Region braces for expected flooding

Mississippi to overflow emergency blockades

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DAVENPORT — The Mississippi River will reach record levels this weekend, exceeding emergency dikes that city officials thought were beyond reach of angry floodwaters.

"Twenty-two feet is what the city was planning this year," said Jim Post, a city engineer who was manning what he called the "sandbag hot line" Wednesday.

"Once it gets past 22 feet, it might ..." He paused, then added, "We're not sure what happens. We thought we had a margin of safety, but this just shows you can't predict Mother Nature."

The National Weather Service in Moline, Ill., said Wednesday the river would crest near 22.5 feet on Saturday. That would tie a record high set in a devastating 1965 flood that displaced 3,000 Iowans and caused millions of dollars in damages.

The new prediction exceeded the previous one issued Tuesday by 1 1/2 feet. The surge was caused by yet another heavy storm along the river basin late Tuesday and early Wednesday.

The river stood at 20.8 feet in Davenport on Wednesday. It floods at 15 feet.

Barge traffic on the river has ground to a standstill because the high waters have closed most of the locks between St. Louis, Mo., and St. Paul, Minn.

The Mississippi is the nation's central corridor for billions of dollars in grain bound for overseas markets. Towboat operators are losing $1 million a day while the river is shut down.

Also Wednesday, a Clinton county unit of the National Guard was activated to help the city of Local disaster relief officials are predicting that over 100 families in the Iowa City area may be displaced in the days to come due to flooding along the Iowa River.

According to Jim McGinley, emergency management coordinator for Johnson County, heavy rains Tuesday night and Wednesday, coupled with an increased outflow at the Coralville Dam, means many houses along the river will have to be evacuated.

"The higher it goes, the more families it will displace," he said, referring to the river's rising water level. "Most of these folks are accustomed to the flooding and they have alternative places to go."

For those who don't, the Red Cross has set up a temporary shelter at Southeast Junior High School, 2501 Bradford Drive. By dinner time on Wednesday, officials at the Red Cross said they were prepared with food and shelter for hundreds of people, but had

House favors limits on student loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted Wednesday to limit President Clinton's plans to put the government in the business of directly making loans to college students, but the vote may have only symbolic effect.

By a roll call of 397-28, lawmakers voted to limit direct federal education loans to $22 million for the next four years. Clinton wants the government to immediately begin lending the entire $15 billion students currently borrow each year in federally guaranteed loans from banks.

McFarland's acting career began in 1931 at age 3 when he modeled baby clothes in his hometown of Dallas. He later made a Wonder Bread commercial that was noticed by director Hal Roach, the creative force behind "Our Gang."

In addition to "Our Gang," McFarland made 14 feature-length movies.

PARENTAL ADVISORIES TO AIR

Networks to warn viewers of violence

Diane Duston
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Starting this fall, shows on the four major television networks will carry parental warnings about violent content, but don't look for programs like "L.A. Law," "Cops" or "America's Most Wanted" to be among them.

Some people may consider them violent, but executives for ABC, CBS, NBC and Fox said Wednesday none of the currently aired series are brutal enough to regularly qualify for the voluntary advisories, though some episodes might.

ABC's new police drama, "N.Y.P.D. Blue" will carry a warning each week, said Tom Murphy, chairman of Capital Cities-ABC. It's the only regular series on any network that will routinely be labeled for violence, the executives said at a news conference.

Cartoons won't carry such warnings, nor will any athletic events.

CBS has a new show, "Walker, Texas Ranger," starring Chuck Norris, noted Howard Stringer, president of CBS Broadcast Group. "The Europeans are terrified we might take the karate out of it. I don't think we'll go that far. But we will look at it and we will make our individual judgments on that program."

The Big Four can take the lead with these warnings, but can't control syndicators who sell shows to cable or independent stations, said the network executives, including Warren Littlefield, president of NBC Entertainment and George Vradenburg, executive vice president of Fox Television.

Cable executives will be considering some kind of action. Ted Turner already has said he'd put advisories on his cable networks, noted Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who appeared at the executives' session with reporters.

President Clinton wrote letters to CBS, NBC, ABC, TBS and Fox applauding the action and saying: "For the health of our society and the American family, we must continue to find ways to limit the excessive portrayal of violence in our television programming."

Viewers likely will see the advisories most often on televised movies, which in recent seasons have been the leading purveyors of violent fare.

But no one expects the networks always to hit it right with the shows they choose to precede with: "Due to some violent content, parental discretion advised."

Should a scene in which parents scream at one another in front of a child be considered violent? How

The National Advanced Driving Simulator project at the UI Oakdale campus cleared another hurdle Tuesday night, when a joint appropriations committee decided to include the simulator in the fiscal year 1994 national budget.

The $7.8 million project was a part of the U.S. Senate budget, but was left out of the House version. In the committee meeting, Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, pushed for and succeeded in having the measure included in the final committee version.

"Probably in terms of the tactics involved, this was one of the more severe threats to the project," said Harkin's Deputy Press Secretary Alex Sachs. "This time, they had actually voted to cut the funding."

The measure never actually came to a vote in the committee because Harkin and the project's major opponent, Bob Carr, D-

Lifestyle of IC's (3rd most) powerful

A day in the life of City Manager Steve Atkins.

Lynn M. Tefft
The Daily Iowan

How does Iowa City City Manager Steve Atkins feel about recently being named the third most powerful person in Iowa City in an Iowa City Magazine poll?

"It's all silly," he said, modestly describing the honor. "In the big scheme of things, it's really no big deal."

Despite what would seem like a fairly high profile, many students know little of Atkins or what he does. As city manager, he is responsible for coordinating all the different aspects of Iowa City's local government — from roads to parks and recreation, from planning and zoning to finance.

"One thing that is fascinating about this job is the multiple missions," he said. "The exciting element is the diversity."

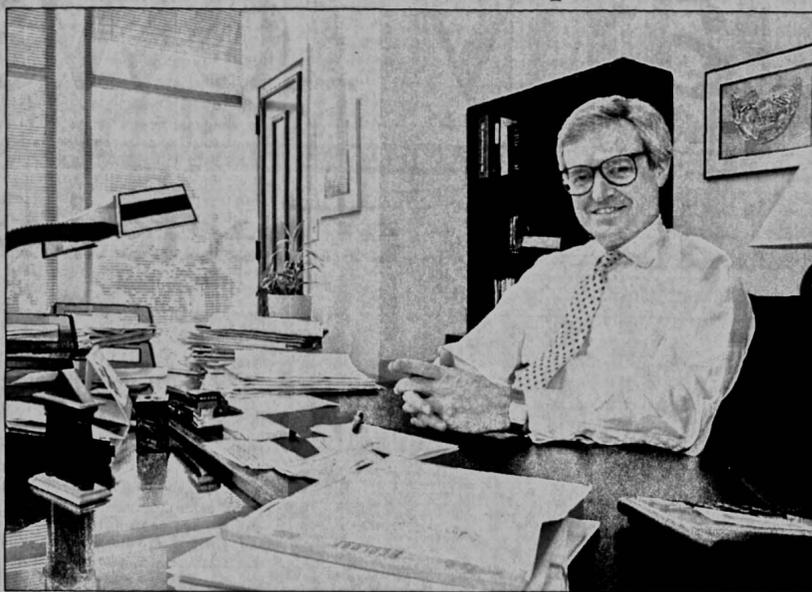

What's a typical day like for the city manager?

It is filled with varied people and places. For example, he might rise early for a breakfast meeting with the Iowa City Area Development Committee, then head off to discuss city employment matters with the assistant city manager and personnel manager. He'll have just enough time for a quick trip to the bank and a few errands, and then it's time for lunch.

He sorts his mail and proofreads the city council agenda to begin the afternoon, and then is off to view some homes recently purchased by the city for rehabilitation into family living units. Telephone calls and other odds and ends fill the rest of the day, after which he has a dinner date with his wife and 11-year-old daughter.

The variety of issues he faces in a day make certain traits an imperative, Atkins said. Finely tuned public-relations skills are one such necessity.

"Folks in high levels of government are traditionally expected to know all sorts of things," he explained. "That's very difficult to do because of the organization and the diversity that's there."

Al Goldis / The Daily Iowan

Iowa City City Manager Steve Atkins sits in his office at the Civic Center. Atkins says a recent Iowa City Magazine poll naming him the third most powerful person in Iowa City is "silly."

Atkins said he is always receiving advice as well. He described the sometimes misguided tips people give him on everything from the civic center's new phone system to proposed road widenings.

"It's just so difficult sometimes," he said. "Everybody with a driver's license is a traffic engineer. Know-it-alls are my pet peeve, and this town is loaded with them."

Atkins said he makes an extraordinary effort to stay well-informed, and Iowa City's ever-changing nature makes it no easy task. As the town continues to wage a tug-of-war between history and technology, Atkins and his colleagues must keep a perspective on developments. He said this is sometimes made difficult by "problems of the day," such as the proposed widening of Melrose Avenue.

"Is Melrose the biggest issue, or is it the current issue?" he asked. "There's a big difference. It's the current issue. Four-tenths of a mile of street. We get $86 million from capital improvement projects planned over the next seven years, and this amounts to less than one percent of the total amount. But it will get 90 percent of the headlines and 90 percent of the energies because of all the factions and opinions that are kicking around."

What does Atkins think the real issues are?

"The big issues are clearly those of the environment — water, sewer — yet they are the things that are the most unexciting," he said. "We've got to do all of those things and we're talking about spending big, big bucks to do that. You have to be able to put it all in perspective."

Putting it all in perspective for the City Council is another part of Atkins' job.

"The council needs to know that I will always provide them with my best professional and technical judgment," he said. "It cannot be slanted based upon biases."

The seven-member council hired Atkins in 1986 from a field of candidates which included people from across the nation.

City Councilor Susan Horowitz said she admires Atkins' ability to deal with diverse city projects simultaneously, calling him forthright, analytical and flexible.

"He has the ability to stay on top of issues," she explained. "Many administrators get stuck in a quagmire of crises, but Steve has the ability to look beyond."

Atkins said he is flattered by the praise but retains his modesty. "I like my job and I like Iowa City," he said. "It's an enjoyable life, and it's fun."

THROWING IT ALL AWAY

Circus calling for $16.2 million lotto loser

Jim Urban
Associated Press

OIL CITY, Pa. — Buddy Post's trip down Easy Street has been as bumpy as the carnival rides he once operated for $150 a week. He won $16.2 million in the state lottery in 1988, but now he's broke.

It gets worse. Police have charged his brother with trying to have him killed in an attempt to collect on his future prize payments.

"Everybody dreams of winning money, but nobody realizes the nightmares that come out of the woodwork, or the problems," Post said.

"Before I hit the lottery, I was more content," he said. "I had no pressure. I didn't have the worries. I had friends. I could go places and do things even though I didn't have money."

Now, the 53-year-old Post sits in his rundown mansion about 90 miles north of Pittsburgh. His regular companions are a pack of cigarettes and the blotted-out tattoo on his arm.

A malfunctioning security system beeps in the background, reminding Post that smoke detectors, like light fixtures and drapes, have been ripped from the walls and ceilings. Post said he sold some of those things for cash. He believes others were stolen.

Most of the furniture is gone. The lawn mower is missing, and the weeds and grass in the front yard tickle visitors' kneecaps. The backyard swimming pool is filled with sand and brush.

It's a dump, but Post said he can't do anything about it because he has no cash. If something doesn't change soon, the bank will own the dump. His mortgage is past due.

"I'm totally at a standstill," Post said. "There is nowhere to go. There is nothing I can do."

His 50-year-old brother, Jeffrey, was arrested Friday in Sarasota, Fla., and charged with plotting to kill Post and his sixth wife, Constance. A police informant told investigators he was hired by the brother to make the job look like a murder-suicide.

Weeks before, Post eliminated Jeff, another brother, Edward, and a sister, Patricia, as beneficiaries of his future lottery payments, which run for 20 more years. He listed Constance, with whom he has separated and reconciled numerous times, alone on a document filed with the Pennsylvania Lottery Commission.

If he and Constance died, the annual checks of $497,000 after taxes would revert to his estate, but Post said he hadn't changed his will, so the money would have gone to his siblings and his two daughters.

Post said he plans to change his will to cut out his siblings. Some of his relatives said Post's problems were his own doing. They said he spent unwisely and auctioned off personal property when he ran short of cash.

"I always told my husband, 'You watch, Buddy gets that check in February and by June or July he'll be broke.' And he always was," said Sally Post, who is married to Post's brother Edward.

Buddy Post said he never sought financial advice and provided capital for businesses started jointly with his siblings, including a Sarasota bar and a used car lot. They failed.

Then last year, a judge ordered Post to give a third of the winnings, or about $5.3 million, to his friend and former landlord, Ann Karpik. Karpik sued after the winning ticket was validated, saying she shared the ticket with Post.

He is appealing the ruling, but this year's check from the lottery commission went into an escrow account, as will other checks until the case is resolved.

Until then, Post can't touch the money.

But he's accustomed to having money out of his reach.

Post's mother died when he was 8 and his father couldn't care for the four siblings.

At 15, Post ran away from an orphanage where he said a nun cracked him across the knuckles with a wooden club if he misbehaved. He said he used a fake birth certificate to enlist in the National Guard and Army before working as a laborer, painter and a variety of other jobs.

About six years ago, he headed to Florida with an offer to run a ride in a traveling carnival. He said it turned out to be slave labor, so he took another job cooking and driving a tractor-trailer for a circus.

When that grew old, he headed back to his hometown, Erie, and soon noticed a growing jackpot in the Super 7, one of Pennsylvania's lottery games.

He played it for the first time that week and didn't win. The next week, on Feb. 24, 1988, to be exact, he bought about $40 worth of tickets and was one of two winners who split a $32.4 million jackpot.

Post expects to wind up with nothing, and said that might not be so bad.

"I might join the circus again," he said. "It's like that around here anyway."

UNDERSTANDING HAZARDOUS MATERIAL

Asbestos prevalent in older UI buildings

Dave Strahan
The Daily Iowan

Asbestos. Most learned about this fireproof, chemical-resistant, fibrous building material in grade school, when construction workers removed it from classrooms. Students were told that long-term exposure to the material could lead to lung cancer and the chronic lung-inflammation condition known as asbestosis.

Given its ominous history, it might surprise some to learn that asbestos is spread throughout the UI campus.

According to James Howard, UI associate director of building operations and maintenance, most UI buildings do still contain asbestos, although some is gradually being removed.

Despite its prevalence, Howard said the material poses no health risks. He explained that asbestos is dangerous only if loose fibers are inhaled, and that UI buildings do not contain any of this "friable" asbestos.

"If it becomes friable, we remove it," Howard said.

Environmental specialist Brad Azeltine, from the Iowa Department of Natural Resources agreed, adding that sometimes it's unwise to attempt asbestos removal.

"Asbestos does its damage through inhalation," he said. "If it's in good shape, leave it alone. An improper removal can make matters worse."

Howard agreed that instead of removing the asbestos and risking the contamination of the air, it was often a better move to let the asbestos remain undisturbed.

Nevertheless, it would be inaccurate to suggest that UI officials are ignoring the asbestos. On the contrary, the material is carefully monitored.

"We have tested most of the buildings and know where the asbestos is," Howard said. "Anytime anybody has a problem we test the area to see if it is asbestos. Basically we're handling it as an as-needed basis."

In addition to being removed if and when it becomes friable, Howard said that UI asbestos is also removed whenever major remodeling or maintenance is performed.

Those who are still worried about the health risk can take consolation in knowing they're not alone.

"Quite honestly, asbestos is everywhere," Azeltine said. "It was so prevalent in building materials for years that any pre-1980s building is going to have it."

However, as Azeltine pointed out, buildings are not the only source of asbestos.

"Even the outside air has asbestos because of car and truck brake linings," he said.

T. Scott Krenz / The Daily Iowan

Asbestos abatement workers Jerry Serbousek and Curt Fountain remove asbestos from pipes using plastic bags to contain any potentially harmful dust.

Unfortunately, the effects of outside asbestos are not well known. "The thing about asbestos is there's no short-term immediate effects," Azeltine said. "It's really a vague-type situation. The level of safe vs. not safe hasn't been determined."

Abatement workers discuss removal process, risks

Dave Strahan
The Daily Iowan

Because of the health risks associated with friable asbestos, many precautions have to be taken in the removal and disposal of the material. At the UI, these jobs are performed by a certified team of asbestos abatement workers.

"About 80 percent of the time we're removing some sort of pipe covering," said abatement worker Curt Fountain. "We also do a lot of floor tile, ceiling tile and counter tops."

Fountain said, at one time, asbestos was used in 3,000 different products, and that explains why it's so widespread. He agreed that asbestos can be found in nearly every UI building, though not in its friable state.

"We've got most of the hot areas and the high-visibility areas cleaned up," he said.

Since most dangerous asbestos has already been removed, the team spends a lot of time removing the asbestos other people inadvertently disturb, and there is no shortage of work.

"It's a constant flow of phone calls," Fountain said. "We don't go out and randomly look for it, we've got enough people calling to keep us busy."

Despite the endless number of jobs to be performed, the team does not take any of them lightly.

"Anytime you remove asbestos, you're running the risk of something going wrong," Fountain said. "If fibers become airborne they can get into your respiratory system and digestive tract."

Abatement worker Jerry Serbousek acknowledged that risks existed, and that the team simply had to deal with them.

"Yeah, it's dangerous," he said. "You just have to take your precautions."

To begin with, the abatement workers wear hooded plastic suits and gas masks. In addition, before any asbestos is disturbed and possibly becomes airborne, the asbestos is isolated from surrounding air. This is done in one of two ways.

If only a small amount of asbestos is to be removed, a special plastic bag is duct-taped around the area. The bag has arms built into it so the workers can remove the asbestos without exposing the outside air.

If a larger amount of asbestos has been removed, however, the plastic bag technique won't work. In this situation, workers construct a large plastic enclosure around the area of asbestos and work inside of it. Once workers remove all the asbestos, they exit the enclosure and seal it up.

During each procedure, water is sprayed on the asbestos to weigh it down, because when asbestos is heavy, it's not friable.

Once the asbestos has been bagged, the air in the bags is sucked out and the bags are stored in a special semitrailer. When the trailer is full, the asbestos is taken to the Iowa City landfill. Thus far, nine trailers have been buried.

However, bagging the asbestos does not end the list of precautions abatement workers take. Before team members go home for the evening, they remove their exposed clothes and take showers.

In addition, workers complete a physical exam every year which includes a lung-functioning test. Every five years they have a chest x-ray.

In spite of the precautions, the workers question whether the medical tests are worthwhile.

"Once you find out you've been exposed to asbestos, there's nothing you can do," Serbousek said.

Also, workers are afraid the tests may not measure actual damage.

"There's a 15- to 45-year latency period on asbestos diseases," Fountain explained.

Despite the risks inherent with asbestos, the abatement workers said they don't hate the material. Actually, they treat it with reverence.

"It's really a great insulator," Fountain said. "They haven't found anything that can come close to it."

15 Ukrainian journalists explore free press at UI

Lesley Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

In order to broaden their understanding of a free press system in a democratic society, 15 Ukrainian journalists will spend this summer interning at various Iowa newspapers.

The project, made possible by a $177,560 grant from the U.S. Information Agency, is designed to assist in the education and training of journalists in the Ukraine, UI School of Journalism Director Ken Starck said.

Project Director Bob Anderson, a former high-school journalism teacher and lieutenant governor of Iowa, initially conceived the program. He said he views it as not only an opportunity to train Ukrainian journalists in the approaches Americans use, but also to help Iowans understand different parts of the world.

The professional Ukrainian journalists and journalism students are participating in the program until Sept. 8. They have attended UI workshops on basic reporting and writing skills and will leave for media internships across Iowa this week, including internships at WQAD-TV in Moline, Successful Farming magazine in Des Moines and local newspapers in Adel, Atlantic, Indianola, Iowa City, Iowa Falls, Jefferson, Kalona, Newton, Ottumwa and St. Ansgar.

Mikhail Skulenko, director of the journalism department at the Kiev university and former director of Ukrainian Radio, said he is among the first group of journalists from the newly independent and democratic Ukraine to travel to Iowa.

"I think there are a lot of similarities in the practices of journalism," Skulenko said. "Most Ukraine newspapers are small local papers. I think some of our experience may be of interest to Iowa journalists."

Skulenko said the Ukrainians are interested in learning about new technology, news writing, education, and establishing better and closer ties with the state of Iowa.

One goal of the program is to break the stereotypes Ukrainians have of American journalists and newspapers, Helen Rycovotseva, writer for a major Odessa newspaper and Moscow-based magazine, said.

"I was sure American newspapers were very sensational," she said. "I don't yet know if that is true or not."

Radical changes in Ukrainian journalism have taken place in the last three years, Skulenko said. He said that after the coup in Moscow failed in 1991, newspapers have been following a number of trends.

"Newspapers were decentralized because practically all mass media was governed by the Communist Party," he said.

Today, Skulenko said, the Ukrainian parliament is subsidizing some newspapers because of the high costs involved in production.

"Without the government subsidies, many newspapers would die in a week or two," he said. "Practically every month many newspapers are closed and many are opened up."

Eugeny Gorbanev, president of the information research marketing agency "Odessa Plus," and producer of the highest rated TV program in Odessa, said that because of the high rate of inflation in Ukraine, it is very difficult to start a new publication.

"We don't have equipment, or money," he said. "There are many problems with buying paper and equipment."

Prices increase every day, according to Katerina Koval, a reporter for a daily Cherkassy newspaper and co-producer of a women's magazine.

"We founded a magazine for women, but we haven't earned a profit," she said. "We cannot buy paper for the next issue. Some sponsors help us, but we do not want to be dependent."

Following their two-month internships, the journalists will travel to St. Petersburg, Fla. and Washington, D.C. for media visits, interviews and sightseeing.

The program is sponsored by the UI School of Journalism and Mass Communication, the International Center for Community Journalism, the Cherkassy Pedagogical Institute in Ukraine, the Iowa Press Association, Drake University and Iowa State University.

IOWA SUMMER REP '93

'Kentucky Cycle I' opens tonight at UI

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

The UI Theatres' Summer Rep festival hits its stride tonight with the opening of part I of the much-awaited "Kentucky Cycle," Robert Schenkkan's 6-hour Pulitzer Prize-winning collection of short plays.

The show, which will go on to play Broadway in the fall, consists of nine different one-act plays, featuring over 50 different roles, presented over two evenings. The one-acts cover exactly 200 years, from 1775 to 1975, and follow the linked fortunes of three intermarried Kentucky families.

"It's a HUGE project," said director Eric Forsythe. But the very immensity of the project actually contributed to the UI getting to do the show. It faced only limited competition, as most theaters are unwilling or unable to handle something of this scope.

St. Louis Rep was considering it, but found it was too big for them," Forsythe said. "They sent the script to us because of the size of our Summer Rep program, our commitment to putting on single-artist festivals."

And when Schenkkan was approached about the rights to the project, he agreed. "I think he was delighted at the idea of having a festival, as all playwrights seem to be when we say 'let's do a festival about you,'" Forsythe said. "It's a huge and wonderful coup for us. We're the only company in the world right now that's permitted to do this play."

Forsythe, who is also artistic director of Summer Rep, is facing an uphill battle as he tries to handle both halves of the cycle — each in the realm of three hours long — simultaneously. But he said it is necessary to have one person handling both sections of the production.

"It is very hard," Forsythe said. "At first I thought that it might be good to have two directors doing the two cycle plays. But the more I worked on conceptualizing the play, the more I saw that it needed one director. It has to be a single-unit, and it has to be a single direction. And so the idea of two directors became really wrong."

"Last Action Hero," like "Ishtar" and "Bonfire of the Vanities," is about to become Hollywood shorthand for a colossal bomb.

Columbia Pictures executives and people close to the movie's production conceded privately that the $80 million Arnold Schwarzenegger action pic had flopped. It made a lackluster $15.3 million in its debut a week ago and dropped to $8.1 million over the weekend, Exhibitor Relations Co. reported Monday.

Even with potential for strong international and videocassette sales, "Last Action Hero" is on track to make no more than $50 million in North American theaters. Before the premiere, Columbia said the movie needed to gross more than $80 million at domestic theaters to stand a chance of making a profit in the long run.

"Columbia will take one of the largest write-offs in history over this movie," said a senior executive at a rival studio, speaking on condition of anonymity. He said

But he's convinced he's up to the challenge — he's done this before. During Summer Rep 1990, the Christopher Durang festival, he found himself directing both "Beyond Therapy" and "Baby With the Bathwater," after another director was hired away at the last moment to handle a TV series. The results, Forsythe said, were nonetheless very satisfying — "Beyond Therapy" was one of the UI's most successful productions artistically and financially. "It was a very successful season all around," he said. He adds that the UI is unusual in that its Summer Rep seasons turn a profit. "We make money each season, which is not something many theaters can say," he explained.

And this summer is unlikely to be an exception. "Final Passages," the first presentation of the season, is an exceptionally gripping and well-written play, with a production quality to match. And "Kentucky Cycle," Forsythe said, shows the same strong writing and intense images.

"The Cycle is so special that it certainly warrants a season," he said. "And it certainly deserved the Pulitzer."

Forsythe says the individual acts of "The Kentucky Cycle" are connected through themes related to the building of America: "the limitless plains, the frontier spirit, the conquering urge. ... I think it's about the soul of our country."

The plays are also linked through a series of genealogical connections. Many of the actors wind up playing their own descendants.

"I think what makes [the plays] special is how beautifully they tie together," Forsythe said. "It's really understood to be one large event. It's a cycle, it's how things develop and how things return to the earth."

Certainly no one can argue with the "large" part. The play promises to be an exhausting effort for cast and crew alike, especially on matinee days. The July 10 and 18 shows will feature "marathon" performances, where both halves of the cycle will be performed back-to-back with a dinner break. It's a daunting prospect for performers, production staff and patrons alike, but Forsythe is enthusiastic, saying that the performers find it such a powerful experience that time seems to pass rapidly.

According to Forsythe, minor rewrites have been made throughout the play, but only acts eight and nine were "radically changed." He said this version of the script is a tighter and more clarified version.

"It's a wonderful work. It's a deeply-felt work about the broadest issues of our country," Forsythe said. "It celebrates America. It's a proud piece, and it's something I'm very proud to be working on. It's kind of work that sustains and challenges the best that we have inside us as artists and as people. And work like that just doesn't come along very often. We're very fortunate to be able to do it. And I hope our audiences feel the same."

"The Kentucky Cycle I" opens tonight at 8. Additional shows will be performed at 8 p.m. July 2, 3, 16 and 23, and at 3 p.m. July 10 and 18. "The Kentucky Cycle II" opens July 7, and will be performed at 8 p.m. July 7-10, 17, 18 and 24. Tickets are $11.50 for each performance ($8 for UI students, senior citizens and those under 18). Summer Rep tickets, which include admittance to both "Kentucky Cycle" productions and "Final Passages," are available, as are "marathon day" packages which include dinner at the Theatre Building. Call Hancher Box Office, 335-1160, for more details.

about a young movie fan thrown into a real movie. That concept, industry experts say, was further muddled by Schwarzenegger's input and a parade of screenwriters who revised the script.

Further, it was an action picture for young audiences, with not enough action for "Terminator" fans and too much violence for the "Home Alone" crowd.

Another reason given was Columbia's marketing, which held the film up as the biggest event of the summer, setting unreasonably high expectations.

When audiences finally saw "Last Action Hero" — especially in comparison to Steven Spielberg's "Jurassic Park" — the hype didn't hold up.

"They almost went out of their way to set themselves up to be attacked," said the rival studio executive. "You cannot 'event market' when you do not have an event."

ANTIQUITY AND MODERNITY

Sensationalist newspaper stories, myths can be highly manipulative

E.B. Holtmark

The Daily Iowan

fabula non caelo turpior ulla foret ... notior in caelo fabula nulla fuit

"There could be no more disgraceful story under heaven! ... No story was more well known under heaven!" Ovid, "Amores." 1.13.36, 1.9.40

Do we read heartening as well as horrifying copy in newspapers and magazines because the verbal lure of a seductive headline invites us to hear mythic echoes hinted at in the material? A kind of narrative pit is dug, complete with stakes of myth and folklore on which to impale our restless attention once it has unwittingly gone for the tethered bait of the 72-point print and crashed through the foliage of camouflaging words.

The head of New York's Human Resources Administration clothed herself in disguise and, for some 23 days in all, acted the part of a welfare applicant (The New York Times, February 5, 1993, page B16, columns 1-2). In this way she found out firsthand how the more than one million real welfare applicants supposedly "served" by the agency actually fare when they come to her $6 billion organization for help. Predictably, the outcomes were not felicitous — surreal, even. This story captures our attention in part because it is an old story vested in new dress. Folklore resonates powerfully here.

Divine figures of authority visit Earth from time to time to learn firsthand who are the wicked and who the good. A classic example is Ovid's story of Philemon and Baucis ("Metamorphoses," 8.626-723), an old but pious Phrygian couple living humble lives amid the corrupt splendor of evil neighbors. The god Zeus and his divine son Hermes come visiting in human guise to see if humans are as vicious as these gods have heard. Humans are indeed — except for Philemon and Baucis, who duly respect the laws of hospitality for strangers and at great personal cost entertain the slumming divinities. Their reward, once the gods reveal themselves, is to be spared as the rest of mankind is destroyed by a great flood.

Now, the wicked social workers encountered were not, as far as I know, fired, nor, apparently, were the good ones especially rewarded. But the head of the agency did come gritty face to gritty face with the daily horrors of a system over which she presided and which allegedly had been designed to help and care, much as Zeus and Hermes encountered a loathsome and ungodly world which they thought they controlled.

Consider another reality, even more terrifying, now shaped in no small part by visual and print narratives: family violence. To judge from the media, it is as endemic as it is ubiquitous. For example, The New York Times reported (May 10, 1993, page A8) on two girls, aged 10 and seven, who were being kept out of school to prevent their father from possibly harming other children in the class if he elected to act out his threat to kidnap his daughters. The authorities apparently had reason to be cautious about this father, who was under suspicion of already having killed the girls' half-brother.

Such family violence — especially as it affects children — is, however, sadly not new. It is basic plotting in uncounted myths of the Greeks and Romans and, as some of these columns have shown in the past, their historiography. Thus Zeus condones the kidnapping and raping of his daughter Persephone by his brother, Hades, the god of the underworld. Zeus himself came from a family in which today the Social Services of any American community would long ago have intervened. His father, Kronos, had played cannibal to the older siblings, gobbling them all down, and when he later was tricked into literally throwing them up, Zeus made crushing war on Kronos and his generation with the help of the liberated brothers and sisters. Of course, Kronos himself was an abused child. His mother, Gaia ('Earth'), was eager to obviate the intolerable domestic violence of her husband, Ouranos ('Heaven'); something of a histrionic narcissist, she seduced little Kronos into castrating father Ouranos while the latter was copulating with mother Gaia. This family drama validates at the mythic level empirical observations of today's social workers that family violence passes from one generation to the next — abusers of spouses or children themselves often grew up in abusing households.

Some recent studies of the public media note their manipulative nature and caution us all to be on guard against their stealthy power to shape our views of the world in a given image. Should we likewise take thought of the potential for baleful influence from the narrative categories of myth and folklore on how each of us mentally constructs a concept of what 'the world is really like'? The plots of myths, as of folktales, have more than stood the test of time as shape-giving paradigms with a potent capacity for lending persuasive verisimilitude to any material, no matter how sickeningly unbelievable if true, or outrageously false for all its artful fabrication. Our dailies, our weeklies, our TVs prove it — their fictions as well as their news.

$62 OF $75.3 MILLION RECOVERED

Iowa Trust Fund settles claim

Steven P. Rosenfeld
Associated Press

DES MOINES — The swindled Iowa Trust Fund on Wednesday settled another claim for its missing millions, announcing an agreement that would return up to $5.3 million from the city of La Quinta, Calif.

The settlement brought to about $62 million the recoveries or judgments awarded the Iowa investment pool from $75.3 million that was stolen from its accounts in 1991.

The fund, which pooled the idle cash of 88 Iowa cities, counties and government agencies, has since lost at least $10 million in interest and earnings on that missing money, state Insurance Commissioner David Lyons estimated.

Attorney General Bonnie Campbell and Lyons, who is the court-appointed receiver for the Iowa Trust, said that with the settlement, they could concentrate on attempts to recover the rest of the money.

A suit to recover $12.5 million from the California cities of Palm Desert and Indio is pending. A hearing is set for July 12 on an Iowa Trust motion for a judgment in its favor.

The Iowa Trust also is suing its former legal advisers in Des Moines and has claims against the estate of its California investment adviser, Steven D. Wymer. On July 12, Wymer is to begin a 14-year, seven-month federal prison sentence for defrauding clients in Iowa and other states out of $92 million.

Wymer has admitted a scheme of juggling the accounts of clients to conceal losses.

Lyons said the Iowa Trust had claimed Wymer transferred $5.47 million of its funds to La Quinta's accounts. In the settlement, La Quinta promised an immediate cash payment of $2 million and additional payments of up to $3.3 million as that city makes recoveries from its own lawsuits.

The settlement is subject to approval by District Judge Michael Streit, who is supervising the Iowa Trust. A hearing is set for July 30.

"Another piece in the puzzle has just dropped into place," Campbell said. She said the La Quinta settlement "bodes well for our prospects in the Palm Desert-Indio case."

Previous settlements with the city of Marshalltown, Banker's Trust Co. of Des Moines and the Coachella Valley Joint Powers Authority in California, brought back more than $17 million.

Appeals still are tying up a $44 million court judgment that the Iowa Trust received for recovery of money diverted to Jefferson Bank and Trust in Lakewood, Colo.

Rain, wind pound state once again

Associated Press

Severe weather pounded Iowa again, with strong winds, rain, hail and funnel clouds reported across the northern half of the state.

There were no immediate reports of injuries or major property damage from storms Tuesday night, but roads were flooded in some areas. Up to 5 inches of rain fell as thunderstorms rumbled into northwest Iowa after 4 p.m., the National Weather Service said.

Several homes were evacuated on the north edge of Little Rock in eastern Lyon County because of high water on the Little Rock River.

Winds clocked at 72 mph blew hangar doors off at the Waterloo airport. The airport control tower had to be evacuated around 9 p.m. when the winds slammed through, said Deanna Bernadino, an air traffic controller.

Radio station KICD in Spencer clocked a wind gust of 81 mph, while wind gusts of up to 60 mph whipped through Spirit Lake. The strong winds in those areas blew down tree branches and utility lines and damaged some small buildings.

Hail the size of golf balls broke windows in Kossuth County, the Weather Service reported. The Weather Service was tracking more than 15 tornado and funnel cloud sightings at one point Tuesday night.

A tornado touched down near Sibley, authorities said, damaging trees and a few farm buildings. Another tornado touched down near Gilmore City in Pocahontas County, causing minor building damage.

AIRPORT LEFT WITHOUT JET SERVICE

United Airlines to depart Sioux City

Associated Press

SIoux CITY, Iowa — United Airlines is ending jet-end service to Sioux City, which formed a bond with the airline during one of the company's worst moments four years ago.

"We believe the people are terrific and are very supportive of us," said United spokesman John Philip. "Because of that, we've been reluctant to do this."

United will stop operating jet aircraft at Sioux Gateway Airport on Sept. 8 because of mounting losses from its two daily flights.

The departure leaves the Sioux City airport without conventional jet service. The four remaining airlines fly smaller turboprop aircraft.

United will be replaced by United Express, a commuter airline that connects with United hubs in Denver and Chicago.

"It was discouraging news," said Randy Curtis, director of aviation for the city. "But it's not the end of the world for us."

United offers two daily flights to and from Denver, seven days a week, with both stopping at Lincoln, Neb. Philip said the Boeing 737 jets departing from Sioux City carry an average of 25 passengers — about one-fifth of capacity.

United also announced plans to pull out of five other airports —

Huntsville, Ala.; Fresno, Calif.; Bangor, Maine; Great Falls, Mont.; and Fargo, N.D. Company officials reported cumulative losses of more than $98 million in those five cities plus Sioux City during the last five years.

Philip said United was hesitant to pull out of Sioux Gateway because of the airline's relationship with the community. On July 19, 1989, a United DC-10 jumbo jet crashed while attempting an emergency landing at the airport.

Of 296 on board, 112 died. The rescue of survivors, considered a model of efficiency, was the subject of a TV movie two years later.

Sioux City Mayor Jim Wharton said United would have left the airport much sooner had it not been for airline's appreciation of Sioux City residents.

"I think we were probably on the hit list many times before now and we were able to escape," Wharton said.

Another United spokesman, Joe Hopkins, said, "It was a very painful decision to make." He said the airline has enjoyed a "special relationship" with Sioux City. "But this was a business decision," Hopkins said.

JAPAN COMPLICATES AGENDA

Clinton asks other nations to help spur growth in economy

Tom Raum
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Less than a week before the economic summit, President Clinton on Wednesday bluntly called on Japan to open its markets, on Germany to lower interest rates and on all of Europe to end a stalemate over farm subsidies.

"It's very hard for the United States alone to grow jobs without help from other nations," Clinton declared as he met with congressional leaders to discuss the July 7-9 meeting in Tokyo of the world's seven major industrialized democracies.

agreeing that the lame-duck status of Japanese Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa, and the relative weakness of other leaders, will make it hard to agree on a strong statement on economic growth.

Japan's is the world's second biggest economy, after the United States.

"Obviously, the situation is complicated by the internal problems in Japan, the situation with respect to the government there," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine.

But, he added, "that should not preclude a positive outcome," particularly on agreeing on Russian aid. Russian President Boris Yeltsin will meet with the Western leaders at the conclusion of the summit.

U.S. officials had hoped the summit partners could agree jointly at the annual meeting to set targets for annual growth, presumably at or around 3 percent. But this goal now seems doubtful.

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas said it would be hard for Clinton to claim any major successes. "It's not his fault, just circumstances," Dole said.

Turning to the political statement to be issued at the summit, Myers suggested that, at the least, the United States would like strong statements on Iraq and Bosnia to be included.

At the beginning of his meeting with congressional leaders, Clinton toward finally wrapping up a long-delayed set of new liberalized trading rules under the auspices of the 114-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers conceded that some goals for the summit might have to be modified. "I certainly think that the domestic political situation in Japan has changed the dynamics somewhat," she said.

One casualty, Myers suggested: a market-opening "framework" agreement U.S. officials hoped would be ready by the summit. That is no longer likely, she said.

"We'll pick up where we left off" after the Japanese elections on July 18 and after a successor to Miyazawa is chosen, she said.

Myers said the United States still hopes to make major progress on Russian aid and in moving was asked by reporters whether the political situation in Japan would make it impossible to reach his goals. "It's harder but it's possible," he said.

Asked what he would like other members of the so-called Group of Seven — the United States, Japan, Germany, Britain, France, Canada and Italy — to do to spur a listless global economy, Clinton said:

"I think Japan ought to stimulate their economy and open their markets. And the Europeans should resolve their own differences about agriculture and other things and help us to sign (a long-negotiated international trade) agreement before the end of the year.

"And the Germans have worked very hard, the German government has, but I think the German central bank should continue to lower interest rates there so that all of us together can expand this economy."

Canada's new Minister of Commerce, Thomas Hockins, left, and Mexican Commerce Secretary Jaime Serra Puche discuss the impact of a U.S. court ruling on NAFTA.

U.S. District Judge Charles Richey said the White House should not send the accord to Congress until it first prepares a formal statement on its environmental impact — a process that could take months or even years.

"We believe that court's decision is not in the public interest," said U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor. He said that the administration planned to go ahead and send the accord to Congress. Meanwhile, he said, the Justice Department would appeal the ruling as soon as possible.

Kantor told reporters the administration is concerned about the environmental consequences of the proposed treaty, but the court's ruling "interferes with the president's ability to negotiate international trade agreements." He added it also impedes Clinton's ability to work out a strong side agreement expressly designed to protect the environment.

Clinton has insisted that Congress approve the agreement before January. But he admitted four weeks ago "it is going to be a very tough fight" with lawmakers who are convinced that the accord would export thousands of U.S. jobs to Mexico.

Act. "NAFTA will have significant environmental effects and ... may worsen the environmental problems already existing in the United States-Mexico border area," the judge said in his 23-page decision.

Both opponents and proponents of the accord said the court's action could have a devastating impact on the agreement's already fragile prospects in Congress.

In a suit brought by three environmental groups, Richey ruled that the agreement negotiated last year by former President Bush and the president of Mexico and prime minister of Canada violates the National Environmental Policy

Act. "NAFTA will have significant environmental effects and ... may worsen the environmental problems already existing in the United States-Mexico border area," the judge said in his 23-page decision.

eral funds remain taboo for abortions

WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives today voted to retain the government's $1.6-billion ban on federal money for poor women's abortions Wednesday, giving abortion foes a victory in Congress' first big test vote of the year.

In a day of emotional debate, lawmakers trying to repeal the ban said that it discriminated against poor people and that it was time to overturn regressive Republican policies; abortion foes cast that position as on the "radical fringes."

The vote was not close. House members approved, 255-178, an amendment by Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., to ban all federal funds for abortion except to save the life of a mother or in cases of rape or incest.

The size of the margin was a blow to the hopes of abortion-rights advocates for future battles. Still to come: congressional debate on the Freedom of Choice Act, which would limit restrictions states can impose, and a decision on whether abortion should be covered in the administration's health-care package of benefits.

With 114 newcomers in the House this year, both sides eyed the federal-funding vote as a barometer. About one-fourth of the first-term Democrats voted with Hyde; nearly all of the Republicans did.

Since President Clinton favors abortion rights and had backed a repeal of the Hyde amendment, abortion rights supporters had hoped for a different outcome on the ban, which was added to a Medicaid spending bill later sent to the Senate.

"Everybody thought this was a much more pro-choice Congress, and this was a kinder, gentler Congress, and this was the year of the woman," said Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo. "We found out we were wrong."

Rep. Chris Smith, R-N.J., said anti-abortion lawmakers were in good shape for future battles. "This sends a message ... that the House does not want abortion on demand."

Abortion-rights advocates in the House are counting on the Senate, which is considered more partial to their cause, to soften the ban, perhaps adding an exception when the health of the woman is at stake.

But anti-abortionists aren't likely to go for that, since courts have ruled that such language could be interpreted to include the emotional or mental health of the woman, taking in many more cases.

Emotions ran high at times during Wednesday's debate.

Female lawmakers stood together in groups on the House floor. And at one point a black congresswoman, Cardiss Collins, D-Ill., said she was offended that Hyde, who is white, had suggested poor, black women were encouraged to get abortions to "refine the breed."

Hyde said poor people aren't given jobs, education or decent housing.

What they are given, he said in a sarcastic tone, as if quoting an abortion provider, is this: "I'll tell you what we'll do, we'll give you a free abortion, 'cause there are too many of you people, and we want to kind of refine the breed."

Anti-abortion lawmakers said taxpayers don't want to finance abortions, even if they support a woman's right to choose.

Tax dollars for abortion is "way outside the mainstream. It's the radical fringes," said Rep. Bob Inglis, R-S.C.

But abortion rights advocates argued that income shouldn't decide access to abortion.

"It is the rankest form of hypocrisy to proclaim this fundamental right but to insist that it cannot be exercised, except by well-to-do women," said Rep. Jerry Nadler, D-N.Y.

Hyde, who sponsored the original ban on funding that has been on every Medicaid spending bill since 1976, poked at Clinton for submitting a budget that took out the ban.

FLOODING

only made accommodations for one family.

"We're expecting people to show up over the next couple of days," said Marge Robbins, who was helping set up at the shelter Wednesday evening. "We hope nobody shows up, but if they do, we'll be ready for them."

And with the forecast calling for a possibility for rain each of the next few days, officials are expecting the worst.

"This is equal to the worst it has been in the last five years," McGinley said. "If we get more rain, things could get a lot worse."

According to John Castle, park manager for Coralville Lake, the army Corps of Engineers increased the outflow from the Coralville Dam from 11,000 cubic feet per second to 12,000 cubic feet per second on Wednesday afternoon, a level at which houses near the Iowa River generally experience flooding.

"To most of the people who live along the river this wasn't a big surprise," he said. "Obviously, they're not very happy about it, but they knew it was coming."

For life-long Iowa City resident Al Wendler, who lives on Normandy Drive along the river, the water that lapped against his back door Wednesday was nothing new.

"We lose our garden and all of our evergreens when the water comes up this far," he said, looking out the window at a submerged back yard. "But we love it down here on the river. You have to take the good with the bad. This may not happen again for another 15 years."

Along Edgewater Drive in Coralville, residents were not so laid back. As the skies darkened Wednesday night, Coralville Parks and Recreation workers, along with residents on the drive, scrambled to build a dike to divert new rains away from Edgewater Park and area houses and directly into the river.

Marie Ware, recreation director for the city of Coralville, said that due to the increased outflow from the dam, at least one of the three softball diamonds at the park will soon be submerged in water and at least parts of the other two will also experience some damage.

"The area has seen better days," she said. "It could be a lot worse, but it could be a lot better. When you have property in a flood plain, that's what is to be expected."

Wendler, like most residents with homes along the river, said he plans to stay in his home despite the rising water.

"I'm not real worried about it," he said. "We had our grandkids out here last weekend and they had a great time with it. They fished off our back deck."

Things could get worse before they get better. According to McGinley, word from the corps of engineers is that they will let water out of the spillway at whatever rate it enters the lake, which could mean greater outflows and increased flooding if rain continues upstream.

"The water's only a few inches from going over the spillway and they won't let it go over," he said. "We could see much higher outflows."

Castle was somewhat more optimistic.

"When it's all said and done, people probably won't see water any higher than what they saw Wednesday morning," he said. "Of course, it's all dependent on the weather."

All four lanes of Dubuque Street from Interstate 80 to near Mayflower Residence Hall are likely to remain closed for the next few days.

Residents wishing to volunteer at the shelter can call the local Red Cross officials at 337-2119.

SIMULATOR

Michigan, were able to work things out.

The simulator was originally scheduled for completion in 1996, but the date has since been moved back to 1998.

For those preparing to use the simulator, the news was welcome and a relief, UI Director for the Center for Computer-Aided Design Ed Haug said.

"I'm just amazed Harkin was able to get the whole amount retrieved," Haug said. "To lose that would have been devastating."

The threat of the project being killed comes each year around this time, Haug said, as some members of Congress don't like the endeavor. Specifically, Haug said that Carr has tried a number of times to halt the project.

"This has been going on for three years, and that's the frustrating thing," he said. "It's spring, it's appropriations time, and you know darn well what Carr will do."

While the action is a positive development, Sachs said the issue may not be dead.

"We would like to say that this now gets the simulator out of the woods," he said. "But we can't say that's a certainty."

"Hopefully this will clear the cobwebs out of the way, and we have every reason to think it should, but we will keep our eyes open for glitches," he added.

It is also still possible that the project could be down-scaled before it is completed. Haug said if that were to happen, certain aspects of the project would have to be cut. In the meantime, he said, his office will continue doing research on the UI driving simulator.

"We've just said the heck with it, we're going to build the best simulator in the world, and we did," he said. "The plan was that we wouldn't just sit and wait, so that when it does come we'll be ready."

Once the wheels start turning, Sachs said, chances of down-scaling or elimination of the national simulator will lessen.

Camanche fill sandbags. Guard members already were on duty in Davenport and upriver in Marquette to help with sandbagging and evacuations.

Assistant Clinton County Emergency Management Director Sandi Roberts asked for volunteers to supplement the National Guard force in Camanche, which is 25 miles upriver from Davenport.

High water closed the U.S. 52 bridge between the island town of Sabula and Savanna, Ill. The closing forced motorists to detour 16 miles south of Camanche to cross the river.

Numerous other roads were closed across the state, including U.S. 61 south of Keokuk on the state's southeast tip; Iowa 67 near LeClaire, just east of Davenport; and U.S. 30 near Boone in central Iowa.

In Davenport, postal employees evacuated the main post office and moved operations to higher ground in a former Sears store.

"This is disaster territory," said Davenport Postmaster Dan Foley, who said floodwaters were lapping at the rear of the building.

Foley said postal officials actually decided to vacate Monday and had spent the last two days preparing for the move.

Gov. Terry Branstad landed in the city at mid-day as part of a helicopter tour along the swollen river. Branstad, who has declared most of the counties along the river disaster areas, met with local officials and toured downtown sandbagging operations.

WIMBLEDON

Agassi ousted, Stich likewise Sampras, Becker make semis

Stephen Wilson Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — With his shoulder aching and the Centre Court crowd wildly cheering for his opponent, Pete Sampras kept his cool and held on for a five-set victory over defending champion Andre Agassi today to reach the Wimbledon semifinals.

The top-seeded Sampras, who was treated several times by the trainer for the inflamed tendon in his right shoulder, staged off a furious comeback by Agassi to win 6-2, 6-2, 3-6, 3-6, 6-4 in two hours, 48 minutes.

No. 4 seed Boris Becker won an all-German duel against 1991 champion Michael Stich, coming from behind to win 7-5, 6-7 (7-5), 6-7 (7-5), 6-2, 6-4. Becker never lost serve during the match, which lasted four hours and 14 minutes.

Earlier, on Court One, Jim Courier reached the Wimbledon semifinals for the first time by beating fellow American Todd Martin 6-2, 7-6 (7-5), 6-3.

Two-time champion Stefan Edberg, the odds-makers' favorite, swept past unseeded Cedric Pioline of France 7-5, 7-5, 6-3. In the day's last quarterfinal, three-time champion Boris Becker faced fellow German Michael Stich.

It's the first time since 1927 that the top four men's seeds have made it to the semifinals. On Friday, Sampras will face Becker and Edberg will play Courier.

Sampras overcame considerable adversity in order to beat Agassi. Besides his shoulder problems, he had the overwhelmingly pro-Agassi crowd to contend with. Even Sampras' errors drew wild cheers.

Agassi's fans included Hollywood entertainer Barbra Streisand, who sat in the players' box and frequently jumped to her feet to lead the applause. After winning a key point, Agassi would often pump his fists and look over at his entourage.

Agassi appeared to have the momentum after winning the third and fourth sets, but Sampras regained the advantage when he broke for a 3-2 lead in the final set.

Sampras had two match points at 5-3, but Agassi saved both. In the next game, however, Sampras served out the match at love. He hit three aces in a row — his 20th, 21st and 22nd of the match — to go up 40-0 and finished with a good serve that Agassi returned wide.

"He raised his game a level and I couldn't answer," Agassi said. "That's the bottom line."

Agassi — and the crowd — looked dazed during the first two sets as Sampras dominated thoroughly, serving and volleying with authority and playing steady if unspectacular shots from the baseline. Sampras took the pace off the ball, and Agassi couldn't find his rhythm or timing.

"I felt just an inch away from hitting offensive shots," Agassi said. "I don't know if it was my feet or nerves."

Agassi made his move at the start of the third set when he broke serve for the first time for a 2-0 lead. At that stage, Streisand and many other fans gave Agassi a standing ovation.

"I was just determined to fight until I could pull things together," he said. "Once I got the break on him, it allowed me to believe I could do it."

Pumped up, Agassi swept through the third and fourth sets, punctuated by a crushing inside-out backhand passing shot to break Sampras and force a fifth set.

"After he broke me in the third set, I started thinking about my shoulder," Sampras said. "I started sloping and hanging my head a little bit. But it was something I could play through and I just told myself to suck it up for the last set. It was more mental than anything."

Once Sampras got the service break, he was in charge — even though he took a painkiller and winced as the trainer treated his shoulder during the changeovers.

"Pete is the kind of player who steamrolls players," Agassi said. "When he got up that break, it didn't seem like he slowed up at all. He raised his game a level and I couldn't answer. That's the bottom line."

As for Streisand, Agassi, said, "It's always nice to have a close friend be here to share in a victory or a defeat."

Sampras said he would receive more treatment on his shoulder but expects to be ready for Friday's semifinals.

Courier has won the French Open and Australian Open twice. But he has never had much success on grass, reaching the Wimbledon quarterfinals once. He said he's enjoying himself this year as never before.

"The fun started a while ago, but this is where it gets really exciting," he said. "No one was thinking that I had any chance, but I've got to go out there and swing away and see what happens."

The 6-foot-6 Martin got to the quarterfinals on the strength of a big serve-and-volley attack, but Courier managed to keep him at the baseline with his strong groundstrokes.

When Martin did come in, Courier was often ready with passing shots. Courier also capitalized on Martin's double faults on several key points.

Martin's one chance to make the match interesting came when he earned a set point with Courier serving at 4-5 in the second set. But Martin squandered the opportunity, when on the fourth shot of the rally, he sailed a forehand way beyond the baseline.

Courier held serve, and in the subsequent tiebreaker, hit a forehand return winner down the line to win it 7-5. Courier dominated the third set.

The women's semifinals are set for Thursday, although virtually everyone assumes it will be Steffi Graf and Martina Navratilova vying for the title on Saturday.

Graf, the top seed and defending champion, and Navratilova, the No. 2 seed and nine-time champion, have reached the semifinals with such ease that virtually everyone assumes they will face each other in the championship match Saturday.

Neither player has lost a set so far. In five matches, Navratilova has dropped just 16 games and Graf only 15.

Navratilova had a slightly easier time in Tuesday's quarterfinals, cruising to a 6-3, 6-1 victory over Natalia Zvereva. Graf saved a set point before punishing Jennifer Capriati 7-6 (7-3), 6-1.

The other women's semifinalists are Conchita Martinez, who beat Helena Sukova 6-1, 6-4, and Jana Novotna, a 6-4, 6-3 winner over Gabriela Sabatini.

Pete Sampras (left) consoles fellow American Andre Agassi after Sampras won their quarterfinal match 6-2, 6-2, 3-6, 3-6, 6-4 Wednesday.

Boris Becker acknowledges the crowd after ousting fellow German Michael Stich 7-5, 6-7 (7-5), 6-7 (7-5), 6-2, 6-4 Wednesday at Wimbledon.

Based on past performances, Graf ought to have little trouble with Martinez and Navratilova should ease past Novotna in Thursday's semis. Graf and Navratilova both have 7-0 records against their challengers.

As Navratilova chases her 10th Wimbledon crown at the age of 36, she said she is feeling more confident and relaxed with every match.

"The closer I get, the better I feel about it," she said. "It's been a gradual ascent to better form, and it's holding. ... The tournament gets easier emotionally for me as I go on."

Just being at Wimbledon gives Navratilova special motivation.

"Sometimes it's hard to produce your best tennis at a place like this," she said. "You just win on heart more than on form sometimes. But, you know, they both seem to be working well."

"I still have the desire to play well regardless of the tournament, but here you don't even have to work at it. If anything, I have to sort of pull back and not get too excited."

NCAA

Football playoffs get thrown for a loss

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Advocates for a college football playoff were thrown for a loss Wednesday.

The Presidents Commission said it will not put a question on the ballot at January's NCAA convention asking schools if they want to pursue a football playoff.

Other groups could do so, but the lukewarm response by the powerful commission is not good news for playoff proponents.

"It's fair to say there's no great enthusiasm for (a playoff)," UCLA Chancellor Charles Young said at a news conference following the commission's summer meeting.

At the urging of Dick Schultz, the NCAA's lame-duck executive director, the commission listened to a 70-minute presentation on playoff possibilities Tuesday and agreed to discuss the concept Wednesday.

Some presidents had speculated they might ask schools to indicate at the January convention if they wished to pursue a playoff. A similar question at the 1988 convention received a resounding "no."

"There is no plan to put an action item on the agenda," Young said. "On the other hand, there was no feeling that it's not something we ought to continue to examine, to take a look at."

The presentation by Nike, Inc., and Creative Artists Agency of Hollywood promised the presidents about $30 million net on a two-team playoff, $60 million for a four-team series and about $102 million for a playoff system involving eight teams.

On gender equity, O'Brien said the presidents urged the task force to be "sensitive" to the fact that revenue-producing sports such as football and men's basketball help pay for both men's and women's non-revenue sports at most schools.

The task force, using federal legislation Title IX as a guide, is considering possible legislation that would ensure greater sports opportunities for women. A sticking point is how to weigh football in the equation since women do not play football.

"The commission is not trying to make a specific set of recommendations," O'Brien said. "But we think it's inescapable that football has to be considered in an institution's approach to the achievement of equity."

Stringer has new assistant

Iowa women's head basketball coach C. Vivian Stringer announced Tuesday that Tim Eatman has been named a fulltime assistant coach for the Hawkeyes.

Eatman is a 1987 graduate of Talledega College (Ala.). He served as head women's basketball coach at Talledega for three years before joining Mississippi State as an assistant for two seasons. Eatman recently completed one season at the University of Houston as an assistant coach.

Eatman joins the Iowa staff after assistant coach Marianna Freeman accepted the head coaching position at Syracuse University.

Spurs' Robinson will visit neighborhood

NBA all-star center David Robinson will be the feature speaker at the NIKE Hawkeye Open Junior Clinic July 6 at the Finkbine Golf Course driving range.

The clinic will feature a talk by Robinson, instruction from NIKE Tour professionals, and a show from Des Moines club professional and trick shot artist Terry Beardsley. Appearances will also be made by former University of Iowa and NBA standout Bobby Hansen and a number of current Hawkeye athletes.

The clinic begins at 12:30 p.m. Kids will be admitted free if they bring a recyclable container. Without the container, admission will be $2.

Drake wrestlers sue

DES MOINES (AP) — Drake University wrestlers are demanding reinstatement of the program in a lawsuit against the school, which dropped the sport in March.

The suit, filed Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Des Moines, does not ask for monetary damages.

"They're asking for reinstatement of the program," said Lawrence Marucci, a West Des Moines lawyer who is representing the wrestlers.

Drake officials announced March 11 that the school would drop the wrestling program at the end of the season because it was costing too much to run the sport. The university has had wrestling since 1965.

School officials said they would honor the financial aid commitments to the wrestlers who stayed at the university.

Athletic director Lynn King said Tuesday the university's decision to terminate the program has not changed.

Lonnie Timmerman, who had been Drake's wrestling coach, said he was not involved in the lawsuit. But Timmerman noted, "For the good of the young men, I would like to see it brought back."

The lawsuit follows earlier efforts to encourage reinstatement of the program.

COLLEGE

Illini refuse Hamilton

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Thomas Hamilton, the 7-foot-4 All-Stater for 1993 state champion Chicago King High School, has been denied entrance to the University of Illinois and will not play basketball there in the fall, the college said Wednesday.

Hamilton failed to provide sufficient test scores for the Committee for Admissions for Student Athletes, school spokesman Dick Barnes said.

"We don't know if it was ACTs or SATs or how many times he took the test," Barnes said.

But Hamilton's letter of intent to play for Illinois has been voided, Barnes said.

Barnes said Hamilton's scores apparently were so low that he could not be admitted as a Proposition 48 candidate who could attend classes but not play basketball or practice with the team his freshman year.

Barnes said Hamilton's options would include reapplying to Illinois.

Majkowski a Raider?

LOS ANGELES — Don Majkowski is close to signing with the Los Angeles Raiders and a deal could be completed by the end of the week.

"We're still negotiating with them and are hopeful we'll get it done shortly," Majkowski's agent, Bob Woolf, said Wednesday.

While Woolf said several other teams are interested in the free agent who spent his first six seasons with the Green Bay Packers, the Raiders are at the top of the quarterback's list.

SPORTS QUIZ

Q Who are Iowa basketball's seven first-round draft choices?

See answer on Page 9.

Earl 'slips' from Detroit to Boston

Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON — With the Big Three down to an Old One, the Boston Celtics finally used the draft to rebuild their forward line by taking Iowa center Acie Earl of Iowa on Wednesday night.

Only 39-year-old Robert Parish remains from one of the best front courts in NBA history. Larry Bird retired before last season and Kevin McHale retired afterward.

Despite anticipating their departure, Boston drafted small forward Rick Fox and guards Dee Brown and Jon Barry the last three years.

The Celtics finally addressed their needs by taking the 6-foot-11½ Earl, a shot-blocker with slow feet who Boston thought might be drafted as early as the 10th pick.

They added still more height by announcing an agreement with 6-foot-10 power forward Dino Radja of Croatia, who had played in Europe since Boston drafted him in the second round in 1989.

And 6-9 forward Ed Pinckney, who missed nearly all of last season following knee surgery, is expected back.

"For a team that obviously has size needs, we have to feel pretty good," Boston senior executive vice president Dave Gavitt said.

Asked what Earl's greatest strength was, Celtics chief scout Rick Weitzman answered simply, "6-11½." He added, however, that he doesn't expect Earl to make an immediate impact.

Boston had no pick in the second round, having traded it to New Jersey in 1989 for guard John Bagley.

Earl is Iowa's all-time leader in blocked shots, second in points and fifth in rebounds. He averaged 16.9 points and 8.9 rebounds per game as a senior and 15.3 points and 7 rebounds per game for his career. He also passes well from the low post.

Weitzman said Earl improved in the second half of the season after Iowa forward Chris Street, an outstanding rebounder, died in a car accident.

"He's never been a dominant rebounder. He's never been hungry to make it to the next level prior to the middle of last season," Weitzman said. "I think the death of his good friend Chris Street" matured him as a player.

Earl is the first center drafted by the Celtics in the first round since Greg Kite in 1983. They have had just two starting centers in the past 23 years — Dave Cowens from 1970-71 through 1979-80 and Parish since then.

"Of the big men after Shawn Bradley," who was drafted by Former Iowa center Acie Earl (55) was chosen with the Boston Celtics. Earl, a 6-foot-11 shot blocker, was 19th pick of the 1993 NBA draft Wednesday by the Boston Celtics. Earl, a 6-foot-11 shot blocker, was expected to go as high as the Detroit Pistons' 10th pick.

Philadelphia with the second pick, Earl "has a legitimate chance to be a starting center in the NBA and I wasn't totally sure about the other big guys in that regard," Weitzman said.

He added that he didn't know why Earl wasn't taken earlier as expected.

"It's no big deal," Earl said. "I want to be on a team that's up and coming and doesn't want to stay in the cellar."

Gavitt said Earl's style is a little like Parish's when he was young.

"He looks a little awkward," Gavitt said, "but he gets the job done."

He added that he didn't know yet if he was relieved to be free of the burden of finding a big man who could eventually replace Parish.

"This kid's got a lot of potential, but ask me that question three or four years from now," Gavitt said. "I'll be able to answer it a little better."

"Hopefully," coach Chris Ford said, "with Robert as his tutor, he'll pick up some good habits."

"I'll show people over the years that the Boston Celtics were very smart in drafting me," Earl said.

PRIME TIME BASKETBALL

Millard's 3-point game blossoming

Hits 4 in Fitzy's 120-114 win

Curtis Riggs
The Daily Iowan

Russ Millard is doing his level-best to dispel the rumor that power forwards can't hit 3-pointers in Prime Time League action this summer.

"I try to work on it every week," said Millard, who opened the game for Fitzpatrick's Wednesday by knocking down three straight 3-pointers, and ended up 4 for 8 from the 3-point arc.

"It's part of my game and everybody needs to know it," Millard said. "I just need time to go down."

Millard, a 6-foot-8 sophomore forward for the Hawkeyes, scored 33 points, along with 12 rebounds, to lead Fitzpatrick's to a 120-114 win over Hills Bank.

Chris Kingsbury chipped in 13 for Fitzpatrick's. He also had eight rebounds and 10 assists.

Millard says that he is impressed with the play of Kingsbury, a 6-foot-5, 220-pound McDonald's all-American who will play for Iowa next season.

"Chris is a real good team player," Millard said. "He is going to be a good addition to our team in the fall."

"He is a hard nosed player who is not afraid to go in for a rebound," Millard added.

Former NBA center Les Jepsen led the Hills Bank squad with 35 points and 12 rebounds. Wade Lookingbill added 24 for Hills. Hawkeye senior point guard Kevin Smith also had 24 for Hills, along with 10 assists.

Mike Kleppe had 20 points for Fitzy's. Bill Jacobson was good for 19 points, 12 boards and 10 assists. Troy Washpun had 14 points for the brew pub team.

Former Iowa player Bart Casey scored 13 for Hills and added four rebounds and four assists.

Going up against former pro big men is good preparation for Big Ten action, according to Millard.

"They've been around, and it's always good to go up against big bodies because there are big bodies in the Big Ten," Millard said. "Any time you can go up against Les or Brad (Lohaus) it's going to be good for you."

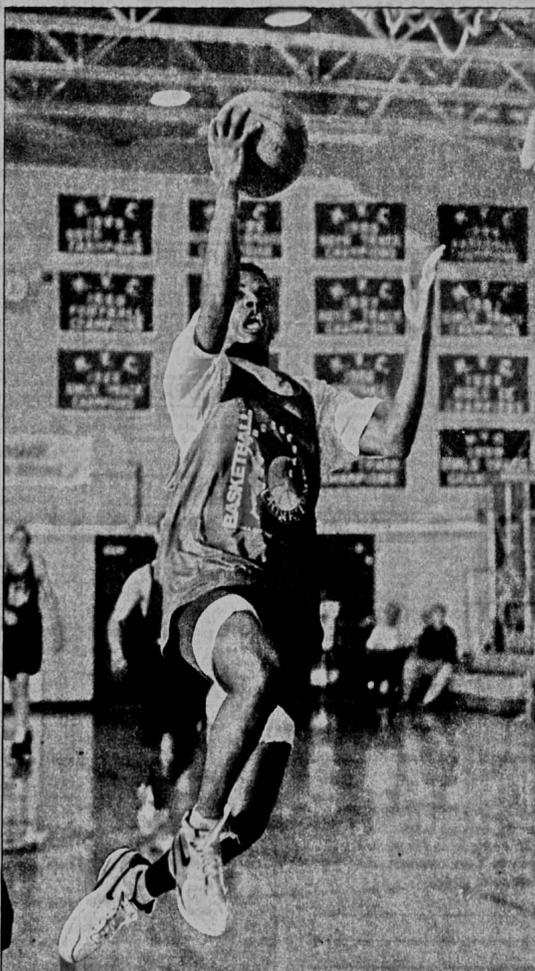

In other Prime Time play Wednesday the Nike team downed Imprinted Sportswear/Goodfellow Printing, 103-91. Jeff Hrubes scored 25 and Gerry Smith added 23 for Nike.

Former Iowa forward Jay Webb scored 37 points and grabbed 12 boards for IS/GP. David Hickman scored 18 for IS/GP. Andrew Nielsen had 10 points for IS/GP.

David Kruse scored 18 points and had 14 rebounds for Nike. Mitch Doyle had 15 points and Willie Hodges added 12 for Nike.

The Prime Time League is on hiatus until Wednesday, July 7 when First National Bank takes on IS/GP at 6 p.m. at City High.

U of I Credit Union will tangle with Fitzpatrick's at 7:30 p.m., and Hills Bank plays Nike, also at 7:30 p.m.

Hills Bank's Kevin Smith scored 24 points and had 10 assists in Fitzpatrick's 120-114 win Wednesday during Prime Time action at Iowa City High.

Magic tricks shake up draft, team

Fred Goodall
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Goodbye Matt Guokas and Chris Webber. Hello Anfernee Hardaway.

The Orlando Magic reached into a bag of tricks twice Wednesday — first replacing the only coach in the club's four-year history and then stunning fans by drafting Webber No. 1 only to trade his rights to the Golden State Warriors for Hardaway, the third pick, and three future first-round choices.

The move will save money for the Magic, which is already $3.5 million over the projected league salary cap of $15 million for next season. It also gives Orlando a much-needed point guard to feed the ball to Shaquille O'Neal.

"Our goal was to select the player we wanted while using the leverage that comes with having the top pick," said Magic director of player personnel John Gabriel. "We felt Anfernee Hardaway was the best player in the draft."

Webber, the best power forward available, was the overwhelming choice of fans who booed when the trade was announced at a draft party in Orlando Arena.

The 6-foot-7 Hardaway is more versatile than Webber, though, and changed the thinking of management when he returned to Orlando for a second workout Tuesday.

"There's no question we fell in love with him. I've been in basketball for a long time and he showed me things I haven't seen," general manager Pat Williams said. "We've got a guy who will run our ball club for the next 12 or 15 years."

Besides getting a player who should be easier to sign than the first selection, Williams said the addition of Golden State's first-round picks — the first no earlier than 1996 — should help the franchise remain strong for the next 20 years.

"There's never been a deal like this involving three draft picks," said Williams. "It gives us 11 first-rounders over the next seven years."

Hardaway averaged 22.8 points, 8.5 rebounds and 6.4 assists per game as a junior at Memphis State last season. He's worked out with O'Neal in California this summer and is looking forward to joining him in Orlando.

Credit Union defense earns 112-81 win

Kris Wiley
The Daily Iowan

Coach Ron Nove and the University of Iowa Community Credit Union team think they have the answer to winning in the Prime Time League.

"Our defense is what's made us do better," Nove said after UICCU defeated First National Bank, 112-81, Wednesday night at City High. "The last couple games we played pretty good defense. We seem to have a better team defense than some of the other teams in the league."

"We held them to 81 points," he continued. "That's pretty good in the Prime Time League."

UICCU recorded 14 steals against First National, including three by former Iowa football player Dwight Sistrunk, who scored 11 points and dished out eight assists.

"I think we're playing a lot better on the defensive end," said Iowa's Jim Bartels, who finished with 20 points, seven rebounds and 11 assists. "I think that's what we're doing kind of well on the offensive end. We're getting rebounds and looking up the court and pushing it."

First National was led by ex-Simpson player Chris Lehman, who was 5 for 6 from 3-point range and scored 23 points. But the team was without its first-round pick, incoming Iowa freshman Jess Spletles, who will be out four to six weeks because of shin splints.

"I think we've improved greatly as a team," Bartels said. "Every one's coming in and playing well. We're getting contributions from everybody."
