Pattycake, Pattycake: make me a gorilla

NEW YORK (AP) — Timmy the gorilla, whose failed appearance on the stage in New York City’s Central Park last week appeared to the clowns and the audience, is to be reunited with his mother, Pattycake, at a hearing in federal court. The case involves a dispute between the clowns and the New York City Board of Health about whether the gorillas should be allowed to perform.

Pattycake is the mother of Timmy, born in 1975. The gorillas were taken away from the clowns by federal authorities in 1976 after a public outcry. The clowns have been trying to get the gorillas back ever since.

The clowns contend that the gorillas are being mistreated and that they should be returned to their natural habitat. They argue that the gorillas would be better off in the wild than in a controlled environment. The clowns also say that the gorillas were overfed and underexercised while they were in government custody.

The government argues that the gorillas are better off in a controlled environment where they can receive proper care and attention. The government also contends that the gorillas are too habituated to humans to be released into the wild.

The court case is scheduled to begin next week. The clowns are hoping for a favorable outcome and believe that Timmy can be a goodwill ambassador for the gorilla population.

Elhers has proven herself extremely, not moderate

David M. Malloy

"My mother told me that you can't judge the company you keep. I said, 'What makes you think I know who my friends are?'" President Clinton, for he claims to be an upstanding example of correct behavior. It is surrounding himself with indi- viduals who have been notori- ous for their proclivities towards rape and violence.

Elhers, nominated to be surgeon general of the US, was asked by the American Medical Association to resign due to issues of consent.

The most horridness of a rape is that the victim is never at fault. She should not be punished for her violation. She should not have to live in fear of violence, in pain, and in prostitution. The problem that women are facing in this world is that they are not being given the respect and the rights that they deserve. Therefore, the time has come to recognize the rights of women and to take action to protect them.

She also believes the answer is more important in public health, where she has spent a lifetime of work.

Elhers is also a staunch supporter of the science of sex education.

While sex education is not a bad thing, Elhers found that the use of condoms decreased the number of HIV positive cases. However, the use of condoms alone is not enough to prevent the spread of HIV.

Letter requires clarification

PHILLY SCALFY

Dear Mr. Bagby,

I am writing in response to your letter to the editor published in the June 6, 1993 issue of the Iowa Hawkeye Express. I would like to address some of your comments and concerns regarding the study of surgical procedures to prevent pregnancy.

Firstly, I would like to clarify the context of the study. The study was conducted as part of a larger project examining the effectiveness and acceptability of surgical methods for contraception. The procedures were performed in a medical setting, and informed consent was obtained from all participants.

Your concern about the potential for panic disorder is valid, and it is important to note that the study was designed to minimize any distress that might be caused to participants. The procedures for measuring anxiety levels were carefully selected to ensure that they would be as non-invasive as possible while still providing accurate data.

Additionally, I would like to address your claim that the study was conducted without proper consent. In fact, all individuals involved in the study provided written informed consent prior to participation. The institutional review board (IRB) approved the study protocol, and all procedures were conducted in accordance with ethical guidelines established by the IRB.

Furthermore, it is important to note that the study did not involve any forceful or intrusive procedures. The surgical methods used were minimally invasive and did not require any significant medical intervention.

I would be happy to provide you with more information about the study or answer any further questions you may have. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any further concerns.

Sincerely,

Dr. Jane Doe

Alzheimer's effects studied at UI
A group of UI researchers will be able to use 2,000 cases from the American Mental Health Clinical Research Center to learn more about the disease.

The group, led by Dr. John Warren, a professor at the College of Public Health, will be able to study the effects of Alzheimer's disease, as well as the effects of the disease on other diseases, such as Parkinson's and Huntington's disease.

The group will also be able to study the effects of Alzheimer's disease on the immune system, as well as the effects of the disease on the heart and blood vessels.

The group will also be able to study the effects of Alzheimer's disease on the brain, as well as the effects of the disease on the brain's ability to learn and remember.

The group will also be able to study the effects of Alzheimer's disease on the liver, as well as the effects of the disease on the liver's ability to break down drugs and other substances.

Aspin expects policy to still dissuade gays

Dona Canata

WASHINGTON — Defense Sec- retary Les Aspin said Tuesday he has no intention of imposing a ban on homosexuals in the military despite the Supreme Court's decision that such a policy is unconstitutional.

"We appreciate the Court's decision, but it does not change our decision," Aspin said. "We are prepared to work to make our military as effective and as respectful as possible to all members of our society." Aspin said.

Aspin's statement came as the Supreme Court ruled that a military policy that permitted homosexual service members was unconstitutional. The court said the policy was discriminatory and violated the Constitution's equal protection clause.

Aspin said the defense department had reviewed all the restrictions on homosexual service members and had concluded that the policy was discriminatory.

Aspin said he was disappointed by the court's decision and added, "We will continue to work to make our military as effective and as respectful as possible to all members of our society.

Aspin said he had received many letters and phone calls in support of the policy and that he had considered the opinions of many people.

Aspin said that he hoped the court's decision would not affect the military's ability to attract the best people.

"We will continue to work to make our military as effective and as respectful as possible to all members of our society," Aspin said.

He added that he had received many letters and phone calls in support of the policy and that he had considered the opinions of many people.

"We're just trying to minimize the damage to homes in this area," he said. "Everyone around here has been great. We had one guy and his son who came down here from Des Moines to help.

Across town at the headquarters of the Cedar Valley Mutual, over 200 volunteers worked much of the day沿着 the Mississippi, and 30,000 of the city's residents were evacuated as the lake level continued to rise. The National Weather Service has issued a flood watch for the area, indicating that flooding is possible within the next 48 hours.

"People are making big mistakes," Iowa City City Manager Stephen Atkins said. "They're not prepared for what might be coming.

Although there is still uncertainty about the exact timing and extent of the flooding, Atkins said that if people were not prepared for what might be coming, they were not prepared for what might be coming.

"We had one guy and his son who came down here from Des Moines to help," Atkins said. "They're not prepared for what might be coming.

"It's important to know how many violations exist," Atkins said. "Some of them have planned these big events because it's cheaper and we can turn pictures of the water before they're done." Atkins said.

The administration hopes to have Freeh's nomination confirmed before Congress breaks for its August recess.

Redden says he's always popular in Washington. It still is even with even Cleveland, the other team that needs a linebacker with this year's draft.

"We're going to be making a quality of leadership to our team that this year we don't have last year," Redden said.
