, but I may contribute to this page every now and then when I feel inspired. (I'm more of a news guy than an editorial writer.)

And now for issue Number 2...

Loren Keller is the Editor of The Daily Iowan.

KIM PAINTER

Chico, Harpo, Groucho and Bubba

Welcome to episode two of the Hundred Days series. This 12-part extravaganza spans four years in the life of Bubba, a confused Arkansas politician who one day wakes up to find himself in the White House. His wife is the health-care czar and dreamer of every lesbian in the country. In addition, he seems to have a $200 haircut that's causing him a lot of grief. What's a boy who still believes in a place called Hope to do?

In the first hundred days, we saw Bubba bumble the priceless opportunity to push through presidential initiatives in the form of executive orders. As a result, "gays in the military" became a spinoff of the Hundred Days series. It is a game show most of us, regardless of our opinions on the matter, have grown tired of. Give me Richard Dawson any day.

We in America's studio audience saw the military brass display more gleaming hypocrisy than ever before, thanks to technological advances in the cutting-edge field of talking out of both sides of the mouth made during the Reagan years. The generalissimi tromped up to the Hill in full regalia to thunder about cohesion and morale. In a scene that instantly claimed its place as an intellectual car-chase classic, senators and generals pondered the differences between "declaring" homosexuality and "practicing" it. All this when Sam Nunn and the rest of us know that discharges linked to military code have always been suspended indefinitely at the first sign of real trouble: gotta have every man on deck for cannon fodder, including homos.

Within weeks of this mess, the appointment fiascoes began. It seems that Bubba's elves, most of them not quite 30, with names like Mark and Dee-Dee, were incapable of keeping Bubba's counsel to themselves. Nor did they give Bubba the counsel he needed, particularly in the tricky area of household domestic staff and Social Security taxes.

Those were highlights from The First Hundred Days. We now move on to part two, in which Bubba faces the fallout from a haircut that held up traffic on three runways at L.A. International Airport for 45 minutes and cost him $200. His wife, Hillary Rodham Bubba, has a new 'do, too. But the life of a health-care czar is a total bitch when it comes to glamour. Rush Lamebrain, conservative political showman, has hinted on his late-night TV show that a lesbian cabal is alive, well and unhappy with Bubba woman's bad hair. They intend to thwart her health-care initiatives if she doesn't see a stylist at least once a day. Lamebrain isn't saying how he knows, but FBI director William Sessions is reported to have photos of Lamebrain and Iran-Contra sleaze-meister Olivier du Nord cavorting in fishnet hose, taffeta skirts, and CFM shoes.

Late-breaking debacles plaguing the Bubba regency also revolve around appointments. Lani Guinier was withdrawn as the nominee to head the Justice Department's civil-rights division when Bubba finally got a look at some of her legal writings (so why did he nominate her in the first place... because he liked her 'do?). The jurisprudential "Cliff's Notes" on Guinier convinced Bubba that her theories might pose a practical threat during confirmation hearings. Bubba has the right to nominate whoever he wants. He may also withdraw names at will. One danger of such fickle behavior is that it gives the impression to many that the plot for the next 10 episodes will center on Bubba facing the cameras, waxing sincere and apologetic as he defends himself for dancing forward two steps and having to take three giant steps back the next week.

Let's make no mistake, viewers: Sincerity has long been absent from America's political landscape. It's nice to see some crop up again, and from our president, no less. But sincerity always harnessed to some form of apology grows tiresome. Lani Guinier showed she was far more likely to have been a great asset to the country, rather than a divisive force, when she said, having spoken to Bubba for an hour and 15 minutes about being dumped, "I told the president whatever he decided, I would still respect him. And I do." This is more than many Americans can say at present.

Attorney General Janet Reno was a strong supporter of Guinier. She gave Guinier access to facilities at the Department of Justice for her press conference after the withdrawal, an interesting wrinkle in the plot. It remains to be seen what repercussions Bubba will face over his Guinier about-face in Congress, where 39 members of the black caucus helped pull Bubba's budget package through the House by six slim votes.

While Bubba makes enemies where he might be expected to find friends, he makes friends where he might be expected to find enemies. Late last week Barry Goldwater came out, as it were, in favor of lifting the ban on the open participation of gays and lesbians in the military. It couldn't have been scripted any better by a creative giant on mind-altering chemicals. Goldwater even coined a new jingle, coming soon to T-shirts and bumper stickers near you: "You don't have to be straight to serve in the military. You just have to shoot straight."

So goes The Second Hundred Days. As full of miracles as "Jurassic Park." A presidential administration that links Camelot and "F-Troop." Chico, Groucho and Harpo would be proud to star with Bubba in the upcoming slapstick, thriller, tragicomedy, special-effects wonderland, "A Day In The Oval Office." All we need is someone to play the Margaret Dumont role. Maybe Tipper could dye her hair...

LETTERS

An open letter from UISA president

To the Editor:

Welcome to the summer session! Hopefully the weather is warmer for everyone - and sunnier - by the time this letter gets printed. You haven't missed much while you were away. Several things have happened this year which, with all the usual political bickering the DI has to cover, may not have come to your attention.

First, we've established a foundation in excess of $5,000 for day-care scholarships for parents with financial needs. If you have children, use day-care, and think you may qualify, please contact your day-care center or the UISA offices at 335-3860 for an application for summer term. The scholarships provide one month's day-care fees. Also, self-help scholarships for students with financial needs - usually in the amount of $200-$250 - will be available again this fall. Also - ALL STUDENT GROUP LEADERS CONTACT US SOON for your 1994 budget review so we can be sure and establish your priorities in your budgets, with your help.

On Wednesday, June 16, the members of the Iowa state Board of Regents will be in town to meet informally with students - look for signs on the door of room 48 in the IMU, or at the IMU Information Center, as to where you can go to share some coffee and ideas with the women and men who have the final say on everything from your tuition, to funding resources for a group you're in, to changes in your curriculum. This is the first such meeting, so please come and meet them.

If you're still tired of any political games stuff - as, needless to say, am I - look for notice this fall of the Special Elections to fill leftover senate seats. You have a lot more opportunity than you think to stop the squabbling and take student government even farther forward for your needs, or for the needs of a group you might represent. Contact me at the above-listed number or contact the Student Elections Board for more information. There are plenty of graduate and undergraduate seats available. It doesn't take too much time, is rather interesting these days, and is good experience.

In the meantime, enjoy the summer - and let us know what you think of what we're doing, or what you think we should be doing. There is a section on PANDA, available through Weeg and the ITCs, where student government news is posted, and you can respond directly online. Rest assured, no matter how finicky the factions are in finding fault, campaign promises to serve you are being fulfilled, and we seek more ways to do so.

Focus on issues needed

During this paper's hiatus, we've seen the better part of a city council primary race. Three candidates — Bruno Pigott, Kathy Moyers and Kenneth Wessels — face Council District C voters tomorrow, with the top two finishers facing off for the seat in a citywide election to be held on July 13.

Unfortunately, the UI community has been out of the loop on this special election. It's a sad accident of timing, especially since the early stages of the campaign saw a lot of anti-student rhetoric. Despite Iowa City's progressive reputation, and despite the political makeup of the officially nonpartisan council (four registered Democrats, one Republican and one independent), city government has been dominated by a conservative, chamber-of-commerce, growth-at-all-costs attitude. Housing development focuses on $150,000 estates on the fringes of town and not on affordable rental housing.

The race is being played out in a battle of who's supporting who. Moyers has support from her Manville Heights neighborhood, city council member John McDonald, and the "more of the same" crowd; Pigott has endorsements from labor, council member Karen Kubby, County Supervisor Joe Bolckom and much of the progressive wing of the Democratic Party. Wessels presumably has support from his immediate family. Yet too much of this election has focused on this contest for endorsements, and the issues are getting brushed aside. Moyers seems to like it that way; she becomes disconcertingly vague on any subject other than the library or the school system.

Bruno Pigott has portrayed himself as the "issues candidate," as he speaks knowledgeably about responsible development, affordable rental housing and volume-based recycling. Moyers has done good work for the Iowa City community, most recently heading the committee that successfully fought for the school levy. But she seems out of touch with much of Iowa City; Moyers says she understands the business community because she shops downtown, and she's calling for increasing fares for city buses — a conveyance she likely uses rarely, if ever.

The third candidate, Wessels, spurred the election, but has brought little to the debate except entertainment. He has a disturbing willingness to change his views depending on which audience he faces at the moment, and his cure-all proposal for a "cultural center" on the Pedestrian Mall seems more a gimmick than a serious plan. Yet his efforts at opening the process are to be commended.

Fifty-seven percent of the registered voters in District C are students. The UI community showed great interest in this election a few weeks ago. If this community is to increase its say in local government, it needs to exercise its strength in numbers. If you live in District C, vote early today or get to the polls tomorrow.

The vegetarian vegetarians don't bring up

Is there any group in this country that isn't angry about something? I ask that because of the amazing messages I've been getting lately from vegetarians. "I don't eat meat," one man wrote, "but if someone would put your useless carcass on a spit and slow-cook you over a bed of hot coals, I might make an exception."

A woman tossed this out: "It is flesh-eating barbarians like you who bring on most of the world's problems. And your diet is also responsible for your uncommonly ugly face."

As Don Corleone once asked, how did all this begin? I did not set out to get into a long-running feud with vegetarians.

But when some of them launched a protest against McDonald's — demanding that a veggie burger be added to the menu — they struck me as being illogical.

McDonald's is in business to make money — both the parent corporation and the franchise operators. And they do it by selling hamburgers, fries and other items people want. That is the free-enterprise system, and it works quite well for McDonald's.

I suggested that if the anti-beef crowd wants to buy veggie burgers, they should invest their own money, form their own corporation and sell them. That is also the free-enterprise system.

My, did some of them get huffy.

As I described in an earlier column, one devoted vegetarian used his skills as a computer-graphics artist to produce and distribute a handbill that described my vile eating and drinking habits and suggested that I might be the son of Rudolph Hess, a member of Hitler's inner circle.

And suddenly I find myself involved in a feud with vegetarians, a conflict I never sought.

But I suppose a feud with vegetarians is better than with other groups I can think of. I'd rather have a cabbage thrown through my window than a brick or bomb.

Typical of their reaction has been this letter from Victor C. Forsythe, president of something called the Vegetarian Society, Inc., located in Los Angeles.

In writing to my employer, Mr. Forsythe said: "Perhaps Mr. Royko would be more at home in Cuba, where Fidel is a big promoter and subsidizer of beef. There, consumers do not enjoy the freedom to protest or have a choice. Of course, make your own or find a place that sells them.

Then there is my woeful appearance and muddled thinking, which the vegetarians attribute to bad diet. This allegation has prompted me to do a bit of research.

And I have made a shocking discovery.

Do you know the name of the most famous vegetarian in history?

He was not famous for being a vegetarian. But his name appears in the history books and his story is told at greater length than that of any vegetarian who has ever lived.

Vegetarians will tell you it was Albert Einstein or George Bernard Shaw. No, no, no.

"Hess came to the table about every two weeks; he would be followed by his adjutant . . . carrying a . . . vessel containing a specially-prepared meal, which was to be warmed in the kitchen. For a long time it was hidden from Hitler that Hess had his own special vegetarian meal served to himself."

Speer says that when Hitler found out he was bringing his own veggies, he got mad and told him either to eat the veggies prepared by Hitler's chef or eat at home.

the greatest problem with feeding on corpses is their total lack of fiber. In the case of Mr. Royko, the symptoms of his bad diet are obvious, the bald head, the sunken eyeballs and mental constipation show he has one foot in the grave."

See what I mean about the lack of logic? Yes, here we do have a choice. So if McDonald's doesn't provide you with a veggie burger,

It was Adolph Hitler, probably the worst nut in world history.

His dining habits are described by Albert Speer, one of his top aides, in Speer's book "Inside the Third Reich," which is published by MacMillan Co.

Hitler would host dinners for his top Nazis. Some of them might eat meat, but as Speer wrote: "Hitler was served his vegetarian food, drank Fachinger mineral water . . .

If there was a meat broth, I could depend on his speaking of corpse tea."

And Hitler wasn't the only one. Probably the goofiest of his aides was the above-mentioned Rudolph Hess. And he had a veggie hangup greater than Hitler's. As Speer wrote:

"Hess came to the table about every two weeks; he would be followed by his adjutant . . . carrying a . . . vessel containing a specially-prepared meal, which was to be warmed in the kitchen. For a long time it was hidden from Hitler that Hess had his own special vegetarian meal served to himself."

Speer says that when Hitler found out he was bringing his own veggies, he got mad and told him either to eat the veggies prepared by Hitler's chef or eat at home.

The book also tells us that Hitler never drank booze and was a strict vegetarian. And who were his two chief adversaries?

Now, think about that. Hitler did not drink or smoke and was a strict vegetarian. And who were his two chief adversaries?

There was President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who ate what he fancied, didn't mind a nip now and then, and was often seen grinning with his famous cigarette holder in his teeth.

And there was Prime Minister Winston Churchill, who liked a hearty meal of animal parts, drank brandy like it was mother's milk and chomped on big cigars.

So who were the good guys and who was the bad guy? Who were the winners, thank goodness, and who was the loser?

I rest my case.

Mike Royko's column is distributed by Tribune Media Services.

Candidate lauds student participation

To the Editor:

Within two days of your May 3 article about my petition drive calling for a special election for a vacant Iowa City Council seat, the students of the UI were being talked about poorly in the other Iowa City newspaper. Many students signed my 775 signature petition calling for the special election. Many more signed my petition that established my own candidacy for the open position a week later. The hundreds of students who signed the petitions grasped to a person the nature of the democratic tool they were being asked to help with. Both petitions were a success under careful scrutiny. The special election will be held on July 19, and I am a candidate in that election, thanks in large part to the many UI students who participated so actively in our local government process in late April and early May of 1993.

Some influential local Iowa Citizens still do not realize that student life is difficult from start to finish. The comforts of life are few and the need to adapt to restricted circumstances is especially evident among the dorm residents. I marveled at the understanding of our democratic system demonstrated by the nearly 1,000 people who signed my petitions.

When summer school starts, we will probably be back on the front pages, because the instant interest shown by strong candidates indicates a Tuesday, June 15 primary will be necessary. I hope I can represent the thousands of students who reside in District C by late July.

Icon source not misquoted

To the Editor:

On April 22, 1993, editors at The Daily Iowan received a letter concerning a news story which appeared that same day in the new biweekly newspaper Icon. The letter was written by Judy Guerrier, director of the Tenant-Landlord Association. Guerrier accused Icon of misquoting her comments about rental agencies in Iowa City, particularly comments which named troublesome rental agencies. On May 14, 1993, the last day of the D's spring publishing schedule, the letter was finally published.

Ms. Guerrier's accusations were untrue and damaging to Icon and the author of the news story, Lisa L. Owens. The entire interview with Ms. Guerrier was tape-recorded and she was not misquoted. Ms. Guerrier appears to regret naming any rental agencies for the article. Her indiscretion has probably made her job more difficult. However, name them she did, for a reporter with a tape recorder, on the record.

In fact, Owens selected Guerrier's quotations with extreme discretion. Guerrier's self-inflicted damage would have been far worse had Owens included in the Icon story more of the material she received from Guerrier. Some of this material is extremely hostile toward the owners of certain rental agencies.

Lisa L. Owens is an excellent reporter with impeccable judgment. No one has been misquoted in Icon. It is unfortunate that The Daily Iowan's publication schedule did not allow a fair and timely clarification.

Grad students' organization

To the Editor:

The Campaign to Organize Graduate Students (COGS) formed this spring out of a deep concern on the part of graduate students about the quality of undergraduate education at the UI; graduate assistants receiving a living wage; free, quality health insurance; child care; tuition waivers; and good working conditions. As employees, COGS members believe that a union of graduate students can contribute to making the UI a better community.

To this end, we intend to dedicate ourselves to education and organizing efforts this summer. Thus far we have been encouraged by the groundswell of support COGS has received from graduate students across the campus.

Come join us on Tuesday, June 22 at 7 p.m. in the Iowa City Public Library, Room A.

3 UI faculty members to take up new posts

Two interim positions and the UI Ombudsman slot will be filled by the changes.

Lesley Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

Three UI faculty members will be taking on new roles this summer, as they fill the positions of interim director of the UI Hospitals and Clinics, interim director of the School of Art and Art History and UI ombudsman.

Staley becomes interim director of UIHC
John Staley, the chief operating officer and associate director of the UIHC, will become the interim director of the hospital on July 1, at a salary of $187,500.

Staley has taken over the position as the search for outgoing hospitals director John Colton begins. Colton will become the vice president for statewide services as part of an administrative restructuring.

UI President Hunter Rawlings appointed a 10-member search committee to find a permanent successor to Colton. The committee will be chaired by Sally Mathis, associate director of the hospitals and director of the hospital's nursing department.

According to UI Vice President for University Relations Ann Rhodes, Staley has proven his ability to lead the hospitals during his nearly 20 years at the UI, including two years as associate director.

"He will be an effective leader at the hospitals," Rhodes said.

Becker named interim director of UI School of Art and Art History

Recently retired UI Foundation Distinguished Professor of Communication Studies Samuel Becker has been named interim director of the School of Art and Art History by Liberal Arts Dean Judith Aikin.

Becker replaces Wallace Tomasi, who will be returning to his position as professor of art history after 20 years as director of the school.

Becker received his bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees from the UI. He served as chairman of what was then the department of communications and theatre arts from 1968 until 1982.

He has served as president of the UI Faculty Senate and University Faculty Council. He has also served as the UI faculty representative to the NCAA and Big Ten Athletic Conference.

"We couldn't ask for a better person to serve as interim director than Sam Becker," Aikin said. "He has been a wonderful teacher and a fine administrator. I am grateful that he has agreed to postpone his retirement activities temporarily to serve the university in this capacity."

Becker's appointment will be a 75 percent commitment and will be effective Aug. 9, 1993. His annual salary will be $100,000.

Hauserman to become UI ombudsman

UI Associate Professor in the College of Administration Nancy Hauserman has been named to the position of UI ombudsman by President Rawlings.

The UI ombudsman serves as a resource for all those in the UI community who require information or help in resolving a problem. The ombudsman serves in an informational and conciliatory role and as a mediator. The position reports to the UI president and is a half-time commitment.

Hauserman has been a member of the faculty of the College of Business Administration since 1978. Before joining the UI, she was an attorney in private practice in Iowa City. She received her bachelor's degree from the University of Rhode Island and her juris doctor from the UI. Her awards include the Michael J. Brody Award for Faculty Excellence in Service in 1992, and the M.B.A. Professor of the Year award in 1992.

"Professor Hauserman is an outstanding choice for this position," Rawlings said in a release. "She is well-liked and respected by faculty and staff and has a splendid record of leadership, problem solving and mediation. I look forward to working with her."

Hauserman's appointment begins July 1, 1993. She will be paid $67,500 annually and will retain her academic appointment in the College of Business Administration allowing her to continue to teach and conduct research.

Search for Health Sciences VP continues

The last of five named candidates to become UI vice president for health sciences was interviewed June 1.

Antonio Gotto Jr., chairman of the department of medicine at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, Texas, and chief of the Internal Medicine Service at the Methodist Hospital and Ben Taub County

John Staley
Hospital in Houston, met with faculty, staff, students and administrators during his campus visit.

Gotto also holds the J.S. Abercrombie Professor Chair for Atherosclerosis and Lipoprotein Research and is co-director of the DeBakey Heart Center at Baylor.

The position of vice president for health sciences was created in 1991 to oversee all health science units at the UI including the UIHC, the health colleges of dentistry, medicine, nursing and pharmacy and the statewide health service units. In addition, the vice president will serve as chief representative of the Health Sciences Center to the Board of Regents, the Legislature, federal health agencies, national health-related organizations, business and industry.

During the interview process, candidates meet with the search committee, the UI president and vice presidents, the deans of the health science colleges and senior staff of those colleges and the UIHC. In addition, the candidates meet with administrators and representatives of student, faculty and staff groups.

Rhodes said the list of names may be narrowed before the search committee forwards the names of candidates to Rawlings for a final decision. Rawlings is hoping to name a new vice president by July 1.

PARENTS ADDRESS BOARD

District changes cause concern

Some parents said their children would suffer negative psychological effects if forced to switch schools.

Dave Strahan
The Daily Iowan

In a meeting of the Iowa City School Board Thursday, board members took input from parents regarding the proposed boundary changes for the Iowa City School District.

The board is currently considering three boundary scenarios which would rearrange school enrollments once the Irving B. Weber Elementary school opens its doors in the fall of 1994.

Despite the rationale, most parents spoke against boundary changes for a number of reasons. For many, safety was a primary concern.

"My son now walks one half-mile, crosses two intersections, and then he has the safety patrol escort him across Benton Street," said parent Dave Franker. "Under scenarios C and E, my son would be walking 1.2 miles, crossing 13 intersections and eight apartment building driveway exits. My main concern is safety."

After a number of parents presented similar arguments, parent Ralph Russo summarized the popular position and issued a challenge to the board.

"Safety is one of our primary concerns," he said. "I hope it is one of your primary concerns as well."

Safety, however, was not the only concern parents had. Many were also frustrated they might lose control over where their children go to school, especially since many had opted to live within certain school boundaries.

Parent Sherry Brunzell said she had selected her residence specifically because it was within the boundaries of Helen Lemme Elementary School. Brunzell said that nearly all her neighbors had done the same, and she asked that the board recognize this fact.

"Please consider that we consciously chose to live here with the understanding that our children would remain in the school in which many of them have gone for numerous years," she said.

Along different lines, other parents were worried that uprooting their children to a new school would have negative psychological consequences. After all, the parents argued, the children would have to adjust to a new routine, new buildings and new teachers. Most importantly, they would have to make new friends. Parent Pat Kosur said she didn't want that for her son.

"A separation from his friends during his final year of elementary school seems unfair," she said.

Though in the minority, two citizens spoke in favor of the future boundary changes. Parent Becky Dwor made the unpopular point that the changes were a necessary evil.

"It would be nice if all our kids could stay at their own school," she admitted. "But I think we have to take into account the fact that you can't stay at your own school. Things have got to change."

In an effort to be constructive, parent Chuck Friedman implied that the board was limited by the number of scenarios they chose to consider, and he asked them to examine more. More ideas, Friedman argued, might present alternatives the current scenarios don't seem to offer.

"I think it's more than numbers game," he said. "I think our children are more than pawns."

At the end of the meeting, Superintendent Barbara Grohe thanked the parents for their input and assured them it would be used in making the decision.

"The information we heard tonight is important, and that's why we did this," she said. Still, Grohe admitted it would be difficult to choose a scenario by Nov. 9.

"We have a lot of work ahead of us," she said.

Thursday's public forum was the first of three. The next forum will be held Sept. 9.

TAX LAPSE QUESTIONED

Clinton nominee scrutinized

Like Zoe Baird and Kimba Wood, Supreme Court nominee Stephen Breyer failed to file Social Security taxes for a domestic helper.

Ron Fournier

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An anxious White House watched for fallout Sunday from a last-minute revelation that its leading Supreme Court candidate failed to pay Social Security taxes for a household worker.

For the moment, Stephen Breyer appeared to be surviving. The Boston jurist won backing from Republican and Democratic leaders in the Senate, and some women's groups said the tax lapse should not doom his candidacy.

"I don't think it's disqualifying. I agree with the White House. I would hope they move forward with the Breyer nomination," Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said on CNN's "Newsmaker Sunday."

"I don't think that, by itself, is disqualifying," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley."

But other Democratic lawmakers said a Breyer nomination could open Clinton to charges of holding female candidates to a higher standard than males.

"It raises some problems, doesn't it?" Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

The White House was closely watching whether the tax issue developed into a major controversy, something Clinton can't afford after dumping Lani Guinier as his nominee for the nation's top civil rights enforcer. The situation could prompt Clinton to turn to Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt instead.

The White House jumped to Breyer's defense after the tax matter became public Saturday night, saying he paid the taxes as soon as he realized they were due.

Breyer is chief judge of the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston. Aides drew a distinction between Breyer's situation and the cases of Zoe Baird and Kimba Wood, two attorney general prospects whose candidacies were scuttled by the hiring of illegal aliens for full-time household chores. Breyer's help was an elderly U.S. citizen who worked for him part-time, Breyer supporters and White House aides said on condition of anonymity.

Harriett Woods, president of the National Women's Political Caucus, said thousands of Americans unknowingly violate the law requiring employers to pay Social Security taxes for household workers who earn more than $50 in three months.

"I don't think women are looking for revenge for Kimba Wood or Zoe Baird. What we're looking for is to reform the system," she said.

A senior administration official said Sunday that Breyer's chances have not been hurt since the tax issue was made public Saturday. Other aides said Breyer still appeared to be Clinton's likely choice.

Clinton, who has known about the tax matter for some time, could announce his choice to replace Justice Byron White on Monday.

One Clinton aide suggested that the president could still deviate from his two-person list and select somebody who had previously been scratched. Should that occur, the candidate mentioned most often is Ruth Bader Ginsburg of the federal appeals court in Washington.

Selecting anybody other than Breyer would open Clinton again to the charge that he would rather run than fight, a stigma he cannot afford with the looming battles over his economic and health-care plans.

A source close to Breyer said the employee in question has worked at the Breyer household one or two mornings a week over the past 13 years, is over 65 and was already drawing Social Security benefits when she started.

Stephen Breyer

After the Baird flap, the Breyers paid about $400 in 1992 taxes for the woman, now 81. They subsequently paid a similar amount for each of the years 1980 through 1991, said the source, a friend who is pushing Breyer's candidacy.

Several members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which must approve of Clinton's nominee, were told about Breyer's situation up to two weeks ago, White House aides said.

The only warnings came from Democrats on Sunday who urged the White House to distinguish Breyer from Baird and Wood.

"You saw what happened to individuals nominated for the position of attorney general," Harkin said.

ARGUMENT LACKS EVIDENCE

AIDS killer theory debated by doctors

Dan Sewell

The Associated Press

MIAMI — The unthinkable theory — murder by intentional infection — was once only murmured, usually dismissed. Now increasingly open discussion ponders whether dentist David Acer might have been a vengeful serial killer who used the AIDS virus as a weapon.

Acer, who described himself in a dying statement as "a gentle man" and insisted he would never intentionally harm anyone, remains the only known health-care provider to have transmitted the deadly virus to patients.

It's been three years since the shocking announcement that he had infected some of his patients. Investigators say the murder theory lacks evidence, but some in the medical community consider it almost a relief from the maddening uncertainty about the case.

For those whose lives Acer transformed, the idea can be infuriating. "If he did that intentionally, then he was a very, very sick person," said Deanne Driskill, whose husband, Richard, has battled for life the last two years. "We all know in the long run what this disease means. My husband is 33 years old, and I'm watching him go down every day."

Driskill, once a husky Indiantown citrus-plant foreman, has wasted to 110 pounds.

He's one of six dental patients federal medical investigators say Acer infected. The first confirmed victim, Kimberly Bergalis, died at 23 in December 1991, four years after going to Acer to have a tooth pulled.

The sixth case became known only last month, when 18-year-old Sherry Johnson came forward after testing positive for the virus when taking a physical examination in hopes of joining the military. Unlike the five earlier patients, she'd undergone no "invasive" procedures — such as root canals or extractions — in the routine visits to Acer that began when she was 13.

Because her simple dental work had presented little possibility of cuts, Johnson's case provoked an "Aha! This proves it!" reaction from those who suspect murder, said Tom Liberti, administrator for Florida's AIDS program.

Since the Acer case became public, thousands of patients of dozens of other health-care providers who learned they had the virus have been tested. Not one other case of transmission has turned up, and some say that makes accidental transmission by Acer appear increasingly unlikely.

"It is very much a singular case," said Dr. Clifford Marks of Miami, president of the Florida Dental Association. He said murder seems possible, but added: "I don't think we're going to really know."

"The theory of intent has been there since the beginning," said Dr. Harold Jaffee, an epidemiologist who headed the Centers for Disease Control investigation that in July 1990 found Acer had transmitted the AIDS virus. "There's no evidence that directly supports that theory."

Edward Parsons, a nurse, caused a stir last year when he said Acer, who'd learned he was infected in 1987, told him in 1988 that mainstream America was ignoring AIDS because its victims were mostly homosexuals. Parsons quoted Acer as saying action would be taken "when it starts affecting grandmothers and younger people."

The statement was chilling, because Acer's infected patients included teacher Barbara Webb, now 66, and Bergalis.

"It may have been some misguided attempt to convince the world about AIDS, or it may have been anger, or a combination of both," said Webb.

U.N. "SAFE AREAS" THREATENED

Muslim military leader orders urgent cease-fire

Maud S. Beelman

The Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian Serb forces reportedly closed in on the last Muslim-defended stronghold in eastern Bosnia on Sunday, battling at close range for control of Gorazde.

At least 52 people were killed when shells slammed into a makeshift hospital in Gorazde, Bosnian radio said. The city is one of six U.N.-declared "safe areas." "No one survived... the place is now a mixture of pieces of dead bodies, bricks and plaster," ham radio operator Fahrudin Becic told Bosnian radio.

Bosnian radio said late Sunday that 59 people were killed and more than 100 were wounded in the fighting, which continued into the evening. It said troops from both sides suffered heavy losses.

Bosnian Serbs, who control about 70 percent of Bosnia, seek unchallenged authority over eastern Bosnia.

In Geneva, Bosnia's collective presidency demanded the immediate deployment of U.N. peacekeepers in Gorazde to help stem the bloodshed, said Bosnian Vice President Ejup Ganic.

The presidency also ordered a cease-fire late Sunday between Croats and Muslim forces in central Bosnia, the scene of recent heavy fighting between the former allies, Ganic said.

Ganic spoke after talks in Geneva among nine Muslim, Croat and loyalist Serb members of the presidency, which rarely meets because of the war. Alija Izetbegovic, a Muslim who heads the presidency, handles the daily business of the government.

Any decision by the presidency would have little impact on the 70 percent of Bosnia under Serb control, since its Serb members are loyal to the Muslim-led government.

But the meeting could improve relations between Croats and Muslims, if Izetbegovic can convince the Bosnian Croats he is willing to give them more power in the government.

Bosnian radio reported fighting at close range on front lines around Gorazde and said it was "raining projectiles." It reported up to 75 people had died there since Saturday.

"Serbian forces have managed to move and they're coming closer and closer to the city," said Becic, who claimed more than 600 people had died since Serbs renewed attacks on Gorazde late last month.

Bosnian Serb forces urged Gorazde's citizens to leave and promised safe passage, Belgrade radio said.

"There is not much time left," said the appeal from the Bosnian Serbs as quoted by Belgrade radio.

There was no way to confirm the reports independently.

Gorazde, home to up to 70,000 residents and refugees, has been cut off for months and under fierce attack for 17 days. Bosnian Serb leaders have refused to allow U.N. monitors into the town.

Deputy prime minister Hadzo Efendic asked Izetbegovic to break off the Geneva talks and return home because Gorazde was about to fall, the Bosnian government press agency said.

The government also asked the U.N. Security Council and President Clinton to protect Gorazde from "genocide."

SYRINGES FOUND IN SODA

Diet Pepsi drinkers across 4 states told to check cans

Officials say that no contamination was found.

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — The Food and Drug Administration on Sunday warned Diet Pepsi drinkers in four states to drink from a glass and to examine their soda cans for syringes.

"Obviously, if something rattles inside of a can, I'd like to know about it — real fast," said Roger Lowell, district FDA director.

Hypodermic needles were found last week in two sealed soda cans that had been bottled six months apart, said Susan Herbert, a spokeswoman for Alpac Corp., the regional bottler and distributor for Pepsi.

No injuries were reported and initial tests showed no sign of contamination in the cans, the FDA said. The acidity of the soft drink would kill almost any bacteria or virus, Lowell said.

Consumers in areas where Alpac distributes — Washington, Oregon, Alaska, Hawaii and the U.S. territory of Guam — should inspect their cans of Diet Pepsi closely before drinking, the FDA said in a statement.

A spokesman for Pepsi, based in Somers, N.Y., did not immediately return a phone call seeking comment Sunday.

Alpac President Karl Behnke said he believes the cans were sabotaged. He said the syringes could have been placed in the cans before they arrived at Alpac, during the two or three seconds after the can was filled and before the lid was added, or after the cans were opened.

FDA investigators returned Sunday to the Alpac plant. The two Diet Pepsi cans containing the syringes were sent to an FDA forensic laboratory in Cincinnati for more tests.

"More sophisticated testing could lead to an avenue in the investigation," Lowell said. "At this point, I don't know what that is."

The first syringe was reported Wednesday by Earl and Mary Triplett of Tacoma, who said they found it in an empty can of Diet Pepsi they shared the night before.

A woman from Federal Way, a suburban city between Seattle and Tacoma, reported hearing something rattling in a can three-quarters full on Friday, Behnke said.

OTTAWA — Defense Kim Campbell, a 46-year-old lawyer from Vancouver, won a party race to succeed Mulroney and become female prime minister of Canada.

No doubt has been since she took power, but officials expect Mulroney to resign in about a week. He resigned earlier this year, faced with plummeting popularity.

Campbell was chosen by party leader and next prime minister on a second ballot at the Conservative Party convention, defeating Environment Minister Jean Charest by a vote of 1,817 to 1,630.

Campbell built an impressive lead in the early stages of a three-month campaign that stood a strong, late Charest.

Yet her real election comes in late summer or when she leads the Conservative Party in a national election that will determine whether the party wins its third-straight majority.

The party that has been in government in Parliament since the country's prime ministerial election Sunday, Defense Minister Campbell came to the victory amid deafening, lyrical "CAMP-BELL."

To further cheers, she went to Prime Minister Mulroney, saying he "taught very important lessons. He taught us how to be a leader. He taught us how to win. And she promised good government, with policies, honestly presented, arrived at, and implemented with competence and with care of your tax dollar."

At the moment, the Conservative government faces a budget deficit and an economy battered by severe recession.

Still, the new prime minister will be helped by the fact that a number of senior Cabinet members and party heavyweights are expected to stay.

OTTAWA — Defense Minister Kim Campbell, a 46-year-old lawyer from Vancouver, on Sunday won a party race to succeed Brian Mulroney and become the first female prime minister of Canada.

No date has been set for the turnover of power, but party officials expect Mulroney to step down officially in about a week or 10 days. He resigned earlier in the year, faced with plummeting popularity.

Campbell was chosen as the party's leader and next prime minister on a second ballot at the Progressive Conservative Party's leadership convention, defeating Environment Minister Jean Charest by a vote of 1,817 to 1,630.

Campbell built an insurmountable lead in the early stages of the three-month campaign and withstood a strong, late charge by Charest.

Yet her real electoral test will come in late summer or early fall, when she leads the Tories into a national election that will determine whether the party will garner its third-straight majority government.

The party that has a majority government in Parliament gets to select the country's prime minister.

After the results were counted Sunday, Defense Minister Campbell came to the victory podium amid deafening, lyrical chants of "CAMP-BELL."

To further cheers, she paid tribute to Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, saying he "taught us some very important lessons as a party. He taught us how to be united and he taught us how to win."

And she promised Canadians "good government, with thoughtful policies, honestly presented, openly arrived at, and implemented with competence and with care for every cent of your tax dollar."

Conservative Party leadership candidate Kim Campbell gives a thumbs-up as she is escorted into the party's convention by former leader Robert Stanfield, left, in Ottawa on Sunday.

After the final ballot was announced, Charest called on the convention to make Campbell's selection unanimous and rally behind her in the election.

"Delegates have now made a choice — a choice that reflects the wisdom and the tradition of the Conservative Party of Canada," Charest said.

Most observers agreed that this leadership race was much more amicable and much less divisive than past campaigns.

U.S. Army fosters a new dogma

Susanne M. Schafer
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Army marches into a new intellectual era this week, as it formally abandons its Cold War fighting doctrine, and adopts a code that emphasizes quick-strike moves to far-away lands.

The new guide also points out the fact that operations such as the peacekeeping mission to Macedonia, or the cleanup after Hurricane Andrew, are the wave of the future for the Pentagon's largest military service.

Almost two years in the works, the publication — dubbed FM-105 Operations in Army lingo — was to be unveiled today by its architect, Gen. Frederick Franks, head of the Army's Training and Doctrine Command, and Gen. Gordon Sullivan, the Army chief of staff.

Franks, the commander who led the Army's VII Corps on its famed "Left Hook" into the Iraqi Republican Guard during the Persian Gulf War, began the revisions soon after returning from the gulf in March 1991.

The four-star general says the centerpiece of the document is "how we think about fighting our nation's wars and conducting operations other than war."

No longer focused on battling the Warsaw Pact nations in central Europe, the Army must be able to "mix and match" its forces for operations ranging from counter-narcotic actions in South and Central America to wars like those in the Persian Gulf or Panama, Franks says.

But the new guide deals with much more.

An entire chapter focuses the military's doctrine for the first time on such things as peacekeeping missions, humanitarian assistance and disaster relief, riot control and relations with nations in need of democratic assistance.

The new doctrine also declares, "the Army will not operate alone," stressing that cooperation among the military services will be the hallmark of future operations.

Given the military's budget and size constraints, the Army has decided it must focus on "power projection" — the ability to move troops quickly to a variety of jobs around the world.

While it took more than two months to put three heavy divisions into Saudi Arabia, the Army's new goal is to deploy the same number of troops the same distance, but in half the time.

The new document is also expected to play a central role in the system that, as Sullivan said recently, "translates ideas into new or modified weaponry, organizations and training. It guides our approach to the future."

In a speech last month before the Boston World Affairs Council,

Sullivan noted that while the general public sees the highly publicized use of stealth weapons in the gulf war as the prelude to a new way of waging war, combat in Panama actually will serve as the prototype.

"What we did in Panama was in many respects more sophisticated than our success in the desert," Sullivan said. "In my judgment, our ability to conduct simultaneous, synchronized attacks on multiple (targets) using complementary military forces of all services represents the dawn of a new age in warfare."

Corporal punishment use sparks parental protests

Katharine Webster

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Susan Trippett was alarmed when her 10-year-old son brought home a detention notice with the words "Corporal Punishment" printed at the bottom.

She called principal Dan Hinkle and told him he could not paddle Timothy. But Hinkle told her he could — and the law said so.

"If corporal punishment were used as a first alternative instead of a last, that would resolve a lot of problems earlier," said Hinkle, principal of the elementary school in Jane Lew, W.Va.

But the tide is against Hinkle and others who would not spare the rod.

A bill introduced last year in Congress by Rep. Major Owens, D-N.Y., would prohibit corporal punishment in all schools that get federal funds.

In recent months, the Maryland and Washington legislatures voted to join 22 other states banning corporal punishment in public schools. Nine other states may follow suit, said Nadine Block, coordinator of the National Coalition to Abolish Corporal Punishment in the Schools, a group based in Columbus, Ohio.

The upshot? Elementary and secondary schools surveyed by the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights reported about 614,000 instances of corporal punishment in 1990 — down from 1.5 million in 1980.

Even in states which allow the practice, educators are often inhibited by the threat of lawsuits or criminal prosecution.

In Texas, which, with Arkansas, has the highest rate of paddling, 26 principals have been investigated by prosecutors or grand juries in the past five years.

POLICY

dents make an informed decision about whether or not to take the course.

UI Vice President for Academic Affairs Peter Nathan said the proposed policy is designed to help both faculty and students know what to anticipate when they go to class.

"This is a specific statement for instructors of what's expected of them, and it says what students can expect," Nathan said.

The policy is only in draft form, Nathan said, and before it becomes policy there will be ample opportunity for faculty members to comment. It will be reviewed by the faculty council and hopefully be implemented in the fall, he said.

In other regent business, the UI will present its progress in strategic planning. The Strategic Plan was developed in 1989 in order to get a general direction for the UI's future development and articulate the administration's aspiration to become one of the 10 best public universities in the nation.

Achievements in the report include improvement in minority student enrollment, tenured and tenure-track women faculty members, better graduation rates, the use of computer fees for the replacement and maintenance of student computer equipment, and improvement in support for graduate students.

The rate of progress has been good, Nathan said.

"We're very pleased with where we are now," he said. "I'm feeling quite pleased with the report we're going to give the regents and I feel like the regents will be pleased."

In the past, the UI has been criticized for a lack of female faculty members and for not providing graduate students with tuition assistance. UI Vice President for University Relations Ann Rhodes said progress has been made, and that will continue.

"There's been some progress in all areas. Clearly, we'd like more women faculty, but we need to retain them. Our biggest problem has been retention, and we need to address that," she said. Rhodes added that support of graduate students is of high priority, and the UI would like to provide tuition assistance and is currently trying to make that possible.

The main challenge now is keeping momentum and keeping the faculty excited and involved, she said.

"We want to move on aggressively and disarm" Aidid's forces, Kofi Annan, the U.N. undersecretary-general for peacekeeping operations said in New York after the second attack began.

Although tons of ammunition, tanks, artillery pieces and other military hardware were captured, U.N. officials acknowledged Aidid may have plenty more hidden away.

A witness said Pakistani soldiers appeared to open fire Sunday without provocation on a crowd of thousands of Aidid supporters at a traffic circle.

"These people were running, they were densely packed," said Toronto Star reporter Paul Watson. "I do not recall hearing a shot before the Pakistanis opened fire. They fired hundreds of rounds."

Among those killed were a 12-year-old boy and a 2-year-old boy who was hit in the abdomen a half-mile from the protest. Officials at Digfer Hospital showed reporters seven bodies and said they had several more, but relatives refused to give the reporters access.

Later counts raised the death toll to at least 14.

Three bullets hit the side of a hotel across from the traffic circle. One of the bullets punched a hole in the hotel wall, narrowly missing an Associated Press reporter.

Aidid condemned U.N. and American forces on Sunday for the killings.

"Students are citizens here just like everybody else, and they should be active in our community," Pigott said.

Candidate Kathy Moyers also welcomed the students to vote, but added that she wasn't expecting them to sway the election.

"I would encourage students to participate in the community, but it has been my experience that students do not vote in large numbers, even in their own student elections," Moyers said.

Slockett, not currently running for office, stated his support for students' participation in Iowa City politics more strongly.

U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Madeleine Albright said the Pakistani troops were apparently "defending themselves against armed attacks."

Shortly before dawn Sunday, dozens of rocket-propelled grenades were fired at Pakistani troops in another area of the city. The assailants were apparently Somalis.

With some 4,700 men, Pakistan has the largest U.N. contingent in Somalia. The Pakistanis are in charge of patrolling Mogadishu, Somalia's capital of 1 million people.

The U.N. currently has more than 18,000 soldiers in Somalia, including 4,000 Americans.

PLANS TO LIBERATE CAMBODIA

Party leader prepares for war

Sheila McNulty
The Associated Press

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — The leader of Cambodia's newly elected governing party ordered his soldiers Sunday to prepare for war with secessionist troops in eastern Cambodia.

Violence was reported in the secessionist region, which was declared autonomous Saturday by renegade soldiers of the outgoing government who refuse to accept the ruling party's loss in elections last month.

"We are ready to set up our own forces to fight and liberate that part of Cambodia," Prince Norodom Ranariddh of the newly elected FUNCINPEC party told journalists. "We are not going to accept any partition of Cambodia. Cambodia is small enough."

The secessionist movement is led by Ranariddh's half-brother, Prince Norodom Chakrapong, a senior official of the Vietnamese-installed government that lost to FUNCINPEC in the U.N.-organized elections.

It is unclear how many soldiers Chakrapong has taken with him in the so-called "King Father Autonomous Zone" along the border of Vietnam and Laos. U.N. officials estimate FUNCINPEC's forces at 5,000.

A Cambodian government policeman orders a U.N. police car to turn back at a checkpoint in Kompong Chamlong, central Cambodia, on Sunday.

Chakrapong declared seven provinces autonomous on Saturday and barred U.N. peacekeepers and FUNCINPEC members from the region. He claimed the polling was fraught with irregularities and refused to honor the results, which have been recognized by the United Nations.

The ruling Cambodian People's Party also has contested the election results, but Prime Minister Hun Sen has rejected the autonomous zone and appealed for peace, according to his spokesman.

FUNCINPEC party members said Sunday that rebel soldiers had shot other party loyalists, burned down party offices and forced more than 1,000 party members to flee to Phnom Penh from the seven provinces.

Phillies keep Mets' Young on the skids

Associated Press
NEW YORK — Anthony Young isn't the type to get mad and kick things out of frustration. That didn't work, anyway.

Young lost his 21st straight decision as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the New York Mets 5-3 Sunday for their first sweep of a four-game series at Shea Stadium in 13 years.

"I got mad at Montreal earlier this year and kicked something I thought was made of tin," Young said. "It turned out to be some sort of brick and I hurt my foot. I just don't react that way."

It's been that kind of season for Young (0-7) and nothing seems to help. He's tried lucky charms, long talks and even a prayer or two.

The major-league record for consecutive losses is 23 by Cliff Curtis of the Boston Braves, from June 13, 1910 through May 22, 1911. Young already holds the club record.

The Phillies have won five in a row and 11 of 13 games. Philadelphia (44-17) now leads the last-place Mets (19-41) by 24½ games in the NL East.

Associated Press

Mets starter Anthony Young is consoled by catcher Todd Hundley after the right-hander gave up two runs in the third in a 5-3 loss to the Phillies Sunday at Shea. It was Young's 21st consecutive loss.

(5-1), a Cuban defector, gave up two runs on six hits in six innings. Martinez allowed five hits and a walk while striking out four in 7½ innings to win his fourth straight decision. John Wetteland pitched the ninth for his 12th save, striking out Ozzie Smith and getting Gerald Perry to bounce out with the bases loaded.

Rockies 9, Astros 1
DENVER — The Colorado Rockies swept a series for the first time in a franchise-record third straight victory, beating the Houston Astros behind Andres Galarraga, Dante Bichette and Bruce Rufin.

Galarraga hit a two-run homer and drove in three runs, Bichette had four more hits and Rufin (3-2) held the Astros to five hits through 6½ innings after opening with five straight strikeouts. The victory was the fifth for Colorado this season in six games against Houston.

With a crowd of 60,349, the Rockies eclipsed the previous attendance record for an expansion club in a season. In 30 home dates, the Rockies have drawn 1,719,566.

Expos 3, Cardinals 1
ST. LOUIS — Dennis Martinez pitched well, and the Montreal Expos handed Rene Arocha his first major-league loss while averting a four-game sweep by the St. Louis Cardinals.

The win was the 199th for Martinez (6-5), who worked eight innings to send St. Louis to only its second loss in seven games. Arocha

Colorado got to Greg Swindell (5-6) for four straight hits in the first inning, including Galarraga's ninth homer, a 424-footer to left field.

Dodgers 2, Padres 1
SAN DIEGO — Orel Hershiser pitched 8½ innings as the Los Angeles Dodgers — perhaps helped by a Morgana look-alike who visited pitcher Greg Harris — beat the San Diego Padres.

Rookie Mike Piazza had a double and single to help the Dodgers split the four-game series. Included was an RBI hit in the first inning after Harris got consultation from the buxom blonde.

Harris (6-7) sustained just his second loss in his last seven decisions, both to Los Angeles. He gave up two runs and nine hits in seven innings.

The Dodgers staked Hershiser (6-4) to a 2-0 lead by the second, and he ended a string of three no-decisions. He allowed eight hits, struck out six and walked three.

Jim Gott, who came in with a 3-1 count on Kurt Stillwell and finished Hershiser's walk to load the bases with two out in the ninth, picked up his 10th save by getting Tim Lincecum to ground out.

Giants 5, Cubs 3
SAN FRANCISCO — John Burkett became the NL's first nine-game winner and Barry Bonds hit his 17th home run, giving San Francisco a three-game sweep.

Burkett (9-2) allowed three runs in the fourth, but blanked the Cubs over the next four innings. He allowed seven hits in eight innings, struck out six and walked none. Rod Beck pitched the ninth for his 19th save.

Morgan (4-8) gave up all of the Giants runs on 11 hits in seven innings.

Marlins 5, Pirates 2
MIAMI — Pinch-hitter Rich Renteria's two-run triple in the seventh inning led the stunning Florida Marlins to their first sweep of a four-game series.

The victory — their fourth straight and eighth in nine games — gave the Marlins sole possession of fourth place in the NL East.

Ryan Bowen (4-6) got the win. Bryan Harvey struck out the last two batters for his 19th save.

With fans chanting: "Sweep, Sweep!" the Marlins swept a home series for the first time. They swept the Padres in three games at San Diego a week ago.

The Pirates have lost seven of eight games. Bowen allowed nine hits in seven innings, walked none and struck out four.

Maybank 1993 Iowa Athlete of the Year

Anthuan Maybank, a junior from Georgetown, S.C., was named the 1993 Iowa Athlete of the Year June 9. The honor qualifies him for the Big Ten-Jesse Owens Male Athlete of the Year, which will be announced Thursday.

Maybank, who was named the 1993 Big Ten Track & Field Athlete of the Year, earned all-America honors this season in the 400-meters and long jump. He is the only athlete in NCAA history to earn all-America honors in both events. He also won Big Ten titles in the long jump (25-feet, 9 1/2 inches) and 400 (45.91) and placed third in the 200-meters (20.87).

At the Drake Relays last April, Maybank became the only athlete in Track & Field history to long jump over 27 feet and run the 400-meters in under 45 seconds.

Whitaker earns Iowa's Medal of Honor

Matt Whitaker, a four-time Big Ten all-Academic selection as a tight end for the football team, has been named Iowa's 1993 Medal of Honor winner. The award, endowed in 1914, is given annually to the student demonstrating proficiency in scholarship and athletics at each Big Ten school.

Whitaker, a native of Ankeny, earned his BA in communications in three years with a 3.54 grade-point average. He is currently enrolled in law school. He caught 21 passes for 203 yards as a Hawkeye.

Iowa softball loses in NCAA Tournament

The Iowa softball team lost two games in NCAA regional action in Tallahassee, Fla., on May 22 to be bounced from the double-elimination tournament. The No. 10-ranked Hawkeyes were defeated 3-1 by No. 12 Kansas before losing to No. 5 Florida State 5-3 in 15 innings.

In the Florida State matchup, senior shortstop Jenny Roe tied former Hawkeye all-American Diane Pohl (1990-92) in career hits with 207. Junior Karen Jackson (25-12) had a career-high 15 strikeouts in the loss against the Seminoles.

The Hawkeyes finished the season at 39-15.

Hawkeye women take 8th at Big Ten meet

The Iowa women's track team scored 49 points to place eighth at the Big Ten Conference track meet May 22-23 in East Lansing, Mich.

Hawkeyes Lisa VanSteenwyk and Denise Taylor took the top two spots in the shot put competition. VanSteenwyk, a senior from Inwood, Iowa, claimed her second straight Big Ten crown with a throw of 47'1/2". Taylor, a senior from the Bahamas, repeated as runner-up with a toss of 47'3/4".

Michigan finished first at the meet with 150 1/2 points, followed by Illinois (123) and Wisconsin (80).

Iowa women's hoops staff holding camp

The Hawkeye women's basketball staff will hold its annual basketball camp June 14-17 and June 21-24 for kids age 10-18. Former Hawkeye all-American and current Harlem Globetrotter Jolette Law will be the guest speaker and performer June 14 at 10:30 a.m.

A camper all-star game will be played June 16 and 23 at 6:45 in Carver Hawkeye Arena. All camp sessions will be held in the South Gym of the Field House.

Iowa strength coach leaves

Ray Moran, Iowa's strength and conditioning coach, will be leaving the University at the end of June. Moran spent five years at Iowa and was instrumental in converting the Hawkeyes' weight program from weight machines to free weights.

Moran plans to stay in Iowa City to pursue business interests.

Millard rates as No. 1 Prime Time pick

By Curtis Riggs
The Daily Iowan

Russ Millard was the first player taken in Sunday's Iowa City Prime Time Basketball League draft. Millard, a 6-foot-8 power forward from Cedar Rapids, was chosen by Fitzpatrick's Brew Pub. He will be a junior at Iowa in the fall.

Former Hawkeye forward Wade Lookingbill was drafted second by the Hills Bank team.

League play begins Wednesday at City High's new gym when Fitzzy's takes on Hills Bank at 6 p.m. Games will be held Sundays, Wednesdays and every other Friday with the first game starting at 6 p.m. followed by two 7:30 p.m. contests.

"The draft is the single most important factor in the success of our league," said Prime Time Commissioner Randy Larson. The draft for the six-team league went 12 rounds.

Milwaukee Bucks forward Brad Lohaus was chosen with the third pick overall by Team Nike's player-coach Larson. Former Hawkeye center Jay Webb was the first-round choice of Imprinted Sportswear and Goodfellow Printing, which picked fourth.

Jess Settles, an incoming Iowa freshman from Winfield-Mount Union, will play for First National Bank after being chosen fifth overall. Iowa junior guard Jim Bartels was taken by the U of I Credit Union team with the final first-round choice.

Fitzzy's also drafted former Iowa center Acie Earl, as well as former Hawkeye Phil Chime, who will play for Southwest Louisiana next year. Chris Kingsbury, another incoming Iowa freshman, will also play for Fitzzy's.

Les Jepsen, who played for Golden State and Sacramento in the NBA after being drafted out of Iowa in 1990, was chosen with the second pick of the Hills Bank team, which is headed by player-coach Bart Casey. Jepsen is now with Rockford in the Continental Basketball Association. Hills took Iowa guard Kevin Smith with its third pick and incoming Iowa junior college transfer John Carter and Paul Doerrfeld, a former Iowa State standout, with Nos. 4 and 5, respectively.

Ex-Iowa point guard Troy Skinner will play for Team Nike, along with former Hawkeye Big Ten rebound leader Clay Hargrave.

Imprinted Sportswear and Goodfellow Printing drafted former Iowa forward Brig Tubbs in the third round.

Greg Stokes, the No. 2 leading scorer in Iowa basketball history, will take the court for the First National squad, as will Hawkeye Kevin Skillet.

Former Iowa guard Val Barnes was drafted in the second round by U of I Credit Union, where he will be joined by former Iowa football player Dwight Sistrunk.

Chris Street was the first player chosen in the Prime Time draft last year. First National Bank won the title, with Fitzzy's taking the end-of-season tournament.

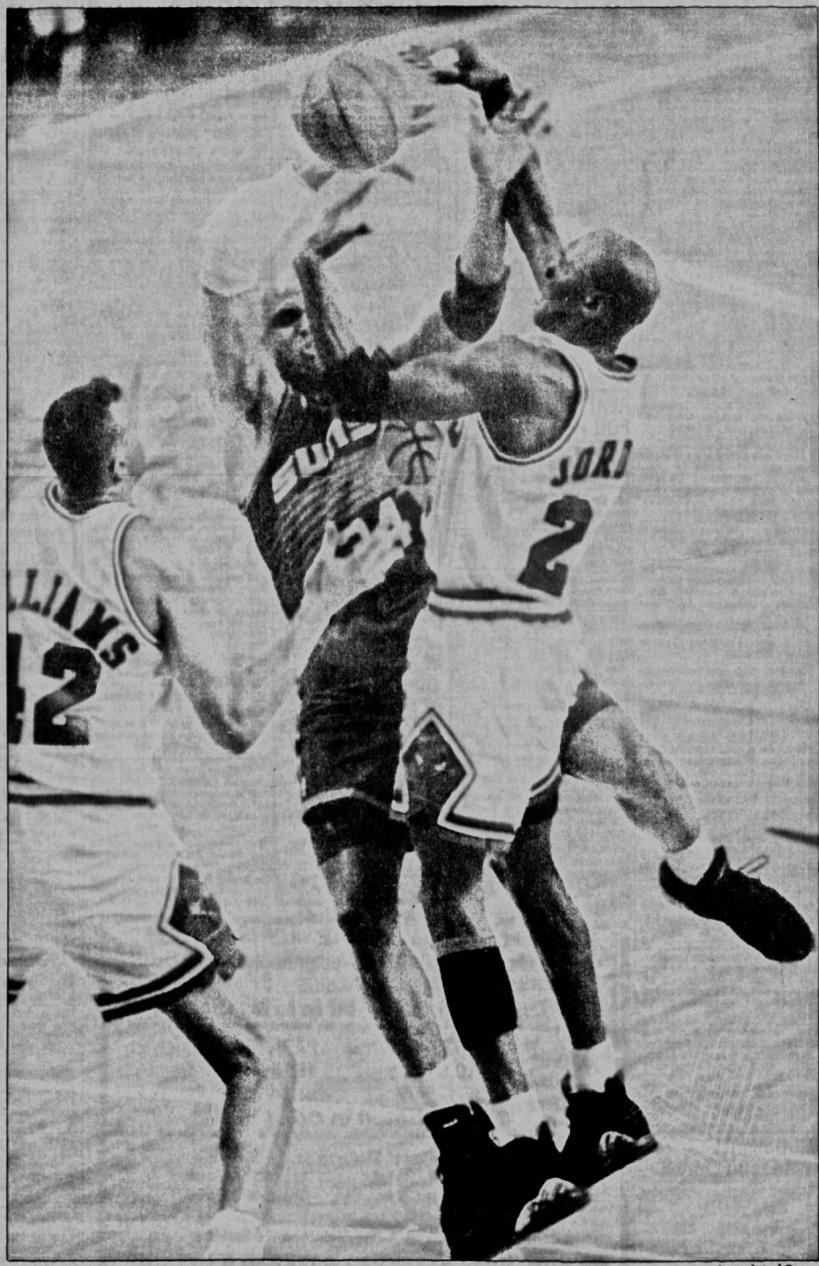

Larson said that the league is in dire need of scorekeepers. Anyone interested should call him at 354-1712.

Chicago's Michael Jordan (right) and Phoenix's Charles Barkley battle for a loose rebound in the third quarter of the Suns' 129-121 win in Game 3 of the NBA Finals Sunday at Chicago Stadium. Game 4 is Wednesday at 8 p.m.

Suns rise to the occasion

Stop Bulls in triple overtime

By Bill Barnard
Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Phoenix Suns, with Charles Barkley's right elbow all but tied behind his back, Sunday night reversed a 1976 triple-overtime defeat and returned to contention in the NBA Finals.

The Suns, who lost that 1976 game to the Boston Celtics, battled back from long odds to hand the Chicago Bulls their first playoff loss at home this season — 129-121 in three extra periods.

Barkley was hampered by a swollen elbow that was heavily bandaged and had to be drained just before gametime. But he still managed to get 24 points and 19 rebounds. And unlike their embarrassing losses at home in the first two games, the Suns gave Barkley plenty of support in the victory that left the Bulls with a 2-1 lead in the best-of-7 series.

Kevin Johnson bounced back from an abysmal opening two games to score 25 points in 62 minutes, while Dan Majerle had 28 and Richard Dumas 17. Michael Jordan scored 44 points for the Bulls, who took only nine free throws in the 63-minute game. Scottie Pippen scored 26 points for Chicago, still two wins away from its third consecutive title.

Majerle's sixth 3-pointer of the game, with 3:03 left in the third overtime, tied the finals record and gave the Suns their first lead since the fourth quarter, 119-118, and Barkley followed with a breakaway dunk with 2:39 left.

Barkley then stole a pass under the Bulls basket from Stacey King and scored again with 1:43 left, and the Suns went on to outscore the Bulls 15-7 in the climactic third overtime. The only other three-overtime game in the finals was June 4, 1976, when Phoenix lost to Boston 128-126 and went on to lose the series 4-2.

Scott Williams' only points of the game and a basket by Jordan gave Chicago a 111-107 edge with 2:03 left in the second overtime before Majerle followed his own miss for the Suns' third basket in 14 minutes.

Jordan, who missed eight of nine shots in one stretch, hit his second straight for a 113-109 lead with 1:18 remaining, then exchanged free throws with Barkley for a 114-110 edge with 40 seconds to go. But baskets by Barkley and Majerle, the latter with 3.2 seconds left, meant a third OT.

Phoenix, held to two points since there was 6:20 left in the fourth quarter, tied the score on two free throws by Barkley with 1:43 left in overtime.

Johnson, held to a total of 15 points and eight assists with nine turnovers in the first two games, came out strong in the fourth quarter, scoring seven points in the first 3:31 and helping Phoenix extend a one-point lead to 94-88 with 8:29 left.

Then Danny Ainge hit two free throws and a 3-pointer, giving the Suns a 99-88 advantage 52 seconds later.

Yankees use big inning twice to beat Brewers

By Rick Gano

MILWAUKEE — Bernie Williams drove in three runs and the New York Yankees put together back-to-back big innings in the second and third Sunday night to beat the Milwaukee Brewers 9-5.

Milwaukee took a 3-0 first-inning lead on an error by Dave Silvestri, an RBI single by Kevin Reimer and a two-run double by Tom Brunansky off Jimmy Key (7-2).

But Mike Boddicker (3-5), who lost his fourth straight decision, couldn't hold the lead. Silvestri had an RBI single and Williams a tying two-run single in the second after Boddicker hit Pat Kelly to load the bases.

Don Mattingly homered to start the third, giving the Yankees a 4-3 lead. Paul O'Neill then doubled, and Boddicker, who had a sprained left knee, was replaced by Angel Miranda. Dion James followed with an RBI double and Miranda walked three straight batters to force in a run. Williams' sacrifice fly made it 7-3.

Greg Vaughn hit an RBI double off Key in the fifth and homered in the ninth.

Milwaukee shortstop Dickie Thon reaches in vain for Yankees' 9-5 win Sunday night at County Stadium. Mike Boddicker (3-5) took the loss for the Brewers.
