Iraqi forces aboard helicopters and trucks wreaked havoc in U.S. missionary and government compounds Wednesday despite a warning from Washington, officials said. A U.S. military official said the raid was a successful reprisal for an assassination attempt against George Bush.

In what appears to be a brazen raid on the U.S. Embassy and the American Mission here Wednesday, Iraqi forces aboard helicopters and trucks wreaked havoc at U.S. missionary and government compounds.

Officials said the raid was a successful reprisal for an assassination attempt against U.S. President George Bush.

Bush has occasionally spoken of the need to take swift and decisive action against the Islamic Republic of Iran's leaders but has stressed the importance of political stability in the region. The raid was the first large-scale military action in the region since the 1979 revolution that brought about the current regime in Iran.

The raid appeared to be a coordinated attack on several key targets, including the U.S. Embassy and the American Mission. Iraqi forces boarded helicopters and trucks and began firing on the embassy and other key targets, causing heavy damage.

Despite the warning from Washington, officials said the raid was a successful reprisal for an assassination attempt against Bush.

Woodard came to the University in 1987 when he accepted an appointment in the Visual Workshop. During the previous five years, he was a high-school drama and English teacher. He was hired as an associate professor in the School of Art as a teaching assistant for ceramics and animation courses and has been here ever since.

This summer Woodard received a teaching course in advanced research and composition from the National Endowment for the Arts. By participating in the program he was able to enhance his techniques and skills in the studio, teaching students giving them in-depth instruction in the art of teaching. Woodard said he especially enjoys the interaction with the students.

"Undergraduates, in my experience, are relatively fearless," he said. "Particularly when you provide them with an open space that it's safe to explore their ideas.

Professor of Art, African-American World Studies Program

Associate Professor and Chairman of the African-American World Studies Program Fred Woodard recently had an exhibition of his paintings at the Iowa City Public Library.

Like many of his students, Woodard views himself as an educational renaissance man. Currently, he has an exhibit of his work on display at the Iowa City Public Library. Woodard said he enjoys the opportunity to teach and inspire students because he understands how they learn.

"Students who have been cooped up in television and video games," he said, "find that it's not as easy to shift their attention and extend their ideas. I think it inspires them to students because he understands how they learn.

"One thing I have to reconcile myself to is that some of the ways that I've found some relief was to become more experimental." Woodard said. "I find that in becoming more experimental, I let a little more of my energy out there.

"The work also helped students. Woodard said it reached out to people, and although they may not have anything of what he is creating in their art, they were also investing in their art.

Some students have also taken to the idea of mixing new media and technology. Woodard said he hopes that some of his students will still have a mind for new media and technology in their future.

"The way I see things at this juncture, you've got to use in words, in color, in other markers, in the mind of the student," Woodard said.

Woodard said he is currently working on a series of paintings that deal with the theme of "sustainability." He hopes to use this series to help students understand the importance of sustainability in their daily lives.

"I think of my students as people who are always on the move," he said. "I think of myself as someone who is always on the move."

New UI bike patrol offers many bonuses

First bike-riding officers will hit the streets between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m., chief of police.

Challis said, adding that the low gear on the 21-speed bike was an advantage in hill climbs.

An answer, but not enough

Every so often, some event comes along that presents a major challenge to the way Americans see ourselves. A recent example is the recent violence in America. At least in the view of nations like Japan, Britain, even Canada. Why? It's for four reasons.

1. The armed forces. The military is the largest in the world. We have to get rid of it, and do it now, because we have to do it.

2. The police force. There is less crime. And, one might add in most cases, they are subject to dismissal with very little explanation. It is a responsible police force.

3. The justice system. There is an approval of the possibility of such a thing as素质教育. Such relationships are held to be destructive to a large number of young people. They are subject to dismissal with very little explanation. It is a responsible police force.

4. The courts. The courts are making the laws liquid and illegal.

Most violent acts are acts of society in terms of violence. There are acts of violence, but in contrast, it is made up to and large of middle-class, white, rural and suburban Americans who are in society. The police force and the justice system have some violence.

While we have been able to let it be known that there are so many protecting a vague threat to their own rights — a threat that's usually perceived in the light of a slippery slope.

Such nationalistic actions have often been violent crimes in America. It would be a major step away from the frontier of the 18th century. It would certainly stop some crimes of passion. But the only way to do this is to destroy some of the ideas of the frontier.

One of the reasons why we have come so far is because we have come so far. The writer's address and phone number should accompany the letter. There are more than one person out of a hundred who naturally view a social issue. We are all participating, even if we remain silent. The writer writes because he told me. He swore to me.

We all know the simple truths. Rape is rape. It is not some kind of sexual fraternization. It is not legal. It is not ethical. It is not moral. It is not legal. It is not moral.

Froggit recommended in city council race

To the editor:

With the general election just a few weeks away, I would like to recommend a candidate for one of the council races that many of us have been discussing lately. This year's candidates all bring a variety of experience to the table and I think have all shown a sincere interest in the communities they wish to serve.

The decision of who to vote for can be a difficult one. However, I believe that one candidate in particular stands out among the rest. This person is someone who has a proven track record of serving the community and who has shown a genuine passion for making a difference in the lives of others.

I encourage all of you to take the time to learn more about this candidate and their platform. I believe they have a lot to offer and will make an excellent addition to our city council.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

P.S. I am an enthusiastic supporter of this candidate and their efforts to make our city a better place for all residents.

Making Iraq the victim

What of Iraq will surely make good use of the point that the U.S. promptly discovered by Kuwaiti agents, but the fact is that the intelligence reports on CNN said the complex, though badly damaged, was never found. This is a mere hour after the attack, explained that the strike was in fact an act of war against the Iraqis. It will now be clear that the Iraqis have no reasonable defense and the message was sent across the world.

Making a killing

OK, let's see if I've got this right. The government is going to pay out $100,000 to the family of a man who died on a downhill skiing trip after he had bought skis at a big discount store. There's no mention of why the man died, but the family of the deceased is getting $100,000. How is that a right decision by the government? What did the government do? It didn't even ask the family if they wanted to accept the money.

Bicycling coexistence

Three cheers for the Iowa City area that is really doing a good job of sharing the road with bicyclists. With the recent debate about so-called "right to ride" laws, it is nice to see that the city of Iowa City has implemented measures to promote coexistence between cyclists and motorists. This is a win-win situation for everyone involved.

I have biked through the city of Iowa City many times and have always been impressed with the friendliness and respect shown by both cyclists and motorists. It is wonderful to see that this coexistence has been achieved through common sense and good will from all parties involved.

CAMPANELLA DEAD AT 77

Beth Harris
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - Roy Campanella, who was the Dodgers' mou­ test catcher, died Sunday af­ter­ noon at age 77. Campanella played for the Los Angeles Dodgers for 17 seasons, from 1947 to 1965.

Campanella joined the Dodgers in 1946, a year after Jackie Robinson was hired. Campanella, who played from 1947 to 1965, was one of the first black players to be signed by the Dodgers. He played in 1,206 games and batted .289. Campanella was also a powerful hitter, hitting 346 home runs and batting in 1,161 runs.

Campanella was a two-time National League MVP, a 10-time All-Star, and was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1972. He was also a member of the 1966 World Series championship team, which defeated the Baltimore Orioles.

Campanella was born in Brooklyn, New York, on May 22, 1918. He was the son of Italian immigrants and grew up in Brooklyn. Campanella was a beloved figure in the Los Angeles community, and was known for his charity work and his support of local schools.

Campanella's death comes on the heels of another tragedy in the Dodgers organization. In January, pitcher Fernando Valenzuela died at age 57. Valenzuela, who won the Cy Young Award in 1981, was a beloved figure in the Los Angeles community.

The Dodgers and the entire sports world are mourning the loss of Campanella, a true legend of the game. Our thoughts and prayers are with his family and friends during this difficult time.
