Drought hoped for, but rain likely

Wednesday morning's crest on Coralville Lake means the fate of those downstream now lies in the sky, as city officials in both Iowa City and Coralville say they have done all they can do to prepare for further flooding.

The crest, which came early in the morning, will have little or no effect on water levels on the Iowa River, Coralville Lake Park Manager John Castle said, adding that the Army Corps of Engineers has decided to keep outflows from the dam constant at around 24,600 cubic feet per second.

"Apparently they feel that this is about enough," he said. "Any larger outflows and we start flooding other roads and homes."

Castle said the corps plans to control the outflow by cutting back on the amount of water it lets out of the dam's gates, which again pushes back the date at which the lake's level will fall to where it is no longer going over the spillway.

The lake's crest, at 716.66 feet, was about 6 inches lower than the corps had anticipated.

"At this point, the crest doesn't really affect people downstream," Castle said. "Some people must overrate the importance of the crest, because it isn't going to make a difference in the outflow from the dam."

Barring rain, water could be off the spillway in a week to 10 days, See OUTFLOW, Page 8

U.S., Japan feud over trade agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and Japan kept up their war of words Wednesday over a recently signed trade agreement. U.S. officials said that they are prepared to impose tests of their own, barring a mutually acceptable method, to measure whether Japan's markets have been opened to Americans.

Deputy U.S. Trade Representative Charlene Barshefsky told Congress that "We have made it very clear where we cannot agree, the United States will, if it must, unilaterally apply indicators."

Barshefsky's comments at a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing marked the first time the U.S. side has publicly stated that it will select and impose its own numerical targets if it cannot reach agreement with the Japanese.

Fierce fighting reported in Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — About 200 rebels attacked the northern city of Esteli on Wednesday and engaged government troops in fierce fighting, in the worst outbreak of violence since Nicaragua's civil war ended in 1990.

One attacker was killed and one soldier wounded in the assault, about 60 miles north of Managua, the Interior Ministry said.

The army sent tanks, attack helicopters and troop reinforcements to put down the attack, which reportedly was made by former Contra rebels and discharged soldiers.

PRIORITIES SET

Renovation tops list on regents' budget

CEDAR FALLS — The Iowa state Board of Regents approved the UI's $290 million General Education Fund Operating Budget for Fiscal Year 1994, but de-prioritized capital improvement plans for Fiscal Year 1995 at its meeting Wednesday in Cedar Falls.

The General Fund, which saw a 4.1 percent increase over FY '93, did not change from its preliminary form, UI Vice President for Finance and University Services Douglas True said.

The budget supports the UI General University, which is comprised of the nine colleges. State appropriations increased by $6.4 million or 3.6 percent for FY '94.

The UI may not receive its requested funding for FY '95, however, as the board reprioritized the General Fund Capital Program recommendations.

According to Regents Executive Director Wayne Richey, 10 priority projects are identified to serve as a guide in evaluation. The projects which receive the highest priority involve fire safety and deferred maintenance.

"The basic idea is that we restore what we have before we build new facilities," he said.

However, the actual prioritiza-

UI MAKING EMERGENCY PLANS

Rawlings updates board on campus damage

Lesley Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

CEDAR FALLS — UI President Hunter Rawlings said he would have liked to have been able to tell the Iowa state Board of Regents that the worst of the flooding on campus is over. But he couldn't.

Rawlings addressed the board about the current flooding situation at a meeting Wednesday in Cedar Falls. He said record outflows from the Coralville Reservoir will not allow the UI to proceed with the cleanup process and has greatly affected UI activities and planning.

"Right now our major concern is the threat this represents to the water supply," he said. "We're in continuous communication with the corps of engineers and the city of Iowa City. Both have been extremely cooperative."

Rawlings said UI officials are making emergency plans that include protocols in case of water shortage.

"Our backup plans give us a great deal of confidence," he said.

The long-term outlook is that it will still be a number of weeks before the UI campus is out of danger, Rawlings said.

"We will continue to look at large discharges from the reservoir because it is now reaching its highest levels in history," he said. "This continues day after day after day and I think some people have been lured into thinking it's safe because of the good weather we've been having in Iowa City. We're not out of danger because water from other areas of the state is still affecting us."

Vice President for Finance and University Services Douglas True told board members that officials will be unable to find out what the damages are until flooded buildings become accessible.

"Right now we're estimating $3.5 million," he said. "I hate to use that number, though, because the truth is we won't really know until the water recedes and we can take a good look at it."

If things stabilize it will take a couple of weeks for the water levels to go down, True said.

BROKEN PIPE, 'POACHING' BLAMED

DM loses 30 million gallons of water

Mike Glover

DES MOINES — Overeager residents and a broken pipe drained 30 million gallons from the city's flood-contaminated water system and delayed clearance to begin using water, officials said Wednesday.

Mayor John Dorrian issued "a final, desperate call" pleading with residents to "leave their taps off."

Though city officials said today would be the earliest point where people could begin taking showers and flushing toilets, much of the water system appeared to be in unofficial operation.

"Yesterday, about 30 million gallons of water disappeared someplace," said water plant manager L.D. McMullen at a news conference Wednesday.

Later Wednesday, McMullen said officials discovered a broken water main that had contributed to the drain on the system. He said it was impossible to know how much water was lost to the break and how much residents had taken out before they were supposed to.

City Manager Cy Carney said officials were studying ways to shut off sections of the city to stop the drain on the water system.

"The easiest way is voluntary cooperation," Carney said. "The water works is looking right now at ways to divert or cut off certain areas, maybe zones, where there is high use. If that can be done, we will do that."

Officials said they were able to resume filling the system late Wednesday, and scheduled a 9:30 p.m. news conference at which they hoped to announce they were canceling an order allowing only essential workers from city businesses.

The announcement that they had found a broken pipe came after officials had spent the better part of a day berating residents for using water.

McMullen said the system was very close to being full. "We are very hopeful that we have crossed the last of the hurdles," he said.

The city's water plant began pumping water again Sunday night. Officials have said they must fill the system's 810 miles of pipes with 45 million gallons of water before they will give clearance for water to begin flowing from faucets.

Students bullish on stock market

Experts say investing in stocks can be a risk, but that hasn't stopped some UI students from investing.

Thomas Wanat
The Daily Iowan

For most UI students, those funky letters and numbers running across the bottom of the screen every day on CNN are just that — funky little letters and numbers. For some, though, it's a way to track stocks, and those people are finding out that it's never too early to invest their money.

"It's certainly an experience," UI senior Laura Kauth said. "Overall, it's fairly profitable, too."

Kauth said that for the last three years she has followed her stock in Paramount Communications with a watchful eye. Luckily, she's seen it go up — and the profits are helping her pay for school.

"It gives you that lottery-ticket sensation, but you don't always lose a dollar," Kauth said. "In fact you might win. The chances are a lot better."

Gene Brawner, resident manager and vice president of Dain Bosworth Incorporated, 116 S. Dubuque St., pointed out that students should use caution when investing their money. Especially those who would invest money they need for school.

"Often, we'll strongly discourage them," Brawner said. "It could be a disaster if they can't afford the possible loss."

He explained that long-term investing was what the stock market was all about, with a two- to four-year time frame usually being more profitable than a shorter-term investment. Mutual funds, which are less risky but still profitable, were something that Brawner said he generally recommended to students wanting to invest some money.

Justin Claassen, a UI junior, said he thought mutual funds were great.

"You can make just a killing on some mutual funds," Claassen said. "They spread out your money into many different sectors so it's a lot harder to lose."

In the last few years that he has played the stock market, Claassen said he's lost a couple of hundred dollars. Despite the loss, Claassen remains optimistic.

"I could invest my money in a bank, but it wouldn't make as much money in the long run," he said. "Interest rates at banks are so low right now."

"This is a lot riskier, but if you pay attention to what goes on in the news you can do pretty good," Claassen added.

Studying the market — and talking to a broker — were two things that Brawner recommended to anyone wanting to invest.

"Some people believe that you have to have a certain amount of money just to talk to a broker, but that's not true," Brawner said. "We'll be happy to make an appointment to talk even if they don't have the money to invest right now."

were really into it, but had some misgivings about the video.

"I hope they didn't catch me picking my nose or something," he said.

Jen Smith, a former SCOPE director who helped organize the Sugar show, said she is impressed that the band chose the UI for their video location.

"I think it's pretty cool they made it into a video," she said. "I helped paint the backdrops. It's neat to think that people all over will see the backdrops I painted."

Smith said SCOPE put a lot of time into putting the Sugar concert together and felt the video might have come as a result of that hard work. SCOPE will kick off the fall semester with a budget concert by Fugazi. Tickets for the show, which will also be in the Union's main lounge, cost $5.25.

A small price to pay for a shot at three minutes of glory.

Stupid network tricks may ax pet tricks, Top 10 after move

NBC calls popular Letterman routines their "intellectual property." Leno says the network has little intellect.

Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Critics might call it stupid network tricks. But NBC President Bob Wright said Tuesday there are important legal reasons why David Letterman can't take his Stupid Pet Tricks and Top 10 list to CBS.

Those routines and other popular features on the "Late Night" show Letterman just left are "intellectual property" and must be protected by the network, Wright said.

"It's really not about Dave. It's about intellectual property. It's about copyright issues," Wright told a Television Critics Association news conference. The network can't set a bad precedent, he said.

Asked if he thought the network would come across as petty in trying to bar Letterman from taking his famous skits to his new show, Wright said he hoped it wouldn't look that way.

Letterman jumped ship at NBC after he was passed over as Johnny Carson's successor on "The Tonight Show." The job went to Jay Leno.

Letterman's new show on CBS, which debuts Aug. 30, will air one hour earlier than his NBC show and will compete directly with Leno.

At a news conference Monday, Letterman appeared relaxed about the conflict with NBC. He said he hoped to amicably resolve it, adding that it was unlikely the issue would go to court.

He also indicated at least one of the bits — the Stupid Pet Tricks — probably belonged to him because it was created for a morning show that he owned.

Letterman also said there is a wealth of new comedy ideas to be mined, indicating he didn't need to rely on his old standards for success.

Leno told reporters Tuesday he would be just as happy to see Letterman take his routines with him.

"It's David's jokes," he said.

Leno also fired a broadside at his bosses.

"We don't have much intellectual property at NBC," he said. "We have to hang on to all we can get."

Drivers ignoring closures

Molly Spann

The Daily Iowan
Described as hell or high water, some drivers have been creating problems for traffic controllers.

Barricades indicating flood waters on several local city and county roads have been moved and ignored, several officials said.

Ely Road, county road F12 and several gravel roads which have been barricaded are areas where county officials have had the most problems with disobedient drivers, Johnson County Sheriff's Department Lt. Ron Meyer said.

"When we close roads, we close them for public safety, not to make it inconvenient for people," Johnson County Engineer Doug Frederick said.

Fences which were put up across Ely Road to keep cars from traveling down it were removed by people wanting to get through, Frederick said. As a result, a cement barrier was put up on Tuesday.

Meyer said before the cement barrier was in place, violators were a major hassle.

"We were having to sit there to make sure no one would go around them," he said. "We just don't have the manpower or the time to sit there and do that."

Although flood waters along closed streets in Coralville are now too high for drivers to cross,

David Greedy / The Daily Iowan

Jake Winiski, 10, left, along with brother Matt, 9, far right, and Brandon Hinderks, 9, middle, spent a portion of the afternoon Wednesday playing in the flood water at City Park.

Coralville Police Chief Barry Bedford said that last week many drivers ignored street barriers.

"We had barricaded and put up orange plastic fencing all across closed streets and people would either drive through them, over them or take them down," he said.

Frederick said several cars have been removed from ditches after they hydroplaned across flooded roads. Although most water on the county roads is stagnant, several roads south of Iowa City are flooded with moving water and cars could get swept away on them, he said.

"One concern we have is that if people go off the road into an area which is fairly deep, we might not be able to find them," he said.

A car could also become flooded if it is driven over a road covered with water, Frederick said.

Some roads in Coralville are closed for reasons other than concerns about driver safety, Bedford said, adding that further flood damage to businesses and homes can result from wakes caused by cars moving through the water. He said water off of the street can splash up over the sandbags.

Between 15 and 20 tickets were issued over a two-day period last week, Bedford said. Charged with disobeying a traffic-control device, violators received around a $40 fine.

Although Meyer was unsure of the number, he said many tickets have been given to people ignoring flood barriers on county roads. Those fines have ranged between $36 and $38.

If the water on closed streets in Coralville recedes to the point that drivers think they can get through, more problems with barricade violators are expected, Bedford said.

"They'll probably try and we'll continue to fight them," he added.

COUNCIL SENDS WARNING TO BARS

Field House license postponed

Joel Donofrio

The Daily Iowan

Attempting to "send a message" to bar owners who serve underage patrons, the Iowa City City Council voted 4-3 to defer renewal of a class C liquor license for the Field House bar, 111 E. College St. The potency of the Council's action, however, remains in doubt.

According to Judy Sibe of the state's Alcoholic Beverages Division, while local authorities can renew or deny liquor licenses as they see fit, a bar owner whose license is denied renewal can appeal the decision.

"The local authorities have the right to either approve or deny the license renewal, and we have to go along with it unless the owner appeals it," Sibe said. "Most people who are denied renewal appeal the decision, which we would end up hearing."

At last night's meeting, City Attorney Linda Gentry recommended to the Council that they defer the renewal decision until she could further research the issue, and reminded them that an indictment doesn't mean the defendant is guilty.

"You can recommend denial, but renewal will go along its merry way," Gentry added. "Chances are that it will not affect the renewal process."

The renewal will be considered at the Council's next meeting on Aug. 3. City Clerk Marian Karr said that even though the Field House's license expires on July 31, they will be allowed to serve alcohol until the matter is decided.

"The state allows municipalities the flexibility of timely filed applications," Karr said. "If the license expires before the renewal decision is made, the applicant can continue serving alcohol as long as everything is in order and there are no problems with the application process."

"What was discussed last night were pending charges (73 citations filed for underage drinking violations), and a renewal cannot be held up simply because of pending charges," Karr added. "By holding up the renewal process, they were sending a message."

The motion to defer consideration of renewing the license at last night's meeting was raised by Councilor Karen Kubby, seconded by Councilor Bruno Pigott, and it carried with the additional support of councilors Susan Horowitz and Naomi Novick. Councilors John McDonald, Bill Ambrisco and Mayor Darrel Courtney voted against deferral.

"I don't disagree with the questions you've brought up," McDonald told Kubby. "I can understand if you take a negative vote (against renewal) just on principle, to take a stand. That's fine, but that's all you'll be doing."

In the meantime, Mark Eggleston, owner of the Field House, has waived his right to a hearing on the charge of selling alcohol after hours on March 21, 1993. The complaint against the bar was filed by the Department of Public Safety on May 19, Sibe said.

"What he's done is waive his right to hold a hearing on the matter, where he could contest the charge," she said. "By signing an acknowledgement form, he agrees that the facts in the complaint are correct."

Sibe expects the Alcoholic Beverages Division to announce its sanctions against the Field House within the next couple of days. She said that an after-hours violation typically brings a seven-day suspension of an owner's liquor license.

Karr, Sibe and Gentry each stressed that any sanction inflicted upon The Field House by state authorities was unconnected to the Council's discussion of whether to renew the liquor license.

DM weary of false promises to return water

Roger Munns

Associated Press

DES MOINES — People who've gone days without running water are willing to stand in line a little longer for a safe drink or wait a little longer for a hot shower in their own bathroom. Or for a flush.

They even do it with weary smiles.

But some think it's taking too long to get the straight story on why they're waiting so long.

Wednesday was Des Moines' 11th day without running water and was the third day the go-ahead to use water had been promised and then withheld since the rain-swollen Raccoon River swept out of its banks, swamping the water-treatment plant.

Water officials originally hoped to begin refilling the system a week after the disaster, but there have been a series of delays. On Wednesday, water plant manager L.D. McMullen said people would have to wait one more day because 30 million gallons had disappeared overnight, either leaking away from an undiscovered break or poached from the system by citizens.

LeRoy W. Brown, 65, said McMullen was doing the best he can in a bad situation.

"But losing 30 million gallons of water, that's unbelievable,"

Brown said. "They must have a leak someplace, besides people using it."

Brown also speculated that city officials weren't pumping as much water as they said they were.

"Somebody has got to investigate the whole damn water system," he said.

City streets were busy Wednesday, even though some roadways still were covered by a couple of inches of stagnant flood water. The bustle may have been the result of partly cloudy skies and mid-70s temperatures.

Burlap and nylon sandbags still lined buildings in low-lying areas, although those blocking entrances have been tossed aside.

Hilton Coliseum, ISU buildings damaged by flood

Associated Press

AMES — Flooding has caused at least $7.7 million in damage at Iowa State University, nearly half of it in the entertainment-education complex known as the Iowa State Center.

The damage from the flooding along Squaw Creek has prompted university officials to reassess the need for flood insurance, which it doesn't have now.

Normally a placid stream, Squaw Creek bulged out of its banks on July 9, flooding a third of the campus and severely damaging several buildings.

Hilton Coliseum, the school's basketball arena, filled with 14 feet of water that caused an estimated $2.7 million in damage. The water ruined the basketball floor, locker rooms and four rows of seats and left hallways coated with oily, black mud.

The Scheman Continuing Education Building, which sits next to Hilton in the Iowa State Center, had 3 feet of water on the first floor and sustained $1.7 million in damage.

Youthful thespians offer Bard's tragedy

The Daily Iowan

There are practical reasons for taking in a show at Riverside Theatre this weekend; as UI graduate Michael Kachingwe says, with the Theatre Building surrounded by water, "We're the only theater in town that's still afloat."

On a more aesthetic level, however, tonight's debut of "Romeo and Juliet" is of special interest. The production is being staged by the Young People's Company, Riverside Theatre's summer theatre program. The cast members range in age from 14 to 18.

Kachingwe, who is directing "Romeo and Juliet," got his theater master of fine arts in 1991, and will be a professor of theater at the University of Northern Illinois in the fall. But right now, he's having fun doing something he's done quite a lot with groups like For the Young of Art and Arts Outreach: working with teenagers. "I enjoy working with this age group," he says. "They're not only challenging, but also eager to do what you want them to do — but also to be rebellious at times, which is sort of the theme of what 'Romeo and Juliet' is about — young love and rebellion."

Kachingwe said that last year's Young People's Company director, Julia Fischer, suggested "Romeo and Juliet" as a good play for the group to do, and that Riverside Artistic Director Ron Clark and Managing Director Jody Hovland approved the idea. Sixty young people auditioned to be in the company, and Clark and Hovland chose 17 to act in the play. Kachingwe did the actual casting for the show.

He said the entire group — a total of 37 teenagers from across Iowa — not only understands the challenges Shakespearean drama presents, but has met and surpassed those challenges. He feels Shakespeare is no more challenging for high-school students than for any other actors, professional or otherwise.

Members of his cast said putting on the play has been a learning experience, but it's been fun too. "I've never done Shakespeare before," explains Ryan Morris, a high-school freshman from Cedar Rapids who's playing the part of Romeo. "I just dove head-first into it. It's really been an experience for me ... It was hard for me to get into the language at first; I didn't really know what I was saying. The whole cast just worked with it, and we just ended up with the show we have now, which I have a really good feeling about."

Elizabeth Blair, a West High graduate who is playing the part of Lady Capulet, says she deliberately got involved with the YPC because she'd had no experience with Shakespeare, and had mostly done comedy in high school. "I wouldn't have been interested if it hadn't been so different," she said. "Every actress should have a good challenge."

Blair says that the YPC is very different from high-school theater. She said she's never worked on a play under this short of a deadline — five weeks from auditions to performance — but that she's found working on the show "more easygoing and relaxed" than high-school shows.

"The people here aren't all from the same school," she said. "I was curious to see how they'd all get along. But their talents just sort of all came together. A few people knew each other at the start, but most people didn't know anybody. But now, after five weeks, we're like a family."

The material, production deadlines, and tone of the production company aren't the only things that are different from high-school theater, however. According to Ann Carr, a Regina High graduate who is playing Juliet, the YPC has given her and her fellow actors much more input into production decisions than school shows ever did. "I feel like our thoughts are valued more here," she said. "As a group, we compiled how we wanted a scene to be done, then gave our own opinions on how different scenes should be played and what different words meant."

Kachingwe says that giving young people some input is the main goal of the company. "The staff didn't choose this specific path of dealing with the play," he says. "We take the actors' ideas regarding character, story, what makes sense and what doesn't ... if the ideas are useful, we use them."

The Young People's Company, according to assistant director Kate Moncrief, is designed to bring together talented young people and experienced theater professionals. Special assistants to the crew include a number of people from the UI theatre department and the community. Kachingwe says the YPC's version of "Romeo and Juliet" has been shortened "to keep the play from being three hours long."

"A lot of the text refers to Elizabethan jokes that audiences of today don't really get," he says. "We've also cut some long soliloquies that elaborated on certain metaphors. What we've kept is the body of images that make up the heart of the play."

The heart of the play, he says, is one of the things that will pull people in to see it. "It's a wonderful show," he said, "filled with action, passion, tragedy, and quite a bit of humor as well."

Romeo & Juliet opens tonight at 8 in Riverside Theatre, 213 N. Gilbert St. Performances will be held July 23 and 24 at 8 p.m., and July 25 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $8. Call 338-7672 for reservations.

BACK TO THE DRAWING BOARD

Sci-fi, fantasy comics stifle rerun boredom

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

I'm sick this week, so I'm keeping it short and to the point. Once tonight's paper is in order, I can go home, put my feet up, and watch old Simpsons tapes. It's not like there's anything else on TV to watch.

I know I'm not the only one who gives up watching TV over the summer. Everything worth watching is in reruns. As to everything else ... well, if it wasn't worth watching the first time, it's still not worth watching the 12th time.

If you're panicking for a fix of the boob tube, however, there's an elegant solution out there: Innovation Comics' adaptations of popular science fiction/fantasy TV shows.

Innovation is primarily known for its fully painted adaptations of Anne Rice's novels, including "The Vampire Lestat," "Queen of the Damned," "Interview with the Vampire" and "The Master of Rambling Gate." From what I've seen of these, I'd recommend "Interview" as the one with the most consistently haunting, high-quality art; "Rambling Gate," the only one of the group that's a single book rather than a serialized title, is also interesting, particularly for its stylized, stained-glass-window images.

They've also done some highly interesting horror adaptations in the "J.N. Williamson's Masques" series; these anthologies consist of luridly graphic artistic interpretations of horror stories from sources including Stephen King, Robert McCammon, and Mort Castle.

But Innovation's specialty is adaptations of existing works — from Piers Anthony's "On a Pale Horse" to "Child's Play," the movie. Of special interest are its TV adaptations, which not only adapt, but update and recreate existing works — many of them shows that are now unavailable on TV.

"Beauty and the Beast," for instance. This popular fantasy show starred "Terminator" wondermom Linda Hamilton as Catherine, a young woman whose life is saved by Vincent, a poetic, romantic, beastlike man who lives in a separate world in the sewers. The series is co-written by series creator George R. R. Martin.

On the horror end of the spectrum is "Dark Shadows," the recently revived vampire series. The first four issues are available in graphic-novel form, explaining how Barnabas Collins was freed from his tomb after 200 years of imprisonment.

Science fiction? Try "Lost in Space," which is apparently coming back from 1960s dormancy as a big-budget Paramount movie. The series loses nothing on the graphic and grotesque to the horror comics; the current storyline, "Voyage to the Bottom of the Soul," features the "Space Family Robinson" 's capture by some particularly disgusting and vengeful aliens with a metaphorical axe to grind.

And "Quantum Leap" fans will be glad to know that despite NBC's cancellation of the show, there's still somewhere to turn: Sam and Al live on in a bimonthly series of their own. Watch for September's issue, when Sam leaps into an 18-month-old kidnappee.

All four shows attracted small but dedicated audiences — too small to keep the shows from being canceled, but hopefully large enough to keep the comic books going. Innovation's special dedication to its source material, with its definite preference for high-quality painted art and glossy paper rather than the usual comic-book fare, should at least please existing TV fans.

Unfortunately, a lot of these

Innovation Comics

"Interview With the Vampire" is one of a number of interesting adaptations produced by Innovation comics. Other popular Anne Rice titles include "Queen of the Damned" and "The Vampire Lestat."

titles can be difficult to track down. As with most smaller presses, Innovation is represented off and on in stores — Iguana's carries "Lost in Space," Daydreams carries "Masques," and both places have stocked the Anne Rice adaptations, but other titles may have to be specially ordered. The company does put out a monthly publication, "Inside Innovation," which lists the month's offerings; if you're interested, ask for it at Daydreams or send 50 cents to 3622 Jacob St., Wheeling, WV, 26003. It's worth a look.

Certainly it beats out another evening of reruns.

ALBUM REVIEW

Trip Shakespeare

New Trip Shakespeare LP really a mediocre set of covers

Dave Strahan
The Daily Iowan

After two long years, Trip Shakespeare's fifth album has finally been released. Unfortunately, it's something of a disappointment.

You see, Volt isn't like the other records Trip has made. For starters, it only has six songs. Also, there are no original tunes on the record — the album is composed solely of cover songs.

What? Trip Shakespeare a cheesy cover band? If this sounds weird to you, believe me, I felt the same way, and when I put Volt into the tape deck, my worst fears were realized.

To put it simply, there aren't many new musical ideas on Volt. While it's evident the band tried to transform the covers into their own quirky-pop style, most of the transformations don't go far enough, and the songs wind up sounding generic, with little or no unique Trip sound. Despite this initial disappointment, I gave Volt a fair listen, and thankfully did discover several points of redemption.

The album opens with a faithful reproduction of Nick Lowe's "What's So Funny About Peace, Love, and Understanding," a single that can be heard on KRUI. Although the band's reinterpretation doesn't go far enough, it does rumble along with Trippy riffs reminiscent of "Bonneville," from 1991's Lulu.

The second song, Thunderclap Newman's "Something in the Air," is memorable only because it marks the first time orchestral strings have been used on a Trip recording.

The third cover, Big Star's "The Ballad of El Goodo," gets a mixed review from me. Although Trip's version is not nearly as good as Big Star's, it does have an appealing wistful quality. Trip used a sparse vocal and a piano track to underscore the power of this song. For once, the chorus vocals seem heartfelt ("Ain't no one going to turn me 'round.") I was convinced.

For years Trip has performed the Zombies' "Time of the Season" in their live shows. This studio recording lacks the zip of the live version, however, and even a Trippy guitar solo can't resurrect it.

Hüsker Dü's "Dead Set on Destruction" follows, and is the album's low point. Trip Shakespeare is simply not suited to play heavy, minor-sounding songs. It just doesn't seem right. Try to imagine James Taylor singing a raspy George Thorogood song.

Neil Young's "Helpless" is the gem buried in this uninspired work, and is without question the high point of the album. John Munson's sinewy fretless bass work reels the listener in slowly. Dan Wilson's lead vocal is lonely and perfect. There's even an out-of-control guitar solo that Young himself would be proud of. In this one instance, Trip manages to maintain the beauty of the song, while simultaneously making it their own.

But that's the end — Volt is only 25 minutes long. For would-be purchasers, my final word is this: Although it's interesting to hear Trip interpret a mix of songs, it's just not as exciting as hearing Trip do their original songs. While Volt may be nice for an occasional listen, it will never take up much of my music-listening time.

That said, I admit that songs like "Helpless" may be enough for the die-hard fans to make Volt part of their collection. However, it probably shouldn't be the first choice for someone just getting interested in Trip Shakespeare. For the new listener, 1988's Are You Shakespearean?, or 1990's Across the Universe would be a much wiser investment.

LAND PURCHASE PROVES DIFFICULT

Group touts east Iowa zoo idea

Maria Hickey
The Daily Iowan

Eastern Iowa doesn't seem like the place for lions, tigers and bears, but the Hawkeye Zoological Society hopes to bring these wild animals to the area.

The Cedar Rapids-based organization is attempting to purchase land and create a zoo somewhere between Cedar Rapids and Iowa City.

"Zoos are just a family thing," President Rachelle Hansen said. "You can go to the parks, but you have to be more creative to keep yourself and the children entertained."

The group first formed 20 years ago, but became defunct when the bond issue was voted down by Cedar Rapids residents in 1974. Four years ago, the group was again formed when some of the original members decided there just weren't enough outdoor recreational activities in the area.

There is more of a base for donations and attendance today than there ever has been before, according to Hansen. The feasibility research the society has done indicates that the Cedar Rapids and Iowa City area has a large enough population to support a private zoo.

Obtaining land is the biggest hurdle the society faces at this point. Although the organization has 1,800 members willing to pay membership fees, Hansen said there just aren't enough donations.

"At the moment we're pressed for sources for funding," Hansen said. "A lot of people help us and wish us well, but they want something tangible before they kick money in."

The society needs to buy about 80 acres of land, but each time a bid goes up it's snatched away before they have a chance to raise the money, she said, adding they would like to find someone who is planning to sell in the future and will give the group time to raise money. "It's pretty tough to raise funds for land and then go shopping," she said.

The society doesn't plan to have the usual bars and concrete most people expect to see in a zoo. A natural-habitat approach is one that many zoos across the nation are taking in hopes of showing visitors more realistic characteristics of wildlife and giving the animals an environment they are more accustomed to.

Natural-habitat zoos have allowed animals to reproduce more quickly and visitors the chance to see what wild animals are really like, said Beth Tyler, public affairs assistant for American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums.

"We want people to see that the animals are not cruel or dangerous," Tyler said. "That they're worth preserving."

In natural-habitat zoos, moats and high rock walls tipped inward keep animals enclosed but visible to visitors. These nontraditional zoos also mix species from the same habitats instead of dividing them according to species.

Hansen said this approach is much more interesting and educational for visitors than the usual cat/hoof/primate divisions.

"You learn more because you see what's natural rather than watching them watch you," Hansen said.

The Hawkeye Zoological Society plans to receive animals from the AAZPA in an exchange program in order to keep costs down and avoiding taking animals from the wild. The only animals that would need to be captured are those that are endangered and need to be protected, according to Hansen.

Hansen hopes that the zoo would not only be recreational but also a conservational asset.

"You're more careful to an area that an animal lives in if you know what it requires for its life," Hansen said.

TRASH FISH MAY HURT GAME-FISHING

Anglers troubled by impact of floods

Tory Brecht
The Daily Iowan

While land-bound animals have borne the brunt of the flooding, aquatic life forms have been disrupted as well. Just ask local fishing experts.

"Customers are concerned," said Mary Clapham from the Funcrest bait shop. "The flood's going to change the weed growth. And of course, farm run-off is now an even greater threat."

One of the chief concerns of local anglers is the spilling over of Coralville Reservoir water into Lake Macbride.

"It looks like chocolate milk out there," said Paul Sleeper, fisheries technician for the Coralville State Fisheries Station. "This is the first time water from the reservoir has spilled into Macbride in the 40 years it's been here."

The concern is that "garbage" fish, like carp and buffalo, will enter into the lake's chiefly game-fish waters and hurt the fishing.

"We hope the reservoir fish don't come in here," Gwen Prentice, a park ranger, at Lake Macbride said. "And we hope our fish don't go out into the reservoir."

Sleeper said although trash fish

"We hope the reservoir fish don't come in here. And we hope our fish don't go out into the reservoir."

Gwen Prentice, Lake Macbride park ranger are a concern, the fisheries station doesn't foresee any major problems with the lake's fish population.

"I don't think it is going to have a major impact," Sleeper said. "We had some carp and buffalo in the lake before, so they shouldn't be too much of a problem."

In fact, Sleeper said many game fish, such as walleyes, white bass and crappies are actually moving over the dam and into the lake. The only major difference in the fishing, Sleeper said, may be water clarity.

"The reservoir is much more muddy than the lake," he said. "We're getting a lot of silt over here."

Other than murky waters and trash fish, the main deterrent to fisherman is getting to the water.

Steve Cleppe of Cleppe's bait shop in Ely, Iowa, north of Lake Macbride, said business has slowed down considerably.

"There hasn't been anybody fishing, because they can't get to the lake," he said. Cleppe said he has seen farmers fishing in fields that were once filled with corn.

The one fish that hasn't been effected by the high waters was catfish. To believe the fishing experts, catfish are practically begging to be caught.

"The catfish are right in the flooded vegetation," Sleeper said. "They're close to shore, where the grass used to be." Sleeper said people have been catching them on night crawlers and minnows.

The full impact of the flood on the fish population won't be known until fall, when Sleeper and employees of the fisheries station conduct their population study.

To count fish, they use an electro-fishing boat, which sends a current into the water, temporarily stunning the fish and bringing them to the surface, where station employees can count them.

"If we have a problem with too many rough fish, we can open the lake to commercial fishing," Sleeper said.

Prentice said while fishing from shore is still allowed, boating on Lake Macbride remains closed.

Iowa judge reprimanded for belittling witnesses

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES - The Iowa Supreme Court on Wednesday reprimanded a district court judge who ridiculed witnesses in his courtroom.

"Flamboyance in decorum and attempts at clever ridicule are not admired characteristics in a jurist," the high court said.

It issued a formal reprimand to Judge James D. Jenkins, who sits in southern Iowa's 8th Judicial District.

The Judicial Qualifications Commission had recommended the reprimand, saying Jenkins had issued "a series of inappropriate and unnecessary characterizations of people appearing in his court."

The most-often cited instance came when Jenkins referred to one witness as a "beer-bellied, full-bearded, unemployed, seedy, cover-all-clad lout."

Jenkins had argued that his comments were taken out of context.

"The people who come to court, litigants, witnesses, jurors, even lawyers, cannot select the judge who is to preside over them," the high court said. "Although circumstances may on occasion demand sternness, a judge should strive to be kind."

In issuing the reprimand, the high court said Jenkins had repeatedly ridiculed witnesses. While a single incident might not have merited the reprimand, there was a clear pattern, the court said.

"Such authority should not be entrusted to those who, either deliberately or through thoughtlessness, offend the ordinary sensibilities of citizens," the court ruled.

U.S. economy has advantages

Jude Sunderbruch
The Daily Iowan

LONDON — Without doubt, the United States and its economy have problems and are facing new challenges as the 21st century approaches. But after having a close look at the economic situation in over a dozen European countries this summer, I've realized that it's important not to overlook America's advantages.

As Europe struggles and its recession appears to deepen in some areas, the slow but fairly steady recovery of the United States is appearing more and more attractive. While the recent floods have been a setback, few economists think they will throw the recovery off course.

In addition, one needs to remember that the United States has already achieved what the European Community is stumbling towards: a single currency, a strong central bank, and common industrial, social and political policies. Although largely taken for granted in the United States, this standardization provides enormous benefits.

Looking to the other corners of the globe, it is again apparent that the United States is largely unrivaled in having a very large marketplace where it is possible to exchange goods and services freely, without troubling border difficulties, and with the same currency. If the North American Free Trade Agreement is implemented, even more benefits will be realized.

Although critics at home and abroad are right that more must be done to reduce the U.S.'s budget and trade deficits, it would be wrong to ignore the fact that the economy of the United States, while not invincible, has many strengths.

FLOODING CONTINUES

Rain delays Midwest cleanup

Christopher Sullivan
Associated Press

More rain set back cleanup and recovery efforts Wednesday in parts of the Midwest, and the economic ripples lapped far from the flood zone.

"We've already seen ships leave the West Coast without the grain they're supposed to have," U.S. Transportation Secretary Federico Pena said as he examined flood damage along the Mississippi in Keokuk, Iowa.

Also affected, he said, was the auto industry's so-called just-in-time delivery system, which puts parts at factories within hours of when they'll be assembled into cars.

Officials could not guess when barge traffic would return to normal on the Mississippi River, but Pena promised that local officials straining to maintain soggy flood barriers would be consulted. Barge wakes, he noted, "will further weaken levees that are very sensitive right now."

More residents evacuated homes in Kansas and Missouri.

Along the River Des Peres in south St. Louis, where a levee break buckled streets and forced many from homes, brothers Tim and Chris Lynch, 10 and 12, fished from their back porch. But others were discouraged.

"It stinks," said Oliver Eperhardt of St. Louis, as he picked up belongings at his mother's evacuated house, where dead fish, sewage and debris mixed in the flood water.

Some 2,000 householders in the Manhattan, Kan., area were urged to get out because of water releases from swollen lakes and reservoirs upstream. Officials pleaded for sandbaggers to come out in the rain Wednesday.

Farther west, rising creeks prompted evacuations in small towns. About 300 people in Munjor, Kan., were advised to leave Wednesday, after 4 inches of rain fell.

Some 400 people evacuated from Wamego, officials said.

Waters receded after flash floods spilled through Deadwood, S.D., in the Black Hills, far to the west of the areas battered earlier in heavy flooding.

"It rained super hard. The street looked like a river was running down it," said Albert Williamson, a cashier at a convenience store near Deadwood Creek.

In Des Moines, frustration grew in the 11th day of life without running water.

Residents hoping to take showers, laundry and flush toilets got bad news — and blame — from Mayor John Dorrian, who chided people for failing to heed warnings to leave their taps off.

Later in the day, however, water officials discovered a chunk of pipe missing in a line that runs below the Des Moines River. That explained the dramatic overnight loss of 30 million gallons that dropped water pressure throughout the system and provoked the mayor's scolding.

A quarter-million people have been without tap water since the water works was flooded July 11. Today was the earliest that water could begin flowing again, said water plant manager L.D. McMullen.

Meanwhile, the Army Corps of Engineers was monitoring hundreds of miles of levees along the Mississippi for seepage and excessive water. Surviving levees are mushy from such long exposure to high, surging water, and the fear is that they will disintegrate as the river falls.

"We just have to be very cautious," said the Corps' Joe Schwenk.

Flooding since the start of June has contributed to at least 33 deaths, including those of a 9-year-old Minnesota boy who apparently slipped from a raft Tuesday and an 86-year-old Missouri man found drowned outside his pickup in 4 feet of water.

The flood has caused $10 billion in damage, left 16,000 square miles of farmland under water and damaged more than 22,000 homes.

WASHINGTON — Ruth Bader Ginsburg firmly stated her support of abortion rights in response to senators' queries Wednesday, but she refused to give her views on the death penalty. Her Supreme Court confirmation hearing began to take on an air of inevitability.

In her second day before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Ginsburg described with care the conciliatory style she said she would bring to the nation's highest court. But she only hinted how that might affect the issues of the day.

Ginsburg endorsed the concept of a constitutional right to privacy, the foundation of the Supreme Court's decision in Roe vs. Wade. Putting it in personal terms, she said the government must "have a good reason," such as the possibility that harm was being done to others, to intrude on "the decisions that affect my life's course."

She was not asked directly how she would apply that principle to the right to abortion, which the Supreme Court based on the privacy right.

But later, she discussed her writings that the right to abortion can also be rooted in the Constitution's guarantee of equal protection.

"This is something central to a woman's life, her dignity," she said. "It's a decision that she must make for herself. And when government controls that decision for her, she's being treated as less than an adult fully responsible for her own choices."

When Sen. Hank Brown, R-Colo., suggested equal protection might give the father an equal say in an abortion decision, she said no.

"It is essential to woman's equality with men that she be the decision-maker, that her choice be controlling," she said. "The state controlling the woman is both denying her full autonomy and full equality with men."

Asked directly about her views on the death penalty, Ginsburg said she "would not like to answer that question any more than I would like to answer the question of what reproductive choice I would make for myself."

Whatever her personal bias, however, she said she would make her Supreme Court decisions based on the law, precedent and discussion with her colleagues in which she would urge a consensus rather than a split decision on any given issue.

Ginsburg explained how, as an appeals-court judge, she would discuss areas of disagreement on cases before they were written down and thus more difficult to change. "Is there some way we can get together?" was a question she said she would ask.

Sometimes, she said, "I'm going to squelch my view" and go along.

True to form, in the wide-ranging hearing, Ginsburg often discussed past cases instead of projecting how she might rule in the future.

The senators who will vote on her nomination seemed impressed.

"I think you show more comprehensive knowledge than any other nominee that we've seen," said Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala.

CLINTON, FRIENDS IN SHOCK

White House attorney commits suicide

Nancy Benac
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — At the pinnacle of his career, Vince Foster should have been riding high after seeing his boyhood friend elected president and then joining him in the White House.

Instead, the No. 2 lawyer at the White House left work early on Tuesday, drove to an isolated park overlooking the Potomac River in a wooded part of suburban Virginia, and took his own life.

A revolver in his hand, slumped against a Civil War-era cannon, he left behind no note, no explanation — only friends, family and colleagues in stunned sorrow, and a life story that until Tuesday had read like any man's fantasy.

"There is really no way to know why these things happen," an ash-faced President Clinton told reporters during a brief appearance in the Rose Garden. "And it is very important that his life not be judged simply by how it ended, because Vince Foster was a wonderful man."

The 48-year-old father of three was a lifelong friend of Clinton.

They had attended Miss Mary's kindergarten together in tiny Hope, Ark., and Foster had been a partner of Hillary Rodham Clinton at the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock.

"I just kept thinking in my mind of when we were so young, sitting on the ground in the back yard, throwing knives into the ground and seeing if we were adroit enough to make them stick," Clinton recalled Wednesday.

An administration official close to Foster said the attorney was uncomfortable "under Washington's microscope."

"This can be a pretty public place for a private person," said the official, who declined to be identified by name. However, the official said Foster showed no unusual signs of stress.

Foster's record could not be more impressive: standout athlete, high school student body president, first in his class at law school, top score on the state bar exam and a partner at his law firm within two years.

As a lawyer, the awards and acclaim kept coming for two decades. Then, on Jan. 20, the same day Clinton took the oath of office, the new president appointed his soft-spoken, ever-polite friend Vince to be White House deputy counsel.

There were plenty of bumps in the road ahead, as the counsel's office caught blame for several high-profile administration missteps, but Clinton rejected suggestions they might have driven Foster to suicide.

"I certainly don't think that can explain it, and I certainly don't think it's accurate," he said.

A White House official who spoke on condition of anonymity said Foster had expressed frustration at recent criticism of the administration, but nothing out of the ordinary. Another said he had been acting distracted lately.

White House counsel Bernard Nussbaum said he last spoke with Foster around noon, after the announcement that federal judge Louis Freeh had been nominated to be FBI director and as the Senate Judiciary Committee was holding hearings on Ruth Ginsburg for the Supreme Court.

"I said, 'Hey, Vince, not a bad day,'" Nussbaum recalled telling him. "We hit two home runs. ... I think we're doing our job and I think we're doing it well.' He just sort of smiled. ... That's the last time I saw Vince."

Another official who spoke anonymously said Foster ate lunch alone at his desk and left shortly thereafter, saying he would be back later.

"He never said anything to indicate that anything was out of the ordinary," the official said. "... No one ever felt that he was unduly burdened."

Clinton canceled his public appearances on Wednesday and met privately with White House staff to console them.

"I encouraged the staff to remember that we're all people and that we have to pay maybe a little more attention to our friends and our families and our co-workers, and try to remember that work can never be the only thing in life," he said.

He said his only complaint with his new job was that it kept him away from his family too much.

Optometrists, retailers do contact battle

James Rowley
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Peggy Hare, of Hilliard, Fla., wants to buy replacement contact lenses from a discount mail-order house at half the price, but her optometrist refuses to give her a written copy of her prescription.

"The doctor would not let me get more contacts until I got an eye exam," she said.

Because of her husband's recent bout with pneumonia, "we are trying to pay off doctor bills and can't afford $50 for another eye examination plus $87.50 for a new three-month supply of disposable lenses," Hare said.

She explained that the mail-order house offered to sell her a supply for half the cost her optometrist would charge.

"I have to keep wearing this pair until I get some money," she said.

Hare says her optometrist refuses to release her prescription even though Florida is one of 15 states that require optometrists to give patients copies of valid contact-lens prescriptions.

She says her prescription is only one year old, and under Florida law it is valid for another year.

But operators of mail-order houses that have sprung up in the last decade to offer discount prices of up to 50 percent off say that Hare's experience is all too common.

"Prior to the advent of the mail-order houses, fitters had a monopoly, they controlled price, inventory. Once mail-order came along, we offered an alternative to consumers," said Russ St. Cook, manager of Dial A Contact, of La Jolla, Calif.

The operators of mail-order companies charge that contact-lens manufacturers, optometrists and ophthalmologists have used unfair tactics to curb the growth of this discount business.

They charge that large contact-lens manufacturers such as Vistakon, Bausch & Lomb and CIBA Vision Optics restrict sales to mail-order houses because of pressure from optometrists.

The Florida attorney general's office and the Federal Trade Commission are conducting separate inquiries into the contact-lens industry to determine if there are any antitrust violations.

RESIDENTS BURN HOUSE

Sex offender driven from home

David Ammons
Associated Press

OLYMPIA, Wash. — When child rapist Joseph Gallardo was released from prison, word reached his hometown before he did.

Warned by the sheriff that a bearded 35-year-old with "sadistic and deviant sexual fantasies" soon would be in their midst and might strike again, neighbors held a rally. A few hours later, Gallardo's house was burned down.

He fled to his brother's in Deming, N.M., but was hounded from there, too, slipping out of town just before a protest march Sunday.

About half of U.S. states — Washington included — have laws requiring sex offenders to register with a local police agency upon their release, state prison chief Chase Riveland said. But only Washington expressly authorizes law-enforcement agencies to notify the public, said Judith Schretter, counsel for the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children in Alexandria, Va.

The uproar in Gallardo's case has stirred debate over whether such measures give rise to vigilantism.

"It's very volatile — sex, children, the bogeyman — and notification is like a match struck near the gasoline," said Gerard Sheehan of the American Civil Liberties Union of Washington, which opposes the notification law. "Our officials need to be concerned about fanning what I call 'private justice.'"

Ex-convicts have been hounded in other states in recent years, including California, Minnesota and Virginia.

But in other states — some of which notify only the victim when the offender gets out — word gets out mostly by word of mouth or when law-enforcement officials notify neighbors without express legal authorization.

In California, for example, residents kept Lawrence Singleton on the run from town to town after he was paroled. He was convicted of raping a teen-ager and hacking off her forearms with an ax. He is now believed to be living in Florida.

The measure allowing Washington law enforcement to notify the public when a sex offender gets out was part of a tough 1990 law that was spurred by the sexual mutilation of a 7-year-old boy and the sex-slayings of three youngsters.

Gallardo was freed July 12 after serving nearly three years for having oral sex with the 10-year-old daughter of a friend. Before he got out, Snohomish County sheriff's deputies released a flier with his picture.

Based on drawings and writings by Gallardo that had been found in his house, the sheriff's office described him as someone at high risk of committing another sex offense. It said he had sexual fantasies "which include torture, sexual assault, human sacrifice, bondage and the murder of young children."

In an interview with The Seattle Times, Gallardo said, "Just because a person draws something, it doesn't mean that's what they want to do."

Neighbors in the Seattle suburb of Lynnwood quickly organized a rally near Gallardo's house. Hours later, the house went up in flames before he could move in.

"I'm not saying any crime was right," neighbor Kevin McMahon said. But he added, "There's a lot of mothers going down the road with smiles on their faces."

Gallardo was on the run Monday, his brother, Pierre, told KING-TV in Seattle.

Although some legislators and citizens are calling for tougher laws against sexual predators, others are warning against a mob mentality taking away the basic rights of the offender, no matter how despicable the crime.

"We don't want vigilantes, that's for sure," prison chief Riveland said. "This man was convicted of one single sex offense, with someone he knew. The rest is fabricated from what he had written and drawn."

MADE "TOP 10" LIST

Man arrested while buying tools for mass homicide plan

GREEN COVE SPRINGS, Fla. — Police arrested a man they said made "a top 10 list" of potential homicide victims and was starting to carry out bizarre plans for rape, murder, cannibalism and vampirism.

Gregory Dale Donaldson, a cook at a fast-food restaurant, was held on $2.5 million bond after he was charged Tuesday with stalking, conspiracy to commit first-degree murder and solicitation to commit first-degree murder.

"It is so scary, it is a little unbelievable. When you look at the evidence amassed, it is frightening," Assistant State Attorney Timothy Collins said. Donaldson faces up to 61 years in prison if convicted on all the charges.

Donaldson, 20, was arrested Monday while shopping for a three-page list of materials police said he planned to use to kill a woman they said he was stalking.

The murder was planned for July 27, said Clay County Sheriff's Detective Jimm Redmond, adding that Donaldson had given police details.

Asked whether Donaldson was capable of carrying out the killing, Redmond said: "There is absolutely no doubt in my mind."

The detective said Donaldson had discussed with a police informant, a woman Donaldson tried to recruit as an accomplice, "his future plans pertaining to sexual homicide, mutilation, cannibalism, vampirism, sexual torture."

Police seized 21 boxes of evidence, including writings, drawings and pornography, from Donaldson's home and car.

Family python suspected in strangling

Associated Press

COMMERCE CITY, Colo. — An 11 1/2-foot-long Burmese python kept as a family pet was found near the body of a 15-year-old boy who had been strangled.

"At this point, the evidence points to" the snake strangling the boy, police Capt. Michael Maudlin said Tuesday.

An autopsy will determine if the snake was the killer, he said, but added: "We have no reason to believe anything else happened."

Officers answering a report of a child not breathing found the snake near the body, "quite aggressive, hissing and reacting to them," Maudlin said.

The python belonged to the victim's older brother.

"The snake had been allowed to run free in its residence since it was first owned about eight years ago," Maudlin said.

Family members said they had never seen the snake act aggressively before.

Community Service officers trapped the snake and took it to an animal shelter.

PLEADING SELF-DEFENSE

L.A. brothers on trial for shooting rich parents

Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Jurors viewed gruesome photos today of a millionaire Beverly Hills couple shot to death by their two sons, who contend they were compelled to act in self-defense after years of sexual and psychological abuse.

Prosecutors maintain that Lyle Menendez, 25, and his brother Erik, 22, killed their parents out of cold-blooded greed.

Two juries — one hearing the case against Lyle, the other against Erik — were presented conflicting accounts of why Jose and Kitty Menendez were killed as they watched television in their $5 million mansion in 1989.

If convicted, the brothers could get the death penalty.

The photos show the father sitting on a white sofa slumped to the side, his chest covered in blood. His wife lies at the foot of the sofa, her body crumpled in a pool of blood.

The brothers sat staring straight ahead as the pictures were posted on a bulletin board for the juries to examine.

During opening statements Tuesday, Lyle's attorney, Jill Lansing, said the brothers suffered years of torment and death threats from their father, a video-company executive.

USED A POCKET KNIFE

Pa. man severs own leg to free himself from tree

Associated Press

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. — A man used a pocket knife to hack his leg off below the knee after a tree rolled onto him while he was clearing timber.

After cutting through broken bones and torn skin Tuesday, 37-year-old Donald Wyman of New Bethlehem crawled 200 feet to a tractor, which he rode to his pickup. He drove the truck about two miles to a farm and found help.

"He was so sharp and mentally strong," said farmer John Huber, who called paramedics.

Wyman told Huber he screamed in vain for an hour and tried to dig his leg out from under the tree. He finally put a tourniquet around the leg and started cutting because he feared he was bleeding to death.

Wyman underwent surgery at Punxsutawney Hospital, where he was upgraded Wednesday from serious to fair condition. It was not immediately known if surgeons tried to reattach the leg. Firefighters had to cut apart the tree to get the limb out from under.

River violence - Ironically, even this sign has fallen victim to the river that it signifies. The sign on Highway 22 bridge, west of Sand Road appeared to have been taken down by vandals and left half-submerged in the river water.

at which time the corps would be able to decrease the outflow from the dam, he said.

Rain, with heavy accumulations possible, is in the forecast, though, and it has some local officials worried.

"I want to urge people not to be complacent just because we got over this one hurdle," Iowa City City Manager Stephen Atkins said. "The cresting on the lake was very pleasant, but we may be looking at some more rain."

The Iowa City Water Plant remains heavily fortified after city employees and volunteers worked much of the day Tuesday to reinforce the sandbag barricade that surrounds the building. The wall, which now stands about twice as wide as it did last week, is designed to withstand water pressure similar to that which knocked out the water supply in Des Moines, Atkins said.

"Right now, we've done everything we can do to prepare for more flooding," he said. "If there is something else we can do, I don't know what it is."

Atkins said Iowa City residents should still conserve water during the day and stockpile water at night because the threat to the city's water supply being contaminated by heavy rains continues.

"The water level remains high and it's up against the water plant," he said. "The force of the water does not seem to be a problem, but there is always leakage. We have our pumps running constantly."

Atkins added that because the sandbag walls and the equipment they protect were built by people, there is also a lingering threat of human or mechanical error.

At the UI, whose water plant is also placed at risk by high waters along the Iowa River, officials are preparing for whatever the weather holds in store.

"We're still on full alert," said Joanne Fritz, director of University Relations. "Again, as it has been for the past two weeks, the wild card is rain."

Fritz cautioned people not to wander into flooded areas because large sinkholes have developed near many waterlogged campus buildings.

"Basically, we're just praying for a drought," she said.

They're doing the same in Coralville, where city workers spent much of the day Wednesday constructing a 3-foot-high earthen dike along First Avenue in an effort to reopen the road by this weekend.

The dike, which consists of crushed rock wrapped in thick plastic, lies just a few feet from a similar sandbag dike, which failed to hold back floodwaters last week.

"We're building this dike so it will stay for a while," Coralville City Administrator Kelly Hayworth said. "We just felt that we couldn't wait until the river went down to the point where it drained by itself, because that could take three to four weeks."

Hayworth said once the dike is completed, the city will begin pumping water out of the street and away from businesses, a process that is expected to take up to four days.

Even if it rains, he added, the dike will stay in place to hold back floodwaters in the weeks to come.

In other flood-related news Wednesday, the Disaster Application Center set up at West High School closed, but flood victims can still apply for federal aid by calling 1-800-462-9029, or 1-800-462-7585 for the hearing impaired.

Interstate 380 remained closed, and will likely remain so for at least a week, as waters backing up from Coralville Lake cover the supports of a bridge spanning the Iowa River. Castle said the lake will have to drain about 3 feet before Department of Transportation officials will consider reopening the stretch.

remodeling and the fifth priority would be renovation of the UI Biology complex.

UNI President Constantine Curris said he was stunned to see the two projects go ahead of the building of a UNI Recreation / Wellness Center.

"We were dismayed when we saw the top priority on our campus go from the top of the list to being pushed down again," he said.

Richey said the rationale was that existing buildings need to be taken care of before new ones are built.

"Schaeffer Hall is on the Pentacrest," he said. "It is a crucial building at the UI. We have remodeled entire buildings on other campuses to protect what we have."

ISU President Martin Jischke was also concerned about the order of priorities. The building of Intensive Livestock Research Facilities at ISU was previously slated to follow the Recreation / Wellness Center as the No. 5 priority.

The board agreed with their concerns and reprioritized the projects, giving Iowa the sixth and seventh priorities, rather than the originally recommended fourth and fifth.

"I feel like the guy who stole somebody's dog, only in this case it's the guy who stole two people's dogs," UI President Hunter Rawlings said. "We do have problems with Schaeffer Hall. It is a very old building and the center of our campus."

Rawlings said that windows in the building are being repaired this summer, but that further repairs to be made are very major.

"Renovation is fundamentally important to us," he said. "Both buildings are in very bad need for repair."

True agreed.

"This is a very important project to us," he said. "Schaeffer Hall is the home for liberal arts. When the language classes get moved into Phillips Hall it's our opportunity to remodel Schaeffer, but we can't do it until we get the money."

will soon change in Iowa City," he said. "The most that we can hope for is that it doesn't rain."

UI Provost Peter Nathan said the flooding has forced officials to cancel several activities, including summer commencement ceremonies.

"The major single factor is safety," he said. "Hancher Auditorium is not available. It is nonaccessible. Carver-Hawkeye Arena is the only other building that could accommodate the ceremony. Access to Carver is dramatically limited now and will likely continue to be on Aug. 6."

Nathan added that traffic problems and limited room for hotel reservations due to displaced families and summer orientation were other reasons for the cancellation.

"We know how difficult this is going to be for parents and students, but we really felt this was the most responsible decision we could make at this point," he said. "Water levels are not going to be down by the sixth."

Nathan reaffirmed that fall classes are projected to open on schedule. He said the problem of 9 feet of water still standing in Mayflower Residence Hall can be worked around.

"We are going to try very, very hard to get back in there," he said. "If we can't, we plan to house Mayflower students elsewhere — possibly in triple rooms in Burge Hall that we have recently tripled. As soon as Mayflower is ready for occupation, those students will be able to move back."

Inaccessibility is more of a problem on the arts campus, Nathan said.

"If there is still water there when classes start, we are going to have to locate those classes elsewhere," he said. "The John Pappajohn Business Building is still scheduled to open on time, which will free up space in Phillips Hall. That would allow us to move classes there temporarily if necessary."

Regents President Marvin Berenstein expressed his sympathy to all regent institutions affected by the floods.

"We ask for the public's indulgence while repairs are made and services restored," he said. "We are all keeping our fingers crossed that the rains will stop. This is truly a terrible, terrible disaster. Let's hope that it ends soon."

three days.

"We have to have some violators out there or the system would be filled by now," Dorrian said.

"We just can't get the system full if people start using the water before the ... system is topped off," McMullen said.

McMullen said less than 10 percent of the system remains to be filled.

Late Wednesday, officials said they had cut off water to nine customers found using water.

"This whole filling process has turned out to be not too calculable," McMullen said. "As a result of that, it's very difficult to make projections about when we're actually going to get water service restored to everybody.

"It's a very slow process."

Once officials get the system filled, they can give clearance — zone by zone — for residents and businesses to begin turning on their taps.

City officials brought in Steve Zumbaugh of the Greater Des Moines Chamber of Commerce Federation to add a business plea for conservation.

"This community is losing millions and millions of dollars," he said. "We just must cooperate."

London police charge man with gay murders

Thirty-nine-year-old Colin Ireland has been accused of killing at least five homosexual men. The burnt remains of the last victim were found in an apartment June 15. Ireland has plead innocent to the charges.

Associated Press

LONDON — Police investigating the murders of homosexual men charged a man Wednesday with the murder of one of the five victims.

Colin Ireland, 39, was charged with killing 33-year-old Andrew Collier, who was found dead in early June at his home in east London. Ireland was arrested Tuesday after he arranged to meet police at a lawyer's office.

News reports said Ireland apparently came forward after police published a security camera picture of a man walking behind the fifth victim, Emanuel Spiteri, at Charing Cross rail station shortly before his death in June.

Spiteri's burnt remains were found at his apartment June 15.

Ireland was described only as being unemployed and "of no fixed abode." He is to make a court appearance in London on Thursday.

News reports said Ireland had denied murder.

Collier, who worked at a home for the elderly, was believed to have been the fourth victim of a killer who suffocated or strangled the five between March 8 and June 15.

Four of the victims were known to be homosexual. Police say they have no evidence that senior company manager Perry Bradley III, 35, of Sulphur Springs, Texas, was gay.

Bradley, found naked, bound and strangled at his west London apartment June 4, has been linked with the other victims because of the way he died and the physical evidence left at the scene.

The other victims were Christopher Dunn, a 37-year-old librarian, found strangled at his home May 30, and Peter Walker, a 45-year-old theater director who died while tied to his bed in March.

After each murder, the killer telephoned police, a national newspaper or a suicide hot line with precise details of the crime. Newspapers reported he also threatened to kill another victim every week until he was caught.

The police, striving to overcome longstanding hostility and suspicion in the gay community, assigned a homosexual officer to the investigation and have actively sought gay cooperation in the case.

A month ago, police handed out about 10,000 leaflets at a gay and lesbian Pride Day march in London.

The leaflets carried photographs of the five victims and urged men to be careful when they picked up partners. "Always tell a friend who you are leaving with and where you are going," they said.

APPOINTMENT

of providing leadership.

"He has an excellent background in health-service programs and academic administration," he said. "I am looking forward to working with Dr. Manasse in this key position."

Manasse has held a variety of academic, research and administrative positions, including dean, professor of pharmacy administration and professor of health professions education in the College of Medicine at the University of Illinois at Chicago.

Currently, he is interim vice chancellor for health services at the University of Illinois at Chicago Health Sciences Center. He is also a senior policy fellow for the Center on Drugs and Public Policy at the University of Maryland and a visiting professor at the Derbyshire Institute of Health Studies in Derby, England.

"When I met with Dr. Manasse I was very impressed with how highly intelligent and perceptive he was," Rhodes said. "He is very knowledgeable in issues of health care. He has a great commitment to health care in both service and academic areas, as well as a commitment to affirmative action. For me, the combination set him apart from the rest of the field."

The appointment will be effective on Sept. 1, 1993. Manasse will receive an annual salary of $195,000.

Saints receiver Sammy Martin reaches for a pass while being defended by teammate Israel Byrd during practice Wednesday.

Parcells instills discipline

Associated Press

Camp Parcells is not for the weak or the weary.

"I'm looking for guys with a little staying power," Bill Parcells said Wednesday after putting his New England Patriots through another demanding practice. "They have to show me what they can do."

The team he took over in January finished 2-14 last year, and Parcells believes the difference between winning and losing will be the kind of discipline he can instill in camp.

"If they can't take the whole deal ... the hot weather, getting banged up, doing things over, coaches hassling them, the meetings and the whole tedium thing ... then they just don't have the staying power," Parcells said. "Some guys just can't do it."

But most are. Only two players have missed practice — linebacker David Howard (sprained toe) and defensive lineman Marion Hobby (swollen knee). Parcells says he has no preconceived notions of his team, other than those gleaned from watching films — horror movies? — of last season.

"You're probably getting tired of hearing me say it, but I have to go by what I see," he said. "And it's tough to tell what they're really going to do until the pressure's on."

Parcells, who led the New York Giants to two Super Bowl victories, has taken a meticulous approach to practice. Plays must be run over and over until they are done correctly. Mistakes and penalties are his primary concerns.

"When you're a poor team, things you do are not magnified," he said. "If you're getting beat badly, things don't stand out as much. But a mistake here and there in a three-point game makes the difference between winning and losing."

Bills
Thurman Thomas finally signed with the Bills — a four-year, $13.5 million deal that makes him football's highest-paid running back. The deal averages to $3.4 million annually, roughly double what Barry Sanders earns for the Lions.

There was confusion earlier in the day whether the contract had been settled. First, Thomas' agent, Leigh Steinberg, said it had. Then the Bills public relations staff said it didn't know. Then Steinberg said the parties were still talking.

"We hit some technical slow-ups," Steinberg said. "Things were just slowed by the normal contract constructions in a changing year. But everybody is happy and excited about it."

Falcons
The Falcons and All-Pro wide receiver Andre Rison still had what his agent called "dramatic differences of opinion" over his contract.

"They keep saying they can't disrupt the rest of the team with Andre's contract," Charles Tucker said. "But even under the new system with the salary cap next year, every team has players it has to pay."

The problem was by no means limited to Rison — who wants to renegotiate, as he did last season when he missed all of training camp. Eleven Falcons, including top draft choice Lincoln Kennedy, remain unsigned.

Chiefs

Cornerback Albert Lewis went to Kansas City for further tests after injuring his forearm in practice Monday. Lewis, a former All-Pro, broke that forearm last year and has a plate in it.

"The X-rays we had here indicated a possibility of some change," coach Marty Schottenheimer said.

Tight end Mike Dyal returned to practice after being removed from the field in an ambulance Tuesday. Dyal, shaken on a hit by linebacker Percy Snow, plans to resume full contact soon.

Cowboys

Linebacker Darrin Smith from the University of Miami signed a two-year contract. The second-round draft pick was the club's last unsigned rookie. His salary is believed to be in the range of $300,000 annually.

Eagles

Defensive end Tim Harris missed Philadelphia's opening practice because his wife was in an auto accident in San Francisco. The team had no immediate word of her condition.

Bears

The Bears say they are only a few days away from signing tackle Keith Van Horne and als expect to reach agreements with cornerback Lem Stinson and linebacker John Roper.

Redskins

Quarterback Cary Conklin, slow to recover from offseason knee surgery, has participated in most of the drills at camp, but coach Richie Petitbon says he might be withheld from Saturday's scrimmage against the Steelers.

Packers rest hopes on White

Dave Goldberg

Associated Press

GREEN BAY, Wis. — The green and gold letters are embossed on the gray sweatshirts for sale along Lombardi Avenue: "We've got the White one Baby."

The "White one" is Reggie White, here to lead the Green Bay Packers from the Dark Ages they've experienced since Vince Lombardi's teams won the first two Super Bowls nearly 30 years ago. The team's party line is "we're two years away," but that hasn't stopped the fans or players.

"People say 'Super Bowl, Super Bowl,'" says Brett Favre, the 23-year-old quarterback who looked last season like one of the NFL's coming stars.

"I don't want to say it, but deep down I think we have a chance to go. I just don't want to stick my foot in my mouth and say we will."

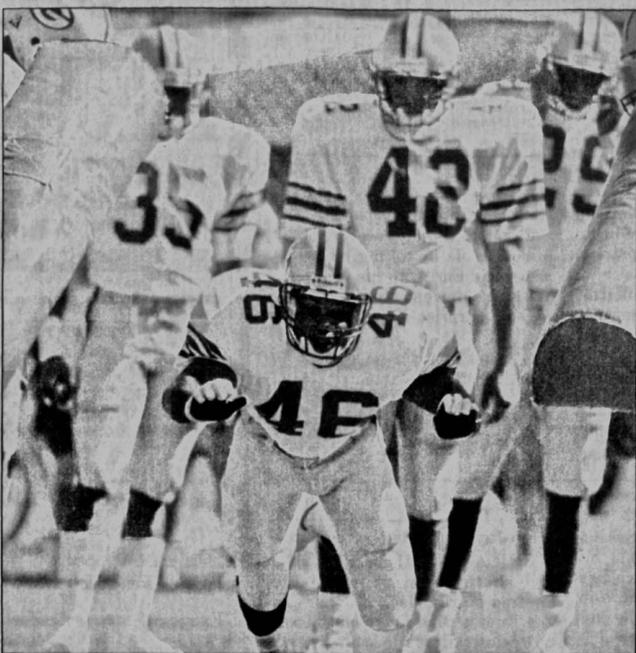

He doesn't, but the fans will. White, at 31 still one of the best defensive linemen ever, brings a national identity lacking here since Lombardi and has exalted hopes locally — 5,000 people showed up at the first day of practice just to catch a glimpse of the new hero.

To people outside Wisconsin, even outside Green Bay, all of this is a bit much. But not in Green Bay, where memories of "Tittletown USA" are everywhere, and Lombardi's old players, like Willie Wood and Fuzzy Thurston, embrace in reunion on the practice field, then pose for fans to take pictures; where the local papers run daily notes on White called "Reggie Watch," with the Gs in the shape of the Packers' logo.

"It's not like anywhere else in the NFL," says Favre, who spent his first season in Atlanta. "It's almost like playing for a high school team."

"I go into McDonald's and people treat me like I'm the high school quarterback, not a guy playing in the NFL. It's kind of neat."

What's not neat is history since 1967. The Packers' 9-7 record last season — Mike Holmgren's first as coach — was only their second winning one in the past 15. Aside from 1982, when a strike inflated the playoff field to 16 teams, it was their only postseason appearance since their second Super Bowl.

Moreover, after they went 10-6 in 1989, missing the playoffs by a hair, they dropped to 6-10 the next season. Don Majkowski, that year's version of Favre, was hurt and dropped to the bottom of the NFL quarterback ratings.

Four years later, Majkowski is trying to catch on with Indianapolis as a third-stringer.

Not only is White in town, earning $9 million this year and $17 million over the next four, but the arrival of free agency allowed the Packers to fill a variety of needs. They added Mark Clayton to supplement their other superstar, Sterling Sharpe, at wide receiver.

Tunch Ilkin and Harry Galbreath came in to beef up the offensive line and Bill Maas to add experience at nose tackle.

Holmgren, the offensive coordinator on two Super Bowl winners in San Francisco, is somewhere in the middle of all this.

He knows he still needs help at wide receiver and running back — where John Stephens, who fell out of favor in New England after a Pro Bowl rookie year, is the latest hope on a team that hasn't had a 1,000-yard rusher since Terrell Middleton in 1978.

"Expectations are very high, maybe too high," Holmgren says. "We're still trying to put the pieces together. But free agency allowed us to speed up the process."

City High's Dwight named state's top track athlete

IOWA CITY (AP) — Tim Dwight of Iowa City High has been chosen the state's top track athlete for the second straight year.

Dwight was named the Gatorade Circle of Champions Boys Track and Field Athlete of the Year in Iowa. He led City High to its second straight Class 4A team championship by winning the 200 meters and long jump and anchoring the winning 1,600 and second-place 800 relay teams.

Last year, Dwight won the 200, 400 hurdles and long jump and anchored the Little Hawks to a second-place finish in the 800 relay.

TENNIS

Seles to make comeback

BERLIN (AP) — Monica Seles has decided to attempt a comeback in October at a tournament in Germany, six months after she was stabbed on a German court, a newspaper reported Wednesday.

Bild said the 19-year-old Seles, ranked No. 1 when she was attacked in Hamburg by a mentally disturbed Steffi Graf fan, would return to the tennis circuit at the Nokia Grand Prix in Essen.

The German paper's source was tournament's organizer Ion Tiriac. Tiriac did not return several messages left for him on Wednesday seeking comment.

The Nokia Grand Prix runs Oct. 25-31.

Seles, a three-time French Open winner, was stabbed in the back April 30 while sitting in a chair at a tournament in Hamburg.

TOUR DE FRANCE

Indurain maintains lead

SAINT LARY SOULAN, France (AP) — With Spaniard Miguel Indurain adding more than a minute to his overall lead Wednesday, Zenon Jaskula of Poland took advantage of the pacemaking chores of rivals Tony Rominger and Indurain as they pulled away on the final mountain to capture the 16th stage.

Jaskula won the Andorra to Saint Lary Soulan leg of 143 miles with a final burst past Rominger and Indurain over the last 400 yards.

Robert Millar of Britain was next. Andy Hampsten of the United States helped Motorola teammate Alvaro Mejia of Colombia in the final climb as Mejia weakened.

Overall, Indurain still leads, but Mejia lost more than a minute and dropped to 4 minutes, 28 seconds behind, just ahead of Jaskula, 4:42 behind. Rominger gained a few seconds to move to 5:41 behind.

NBA

Clippers name Weiss as head coach

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Clippers, spurred by Lenny Wilkens and Hubie Brown, hired Bob Weiss as coach on Wednesday.

Weiss, fired by the Atlanta Hawks after last season, takes the post vacated when Larry Brown resigned to become coach of the Indiana Pacers.

Weiss, 51, was interviewed early in the selection process by the Clippers. The club went back to him this week after Hubie Brown decided to remain a television basketball commentator.

He coached Atlanta for three seasons, and his extensive NBA experience includes a stint as an assistant under Gene Shue with the Clippers when the franchise was located in San Diego.

He has a career record of 183-227 in five years as a coach, with a 124-122 record and two playoff appearances in three years.

BASEBALL

Mariner suspensions upheld

NEW YORK (AP) — The three-game suspensions of Seattle Mariners players Bill Haselman and Mackey Sasser were upheld today by American League president Bobby Brown, who heard their appeals.

Haselman's suspension will begin today, while Sasser's will commence on Tuesday.

The two were suspended for three games each for their parts in the June 6, 1993, brawl with the Baltimore Orioles. Five other players were suspended for participating in that altercation.

Haselman and Sasser made their unsuccessful appeals at hearings on Tuesday in the AL office.

Prime Time heads into postseason

Coaches' key to success: A good draft

John Shipley
The Daily Iowan

You've got to hand it to Prime Time League basketball coaches. They're not going to win any strategy awards, they won't invent a new press and they won't devise a full-proof way of breaking a zone.

But they're the first guys to admit it.

In the world of sports, both professional and amateur, such modesty is refreshing.

Gary Fitzpatrick's team is the defending Prime Time champion. Fitzzy's won the regular league title Wednesday by beating University of Iowa Community Credit Union, 120-109, improving to 9-3 and heading into the playoffs as the No. 1 seed. If his team manages to win the title this year, it will be the fourth time in the seven-year history of the Prime Time League.

But ask Fitzpatrick for the secret of his success and he has to chuckle.

"Draft good players," he said Wednesday. "And know who's going to show up."

Hundreds of players apply for the Prime Time draft every year. League commissioner Randy Larson, who coaches a team of his own, said a requirement of application is listing your plans for the summer.

"That's one of the things I try to provide," said Larson. "This is the third year that all our coaches have been in the league before. They know what kind of ability the players have, but most of them don't know their summer plans."

That info can make a big difference. As Fitzpatrick puts it, "Michael Jordan can be in the draft, but if he isn't going to play it doesn't matter."

Ron Nove understands. The UICCU coach is in his third year of Prime Time. "The first year I ended up with about five guys every game," he said. "This year we've had at least eight every game but one."

Nove was missing three of his big guns for the team's biggest game of the season Wednesday. If they had beaten Fitzzy's, UICCU would have tied for first place. Iowa junior Jim Bartels was there, but a turned ankle kept him from playing. Fort Dodge High School senior Ryan Bowen and ex-Hawkeye Val Barnes were missing. Nove's team led, 64-62, at the half, but ran out of gas at the end.

University of Iowa Community Credit Union's Todd Johnson (left) shoots over Fitzpatrick's Russ Millard in the first half of Fitzzy's 120-109 win. Johnson finished with 29 points; Millard scored 39 for the winners.

Still, with his team finishing with a share of second place at 7-5, this is Nove's most successful season as a coach. He attributes it to his growing prowess in the draft.

"You have to draft guys that will show up, but you also have to draft guys that play well together," Nove said. "That's what we have. We don't have a lot of individual achievement going on out there. We're moving the ball, passing it around. That's the way basketball should be played."

Larson took some chances in the draft by picking Brad Lohaus and Troy Skinner, two ex-Hawkeyes

Guzman throws 2-hitter in Cubs' win

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Jose Guzman allowed just two hits over seven innings and Rick Wilkins' RBI double keyed a three-run eighth inning that carried the Chicago Cubs to a 4-1 victory Wednesday over the Cincinnati Reds.

Guzman (9-7) walked two and held the Reds to a pair of fifth-inning singles, including Joe Oliver's two-out RBI hit. Bob Scanlan and Randy Myers completed the two-hitter, with Myers pitching the ninth for his 29th save.

Jose Rijo kept pace with Guzman for seven innings, allowing just six hits, including Sammy Sosa's solo homer in the second. He left after throwing 128 pitches, and Chicago rallied against the bullpen for its sixth victory in seven games.

The Cubs had four consecutive hits in the eighth off Jeff Reardon (2-3), who had allowed only one run in his last 19 appearances.

Braves 14, Cardinals 2
ATLANTA — Fred McGriff hit two more homers, giving him three in two games for Atlanta.

McGriff, acquired Sunday from San Diego to bolster the Braves' weak offense, is 4-for-8 with three runs and five RBIs since the trade. He went 3-for-4 Wednesday with three RBIs.

Greg Maddux (10-8) allowed only four hits in six innings and became the third Braves pitcher to reach double figure in wins. Tom Glavine has 11 and Steve Avery 10. Maddux, who left after a one hour, 27 minute rain delay, had four strikeouts and no walks.

The Braves jolted Joe Magrane (8-8) for four runs in the first.

Giants 4, Expos 3
SAN FRANCISCO — Kirt Manwaring's suicide squeeze broke a seventh-inning tie, and Bryan Hickerson won again as the San Francisco Giants completed a three-game sweep of the Montreal Expos.

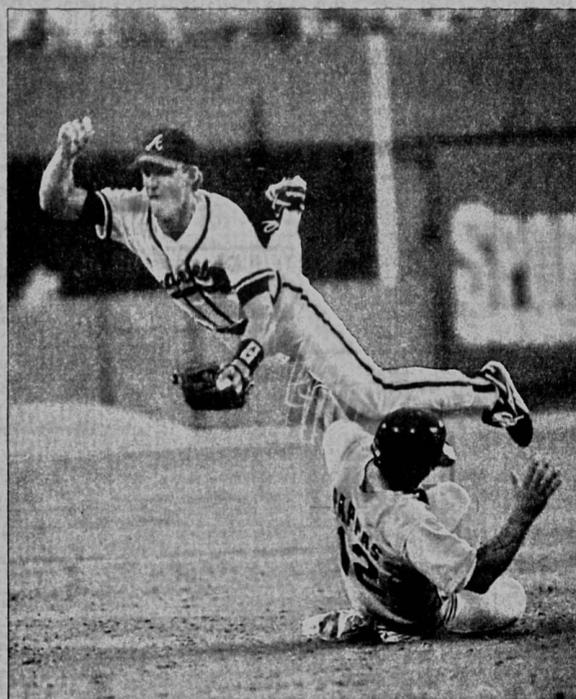

The Giants completed their sixth series sweep of the year, moving 32 games over .500 for the first time in 31 years with their 11th victory in 15 games.

Hickerson (5-1) is 5-0 in seven starts since being moved to the rotation. He gave up three runs on five hits, with one walk and four strikeouts in seven innings. Rod Beck got his 26th save.

Trailing 3-2 in the sixth, the Giants tied the game when Will Clark reached on a two-out double and scored on Matt Williams' single off reliever Mel Rojas (4-7). The Expos took a 2-0 lead in the first when Berry walked and Grissom hit his 12th home run.

Mets 5, Padres 2
SAN DIEGO — Eddie Murray hit a key two-run homer, and Dwight Gooden won despite a bout of wildness as the suddenly potent New York beat depleted San Diego.

Gooden (9-10) won for only the second time in his last eight decisions — both against the Padres — despite walking five and hitting one. He allowed two runs and seven hits in seven innings plus. John Franco got his sixth save.

Associated Press

Atlanta shortstop Jeff Blauser completes a double play over St. Louis' Erik Pappas in the third inning of the Braves' 14-2 win Wednesday in Atlanta.

The Mets, who have hit nine homers in the last four games, took a 4-1 lead with a three-run fourth — started by Murray's 13th — against Wally Whitehurst (3-6). Bobby Bonilla and Charlie O'Brien also homered for the Mets.

O'Brien increased New York's lead to 5-2 in the seventh with his second homer — both over the last three games against the Padres. San Diego, which unloaded slugger

Fred McGriff earlier this week in its continuing salary-dumping saga, lost for the third time in four games.

Marlins 6, Rockies 4
MIAMI — Rookie Pat Rapp singled home two runs and pitched six innings for his first major league victory to lead Florida past Colorado in the last game this season between the expansion rivals. Col-

Clemens finds his rhythm

Associated Press

BOSTON — Roger Clemens won his second straight start since his return from a groin injury, leading the Boston Red Sox over California 4-1 Wednesday and sending the Angels to their fifth consecutive loss.

Clemens (9-6) allowed three hits in his last seven innings after giving up a run and three hits in the first. He struck out seven and walked none before Jeff Russell got three outs for his 24th save.

Carlos Quintana hit a two-run double in the first. Ernest Riles hit a sacrifice fly in the second and homered in the fifth off Chuck Finley (11-7).

Mariners 10, Yankees 6
NEW YORK — Jay Bummer had the first five-hit game of his career and drove in three runs as Seattle stopped Jimmy Key's nine-game winning streak.

Tino Martinez hit a go-ahead, three-run homer in the eighth and Ken Griffey Jr. hit his 24th homer. Erik Hanson (8-7) pitched a six-hitter for his fifth complete game. He allowed no earned runs, struck out three and walked two.

Key (12-3) lost for the first time in 11 starts since May 23, ending the longest winning streak of his career. He gave up six runs and 11 hits, struck out five and walked none.
