Students sing praises of UI music camp

The final concert is tonight.

I found out came every year given with conducting a wonderful performance opportunity. I've had a lot of fun," said Walsh and said the weeks have been a very fine experience for them.

"Because many of the musicians come from rural schools, they have not experienced playing in a band or orchestra before. Walsh said the camp is a way to get to play in an orchestra and Recital Hall.

The All-State camp is the only one of its kind offered by the UIs, according to director of the camp and UI Director of Music, Welch. Welch has been directing the camp for 30 years of existence.

"The camp provides students a wonderful performance opportunity with a very fine group of students who have chosen to be here," he said. "They are able to play with others and other musicians. They are given greater skills that really are essential skills.

Iowa rivers still runneth over

Associated Press

Dubuque — Racing water from the swollen Mississippi River has changed some people’s plans for the weekend and put others on alert for flooding.

The latest flash flood watch surfaced Thursday, prompting the National Weather Service to post a flash flood watch along the Mississippi from Dubuque south to the Quad Cities. The weather service also issued a flash flood watch for the eastern end of Iowa, but lifted it several hours later.

"Our city is very well protected. We’re fortunate that we have the water from spreading out," City Manager Tom Pohlman said.

He said a flood wall, built by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers after severe flooding in 1995, rare along about two miles on the city’s eastern border and allows for crests of up to 30 feet."The flash flood gates at every break in the wall, such as on the Iowa River, are already closed," Pohlman said.

"That’s been put in place," he added.

Behind the scenes, equipped with pumps to push water back into the river, city workers can be seen checking the dam walls and preparing for the potential threat.

"We’re in pretty good shape," Pohlman said. "If the river rose at 21.5 feet, we could be sure everything behind the dam would be fine."

Shelter practices encourage euthanasia, make pet adoption difficult

I am writing to express my reservations about the recent animal shelter practices and policies. As a resident of Coralville/Iowa City Animal Shelter (CIAV), I am concerned about the shelter's policies and practices that prioritize euthanasia over adoption. The shelter's actions reflect a lack of commitment to responsible pet ownership and a failure to address the root causes of animal welfare issues.

At CIAV, I have observed that the shelter's policy is to euthanize animals that are considered "unadoptable." This criterion is often interpreted to include animals that have medical issues, behavioral problems, or are deemed "unattractive" to potential adopters. This approach exacerbates the problem of pet overpopulation and contributes to the unnecessary demise of animals that could otherwise find loving homes.

Furthermore, the shelter's staff does not appear to prioritize the well-being of the animals in their care. This is evident in the shelter's treatment of animals, which often includes overcrowding, insufficient medical care, and inadequate socialization opportunities. These factors create a stressful environment for the animals, which can contribute to their behavioral issues and make it more difficult for them to be adopted.

In conclusion, I urge the leadership of CIAV to reconsider its euthanasia policies and adopt a more holistic approach to animal welfare. This should include providing better medical care, more extensive socialization opportunities, and a more effective adoption program. By prioritizing the adoption of animals over euthanasia, the shelter can make a significant impact on reducing the number of animals in shelters and improve the lives of the pets and people involved.
Canada swears in first woman prime minister

TORONTO, Canada (AP) — Kim Campbell was sworn in today as Canada's first woman prime minister, replacing Brian Mulroney, who stepped down after nine years in power.

Campbell, 46, a former defense minister and justice minister, won the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party at his convention in Ottawa two weeks ago. She replaces Brian Mulroney, who was defeated by the Liberals in the June 26 election.

Kurds attack European Turkish sites

In Marseille, France, four Muslim Service Project, a gay-rights group, said that if Clinton were to send a similar rescue mission to Turkey.

In Turkey, Kurds attacked Turkish police, demanding that the government withdraw from Kurdish-ruled areas and free Kurdish prisoners, according to a statement issued by the group.

Kurds are a minority group who live in Turkey, Iran, Iraq, and Syria. They are often discriminated against and marginalized by the governments in these countries.

The attack comes amid ongoing tensions between the Turkish government and Kurdish separatists. The Turkish government has been fighting against Kurdish rebels for decades, accusing them of committing human rights abuses.

The Kurdish rebels are demanding the withdrawal of Turkish forces from Kurdish-controlled areas in Turkey and the release of Kurdish prisoners held by the Turkish government.

The attack on Turkish police comes days after a similar attack on a police station in Istanbul. The Turkish government has been cracking down on Kurdish protest in recent weeks.

The Kurdish Service Project is a group that advocates for the rights of Kurds and other minority groups in the Middle East. The group has been involved in various protests and demonstrations in support of the Kurds.

The attack on the police station comes amid tensions between the Turkish government and Kurdish separatists. The government has been fighting against Kurdish rebels for decades, accusing them of committing human rights abuses.

The group called on the international community to take action to end the conflict and protect the rights of Kurds and other minority groups in Turkey.

bays are key to reducing peak discharges on the Iowa River. Despite the fact that the Corps of Engineers is the primary body responsible for flood control in the United States, the Corps in Iowa is only responsible for flood control along the upper part of the Mississippi River, which runs through the state. The Corps can control the flow of water through the dam's spillway. According to the Water Resources Planning Study prepared for the Iowa Department of Natural Resources, the Corps has the authority to control the flow of water in the reservoir to ensure that the water levels do not exceed flood levels. The Corps can also release water from the dam to reduce the risk of flooding in downstream areas.

CASTLE said the plan provides rates of outflow for which the corps would have to let out water if the water level is above a certain level. This is important because it allows the Corps to manage the water levels in the reservoir to prevent flooding in downstream areas. The plan also sets maximum rates of outflow for which the corps would have to let out water if the water level is below a certain level. This is important because it allows the Corps to manage the water levels in the reservoir to prevent downstream flooding.

When City Park flooded earlier this week, the dam was letting out water at a rate of around 10,000 cubic feet per second, and when the paper test water out at 12,000 cubic feet per second. The dam was letting out water at 8,000 cubic feet per second. The dam was letting out water at 6,000 cubic feet per second.

"Part of the problem people have is that the dam has done exactly what it was built to do — control floodwaters," Castle said. "We're not in a flood, but we're still releasing water." Castle said that the dam is releasing water at a rate of around 10,000 cubic feet per second, and when the paper test water out at 12,000 cubic feet per second. The dam was letting out water at 8,000 cubic feet per second.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) -
Kevin Duckworth, who "wants to be known as a finisher" and not the reserve in Portland, was traded by the Trail Blazers to the Bullets for forward Harvey Grant.

The Bullets also acquired "a blue-chipper" from the Blazers, but neither club would reveal the details of the trade. Duckworth, who has averaged more than 20 points and 10 rebounds this season and led the Bullets in scoring last year at 14.8 per game, said he was close with the deal.

"I just hit me like a train," Grant said.

He said he had asked to be traded but had hoped to get his wish, even though the Blazers were a playoff team this year.

"Taking a team that won 20 games to a team that won 6 or more games this past year makes me a little nervous," Grant said.

The Bullets, deep at forward, are particularly pleased with the play of Tom Washington, making Grant expendable.

Portland's front office and coaching staff hope they have filled a big need for another forward.

Duckworth, a 7-4 center who averaged 18.3 points a game in 1986-87, but the very best he has been in his career, has been troubled by a nagging injury and is expected to miss the remainder of the season.

Grant, 27, played for the Blazers last year and for the Cards before that. He will be reunited with Portland coach Jim Laker, who was an assistant coach for the Portland Trail Blazers from 1970-80.

Lendl skunked again
Wimbledon curse gets him in second round

Associated Press

Wimbledon - A year ago, Ivan Lendl was picked No. 1 in the抽签, but he was not expected No. 1 this year. The Czechs were three-time defending champions. The defending French Open champion, Tennis Park High School, and team are no. 1 in the world.

That's why Lendl had to be satisfied with the No. 3 seed Wednesday.

Wimbledon - The men's third seed, Ivan Lendl, was picked No. 2 of the list of men's seeds. He was seeded No. 2 of the list of men's seeds.

For his part, Lendl was philosophical. "I'm happy to be going to the third round," he said after the win. "I've got to win tomorrow to get into the second round, so let's take it one at a time."
