Pumping up

While the immediate flood waters have subsided, the high level of the Iowa River, visible in the metal slab, is still flooding the basements of the Art Building and the Art Museum. UI Physical Plant employee Larry Lickly特斯 had spent eight-hour shift pumping the manhole outside the ceramics area of the Art Building Wednesday afternoon.

Regents deny funding for many UI programs

UI administrators may have to find alternative ways to fund academic activities such as minority recruitment, improvement of undergraduate education, increased access to higher education, and graduate education and research during the 1995-96 year.

Funds totaling nearly $3.8 million were rejected for these programs, but as many as allowed in the Iowa state Board of Regents preliminary budget recommendations for fiscal year 1995-1996.

"This is not a closed books," UT President Leodie Davis said. "I will be discussed at the September and October board meetings. We are hopeful that a number of our requests will be included in the preliminary 1995-96 Board of Regents for University

Chairman Tom Selling asked that it is not unusual for programs to score funding at this point in the budgeting process. "We can make presentations and explain our priorities at the next meeting," she said. "The board may then allocate more money for these programs."

The regents' office warned regents that commitments in its recommendations are not binding due to the current Supreme Court decision that federal pensions are not taxable by the state.

"According to the report, the impact of the decision is not fully known, as it is not yet, and it is not clear how UI employees and services across the state will be ascertainable, "the board concluded. "We will be discussing this in the next several months, html version, and continue to monitor the situation."

AIDS quilt exhibit may appear in IC

"Seeing it was such an overwhelming and emotional experience for me. It's one reason I've decided to go into nursing," said Davis, who works part-time at the University of Iowa Hospital and Clinics. "It's such a meaningful way to remember someone who has been so important to you and so much of your life."

Harper said the Iowa City community will benefit from exposure to the exhibit. "It's a fair amount of public opinion in Iowa that regards AIDS as being somehow else. For example, in the big cities and on the west coast, it's considered to be the great big issue. In Iowa City, it's not a very big deal."

The exhibit has been sponsored by the University of Iowa AIDS Conference for Health Care Professionals at the College of Medicine.

Bill Rea, chairman of the quilt committee and program sponsor in the UI Department of Internal Medicine, said the quilt will be on display for conference participants.

"It's a very fine work of art, and it's a very fine way to look at the AIDS epidemic," said Rea. "It's a very fine way to look at the AIDS epidemic."..."

The Detroit River, said Gerald Chestnut, Associated Press, who was traveling with a group that included a representative of Physicians for HOPE. "It's a critical issue for the community and the state."

"We're going to make sure that this issue is brought to the forefront and that the city and state take responsibility for addressing it," Chestnut said.

Chestnut said that the city and state have been slow to act on the issue, and that the river continues to be a danger to the community. "The city and state need to take immediate action to address the pollution and to protect the health of the community," Chestnut said.

Chestnut emphasized the importance of community involvement in the effort to clean up the river. "It's not enough for the city and state to take action on their own. The community needs to be involved in the process and to hold the city and state accountable for their actions," Chestnut said. He added that the group that he was traveling with was committed to working with the city and state to bring about change.

Chestnut concluded by urging the city and state to take immediate action to address the pollution in the Detroit River. "The health of the community is at stake and we need to act now," Chestnut said. "We cannot afford to wait any longer."

Iowa's third overseas appearance while the Longhorns are playing for the first time. The Longhorn fans may never want to go again.

Ted Marchibroda, senior counsel for the National Association of State Banks, was on hand Friday for the first bowl this season. "It's the first time since 1947 that a league has had a team overseas," he said. "I'm not real excited about it." The NCAA Council, in hearings this summer, lifted the rule banning overseas play.

"There is a lot of interest in this program," said Marchibroda. "But it's not going to be a revenue earner."

This year, 50 players, coaches and officials from the University of Colorado are being sent to London. They will stay at the traditional hotel, the Savoy. The hotel has offered to pay the players with a 20-dollar bill for their stay.

"I don't care what bank is paying, as long as I'm sticking to football," said Marchibroda. "But I think they should pay us in dollars!"

The Longhorn fans are looking forward to the game. They have been waiting for this opportunity to see their team play in London. The players are looking forward to the game as well. They are excited about the opportunity to play in front of a new audience and to represent their university.

"This is a special opportunity for us," said one player. "We're looking forward to playing in London and showcasing our skills on the football field."

Green's quiz draws NOW's condemnation

Mike Thompson, manager of Cleveland Green's quiz team, is feeling the weight of a beating, a game where the bananas are not the only ingredient.

A question about the formation of the quiz team may have been the root cause of the beating pattern.

Thompson and his team members were asked, "When was the quiz team formed?"

Thompson replied, "The quiz team was formed in 1992."

Now's condemnation: "The question was not about the formation of the quiz team, but rather about the scoring patterns."
