Israel, PLO mediators come to terms

CAIRO, Egypt — Last-minute hitches were resolved and agreement was reached on Palestinian autonomy in the Gaza Strip and Jericho early today, the chief PLO delegate announced following talks between Israeli and PLO negotiators.

"The negotiations are over and we are now going to write down what we have agreed," Nabil Shaath told reporters. "Everything is agreed. The signing is going to be in hours."

The agreement already had been scheduled to be signed at a ceremony starting at 11 a.m.

Shaath gave no details, and none of the Israeli delegates talked to reporters immediately.

"Negotiations is giving and taking, and we have reached an agreement that we are satisfied with," Shaath said.

His statement came after Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and PLO chief Yasser Arafat met along with their aides for more than six hours.

U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak — both of whom have been trying to mediate between the two sides — joined in for part of the talks.

Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, a strong advocate of making peace with the Palestine Liberation Organization, also took part.

The agreement would give the Palestinians for the first time a measure of control over their lives on part of the land they claim as their own. It also sets the stage for talks on a permanent solution to the decades-old conflict between Palestinians and Israel.

On Tuesday, as more than six months of negotiations drew to a close, Palestinian delegates accused Israel of creating new obstacles and quibbling over details.

"The Israelis are going back on what was agreed upon," PLO delegate Jamil Tarif charged.

Arafat voiced similar complaints on the chartered Norwegian jet that carried him from Tunis. He even said Norway's foreign minister, Bjorn Tore Godal, had to persuade him to make the flight.

But Rabin spokesman Gad Ben-Ari insisted the issues were "more than 98 percent" settled. Speaking of disputes to be resolved by Arafat and Rabin, he said, "There are substantial issues, but issues that can be resolved."

Uri Dromi, head of Israel's Government Press Office, told

Vote tally delays ANC's takeover

Laurinda Keys

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Nelson Mandela's African National Congress must wait three extra days to take power because ballot counting is taking so long.

Even though the winner has claimed victory and the losers have conceded, almost half the votes remained to be counted in South Africa's first all-race election.

The 400-member National Assembly, the main chamber of the new Parliament, will now meet in Cape Town on Monday rather than Friday. Its first, and somewhat urgent, task is to formally elect Mandela as South Africa's first black president.

His inauguration is planned for the next day, May 10, in Pretoria.

Mandela and the man he will soon replace, F.W. de Klerk, met to discuss who will be in the cabinet their parties will dominate. De Klerk has said he wants the cabinet chosen and sworn in the same day as the president. But that is not required and is unlikely.

Provincial legislatures, which name the members of the new Senate, will not meet until Saturday, instead of Thursday.

The date changes were announced Tuesday by the Transitional Executive Council, which has been overseeing the governing of the country.

"The only date that seems cast in stone is the inauguration on Tuesday because of the invited guests," said Dries van Heerden, spokesman for the council.

The tentative guest list includes the presidents of Israel and China, perhaps Yasser Arafat, Hillary Rodham Clinton and Britain's Prince Philip — people who can't be asked to hang around an extra day if things just aren't ready yet.

80 ill after prom

LAKE CITY, Iowa (AP) — State officials say they suspect food poisoning is the culprit after about 80 people became ill in Lake City.

Russell Currier, state health doctor, said the illness likely stems from food served at the Southern Cal High School prom Saturday night. The victims include 55 students and 26 adults who attended the event.

Currier said the symptoms were severe but short-lived.

"This illness has a short duration, but the symptoms are very severe — it makes you feel so sick you're scared if you're going to live," Currier said.

He said the illnesses didn't show up until Monday but recovery was rapid.

"We have kids who want to go on to a track meet tonight who were sick this morning. That's how quick they're springing back," Currier said.

He said the victims apparently all ate food at the prom banquet, which was prepared by volunteers. He said officials will use a survey to determine what foods were consumed.

Author of children's books dies at age 74

GSTAAD, Switzerland (AP) — Richard McClure Scarry, whimsical American author and illustrator of popular children's books, died of a heart attack, his wife said Tuesday. He was 74.

Scarry

Scarry's books have sold more than 100 million copies worldwide and have been translated into as many as 30 languages, said Patricia Murphy Scarry, his wife for more than 40 years.

"The Lowly worm was his very favorite character for all the children," she said.

Many youngsters have delighted in finding Lowly — the Tyrolean-titted earthworm — peeking from corners of Scarry's pictures.

Preparing for summer

City employee Ron Wilcox vacuums the last of the spring thaw from the baby pool next to the City Park Swimming Pool. Workers have finished draining and sweeping the main pool, removing a few dozen garbage bags full of soggy leaves and debris during the annual cleanup. Wilcox said the pool is scheduled to open Memorial Day weekend.

Forum to focus on 'family' statue

Chris Pothoven
The Daily Iowan

UI community members will get the chance to sound off on the removal and damage of the UI School of Social Work statue at a forum tonight and a symposium Friday.

Tonight's panel discussion will be held at 7:30 in room E109 of the UI Art Building. Samuel Becker, interim director of the school, will moderate.

"The removal and destruction of the statue has raised many questions," he said. "Should there be a university policy on such matters as moving or discarding a work of art? What is the university's responsibility? What is the responsibility of the larger public for public art? Should judgments of the quality or offensiveness of a work affect a decision on such actions — and if so, whose judgments?"

Program helps welfare recipients attain financial stability

Rima Vesely
The Daily Iowan

State social workers hope a new program will provide an answer to the long debated question of how to get people off welfare.

In the past, government welfare regulations "mutilated" the possibility of being financially independent, said Mary Jean Timp, the public information officer for the Department of Health and Human Services.

Over the course of a year, department workers met with welfare recipients to work out a better plan. What they came up with, the Iowa Family Investment Plan, offers a new approach to how money from Aid to Families with Dependent Children is paid out.

The old AFDC system often discouraged work, saving money and family stability, department workers charge.

They hope the new program, which started last October with additional changes implemented in January, will provide recipients the initiative to support themselves.

"Under the old program, the only way someone could have succeeded is if they were extremely motivated," Timp said. "The whole idea is to give you a leg up, get you over the hill, so you can get off and stay off."

Unlike old regulations that immediately began deducting money available through AFDC once a recipient started working, under the new plan, nothing is deducted from the welfare check for the first four months.

And less is taken out. The new plan allows people who work to have only 20 percent of gross earnings deducted from their welfare checks.

Season ripe for rejection letters

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Business student Scott Caudill received a rejection letter from a computer manufacturer that really stung. It thanked him for an interview he never even had.

But it wasn't a big enough gaffe to win the second annual "Ugly Rejection Letter Contest."

That dubious honor went to a letter received by senior Tom Maguire from a financial services firm. The letter said he wouldn't be hired, but "We hope you will consider referring others to us as applicants for employment or as clients."

The University of Virginia's McIntire School of Commerce's contest helps ease the tension that is particular to this time of year.

"The idea of the whole thing is to say, 'You're not alone,'" Maguire said.

The contest, which ran throughout the spring, received letters with grammatical errors, misspellings, gender confusion and nonsense.

Alligator takes a bite out of law

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — It's alligator mating season, and one police officer found out how worked up they can get.

The 9-foot-long male alligator tried to take a bite out of officer M.R. Floyd, then ripped a chunk off his cruiser.

The alligator had wandered onto a highway Sunday and lunged at cars before Floyd showed up.

"That darned thing almost grabbed me," Floyd said. "It came after me with its mouth wide open. When he couldn't get me, he bit my patrol car and was just shaking it until he tore part of it off."

The alligator pulled off a 10-inch chunk of plastic from the front bumper.

A state trapper was called in. He snared the alligator and captured a 2 1/2-foot baby alligator in a ditch.

$100 cat costs thousands in fees

HALLANDALE, Fla. Legal costs have already reached $19,000 in a contest between a retiree and the board of her cooperative association, and they could more than double.

A fight over title or services? Nope.

Just a 10-pound cat named Sam who originally cost Phyllis Hammond $100.

On Jan. 12, 1993, the board that runs Taromina, a 92-unit oceanfront building, rescinded its ban on pets.

Hammond went out and bought the cat, a silver-ticked Oriental short hair.

Then, less than three weeks after its first vote, the board reinstated the ban and told Hammond to get Sam out of her one-bedroom apartment.

She refused. An arbitrator ruled in Hammond's favor and the board appealed to Broward Circuit Court. Owners voted 27-7 in favor of pursuing the case, said association president Michael Moss.

Hammond, who lives on a pension and Social Security, has spent $8,063 to keep Sam, the board has spent $11,000 and lawyers say a trial could boost the costs to more than $40,000.

Warmer weather brings out a bumper crop of bare feet everyone seems to have an opinion. Some say they're just smelly and gross while others are truly delighted. Whether viewed as a fetish or a fiend, obsessed.

Feet: Love 'em or hate 'em

Tricia DeWalt
The Daily Iowan

Feet can be cute or ugly; wide or narrow; have bunions, callouses and corns — there's even a good chance that yours smell.

Whatever the shape, size or degree of cleanliness, most people either like feet or completely detest them.

Some people think feet say a lot about a person.

UI senior Zuniza Jones said he most often notices the feet of potential female companions.

"If her feet are cute, then she's usually a cute girl. It's almost like a turn on. I don't care if they're big, just as long as they are cute," he said. "But if they have bunions and callouses, she can just go ahead by herself."

UI sophomore Lucas Krebs said a person's feet say a lot about their overall hygiene.

"If there's one thing I really hate, it's grungy toes," he said.

Krebs said it doesn't matter how much he likes a person — if he finds out they have gross feet, he will stop talking to them.

"I'm not kidding," he said. "It's a huge deal. Your feet are a foundation of you, and if you don't have good feet, you're not a good person."

Jones, whose feet are a size 10, said his are ugly. But he is OK with that because "guys are supposed to have ugly feet."

"On my baby toe of my right foot, I have a corn," he said. "I've had it taken care of, but still when I take my socks off and look at it, it's disgusting."

UI graduate student Bob Pascal has size 14 feet but said he doesn't mind looking at his or anyone else's.

"I don't think they're gross," he said. "They give you something to walk on."

One thing Pascal doesn't like is people who have noisy feet.

"I'm not kidding. It's a huge deal. Your feet are a foundation of you, and if you don't have good feet, you're not a good person."

Lucas Krebs, UI sophomore

"I had some roommates once who used their feet to make a lot of noise," he said. "It was really arousing. It woke me up."

There are people, however, who adore feet.

UI senior Kari Mozena depends on feet, but not her own, to pay the rent each month.

She has worked in the shoe department at J.C. Penny Co., Old Capitol Mall, for the past two years. She said one customer comes in almost every day to buy shoes and, well — watch women buy them.

"He comes in and likes to watch women try on shoes, especially high heels," she said. "He will also buy shoes, take them home and ruin them so he can buy new ones."

Mozena said she and her co-workers call the customer "shoe fetish guy." She said he is "a nut" because he never tries to exchange or return the shoes he has ruined by such methods as applying car wax and bubble bath.

"He just brings them back to show us what he has done to them," she said. "I must have sold him at least 24 pairs in the past 2 years. And the shoes he buys are pretty expensive, usually in the $60-$90 range."

Mozena said feet "aren't too bad," but is glad she doesn't have to put shoes on every customer who comes in.

"Usually just children and women who are trying on high heels," she said.

But you won't catch Jones touching strangers' feet anytime soon — especially if they have toe jam.

"I can't stand toe jam," he said. "It's not a big problem for me, but when it occurs, it just ticks me off."

Krebs said Michael Jordan's feet really stand out in his mind.

"I was looking at a book about Michael Jordan and they showed a picture of his feet and they were nasty," he said. "I felt sorry for the guy. His feet really take a pounding and there's nothing he can do."

However, Krebs was timid about disclosing the size of his feet.

"You know what they say about a guy with big feet," he said. "They have big hands."

37 PLAYS IN UNDER TWO HOURS

Ophelia: 'My biological clock is ticking'

Darren Pai
Associated Press

HONOLULU — So what did Ophelia really have on her mind? "My biological clock is ticking and I want some babies now."

Call it a modern context. Or call the work of the Reduced Shakespeare Company what the three-man troupe calls it: "a high-speed roller-coaster type condensation of all of Shakespeare's plays."

The irreverent trio presents all 37 of William Shakespeare's plays in less than two hours, performing all the roles in "The Complete Works of Shakespeare (Abridged)."

"What we try to do is put Shakespeare into a modern context for the audience," Reed Martin said back stage at Diamond Head Theatre, where the show opened Monday night. "His plays have received such serious treatment over the centuries, but in his day he was a popular playwright. He'd be the Steven Spielberg of his time."

The company began doing ad-libbed "pass the hat" renditions of Hamlet in the streets of Berkeley, Calif.

The show quickly grew with a yearlong run in London's West End in 1992 and performances at the Edinburgh Festival Fringe and the Fringe Festival Los Angeles. The troupe next takes the show to the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., for a two-week run in June.

The pace is so swift that promotional material warns that the production "is not recommended for people with heart ailments, bladder problems, inner-ear disorders and / or people inclined to motion sickness."

The historical plays are performed as a football game with a crown substituted for the ball. King Lear tries to enter the game but gets disqualified for being a fictional character.

Hamlet is the finale. Ophelia, played by Matthew Croke, drowns herself in a glass of water. The performance climaxes with Croke directing audience members to play the parts of Ophelia's psyche by chanting, "Get thee to a nunnery," "Paint it an inch thick" and her demand that Hamlet sire her children.

"Cut the crap, Hamlet. My biological clock is ticking and I want some babies now."

"What we try to do is put Shakespeare into a modern context for the audience. His plays have received such serious treatment over the centuries, but in his day he was a popular playwright. He'd be the Steven Spielberg of his time."

Farmers Market sees new locale

Liza Roche
The Daily Iowan

Offering local produce, baked goods and crafts, the Iowa City Farmers Market will begin its 1994 season today at a new site inside the Chauncey Swan parking ramp, located next to the College Street bridge.

For the past two years, the market has been held at the Linn Street parking lot. The new location will be more convenient for patrons, said Marilyn Kriz, Farmers Market supervisor.

"The last location was not as accessible to people," she said. "There was no parking."

Linda Licht, a flower vendor at the market for the past three years, said she is glad the location was changed.

"I look forward to it because it will be under cover," she said.

But Licht said some things still need to be worked out.

"Some people are worried about the tightness of the area," she said. "Anything in the unknown is always trial and error until we get it running."

The customers make Iowa City's market unique, Licht said.

"I like the variety of people in Iowa City," she said.

Forty-seven vendors participate in the market and come from as far away as Moline, Ill.

Consumers can learn a lot about the products they buy at the Farmers Market, Kriz said, because "you're talking right to the person that grows it."

The consumer can ask the producer about the chemicals used to grow the product or the best ways to prepare the food, Kriz said.

"I think what's neat about the Farmers Market is the availability of fresh produce," Licht said. "It's just a plain wonderful experience."

The Farmers Market will run until October.

CLASS SIZE LIMITED

UI offers sign language history course as GER

Terry Collins
The Daily Iowan

Beginning this fall, the UI will be the first of the three regent universities to offer a course on the history of American Sign Language.

American Sign Language I will be part of a four-semester sequence that can fulfill a student's foreign language General Education Requirement. It will be offered Monday through Friday at 2:30 p.m., and, much like a language class, four days of the class will be instructional and one day will be a lab.

Because space is limited for the course, an application, which can be picked up at the Liberal Arts Office of Academic Programs in room 116 of Schaeffer Hall, is required. The deadline for applications is Aug. 15.

Associate Dean of Academic Programs James Lindberg said the special form and deadline are needed to exactly determine how many students are interested in taking the course.

"We're giving students until mid-August to turn in the form because of the limited availability and urge them to call or stop by our offices if they have any comments or concerns," he said. "This course has been in the works for two years, so we're not taking any chances."

In 1992, the College of Liberal Arts approved American sign language as a course that can fulfill the foreign language GER.

Course instructor Douglas Baynton said a class teaching the history of American sign language is needed at the UI.

"I became involved because a large number of people on campus wanted to see it taught here," he said. "Classes of this type are already taught at an increasingly large number of colleges and universities across the country."

Although there are currently classes at the UI that teach certain levels of sign language, several phone calls over the years from students have shown high demand for this specific course, said Joann Castagna, assistant to the dean in the College of Liberal Arts.

"I've been getting phone calls, Provost (Peter) Nathan has been receiving calls, so has Charlie Anderson from speech and pathology," she said. "Because the demand has been so great within the university, we want to definitely try to meet their needs."

Nathan said offering a course on American sign language will be just the beginning for interested students.

"I think the class will be a wonderful component," he said. "Not only will the university be giving students the opportunity to learn ASL, but down the line, the chance for certification as well."

Many confuse the term "sign language" as the only manual form of communication for the deaf, but Baynton said in his class he will try to dispel that common myth and others.

"There's a common belief that sign language is some kind of universal pantomime form of communication. That's not true," he said. "It's just like a spoken language, but there exists different sign languages in different countries."

Research has proven that American sign language is like any other natural language; it has unique expression, terminology and slang, Baynton said.

He said American sign language has a linguistic history that is distinct from the English language.

"Sign language is developed within its community of users because Americans have totally different grammar than their British counterparts," he said. "A deaf American can travel to Great Britain and could not possibly communicate at all with another person from there because they have a different sign language not connected with ours."

Baynton encourages students interested in learning the complexities of American sign language to take the class. He said it will be exciting at times but also a lot of work.

"What I'd like students to realize is this is a language class just like any other," he said. "So if they decide to take this course, they'll learn a whole new system of grammar and vocabulary."

Campaign financing debated by GOP rivals

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Incumbent Republican Gov. Terry Branstad on Tuesday attacked rival Fred Grandy's campaign finances. Grandy's campaign countered with, "We talk issues, he talks insults."

The latest exchange underscored the competitive race for the GOP nomination in the June 7 primary. Branstad attacked Grandy for using money raised for his congressional campaign to partially finance the primary for governor. Grandy transferred about $185,000 from his congressional campaign fund to his gubernatorial account.

Brian Kennedy, Branstad's campaign manager, said that amounts to "money laundering" because Grandy raised money for his congressional campaign, then shifted it to the governor's race.

That means Grandy "raised the special interests money under false pretenses."

"Iowa is blessed with a tradition for clean and ethical politics," said Kennedy. "Fred Grandy has not only violated that tradition, but done so in a manner that draws into question his integrity."

He said the state's ethics laws prohibit candidates for state office from raising money from lobbyists during the legislative session and for 30 days after lawmakers adjourn. That restriction doesn't apply to congressional candidates.

Charles Robbins, a Grandy spokesman, said the transfer is legal and said Grandy had cleared the shift with each contributor who donated to the congressional campaign.

"We did in every single case," Robbins said. "We abided by the laws. The governor acknowledges we did nothing improper."

Robbins turned the attack back on Branstad, saying, "Who is the governor to talk about ethics and spending?"

Robbins said Branstad is guilty of a variety of missteps in handling state finances, "all of it leading to a $400 million deficit."

Robbins said the attack was another example of Branstad seeking to shift the focus of the election away from issues and onto Grandy.

"It's always the same thing," Robbins said. "We talk issues, he talks insults. This is just another example of the way this campaign has gone."

Kennedy also accused Grandy of "waging the costliest primary campaign in the history of Iowa."

PICK ANNOUNCED BY JUNE 18

Campbell narrowing running mate choice

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Democratic gubernatorial candidate Bonnie Campbell has a "short list" of potential running mates, though the names change occasionally, aides said.

"At any given time, there are three, four or five names on it," said Phil Roeder, a Campbell spokesman. "It's a decision that's coming up pretty quick."

Roeder said staffers have not developed a formal selection process, but the issue is discussed within the campaign in part because there's a relatively short time to make the pick.

Campbell faces primary opposition from Des Moines businessman Bill Reichardt, but she is a heavy favorite to win the primary and staffers have the luxury of pondering post-election plans.

The first major decision would be selection of a running mate, a decision to be announced after the June 7 primary. There's pressure because her choice must be ratified at the Democratic State Convention, which is June 18.

The pick will be announced at least a few days before the convention to avoid handing delegates a surprise.

There are only a few restrictions for entry onto the lieutenant governor hopeful list, and they aren't surprising. The pick will be a male Democrat who lives outside Des Moines, Roeder said.

With crime topping the list of voter concerns, aides have also discussed finding a running mate with a law enforcement background. As attorney general, Campbell is the state's top law enforcement official.

UISA elects committees in final meeting of year

Molly Spann
The Daily Iowan

Nominations for UI committees passed following some argument in the year's final UI Student Assembly meeting Tuesday night.

Controversy centered around objections from several UISA senators that not all interviewees were present during the final voting to determine who would sit on the committees.

"We're opening ourselves up to a lawsuit for discrimination," Graduate and Professional Student Sen. Joel Lentzner said.

UISA Vice President Gretchen Lohman said she understands some of the concerns with the election process but thought the nominations were done as fairly as possible.

In other business, $7,483 in supplemental funding was voted through the Assembly by seven different UI student groups.

CEDAR RAPIDS — A Cedar Rapids man was charged with first-degree murder after he turned himself in for the shooting death of his live-in girlfriend.

Police said Brian Sillick, 34, killed Tammi Wilson with three blasts from a sawed-off shotgun Monday morning.

Assistant police Chief Bruce Kern said Sillick drove to the Cedar Rapids police department and told officers in the parking lot, "I killed her."

Sillick made an initial appearance in court late Monday afternoon and was ordered held on $1 million bond.

Police said one of Wilson's daughters, Lindsey Wilson, 8, witnessed at least part of the assault and ran next door to ask for help. A second daughter, Chelsey Wilson, 5, was in a nearby room.

For now, the girls will stay with Wilson's father, Glen Hurt, a retired supervisor from the city water department whose wife died a few years ago.

"They're my little pals," he said.

'CONSTANT FLIP-FLOPS' DENIED

Clinton challenges foreign policy critics

Nancy Benac
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Bristling over criticism of his foreign policy from one continent to the next, President Clinton said Tuesday night, "It's not fair to say we've been unprincipled or vacillating" but that global problems are more difficult than he had imagined.

At a televised forum on foreign policy, Clinton went on the offensive against persistent criticism that he's been an indecisive world leader, telling a questioner in Sarajevo, "There have been no constant flip-flops, madam."

Clinton used the occasion to warn Haiti's military leaders that he has not ruled out the use of force to restore democracy. He told North Korea it must permit international inspection of suspected nuclear weapons sites. And he said he wants to avoid revoking China's most-favored trade status but that the loss of those benefits is "clearly an option on the table."

Clinton's appearance was televised live around the world by CNN.

"We've had a lot of successes that perhaps have not been as noticed as they should have been," the president said in defense of his policies.

He said the two-year civil war in Bosnia and the defiance of the military in Haiti were two areas that defied easy solutions. "At least on the international front, I would say the problems are more difficult than I imagined them to be" as a candidate, Clinton said.

"I have been willing to risk error and when you do that you get criticism," the president said.

Rejecting any suggestion that he fire his foreign policy team, Clinton said, "I think they're up to the job. It's just that they're plowing new ground" in the aftermath of the Cold War.

He acknowledged that as a candidate he had underestimated the difficulty of forging a coalition with European allies to stand up to Serbian aggression in the former Yugoslavia. Clinton had accused George Bush of failing to take a tough stand.

Clinton decried the ethnic bloodshed that has killed upwards of 200,000 people in Rwanda. He said the United States must provide more humanitarian aid, help deal with the flood of refugees and "get the political process going again."

"I think we have done a very great deal," Clinton added. "Do I wish we could have done more earlier? Do I wish the Europeans and our other allies had totally agreed with me? Of course, I do. But I also respect their differences and their long experience in this area. I did the best I could; I moved as quickly as I could."

As for Haiti, Clinton said the United States "cannot afford to discount the prospect of a military option" to restore democracy and return ousted Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to power.

"We have not decided to use force," Clinton said. "All I've said is that we cannot rule it out anymore."

He said Haiti's military rulers have thwarted democracy and have visited "abject misery on their people. ... Innocent civilians are being killed and mutilated."

"It is wrong. We have got to do what we can to stop it," Clinton said.

On another troubling front, Clinton said he hoped to be able to renew most-favored nation trading status for China, saying Beijing has made "significant overall progress" on some but not all human rights problems.

Loss of the China market would deal a severe blow to America's aircraft manufacturers and other industries.

Clinton also:

• Said he was determined to "simply continue to make progress" toward negotiating expanded trade with Japan. He rejected suggestions that numerical targets represented "managed trade," saying, "We have to know if we are making progress or not."

• Said the lesson of U.S. involvement in Somalia was that the United States should be willing to help save lives in struggling countries "but not to solve your problems for you."

Cyclone rips across coast of Bangladesh

Ranjan Roy
Associated Press

MUSONIPARA, Bangladesh — The howling wind sounded like "a thousand children crying in darkness," said Zakir Ahmed who spent the night in terror.

"At daybreak it was finally over," he said Tuesday after surviving the cyclone that pummeled Bangladesh's southeastern coast for five hours the day before, killing at least 106 people.

Relief workers said the toll would rise but would be far less than the 130,000 dead from a 1991 cyclone in the same area.

Before weakening and moving into neighboring Burma, the cyclone flattened hundreds of villages, leaving tens of thousands of people homeless and hungry.

After the winds eased, Prime Minister Khaleda Zia flew to the area, which is hammered by the sea's fury almost every year, to inspect the damage. "My government will stand by you in your bad times," she told survivors.

Every time she moved to a new group of homeless people, women and children stretched out their hands, clamoring for food and money. Many others sat dumbly on the sheets of tin, which once were roofs of their flimsy huts before being wrenched and flung by the winds.

About 7 million people live in the cyclone-prone region along the 250-mile coast and on 50 islands.

The lower casualty count indicated the government has improved its early warning system and evacuation procedures since the 1991 disaster, when the poor peasants who occupied the sandy islands and shifting coastline were reluctant to abandon their property.

This time, hundreds of thousands of people escaped to 900 concrete storm shelters that were built since the last cyclone.

Among the most badly hit communities were the 19 refugee camps for Burmese Muslims around Cox's Bazar. At least 85 refugees were killed in the camps, said Enamul Kabir, the district administrator of Cox's Bazar. He said 21 Bangladeshis died in the towns of Teknaf and Ukhiya.

Associated Press

In Teknaf, all mud huts were destroyed, Information Secretary Nuruddin Ali Masud told reporters in Dhaka. Relief officials said most deaths were caused by flying debris and falling trees.

In the coastal community of Musonipara outside Teknaf, a 50-foot concrete electric pole built to withstand tidal waves snapped like a twig in the 130 mph winds.

Ahmed, a 50-year-old farmer, and his family of 11 ran out of their house just as it was collapsing. They salvaged a large plastic sheet and used it to cover themselves from the blinding rain while standing in the open for nine hours.

On Tuesday, homeless people gathered along the highway with empty pots and pans, waiting for relief workers. Some cooked rice on small fires made of wood chopped from the uprooted trees.

"The storm started before most people even had lunch on Monday. This will be our first meal in 24 hours," said Tariq Zaman, a farmer.

Dab Prewitt, head of the Red Cross in Dhaka, said the refugee camps were extensively damaged. They have housed 200,000 people since they fled military persecution by the Buddhist army in Burma three years ago.

Masud, the information secretary, said 56 medical teams rushed to the cyclone-hit area, carrying with them 5 million water purifying tablets.

Relief workers said people were drinking water from ponds, many polluted by floating carcasses of cattle killed by the cyclone.

U.N. ASKED FOR HELP

Pandemonium rules in Rwandan capital

Pauline Jelinek
Associated Press

NAIROBI, Kenya — Heavy shelling battered Rwanda's capital in a surge of fighting between Tutsi rebels and Hutu-led government troops Tuesday, and new reports on ethnic butchery in the countryside said militiamen killed 34 orphans and Red Cross workers.

A British-based aid group, Oxfam, pleaded with the United Nations to send troops back into Rwanda to protect civilians from the slaughter that has raged unchecked for nearly a month.

At least 100,000 Rwandans have been killed since Rwanda's president, a member of the majority Hutu ethnic group, died in a mysterious plane crash April 6 in the capital, Kigali. U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali has said the death toll may approach 200,000 out of a population of 8.5 million.

But Oxfam's director, David Bryer, said reports from his colleagues working with Rwandan refugees who have flooded into neighboring countries suggest that up to 500,000 people may have been slain, most of them minority Tutsis.

"If this is confirmed, it will represent genocide on a horrific scale, with a level of killing the world has not seen since Cambodia in the 1970s," Bryer said in a letter to British Prime Minister John Major urging international intervention.

In a new example of the savagery, the International Red Cross reported Tuesday that 21 orphans were slain by militiamen in Butare Sunday, along with 13 Rwandan Red Cross workers who tried to protect them.

The Belgian Red Cross quoted one of its officials in Butare, Pascal Dufour, as saying the children — ages 3 to 12 — were "selected on an ethnic basis" from a group of 500 orphans evacuated last month from Kigali, about 50 miles to the north.

During a visit to Oslo, Norway, Boutros-Ghali repeated his call to African states to provide troops for an all-African peacekeeping force that would be financed and equipped by the West. U.N. officials said no nation has pledged troops.

A foreign military presence is necessary to "defuse the conflict, to contain the genocide," Boutros-Ghali said.

Such a mission would have to be approved by the Security Council, which last month slashed the peacekeeping force in Rwanda from 2,500 to a token presence of 270 because of the massacres. Only about 465 U.N. soldiers remain.

The Security Council scheduled private consultations Tuesday to consider an arms embargo on all parties to the conflict. The U.S. government, which favors such an embargo, backs an all-African peacekeeping force and has said no American troops would be sent to Rwanda.

In Belgium, a spokesman for Tutsi rebels said they opposed any intervention in the Central African country.

"If the mission of such a force is to stop the genocide, it is too late," Jacques Bihozagara said in Brussels.

SOME LOBBYING MISFIRING

Debate over assault weapons ban rages

Carolyn Skorneck
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The debate over assault-style weapons intensified Tuesday on Capitol Hill and featured actor Charlton Heston, who accused those who want to ban 19 types of firearms of lying.

Meanwhile, an aide to the chief sponsor, Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said the legislation was withdrawn in 12 votes of passage. Last week, Schumer had 15 to 20 votes were needed.

"I'm amazed at ... how much deception, how much deliberate misstatement of reality is taking place in this debate," Heston told reporters at a news conference arranged by the National Rifle Association.

"None of the lead people" pushing passage of the assault-style weapons ban, including President Clinton, "are speaking the truth," said Heston.

"I think the degree of misinformation is more than simple ignorance," he said. "It has to be deliberate obscuration." Heston said that opponents are improperly calling the firearms assault weapons and that the measure "does nothing, nothing, to reduce crime and violence."

On the other side, a bipartisan group of 20 female members of Congress and actress Meredith Baxter urged passage of the bill.

"It's time to call the NRA's bluff," said Rep. Nita Lowey, D-N.Y. "It's time to declare the NRA soft on crime. It's time to say that the NRA is the criminal's best friend. It's time to stand up to the NRA, stand up for the American people and ban these killing machines."

Rep. Marge Roukema, R-N.J.,

Associated Press

Actor Charlton Heston holds a placard of Richard Allen Davis, accused in the abduction and murder of Polly Klaas, during a news conference on Capitol Hill Tuesday to discuss the banning of assault weapons. Heston urged President Clinton to either learn about firearms or stop trying to impose restrictions on the right to bear arms.

rejected NRA complaints that the measure's supporters wrongly contend it will stop crime.

"We understand that this bill will not control crime and gun violence," Roukema said. "No one pretends that it will. Only the NRA wants to make that the issue." However, she said, it must be approved in conjunction with the crime bill Congress is ready to pass.

The House is expected to vote Thursday on legislation to stop production and sale of 19 assault-style firearms and copycat models and limit detachable magazines to 10 rounds. The bill exempts 650 named rifles and shotguns and would not take away any guns now legally in private hands.

Similar provisions were incorporated in the Senate crime bill passed last November. The House crime bill passed two weeks ago did not address the issue.

The last time the House voted on banning assault-style weapons — in October 1991 — the measure failed by 70 votes, 247-177.

Separately, Lee Brown, Clinton's director of drug control policy, was joined by police officers who were shot at by criminals wielding weapons that would be banned and relatives of officers who were killed by such guns.

"Banning assault weapons is a message that our Congress should have gotten long ago without our help and without the personal tragedies of the people who are here with us today," Brown said.

Lisa Lally of Stanton, Ky., told of the deaths of her brother-in-law, Powell County, Ky., Sheriff Steve Bennett, and her brother, Deputy Arthur Briscoe, ambushed by a man using an AK-47 rifle equipped with a 30-round magazine.

Bennett, "who didn't even have a chance to fire his .357 Magnum, was shot in the back three times as he attempted to take cover," she said.

Briscoe ran out of bullets long before his attacker and was shot twice in the back as he tried to run, she said. The assailant then approached his prone body and "put one more bullet in Arthur to the right side of his head. ... We were unable to open his casket at the joint funerals."

The NRA's Wayne LaPierre said the Treasury Department's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms plans to add 40 weapons to the banned list if the bill passes, citing a letter to Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, an NRA board member.

The April 1 letter from Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Director John Magaw does not list any additional weapons but says, "The majority of semiautomatic weapons could be modified by the addition of features such as pistol grips, folding stocks, flash suppressors, etc." that would qualify them for banning.

'Small amounts' of drugs OK'd by German court

Terrence Petty
Associated Press

BONN, Germany — A ruling by Germany's highest court that decriminalizes the possession of small amounts of marijuana and hashish is provoking a national debate over whether the use of heroin and cocaine will increase as a result.

The Constitutional Court in Karlsruhe last Thursday did not go so far as to classify marijuana and hashish on the same level with tobacco and alcohol and said use of drugs remains, in principle, punishable by law.

But it said possession of small amounts of marijuana and hashish for private consumption should not be prosecuted because the drugs are less dangerous than law authorities once assumed.

The court told each of Germany's 16 states to agree among themselves what constitutes a "small amount."

Conservative politicians say more people will turn to hard drugs because of the Constitutional Court's decision.

Germany has a serious problem with heroin and cocaine abuse. A total of 1,738 people died of drug overdoses last year.

Yasushi Akashi, center, the U.N. special representative for former Yugoslavia, arrived in Sarajevo Tuesday for talks with Bosnian government officials.

Resumption of peace talks dependent on Serb pullout

Srecko Latal
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — New international efforts to restart peace talks depend entirely on a full Serb pullout from embattled Gorazde, Bosnia's prime minister said Tuesday.

"It all hinges, the whole negotiating process now, all of that hinges on Gorazde," Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic said after a meeting with Yasushi Akashi, the top U.N. diplomat for the former Yugoslavia.

U.S., Russian and European negotiators are due back for a second round of talks Thursday.

Akashi met for 3½ hours Tuesday with Bosnian Serb leaders and said they agreed to allow U.N. military observers into the Brcko area, the northern corridor that is the Serbs' vital east-west supply route between land they hold. The Serbs hope to widen the corridor.

"They have offered a cease-fire for the Brcko corridor," Akashi told reporters in Sarajevo after the talks in the Serb stronghold of Pale, east of the capital. Serb and Muslim-led government forces continue to amass troops and armor in the Brcko area and shelling is now reported almost daily.

"By and large, they showed greater cooperation with us," said Akashi.

He said the Serbs had agreed to release a 51-vehicle convoy carrying about 100 British peacekeepers that has been trying to get from Sarajevo to the eastern Muslim enclave of Gorazde since Saturday.

But the Bosnian Serb news agency SRNA said the Britons would have to leave behind "surplus weapons and equipment."

In addition to hindering the movement of U.N. peacekeepers and occasionally attacking them, the Serbs have failed to honor NATO ultimatums requiring they withdraw troops and heavy weapons from in and around Gorazde.

U.N. officials say the Serbs have more than 100 soldiers dressed in police uniforms in Gorazde and have moved Serb civilians into the city.

Akashi reiterated the U.N. stance that all Serb soldiers had to leave Gorazde during a meeting with Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic.

The myth of Leach's invulnerability

As Whitewater fades from Page 1 to Page 37B, we're hearing less and less from our congressman, Jim Leach, R-Talk-show. Leach's attacks on President Clinton may have shored up his most obvious political vulnerability, his right flank in the Republican Party. But he's lost something more important: the tacit support he's enjoyed for many years from active Democrats. He now faces a challenge from Democrat Glen Winekauf of North Liberty, a young man who could surprise a lot of people.

I wondered what role Leach, George Bush's colleague from as far back as the early '70s, would have in the post-conservative era. Many had hoped he would become a moderating influence in the Republican Party. Instead, he joined step with the forces of gridlock and Gingrich, becoming point man for charges that rapidly fizzled.

Leach has long cultivated a nearly nonpartisan image, but his voting record on economic issues is solidly conservative. Last spring, he came back for one vote during a monthlong illness, just to vote against the Clinton budget. Despite the evidence to the contrary, conventional wisdom among many area Democrats has long been: "Well, if we have to be in a Republican district, at least it's Jim Leach." This is due to his stand on two and only two issues: gun control and choice.

Leach was completely unopposed in 1990 and in 1992 faced the weakest opposition possible: a perennial candidate of questionable ability and zero credibility (the word "flake" comes to mind).

Liberal interest groups often, in a false priority, look long and hard for those rare Republicans who support them on an issue. (This kind of false bipartisanship helped defeat the Iowa Equal Rights Amendment in 1992.) With Democratic opposition muted on these two hot-button issues, there was always a smaller group of activists for any Leach opponent to draw from and to reach the critical mass of support needed to launch a serious challenge.

Glen Winekauf, Leach's principal challenger, served on Sen. Tom Harkin's Cedar Rapids staff until recently, doing the sort of issue and casework people expect from a member of Congress. He's got military experience, a different sort of image for the Democrats. And he's young at 30, and a fresh face can be an advantage in these "throw the bums out" times.

Leach has many of the hidden vulnerabilities incumbents face. He serves on two committees, Banking and Foreign Affairs, with little direct, tangible impact on the lives of Eastern Iowans. He hasn't faced a serious challenge in a long time. The last credible effort was in 1988, before the heavily Democratic Johnson County was in the district. In 1988, Leach outspent an anti-choice Democrat 4-to-1, yet won only 61 percent, hardly the sort of landslide typical of senior members. Leach was completely unopposed in 1990 and in 1992 faced the weakest opposition possible: a perennial candidate of questionable ability and zero credibility (the word "flake" comes to mind). This "opponent" won 31 percent with no party support and an invisible campaign; clearly, at least three out of 10 voters will vote for any Leach opponent.

That base puts Winekauf within shouting distance in a district that, Leach notwithstanding, is essentially Democratic. Bill Clinton won the district solidly in 1992, and many of those Democratic voters are upset at Leach's sudden Republican behavior. The last two election cycles have shown that no incumbent is truly invulnerable, and, as Winekauf is well-positioned to prove, Jim Leach is no exception.

Why a higher gambling age?

To the Editor:

I am writing concerning the recently changed gambling bill in Iowa. I have been gambling for a year now and I have enjoyed visiting the riverboat casino. Thanks to the recent bill signed by Gov. Branstad, I have to wait two more years to do something that I've been able to do in the past. About eight years ago, when the drinking age was raised to 21, those that were 18, 19 or 20 were grandfathered in and able to continue purchasing alcohol. Everyone knows that there is far more trouble with alcohol than with gambling. I cannot comprehend why a person old enough to vote can't enjoy the pleasures of a casino. There are already so little things that young adults can do today. Pushing us out of the casinos leaves us with fewer options for entertainment. It seems as though this is just another case of discrimination towards young people. Doesn't the state of Iowa have anything better to do than take away the privileges of 18- to 20-year-olds? I propose that the 18- to 20-year-olds at least be grandfathered in so that we can continue to enjoy the pastime we have enjoyed for years. Besides, it is not exactly fair to give someone something and then turn around and take it away.

Memoiristic babble: home is 28 years ago

No one knew that hill better than we did. No one moved up it and down it more slowly, or with more attention. We had that minute way of seeing that only children have.

What are you talking about? What hill?

I'm talking about a hill in Massachusetts — where I grew up. King's Grant was the name of the road, but the signpost was far distant from our gravel driveway — one house kitty-corner and across the street where the McCaulys lived. Across the street was not our territory. Unfriendly ground. Our house was brown and it sat in the middle of the hill. Our world was particularly focused there because we had examined everything in detail. There was plenty of sour grass mixed in with the clover and dandelions and weeds on our lawn. Sour grass was our discovery and it was for eating. We had railroad ties; Dad liked them. He stacked them around our driveway and out back near the garden. In the summer, my twin brother David, my older sister Becca and I would find bent nails and spend long stretches of time searching for creosote bubbles and popping them.

Our driveway, like I said, was gravel, and my father had a load of stones dumped there so we would have something to throw at the Stivers (Sally and Craig) across the street. We had a lot of rocks. A regular rock sampler — flat ones that flew best when you threw them sideways, round ones that Mom said were worn down by water and square ones that would really hurt the Stivers if we ever hit them, and all different colors — some black and white checkered ones, some white only, some swirly brown. Mom said they were at one time melted because they came out of a volcano.

But why are you telling me all this? What does it have to do with me?

Absolutely nothing.

Oh. Swell.

Anyway, there was one tree in our front yard with a branch that grew parallel to the ground, and one year we couldn't reach it, but the next year we could if we got a good jump. Becca and David caught a frog near the tree once, but they both wanted it, and they pulled at the back legs so hard that the skin came off and the frog got away. But back to the hill.

It was a very big hill with black snake lines in it where the street had cracked, and then men came and filled in the cracks with "tar," Mom said. A sweeper machine would whisk up and down the hill and squirt out water that smelled like a tire swing, and it would leave a lot of sand near the sidewalk which we would eat on a dare, because Grandma always said that we'd eat a tablespoon of dirt before we died, and a tablespoon was much bigger than a teaspoon. We had deep tunnels that ran beneath our hill, and we could see only parts of the pits through the metal grates. "Storm drains," Dad called them. We tried to pry the metal grates up, and once Craig Stivers got his father's screwdriver and we got a corner up, but Mark McGlagghon got his finger caught and had to go to the hospital.

When Mr. McGlagghon mowed the lawn, my father would follow suit, and they'd cut down all the dandelions and my mother called them murderers, but the dandelions grew back the next day anyway. Underneath the lawn mowers was green sludge that was good for smelling and throwing at each other.

Out back, we had a gigantic blackberry bush where Julie McCauly from across the street would steal blackberries, and we'd tell her not to and she'd say "I can if I can," and we'd beat her up. There was a secret to the blackberry bush — it had tunnels in it and a great hill near the middle. It was dangerous only, but if you knew the bush, you wouldn't get scratched all that much. Near the bush is where Becca and Dave and I were playing house, and I chose a divot in the weeds for my bedroom and lay down in it, and yellow jackets came out of the ground and chased us past the swing set. We had to sit in the bathtub for a long time and Mom put baking soda in.

Who cares?

Dave and I ran away from home a few times and Mom packed our lunches. Dave had a special blanket named blankie and I had a tie blanket to the end of a stick (because that's the way Huck Finn did it), and we'd walk all the way to the top of King's Grant Road, past the signpost and up to the fire hydrant. It was orange and there were comfortable places to sit on it.

So what?

So nothing.

So what's your point?

There is no point. I'm just one of those creative nonfiction types. You know, concerned with memoiristic babble, form, voice ...

What's your opinion on the Moorer-Holyfield fight?

I have no opinions. I just want to go back home for a while.

Where's home?

Twenty-eight years ago.

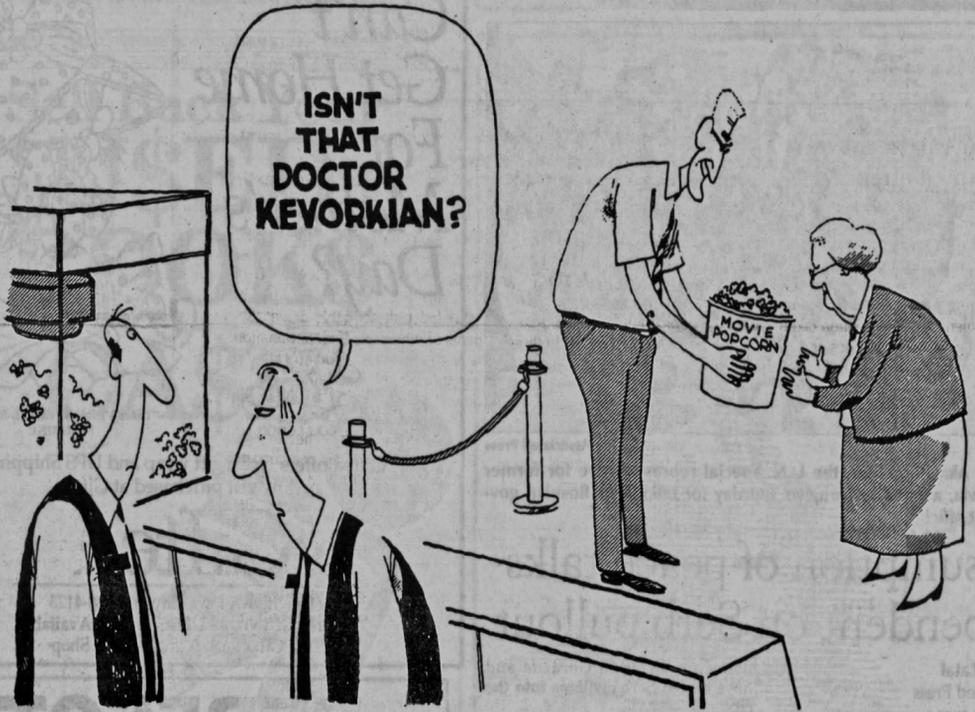

Sure. Great. Great. Yup. ... Um, well ... see ya later.

Wait! I'm not finished. Let me tell you about the time when Dave and I took our best friends, Peter and Timmy, up to the fire hydrant and we all ate lunch. Peter and Timmy's father could walk on his hands. He was bald, and his wife taught us how to make ojas, and ...

Doggedly digging for that Whitewater bone

Hallelujah, the great day is here. James McDougal, President Clinton's former partner, recently sold 2,000 pages of Whitewater documents to the press, and now we can find out everything we've always wanted to know about Ozarks real estate.

My juices must be running thin because it's getting harder to wade through this stuff. And it is information the press actually had to purchase from McDougal — at 50 cents a page.

The good news is that we got him down from $2 per page.

A cursory examination of the McDougal material shows that Hillary Rodham Clinton sold $16,500 worth of Whitewater property in March 1990.

Hmmmm. And it shows that 10 checks were made out to Whitewater "c/o Hillary Clinton."

Interesting. And it shows that four more checks were mailed to the Rose law firm, where Mrs. Clinton worked.

Suspicious. Those were the most recent Whitewater facts. The facts earlier were about Hillary Clinton's profits on commodities transactions in the late '70s.

McDougal's documents show that the Clintons used some of the profits from the commodities trading — she turned a $1,000 investment into $100,000 — to make interest payments on another real estate venture in the late 1970s as a way to reduce their income taxes. Imagine that, using interest deductions to reduce tax liabilities.

The news would be if someone were dumb enough not to deduct interest.

Even earlier, the facts, which actually made a Time magazine cover story, were about Clinton adviser George Stephanopoulos obstructing justice because he called the Treasury Department to complain about the appointment of a Republican to help investigate Whitewater.

The news would be if he hadn't complained.

One of the biggest stories was the appointment of Robert Fiske as special prosecutor. The issue Fiske is investigating — as if every American cannot recite it by heart — is whether money from McDougal's Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan was improperly diverted to aid Whitewater, in which the Clintons had invested, or to pay debts of then-Gov. Clinton.

I certainly hope Fiske comes up with something. It is maddening to have all these facts that don't add up. It makes me feel really stupid, like when everybody else in my calculus class had their hand up and I was still figuring.

It's Fiske's job to put the facts together so that even the slowest among us can understand. He must, like Aristotle's prime mover, bring order out of chaos. "A collection of facts is no more a science than a heap of stones in a house," opined the Frenchman Jules-Henri Poincare.

The New York Times, a fine newspaper, has been working on the Clintons' Arkansas finances for months. It would give the Times great satisfaction if Fiske could give meaning to their facts.

The Times reported that the Clintons nearly quadrupled their income between 1977 and 1979 — from $41,731 to $158,495 — and that most of the increase was due to the commodities trading.

Unless Fiske hangs meaning onto that, one is tempted to conclude — so what? I see three possibilities:

- Hillary got lucky.
- She had a nice broker.
- Both.

All three lead me to the same conclusion — so what?

The press trundles along with these investigations, doing its job, hoping that cold trails get hot. When they don't, we don't call off the chase; we redouble our efforts, convinced we missed something.

When we are right, our obsessiveness pays off big, as with Watergate. But sometimes we resemble a dog that thinks a bone is buried where it is not.

By the time he discovers his mistake, there goes the yard.

Americans showed some initial interest in Whitewater when confusion in the White House made it look as if something was being covered up. The Republicans, who have been a little quieter lately, loved that.

But after Fiske was appointed and the investigation began, attitudes started to change. Since then, Americans have come round to the view that Clinton's performance as president matters more than what his wife may have done in Arkansas 15 years ago.

A national survey in March showed Clinton's approval rating for handling Whitewater went from 32 percent to 54 percent.

"While a large majority of the people have been following the news about his and Hillary Clinton's involvement in the Whitewater matter, the regard that the public has for the president appears not to have suffered," the pollsters said.

The press can't be guided by polls, but this suggests the public sometimes figures out the meaning of facts — or the lack thereof — better than the analysts.

Or does the public sense that holding Clinton to account for old Arkansas facts would be like holding Lyndon Johnson to account for Texas facts in the 1940s, or Harry Truman for California facts in the 1940s, or Harry Truman for belonging to Kansas City's Pendergast machine in the 1930s or holding John Kennedy to account for being his father's son?

Where does it end?

Sometimes the press can learn from the public. Even as we continue to dig up the yard, the people are telling us to forget the darn bone and get another one.

Lessons of Nixon's presidency

To the Editor:

In a guest opinion in the April 27 edition of the DI, titled "In praise of Richard Nixon," Stefan L. Jouret points to the late Richard Nixon's considerable achievements in foreign policy and refers to the Watergate scandal as "a single misstep in an otherwise great career." Jouret also states, "It is entirely unsatisfactory to point to Watergate as evidence of some major character flaw justifying the 'Tricky Dick' image that Nixon has suffered for too long."

To state that Nixon's conduct during Watergate was "a single misstep" greatly trivializes the most serious political scandal in American history. Due to Nixon's resignation and Gerald Ford's subsequent pardon, Nixon never had to stand trial either in the Senate or in court for his alleged crimes. We should remember, however, that more than 30 of Nixon's associates were sentenced to jail for their actions in the Watergate scandal. Furthermore, Nixon's own words, recorded in his infamous Oval Office tapes, tell us what the president was plotting during Watergate. On June 23, 1972, a scant six days after the Watergate burglary, Nixon is heard giving orders for a cover-up and discussing using the CIA to block the FBI's investigation of a break-in. A tape of a conversation with John Dean on March 21, 1973 has Nixon saying that a million dollars for hush money for the Watergate burglars would not be difficult to obtain.

The great tragedy surrounding Richard Nixon is that he would indeed have gone down in history as one of the greatest American presidents, had it not been for his self-inflicted stain of Watergate. Instead, he is destined to be remembered as a "what might have been" if only he had obeyed the law." Jouret is correct in pointing out Nixon's genius in foreign policy. This does not mean, however, that this erases or compensates for his behavior during Watergate or that a president can somehow earn the right to break the law if he is highly effective in certain areas.

In the rush of sentimentality after Nixon's death, it is easy to overlook Nixon's dark side and focus instead on his many positive achievements. We must remember, however, that Nixon's abuses of power were a betrayal of the public trust which made him unfit for public office, regardless of how well overall he was performing as president. The American people should never be allowed to forget just how perilously close we came to having an executive branch that thought it could disregard the law at will.

The law applies equally to all of us, regardless of our achievements, excellence or distinction, and justice demands that we all be judged the same way.

Saving water, saving money

To the Editor:

This week is National Drinking Water Week, and 1994 marks the 20th anniversary of the Safe Drinking Water Act, which set the first standards for drinking water quality. Now is a time when everyone should examine their water usage habits and find ways to conserve. According to the American Water Works Association, only 1 percent of the Earth's water is available for drinking, and we use it at a rate of 100 gallons per person, per day. Where does all this water get used? Residential use accounts for about 70 percent of all water used. Perhaps nothing is more important to our health than a supply of clean drinking water; we can't live without it for more than a week.

Iowa City residents, however, have some additional concerns. According to the city's Comprehensive Water Facilities Plan, the existing Iowa City Water Treatment Plant will not be able to produce enough drinking water to meet the city's needs in the near future, and the plant cannot be expanded past its current levels. The present facilities also cannot meet the rising EPA standards for water quality. The city is planning to build a new water treatment plant and upgrade its services to meet the rising needs at an estimated cost of $4.65 million. Carol Sweeting of Water Plant operations says that means a 147 percent increase in your city water bill within a year. With this increase, saving water will mean saving money.

Here are a few water saving tips:
1. Install a water-efficient shower head. A study by the Iowa Cooperative Extension service has shown that a typical household can save nearly $60 per year by installing a shower head that costs less than $2.
2. Fill a few plastic bottles with water and sink them along the sides of the back of your toilet. A traditional toilet uses about 7 gallons of water for each flush and works just as well with less.

3. Don't leave the water running when brushing your teeth. Run it when needed and then turn it off. You'll save about 100 gallons a month, according to the AWWA.

4. Keep a jug of water in the refrigerator. The water will be colder, and you won't need to run water down the drain to get it that way.

5. Fix that leaky faucet or toilet. Not only will it end that annoying noise, it will save you about 10 gallons per day.

These tips don't require drastic changes in lifestyle. The only change you might notice will be in your checking account.

Native Americans have right to be offended

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to an editorial by Vikki Pahl in the May 2 DI titled "A token gesture," discussing the UI Board in Control of Athletics' decision regarding mascots depicting Native Americans. The position taken by Pahl is appallingly specious and hypocritical. Pahl claims that the mascots reflect the "admiration" the schools have for Native Americans. Additionally, she states that the mascots were selected because of the pride, honor and dignity displayed by Native American tribes. Pahl is correct in stating that mascots and nicknames are chosen because of "a quality to be emulated." But to think that they were selected solely to emulate pride and dignity is ignorant. The majority of mascots, Native American-depicting or not, emulate those qualities most celebrated in competitive athletics: warlike, fighters, "predators" (see use of "Hawkeyes" in Pahl's opinion). Further, the depiction of a race of people in mascot form conjures up these images, regardless of intent. It is at that level which stereotypes are formed. How much honor is there in the nickname Redskins?

Pahl continues by asking, "Why don't other ethnic and cultural groups protest when they have teams named after them?" Because they are not offended by them. Simple. Apparently, Pahl lumps when it's convenient. She is lumping all ethnic groups together with this question in assuming that because one group is not offended, then none should be. Yet later, she complains that the UI policy lumps all Native Americans together. Hypocritical?

Finally, Pahl's belief is couched in value-laden rhetoric that denies the rights of others to self-determination. Native Americans, as do any other group of people, have a right to determine what is and is not offensive to them and a license to those words that label their group. Whether you, Ms. Pahl, feel that these mascots are an honor is completely irrelevant.

UI hypocritical on mascot issue

To the Editor:

When I read of the new policy adopted by the UI Board in Control of Athletics, I was forced to check the date on the paper in order to assure myself that this was not the April Fools' Day issue. How hypocritical can we get? We are the Iowa Hawkeyes, after all, and "Hawkeye" was the name of the last of the Mohicans, if you recall. We are sacrificing the competitiveness of our athletic programs (which, by the way, provide substantial funding for this university) on the altar of political correctness.

Athletic programs are intended to be recreational. Sports give us a chance to temporarily forget our respective responsibilities and join fellow Iowans in support of a common team. If you are one of these people that thinks sports are instead about violence and conquest, may I suggest that you're taking this way too seriously.

This policy would, according to the April 29 issue of the DI, prevent Iowa from scheduling schools such as Florida State. Is the board aware of the revenue that the Seminoles would bring with them to Kinnick Stadium?

This policy, in my opinion, is the result of the university capitulating to fringe interest groups. If serious Hawkeye fans didn't have better things to do, unlike the IISO, I'm sure they would be actively protesting this policy. It's simply silly to think that this policy will prevent discrimination or accomplish any legitimate state interest, despite what the political correctness thought police may think.

Address the behavior of perpetrators

To the Editor:

I'd like to reply to some points made by Raymond Tinnian in his guest opinion published on April 28. Tinnian does not seem to be aware of the law passed by the state Legislature several years ago criminalizing any sexual contact by ministers, counselors, therapists or other mental health-care providers with persons they are counseling or have counseled in the past. He may wish to refer to Section 709.15 of the Iowa Code. Although Tinnian may not be of the opinion that sexual exploitation of clients by counselors should be criminal, many people, including the vast majority of state legislators who voted for that law, do not agree with him.

When Ashley Sovern, assistant director of the Rape Victim Advocacy Program, wrote in the Dec. 7 DI about statistics, her point was clearly this: a debate over which researcher's statistics are the most credible distracts from the real needs of survivors of sexual violence. The statistics cited by People Out Working to End Rape or peer educators in their presentations are from careful scientific studies made by respected researchers such as Diana Russell, Mary Koss and David Finkelhor. However, statistics are one researcher's interpretation of what is going on in the world around us. The most important part of our opinion at the RVAP is to bear witness to the experiences of survivors.

If Tinnian truly took sexual assault seriously, he would stop blaming those who are hurt and victimized. He would address the behavior of perpetrators and the state of our culture, which has normalized sexual violence against women and children.

PC and doublespeak

To the Editor:

Regarding comments made in the May 2 review of the movie "PCU": The term "political correctness" is a form of Orwellian doublespeak, formerly used in Stalinist Russia to silence political opponents, and today used by demagogues to deflect attention from their own specious arguments.

Like its counterpart "un-American," used by anti-Communist witch-hunter Sen. Joseph McCarthy in the 1950s, it is an empty phrase used as an excuse to avoid engaging in the real issues. In short, it is a smear term, harmful to thoughtful discussion.

Group mobilizes against racism

To the Editor:

This letter is to inform you of the resurrection of ARM, the Anti-Racist Mobilization. The primary goal of this new group is to oppose the Nazi, KKK and other racist organizations. Originally formed two years ago after the Rodney King verdict and the L.A.

rebellion, ARM joined with the Midwest Network to Stop the Klan to successfully oppose the Klan in Dubuque; Jaynesville, Wis.; and Freeport, Ill. Given the current escalation in the number of Klan rallies and Nazi recruitment, concerned students have decided to organize in opposition.

Though still in the early stages of organization, ARM's immediate goal is to mobilize a group of concerned

Iowa City individuals to stand in protest against the KKK in their upcoming May 7 rally in Springfield, Ill. Anyone who is interested in protesting this rally with us should come to our meeting on Wednesday, May 4 at 7 p.m. in the Iowa Room of the Union or call 353-1240 for further information.

By Tuesday evening, with 53 percent of the estimated 22.7 million votes counted, the ANC had 62.5 percent to the National Party's 22.1 percent.

Mangosuthu Buthelezi's Zulu-based Inkatha Freedom Party had 8.3 percent. The Freedom Front, which demands a separate white homeland, had 2.7 percent.

Other small parties with enough votes for a few Parliament seats were the white liberal Democratic Party, the black nationalist Pan-Africanist Congress and the new African Christian Democratic Party.

"Whether Mandela gets 60 percent or 65 percent, it won't make a difference" in selecting the president or in seating a Parliament, explained van Heerden.

If the electoral commission got held up over the last few thousand votes from rural areas or a disputed tally, it could name provisional National Assembly members based on the results available, then change a few names later if necessary, he said.

However, under the constitution, Monday is the deadline for the electoral commission to confirm the election as "free and fair."

The exact proportion of votes for each party in the National Assembly is important only when it comes to assigning Cabinet jobs, van Heerden said. The government of national unity worked out between Mandela, de Klerk and other leaders entitles any party with 5 percent of the vote to one of about 25 cabinet positions.

So far, Mandela's African National Congress, de Klerk's National Party and the Inkatha Freedom

Party have high enough percentages to claim cabinet posts. But Mandela had said that in the interest of national peace, he would invite into the government representatives of less successful parties, such as the Freedom Front and the Pan-Africanist Congress. Freedom Front leader Constand Viljoen said he likely would reject any invitation to serve in the unity government.

The new plan also extends the period of subsidized child care and asks recipients to sit down with a social worker and plan a time frame for getting off welfare.

A contract of action, including volunteer work and training programs, for the AFDC recipient is drawn up. If the contract is not followed, the family risks losing benefits.

Public assistance residents in Iowa City are guardedly optimistic about the effects the changes will have on their lives.

One AFDC recipient, who did not want her name used, said she liked the new program.

"It helps everybody," she said. "There are a lot of people who sit on their butt and take AFDC for granted. Under the old program, it's impossible to get off because your rent goes up and you have to pay child care. Now you have four months where you still get AFDC and that right there helps."

Sarah Williams, who has four children, also thinks the new system could work.

"I signed the new contract," she said. "It says that if I finish school, I have to find a job within six months."

Williams said she wants to work and is willing to go back to school for training if she can afford it.

"I don't want to be on welfare at all," Williams said. "I went to school to get a degree, but I couldn't do it. My kids got sick all the time. I'm going to have to start over, though."

Early returns on the effectiveness of the program are ambiguous. Since the new regulations were passed, the number of people in Iowa who receive AFDC has grown from 36,404 in 1993 to 39,473 in 1994.

Part of the increase could be attributed to low-income or working-poor Iowans who were among the 8,000 new cases.

The average amount the government pays an AFDC family has decreased from $373 in October to $355 in February. This correlates with a greater number of households receiving AFDC that also have work-related incomes.

Department officials say the welfare reforms likely will cost the state more in the next two years, before the efforts to get people to work pay off.

"It's a more positive approach," Timp said. "In the past, people may have wanted to work but couldn't bear the costs themselves. Under the new system, people are able to wean themselves off welfare."

Timp said over the course of this year, more recipients will be cycled into the program.

"I think with the new changes in the welfare program, it's more possible to get off welfare," AFDC recipient Ashley Cherry said. "But it's real hard, even with the new changes."

reporters after 1 a.m. that the mood was upbeat and that negotiators reduced the number of disputed points from more than 20 to seven.

Arafat walked out of the meeting once "in a militant way" but returned later, Dromi said.

The issues argued at the last minute were mostly ones that have troubled the talks throughout — control of water and borders, how much land Israel will cede around Jericho and how many of Israel's more than 8,000 Palestinian prisoners will be freed under the accord.

Mubarak is to preside over the signing, which falls on his 66th birthday. Christopher and Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev will speak.

The agreement to be signed, which reportedly runs 250 to 300 pages with maps and annexes, fills in the details of the Sept. 13 Israel-PLO accord calling for limited Palestinian self-rule in Gaza and Jericho. Israel has occupied Gaza and the West Bank since the 1967 Six Day War.

social relationships and leisure activities can all be affected."

Anxiety disorders cost the United States $46.6 billion in 1990, nearly one-third of the nation's total mental health bill of $147 billion, according to the Anxiety Disorders Association of America.

Though 15 percent of Americans have an anxiety disorder, only a minimal number recognize it, Dr. Russell Noyes, UI professor of psychiatry, said.

"Only a quarter of the people who have an anxiety disorder seek treatment," he said.

Baker said lack of information on the availability of treatments is one of the main reasons people do not seek help.

"There's a lot of medication and nonmedication treatments we can use to deal with anxiety disorders," she said. "One of the primary intentions of National Anxiety Disorders Screening Day is to tell people about treatment options."

naked man, woman and child with their arms outstretched to doves overhead. It was created in 1975 by sculptor Jack Becker, who now resides in St. Petersburg, Fla.

The school decided to remove the piece in April following student and faculty complaints to an accreditation team. Besides objecting to the nudity of the three figures, several people protested because the statue represented a family combination that did not represent all family groups.

The statue was damaged when workers removed it from its former home in North Hall.

Panelists for the forum will include Stephen Prokopoff, director of the UI Museum of Art; Wallace Tomasini, former director of the School of Art and Art History; Erin Stack, an assistant professor of art; and Martin Tracy, director of the School of Social Work.

After brief statements from the panel, the forum will be opened for public comment and questions.

The pieces of the statue are currently on display in the foyer of the UI Art Building. Barbara McDonald, the UI social work alumna who discovered the statue April 16, said it will remain there as long as the school wants it.

"There are still no definite plans to repair it," she said. "Ideally, we eventually hope to fix it and find a place to permanently display it."

McDonald, who will be on tonight's panel, is also scheduled to speak at a Friday symposium on "Unusual or Unexpected: Academic Freedom in the Classroom." The symposium is sponsored by the UI chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

"What happened raises a lot of questions," she said. "I want to raise some of these questions again so that people think about them."

The removal and destruction of the statue seems similar to many other issues at the UI, such as the UI policy on sensitive materials in the classroom, and on campuses nationwide, McDonald said.

"I see it all as being related," she said. "There's a lot of conflict on how to deal with differing ideas."

Besides McDonald, Daily Iowan columnist Kim Painter will discuss "Free Speech: Erosion Under Pressure" and UI Teaching Assistant Jean Fallow will present "Passive Resistance is not Enough" at Friday's symposium.

Jackson goes no-hitter; Iowa softball sweeps

Senior Karen Jackson no-hit Minnesota in game one of Iowa's doubleheader sweep Tuesday in Minneapolis. The Hawkeyes won by scores of 3-0 and 4-1.

Jackson faced 25 batters in the first game, struck out six and walked none to lead the Hawkeyes (33-21 overall, 18-6 in the Big Ten). She was credited with wins in both games, running her record to 27-8. It leaves her two wins short of breaking her own school record of 28 victories in a season.

The no-hitter was the sixth of Jackson's career.

Heather Bryant had three hits in the first game, while Kari Knopf and Melissa Wieland had RBI doubles on the afternoon.

Iowa has four regular-season games remaining when it hosts Ohio State May 13-14.

Jackson, Knopf earn league honors

Hawkeye all-American Karen Jackson and freshman Kari Knopf earned Big Ten Player and Pitcher of the Week honors, respectively, conference officials announced Tuesday.

Jackson, a right-hander from Roseville, Calif., went 5-0 on the Hawkeye mound last week. The award is her third this season and sixth of her career.

Knopf, a first baseman from Des Moines, batted .455 last week. She ranks third in the Big Ten in batting at .426, first in hits with 29 and is tied for second in doubles with eight.

Women's hoops snags fifth recruit

The Iowa women's basketball team has signed its fifth consensus all-American. Angela Hamblin, from Gary, Ind., signed a national letter of intent to play for the Hawkeyes this season, assistant Angie Lee announced Tuesday.

The 6-foot guard / forward averaged 28 points and 18 rebounds for Wallace High School last season and was a first-team Kodak all-American.

Hamblin also was recruited by Purdue and is the third rated high-school player in the country.

NFL

Peete signs one-year deal with Cowboys

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Rodney Peete, a part-time starter for Detroit for the past four years, signed a one-year contract Wednesday with the Dallas Cowboys, filling a vacancy created when backup quarterback Bernie Kosar went to the Miami Dolphins.

Terms were not immediately disclosed, but his contract was expected to be less than the $1.2 million he received last year.

Peete, who will back up Troy Aikman, was drafted in the sixth round in 1989 out of Southern California.

He was a college rival of Aikman, who played for UCLA.

Dallas has a third quarterback, Jason Garrett, who started one game last year when Aikman was injured.

NBA

Mavericks can Buckner

DALLAS (AP) — Quinn Buckner, who played on championship teams in college, the NBA and the Olympics, was fired Tuesday by the Dallas Mavericks with four years left on his contract because he couldn't read or teach.

Dick Motta, who coached the Mavericks from 1980 to 1987 is the top candidate to replace Buckner, whose team had a 13-69 record, worst in the NBA. The year was marked by a chorus of complaints from the team's best players — rookie Jamal Mashburn, Jim Jackson and Derek Harper, who was later traded to the New York Knicks.

Mavericks owner Donald Carter said Buckner "burned bridges."

Jordan's average tailspins with 1-for-20 slump

Associated Press

HOOVER, Ala. — There are times when the baseball appears as big — excuse us, Michael — as a basketball.

These days, the baseball appears more like a golf ball.

Michael Jordan experienced the first during a 13-game hitting streak which propelled his average into the .330s earlier this season with the Birmingham Barons.

He's in the golf phase now, mired in a 1-for-20 slump with 10 strikeouts that had dropped his average to .250 heading into Tuesday night's Southern League game with the Orlando Cubs.

"I've got to get back on a hitting streak," Jordan said. "This is tough, but I'm not discouraged."

Neither is Barons manager Terry Francona nor hitting coach Mike Barnett.

"The last three games he's hit a little tailspin, but I told him that happens to everybody," Francona said. "He'll come out of it and do just fine."

"I told him in this game, you're going to have days or periods where nobody can get you out and you're going to have periods where you can't get any hits," Barnett said.

Overall, Francona is pleased with Jordan after nearly a month with the Barons.

"I'll tell you what, from the last day of spring training until now, he's improved in every area," Francona said. "His hitting is what everybody sees, but his baserunning and outfield play also have improved."

In Greenville, Jordan made a diving catch in right-center field to take an extra-base hit from Tim Gillis. In Huntsville, he made a diving grab near the foul line to rob Damon Mashore of a double, then turned it into a double play.

Francona said Jordan's improvement is a tribute to his work ethic and keen grasp of the game.

"He watches the entire game," Francona said. "There's not much that gets by him. I think he understands that while he was out playing basketball, these guys were playing baseball. He's trying to catch up."

Jordan knows he's not the same player he was a month ago.

"I have improved in every phase," he said, "but now I have to sharpen those phases. It'll come as I play more."

Barnett expects Jordan to get better with more at-bats.

"I'm as happy as I can be with his progress," Barnett said, "but the biggest thing now is developing consistency. He's

No remedy for Cubs' drought

Chicago drops 12th straight at Wrigley Field with 5-2 loss

Mario Fox
Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Chicago Cubs have tried almost everything — changing uniforms, holding chats with fans, juggling the batting order. Still, they can't win at home in 1994.

They broke a 92-year-old club record by losing their 12th consecutive home game, falling to the Cincinnati Reds 5-2 Tuesday as Tony Fernandez and Hal Morris drove in two runs apiece.

The previous record was set in 1902, when the Cubs played at West Side Grounds. The previous Wrigley Field record was 10. The NL mark is 14 by the 1911 Boston Braves.

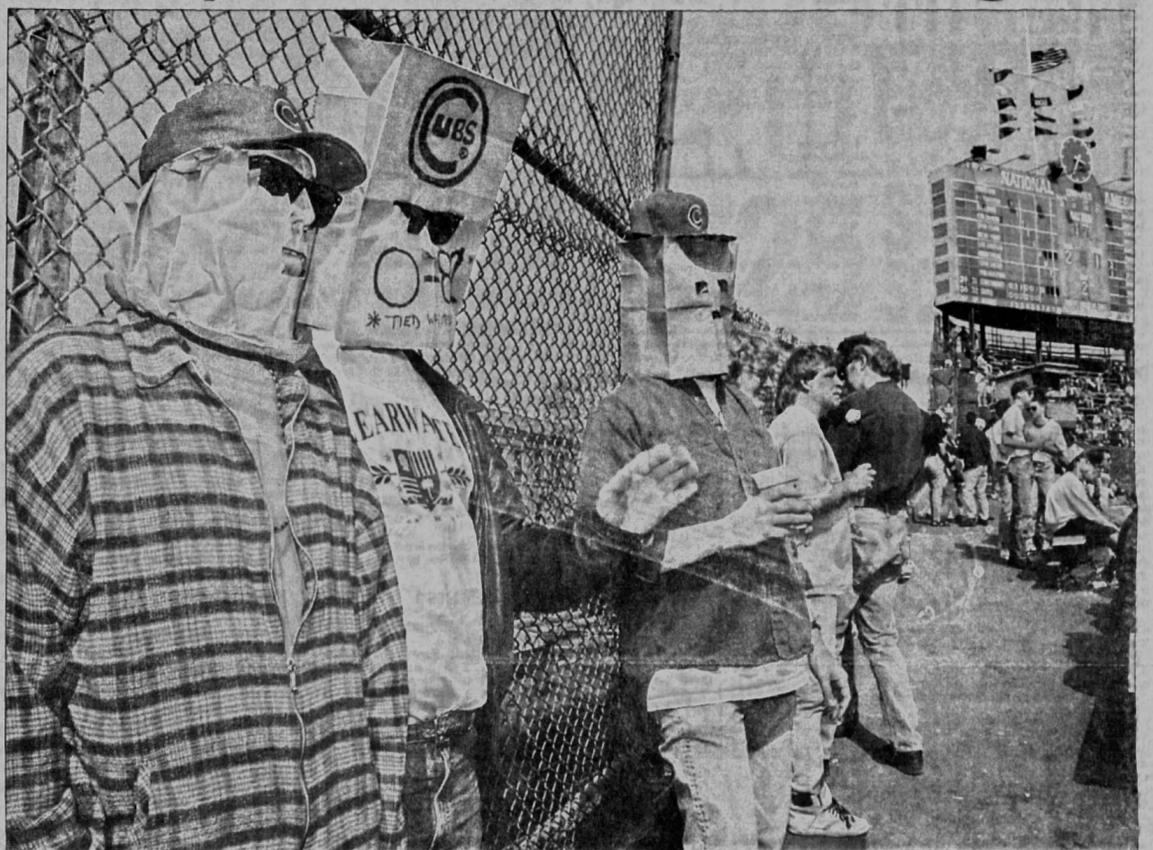

"We went through a streak where we lost nine or 10 in a row. They just have to bear it. They are going to win. They are a good team."

Barry Larkin, Cincinnati Reds shortstop

"You have to think about the (NL) record," said Cubs manager Tom Trebelhorn. "It's getting urgent for all of us."

The players are frustrated, too. "We are trying hard but nothing helps," said pitcher Jose Bautista. "When we pitch good, we don't hit. When we hit, we don't get the pitching. We need our starters to go six innings."

Trebelhorn, who tried new uniforms on Monday, juggled his lineup Tuesday. Sammy Sosa moved from fifth to leadoff, Karl Rhodes dropped to second and Ryne Sandberg went from second to fifth in the batting order.

Associated Press

Reds.

"I wanted to get more speed at the top and some more power in the middle," Trebelhorn said. But starting pitching failed again, dropping to 4-14 this season. Mike Morgan (0-4) gave up four runs and seven hits in four innings, struck out three and walked one.

"When this team was going good, like in 1992, I'd win that game 5-4," said Morgan, who knows about losing. "I was on the Baltimore team (in 1988) that lost 21 in a row."

Erik Hanson (2-1) allowed two runs — one earned — and six hits in five innings. Jeff Brantley pitched the ninth for his third save.

"I didn't have my good stuff today, but I hung in there," said Hanson, who didn't want to be the guy who gave the Cubs their first home win in 1994. "It's in the back of your mind. You don't want to be that guy."

The Reds sympathize with the Cincinnati Reds Tuesday in Chicago. The Cubs lost their 12th straight game at home, falling 5-2 to the Reds.

Cubs. "We went through a streak where we lost nine or 10 in a row. They just have to bear it. They are going to win. They are a good team," said Barry Larkin, who had two of Cincinnati's 11 hits.

Cincinnati went ahead 3-0 in the second. Fernandez, 6-for-10 with nine RBI against Chicago this season, doubled in the first run, and Morris drove in two with a bases-loaded single.

"Tony has just been playing great, getting those big, key RBIs," said Reds manager Davey Johnson.

Steve Buechele and pinch-hitter Kevin Roberson had RBI singles in the fourth as the Cubs closed to 4-2. Larkin drove in a run with a bases-loaded bunt single in the sixth.

Bulls' magic continues with three-game sweep

Associated Press

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Scottie Pippen picked up where Michael Jordan left off — in a manner of speaking.

Pippen sank the go-ahead basket on a driving left-handed layup with 1:25 left in overtime Tuesday night, and the Chicago Bulls beat the Cleveland Cavaliers 95-92 for a three-game sweep of their first-round playoff series.

It's the fourth straight year that Chicago has swept a first-round series, and each of the previous three started the Bulls toward the NBA championship. It's the fifth time in seven years that the Bulls have eliminated the Cavs.

Two of those times, Jordan did it with last-second shots.

Pippen struggled under the smothering defense of Cleveland rookie Chris Mills, but still led the Bulls with 23 points and 11 rebounds. He also had six assists to go with eight turnovers. Toni Kukoc scored 18 points for the Bulls, who meet the winner of the New Jersey-New York series in the next round.

Mills played the game of his life, scoring a career-high 25 points and grabbing 10 rebounds.

Heat 90, Hawks 86

MIAMI — Steve Smith scored 25

points, including three free throws in the final 18 seconds, leading Miami's fight-free victory over Atlanta to give the Heat a 2-1 lead in their first-round playoff series.

With one more victory, Miami would become the first No. 8 seed to beat a No. 1 seed in NBA history. Game four in the best-of-five series is scheduled for Thursday.

It was a cleanly played game, the first between the two teams since a brawl between Atlanta's 104-86 victory Saturday. Three players, including Heat starting forward Grant Long, missed Tuesday's game while serving suspensions that resulted from the fight.

In the final 76 seconds, Atlanta's Mookie Blaylock hit a trio of 3-pointers — his only points of the game. The baskets cut Miami's lead to 87-86 with 19 seconds left.

Miami's Rony Seikaly had 20 rebounds and 12 points in only the second playoff game ever at Miami Arena.

Rangers jump out to 2-0 start

Associated Press
NEW YORK — Adam Graves and Stephane Matteau scored in a 19-second span in the third period, leading the surging New York Rangers to a 5-2 victory over the Washington Capitals Tuesday night and a 2-0 lead in their NHL playoff series.

The Rangers broke open a close game with rapid-fire goals by Graves at 10:47 and Matteau at 11:06 of the final period to win their club-record sixth straight playoff game.

Graves scored from the low slot, set up by Steve Larmer's pass from the right corner. Matteau scored from in front on a pass from Alexei Kovalev along the right boards.

Esa Tikkanen gave the Rangers a 3-2 lead at 10:44 of the second period, and they went on to complete the two-game sweep in New York and send the best-of-seven Eastern Conference semifinal series to Landover, Md., for games three and four Thursday and Saturday.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Don Sweeney, denied in the opening minutes of overtime, scored on a great setup by Adam Oates 9:08 into overtime to give the Boston Bruins a 2-0 lead over the New Jersey Devils in their Eastern Conference semifinal series.

The goal came just seconds after Boston goalie Jon Casey stopped Bill Guerin on a 2-on-1 with the teams skating 4-on-4.

The Bruins had come within 3.5 seconds of winning in regulation. Game three is Thursday night in Boston.

Boston rallied from a 3-1 deficit early in the second period and tied the game on goals by Glen Wesley and Al Iafate, the latter a length-of-the-ice rush.

Webber takes top rookie honors

Dennis Geogortas

Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Chris Webber, who helped make the Golden State Warriors the league's most improved team, was named the NBA's Rookie of the Year Tuesday.

The first of Michigan's Fab Five to play in the NBA and the youngest player in the league this season, Webber edged Orlando's Anfernee Hardaway, the player Golden State drafted third and sent to the Magic for the rights to Webber, the No. 1 selection last year.

Webber received 53 votes to 47 for Hardaway in balloting by a panel of sportswriters and broadcasters. It was the closest vote since 1981, when Darrell Griffith of Utah beat Portland's Kelvin Ransey by one vote. Jamal Mashburn of Dallas got the remaining vote.

Webber, who went to the Final Four twice with Michigan before heading to the NBA, said he considered the award "definitely one of my highest basketball memories."

"He's no longer a rookie. He's a pro," Golden State coach Don Nelson said. "There isn't anything the guy won't be able to do in another couple of years. He's got a chance to be the best power forward that ever played the game."

Webber is the fourth straight No. 1 pick to become Rookie of the Year, following Shaquille O'Neal (1993), Larry Johnson (1992) and Derrick Coleman (1991).

Webber learned on the job against the likes of Charles Barkley and Hakeem Olajuwon in helping the Warriors return to the playoffs, despite the absence of Tim Hardaway and Sarunas Marciulionis, who missed the season because of knee injuries.

Golden State trails Phoenix 2-0 in its best-of-five playoff series, which resumes today.

Webber missed most of fall training camp following an Oct. 6 appendectomy, but quickly came on during the season to become the inside force the Warriors had been seeking.

He averaged 17.5 points, 9.1 rebounds, 3.6 assists, 2.2 blocks and 1.2 steals, leading all rookies in rebounding and field-goal percentage.

Webber became the first rookie in league history to total more than 1,000 points, 500 rebounds, 250 assists, 150 blocks and 75 steals in season. Over the last 15 seasons, only three veteran players accomplished that feat: Olajuwon, David Robinson and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

proved he can hit the fastball, and he's proved he can hit the breaking ball. Now he has to maintain his mechanics."

Jordan struck out 27 times in his first 72 at-bats, but Barnett knew that would happen considering his star pupil had not played baseball since high school.

Barnett also believes Jordan eventually will show power. He has only two extra-base hits, both doubles.

"The most positive sign is he's showing more and more power in batting practice," Barnett said. "The power part will come. That's something we're not trying to force right now."

Jordan isn't concerned.

"Everybody is expecting it, but I'm still in the contact mode," the 6-foot-6 Jordan said. "I'd like to hit one out to know what it feels like. I don't have any feeling to compare it to. I've hit them in batting practice, but that's easy."

Free Kantorei Choir concert previews upcoming Korean global conference

Shayla Thiel
The Daily Iowan

The Kantorei Choir, the UI's premier vocal ensemble, will be heading for South Korea this summer to represent North and South America. But first, it will treat audiences to a free world-class concert tonight at 8 in Clapp Recital Hall.

The UI concert is a preview for the World Choral Festival, which will feature five choirs from South Korea and five choirs representing the rest of the world: one each from the Americas, Europe, Australia, Eastern Europe and Russia, and the Asian Circle.

Assisted by doctoral choral conducting student Gerald Gray, William Hatcher, UI director of choral activities, will lead Kantorei in a diverse program which will emphasize American music and include pieces from a myriad of different cultures. The director said part of the concert was planned before the choir was invited to participate in the World Choral Festival, but "about two-thirds" of the music will be specifically for the Korea concert. He explained the group was chosen mainly because of its good reputation as a performance group.

"Last year we performed at the National Convention of Choir Directors in San Antonio and some directors from Korea heard us there," Hatcher said. "It really is an incredible opportunity. It's an honor and one of the most unique experiences for us."

In Korea, Kantorei will perform a full concert a number of times in the main concert hall of the Seoul Arts Center as well as provincial cities throughout the country. The smaller performances will culminate in a Grand Choral Finale Concert with all the choirs, an orchestra and vocal soloists.

American pieces on the program include "Sanctus" from Leonard Bernstein's Mass, as well as arrangements of Stephen Foster's "Gentle Lena Claire," the folk song "Shenandoah" and "Elijah Rock." Other works are Brahms' "Tafelied," Javier Busto's "Gloria" from the Missa Brevis pro pace, French composer Lili Boulenger's "Sour sure la Plaine" (Evening on the Plain) and contemporary Russian composer Georgi Sviridov's "Echo." The Iowa City concert will give Kantorei a chance to share its renowned excellence with its local supporters as well as provide a formal run-through before the Korean performances. Hatcher said audiences can expect tonight's Kantorei performance to be a world-class experience.

"Kantorei is our best choral ensemble at the university with the highest level of students," Hatcher said. "The quality of performance covers a wide range of styles, is high and offers audiences an artistic experience."

LIVE BAND PREVIEW

'Weird, raw' Urge Overkill plays tonight

Tad Paulson
The Daily Iowan

OK, here are some analogies for Urge Overkill's raunchy, midnight cool-clear sound:

- Imagine if the esteemed late Kurt Cobain, before doing the nasty to himself, had listened to a lot of late '70s disco; then some Devo; then a little Blood, Sweat and Tears — and interpreted it all into Nirvana's scratchy slush rock. The band may have sounded something like Urge Overkill.

- Transport yourself onto the kaleidoscopic dance floor of one of Brian De Palma's '70s-circa films, like "Scarface" or "Carlitto's Way," or hell, even a flick like "Saturday Night Fever" if you must. Think of the Rolling Stones on the stereo, playing "Emotional Rescue" or "Shattered," wiggled out on heroin, hopped up on goofballs. Urge Overkill's swanky style is an homage to that sort of cheesy vision.

- Count all the albums / CDs that have become, at one point or another in your life, a prerequisite for your survival on this planet — the kind that are spun and spun and spun, sung along to, cherished like a yapping puppy or a letter-box edition of "Spartacus." Urge Overkill's 1993 album, Saturation, is a CD like that: infectious, bold and silly.

To quote "The Muppet Movie": "Can you picture that?"

Needless to say, Chicago-spawned trio Urge Overkill will be roaring into town tonight for a gig at the Union Bar and Grill, 121 E. College St., and there's still plenty of elbowroom left. Tickets, which cost a somewhat ouchy $11.50, are available at the bar and at B.J. Records, 6 1/2 S. Dubuque St.

Urge Overkill's music is definitely pop, but it's a little too weird for the mainstream. This is a raw, charging band with a zany sense of humor and a fetish for wearing odd clothing to its shows. But more importantly, this is a groove machine with an uncannily funky head-slammage and masterful vocal harmonies.

The band comprises guitarist/lead vocalist Nash Kato, bassist/vocalist "Eddie" King Roeser and drummer/vocalist Blackie Onas-

Steve Gullick/Ceffen Records

Urge Overkill will grace the Union Bar and Grill tonight with their particular flavor of funky, bizarre rock.

A tight band instrumentally, Urge Overkill's songs, especially on Saturation, are mini-adventures, wrapping tales of lackluster Hollywood streets and lethargic polluted youth around hip-hoppy rhythms and clean guitar riffs.

It's nearly impossible to pinpoint this group's influences — its sound zigzags between the aforementioned Stones' disco period to Parliament's Pythonesque theatricality to the straightforward rock charge of Soul Asylum (though Kato, unlike Dave Pirner, can actually carry a tune without sounding like he's choking on a pack of Camel straights).

But no matter what comparisons are conjured, there's no doubt Urge Overkill is onto something hip and sweaty. It's caught in a timewarp somewhere between the late '70s and the currently rumbling '90s, and we listeners are all along for the ride.

The Union Ballroom may have been a better venue for this act, specially redesigned with a twirling disco ball, velvet Elvis tapestries and gourds of electric Kool-Aid. But the Union Bar should serve tonight's purpose well, with its jungle gymlike tangle of young bodies twirling and thumping against each other, leaping off the ledges of the upper levels onto thrashing heads.

Ahh, chaos.

FAD DYING OUT

Remix backlash may foster innovation

Stuart Reid
The Daily Iowan

This week: the nature of remixes ... "Unplugged" sessions ... New Order ... Chapterhouse and Rick James

While the notion of the "alternate" recording is only marginally newer than that of popular music, the past 15 years have witnessed a massive marketing explosion of remixes, live versions, rerecordings and now "Unplugged" sessions. This trend began coming to the forefront sometime around the death of disco, as extended 12-inch singles by the likes of Rick James and Donna Summer gave club disc sions being packaged as "remixes," or simply packaged differently as limited edition versions, an inevitable backlash occurred, beginning sometime around 1990. This backlash broke into two components, the first being characterized by an increasing number of artists refusing to allow their songs to be reworked, instead relying on more B-sides and live recordings to fill up their singles.

The other element in the backlash, which still seems to be cresting, involves marketing remixes that are increasingly difficult to recognize as having anything to do with the original recording. In many cases, "remixes" are being recorded by major names in the ambient / techno scene that have absolutely none of the texture or direction of the originals.

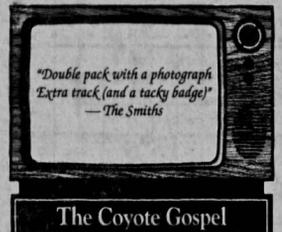

Perhaps the most extreme example of this to date is the recently released Blood Music: Pentamorous Metamorphosis, which ostensibly claims to be a reworking of Chapterhouse's Blood Music that was issued a few months ago. This release apparently takes sounds from Blood Music and reorganizes them into an eerie, ambient dreamscape. While Pentamorous Metamorphosis is an enjoyable, challenging release in its own right, it seems to have nothing to do with Chapterhouse in terms of style, content or vision. In fact, were it not for the familiar packaging, there would be no reason to associate this release with the band.

These sorts of releases raise serious questions about the relationship between artists and their works. While reworked recordings can often breathe new life into songs, when the essential spirit and mood are lost is it appropriate to release the new material under the original artists' banner — especially if they were not involved in the rerecording process? It also raises questions about truthfulness in regards to consumers and even the terminology we use to describe recordings. Even many of the bands and artists best known for the remixed versions of their songs have expressed preference for doing away with this particular marketing trend.

Hopefully, MTV's "Unplugged" series will serve as one focus for a new approach to rerecordings.

Already it has provided several of pop's highest points in the '90s, including the "Unplugged" versions of "Losing My Religion," "All Apologies" and "Tears in Heaven." However, like any other recording trend, it is the way in which this particular style palette is used, rather than the device itself, which determines whether it will be just another passing marketing fad or a bright new medium.

With any luck, the remix backlash will lead to more innovative approaches to rerecording, rather than the borderline bait and switch technique that has typified remixes over the past few years.

The Coyote Gospel

jockeys material often difficult to obtain commercially.

Probably the most important group in establishing the pre-eminence of the 12-inch single was New Order, whose minimalist sleeves and anti-promotional approach during the early '80s made each new single a major event. In addition, New Order was probably the first band whose songs are better known in their extended forms. Popular radio was pretty much split on whether to play the seldom-heard and often-inferior 7-inch versions or to try and edit the club versions down to the acceptable three- to four-minute range.

By the mid-1980s, virtually every single, even by the least appropriate artists, was being released along with a dance or club remix. While there were many notable exceptions, a general trend emerged of uninspired "remixes," which were little more than the original track spread out over twice the time with the exact same elements gradually cycled in and out.

As artists grew increasingly disgusted with nearly identical ver-

Hot Australian group brings rock to Hancher

Aborigines, rock music, Hancher Auditorium. If we were to play Sesame Street's "One of these things is not like the other" game, even Big Bird might get stumped on this one. However, the three will be united in a unique concert by Yothu Yindi, Australia's 1993 Rock Performer of the Year, at Hancher tonight at 8 p.m.

Yothu Yindi, which means "child and mother," is the first ever aboriginal band to break through to the pop charts. In fact, KRUI listeners may recognize their hit single "Treaty," and others may have caught the group opening for the likes of Midnight Oil, Tracy Chapman and Neil Young. The group fuses contemporary rock with the traditional music of aboriginal culture and combines pop vocals with ancient aboriginal instruments, including didgeridu and bilma.

Although Yothu Yindi combines aboriginal dancers in traditional costumes and face paint into its act, the group definitely can rock; Rolling Stone magazine recently awarded the band with a four-star review of its new album, Freedom. Bob Weir of the Grateful Dead has been quoted describing the band.

"Yothu Yindi builds what they do on a bed of timeless, ancient aboriginal music and dance," said Weir. "To this they add their interpretation of today's popular music. But it's more than just music. It's more than just a performance. It's magic."

Rock concerts are hardly a common event at Hancher. However, Wallace Chappell, director and artistic manager of Hancher, said the group's performance will not only satisfy its loyal fans, but also build a bridge of understanding to a culture that most Americans know very little about.

"I am really interested in cultural hybrids, and this band certainly is that," he said. "It combines the old and the new in terms of instrumentation and using body paint and loincloths in the presentation, but it is still rock music."

Chappell said the group's political message is as poignant as some of the world's major heavyweights in the music industry.

"In terms of their protest music and commentary on the social climate of Australia, the content — not the music itself — of Yothu Yindi's music reminds me a lot of U2 and the social commentary in their music on Ireland," said Chappell. He said he decided to book them after viewing a music video which won them the 1991 MTV award for Best Australian Video.

Chappell said there were still "plenty" of tickets available for the event. Perhaps students who were beginning to believe the only places on campus to hear serious rocking were the Union Main Lounge and Carver-Hawkeye Arena will take a closer look at Hancher tonight.

"Quite a few people have heard this music, but if you like rock 'n' roll, you'll like this concert," he said. "That's the bottom line."

For ticket information for Yothu Yindi, call the Hancher Box Office at 335-1160.

The Daily Iowan

Move over Menendez boys, the Evil Queen has arrived. She's mean, she's vain and she's got a great defense lawyer. Her plea of not guilty to the attempted murder of Snow White resulted in a hung jury Tuesday at Hoover Elementary.

The Evil Queen's trial was part of Law Day celebrations this year. The Young Lawyers Division staged the mock trial of the Evil Queen to give elementary students an idea of what a jury trial is like. All of the parts were played by local lawyers, and the jury was made up of a select group of Hoover students. The case of "Land of Once Upon a Time vs. The Evil Queen" played out like so many of our contemporary court dramas, complete with insinuations, impassioned pleas — and talking mirrors.

Witnesses for the prosecution included Doc Dwarf (Tim Krumm) and Snow White-Charming (Becky Seidle), while the defense called on the Evil Queen (Sandra Simpson) and the Magic Mirror. Though her mirror role was rather two-dimensional, lawyer Lisa Engh gave what turned out to be the crucial testimony in the case.

Jury member and Hoover student Brian Rumsey determined that the mirror was a trustworthy witness. Why then, did the lawyer for the prosecution (Rene Sneitzer) not ask her outright if the Evil Queen had poisoned White-Charming? What were they afraid of? This turned out to be the question which resulted in the hung jury.

Defense lawyer Steve Ballard also did a fine job of throwing the shadow of blame upon Grumpy Dwarf, whom Ballard argued was upset with White-Charming because she insisted he clean his room. Doc was unable to refute the conclusion that Grumpy was, in fact, irritated and wanted White-Charming out of the way.

As the jury deliberated, many eager hands were raised as students asked questions ranging from "Have you had any psycho people (as clients)?" to "How close is this to a real trial?"

"This is amazingly realistic, although in a condensed manner," lawyer Tom Hobart answered. "The lawyers hit on the same key points that they would have in a real trial."

The jury was then solemnly led back into the courtroom by the bailiff, Iowa City policewoman Kathy Ockenfels. The verdict: eight said the Evil Queen was guilty, four said not guilty. A relieved Evil Queen congratulated her attorney and anxiously awaited her retrial at a similar performance Tuesday at Lucas Elementary — where she was found guilty.

Lucky for her and the Menendez boys alike that they don't live in Singapore.

SUIT COULD COST SINGER MILLIONS

Robert Jablon
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Reeling from a jury verdict that could cost him millions, Michael Bolton will ask a judge to overturn the finding that he swiped an Isley Brothers song for his 1991 hit, "Love is a Wonderful Thing."

The singer staged a news conference Monday to denounce last week's verdict.

Asked if race played a role in the outcome, Bolton, who is white, said there was "a bit of racial inference" that he called "a little tough to tolerate." The federal court jury was composed of four blacks and four whites. In Los Angeles, Ronald Isley, who is black, fired back at a news conference of his own.

"Hearing that he's making a racial issue out of this really hurts, because it wasn't that way," Isley said.

In its decision, the jury awarded the Isleys' Three Boys Music Corp. with 66 percent of all royalties from the Bolton single "Love is a Wonderful Thing." Jurors credited the song with 28 percent of the success of Bolton's album "Time, Love and Tenderness," which has sold 10 million copies.
