Concerns with unionization aired

Chris Pothoven
The Daily Iowan

With only a week until the elections to determine if UI graduate students unionize, representatives of the UI administration and the Campaign to Organize Graduate Students / Service Employees International — Union Local 150 faced off at a forum Tuesday night in Macbride Auditorium.

Around 60 people, most of them graduate students, attended the highly structured discussion. Associate Provost John Folkins and graduate student Mark Wrighton represented the administration, while COGS / SEIU member Doug Loranger and co-chairwoman Julie Monroe spoke for unionization.

The possibility of having to pay FICA, a social security tax, was one important issue. Graduate stipends are currently exempt from

The Campaign to Organize Graduate Students / Service Employees International — Union Local 150 is crying foul over a letter written by a UI dean.

UI Graduate College Dean Leslie Sims, in a March 7 letter mailed to more than 2,500 UI graduate students, stated his position on the unionization of graduate students. In the letter, Sims detailed the experiences that other Big Ten institutions have had with unionization. He said universities that have increased Teaching Assistant wages have often seen the number of these positions decline drastically.

"Where the net stipend ranking improved, the number of TA positions often declined: From 1988 to 1993, there were TA reductions at Indiana (-888, a 38 percent decrease in the number of TAs), Michigan (-137, 7 percent decrease), Purdue (-161, 7 percent decrease) and Wisconsin (-637, 28 percent decrease)," Sims stated in the letter.

Todd Schmitz, campaign coordinator for COGS / SEIU, said at least two of the universities mentioned in the letter did not suffer TA cutbacks.

"They are wrong when they infer that graduate the 7.7 percent tax on all university employees, which the UI must match.

"This is very disturbing," Wrighton said. "We are going to become employees. The likelihood that the IRS will use this change to address our taxes increases dramatically."

Monroe said students with graduate stipends are already categorized as employees, and the IRS has already investigated many universities for withholding their FICA taxes. There is no guarantee graduate stipends will be immune from the taxes even if the union is voted down, she said.

One audience member asked COGS-SEIU representatives to list in dollars and cents what it would negotiate for in terms of benefits and stipends.

"A union democratically decides on these issues," Monroe said. "We cannot decide until there is a union."

But Wrighton said this is an essential issue for graduate students to consider.

"We have a right to know an answer to that question before we vote," he said. "Without an answer, we cannot make an informed decision."

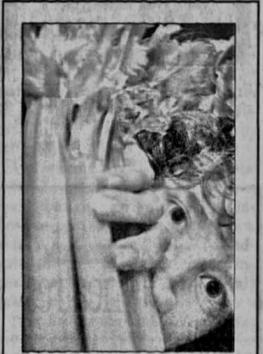

Several questions, both from moderator Lea Haravon and members of the audience, asked panelists to comment on the effect a bargaining unit would have on relationships between the UI and

STATE

Senate committee votes to allocate UI $1 million more than House approved

The state Senate Appropriations Committee voted unanimously Tuesday to recommend the Senate allocate nearly $1 million more for the UI than the House of Representatives approved last week.

The increase in funding includes money for salary increases for graduate teaching and research assistants and support for training in primary health care.

The state House of Representatives rejected a similar funding proposal last week.

State Sen. Robert Dvorsky, D-Coralville, said he expects the Senate to approve the increase recommended by the appropriations committee today or Thursday.

If that happens, it sets up a showdown between a Republican-controlled House and a Democrat-controlled Senate.

The Senate also approved allocating $8.5 million to the UI for the reconstruction of Schaeffer Hall. That bill now moves to the House for approval.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court Justice Harry Blackmun, author of the landmark Roe vs. Wade decision that in 1973 legalized abortion nationwide, will announce his retirement today, the Associated Press has learned.

Blackmun, 85, has served 24 years on the nation's highest court after being appointed in 1970 by President Richard Nixon.

A government source told the AP that Blackmun would announce his retirement this morning.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said his retirement would take effect at the end of the court's 1993-94 term, expected in late June.

The vacancy will give President Clinton his second opportunity for a high court appointment.

Former UI athlete wrestles with fame as fashion model

From singlet to Armani, Rico Chiapparelli a star

David Guttenfelder
The Daily Iowan

Rico Chiapparelli has been as successful in an Armani suit as he was in a singlet.

A former three-time All-American wrestler for Iowa, an NCAA champion as a senior in 1987 and a World Cup champ at 180.5 pounds in 1989, Chiapparelli is now an international fashion model dividing his time between Paris and New York.

Chiapparelli has appeared in magazines such as Esquire Gentlemen, Mirabella, Italy's Mondo Uomo and Vogue Hommes in Paris. He has strutted the runway for Calvin Klein, Romeo Gigli and Ferre among others. He has campaigned for Guess Men's Classic and Request jeans.

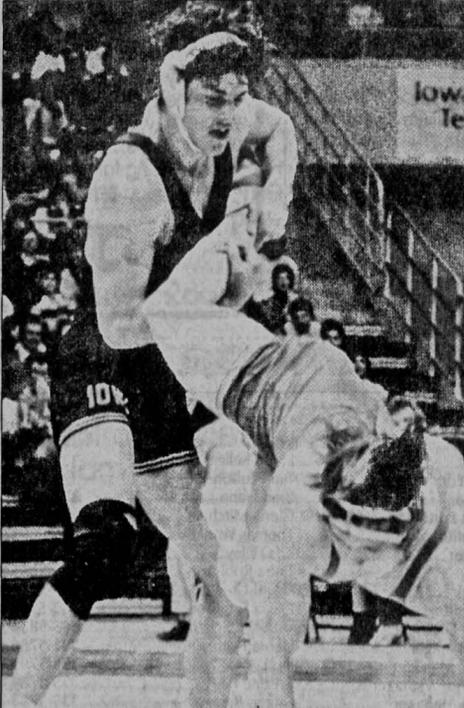

Chiapparelli says his smooth transition from super athlete to super model is because of Iowa wrestling.

"My success is due to wrestling, and in part it's due to wrestling here at Iowa, because it's the biggest place I could have ever done it," Chiapparelli said.

"I didn't go nuts once I made it," he said. "I was already a big star here at Iowa. I had the whole treatment here. In a smaller world, I did it all. I transfer my knowledge from wrestling to whatever I'm doing. When you know a lot about one thing, you can transfer that to anything."

The sport has not only helped develop the attitude it takes to survive in the spotlight, but has built the contours of Chiapparelli's body.

"You have to be larger than life," Chiapparelli said. "When you have a good body underneath the clothes, you walk around with a certain amount of confidence in that

$1.8 MILLION INVESTED

Computer fees spent to upgrade systems

Jim Snyder
The Daily Iowan

More than $1.8 million will be spent to upgrade computer systems across the UI campus and increase accessibility for students eager to reap the benefits of the new technologies.

The funding comes from money garnered through student computer fees. UI officials say the improvements will enhance networking capabilities of many sites on campus where students can use computers and will improve multimedia and graphic capabilities.

The money will also be spent to increase the number of computers available to students, provide for additional services for disabled students and pay for additional staff to enable the computer centers to stay open longer.

Lee Shope, director of Weeg Computer Services, said the $456,695 allocated for his department will enable Weeg to purchase approximately 100 new computer systems.

Some of these systems will be able to operate on voice command for students who have difficulties manipulating keyboards, Shope said. A Braille embosser, a text reader and text enlargement software will also be purchased.

Man denied wish to be skinned and tanned

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — A man's dying wish to have a volume of his poetry bound in his own skin will not be fulfilled.

In a settlement announced Monday, Donal Eugene Russell's widow dropped her bid to carry out the terms of his will.

The poet and operator of a fly-tying shop for fishermen had asked that his body be skinned and his hide tanned for use in covering a book of his verse.

But the Oregon State Mortuary and Cemetery Board went to court, arguing that Russell's desire would violate state laws regarding abuse of a corpse.

Russell's widow, Rachel Barton-Russell, said she will have him cremated instead.

Russell died Feb. 3 at the age of 62. His widow has kept the body in a friend's freezer.

"He was very fond of his skin. He felt like it was one of his better attributes," said Barton-Russell, a 33-year-old law student.

Lane County Commissioner Jerry Rust said Russell was a raconteur and a lover of good jokes who may have been saving his best one for last.

"Somewhere out there," Rust said, "he's just sitting back and cackling his head off."

Florida lets it all hang out

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Sunny Florida appears safe for now as a paradise for those who prefer nature au naturel.

A House committee rejected a bill last Wednesday to toughen the state's public nudity law, even after the measure was, ah, stripped down to avoid interfering with nudist camps, nude beaches and topless bars.

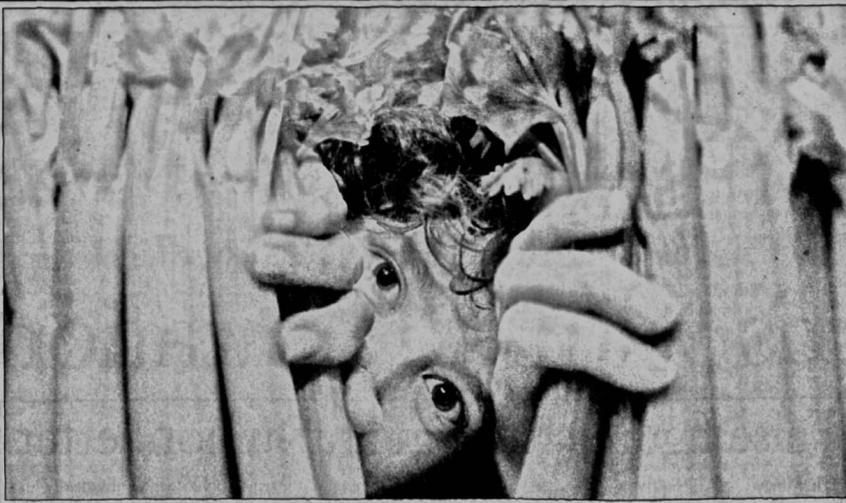

The amended version, which failed on a 7-7 tie, would have barred public nudity "except in any place provided or set apart for that purpose."

"They have voted that it is perfectly legitimate for an individual to be nude in the Capitol," groused Rep. Buddy Johnson.

A federal judge recently ruled that current state law bars public nudity only when it is lewd or offensive. Opponents of further restrictions called the legislation unnecessary.

"When a person has gone far into the woods, away from every person, we should not have to fear one lonely policeman with binoculars hiding behind a bush," testified Paul LeValley, president of the Tallahassee Bare Devils.

Under the original proposal to ban nude beaches, going topless could have brought a year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

It may be hard to believe, but this April marks the enough witty, yet educational things to say about first National Celery Month. We just can't think of celery — but here's one hell of a good try.

National Celery Month slaps I.C.

Tricia DeWall
The Daily Iowan

Something as stringy and tasteless as celery hardly seems worthy of devoting an entire month to. However, the American Celery Council thinks differently.

In efforts to promote its popularity, the council has designated this April as the first annual National Celery Month.

Robert Wiener, spokesman for the council, said they are trying to make people aware that celery is one of the better things to eat.

"You can get it around the country all year round. And you can chop it up and put it in salad and stew," he said.

General Manager of the council George Talbott, who was born in the middle of a celery field in Sanford, Fla., said the council consists of growers and shippers who join on a voluntary basis.

"Members are interested in increasing the awareness of celery and how it can be used," he said. "It is strictly a volunteer effort by the growers and shippers to make sure their product is received by the general public and utilized in the best fashion."

The council offers an 800 number (800-491-CLRY) for anyone who might feel stalked by related questions and concerns.

"I love celery. It's an excellent supplement to the diet. It gives you the satisfaction of chewing and swallowing and kills your appetite."

George Talbott, general manager of the American Celery Council

"They get a lot of calls during April," Talbott said. "I can't say the phone jumps off the hook — you can't say that. But enough calls come in to justify the effort."

One of the biggest misconceptions about celery, Talbott said, is that it grows underground.

"Some think that it grows under the ground and not on top. I don't know why people think that," he said. "Actually, the celery we have today is far superior in flavor and texture."

Talbott described celery as what can be best explained as chewable water. When asked if he likes the vegetable, Talbott, whose high-school mascot was — you guessed it — celery, said "Oh, I definitely do."

"I love celery," he said. "It's an excellent supplement to the diet. It gives you the satisfaction of chewing and swallowing and kills your appetite. It's also high in water and fiber."

Wiener said he likes to put it in things, "but eating celery raw isn't a bad thing either."

Wiener said college students should eat more celery.

"It's a healthy food, and college students have to make the advancement to eating healthy," he said. "But hopefully that's something they'll learn before they get to college."

The long, tasteless history of a veggie

The Daily Iowan

The first celery grew wild in the Mediterranean area and was fibrous, bitter tasting and practically inedible. In the early 1600s, a gardener in Italy transplanted wild celery seedlings in his back yard. The celery that grew had a surprisingly pleasant taste.

By using new growing techniques and carefully selecting seeds, celery's flavor and texture continued to improve. By the mid-1600s, many Europeans were dining on celery dressed with oil and black pepper.

How celery first came to the United States is not known. However, seeds were available through a catalog merchant in Philadelphia by 1806. Soon after, it became a trendy food served only in the finest homes.

Large-scale commercial production of celery began in Michigan in the 1850s, but it wasn't until the early 1900s that it became popular.

The stringy stuff that everyone chokes on, Wiener said, is an important part of the vegetable.

"That's the fiber. It's part of the ribs — the makeup of the celery," he said. "The plant starts out as a seed and each rib put together makes up the stalk. Some ribs just grow larger and thicker than others."

Talbott said celery breeders try to get rid of the stringiness, but "there are still isolated cases where you will have these complaints."

Quadrangle Food Service Manager Gerry Stoner said that UI food service goes through approximately five cases of celery each week, depending on what is on the salad bar.

"We chop up our own celery for soup and casseroles, and about 90 percent of the time we have carrots and celery sticks on the salad bar," Stoner said. "The amount consumed varies, but celery is not as popular as carrots are."

Stoner said food services were not aware there was a National Celery Month and are not planning any special promotions.

"Personally, yes, I like it," Stoner said. "I think it is refreshing. I also think it's good to clean your teeth with when you're done eating. Celery is good, crunchy material."

"It might get a little more competitive if anything," said Dan Hecker, an economist at the Bureau of Labor Statistics. "There will continue to be people with college degrees doing word processing or driving vehicles or working in retail stores."

So this year's graduates are striving for new ways of getting their resumes to the top of the pile.

"If you want to find a job, you can find something," said Chris MacGill, director of career development at Lycoming College in Williamsport, Pa. "Sometimes it means being a little creative."

Lycoming offers a seminar called "Wine, Dine and Act Fine" to teach students how to dress and even how to eat in front of a recruiter.

"We may assume that everybody just obviously knows this," said MacGill. "But some of the real basic things are what nobody has told them about, all the way down to which fork you pick up first at the interview luncheon."

The "final exam" in the noncredit course is a formal dinner with Lycoming's president and deans playing the parts of company recruiters.

Students getting creative as jobs become scarce

Jon Marcus
Associated Press

BOSTON — They're graduating seniors, but the students in this Simmons College seminar look as apprehensive as freshmen.

The subject: how to get a job. "I've gotten three rejection letters already," said Sabrina Greenberg, who is boning up on how to network, dress for interviews and write a cover letter. "Looking in the Sunday paper for a job, you're one in a million."

College and university students like Greenberg, an education major, have been looking for creative ways to draw attention to themselves.

Students in an international business program at the Monterey Institute in California mail their credentials both in English and Chinese to prospective employers. Seniors in an environmental studies program at St. Lawrence University in Canton, N.Y., wrote their cover letters on one side of a sheet of recycled paper and their resumes on the other, then sent it as a self-mailer to environmentally conscious employers.

"They will almost send you a bushel basket worth of fruit and make it look like a resume," said Roy Chapman, head of college recruiting for J.C. Penney.

Why be creative? "They have to. They don't have a choice," said Dawn Oberman, a statistician for the College Placement Council.

Eight out of 10 graduates take from one to six months to find a job, according to the placement

NOT SOLD ON CLINTON REFORM PLAN

Leach stresses health care in I.C. visit

Liza Roche
The Daily Iowan
First District Congressman Jim Leach visited the Iowa City Senior Center Tuesday to discuss and sell his views at a forum on health-care reform.

The speech was one of three Iowa City stops. He also visited the Union and City High School.

Although Clinton's package has been debated and dissected considerably, Leach, R-Davenport, is confident some type of health-care reform will pass through Congress this year.

"What I thought was about a 95 percent chance at one time last year that this would pass. This year is about an 80 percent chance," Leach said. "I think it will be a bridge of three or four plans."

He said health-care reform will be the major issue in politics this year. Reform is needed and wanted, he said, but added that he is not 100 percent sold on the Clinton plan.

Universal coverage could create a lower quality system with a small budget, he said. Administrative costs, which make up a sizable portion of health-care budgets, can be cut by creating a single paperwork system which all providers use, he said.

"I'm for taking the current system and making it better and ensuring access to everybody," Leach said.

He said he is anxious for health-care reform because the treatment of Iowa has been "blatantly unfair" in Medicare reimbursement. Leach said Iowa is the second lowest ranking state in reimbursement and $2 million would come into the state each year if it were done fairly.

"Iowa has been penalized by being too progressive too early," Leach said.

Also addressing health care at the forum were Wilma Conner of the American Association of Retired Persons and Stacey Cyphert of the office of the Vice President of State Health Services.

Cyphert spelled out the recommendation for the state's health plan by the Iowa Health Reform Council. Among other suggestions, it advocates employers being required to offer, but not necessarily pay for, health insurance at group rates.

It also supported limited, accountable health plans to promote responsible budgets. Quality would be promoted through accountability measures, such as report cards, for health-care providers.

The AARP hasn't endorsed any plan yet, but Conner said her group wants health-care accessibility for everyone, cost controls and prescriptions covered under insurance.

Helen Gjovig of Iowa City came to the forum to learn more about the issue. She said no one can get by with just Medicare. She said her husband spends $75 a month on one of his prescriptions.

"I'd like for it to be more affordable for everyone," she said. "I don't think we should expect a free ride. Anything would help."

PSYCHOLOGICAL HURDLES LURK

Study: Farmers warned flood hazards remain

Holly Reinhardt
The Daily Iowan.

The plight of the American farmer didn't end with the floods of '93.

Severely affected by the deluges, many farmers are experiencing emotionally and financially strapping times comparable to those of the farm crisis of the '80s.

Paul Gunderson, director of the National Farm Medicine Center in Marshfield, Wis., said the mental health of farmers may be at risk during such tough times. He has directed a study spanning the '80s and early '90s that looks into farmer suicide rates. His work was one focus of a press conference held Tuesday.

The study found that farmers have a suicide risk 70 percent higher than that of all other white males grouped by occupational category.

The conference reviewed the findings from a UI workshop last November that addressed agricultural safety and health, Gunderson said.

Gunderson and Stephen Reynolds, a UI assistant professor of preventative medicine and environmental health, are working to address those issues.

Reynolds said he is interested in the environmental hazards the floods may leave a community and farmers in particular.

"We saw the farmers slipping through the cracks," he said.

Reynolds said farmers must be careful when re-entering their fields because of flood remains.

"There is a potential to exposure to flood residue left behind," he said.

Chemicals, animals, and human and animal wastes are among the residues of which farmers should be careful, Reynolds said.

Gunderson said his studies suggest that the floods are having a definite impact on the mental stress of farmers.

"Our impressions suggest it is having a very devastating effect," he said. "There is increased financial stress, and they are left with a feeling of helplessness in the household situation where no one had viable control. We are particularly concerned about farm households who have delayed communication with their financial institutions."

Retaining strong links to their community is important for farmers experiencing such tough times, Gunderson said.

"When farmers discover their neighbor disconnecting, it is generally a warning signal," he said. "This is a community issue. Farmers need to respond to the needs of one another."

He encouraged farmers to seek help in getting through such devastating times, warning that putting off action may lead to larger problems.

"Waiting and delaying make it more difficult to resolve than if you do it early," Gunderson said.

He said a notable characteristic of the floods was the all-encompassing effects they had on farmers.

"The flood affected everyone, whether wealthy or not wealthy. A community unfolded that wasn't present in the decade of the '80s," he said. "The '80s brought a farm crisis many felt was manmade — the flood can be quite convincingly argued as hardly manmade."

"As a result of that difference, the agricultural population approached the crisis with less self-blame. Because of that, we entered this crisis emotionally and mentally more cognitively equipped."

As farmers rebuild their property, Reynolds warned about heavy machine use.

"There are physical hazards with wet soil and erosion — using heavy equipment on unstable ground is dangerous," he said.

A follow-up conference is planned for April 11-13 in St. Louis, which will expand the scope to include the effects of floods beyond farmers as well as looking at long-term effects.

STRUCTURED ALONG BRANSTAD'S GUIDELINES

Republican candidates set dates for debates

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Republican gubernatorial rivals Fred Grandy and Terry Branstad on Tuesday announced agreement on three televised campaign debates.

The first debate will be in Des Moines on April 19, followed by an April 27 debate in Sioux City and a May 5 debate in Cedar Rapids.

Grandy aides renewed their call for more debates, while Branstad — a three-term incumbent — stuck with his position that three debates are plenty.

"I'm not too optimistic" that other debates will be set, conceded Grandy campaign manager Bob Schellhas.

Branstad campaign manager Brian Kennedy said the governor wasn't interested in more debates "at this time."

"Three debates is what we've always done," Kennedy said.

The debates, which could play an important role in a competitive Republican primary, are structured largely along the lines that Branstad had demanded.

All three will be tightly structured with questions coming from a panel of journalists and candidates limited to two-minute answers.

There are provisions for follow-up questions from reporters but not for interchange between the candidates.

The Des Moines debate is sponsored by WHO-TV, while the Cedar Rapids debate is sponsored by Iowa Farmer Today, the Cedar Rapids Gazette and KCRG-TV. The Sioux City debate, sponsored by the Sioux City Press Club, will be broadcast by KTIV-TV.

All three will be in television studios, and journalists and moderators must be cleared by both campaigns. The agreement does not call for questions to be screened in advance.

The debates are all set for 7 p.m. in prime viewing hours.

Each debate will last one hour.

While the three clashes will be the only times Grandy and Branstad meet during the campaign, Schellhas said Grandy was continuing to pursue his effort to expand the debates.

Grandy has invited Branstad to join him in debating the Democratic candidates as well. Schellhas said that effort is continuing.

Prostitution sting nabs 52 busts in CR

Associated Press

CEDAR RAPIDS — In a sting operation described as the first of its kind, 52 men were charged with soliciting prostitution after being videotaped offering to pay for sex from undercover police officers.

"I know there have been some streetwalker operations around the state, but as far as this type of operation, we don't know of any before," said Linn County attorney Denver Dillard.

He said officials decided to go after clients of prostitutes because simply arresting the women doesn't work. He said the penalties "have become a cost of doing business and most prostitutes are not embarrassed by their prosecution."

To lure customers, authorities placed a classified ad in the Cedar Rapids Gazette. Dillard said 4,261 men called the number in the ad. Of those, 380 inquired about making an appointment and 61 actually showed up at the "business" since it began operating in February.

Of those, 52 were charged Monday with soliciting prostitution. The charge is an aggravated misdemeanor with a maximum penalty of two years in prison and a fine of $5,000.

Late night dance ban rescinded

Associated Press
DES MOINES — A 42-year-old ordinance prohibiting late night dancing has been overturned.

The Des Moines City Council voted 5-2 Monday to permit dancing after 2 a.m. despite opposition from one member who said young people should have better things to do, like reading a book.

Councilman Michael McPherson said the age of the ordinance is no argument to repeal it.

"Back in 1952, we had a whole lot less murder, a whole lot less drugs and a whole lot less domestic violence. 1952, compared to 1994, wasn't a real bad year, I don't think," he said.

One man in favor of the dance option, Julian Archer, said McPherson's view was out of date. "McPherson is going to have us all locked up by 9 o'clock, reading a book. It reminds me of the Army," he said.

Councilman Tom Vlassis said young people need a place to congregate late at night.

"The youth of Des Moines won't be home. They're out and we know they're out. There ought to be some facility where they can congregate," he said.

The issue surfaced after police began using the ordinance that bans dancing after 2 a.m. to stop all-night dances called "raves."

SCHOOL ESSENTIALS MISSING

CEC requests improved facility

William Pepper
 The Daily Iowan

After years of asking for "a space we could call our own," the Community Education Center may be close to getting a new school facility.

The CEC is a school with about 90 students in grades seven through 12 who have either dropped out of a regular school or have trouble learning in a traditional classroom setting. The school currently occupies the third floor of the district's Central Administrative Offices at 509 S. Dubuque St.

Students and administrators want to move to a bigger facility because CEC lacks a number of elements common to most schools, including a gymnasium, library, cafeteria, industrial arts facilities and handicap access.

CEC counselor Mark Eglseder said none of the eight rooms in the school can accommodate a standard size class of 25 or 30 students. Because of this, the school has to use a couple of other rooms in the building, resulting in the crowding together of district staff and students.

CEC Principal Ted Halm said any new facility would have to be as close to downtown as possible, have only one level to ease handicap accessibility and provide adequate parking. He would also like the building to have a multipurpose room.

One important need for students is access to a bus line to make it easier for students to get to school.

Iowa City School Board President Connie Champion said she was glad the administration was considering a new facility for CEC.

"The CEC is growing and their space is not growing," she said. "I'm really glad the administration is looking at moving it. They deserve more space."

Although a move has been considered for several years, the discussion has picked up with the recent announcement by the owners of the building one block south on Wright Street, which houses the CEC's day-care center, that the district's lease on that building is not being renewed. The district has to move the day-care center before next fall and would like to keep it and the school as close together as possible, preferably in the same building.

Halm said a few sites are being considered, including a warehouse on Capitol Street. He could not comment on other possible sites.

Eglseder said staff and students also want to be certain the move will be made in order to give them a better facility and not just because the school or its students have a bad image.

"I think they might be a little bothered by our students," he said. "We don't want to be moved out of sight and out of mind."

Champion said space considerations are the only motive in possibly moving CEC.

"It has nothing to do with anything other than a crowding situation," she said. "Whether we move now or in a couple years, we have to do something with the CEC."

Eglseder said having a whole building just for CEC would be good for the students' image. He said CEC students need to be made to feel they are a part of the community, especially since many of them don't have the support of strong families.

"These kids don't have the power base that kids at City (High) or West (High) have," he said. "It would be good for our students to have a space that meets their needs and would help to establish an identity."

Halm added that although the district has to move the day-care center before next fall, it is not under pressure to move CEC. It can stay where it is until the right facility becomes available.

"The one thing we don't have to do if we stay here is pay rent," he said. "We could stay here until it's done the way we want."

Champion said the issue is not on next Tuesday's board meeting agenda, but if the move is to be completed by next spring, the board will need to begin discussing it soon.

UISA officers bring newcomers advice

Molly Spann
 The Daily Iowan

Officers not returning to the UI Student Assembly for a second term said their goodbyes and offered some advice to the new UISA in a meeting Tuesday night.

Phil Thompson, executive officer of the Graduate Student Senate, and Mike Patton, executive officer of the Undergraduate Collegiate Senate, urged the new government to keep political agendas out of UISA.

"We need to depoliticize this thing," Patton said. "Things that you bring in here need to have to do with students, not your own political beliefs."

Thompson said working together in UISA will make the government more effective.

"A unified student government not bickering amongst each other is the first step toward unifying other student groups," he said. "A divided student government loses credibility and gets nothing done."

John Gardner stood before the assembly for the last time as UISA president and said he was sorry for getting too involved in issues at times and forgetting about people.

He also thanked the government for what he said was a productive year.

"I think we've left a good government for John and Gretchen (Lohman) to take over, and I think they're the right ones to take over," Gardner said. "I think it's going to be a good year."

After the meeting adjourned, Gardner was voted by the GSS to replace Thompson as executive officer. Rakhi Roy, former Student Association Budgeting and Auditing Committee chairwoman, was elected as the new UCS executive director.

Danielle Bechtold, Undergraduate Activities Senate executive officer, was re-elected to the position.

In other business, John and Gretchen Lohman were officially sworn in as the new UISA president and vice president. Twenty-four new senators were also sworn in.

REPORT SOOTHES WORRIES

Market revitalized after recent plunges

Patricia Lamiell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market staged a dramatic rebound Tuesday as investors went bargain shopping, snapping a series of stunning declines that had depressed Wall Street to its weakest level in six months.

The rebound was sparked by a government economic report Tuesday morning that considerably eased the financial markets' fears about inflation.

The Dow Jones industrial average of 30 big-name stocks leaped 82.06 points to 3,675.41, more than erasing a 43-point drop Monday. It was the biggest single-day point rise in more than two years.

Much of the rebound was attributed to a powerful rally in the bond market, heartened by eased fears of inflation.

Nonetheless, the gain didn't necessarily signal an end to the sudden and unexpected selling that has been afflicting stocks and bonds, sending shudders through millions of ordinary investors worried about the value of their holdings.

Many professional stock strategists said the market is still volatile and investors are quite skittish. They didn't rule out a resumption of the slide today.

"There were more bears visible in Wall Street last week than in Yellowstone National Park," said Alan Ackerman, executive vice president at Reich & Co., a New York investment firm.

Peter Canelo, an analyst at NatWest Securities, said he believes many investors will sell stocks once they get reports from their brokers that show significant losses for the first three months of the year.

"Someone who bought last October has lost 20 percent of their money. These people are not necessarily aware of the risks that they have assumed," Canelo said.

If Tuesday's recovery was short-lived, it was broad-based. The number of advancing issues swamped declining ones on the New York Stock Exchange, and broad market indexes also rose.

The rebound was sparked by a 0.1 percent dip in February's leading indicators, the government's chief forecasting gauge of future economic activity. The monthly report, the first negative reading in seven months, eased the markets' fears about inflation.

Although much of the economic decline was blamed on severe winter weather, bond and stock analysts said the data indicated that inflation, which has dogged both bond and stock markets in the past, was not a serious problem.

Fear of inflation has been a major reason for the weakness in stocks and bonds since the beginning of the year.

The report soothed anxiety in the bond market, where the 30-year bond's price rose sharply. Its yield, which moves in the opposite direction and is a good barometer of long-term interest rates, eased to 7.23 percent from 7.40 percent late Monday.

"The recent pressure that had been on the bond market was lifted to some extent, and it likewise eased pressure on the equity market," said James Schroeder, a market analyst at MMS International.

Just as they were responsible for the big drops over the past week, big volume institutional investors fueled Tuesday's rally. They concentrated their purchases on economically sensitive stocks that could be expected to rise the most during an economic recovery.

EXILED LEADERS RELEASED, RETURNED

Autonomy looms near for Palestine populace

Karin Laub
Associated Press

JERICHO, Occupied West Bank — The first exiled leaders of the Palestinian uprising allowed to return home got a tumultuous hero's welcome Tuesday in the occupied territories.

The returning exiles will help build an autonomous government in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and try to dispel perceptions among Palestinians that the historic Israel-PLO peace accord has failed to bring change.

"People are seeing some changes with their own eyes now. This has had more impact on the people than months of negotiations," said Saeb Erekat, a senior PLO figure in the occupied territories.

At the crossing from Egypt to the Gaza Strip at Rafah, hundreds of youths waving the black, red, white and green Palestinian flag carried 23 returnees on their shoulders to waiting cars. Gunmen from the PLO's Fatah Hawks fired into the air.

Crowds lined the road to Gaza, waving black and white checked kaffiyahs, the Palestinians' trademark headdress.

Palestinian officials said 26 other exiles crossed into the West Bank over the Allenby Bridge from Jordan.

PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat in Amman, Jordan, in order to hold talks with King Hussein, described Israel's decision to let the deportees return as "another positive signal."

In Jerusalem, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said the returnees were "pioneers in the implementation of this new rapprochement between the Palestinians and ourselves."

Most of the deportees were university students and professors expelled by Israel for organizing the Palestinian uprising, or intifadah, which started in December 1987. They are the first of those exiled allowed to return. Others were village elders deported by Israel in the 1970s.

KKK & Nazis On The Rise:
How Can We Stop Them?

All over the Midwest, racists and fascists are testing their strength, whether it's the Klan in Springfield, Illinois, or Nazis in Davenport and Des Moines. The economy is in crisis. Many are out of work, and those with jobs see their wages falling. People want answers, and the racists offer only scapegoating: their answer is to blame Blacks, immigrants, Jews, gays and lesbians, and other minorities. People want action, and the racists offer violence against those who are the most victimized. The real answer to our problems lies elsewhere, and the best actions to take to stop racial and fascist violence and keep the Nazis and KKK from growing. Let's talk about how to make it happen.

GAMBLING AGE

Assuming responsibility

The age of maturity in this country can be considered as 18 or 21, depending on how you look at it. Eighteen-year-olds can vote, marry without their parents' permission, watch X-rated films, smoke and go off to war. (You could make turning 18 into a pretty wild day.) One's 21st birthday brings some added activities in which to indulge: drinking and, in Iowa, gambling.

Since last Thursday's passage of a state law prohibiting anyone under the age of 21 from gambling, young Iowans will have to wait an extra few years to try their luck at the lottery or at riverboat gambling.

The drinking age, repressive as it may seem to college students and other youngsters, at least has some utilitarian reasons to recommend it. Enforcing it may arguably help keep down the number of drunk-driving injuries and other drinking-related accidents. Given the tendency of younger drinkers to overindulge, it may also minimize the incidence of less serious accidents, such as puking on passers-by. So, protect innocent passers-by: Keep the kiddies out of the liquor cabinets.

No such argument can be made about gambling. Gambling, as evil or exploitative a pastime as one may consider it, is only likely to have an adverse effect on the health, happiness and solvency of the gambler. Eighteen- to 20-year-olds, who are otherwise given responsibility over their own finances, should have the same opportunity as anyone else to throw their money away. They can already run themselves into all the debt they want with the credit cards that are continually pushed their way. They can legally spend all the money they have, or have yet to earn, on the most worthless of consumer items. Why exempt them from the temptations of gambling, then offer them $1,000 credit limits at a 19.8 annual percentage rate?

It may well be the case that an 18-year-old is less mature and less responsible than a 21-year-old. People who have reached middle age are probably more mature and responsible than those in their 20s and perhaps make better decisions. But we all have to start taking care of ourselves and our money eventually, and there is no point in postponing one particular financial lesson for a paltry few years.

CAMERA CONTINUES TO MOVE IN THROUGH a crack in the glass, INTO the inner sanctum of the temple, and here, ladies and gentlemen, we gasp to catch our breath because:

Seated around a magnificent solid oak table are the members of the quorum from the Writers' Workshop and the Playwrights Workshop who have gathered to recommend to Disney that the Hollywood Pictures fellowships should be open only to students screened into their workshops.

An enormous blue HALO hovers above the table as the quorum decides that it would be far too embarrassing to the reputations of the programs if OUTSIDERS were to produce thrilling, compelling ideas that lassoed the fellowships.

Meriting scholarships

To the Editor:
Politically correct racist Kobie Coleman has reached new heights of idiocy. In his March 10 DI editorial, Kobie supports the BCA in its opposition of the NCAA's refusal to reinstate an additional basketball scholarship. According to Kobie, this is the NCAA's way of "running" blacks out of athletics.
First of all, athletic scholarships are earned entirely on merit, which unfortunately isn't the case for any other type of scholarship. I always thought the goal of minorities was to be judged strictly on merit and accomplishment, not skin color. College athletics judges its participants on merit, and as a result blacks have excelled. Now the BCA is calling for policies which amount to nothing less than quotas.

basketball powers. Kobie must be upset that success can be obtained without the so-called superior black athlete. Just another example of Kobie's racist mindset.

Instead of coming up with his usual absurd and ignorant comments, Kobie should encourage the BCA members to stop blaming whites and use the initiative which got them the positions they currently hold. Before blaming anyone, each member of the BCA should take a small percentage of the money they make from their summer camps and shoe contracts. With this money, they should set up a scholarship fund which would provide an education to a minority that excels in academics, not athletics. This would more than offset the loss of one scholarship and simultaneously benefit the truly neglected student nonathlete.

It's a shame that blatant racists such as Kobie Coleman are legitimized by a society dominated by political correctness. Hopefully he is among a minority of people who claim to oppose racism by being racist. Kobie is an embarrassment to anyone who believes in equality based on merit and character and should be treated as such.

Posing and posturing: how to be cool

Four boys, shirtless and shouting, were playing some full-court hoops at the Rec Center. Two Mexican brothers against a black boy, the oldest of the group, and a white boy, the youngest. In the last play they were allowed before the nighttime volleyballers took over the gym, the ball was smoothly dumped off to the youngest kid, whose shot shocked off the underside of the rim. His backward baseball cap, with tags still attached, had slipped down into his eyes. Undone by his own coolness.

"I can't believe you missed that shot!"
"I can," said the younger brother. "You ever seen any white boy can play ball?"
"Gimme my ball back, bitch!"
One of the staffers leaned his head into the gym and hustled them up: "All right, guys, game's over. Grab your stuff."

The two brothers sparred their way off the court, the older one faking a one-two-three combination. The black kid wiped his face with his shirt before putting it on, grabbed his ball and bounced it — Boom! Boom! Boom! — above his head until he reached the tile of the outer lobby.

I sat in the back corner just off the dusty court, my legs in a hurdler's jump, one straight and the other at a 90-degree angle to the side. After 15 minutes stretching, I usually warmed up by hitting the ball against the wall where the youngest boy had left his shirt, jacket, soda can and candy wrappers.

"Hey," I nodded his way, "could you take the can and wrappers out with you?"

He didn't speak or shake his head one way or another. He stared at me, smirking. Then he scooped up his jacket, perched the bill of his cap at a strict military angle — only backward — and walked slowly away, dragging his Nike heels off the court.

"Rotten kid," I thought, feeling like I'd been somehow challenged by an 8-year-old. But I did not go after him. Instead, I picked up the half-full root beer, Twix wrappers and slippery, moist squares of lemon Starburst and walked them to the trash outside the gym doors.

Despite the posturing "attitude" of his nonresponse, his tagged cap and droopy, cropped jeans, despite the pair of Airs that cost more than he'll earn for the next eight years, he was a kid. I almost laughed at how cute he was, acting like a grown-up, imitating so well what he probably sees during the 50 hours a week he spends in front of the television watching Charles Barkley and Axl Rose and whatever that show is, 90210.

But I didn't laugh. I see adults who behave this way. There are too many people of all ages acting like they can be as hip, as noticed as those they see at the Oscars, on MTV, in Cosmo and GQ. Otherwise regular people turn themselves into caricatures, buying car phones, buying personality plates, buying anything they think defines the kind of person they want to be — the kind of person they want others to think they are — then posing and play-acting the part.

Remember when "Desperately Seeking Susan" came out in the mid-'80s along with Madonna's first two albums? Middle-aged women, college women, absolutely too many women saw Madonna's saucy, cheeky pose as sexually empowering and quickly donned the sex kitten uniform of short flouncy skirts, half shirts, bangles up to the elbows, and giant floppy bows tied at the sides of their ridiculously worn headsets. Soon enough, flat-chested, sexless young girls got into the groove, going so far as to stage Madonna look-alike contests in every mall across the country. The death of this pose came dancing on the rhinestone-studded boots of these sauced-up, stagey Lolitas. What self-respecting feminist sex pot would be caught dead looking like a blown-up copy of half the population of a screaming playground at recess?

To exaggerated lengths, this fashion of attitude has been tailored and worn proudly by rapists and murderers and especially by those young offenders increasingly being tried for adult crimes. Last year in Columbus, Ohio, an 11-year-old boy was whacked for his hot new Starter jacket. Ironically, the killing helped sell out the already overpriced jackets — not unlike a murderer's rap disc going gold.

My own nephew, Nathan, also 11, owns this particular disc, though when I asked him why he contributed his money to the reinforcement of such criminal behavior, he confessed that a friend of his traded with him for a Guns 'N' Roses disc. Nate is not experienced enough yet to judge incoming messages, imitated attitudes and behaviors that deaden individual thinking. He knows when to say "No." Yet he's heard Jolt cola is cool because it can give him "a buzz." He knows, being raised by a single mother, what rape is. Yet he is bombarded by MTV every three minutes with virile lead singers telling some lusty young thing, "You know you want it, baby." And the young thing always says, "Yes, I do."

If people my age think they are judged on the price and style of their Raybans, or that chunky, awkward '70s style shoes will keep them two fashionable steps ahead of the rest of us, why then should Nathan or those boys in the gym be any less one-dimensional?

Unlike the Madonna get-up, "attitude" persists. It's bad to be bored, to say things like "whatever." It's hip to be jaded. But the real essence of cool are the badges worn to indicate superiority, whether it be BMWs or the fuchsia Mohawk cut into the head of a self-righteously angry young woman. Whether it be the $2,000 mountain bike or the dilapidated imitation canvas Converse found exclusively at Goodwill.

The fad is not going to end this time when children adopt it as their own. Charles Barkley isn't going to give up his gun. Axl Rose isn't going to give up his tantrums. When we value indifference and adore obnoxiousness, how can we complain if our kids grow up to be stick figures?

Sons and daughters who haunt the links

When you get a few beers in a golfer, then ask her about her first memories of the sport, she will usually talk about her father — how he left the family on weekends; how he took her along, sometimes, to the driving range and putting green; how, when she was old enough, he allowed her to fill in for an absent member of a foursome. If you buy a few more beers and soak up a few more stories, you'll learn that her reasons for continuing to play are closely tied to her reasons for picking up a golf club in the first place — for him.

What will he think of her when they next meet on the first tee? Will he say "Nice shot"? Will he say "You've improved"? Sometimes it seems like all the hours of practice are only a preparation for the next time she plays her father. He always walks the course with her. His voice does not seem to fade with the soggy greens of spring, or the browning fairways of summer, or the falling years. What she is left with, even when he is not there, is a vibration. Every shot vibrates with hundreds of shots that she has played with him, hundreds of approvals and disapprovals, shattering embarrassing slices and victorious draws.

A round of golf can take on lots of vibrations. On some courses, almost every shot can vibrate with a private history. The group on the first tee can take on hundreds of faces, and her father will always be one of them — bragging to his friends about how his daughter will "show them the way," advising her to "think tempo," telling her how "the woods are full of long ball hitters." The other players will always nod. They will always be very supportive. And if she hits one amid the trees, one guy (usually a middle-aged salesman wearing white and black Footjoys) will say to her, as she shoulders her bag and sets off down the fairway, "Ain't golf a great way to ruin a walk in the woods?"

At dusk, old men pace in and out of the shadows at the fringes of the fairways. They skulk through the woods — kicking at piles of leaves and overturning fallen tree branches. They are looking for golf balls. Quietly. Slowly. With no competition involved. I used to shake my head when I saw those old men. I felt sorry for them. Nothing better to do, I thought, than kick around in the woods with a bucket and a pitching wedge. But now I think I understand. There is more in those woods than golf balls. There are many years hidden beneath those leaves. The old men are overturning their histories. They are walking with their fathers.

My father lives 1,500 miles from here, and it's tough to get out on the course this time of year. It's too wet or too cold. But if I exit windows and type "CD LINKS" on my keyboard and then push the return button, I can play golf. The sun comes out, and the Pacific Ocean pounds against the California shoreline.

"Set atop the cliffs at the edge of the Pacific Ocean, the Torrey Pines 36-hole course is one of the finest, most picturesque municipal golf facilities in the world," the computer says. I push a few more buttons and trees sprout up beside a fairway that is greener than green, and a bird chirps out a little song, and the wind is at 5 knots from the west. I take a huge cut — KERFLUNCH. The white ball sails up and out against a sky that is bluer than blue, and then

... and then the most wonderful thing happens. A voice says, "You got all of that one."

Dad. What are you doing here?
The voice does not answer.

Once, at the seventh hole at Torrey Pines, I was chipping up to the green from 23 yards out. I had a pitching wedge in my hands, and I was thinking birdie all the way. I took my backswing and — KERFLUNCH. I hit the ball clear over the green. The voice was silent. Disapproving. Hell, I thought, it's only a video game, and I pushed the "mulligan" button. I took 35 mulligans from that position. I tried a nine iron, an eight iron, a sand wedge and even a putter. The voice said a number of things depending on my shot — "Sit down!" "Be the club!" "Get there!" "Nice shot!" If I were actually on a golf course and I were all alone, I could have called those 35 shots "practice." Sure. I would just be trying to sharpen my chipping skills for the big tee time tomorrow at Finkbine. But I wasn't actually on a golf course. I was sitting on a fold-up chair looking at a computer screen. After the first few shots, I knew I would not continue my round until I sank that chip shot. I also knew why I had to sink that chip shot. When I needed to know what the voice would say, my dad's voice.

"YEAHHHH! Great shot!"
That's what the voice finally said. Twenty-three yards out, and I stuck that shot right at the pin. It bounced twice and dropped in. My dad said, "YEAHHHH! Great shot!" And I was proud.

Sick, ain't it?

120-MPH CHASE

Wesley Snipes crashes motorcycle after police pursuit

JUPITER, Fla. — Wesley Snipes sped by a state trooper and led him on a 120-mph chase before he lost control of his motorcycle and was thrown from it, authorities said Tuesday. The actor wasn't seriously hurt.

Snipes refused medical treatment and was cited at the scene for reckless driving, said Florida Highway Patrol Lt. Sherian Staley.

The chase began Monday night, authorities said, after Snipes sped between trooper Steve Walker's marked patrol car and another motorist on the two-lane southbound side of the Florida Turnpike.

The pursuit continued for 30 miles, ending as Snipes tried to exit the highway at the Jupiter off-ramp. He crashed when his motorcycle and the front of the patrol car bumped, Staley said.

Authorities didn't know how fast Snipes was traveling when he was thrown. He suffered only minor injuries, Staley said.

Snipes' spokesman issued a statement Tuesday denying the actor was trying to elude police. "Contrary to rumors of an intentional high-speed chase, Mr. Snipes was unaware of the patrol car trailing him," spokesman David Pollick said. He said Snipes was leaving the highway for gas when he lost control.

The 31-year-old action-adventure star has appeared in such films as "Demolition Man" and "Rising Sun." He is in Florida filming "Drop Zone," in which he plays a federal marshal who infiltrates a band of skydivers while tracking a killer.

graduate students.

Folkins said a union would worsen relations between faculty members and students, especially those who work as research or Teaching Assistants. It is already in the faculty members' best interests to support as many graduate stipends as possible, he said. But Loranger responded that unionized graduate students at other universities say the union clarifies the relationship between faculty members and graduates, clearly spelling out the rights and responsibilities of both parties.

Haravon asked each side what problems might arise with the implementation of a collective bargaining unit.

"Members of this unit will be graduate students, and it is presumed these students will eventually graduate," Wrighton said. "If the present leaders make promises, there is no guarantee they will be around to help meet them."

Additionally, the formation of a union may create more university bureaucracy, Wrighton said.

Loranger said the union needs to be as viable, decentralized and representative as possible.

"The challenge to us will be to make sure the union addresses all graduate students," he said.

The elections will be held next Tuesday and Wednesday, April 12 and 13.

wage increases lead to huge position cutbacks," he said.

Michael Rothstein, a University of Wisconsin contract administrator, said some of the letter's findings are false, and the UW has not cut more than 600 TA positions as Sims stated. In fact, he said, the UW has seen a small increase in the number of graduate assistant positions since graduate employees unionized six years ago.

"It appears that the number of teaching and project assistant positions has remained quite stable, and I was surprised to learn that we have seen a slight increase in the number of graduate assistants," Rothstein said.

Rothstein was quick to point out that he doesn't think Sims and the UI were trying intentionally to mislead students. He said Sims was the victim of faulty statistics compiled by the American Association of University Data Exchange's Annual Survey of Graduate Assistant Stipends. "I think they were honestly misled by the information that they were looking at," he said. "But I don't think that students should have to be operating with misinformation when they are making a big decision on whether or not to unionize."

UI graduate students will go to the polls April 12 and 13 in an election that will decide if the more than 2,500 graduate assistants will unionize.

Indiana University Dean of Liberal Arts Morton Lowengrub said the statistics about IU were also wrong.

"I am not sure where they got their information, but we have had no drastic cuts in funded graduate assistants in the past six years," Lowengrub said in an electronic-mail letter to UI graduate student Tom Karson.

Sims confirmed that he got his statistics from the AAUDE, and he emphasized that any inaccurate data was the fault of the AAUDE.

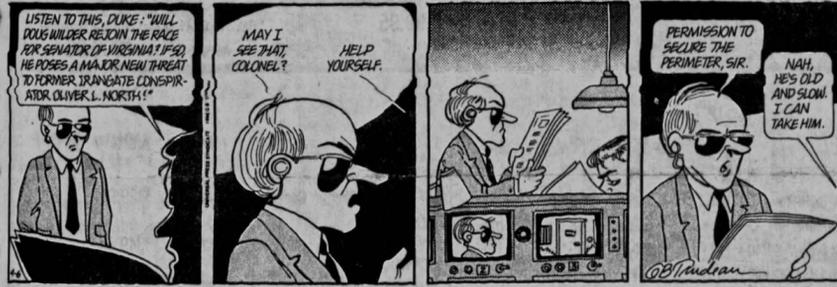

"I regret that the examples we chose have since been shown to be inaccurate," he said. "I'm truly sorry about that."

UI Associate Provost John Folkins, who has worked with Sims in interpreting these figures, also apologized for the false information.

"I want to apologize if there has been any misunderstanding," he said. "We were going from what we thought was the most accurate information possible."

CHIAPPARELLI UPGRADES

world because 75 percent of the guys don't have it."

Iowa assistant wrestling coach Royce Alger said Chiapparelli has cut some of the muscle he needed on the mat.

"He's lost a lot of his mass," Alger said. "I give him shit about being skinny."

Part of that larger than life persona Chiapparelli maintains in the international fashion world comes from his reputation as an all-American athlete and an all-American male.

"I have a picture of me wrestling in my (portfolio)," Chiapparelli said. "There are a lot of homosexuals in the fashion business. They think wrestling is a very sensual and sexual sport, so they really love it."

Other lovers of the sport are not amazed by Chiapparelli's success and his choice of careers.

"Rico always had a style and flair both as a wrestler and in his personal life," said Gary Abbott of USA Wrestling magazine. "I'm not surprised that his personality would lend itself to a modeling career."

"Rico has always had this mystique about him," Alger said. "He had the look, he had long hair, even the name Rico Chiapparelli is different. He wasn't your average Iowa athlete."

"When you get into international wrestling, you get a chance to see the world. People like myself and the Brands brothers are homebodies, but Rico comes from out East — a jet-set life and he likes that. Modeling has been a vehicle for that."

Chiapparelli's modeling career began in Los Angeles where he was taking acting classes, doing a few television commercials and trying to make it as an actor. But he's not entirely satisfied with his life in the fashion business.

"In modeling, your ego is totally fed from the outside, not from the inside," he said. "It's totally unreal. My world is a perverse, immoral world."

A typical working day for Chiapparelli might be filled with five sessions in front of the camera.

"That means you meet five different sets of people every day, and all of the people are trying to be buddies with you," he said. "You stay at the best hotels and eat at the best restaurants. Whoever is the celebrity in town, you go to dinner with them. Everyone is telling you how great you are, you're the best, but not because they like you — because they like your status. Being a fashion model in Paris is like being a movie star in Hollywood."

Or a wrestler in Iowa?

"When you come to wrestle at Iowa, it's all you care about, and your status is based on your success in it," Chiapparelli said. "But with wrestling you get self-fulfillment — it's more of a spiritual fulfillment."

Chiapparelli still finds that gratification on the mat, and when he needs to escape the fast-paced fashion business, he likes to take refuge in the Hawkeye wrestling room.

"I think the wrestling world, especially the Iowa wrestling world, are almost like the last cowboys," he said. "People are just doing it for the love of it, and these days it's really hard to find that."

Alger enjoys visits from Chiapparelli.

"He rolls around the mat because it gives him a dose of the real world and good, hard-working people," he said. "Wrestlers are pretty straightforward."

Chiapparelli said the up-front people of Iowa can never truly understand the life he leads now.

"They like it and they think it's cool that I did something else," Chiapparelli said. "I'm more embarrassed by it than anything."

Iowa coach Dan Gable has some grasp of Chiapparelli's lifestyle.

"I've done commercial work — it's maybe not the same, but it's similar," he said. "I did a 30-second car commercial once that took eight hours. I know it can be real tedious."

In a sport full of guys with cartilage-damaged ears, Gable admits there haven't been any other supermodels to come out of his wrestling program.

"Rico's ears weren't beat up too bad," Gable said jokingly. "Usually when a wrestler's ears aren't beat up too bad, it means you probably didn't stick your head in enough. It makes me think that I didn't utilize his talents enough."

Chiapparelli currently is planning a move to New York to continue his dream of making it in film.

"My life as a wrestler has prepared me for any aspect I go into, but the moments I had in wrestling — I'll never have any like that again," Chiapparelli said. "There's not a drug, there's no alcohol, there's not a girl, a job, nothing you can compare it to when 16,000 people are there, and you pin a guy in a huge match. Not one thing."

now is fairly old and limited in terms of capacity and functionality," Shope said.

Other new services will be worked out between Weeg employees and officials at the various departments that will co-sponsor improvements in their own systems, Shope said.

Some of the new systems may be in place by the end of the spring semester, he said.

The UI Computer Fee Advisory Committee, composed of faculty, staff and students, reviewed 51 proposals and then made their recommendations for use of the funds to Provost Peter Nathan and to Doug True, vice president for finance and university services.

LOCAL

Softball games postponed

The Iowa softball doubleheader against Iowa State, scheduled for Tuesday, was postponed due to inclement weather. It will be rescheduled at a later date.

Baseball to host UNI today

After a weekend of solid hitting, the Hawkeyes will host intrastate rival Northern Iowa in a doubleheader today.

Play will begin at 1 p.m. at Iowa Field.

Iowa stands at 12-13-1 overall, 6-2 in the Big Ten, after taking three of four from Purdue last weekend. Conference play will resume at Minnesota Saturday.

The Hawkeyes lead the series over the Panthers 54-8, winning the last 13 games.

Iowa's Jackson tabbed Pitcher of the Week

Iowa all-American Karen Jackson was named Big Ten Pitcher of the Week for the second consecutive week, conference officials announced Monday.

The senior from Roseville, Calif., went 3-0 last week on the mound and led the Hawkeyes to a 5-1 record throughout the week. Jackson struck out 28 and walked two batters, posting a 0.29 ERA in 24 innings.

The Hawkeyes travel to Penn State this weekend.

Baker qualifies for gymnastics regionals

Iowa gymnast Kim Baker has been selected to participate in the all-around competition at the NCAA Women's Gymnastics Regionals Saturday in Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Baker, last year's Big Ten Freshman of the Year, finished fifth in the all-around at the conference meet with a score of 38.775 to qualify for regionals.

Iowa assistant to be inducted into wrestling hall of fame

CRESCO, Iowa (AP) — Former Iowa standout Jim Zalesky and Buena Vista coach Al Baxter are the 25th class to be inducted into the Iowa Wrestling Foundation Hall of Fame.

They'll be honored Monday in Cresco.

Zalesky was a four-time All-American at Iowa and won NCAA championships in 1982, '83 and '84. He has been an assistant coach at Iowa the last four years.

Baxter has guided Buena Vista to eight Iowa Conference championships and his teams have finished among the top 10 in the NCAA Division III tournament six times.

Boddicker, Long headline AEGON golf celebrities

Former Cy Young Award winner Mike Boddicker and Chuck Long, a Heisman Trophy award runner-up, have committed to participate in the 1994 AEGON Advantage, the UI athletic department's golf event scheduled for June 27 at Finkbine Golf Course.

Boddicker and Long will be joined by former UI basketball players Steve Waite, Steve Krafcsin and Bobby Hansen, football standouts Rob Baxley, Mike Haight, Wally Hilgenberg and Mike Reilly, and wrestler Barry Davis.

Finkbine will be open to spectators on June 27. Friends of the athletic department and golfers interested in participating should contact the UI sports promotions office at 335-9431.

UI rugby club places fifth

The UI rugby club finished fifth at the April Fools Tournament Saturday at Southern Illinois in Carbondale.

Also on Saturday, 11 Hawkeyes played on the state's senior select team, which beat the Wisconsin Developmental Squad 43-10.

Iowa will host its home opener April 16.

Survey: Baseball salaries escalate in 1994

Ronald Blum

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The average salary rose 6.1 percent this year to $1,188,679 on opening day, according to a survey by The Associated Press, and the New York Yankees are the top-paid team for the first time since 1988.

New York Mets third baseman Bobby Bonilla is the highest-paid player at $6.3 million, according to an examination of the contract terms for 746 players on opening-day rosters and disabled lists.

The Yankees' average was $1,760,974, up slightly from their $1,759,429 average on Aug. 31, 1993, the last day before rosters expanded. Toronto, first last year at $1,765,582, dropped to fifth this opening day at $1,498,667.

The Detroit Tigers, with a major league-leading 15 million-dollar players, rose to second at $1,594,700 from 10th at $1,265,317. Atlanta remained third but dropped to $1,500,080 from $1,676,211.

San Diego once again was last, but rose to $515,231 from $378,471. The Cleveland Indians, who opened their new Jacobs Field ballpark on Monday, experienced the most dramatic rise, a 105 percent increase to $1,099,481 from $537,106. During the offseason, the Indians signed free agents Dennis Martinez and Eddie Murray.

The Colorado Rockies' average rose 66 percent to $830,679 from $499,439, and the Baltimore Orioles saw a 38 percent rise to $1,357,088 from $982,682. Under new owner Pete Angelos, the Orioles signed free agents Rafael Palmeiro and Sid Fernandez.

The NL champion Philadelphia Phillies dropped 16 percent to $1,090,414 from $1,301,694.

The 6.1 percent rise from last year's opening-day average of $1,120,254 was double the 2.7 percent increase in the Consumer Price Index during 1993 but less than the 8.9 percent increase in average ticket prices, to $10.45 from $9.60. It was double the 3.3 percent salary rise between the start of the 1992 and 1993 seasons.

Chicago Cubs second baseman Ryne Sandberg, the salary leader last season, was second at $6,299,966, including a discounted share of money he will be paid in the four years following his retirement.

The number of million-dollar players on opening day rose to 265 from 262.

Brewers thaw A's in opener

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Milwaukee warmed up with a two-out, five-run rally in the sixth inning Tuesday and the Brewers, behind Billy Spiers and Alex Diaz, won their coldest-ever home opener, beating the Oakland Athletics 11-7.

Rock salt was scattered on the stadium ramps and snow was on the ground behind the right field bleachers with game-time temperature at 31 degrees, a wind at 29 mph and a wind chill of zero.

The previous coldest home opener for the Brewers was 1989 when the temperature was 33 degrees with snow flurries.

Wind gusts may also have caused a hydraulic lift platform to topple onto a tent where a radio station was holding a tailgate party in the parking lot an hour before the opener, injuring four people. One woman was hospitalized in satisfactory condition and three others were treated at the scene.

Starters Cal Eldred, who gave up a grand slam to Terry Steinbach in a five-run first inning, and Bobby Witt of Oakland both struggled. Mark Kiefer (1-0) wound up with the win and Steve Ontiveros (0-1) got the loss.

Blue Jays 5, White Sox 3

TORONTO — Rookie Carlos Delgado homered off a restaurant window inside the SkyDome for the second straight day, and the Toronto Blue Jays beat Chicago.

For more baseball coverage, see Page 3B.

Dave Stewart (1-0) outpitched Alex Fernandez (0-1) for the victory. Last October, Stewart twice beat Fernandez in the AL playoffs, won by the Blue Jays in six games. Todd Stottlemyre, taking over the closer role because Duane Ward is on the disabled list, pitched a perfect ninth for his first career save.

Angels 8, Twins 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Chili Davis drove in three runs and Damion Easley scored three times as the California Angels roughed up Kevin Tapani and the Minnesota Twins.

Bo Jackson drove in two runs in his Angels' debut with a single and a grounder.

California's second through sixth batters — Easley, Tim Salmon, Davis, Jackson and Eduardo Perez — were a combined 9-for-12 with seven RBI, five runs and three walks during Tapani's 3<sup>1</sup>/<sub>3</sub> innings.

Mark Langston allowed eight hits, including home runs by Dave Winfield and Pedro Munoz, in 7<sup>1</sup>/<sub>3</sub> innings, walking four and striking out seven for the rejuvenated Angels.

SOFTBALL

Knopf ties pitchers in knots

Mike Egenes

The Daily Iowan

When Kari Knopf was nine years old, she played softball in a league set up for 12-year-old kids.

Now a freshman first baseman on the Iowa softball team, Knopf once again has found herself playing against older competition.

She competed for seven years in the Amateur Softball Association, and that experience is paying dividends so far this season. The freshman out of Des Moines Dowling High School is leading the league in hits with 36 and tops the Hawkeyes in batting average (.379) and RBI (21) after 30 games.

"We traveled to national tournaments (in the ASA) playing against a lot better competition," Knopf said. "But right now, I'm just looking for consistency. I hope I'll be able to keep hitting this well."

For many freshmen, the first collegiate season is a difficult transition, but Knopf doesn't focus on her freshman status.

"My play has turned around since the fall (season), and I haven't really thought about being a freshman," she said.

Iowa coach Gayle Blevins said many first-year players use their rookie status as an "excuse."

"I think that sometimes we use that conveniently to be an excuse," Blevins said. "A lot of it is just where you start, and it doesn't have anything to do with being in a certain class. Some people come in and let the fact that they're a first-year player stand in the way of being able to perform, or they're too intimidated by the situation of the competition they have to play against or even other players in the program."

Knopf admitted that she felt some intimidation early in the season.

"Maybe a little bit in the beginning, but now I look at it as a challenge," Knopf said.

Knopf was up to the challenge last weekend during a four-game series against Big Ten competition. She collected five hits and drove in two runs against Michigan State pitching. Her RBI came in the final game and were a key in Iowa's 5-4 comeback win.

The Hawkeyes were trailing by four in the sixth inning when Knopf came to the plate with two outs and the bases loaded. With a 3-2 count, Knopf grounded the ball into center field, scoring two and sending the Hawkeyes to their fourth league win.

Freshman Kari Knopf, left, stretches to snag a throw at first base during a recent Hawkeye game. Knopf is leading the team in nearly every offensive category after 30 games.

Knopf has surprised some people with her bat, but perhaps even more surprising has been her defensive play. She is a natural third baseman, but sophomore Melissa Wielandt has that position secured, and Knopf has been trans-

AMERICAN LEAGUE

ChiSox projected to repeat in West

(Editor's note: This is the second of a five-part series looking at the 1994 major-league teams.)

Ben Walker
Associated Press

A team-by-team look at the AL Central, in predicted order of finish: Chicago White Sox
Some teams that are projected for greatness spend years trying to reach the top and never make it. Others, like the White Sox, fulfill expectations right away by finishing first.

Cy Young winner Jack McDowell (22-10), Alex Fernandez (18-9), Wilson Alvarez (15-8) and rookie Jason Bere (12-5) formed the youngest playoff rotation ever. The problem will be filling the lefty role in the bullpen, now that Scott Radinsky is out with Hodgkin's disease.

Frank Thomas (.317, 41 HR, 128 RBI, 112 BB) became the 10th player to unanimously win the MVP award. Free agent Julio Franco, a lifetime .300 hitter, was signed to bat behind Thomas. Gold Glove third baseman Robin Ventura (.94 RBI, 105 BB) and slick shortstop Ozzie Guillen (.280) round out a nice infield.

Lance Johnson (.311, 14 triples) and Tim Lincecum (.306, 21 SB) key the outfield.

Kansas City Royals
If the Royals can find a way to avoid their usual slumps at the start of the season, they could win the Central, even without Greg Brett.

Vince Coleman, banished by the Mets, may thrive again on Midwestern turf. Newcomer Dave Henderson (20 HR for Oakland) also joins Bob Hamelin (29 HR at Triple-A) will take Brett's spot as the designated hitter.

Kevin Appier (18-8), David Cone (11-14, 3.33 ERA) and Tom Gordon (12-6) form a strong three in the rotation. Jeff Montgomery (45 saves) has emerged as one of baseball's best closers.

Cleveland Indians
The Indians expected to make a lot of money in their new ballpark this season and already went out and spent some of it for new players. There is a lot of excitement in Cleveland, although it may not result in the team's first postseason play since 1954.

Eddie Murray (100 RBI for the Mets), Dennis Martinez (15-9 for Montreal) and Jack Morris (7-12 for Toronto) join a club loaded with talented, young players.

Albert Belle (38 HR, 129 RBI), Carlos Baerga (.321, 114 RBI) and Kenny Lofton (.325, 70 SB) give the Indians a potent top of the lineup. Sandy Alomar Jr. can help, too, if he stays injury-free for the first time in four years.

Jose Mesa (10-12) is the only pitcher from the Indians' staff last season who reached double figures in wins. Charles Nagy can do it this year if he comes back from injuries.

Eric Plunk, Jerry DiPoto and Derek Lilliquist form a makeshift bullpen. On the field, and certainly off it, the Indians may not get over the 1993 tragedies that killed pitchers Steve Olin, Tim Crews and Cliff Young.

Minnesota Twins
Twice in the last few years, the Twins came out of nowhere and won the World Series. Once again, Minnesota does not look like much going into the season, although Tom Kelly always manages to get the most from his teams.

Kirby Puckett (.296, 89 RBI), Dave Winfield (21 HR, 76 RBI) and Kent Hrbek (25 RBI) are back again, along with steady Chuck Knoblauch (.277, 29 SB). Matt Walbeck, acquired from the Cubs for Willie Banks, takes over for Brian Harper at catcher. Kevin Tapani, Scott Erickson and Jim Deshaies all had losing records. Rick Aguilera (34 saves) and Shane Mack (.276) continue to attract trade interest.

Milwaukee Brewers
Without Robin Yount, Brewers fans may not have much to look forward to this season.

Ted Higuera, 35, has missed most of the last three seasons because of a torn rotator cuff, but pitched well in spring training. Greg Vaughn (30 HR, 97 RBI) could provide some excitement, as could Brian Harper (.304) if he's forced to chase fly balls in left field.

Cal Eldred and Ricky Bones were 500 pitchers and Jaime Navarro was one game below break-even.

Bill Wegman (4-14) was a disappointment.

LABOR TALKS

Strike on the horizon

Jim Abrams
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The head of the baseball players' union, on yet another trip to the nation's capital, warned Tuesday that the season could be marred by a strike.

"It's going to take a lot of hard work and more than a little bit of luck" to avoid a walkout, Donald Fehr said at the National Press Club.

Fehr claimed owners have complicated negotiations by failing to hire a commissioner and withholding key financial information.

"Players often ask who's running the show. I'm not sure it is being run," he said.

Owners, citing falling television revenues, increasing salaries and the revenue imbalance between large-market teams and small-market clubs, want a salary cap and appear set to unilaterally impose one if there isn't an agreement by November, when the next signing season starts.

Players are considering a protective strike during the second half of the season to force an agreement.

The sides met twice in March, but the owners made no proposals, offered no description of what a revenue-sharing plan might look like and provided few details of their financial status.

"If there's a better prescription for a very contentious negotiation, I'm not sure what it is," Fehr said.

Fehr acknowledged that national broadcast money could drop from about $14 million in 1993 to $7 million in 1994, but said baseball was in good shape and cited record attendance.

"How can an industry that's had this kind of sustained growth be in a crisis situation?" he said.

Oilers to keep Carlson, send Moon to Vikings

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The Houston Oilers and Cody Carlson's agent Tuesday were negotiating a new contract that would cut the quarterback's 1994 pay by $1 million but put him in the starting lineup and extend his stay with the team.

When the deal is completed, veteran quarterback Warren Moon is expected to be sent packing for Minnesota.

The Oilers and Vikings have been discussing a deal that would give Houston a fourth-round draft choice this year and a third-round pick in 1995 in exchange for Moon, the Houston Chronicle reported in Tuesday's editions.

Vikings vice president Jeff Diamond wouldn't comment on the negotiations. "All I can really say is that he remains one of many options that we're looking at," Diamond said Tuesday. "We do have many, many options."

Minnesota is interested in Moon as well as San Francisco backup Steve Bono. They also still might re-sign Sean Salisbury, a part-time starter each of the last two seasons.

The Oilers would like to get a deal done soon, because any QB signings would greatly affect their salary cap and any future moves they could make.

Moon, 37, wants to play two more years and the Vikings have an open QB after electing not to exercise their 1994 option on Jim McMahon's contract.

Carlson's agent, Vic Vines, resumed negotiations last week for a three-year deal with general manager Floyd Reese and general counsel Steve Underwood. Carlson is on a three-week vacation in Africa.

The new deal involves a $1 million pay cut for Carlson, who is under a two-year, $8.85 million contract he signed last year.

Houston needs to figure out something because it will have trouble fitting both quarterbacks' salaries under the $34.2 million cap. Each has contracts of at least $3 million for 1994.

Moon is scheduled to make $3.25 million this year and $3 million next year.

Moon's agent, Leigh Steinberg, told The Associated Press on Tuesday neither he nor his client has been approached by the Oilers regarding a trade.

READING TONIGHT

Award-winning writer blends bizarre humor, brutal irony, optimism

Lisa Anne Taggart
The Daily Iowan

Lex Williford's short-story collection "Macauley's Thumb" does the Iowa Short Fiction Award justice. Williford, who will read from his award-winning work tonight at Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St., has produced a remarkable, grimly ironic and morosely funny book of stories on the subjects of loss and despair.

Eight of the 10 stories in this collection focus on the dissolution of marriage through death or divorce. Williford, who teaches writing at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale, populates his tales with two-lane highways and Wal-marts, rattlesnakes and trucks, drinking men and disconsolate women.

But though this territory may sound familiar to fans of Raymond Carver's grim short stories, Williford cannot be dismissed as another Carver mimic: The stories in "Thumb" have a hopefulness and humor all their own, and Williford adds to this a talent for focusing on the just-right idiosyncratic detail that makes a character real rather than a type.

His ability to turn realistic situations bizarre is apparent in "Taking Nonie Home," the strongest story in the collection. On vacation in a remote region of Mexico, a couple is forced to confront the problems in their marriage when the man's mother suddenly dies and they have to smuggle the corpse across the border into the United States in order to give it a proper burial.

In "Hoot's Last Bubble Bath," Williford again adds comedy to a sad situation. An elderly alcoholic grapples with the impending death of his wife, braced for the worst with the company of his grandnephew and gallons of Jim Beam. But the old drunk is thrown off balance when a teetotaling girlfriend from his past arrives as his wife's new nurse.

There is a brutal and darkly humorous irony in all of these tales, though the longer ones tend to be more rewarding. In the title story, the last one in this collection, Cal Macauley is driven to hunt and torture rattlesnakes after his wife dies a horrible death from a snake bite.

The only story told from a child's point of view, "Fair Day," has one of the collection's most memorable characters: Larry Garrett, a bell-bottom wearing first-grader who can barely articulate the rage he feels at his father's recent abandonment of the family.

Though the landscape in this collection spans the North American map, from Mexico to Arkansas to Illinois, the emotions and situations of the characters often overlap. The similarity in tone between the stories can blur them if they are read all at one sitting.

But Williford's greatest success may be the optimistic note of recovery he often hits at a story's close, despite the dismal situations his characters find themselves in.

For nearly 25 years, the UI Writers' Workshop has sought annually to honor upcoming writers of great talent with its short fiction award. This year it has indubitably done just that.

Tonight's reading is free. It begins at 8 and will be broadcast live on WSUI (910 AM).

EXCHANGE PROGRAM BEGINS

I.C., Amsterdam students offer joint video broadcast

Prepare for a new frontier in arts education: K.A.A.S. TV.

K.A.A.S., a collaborative program between artists in Amsterdam and the UI, has shows playing tonight and Friday on UTV (channels 3 and 8) and Public Access Television (channel 2). The broadcasts will feature collaborative video, film and performance projects produced in conjunction with an exchange program designed to foster the exploration of different cultural, institutional and aesthetic perspectives.

K.A.A.S. is the product of Kontakt, an experiment in interactive learning between the Gerrit Rietveld Academie of Amsterdam and the UI's School of Art and Art History. The program is the brainchild of Professor Hans Breder, founder of the UI's 26-year-old multimedia and video art program, and Harry Heyink, professor of art at Amsterdam's Rietveld Academie.

In workshops held at the UI (and to be held in Amsterdam next year), Breder, Heyink, and other students and instructors compared works from their respective institutions, provided a forum to listen, critique and discuss the projects individually, and attempted to develop deeper insights into their cultural determinants. The forum has produced a wellspring of cooperative projects and goals.

Re-examining and reinventing the learning process lies at the center of the effort. The exchange, Breder said, emphasizes "cooperative learning" and intercultural communication. Often, he said, participants were shown the value of cultural and educational differences in the creative process.

"The differences bring in resources in terms of the educational process," Breder said. "They have more film, we have more performance."

Heyink adds that people from both institutions share a common philosophy. "The arts (classroom) is like a garden: There are a lot of people who have knowledge and many people who want knowledge." The cross-pollination of a variety of "backgrounds, roots, thinking and acting" makes the garden grow. "Students have experiences (together) and learn from each other as well as from professors."

The pieces to be broadcast will come in equal measure from students and faculty at Rietveld, those participating in the direct exchange and current UI multimedia students. One piece is the result of Breder and Heyink's work together during the workshop.

Some K.A.A.S. works will be broadcast tonight from 7:30 to 8:30; a two-hour live interactive satellite linkup begins Friday night at 7.

Free concert proved exceptional challenge to UI

Shayla Thiel

Rounding up a full orchestra, a smaller chamber orchestra of virtuoso players, a large chorus and three high-caliber soloists, all to perform one piece of music, is certainly no small task — especially when the piece happens to be one of the undisputed masterpieces of the 20th century. However, the UI music department has risen to the occasion and will present a free performance of Benjamin Britten's "War Requiem" tonight at 8 in Hancher Auditorium.

"It is really a work of exceptional difficulty, and I finally felt we had all the forces to accomplish it," said William Hatcher, UI director of choral activities, who will conduct the epic performance.

He said Britten, a lifelong pacifist, wrote the "War Requiem" for the rededication of St. Michael's Cathedral in Coventry, England, in 1962; the original cathedral was destroyed by German bomber planes in 1940. Although the United States is not currently involved in a world war, Hatcher said he believes the piece may still be taken as a historical reminder as well as a beautiful piece of music.

"There isn't a world war going on now, but let's think of Bosnia and Somalia," he said. "If people don't learn from the past, I'm afraid it might happen again. I'm afraid the 'War Requiem' will always be timely."

Britten selected texts from the Roman Catholic requiem Mass, or the "Mass for the dead." He combined this liturgical text with the graphic war images described by Wilfred Owen, a British war poet who was killed in battle during World War I just a week before the armistice.

"It's a complex piece of music, but we have the entire text translated from Latin to English, so I encourage those attending the performance to come a little bit early to read through the program so they can better understand it," Hatcher said. "Although it is a requiem, in the end, it is an extremely uplifting piece and very beautiful."

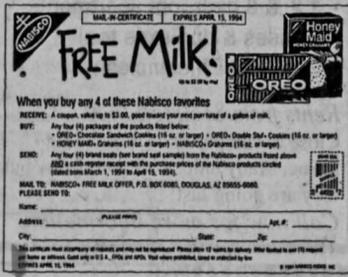

Much of the music department has been involved in the performance, which the directors have been planning for a year. The University Symphony will be joined by the UI Chamber Orchestra and the school's four major choral groups: Kantorei, the University Choir, Camerata Singers and Women's Chorale. In addition, there will be three vocal soloists featured, including guest artist soprano Joanna Johnston, tenor and School of Music faculty member Scott McCoy and baritone Drew Poling, a senior music major.

Hatcher said the major effort of the School of Music is incredibly important for the music students — not only because few colleges have the resources to undertake such a monumental piece, but also because Britten's message is so powerful.

"All music has some kind of message, whether it's social or simply a piece of art which moves us. Britten wanted to make a special statement about the horrors of war using Owen's war poetry and the requiem as sort of a religious statement of comfort," said Hatcher. "The message goes beyond being fine music: It speaks to people in their lives between countries and cultures throughout the world."

Astronomers: Earth

Way in galactic collision
LONDON (AP) — Astronomers say Earth is colliding with another galaxy, but earthlings have no way to see it.

The collision is being detected in ultra slow motion. It will take 500 million years for the galaxies to reach each other. The collision will be visible to the naked eye in 5.88 trillion years.
