Ginsburg nominated to court

Terence Hunt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton chose Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg for the Supreme Court on Monday, ending a long and torturous search by selecting a champion of women's rights who is expected to be a consensus builder on an often-divided court.

In a Rose Garden ceremony where he was moved to tears, Clinton praised the 60-year-old appeals-court jurist as "one of our nation's best judges, progressive in outlook, wise in judgment, balanced and fair in her opinions." It was a surprise decision.

Clinton had appeared poised to name federal appeals court judge Stephen Breyer of Boston. But Breyer's chances faded after the weekend disclosure that he had broken the law by failing to pay Social Security taxes for an elderly woman who cleaned his house.

Even earlier, Clinton had been leaning toward Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt, but environmentalists implored Clinton to keep him where he was.

Clinton said 40 candidates were considered and Breyer and Babbitt were among those who "could be outstanding nominees to the Supreme Court in the future."

After a three-month search, Clinton made a quick decision on Ginsburg after a 90-minute meeting Sunday. "Once I talked to her I felt very strongly about her," the president said.

With support from Democrats and Republicans alike, Ginsburg appeared likely to be confirmed easily by the Senate — no doubt a factor in her selection by a president plagued by a string of embarrassing missteps.

A federal appeals judge in Washington since 1980, Ginsburg said her nomination to the Supreme Court would help end the days when women "appear in high places only as one-at-a-time performers."

If confirmed, she would join Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, who was the first woman ever named to the high court. Ginsburg would be the first Jewish justice since Abe Fortas resigned in 1969.

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole said Ginsburg was "a good choice" who "undoubtedly has the experience and the intellect to hit the ground running if confirmed."

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., chosen to guide the nomination through the Senate, predicted she would be confirmed "100 to zero. I can't imagine any problem."

Harriett Woods, president of the National Women's Political Caucus, said Ginsburg is fully versed in women's issues. "She's rooted in a way that I think will be good for the court," she said.

Ginsburg supports a woman's right to have an abortion, White House officials said, although she has written that the 1973 decision legalizing abortion "prolonged divisiveness and deferred stable settlement of that issue."

Ginsburg was chosen to succeed Justice Byron White, who announced three months ago that he was retiring when the current court session ends. It meant the first opportunity in 25 years for a Democratic president to make a Supreme Court nomination.

UI pundits praise Clinton appointee

Maria Hickey
The Daily Iowan

President Clinton's appointment of Ruth Bader Ginsburg to the Supreme Court Monday afternoon received positive reactions from several UI professors.

"Unquestionably, she is highly qualified," said Martha Chamallas, UI Professor of Law. Chamallas called Ginsburg the "architect of modern sex-discrimination law."

Ginsburg, who has been involved with women's issues throughout her career, is the second woman ever to be named to the Supreme Court. Clinton chose Ginsburg to replace Justice Byron White over Boston Federal Appeals Judge Stephen Breyer and Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt.

"Unlike other members of the court, she made her career a large part for fighting for women's rights," Chamallas said.

Chamallas was a little surprised that Ginsburg, who is 60, was appointed, due to her age and because she was less visible in the press. However, she said, Ginsburg is well-known among those who deal with women in the law.

Ginsburg graduated from Columbia Law School in 1959 and became

UI libraries announce summer hours

The UI library system will maintain summer hours through Friday, August 6. The Main Library will be open during the following hours:

- 7:30 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday
- 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Friday
- 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday
- 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday

The north entrance will be closed on weekends. Most library services will be closed July 4 and 5.

Departmental libraries will also run on a summer schedule. Users should consult individual libraries for specific hours of operation during this period.

UI names new health protection director

James Walker will take over as director of the UI Health Protection Office on July 1, UI Vice President for Research David Skorton announced Monday.

Walker has been with the HPO since 1982 and has served as acting director since 1991. He has also worked as an industrial hygienist in the HPO and as chief of the Bureau of Environmental Quality and Control in the UI Hygienic Laboratory.

The HPO develops and directs a comprehensive health and safety program within the UI. Walker will earn $70,000 a year.

HIV-infected Haitians begin airlift to United States

MIAMI (AP) — Twelve-year-old James Dieudonne is eager to go to school. He has just spent 14 months in a place where he had nothing to do, a squalid U.S. detention center in Cuba criticized as "an HIV prison camp."

On Monday, he was one of 27 Haitian political refugees, including six children, who flew to freedom as the camp at Guantanamo Bay Naval Base began shutting down. Most of the adults carry HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

James, speaking before he boarded the Air Force C-130 that carried the first group of refugees to Miami, said he wants to go to school now.

13 others still at Guantanamo will be flown to the United States over the next 10 days, federal officials said.

LAWSUIT FILED

Justices to review use of RICO Act

Richard Carelli
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court will decide whether a federal law aimed primarily at battling the Mafia may be used to sue protesters who block women's access to abortion clinics.

The court said Monday it has voted to review a ruling that spared Operation Rescue and other anti-abortion groups from being sued by abortion clinic operators under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO).

A decision is expected sometime in 1994.

Arguments will be heard in the case this fall and Ruth Bader Ginsburg, nominated to the court by President Clinton on Friday, will take part if the Senate confirms her by that time.

As its 1992-93 term wound down to its final few weeks, the court also took these actions:

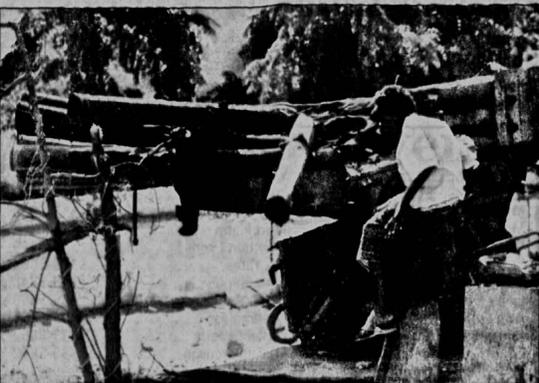

• Revived a challenge to a Jacksonville, Fla., affirmative action program attacked for allegedly violating the rights of companies owned by white men.

The 7-2 ruling left federal courts open to some who wish to challenge government programs, a result urged by various civil rights groups even though they supported the challenged Jacksonville program.

• Spared trustees of health benefit and pension plans serving millions of American workers from having to transfer some money to new funds whenever employers withdraw and set up new funds.

• Barred, by a 7-2 vote, the Cheyenne River Sioux from regulating hunting and fishing by non-Indians at Lake Oahe on the tribe's reservation in South Dakota.

MOGADISHU, Somalia — An American Cobra helicopter enforcing a U.N. crackdown on a Somali warlord fired a missile into a residential area Monday, striking the rusting hulk of a rocket-launcher and wounding 12 Somalis.

It was the first daytime raid after three straight nights of deadly attacks by U.N.-led forces avenging the June 5 deaths of 23 Pakistani troops in battles with Somali gunmen.

Meanwhile, a U.N. special envoy said an independent investigation was ordered into the shooting deaths Sunday of 14 Somali civilians by Pakistani soldiers.

The target of the U.N. attacks, warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid, accused the United Nations of "totalitarian motivations" and repeated demands for the Security Council to convene a special session on the crisis.

But a senior Pentagon official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said intermittent strikes against Aidid's forces will continue.

The violence is the worst since foreign troops arrived in Somalia on Dec. 9 in what was to be a mission dedicated to protecting famine relief supplies.

On Monday morning, two explosions rocked Mogadishu, and Cobras circled over the neighborhood where the BM21 122mm weapon sat behind the walls of a compound. Hundreds of Somalis, gathered in a nearby square to protest Sunday's shootings, shook their fists angrily at the helicopters.

"Clinton down! Clinton down!" they shouted, accusing the American president of orchestrating the U.N. attacks.

"We shall overcome America. We shall never be defeated by America," said protester Yousef Salat.

UI prof. smacks homer with disability cards

Tom Wanat
The Daily Iowan

Names like Babe Ruth, Johnny Evers, Red Ruffing and Three-fingers Brown conjure up memories of baseball greats — men worthy not only of the timelessness offered by baseball cards, but even the Baseball Hall of Fame.

"Beating the Odds," a new line of baseball cards, features these and other great players who overcame physical and mental disabilities to become not just ordinary, but extraordinary. UI law professor and co-pioneer of the new series Peter Blanck hopes that baseball cards will provide just the right medium for dispelling society's prejudice towards people with disabilities.

"I think it's safe to say that I'm the first law professor in history to appear on a baseball card," Blanck said, grinning like a fan at the World Series.

Although Blanck won't have his picture on any of the cards, he did write the back of the "Beating the Odds" commemorative card that describes what the series is all about.

"Basically, it's about communicating positive information about people who have excelled, regardless of whether or not they have a disability."

Blanck said he thinks baseball cards are a fitting place for people to learn about the equalities of people with disabilities and that the Americans with Disabilities Act itself is a good means of "evening the playing field" for the disabled.

"The ADA isn't an affirmative-action statute, but rather it gives everybody a turn at bat," Blanck said. "But once you're up at the plate, to follow through with the analogy, it's up to you whether you hit or not."

Blanck, who personally lost a family member with a disability, has managed to hit a home run with his career and convictions for the still fledgling ADA.

Besides being a UI law professor, he is a Fellow of the Annenberg Washington Program, President of the American Association on Mental Retardation's Legal Process and Advocacy Division, and is a major player in the fight for disabled persons' rights.

"For personal and professional reasons, I've gotten very involved with disability rights and disability advocacy," Blanck said. "The ADA

David Greedy/The Daily Iowan

UI law Professor Peter Blanck's baseball cards portraying players with disabilities have proved to be a solid hit.

is the most comprehensive federal legislation protecting the rights of persons with disabilities.

"It's an anti-discrimination law," he said, adding that so far the biggest problem that the ADA has faced is its perception.

"One of the biggest problems is that people think this law would be a bureaucratic nightmare, involving a lot of red tape and a lot of litigation," Blanck said. "It just hasn't gotten a good spin. Positive information hasn't been communicated well."

Blanck got his big chance to provide some of that positive communication during a business trip.

"I was on a plane one time on my way back from Denver when I happened to sit down next to the vice president of Megacards Inc.," Blanck said. "He told me that they have the rights to the Conlon collection, a famous pre-WWII baseball photographer. Through this collection they've highlighted subsets of people who made it."

Great spitballers who were caught, Native Americans and games of the century are some of the subsets that have been featured from the more than 8,000 black-and-white negatives taken by Charles Martin Conlon, which Megacards Inc. of Fairfield, Iowa, produces in their Sporting News Conlon Collection.

Blanck said that he immediately suggested they do a set on baseball players who have overcome physical and mental disabilities to play in the majors.

Eight months and some copy editing later, "Beating the Odds" went into production. But don't go looking for "Beating the Odds" packs at stores. Like the players themselves, they are included in the larger set as part of the teams.

"We're also going to print about 10,000 packs of 'Beating the Odds' cards to distribute free to kids, adults, people with disabilities and people without disabilities," Blanck said. "At the end of the day, what will be more important to change attitudes will be grassroots understanding rather than a court order."

Ped Mall performer: he's got a name

Dave Strahan
The Daily Iowan

A barefoot girl walked over to the giant playing guitar and stared him down for a moment. She took a crumpled dollar from behind her back, placed it in his open guitar case and sprinted back to where her dad was waiting. Bill Mazzina laughed, nodded, and continued his song. "Like the singing bird and the croaking toad, I got a name, I got a name."

Street musicians don't typically create much of a stir in Iowa City. Sure, they add to the liberal atmosphere downtown, but most people linger briefly, tap their feet a couple of times, and go on with what they are doing. This wasn't the case last Friday.

Maybe it was the fabulous weather — it was the first sunny day in a long time. Perhaps pedestrians found Mazzina's clear "Neil Young" or "Bob Dylan" voice appealing. Or maybe people simply enjoy songs like "Fire and Rain," "The Water is Wide" and "Sugar Mountain."

Whatever the reason, the tall, long-haired man with John Lennon glasses certainly attracted his share of attention. Children wearing Burger King crowns danced with each other, college-aged kids sang the songs they knew, and one older man held his dollar sheepishly until he finally mustered the gumption to stand up and drop it in the guitar case.

"Thank you," Mazzina piped up with each donation. Since he's a self-proclaimed traveling street entertainer, the money is important. Donations brought him to Iowa City from Madison, and Friday's donations have likely taken him to St. Louis. Nevertheless, money isn't the sole reason Mazzina was here.

"Friendliness is the name of the game," he explained. "For me, performing is as much a social and spiritual endeavor as it is a financial thing. You try to spread beauty and [he smirks] noble words."

Although he plays all kinds of songs, including some originals, most of Mazzina's noble words come from folk musicians.

"I write songs, but the more familiar the song, the better. It doesn't really matter what style, just if it's a well-known song. Folk is my favorite," Mazzina said. "Folk is the root of my music."

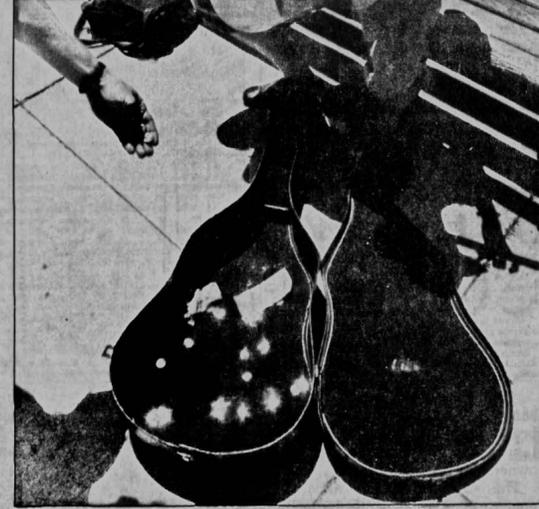

Still, Mazzina admitted that all types of music have a magical quality. "It really depends on the crowd, the time and the place," he said. "There's something for everybody — you can never tell what's going to be the right song, you just kind of sense it."

Mazzina's song-selecting senses were accurate, to say the least. Even "Paradise," a somewhat obscure folk song by Jim Ringer, appealed to a serious-looking older man who was trudging by. When he heard the song, the man stopped and wistfully began singing along.

"Daddy won't you take me back to Mueleburg County, down by the Green River where paradise lay? I'm sorry my son, but you're too late in asking. Mr. Peabody's coal train has hauled it away."

Then the man walked away grinning. Score one for friendliness.

Score one again when a lady from the "Chicago Grill" hot dog stand approached Mazzina and told him how much she liked his performance. A conversation ensued. "Where are you from, then?" the woman finally asked.

"From there," Mazzina answered, pointing to a water main plug that was forged in Fresno, Calif.

After several hours of playing, Mazzina collected the money out of his guitar case, packed his instrument, and quietly left. A man who'd been listening and jingling change in his hands suddenly realized his chance was over. He gave the money to his son instead, and they left hand in hand.

As the rock/blues band High and Lonesome was setting up for their evening concert, the Pedestrian Mall was almost quiet. Mazzina had passed through, but a little music remained, because someone was humming the song Mazzina had ended with.

"Good night, America, how are you. Don't you know me? I'm your native son... I'm the train they call the city of New Orleans. I'll be gone 500 miles when the day is done..."

Regents to hold public forum

Lesley Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa state Board of Regents oversees three public universities and two special schools for the blind and deaf. It deals with billion-dollar budgets and important government and educational issues, yet many in the university community are unsure of what the regents do.

To help enhance the public's knowledge of the board, an informal meeting will be held Wednesday from 8 to 9 a.m. in the North Room of the Union.

Last month, Board of Regents President Marvin Berenstein proposed a new effort to provide the public with a better understanding of the regents and their decision-making process.

"The communication initiative, called 'Meet the Regents,' allows the regents to be available for informal discussions and questions from students, faculty, university staff and the general public.

"It's an opportunity for these people to talk to regents on an informal basis, so that we can get to know each other just a little bit better," Berenstein said.

Regent Elizabeth Hendricks said the program promotes an opportunity for people to find out exactly what the regents do.

"It will serve as an informational tool for some regents to talk on an informal basis with people interested in visiting with them," Hendricks said.

"Meet the Regents" will provide both the university community and the Board of Regents a chance to voice their concerns and suggestions, Regent Thomas Dorr said.

"It should allow for groups or individuals to bring forward issues that may have a great impact on them in an informal setting," he said.

Dorr said, however, that the meeting may not be the best place to learn about the roles and functions of the regents.

"If people want to know what the regents' functions are, they need to take some personal responsibility and find out for themselves," he said.

Berenstein said he wants to have similar informal meetings with the public and university communities when the regents are at the University of Northern Iowa next month and at Iowa State University in September.

UI anthropologist wins MacArthur fellowship

Greg Smith
Associated Press

IOWA CITY — A UI anthropology professor said Monday a $285,000 fellowship award from the MacArthur Foundation should allow her to continue researching Mayan linguistics without fretting about funding.

"With this kind of award, we're thinking maybe we can plan a longer-term project now. We might get outside money and we might not, but now I can kind of guarantee that the people I work with will have some kind of support for the next five years," Nora England said in a telephone interview from Antigua, Guatemala.

England, 46, was among 33 winners of the so-called "genius grants" from the MacArthur Foundation. The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation is one of the largest private philanthropic foundations in the country and makes grants in a broad range of areas, including health, environment, individual creativity and education.

England is working to develop an identity among the more than four million Mayans in Guatemala by helping to write dictionaries, grammar textbooks for schools and other materials in the indigenous language that is virtually ignored by the Ladino Spanish colonial government.

There are more than 20 different Mayan languages in Guatemala, England said, and it's difficult for this segment of the population to participate in government and education.

"The languages are not dead, but they're considered to have no value by the government. They are not in any way official and are not promoted. It's hard for the people who don't speak Spanish, and there are speakers of these languages who don't speak Spanish," England said.

England is chairwoman of the UI anthropology department and has been in Iowa City since 1977. She has visited Guatemala for more than 20 years and was in Antigua when she found out she had won the prestigious fellowship award.

"I was totally surprised and breathless. And shocked," England said.

The national award is designed to aid scholars in continuing important research. To win the five-year grant, individuals must be nominated by a group of more than 100 designated nominators from a wide range of professions and areas of the country before being chosen by the Foundation.

6 found dead in Norwalk, Iowa shooting

The names of the victims have not been released.

Tom Seery
Associated Press

NORWALK, Iowa — Six people, including several children, were found shot to death in a house in a quiet, middle-class neighborhood near Des Moines on Monday. Another person in the house was hospitalized with undisclosed injuries.

Medical examiner Francis Garrity said all six apparently died of gunshot wounds. He estimated they had died in the past 24 hours. Garrity said he didn't know the ages of the victims and wouldn't say whether they were males or females.

Garrity said the bodies were found in the bedrooms of the house. The seventh person was taken to a Des Moines hospital.

"I don't know his identity. I was told it was an adult male," Garrity said.

The Iowa Division of Criminal Investigation said the dead found in the home of Rick and Jolene Forsyth ranged in age from small children to adults.

Officers said that three of those in the house were believed to be children of the Forsyths.

Larry Christensen, 32, next-door-neighbor to the Forsyths, said the Forsyths had been having marital troubles since their young son was killed in a freak accident a few years ago.

"It just seems as though they've had a lot of problems since then — family disputes." He said he'd never heard them arguing or seen any fighting, but that "we'd see law enforcement show up" at the house.

He said he and the other neighbors were stunned. "This is a quiet, middle-class neighborhood," he said.

Court records show Rick Forsyth was arrested on May 25, 1991 for domestic abuse and was placed on probation.

On Sept. 5, 1992, he was charged with violating a no-contact order. On April 27, he was charged with harassing his wife. That charge was pending. Court officers also said a divorce was pending.

"I opened the door, saw the sheriff's car in the driveway and the police chief's car in front of the house. I walked out and there were two marked cars. Now they've got the area roped off. Just about everybody's sitting outside wondering what went on. ... It's crazy. It's absolutely insane," Christensen said.

He said he was friends with the Forsyths. "We chatted ... things like that. Not real buddy-buddy."

The bodies were found about 1 p.m.

Neighbors said the couple had three children: Brian, 18; Jessica, 11 and Nikki, 16. Another son, Eric, was killed in a skateboard-bicycle accident a short distance from the home about three years ago.

"They were going through a divorce. You would see Rick with Jessica in the car and they would circle the block. Then they would park down the street from the house," said Ronda Ostrander, a neighbor, who said Rick was under a court restraining order.

"He wasn't supposed to go near the house."

Ostrander said the Forsyths had lived in the home for more than five years and Jolene Forsyth would babysit nieces and nephews.

Kim O'Conner, who watched the scene from across the street, said the Forsyths were to start babysitting her children next week.

"Thank God my kids weren't there," she sobbed.

MOVIE REVIEW

Spielberg redeemed with 'Jurassic Park'

Ian Corwin
The Daily Iowan

Stevie is back, and he's in top form. The worrying really started for me when I saw 1985's "The Color Purple" and realized that His Eternal Childishness had bitten off a great deal more than his kid-size mouth could chew. "Empire of the Sun" was released two years later, further crushing my hopes that the Prince of Fantasy would go back to what he does best and stay there.

Steven Spielberg has made a handful of films that stand alone as watermarks of personal vision in the Hollywood of the '70s and early '80s. His talent is in his ability to spot that which will entertain, engross, and charm his audience. He has a knack for inflating even the vilest source material into one helluva show. Take 1975's "Jaws," for instance. Peter Benchley's book is a step above pulp trash, with more emphasis on the characters' seedy love affairs than on the awesome struggle between three men and a seemingly unstoppable force of nature. Spielberg emphasized the right parts of the story, built up some amazing characters, hired versatile actors, and the rest is inscribed on the arches of Box Office Receipt Heaven.

Then that bug called ambition bit him, and he got pretentious. How could a guy who made a charming and engrossing modern fairy tale like "E.T." suddenly spiral down into a string of half-assed efforts like "Always" and "Hook"? The last couple of years, my faith in the fresh and precocious Spielberg has definitely hit the skids.

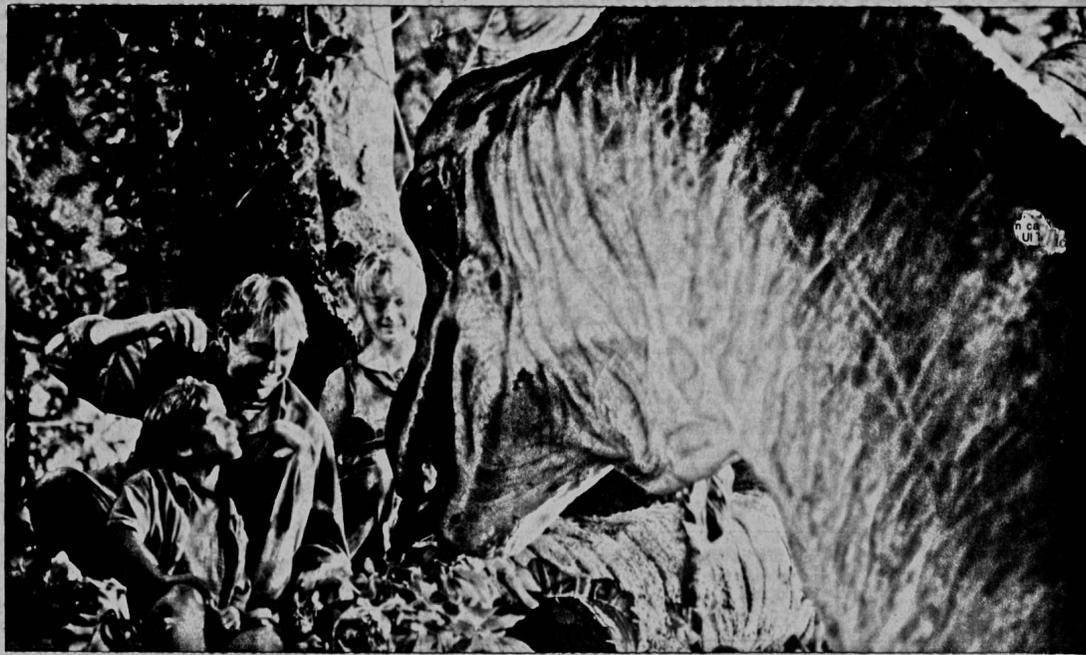

And now there's "Jurassic Park." I consider this film an apology to me for having to sit through "Always" more than once.

This time, Steven doesn't have to elevate his source material. Michael Crichton's novel of the same name is a work of meticulously researched genius about an eccentric millionaire who has spent his entire fortune trying to clone dinosaurs from fossilized mosquito blood. When he finally succeeds, he constructs the lush stomping ground of Jurassic Park to hold the dinosaurs and show them to the world. He doesn't bank on several contingencies, and all hell breaks loose, if you'll forgive the bad joke.

Spielberg made a wise choice in not altering Crichton's storyline too much while transferring it from print to the big screen. The book itself reads like a roller coaster ride, and the film is quite possibly the best of its genre to be released since 1986's "Aliens." Seriously. As a thriller, this mother packs a wallop. And as a special effects extravaganza ... well, I'm sure I don't need to further the rumors you may have heard. Suffice it to say, they're all true.

As compared with the novel, the film's strong suits are its casting and its furtherance of the book's redefining of our ideas about what dinosaurs were really like.

Interesting performances come from all angles in this one. Jeff Goldblum's Ian Malcolm, a cynical genius who specializes in chaos theory, is a self-mocking reminder of his Seth Brundle character in 1986's "The Fly," complete with animated gesticulation and a mouth

Murray Close / Universal Pictures

Tim (Joseph Mazzello) and Lex (Ariana Richards) help Dr. Alan Grant feed a friendly Brachiosaurus from their perch high up in a tree in that seems incapable of keeping up with the speed of his thoughts. Sam Neill ("Dead Calm") gives life to Richard Grant, a paleontologist whose childlike fascination with dinosaurs undoubtedly reflects Spielberg's Richard Attenborough's eccentric millionaire is also worth mentioning, if only for his outrageous Scottish accent.

And don't be frightened away by the use of children in this one. Usually, when Spielberg gets his hands on cute kids, the vomit quotient goes through the roof. Not so. The storyline doesn't allow time or motivation for displays of warm fuzzies, quick, agile creatures with more intelligence than we have ever given them credit for. Sort of throws a new slant on a Tyrannosaurus Rex, don't it?

Which brings up an interesting point. "Jurassic Park"'s dinosaurs are not for kids. Spielberg chose the honest route that Crichton followed in depicting dinosaurs (especially the predators). The worst predators of all, the Velociraptors, are only man-sized, but a character mentions that they've been clocked to run faster than cheetahs and are probably smarter, as pack hunters go. Pretty terrifying stuff for a kid whose only exposure to prehistoric life-forms comes from Saturday morning TV.

So I'll forgive Stevie his little faux pas in the past. And I'll forgive some of the small mistakes he made in his version of "Jurassic" (only a couple - I was disappointed that most of Malcolm's chaos theory, a binding concept in the book, is explained away in a couple of sentences in the film). I'll forgive all of that. Because "Jurassic Park" is a return to form for a moviemaker that I've genuinely missed the last couple of years.

Reynolds flicks prove actor has more than bad toupee

Ian Corwin
The Daily Iowan

Oh, what an interim it has been, kids.

For those of you fortunate enough to have spent the last few weeks outside of the flood zone, let me give you the idyllic picture of how spring slips into summer in beautiful Iowa City.

It's supposed to be like this - milkweed floating on air thick enough to take a bite out of ... nights that are so warm you can move your bed under the window and lose 10 pounds of water-weight just by lying there. That's May moving into June, right?

Not in Iowa. The past month has been like taking a trip to Seattle in March. No sun, more rain than Noah ever had to deal with and temperatures that would make any Canadian proud.

But now it's warming up. The sun has decided to drag its lazy ass out of bed and shine on us for the last week or so, and hopefully that's wound up the summer spirit in everyone, provided you don't feel like a slug who's been trapped under a rock and now has nowhere to run to find the solace of a damp, dark hole.

I fall somewhere in between the sun-worshiper mentality and the "children of the night" syndrome, so I find myself at a loss during this time of year. I just can't get into the hot, fast-paced swing that is the glorious season of summer.

So, as always, it's video to the rescue!

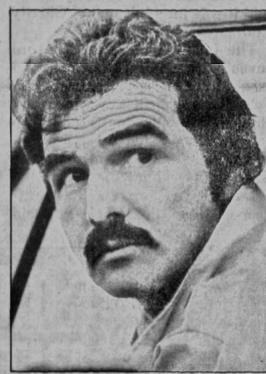

For every season there's a mood, and for every mood, there's a flick. I've got a couple of rental recommendations to get the Dog Days off to a rollicking start, but you have to take my word on these, as they require getting past a man that most people don't want to get past.

I speak of the quarter-back-turned-actor, husband to the multi-talented Loni Anderson. Yes, he of the Golden Toupee, Burt Reynolds. Now wait, before you get that look on your face ...

All right, so Burt hasn't had the most glorious career in Tinseltown. So he starred in blockbusters like "Cannonball Run" and "Stroker Ace" while seeming to have no regret or remorse about doing so. Like most people in Hollywood who have the misfortune of being labeled "Demographically Challenged," ole' Burt has made a couple of flicks that will appeal to intelligent viewers and fans of well-executed action pics. And there's a big surprise waiting in one of them.

Check out "The Longest Yard" (1974) and "Sharky's Machine" (1981). Both of them serve up a heapin' mound of action and dry humor, southern style, and you just might have a little more respect for the Burtster after you've seen them.

Burt Reynolds

"The Longest Yard" is a surprisingly unusual story about an NFL quarterback (Reynolds, of course) on his way down. He decides to take his lover's expensive car for a spin after an unpleasant argument and winds up in a high-speed chase that trashes the car and gets Burt a cool 20 years in prison.

But prison down south is more than just back-breaking labor. As you know, below that old Manson-Nixon line, they take their football real serious-like. The prison's warden (Eddie Albert, in a delightfully slimy role) sees an opportunity in Reynolds and starts up a prisoners' football team to play a scrimmage against the guards. Think you can envision the rest? Don't try.

Aside from Reynolds being in top form as a know-it-all antihero with a dry sense of humor, there are plenty of great performances. There's Albert of course, Richard Kiel (the James Bond villain "Jaws"), who puts in an appearance as a good-natured giant, and Ed Lauter as the captain of the guards and leader of the "goon" squad.

Directed by Robert Aldrich, "The Longest Yard" is a flick to rent and watch with a bunch of good friends. It may sound cheesy, but when the prisoners finally play the guards (in a scene with more vicious humor than the final hockey game in "Slapshot"), you'll all be rooting for Burt and the rest of his "Wrecking Crew."

Now the surprise. "Sharky's Machine" doesn't just star Burt Reynolds ... it was directed by our man Burt as well. Go figure that. The surprise is that he does a more than competent job. The film works not only as a great action flick, but also as a kind of film-noir for the 1980s.

The story unfolds in Atlanta, Ga. Reynolds is Sharky, your regular supercop who gets transferred from narcotics to vice because of someone else's screw-up. He and two other cops who "don't take crap" (Bernie Casey and Brian Keith in scene-stealing roles) stumble upon a web of corruption and prostitution that reaches very high indeed. And Burt, of course, falls in love.

The romance between Reynolds and a high-priced call girl (Rachel Ward of "Against All Odds" and "After Dark, My Sweet") is interesting to watch. Ward plays off Burt's "tough cop" with a savvy and wit rarely seen since Betty Bacall told Bogie to put his lips together and blow.

The cast is rounded out by Reynolds regular Charles Durning as the Vice squad commander, Vittorio Gassman as the bad guy pulling all the strings and a very unsettling Henry Silva as Gassman's dope fiend brother who lives to do "hits" for his power-hungry sibling. Top all that off with startlingly subtle photography and a contemporary jazz soundtrack and you have a film that will undoubtedly soften even those who still haven't forgiven Burt for the "Smokey and the Bandit" series.

Summer concert tours aiming for diversity, big money

David Bauder
Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. - Concert promoters, casting a wary eye on the upcoming summer season, have learned the lesson of Lollapalooza.

They have embraced packaging as the secret to success in a busy entertainment market, hoping to entice fans by offering festivals instead of just concerts.

Special package tours are planned for almost every conceivable niche in the music market - blues, New Orleans music, heavy metal, reggae, alternative acts, Christian music and nostalgia. Even Alvin & the Chipmunks are out on a "Kidzfest '93" tour.

The careening musical festival that started all this, Lollapalooza, is also back for a third try.

"People have come to realize it makes sense to give concert-goers more value for their ticket dollar," agent Chip Hoover of Monterey Peninsula Artists said. "Lollapalooza was an obvious example of that working."

Lollapalooza was the success of the last two sluggish summer concert seasons, selling out shows across the country with acts on music's cutting edge - or over it.

This year's tour features Primus, Arrested Development, Alice in Chains, Fishbone, Front 242 and Rage Against The Machine.

As in the previous two years, Lollapalooza will feature its share of sideshows, with a second stage for musical acts and booths featuring food and political information.

It has inspired copycats. The alternative acts Butthole Surfers and Stone Temple Pilots invited Firehouse Basehead and Flaming Lips on their tour, and local promoters plan attractions such as batting cages, volleyball nets and fireworks at the shows.

The H.O.R.D.E. tour - it stands for Horizon of Rock Developing Everywhere - will pair Blues Traveler, Big Head Todd & the Monsters and Col. Bruce Hampton & the Aquarium Rescue Unit. It's another all-day event.

"For a long time, it's been a band and an opening act," said Hoover, who is organizing the H.O.R.D.E. tour. "If that's the hottest band going, that's great. But what about the 65 other bands that are touring that summer?"

Even for tours that eschew the festival atmosphere, there's a profusion of three- or four-act shows. Once, that would have been considered highly unusual.

MTV's Alternative Nation tour features the Spin Doctors, Soul Asylum and Screaming Trees. All are "hot" acts, but not necessarily known enough to sell out large amphitheaters on their own.

The "Festival New Orleans" package will include the Radiators, Buckwheat Zydeco, Beausoleil and the subdues. A special blues tour has B.B. King, Eric Johnson and Buddy Guy.

Travis Tritt, Trisha Yearwood and Little Texas comprise a three-act country bill. Poison, Damn Yankees and Firehouse are on a rock tour together.

"The competition is incredible," said Gary Bongiovanni, editor of the concert trade publication Pollstar. "Everyone's chasing the same dollars. The way to stand out is to create a special package."

Country music is testing its newfound popularity. Acts are out in unprecedented numbers and heading to venues where they rarely have been seen before.

Alabama, Restless Heart, Clint Black, Wynonna Judd, Mary Chapin Carpenter, Dwight Yoakam, Reba McEntire, Rodney Foster, Marty Stuart, Pam Tillis, Ricky Van Shelton and Vince Gill will all be on the road.

"They used to leave about 30 days between country shows in some markets, and now they can't do that anymore," Bongiovanni said. Stadium-level shows are leaner this year. Paul McCartney is doing some shows, but since he's supporting a relatively unpopular album and just toured three years ago, some promoters are worried that he won't do well.

The Grateful Dead remain a perennially popular touring act. Some stadium shows have the unusual double billing of the Dead and Sting.

Steely Dan is an amphitheater tour that will be watched with interest. Donald Fagen is supporting a new solo album, but he's teamed with Walter Becker and resurrected the name of their 1970s group for the first time in more than 15 years.

Tina Turner will tour at the same time movie theaters screen a film about her life. She's backed by Lindsey Buckingham for some shows and Chris Isaak in others.

Aerosmith is on the road again, but is concentrating on secondary markets. That's industry lingo for smaller cities that don't often see big-name tours.

Ex-Eagles Glenn Frey and Joe Walsh are teaming for a tour. Another nostalgia package features the Turtles, the Grass Roots, the Raspals and Peter Noone of Herman's Hermits.

And, of course, it would be a cold summer without the Beach Boys. The aging party guys are on the road again.

Arrested Development's Speech (Editor's Note: The '93 Lollapalooza Tour will make a stop at the Iowa State Fairgrounds in Des Moines on June 28.)

FOOD SERVICE HONORED

Union manager receives award

Greg Black has worked at the Union for 12 years.

Tom Wanat
The Daily Iowan

When Restaurant & Institutions Magazine announced the winners of the 1993 Ivy Award, one of the most prestigious food service awards in the world, few people were more surprised than IMU Food Services Manager Greg Black.

That's because Black was chosen to be a recipient of the Restaurateur of Distinction Award for his work with IMU Food Services. Those services include everything from the fine dining offered by the State Room all the way to the french fries offered by the Union Station.

"It was a total surprise," Black said, adding that past winners nominate others for the award, which recognizes excellence or outstanding performance.

"We were selected as a winner in the institutional category," Black said, citing several things that IMU Food Services has strived to do differently since his arrival 12 years ago.

"We've really tried to improve the overall quality and service," Black said. "We stress variety and we've started making more things from scratch."

The result — less frozen food. "Basically we try to provide anything that the customer wants," Black said. "Within reason."

The success is noticeable even without the award. Black explained that in the last 10 years the Union's revenue has quadrupled to just under five million dollars.

"We have between five and six thousand transactions a day,"

Black said, adding that he expected even more with the opening of a new outlet in the John Pappajohn Business Administration Building this fall.

The plaque which Black received May 23 at the National Association's annual Restaurant Hotel-Motel Show in Chicago bears his name, but he is quick to point out that it's really a recognition of everybody in IMU Food Service.

"We hope to continue to improve and grow," Black said.

UI FOUNDATION GETS NEW HOME

Board OKs Center for Development

Planning can now begin.

Lesley Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

The UI Foundation has received approval from the Iowa state Board of Regents to begin planning for construction of a new multimillion dollar facility to house the UI Foundation and the UI Alumni Association.

The new Center for Development will be located on the Iowa Center for the Arts, north and west of Hancher Auditorium. It is scheduled to be completed in 1995.

The multipurpose building will include facilities for meetings, conferences and special events, as well as a welcoming center to the UI campus. Currently, the UI Foundation and the Alumni Center share space in the Alumni Center, which is adjacent to the UI Museum of Art.

UI Foundation President Darrell Wyrick said all of the existing space has been filled and some operations are now located off-site in rented space.

"Many Foundation friends and contributors have recognized the need for a new facility for quite some time," Wyrick said. "The new building will roughly double the size of our current space."

Foundation Vice President for Communications Alan Swanson said the current building is very crowded.

"Our staff has grown four times the size of what it originally was since we moved in here," he said. "We need the new building to cover our growth."

Preliminary estimates for the project are from $7 to $9 million. Wyrick said the UI Foundation will look to close friends such as its board members for major gift support. The UI Alumni Association will also participate in the financing.

"Only private funds will be used for the building," he said.

Requests for plans from architects will be sent out by Richard Gibson, the UI's director of planning and administration. The UI's architectural selection committee, joined by representatives of the future building's occupants, will make the selection, which will be presented to the regents for approval.

Wyrick said the new Center for Development will be a valuable addition to the UI.

"It will help the Foundation and the Alumni Center do a more effective and efficient job on behalf of the university," he said. "It's a big benefit to the university because it will receive a substantial addition to the art museum through the space we are currently using."

UI President Hunter Rawlings agreed.

"This is a win-win decision for the university because it not only constructs a new building for two of our offices, but it frees considerable space for our Museum of Art," he said in a release. "Its location and multipurpose nature will make it a busy and important university landmark, and the space vacated in the Alumni Center will provide much-needed and appropriately designed space for expansion of the UI Museum of Art."

MBA program named in top 20

Dave Strahan
The Daily Iowan

The UI's Master's of Business Administration program was included in last week's Business Week magazine as one of 20 innovative MBA programs.

The article, titled "Ivy and Innovation: B-Schools that Try Harder," listed 20 business schools that are most frequently mentioned by leading corporate recruiters. It was at least the third year in a row that the UI MBA program received the distinction.

"What sets these schools apart is their ability to develop strengths in niche areas and to offer creative touches to the traditional MBA," the article stated.

According to Gary Fethke, Interim Dean of the UI College of Business Administration, fostering teamwork and student initiative is what separates Iowa from other business schools.

To illustrate this, Fethke told of MBA students who chose to travel to Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union to provide business advice for local entrepreneurs.

Sharon Scheib, the director of communication and external relations, said the work was daunting because the two countries were just getting their very first tastes of capitalism.

Both Scheib and Fethke agreed that teamwork was the key for success.

"The students were able to come together as a unit, and they tried to do things that were of interest to the welfare of the world," Fethke said. "They really tried to perform functions in Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union to help those economies."

In addition to the current merits of the UI business school, the completion of the John Pappajohn Business Administration Building this fall is also expected to improve the MBA program.

"I think it's going to have an enormous effect on our programs," Fethke said. "We'll be able to do so many things in that building that we can't do in Phillips Hall." The ability to provide data, video and television communications in the classroom will be enormously enhanced, he added.

According to Kathie Decker, MBA Placement Director, the school's high status has had very real results. Decker said that at graduation two years ago, 51 percent of the graduates had a job in hand. Now that figure has risen to 68 percent, she said.

"We're seeing better students, better programs, better results, and I'm very pleased," Decker said.

Still, the business school faculty is not likely to rest on their laurels.

Fethke said there are three ongoing missions of the school. These are to improve feelings of unity among the entering classes, to make job placement a continual process for each student, and to constantly scrutinize the core classes to develop an integrated course of study.

"We're continually striving to educate in some classical sense, as well as to keep students up to date and abreast of trends in business," Fethke said. "We're very interested in developing students who can address and solve problems, who can think analytically."

Jordan, Bulls vow to play Game 4 better

Joe Mooshil
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan was aching and the Chicago Bulls were resting a day after losing Game 3 of the NBA Finals in triple overtime.

"My whole body is sore," Jordan said Monday as the Bulls took a day off to recover from Sunday's 129-121 loss to Phoenix, a game that matched the record for the longest played in the finals.

Jordan had weary legs and Scottie Pippen had cramps in his left thigh down the stretch. Charles Barkley, playing with an injured right elbow, quipped that Jordan must have a sore elbow after taking 43 shots.

"Tell Charles if I need 43 more shots to get by you guys, I'll take them," Jordan said. "If they were bad shots I'd be disappointed, but they were good shots. I didn't have the legs to make them."

Jordan scored 44 points but made just 19 shots. From the fourth quarter on, he was 6 for 20.

Jordan attributed part of his problem to the Suns having Kevin Johnson guard him instead of Dan Majerle.

"Surprised? Yes," Jordan said. "I never knew KJ was a defensive stopper. Now it becomes a thinking game."

Johnson had been ineffective offensively, scoring just 15 points total as the Bulls won Games 1 and 2 at Phoenix. He scored 25 points Sunday and had 9 assists.

"KJ is such a good player that you can't hold him back all the time," Jordan said. "But he wasn't the key. The key was we didn't play as well as we expected. I don't think we'll have those problems in Game 4."

Jordan said he would be better prepared Wednesday night, when the series resumes.

"I feel I have a lot of weapons to beat him, but my weapons weren't working last night," Jordan said. "Johnson is quicker off the dribble and that was an advantage I had over Majerle."

Pippen experienced cramps after the first overtime. He finished with 26 points but was 3 of 14 after the third quarter.

"I never had that happen to me before," Pippen said. "I felt it tighten in the fourth quarter and then it took its toll in the overtimes. I guess it was dehydration. I wasn't getting enough fluids during the game."

"I feel tired and sore," he said. "Phil is doing the right thing by giving us the day off. We can use the rest."

Westphal, coach, wins in triple OT

Howard Ulman
Associated Press

CHICAGO — As the overtimes kept passing, Paul Westphal kept going back in time.

Seventeen years ago he played for Phoenix in the first triple overtime game in the NBA Finals. On Sunday night, he coached the Suns in the second triple overtime game in the finals.

Palms get sweaty. Hearts start pounding. Hopes rise and fall with each possession. Were all the emotions of a triple-overtime thriller easier to handle as a player or coach?

"Then it was easier to play," Westphal said. "Now it's easier to coach. It's all the same pressure-wise. It's as intense as it gets."

He wasn't concerned with reliving history — Phoenix lost that 1976 marathon 128-126. He wants to make it by winning this year's title. The Suns beat the Chicago Bulls, 129-121 Sunday night.

"I wasn't really thinking about 1976. I was just trying to win the game," Westphal said. "I'm proud to be a part of those things, but that's not the important thing. The important thing is to get back in this series and try to win it."

The Suns improved their slim chances by cutting Chicago's lead in the best-of-7 series to 2-1. They still must win Wednesday or Friday night in Chicago to stay alive.

Westphal considers the 1976 game — a fifth-game loss in a six-game series won by Boston — irrelevant to his team's current struggle. But he understands why comparisons are a hot topic.

"I'm glad people remember that game," he said. "I think it was one of the most emotional, important games of all time, and it's one of the things that helped put the NBA on the map. It's games like that that make this game special."

It was June 4, 1976 in Boston.

John Havlicek scored in the final seconds of the second overtime, giving the Celtics a 111-110 lead. Fans poured onto the floor. Fights broke out. Referee Richie Powers was attacked by a fan.

But the game wasn't over. Powers held up two fingers. Two seconds were left. The floor was cleared. But Phoenix had to take the ball out under the Boston basket, a long way to go in two seconds.

Then Westphal called a timeout he knew the Suns didn't have.

"We knew that we could advance the ball to halfcourt if we took a timeout, and we paid the penalty, which is one free throw," he said Monday.

Jo Jo White made it, but Phoenix got the ball at midcourt. The tactic worked. Garfield Heard hit a jumper at the buzzer that sent the game into the third overtime.

Boston eventually prevailed, building a six-point lead with 36 seconds left then holding on. Westphal and Ricky Sobers led the Suns with 25 points each.

"I knew it was a great game to have played in right away," Westphal said. "But the idea as a player or as a coach is not to put together a great game. It's to win the game and to try to win the series."

At the start of the second overtime Sunday night, Westphal put a rested Richard Dumas into the game. He hadn't played since 6:03 remained in the third quarter.

"I was trying to pull a Glenn McDonald," he said, referring to a Celtics substitute in 1976. "Glenn McDonald hadn't played the whole game in Boston and comes in at the start of the third overtime and gets three quick baskets."

"I made that move (with Dumas) too early. Everybody wasn't quite tired enough yet."

The 1976 game had a more exciting finish, although play during the first three quarters was "ragged," Westphal said. Boston built a 22-point lead then squandered it.

While the three overtimes Sunday were marked by fatigue and missed opportunities, Westphal considers that game a better one from start to finish.

"The first three quarters (in 1976) was not a very good game and then the fourth quarter and the overtimes made it a classic," he said. "But this one, I thought, was a struggle the whole way, and I don't think anybody can say it wasn't a great game."

"I would assume that the people who watched this game enjoyed it as much as the people that watched that game 17 years ago," he added. "I would think that people would be talking about this game for a long time."

said. "In three overtimes at home, we should have the advantage."

Scottie Pippen, who had 26 points on 12-for-35 shooting, lauded the Suns for winning on the road after losing twice at home. But he said they would have a tough time winning at Chicago again.

Phil Jackson

"We got totally out of our offense," he said. "They have to realize they needed three overtimes to beat us. I don't think they can take confidence from that."

"It wasn't great basketball," Bulls coach Phil Jackson said. "They blew an 11-point lead in the fourth quarter ... and we blew a lot of opportunities in the second overtime."

Jordan, 6-foot-6, said he was surprised 6-1 Johnson guarded him for much of the game. He hopes the Suns do it again.

"I take him seriously but I don't see him as a defensive stopper," Jordan said. "I feel I have a lot of weapons to beat him. But I can't just try to overpower him because if the referees see a bigger man on a smaller man, the smaller man will get the calls."

Sunday's game marked the fifth consecutive time this season, including twice in the regular season, that the home team lost when the Suns and Bulls played.

"These are the two teams with the best will and the most internal strength, which is what you need to win on the road," Jackson said. "But before this is over, the home-court advantage will mean something."

Phoenix, which had the best regular-season road record in the NBA (27-14), is 7-5 at home and 5-4 on the road in the playoffs. The Bulls are 7-1 at home and 6-2 on the road. But Barkley said records mean little this far along.

"Whether it's 2-1 or 3-0, you can be sure we're going to be working hard," Barkley said.

Bulls in 5, no thanks to Phoenix

If the Phoenix Suns' triple-overtime victory over the Chicago Bulls in Game 3 of the NBA Finals was anything more than a courtesy win, it has still yet to be proven. Sunday's game was won on desperation, not talent, and desperation is a commodity the Bulls cashed in during the Conference Finals.

Certainly Chicago would like to have put Phoenix away Sunday, but after two overtimes it seems the Bulls decided to calmly, and pragmatically, stick their legs out and let the mongrels chew until they got tired of chewing. A few scratches on the ankles will not fell the Bulls, and no one knows that better than they do.

Despite failing to sweep any of them, the Bulls have made their three championships series look relatively easy. The Bulls will have won the three series by a combined score of 12 games to four.

I refer most recently, of course, to the present series, which will confirm the Bulls as the first three-time NBA champs since the Celtics won thrice in a row in the mid-'60s. This should not, however, take anything away from Chicago's six-game donnybrook with the New York Knicks, who were certainly more up to the task of dethroning the world champions than are these most recent Western Conference dopes. The Knicks may be an offense to purists and puritans everywhere, but they are undoubtedly the second-best team in the NBA.

This most recent series, which continues Wednesday night at Chicago Stadium, is simply the Bulls' door prize: Play a series with the champs! Hopefully their parents are on hand to take pictures, for the souvenir rings will be going home with the Bulls.

Sunday was the Bulls' day to shine. Afterward, guard Danny Ainge told reporters, "I wish we weren't so hard on ourselves," presumably meaning that they are their own worst enemies. That much is, indeed, true, but not because the Bulls are stooped with the burden of their own potential. The Bulls are their own worst enemy because they simply aren't as good as the Bulls.

Which is, at face value, odd. Their stars outnumber the Bulls' stars 3-2 - 4-2 if you still count Tom Chambers, a former All-Star and world-class whiner.

The Bulls have, of course, Charles Barkley, an Eastern Conference refugee who has managed to look, for most of this series, like a deposed royalty. They have Kevin Johnson, who has, despite 25 points Sunday night, lost the battle of the initials to our own unsung B.J. Armstrong. And they have Dan Majerle (rhymes with Bob Marley), who has turned inexplicably, from a baseline brawler nicknamed Thunder into Craig Hodges.

They are stars, complete with Nike contracts and the black-and-white television ads to prove it.

The Bulls' big-ticket items are named Michael Jordan and Scottie Pippen, the latter being the former's late afternoon shadow. They are state of the art, cutting edge specimens. The upgrade between the Bulls stars and those of the Bulls seems to be that Chicago's play defense.

This concept has yet to catch on with the Western Conference, which rushed into its brand of basketball after Pat Riley invented it with the Lakers. But even Riley knew when to get out, leaving behind a game plan that would not work with any other players than the group he had in Los Angeles during the '80s.

If you need proof, look no further than Riley's Knicks, who resemble his old team like The Evil Dead resembles The Apple Dumpling Gang.

The latter, of course, could well be Chicago's victim in the 1994 Finals, though I'm more inclined to think it will be the Spurs.

John Shipley

Charles Barkley jokes with the media Monday at Chicago Stadium. His Suns trail the Bulls 2-1 heading into Wednesday's Game 4.

Barkley: We never lost our confidence

Bill Barnard
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Charles Barkley would like nothing more than to start taking ticket orders again.

But before his phone starts ringing and distant cousins emerge from who knows where — all wanting good seats in Phoenix — the Bulls have some work to do.

And after Sunday night's triple overtime dramatics, who's to say the Bulls can't do it?

They lost the first two games of the NBA Finals at home, where they were expected to win. Then they won at Chicago Stadium, where they were expected to lose. These Bulls are one tough team to figure.

"We never lost our confidence, even when we were down 2-0," said

Barkley, his injured right elbow still wrapped tight Monday. "Now if we can win one of these two games left in Chicago, we'll go back to Phoenix. All my family and friends will be free-loading tickets from me again."

The Bulls, coming off a 129-121 triple-overtime victory, now look toward Game 4 against the Bulls on Wednesday night in Chicago. What's in store? The Bulls would be the last to know.

"I wish we weren't so hard on ourselves," guard Danny Ainge said Monday. "We play a great game, then a horrible game or two great games and two horrible games. I hope another good one comes up Wednesday."

The Bulls left Phoenix on Saturday with a newspaper headline saying their 2-0 deficit was "impossible" to overcome. They were greeted in Chicago with one columnist saying it was more likely snow would fall in Phoenix than the two teams would return there for a sixth game.

On Monday, however, the Bulls were talking about another comeback from a 2-0 deficit, the way they did in the first round when the Los Angeles Lakers won twice at Phoenix, then lost the series in five games.

Dan Majerle, held to 29 points in the first two games, scored 28 with six 3-pointers in the triple-overtime thriller. Kevin Johnson, all but pilloried in Phoenix for his poor play there, bounced back with 25 points, while Barkley had 24 points and 19 rebounds despite pain with every shot.

"This first win does a lot for our confidence," Johnson said. "The first win is the toughest. This series has a lot of basketball left."

For all the drama of Game 3 — the second triple overtime in NBA Finals history — neither team believes the game was particularly well played.

"I've been in lots that were better," Ainge said. "It seemed like we were just a little looser in the overtimes."

Chicago's Michael Jordan was not impressed. He scored 44 points but missed 24 of 43 shots.

"It was a great game for NBC and for Phoenix, but not for us," he said. See SUNS, Page 7

Cubs stop Marlins' streak

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Close to becoming another casualty on Chicago's injury-riddled pitching staff, Jose Guzman instead found the silver lining in his ailment.

Guzman had back spasms during batting practice Monday night, but he went on to drive in his first major-league run and allow three runs over six innings as the Cubs beat Florida 6-3, ending the Marlins' four-game winning streak.

"In a way, it's a good thing it happened to me," he joked. "I wasn't trying to swing as hard (during the game). (Cubs manager) Jim (Lefebvre) told me not to swing very hard. So I just swung easy and hit a nice line drive."

The Cubs already have starters Mike Morgan, Mike Harkey and Greg Hibbard sidelined with various ailments. Lefebvre said Morgan will go on the disabled list Tuesday.

"When I was taking batting practice I just kind of twisted my back a little," Guzman said. "I told the trainer but he thought I was joking around at first. It bothered me the whole game, but I was OK. Later, though, the pain moved up in my back and I didn't want to try to be a hero. It was safer just to go six."

Guzman (6-5) gave up seven hits, walked four and struck out one. He is 5-1 with a 3.83 ERA at Wrigley Field and 1-4 with a 5.02 ERA on the road.

Randy Myers, the fourth Chicago pitcher, worked the ninth for his 19th save.

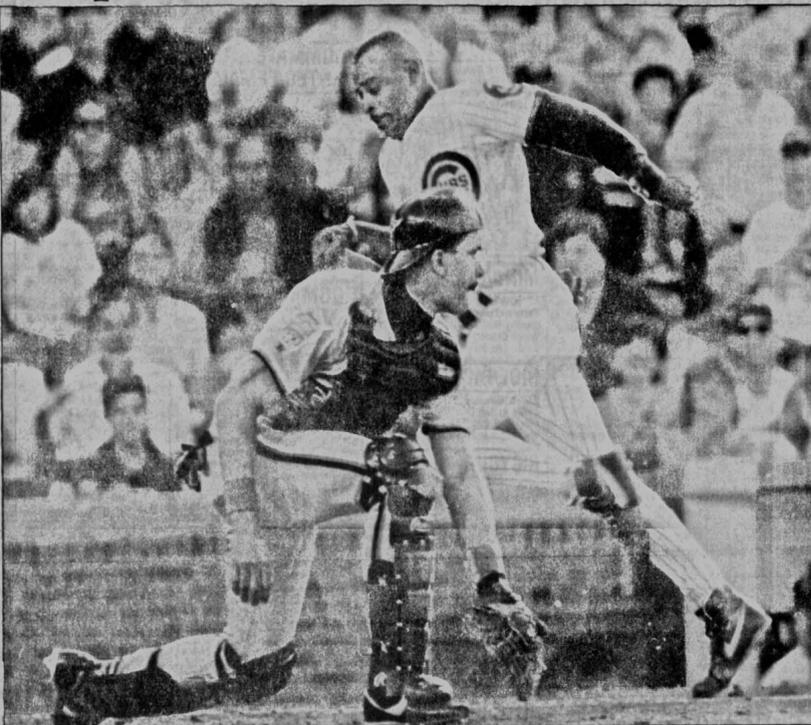

Dwight Smith had three hits and Rey Sanchez tripled and scored two runs for Chicago.

"Maybe this will be like the '89 team," Smith said. "That team was injury-prone, but we won the division. I know when those guys come up from the minors, they're hungry."

Jack Armstrong (4-7) went five innings and gave up five runs, four earned, on eight hits in losing his third straight start.

Dodgers 9, Rockies 4
DENVER — Jody Reed had four hits, including a two-run homer, and Tim Wallach drove in three runs as the Los Angeles Dodgers ended the Colorado Rockies' modest three-game winning streak.

Los Angeles, beating Colorado for the fourth time in as many tries, got to starter Willie Blair (2-4) for six runs over the first five innings.

Chicago's Dwight Smith scores past Florida's Benito Santiago in the first inning of the Cubs' 6-3 win Monday.

Dodgers starter Pedro Astacio (5-4) scattered seven hits before needing relief help in the eighth when the Rockies scored their final run.

Cardinals 8, Pirates 3
ST. LOUIS — Erik Pappas and Gregg Jefferies hit two-run homers and the St. Louis Cardinals rallied from a two-run deficit to beat the slumping Pittsburgh Pirates.

The Cardinals have won four of their last five, while the Pirates have lost five straight and eight of nine.

The Pirates lost centerfielder Andy Van Slyke, who injured his right shoulder when he slammed into the wall trying to track down Pappas' first major-league home run in the fourth.

Pappas' home run off Denny Neagle (2-2) tied it 3-3 and Jefferies' ninth home run in the fifth, with Ozzie Smith aboard, put the Cardinals ahead.

Cardinals starter Donovan Osborne (4-3) worked 6½ innings and allowed three runs on eight hits with five strikeouts and a walk.

Phillies 10, Expos 3
MONTREAL — Terry Mulholland improved to 9-1 lifetime against Montreal as the Philadelphia Phillies extended their winning streak to six games.

The Expos have lost seven of nine, and dropped 12½ games behind first-place Philadelphia in the NL East.

Mulholland (8-5) allowed eight hits, struck out four and walked three in 8½ innings.

Montreal starter Jeff Shaw (1-3) lasted only 4½ innings, allowing five runs and six hits.

Jim Eisenreich's grand slam, John Kruk's solo homer and Pete Incaviglia's two-run single led the Phillies' attack. Incaviglia has 14 RBIs in his last 11 games.

Mets 7, Braves 4
ATLANTA — New York rookie Doug Saunders had his second two-hit day in as many major-league games and Bobby Bonilla drove in two runs as the Mets ended a six-game losing streak.

Saunders, who scored three runs, is 4 for 9 in two appearances with the Mets since being called up from Class AAA Norfolk June 13.

Bonilla, who has 23 RBIs in his last 29 games, drove in Saunders in the first with a single and knocked him in again with a double in the fifth.

Frank Tanana (4-5) limited the Braves to one run and nine hits in seven innings. He struck out eight and walked two in posting his 237th career victory.

Braves starter Pete Smith (2-6) was pounded for eight hits and four runs in 4½ innings and he failed to win for the eighth consecutive start.

Tribe falls as Fielder hits roof

Associated Press

DETROIT — Cecil Fielder's rooftop shot was one of three Detroit homers and David Wells won for the eighth time in nine decisions as the Tigers defeated the Cleveland Indians 7-3 Monday night.

Travis Fryman and Kirk Gibson also homered for Detroit. Wells (8-1), who is 5-1 lifetime against the Indians, gave up three runs on nine hits in six innings, striking out five and walking one. Kurt Knudsen and Bob MacDonald finished up for Detroit.

Mike Bielecki (4-5) gave up six runs on nine hits in four-plus innings for Cleveland.

Yankees 4, Red Sox 0
NEW YORK — Bernie Williams hit his first grand slam on the first pitch following an unusual ball examination, leading New York past Boston.

Scott Kamieniecki (1-1) and Bobby Munoz combined on a three-hitter, sending Boston to its eighth loss in nine games.

Williams connected with two outs in the fifth inning on a 1-2 pitch from Danny Darwin (5-6). Just before the pitch, third base umpire John Shulock called time and went to the mound to examine the ball Darwin had, but kept it in play.

Orioles 8, Brewers 5
MILWAUKEE — David Segui's homer highlighted a five-run sixth inning as Baltimore beat Milwaukee for its 11th victory in 12 games.

The biggest hit of the rally against Bill Wegman (4-10) may have been an RBI bloop single by Mark McLemore, a catchable ball that dropped between Milwaukee outfielders Greg Vaughn and Robin Yount.

Rick Sutcliffe (7-2) gave up 10 hits over six innings but managed to win his fifth straight decision.

Twins 4, Blue Jays 3
MINNEAPOLIS — Shane Mack, who had nothing to show for two triples earlier in the game, snapped a seventh-inning tie with a weak grounder, rallying Minnesota over Toronto. The Twins have won five of six games while Toronto has lost six of nine.

Danny Cox (5-2) blew the lead in relief of Dave Stewart.

Wimbledon rates champion Agassi as eighth seed

Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Andre Agassi on Monday became the lowest-seeded men's defending champion in Wimbledon history — and got a break to be seeded as high as he was.

Wimbledon officials installed the injury-plagued Agassi as the No. 8 seed, five places above his current world ranking, in recognition of his status as reigning title holder. The seeding means Agassi won't face a top eight player before the quarterfinals.

"It was a difficult decision bearing in mind he has not played much in the last couple of months because of injury," Wimbledon referee Alan Mills said. "But he is the defending champion and he proved he can play on grass."

Since seedings were introduced at Wimbledon in 1927, no men's champion who has returned to defend his title had been seeded lower than No. 6. The previous lowest-seeded defending champion was Jan Kodes, who was No. 6 the year after he won the boycott-hit tournament of 1973.

The seeding committee also used its own discretion in making Stefan Edberg the No. 2 seed behind Pete Sampras, while Jim Courier was bumped to No. 3.

Among the women, Martina Navratilova's wish to avoid top-seeded Steffi Graf until the final was granted when she was elevated to No. 2, above higher-ranked Arantxa Sanchez Vicario.

Agassi has dropped steadily in the rankings since surprising the tennis world last year by winning Wimbledon from the baseline. He has not played competitively since April 9 due to tendinitis in his right wrist.

Agassi missed the French Open and was considered questionable for Wimbledon, but he arrived Monday in Germany for a grass-court warmup event in Halle. Agassi, who is scheduled to play Tuesday against Carl Uwe Steeb, practiced for less than an hour and was unavailable for interviews.

Courier, who has won four Grand Slam titles and is ranked No. 2, has had little success on grass. That's why he was seeded behind Edberg, a two-time Wimbledon champion ranked No. 3.

Three-time champion Boris Becker was seeded No. 4, last year's runner-up Goran Ivanisevic was No. 5, 1991 champion Michael Stich was No. 6 and Ivan Lendl was No. 7.

Rounding out the rest of the men's seeds were Richard Krajicek (9), Andrei Medvedev (10), Petra Korda (11), Michael Chang (12), Wayne Ferreira (13), MaliVai Washington (14), Karel Novacek (15) and Thomas Muster (16). Grass-court specialists Krajicek, Ferreira and Washington were all seeded three places above their world rankings.

The only top-ranked player missing was Sergi Bruguera, who jumped to No. 5 after winning the French Open earlier this month but is skipping Wimbledon because of a dislike for grass.

Among the women, defending champion Graf was seeded No. 1 based on her world ranking. Graf won the French Open to reclaim the No. 1 ranking from Monica Seles, who is sidelined indefinitely after being stabbed during a tournament in Germany on April 30.

Sanchez Vicario is ranked No. 3 behind Seles, but she was bypassed for the No. 2 seeding in favor of nine-time champion Navratilova. Last week, Navratilova said she deserved the No. 2 spot because she was a better grass-court player than the Spaniard.

"I'm thrilled," Navratilova said when notified of the seedings Monday. "I don't think I really influenced the decision, but it makes sense for me to be upgraded. There are only two former champions in the tournament and it's right they should be in opposite halves of the draw."
