Arena becomes choice for ceremony

Mary Geraghty
The Daily Iowan

Due to ongoing renovations at Hancher Auditorium, summer graduation ceremonies will be held at Carver-Hawkeye Arena Saturday, despite the fact that this location was considered unacceptable last summer.

When flood waters made Hancher inaccessible last summer, UI officials canceled the summer graduation ceremony because no alternative site could be found and the safety of visiting friends and relatives was in question.

Before the decision was made last summer, Vice President for University Relations Ann Rhodes said the arena, although large enough to accommodate graduation crowds, was unacceptable because it is not air-conditioned.

"We don't have a good alternative," she told The Daily Iowan on July 19, 1993. "We don't want to use Carver-Hawkeye because it's not air-conditioned."

Associate Provost John Folkins, the chairman of the committee which selected the location for this summer's ceremony, said the judgment that Carver-Hawkeye was not acceptable last year had nothing to do with this year's decision.

Lack of air conditioning should not cause too much discomfort since the ceremony is early in the morning and should be completed in less than two hours, Dean of Students Phillip Jones said.

All graduates are being asked to cooperate with the "Graduate With Class" campaign, which has been enforced at the UI for the last four years, by dressing and behaving in a manner appropriate for the dignity of the graduation ceremony.

"Students have made it a successful operation and meaningful for themselves and their parents in the past," Jones said. "There is no reason to believe that students would regress, but it is important to continue to reinforce the expectations."

He said success in past efforts to maintain dignity at commencement ceremonies does not diminish the need to encourage graduates' courtesy and consideration of each other.

"We're not going to ignore the situation," Jones said. "We won't abandon monitoring and enforcement simply because we've had success in the past."

UI Summer Commencement

Summer commencement at the University of Iowa will be celebrated with an all-university ceremony at 9 a.m., Saturday, August 6. The event will be held at Carver-Hawkeye Arena and is free and open to the public.

This summer's commencement, scheduled for 9 a.m. Saturday, will bring together 875 degree candidates from the colleges of Liberal Arts, Business, Education, Engineering, Medicine and the Graduate College in an all-university ceremony.

The Daily Iowan takes summer hiatus

Today's issue of The Daily Iowan is the last issue for the summer. The DI will not be published during the interim. The business office will remain open from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Publication will resume on Aug. 22, the first day of the fall semester.

UI student sues state after university-related accident

A UI student is suing the state of Iowa, claiming she sustained damages in a Jan. 20, 1993 accident at the UI.

According to court documents, UI junior Stacy Shablott fell outside of Van Allen Hall because the stairs were not properly maintained.

Shablott's attorney, Martin Diaz, would not specify the dollar amount that is being requested.

"There are no final decisions on that. Some of it will be related to her condition and how she improves," he said.

Currently Shablott is healing after she refractured her right hand, requiring her to undergo surgery and rehabilitation.

The petition states that the accident caused Shablott pain and suffering, medical expenses, loss of earning capacity and loss of full body.

UI officials had no comment.

Prisoner files lawsuit because of cell change

An inmate at the Iowa Medical and Classification Center is suing the prison for cruel and unusual punishment.

James Jackson Sturtz has filed suit in Johnson County Court after he was moved into a smaller cell. According to court documents, Sturtz requested that he be moved back into a larger cell because he suffers from claustrophobia and has "a fear of being closed in."

Larry Hardy, deputy warden at center, said any prison facility is vulnerable to such claims by inmates, but all claims are investigated.

"We check medical records for documentation that clearly indicates they have such problems. In the absence, we don't let inmates' claims guide our decision," he said. "But we do monitor them carefully for mental or emotional distress."

WOMEN ISSUED SUBPOENAS

Abuse victims pressured to testify

Ann Swartzendruber
Special to The Daily Iowan

Although he sympathizes with the fears of abused women, Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White says he does not hesitate to subpoena women who are unwilling or reluctant to testify in court.

It's part of a growing response to the large dismissal rate of domestic abuse trials that occurs because victims are too afraid to testify or have been encouraged not to testify by defense lawyers in order to spare their partners jail time, White said.

"We want to be the ones to make a judgment as to whether to use the victim," he said.

Issuing subpoenas to victims of domestic assault is an example of the changing — sometimes controversial — judicial involvement in domestic assault cases. New, tougher stalking laws and no-contact orders that are easier to get are also making it easier than ever to crack down once and for all on domestic abuse.

White said domestic assault charges are not taken lightly and are rarely dropped these days.

Once police are involved, "There is no such thing as pressing and dropping charges (of domestic assault), at least not in this county," Tom Diehl, an attorney in the public defender's office, said.

However, the majority of domestic assault cases still do not go to trial, White said, because most offenders plead guilty.

White said specific figures for domestic assault cases were hard to figure but said his office handles more than 3,500 indictable offenses above the simple misdemeanor level.

"Out of those 3,500, we average 50 trials. The vast majority of defendants plead guilty and that's true of domestic abuse cases too," he said.

Revictimizing the victim?

The push to get domestic violence cases out of the living room and into the courtroom has created some controversy over how to best assure the victim's safety.

For his part, White said his office is ready to take the subpoenaing of victims seriously.

Although he has not yet issued one, White said, "We eventually

Smashed police car draws investigation

Liza Roche
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City Police Department Chief R.J. Winkelhake said Thursday that he is personally investigating a single car accident involving an Iowa City police officer on Kimball Road near Gilbert Street.

According to Winkelhake, Officer R. Allan Mebus Jr., 36, apparently lost control of his vehicle while on duty early Monday morning and ran into an area with small trees, bushes and a speed limit sign.

At this point, Winkelhake said, that is basically all police know concretely about the incident since car accidents involving the department are handled by the Iowa Highway Patrol.

The final report is not ready for disclosure and is being handled by Trooper Gary Bird of Cedar Rapids, who was said to be out of the office until Aug. 8.

"Normally when we have something that may be amiss, we do an internal investigation," Winkelhake said.

The only information Winkelhake said the police department had available at press time was a cover sheet of the accident report that offers no detailed information about the case.

Dennis Fitzgibbon, 250 Kimball Road, lives about 50 feet from the crash site. He said he walked outside roughly 30 seconds after hearing the impact of the crash and was surprised to see another police car already accompanying Mebus' vehicle.

"There have been accidents going down the hill, but I thought it was odd a car went up so fast that it lost control," he said.

Winkelhake said there was a burglary alarm at Home Town Dairies, 1109 N. Dodge St., around the same time but did not know if Mebus was responding to that call.

No chemical test was given to Mebus at the time of the accident.

"The officer has to be able to articulate why a chemical test is necessary in order to give one," Winkelhake said.

He said officers have been reprimanded or suspended in the past for negligent driving, but the problem comes up very rarely.

Damage to the car Mebus was driving is estimated at $3,500.

MEN AND WOMEN SOCIALIZED DIFFERENTLY

Report on casual sex reaffirms gender gap

Karin Wahl-Jorgensen
The Daily Iowan

A recently published report shows that the number of men willing to pursue casual sex far exceeds the number of women.

The 1994 study, conducted by psychologists Chara and Kuenen, shows that among college seniors, only 5 percent of females will engage in casual sex on the first date. On the other hand, 60 percent of males said yes to first date sex.

Kathy Barnett, health educator for Health Iowa, said college men and women definitely have different attitudes about relationships.

"It's well-known that women are interested in sex in the context of a relationship — more so than men," Barnett said. "It doesn't surprise me very much based on the anecdotal evidence I have from talking to women. Women are just not as interested in sex outside their relationship than men."

Ashley Sovern, director of education with the Rape Victim

Advocacy Program, said the main reason for the discrepancy is that men and women are still socialized in adherence to traditional gender roles.

"What's going on is that men and women are being socialized differently. We certainly know that women are taught their own sexuality is less important than men's sexuality," Sovern said. "There are different levels of comfort about casual sex because men are taught it's OK to be sexually active, while women are not supposed to be sexual."

Sovern thought the discrepancy in attitudes might cause problems in relationships.

"If men are socialized to being more comfortable with having sex in relationships and women aren't, women might be uncomfortable," she said.

Leslie Margolin, who teaches a course on human sexuality, said socialization and the language used to talk about sex has a great influence on the attitudes toward casual sex.

vides financial means for people who fall through the cracks," Bode said. "If you go to a bank, you have to have collateral. We work with smaller items and are short-term, but it's the same thing."

After graduating with a psychology degree, Bode's father financed the business in 1986. Bode said he worked at a pawn shop in Cedar Rapids when he was young so he could "have access to guitars." Ever since opening, he said business has been booming.

"It's turned out to be much larger than I expected. We're currently busting at the seams," Bode said.

He estimated that 100 to 150 people breeze in and out of the door every day. Most customers are surprised it's run ethically, and that's why he's been in business so long, he said.

Bode said he doesn't anticipate going to graduate school and is busy running the pawn shop. He said he works at least 60 hours per week, probably more including bookkeeping and other work, but he enjoys running his own business. The only downside is having that responsibility 24 hours per day. But he said it's never boring.

Stolen merchandise isn't usually a problem, he said. Anyone who pawns something must show a driver's license, and copies of the sale

Dwight Bode stands inside the pawn shop he owns and manages at 319 S. Gilbert St. He sees his role as that of a banker for another strata of society; loans are given on the basis of collateral that is acquired and sold, should the loan go unpaid. Busi-are sent to the police department. He has more trouble with domestic stealing.

"We'll have a brother selling another brother's TV or a husband or wife selling things before a divorce more than fencing," Bode said. "They'd be silly to try to do that considering the precautions we have."

The hottest items among college students are anything related to music, including stereos. For non-students, Bode said jewelry tops the list.

"You can always live without your ring for a few days, unless it's your wedding ring. But then again, some people pawn it to get rid of bad memories," Bode said.

Guns and swords are also among the merchandise to choose from in the store. Bode said permits are required for pistols, but a driver's license will get you a shotgun or rifle. Long-arm guns do the most trade he said, selling an average of one gun per day. The swords are mostly collectors' items.

"You're more apt to give up your swords than your TV when you need cash," Bode said. "The TV is always the last to go. That's why we have so many VCRs."

People try to pawn strange things, he said. One person brought in their false teeth because of the gold bridgework. Bode said he turned it down, and he also doesn't take 8-track players.

"You have to draw the line somewhere," Bode said.

Queen Mother Elizabeth makes merry on 94th birthday

LONDON (AP) — As staff members brought in flowers, cards and boxes of chocolates, a frail Queen Mother Elizabeth celebrated her 94th birthday Thursday by greeting some of the hundreds of well-wishers gathered at her home.

Leaning heavily on a stick, the Queen Mum exchanged pleasantries with some of the estimated 2,000 people at the gates to Clarence House.

The crowd cheered upon seeing the Queen Mother and sang "Happy Birthday" to the accompaniment of a military band.

Later, her daughter, Queen Elizabeth II, stopped by for a birthday lunch along with Prince Charles and his sons; Princess Margaret, the Queen Mother's younger daughter; Princess Anne and her husband and two children; and Prince Edward, the queen's youngest son.

Man slapped with lawsuit for using Limbaugh's name

DENVER (AP) — What's in a name? When the name is Rush, as in Rush Limbaugh, enough for a lawsuit.

Aaron Harber, a businessman and failed Democratic candidate for Colorado secretary of state, wants to be host of a liberal radio talk show he calls "After the Rush." Limbaugh's lawyers have threatened legal action against USA Talk Network in Boulder, Colo., which hopes to syndicate Harber's program in a few weeks.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Colorado filed a lawsuit July 29 on Harber's behalf, citing free speech and free enterprise.

Kenneth Swezey, Limbaugh's lawyer in New York, did not immediately return a call Thursday.

Snipes claims he didn't see police in turnpike chase

FORT PIERCE, Fla. (AP) — Too bad the judge couldn't order Wesley Snipes to improve his peripheral vision.

The movie star pleaded no contest Wednesday to reckless driving. Snipes zipped past a state trooper in April and led the officer on a 120 mph chase for 30 miles down the Florida Turnpike, police said.

Snipes, 32, knew he was speeding but didn't realize police were chasing him, the actor's spokesman said at the time.

The chase ended when the trooper bumped Snipes' motorcycle at a turnpike exit and Snipes was thrown to the ground. The judge ordered Snipes to perform 80 hours of community service, pay $7,100 in fines and court costs, and pay for the repair of the patrol car.

Screenwriter could move on to happier material

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Perhaps wedded bliss will help Joe Eszterhas write about healthy relationships.

Eszterhas, who penned "Basic Instinct," "Sliver" and "Jagged Edge," married Naomi Baka in a private ceremony in Maui, Hawaii, his publicist said Wednesday.

"I came to this country as a refugee (from Hungary) when I was 6 years old. I've been a loner all my life," Eszterhas said in a wedding toast. "Naomi, I don't feel like a loner anymore."

The couple's 4-month-old son, Joseph Jeremiah, served as ring bearer at Saturday's ceremony at a 100-year-old chapel overlooking the sea. The bride wore white, and the groom wore an ivory suit and cowboy boots with bullets strapped to the ankles.

Baka is divorced from "Sliver" producer Bill MacDonald, who left her for a brief engagement to the movie's star, Sharon Stone.

'Hard Copy' pays price for Jordan's 1st home run

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Michael Jordan may not have to wait for "Hard Copy" to see a replay of his first professional home run.

Television crews had packed up before Jordan's homer Saturday so the Birmingham Barons pleaded with spectators for a videotaped memento.

"We had some out-of-town people call and offer their tape and said they'd be thrilled to have a couple of autographed balls," said Chris Pika, a spokesman for the minor league team.

A fan from San Jose, Calif., offered his video but reneged after television's "Hard Copy" bought exclusive rights to the tape. The show said it would air the tape Thursday night.

Stu Ganz won't say how much "Hard Copy" paid him, but he threatens to play hardball if the team also wants a piece of the action.

"If this thing progresses the way it has been, they better think about something more than an autographed baseball," he said.

BUDGET NOT YET FINALIZED

UI biosciences initiative pushed

Chris Pothoven
The Daily Iowan

UI President Hunter Rawlings likes to point to recent graduate Ali Husain as an example of the excellent opportunities and benefits the UI offers in the area of biosciences — the biological, biomedical and pharmaceutical sciences.

Husain came to the university from a small-town public high school to pursue a microbiology major, engaging in interdisciplinary research and study to prepare himself for medical school. Four years later, he is preparing to leave for two years of study at Oxford University in England, a recipient of the prestigious Rhodes Scholarship.

An increased emphasis on this area of the campus will not only extend these opportunities to more students, faculty and staff, but UI officials also believe the Iowa initiative in the biosciences will help the UI reach its goal of becoming one of the top 10 public universities in the country.

The multimillion dollar project is being spearheaded by UI Vice President for Research David Skorton with help from other UI administrators and collegiate deans.

"The idea is to take an already excellent area on our campus and make it even better," Skorton said.

Not without some cost

Although the project is still in the early planning stages, the UI already has made a preliminary request to the Iowa state Board of Regents for $4.7 million in state appropriations for each of the next three fiscal years.

The board office made a preliminary recommendation of $800,000 for next year at its July meeting, although Rawlings said the university will need at least $1.5 million in state funds. Other funding sources would include the UI (through reallocations and program streamlining), private industry contracts and collaborative research initiatives, federal grants and contracts, and private fund raising.

Until the UI has a firmer idea of state funding and the details of the initiative, UI officials say they will not know the total budget for the project.

Despite the promise of the initiative, there are questions about its success and implementation. At last month's regents meeting, regent Thomas Dorr questioned Rawlings about how the UI would measure the progress of the effort.

Dorr also drew a parallel with the $25.1 million Laser Building (now the Iowa Advanced Technology Laboratory), which was highly touted for its economic and educational potential in the development stage but was ultimately downsized.

"This is dealing with an area that is already strong, and we want to keep it as self-supporting as possible. This should help out the rest of the campus."

David Skorton, UI vice president for research

"That was a case of building something almost from scratch. It tried to create something fresh, which is harder to pull off," Rawlings said. "With this initiative, we will take something already strong and make it even stronger."

While some faculty and students from fields such as arts, humanities or the social sciences may be concerned that the new initiative will divert already tight funding from their programs, Skorton said planners will make sure that does not happen.

"This is dealing with an area that is already strong, and we want to keep it as self-supporting as possible," he said. "This should help out the rest of the campus."

Details, details
The initiative will be broadly distributed across the university, including seven of the UI's 10 colleges.

"It's not clear yet how it will be tied together," Skorton said. "Hopefully it will bring areas on campus more closely together in a planning mode."

"We want to make sure everyone understands it's not an attempt to throttle people's individuality. We plan to actively seek input from the relevant administrators, department heads and faculty members."

According to UI information on the biosciences initiative, the UI is at the top of several individual disciplines and specific research and patient-care areas. Besides high rankings in a number of different areas, the UI biosciences areas draw in about 72 percent of all grant funding to the UI, amounting to $134 million in grants and contracts last year.

The UI can also point to a number of ground-breaking researchers in its ranks, such as internal medicine Professor Michael Welsh, a national leader for his work on cystic fibrosis, and physiology Professor Kevin Campbell, a top muscular dystrophy researcher.

Planners are focusing on four major elements, covering clinical and basic science, technology transfer and student education. These would cover such areas as human genetics, gene therapy and programs for women and minorities.

The research areas would greatly benefit the UI's educational mission, Skorton said.

"My experience has been that in general the best researchers make the best teachers," he said.

Besides the advantages in the areas of research and teaching, officials say the UI and the state will benefit from increased economic development.

"We have to be careful not to make promises we can't keep," Skorton said, "but the things we do to bolster research efforts will most likely have positive economic effects on the region."

Rawlings told the regents that for every dollar of state funds that goes toward the biosciences, $10 in UI funds are created. That translates into an extremely successful investment, he said.

"This is an engine which takes state dollars and invests them and produces a return," he said.

On Wednesday, Aug. 3, The Daily Iowan ran the story "UIHC transplant program flourishes" on Page 1. The article stated that no liver transplants had been performed at the UI Hospitals and Clinics before 1992. Although no pediatric liver transplants were performed before 1992, the liver transplant program at the UIHC actually began in 1984.

On Thursday, Aug. 4, the DI ran the story "Local relief efforts aid Rwandan refugees" on Page 1. The article stated that St. Mary's church, 220 E. Jefferson St., sent $1,400 in Rwandan relief collections through Church World Services. The funds were actually sent through Catholic Relief Services.

SILENCE ONLY HIDES THE CRIME

Women must report rape

It was reported Monday in The Daily Iowan that of the 125 rapes in Iowa reported in the 1993-94 fiscal year at least 30 involved UI students. It is estimated that a large percentage of those students were raped by an acquaintance in their homes.

This number, we are informed, is not an increase in actual rapes (though there was a 4.2 percent increase) but more reflective of an increase in rapes reported. Therefore, we can conclude that it is a positive note for the UI that 30 women felt comfortable enough to report their rape.

And it is positive. Services like Rape Victim Advocacy Program (RVAP) do exist to aid women and they are successful. RVAP alone has created a comfortable home for many that are interested in helping others and being helped for problems ranging from rape to assault to abuse. However, the productivity of RVAP is not the only issue worth looking at.

What does need to be addressed is that it can be construed that once a problem is made public, once it is no longer taboo, then it is not as important. Somehow, we are going to get caught up in appreciating the increase in reported crimes and celebrating that fact. In that celebration we will forget that there is much more work to do.

Not until all the rapes that occur are reported, not until women are no longer victims of their own sexuality, not until rapes no longer occur should there truly be a celebration.

That may seem impossible and idealistic, but groups like RVAP and People Out Working to End Rape (POWER) have a similar goal in mind. They are out there working for an increase in rape education and awareness. These organizations help in prevention as well as aftermath.

Afterwards is the most difficult time for anyone that has been raped or assaulted. There is a question of where to go and what will happen there. The women who take the steps to transform themselves from rape victims to rape survivors do deserve applause. But let's not forget those who are still out there getting hurt. Let's not undervalue the problems that very much exist.

An increase in reported rapes is a good thing, but taking that one step further should remind us that an increase in reports only means there are still a lot of crimes occurring. And that is not good — it is frightening.

HISTORY AS A GUIDE FOR HAITI

Who decides when to fight

The imminent threat of a U.S.-led invasion of Haiti has rekindled a constitutional debate over President Clinton's right to use force in a crisis situation.

On June 29, Sen. Judd Gregg, R-N.H., sponsored a bill changing a Senate opinion into a statute restraining President Clinton from using force in Haiti without authorization. Republican Sen. John McCain and Democratic Sen. Bob Graham opposed this bill because it would set a constitutional precedent which could affect any future president. They argued the president must have the ability to react to crises in a decisive manner with all necessary means.

The Constitution gives Congress the power to declare war; however, the president has the ability to order forces to repel an invasion of the United States. In a 20th-century context, this has meant the president can react to sudden attacks on vital U.S. interests, territories and citizens.

Presidents Reagan and Bush used their constitutional prerogative to respond to threats to American citizens and territory in ordering the invasions of Grenada and Panama. Congress did not challenge their use of force in these emergency situations.

Supporters of the Gregg proposal argue that the waffling policies of the Clinton administration have caused this crisis to evolve into a situation where the use of force is necessary to resolve it.

Sen. McCain does not support an invasion of Haiti, yet he cannot condone a piece of legislation limiting a president's prerogative in only one case. He feels issuing a "sense of the Senate," an official opinion, is the proper course of action. McCain states, "The fact remains you are telling the president of the United States he cannot expend funds to invade except under certain circumstances. It is the wrong thing to do."

Sen. Graham cited the American commitment to democracy and the special relationship the United States has toward Latin America as the justification for the president to use force. He stated, "I supported President Reagan, I supported President Bush and I will support President Clinton because they are the persons who have the legitimacy of the election of the people of the United States to be that voice to the world."

Though the invasion option is controversial, a statutory limit on a case-by-case basis destroys the president's ability to conduct "coercive diplomacy" to eject the Haitian military junta. A quick in-and-out operation to save American lives and to restore democracy would be acceptable — it was President Bush's justification. However, a long stay would require congressional sanction.

JONATHAN LYONS

Immediate action is needed to save oceans

The so-called wise-use movement and anti-ecology movements within the religious right have been saying for decades that humankind isn't powerful enough to destroy the Earth. But we would appear to have taken several leaping bounds toward that end: The oceans are dying.

A study released in early June and reported by the Associated Press states that the world's plankton population concentrations are on a steep, sudden decline. This is due to increased exposure to ultraviolet radiation, resulting from a worldwide thinning of the ozone layer.

Because plankton are at the bottom of the oceanic food chain, serving as a food supply for many sorts of sea life, the study concluded on an ominous note with this warning: The food chain in the oceans is in danger of collapsing, at least partly due to humankind's arrogant lack of concern over the environment. When the food chain there starts to give out, species dependent on plankton for survival will die out as well, followed by other species dependent upon those species as food sources, the extinction working its way up the food chain toward us.

But humankind's insistence on making unreasonable demands on the oceans of the world has for decades been destroying ocean-dwelling life from the opposite end as well. We have overfished and overfished, ignoring warnings from scientists, environmentalists, even fishermen themselves that stocks of the sorts of creatures sought for human consumption have been steadily depleted, threatening the very existence of those species.

But ecophobic arrogance has managed to succeed in getting those warnings dismissed as "radical environmentalism" or, as one right-wing editorial cast it in mud, the work of "environmental cases."

Very real and serious consequences of our habits of profligate consumption are now so painfully obvious that only the oblivious by choice could dismiss them.

Peter Singer notes in "Animal Liberation" (1991): "Several once-abundant species of fish, such as the herrings of Northern Europe, the California sardines, and the New England haddock, are now so scarce as to be, for commercial purposes, extinct. ... In addition to the disruption of ocean ecology caused by overfishing there are bad consequences for humans, too. Throughout the world, small coastal villages that live by fishing are finding their traditional source of food and income drying up."

But the United States and Canada are currently embroiled in a teeming debate over the fishing of territorial waters. Rather than recognizing that it is their mechanized wasteful fishing techniques that are driving so many prized species to extinction, they feud over territory and tariffs.

According to a July 7 AP story, the Canadians, trying desperately to get the American government to take their complaints and concerns on the issue seriously, have levied a $1,100 transit fee on some American fishing boats using Canadian waters.

It seems that the salmon fished intensively by Canadian and American fishermen alike have plummeted in population recently. Where as many as 16 million salmon were previously available near the mouth of the Columbia river, there are now fewer than 1.2 million, and only 2,000 managed to make the trip upstream to spawn this spring and summer, past the dams that will slaughter so many of the new young as they attempt the jaunt to the seas.

And the commercial fishing industry continues its thinking in that vein. According to a July 28 AP report, two Massachusetts-based fishing vessels were confiscated by Canadian law enforcement for dredging for Icelandic scallops in international waters off Canadian shores. The captains of the two ships were arrested and held to face possible charges including forfeiture of the catches, their boats and fines of as much as $500,000.

In European waters, a conflict between French and Spanish fishermen rages over now-depleted fishing stocks. A French trawler reportedly required the protection of a Navy vessel to clear a blockade by Spanish fishermen. In their competition for dwindling fish populations, the Spanish are demanding that the French undergo stricter inspections and that they no longer use nets exceeding the European Union's 1.5-mile limit.

Smaller fishing villages now feel the restriction of commercial nets as well. In another AP article (this one released on Aug. 1), the Sicilian fishing village of Favignana, where a particularly barbaric display of gore is a matter of fishing tradition, villagers whose sustenance is largely dependent upon traditionally sizable fishing populations now see their traditionally season-long fish slaughter reduced to an average of four days' duration. Older fishermen have noted a marked decline in the size of the fish caught as well.

Now is not the time for anti-environmental sentiment; now is certainly not the time to sneeringly label such reports as unfounded or hysterical.

Humankind has flexed its destructive muscle against the Earth, and she cannot withstand us. If we wish to keep from strangling the life out of our planet (which we have clearly begun by strangling the life out of the oceans), we must at least outlaw mass commercial netting of sea life and drastically reduce the demands which we collectively place on the oceans.

Distilling the moving process to three easy steps

Could anything not involving student registration be a bigger pain in the ass than moving, you ask somewhat rhetorically. Probably not, you answer. You know. You've just spent one of the all-time lamest weekends of your life intensely involved in all aspects of the moving process, a process that could most easily be formulated into three steps:

Step 1: More efficiently storing your endless supply of junk that you're never going to use again.

After a cursory review of your various assets, you calculate that you should be able to sort through the boxes, bookshelves and milk crates that hold your stuff in approximately an hour.

Roughly three and a half hours later, you find yourself sitting in the middle of your apartment surrounded by about eight garbage bags, sifting through 14 boxes and crates you haven't touched since the last time you moved that seemingly contain one or more of the following items that at one time in your life you had deemed worthy of saving: a Rubik's cube, a bowling shoe, a bunch of gum wrappers, some bitchin' BMX moto-cross decals, 879 pennies, a ticket stub from Motley Crue concert (opening act: Motorhead), a paint-stained "Official Bikini Inspector" T-shirt with the sleeves cut off, a can of pilsner, an "Astroids" cartridge for an Atari 2600, the liner notes for ABBA's Greatest Hits and seven Civil War chess set pieces from the Franklin Mint.

After another two hours of this, you write "Gumwrappers, etc." on the last three boxes and throw them next to everything else you're saving.

Step 2: Figuring out how to move your stuff across town.

As you lay on your rather old, rather large couch after taping up the last of 18 boxes containing everything you've ever owned, you have an undeniable revelation: It's unlikely all of this stuff is going to fit in the back seat of your Honda Accord.

No problem, you reassure yourself, I'll just call up one of them moving truck rental places and get one of those super huge moving vans. Might be able to dump off all of this junk in one trip you think as you dial the number.

"Yeah, I'm moving a bunch of stuff tomorrow, July 31st, and I need—" you begin before your left ear is ringing with the sound of uninhibited, incontinence-risking, what a jackass, I can't believe he said that laughter.

"Good luck," the voice on the other end offers after the profound hilarity of it all begins to wear off.

"Thanks."

Fine, you tell yourself. Moving vans are a rip-off anyway. I have friends, and one of the main reasons for having friends is to have people around who can help you move your stuff, you think as you pick up the phone to call one of the four people you know who you would feel comfortable asking to spend their weekend carrying room-sized furniture and boxes of junk you will never use.

However, after talking to these people, two of whom owe you money, you get the impression that they are less than infatuated with the prospect of moving your crap all day as they offer up such convincing excuses as "I'm busy" or "I don't want to" or "I can't, I'm busy."

So next you call people you wouldn't feel comfortable asking to help you move. Sister's boyfriend, that guy in your marketing class, friend of friend's friend, that other guy in marketing class. Nope. Everyone and their freaking brother is moving or helping someone else move.

You panic. What if I, like, can't move all of this crap out of my apartment in time? You call people with whom you might or might not merit a "Hi" if they saw you on the street. Even these people are moving tomorrow.

Finally, after about 10 calls and the considerable loss of any remaining dignity, you find someone who both knows who you are and is not moving Sunday.

"So you're free tomorrow," you intone to a guy who was on your softball team last summer and with whom your only previous conversation consisted of the comment, "Hey, nice hit, man." "I was wondering if you could spend your Sunday afternoon helping me carry 18 boxes of garbage and a relatively unclean, Schwarzenegger hernia-giving couch up three flights of stairs all day in the 90-degree heat?" And bring over, like, a really big truck.

Step 3: Convincing your former landlord that people will be able to live in your old apartment again.

After moving your old stuff into your new place, you really only have one more task left: Sell your former landlord on the idea that the apartment you've been raising holy hell in the last three years is ready to accept new life without the benefit of a complete reconstructive overhaul that could preclude you from rightfully receiving a substantial portion of your $495 deposit.

"I don't think you'll have to do much work on this one," you begin as you walk around your empty old apartment and attempt to convince your erstwhile landlord that the light tan carpet was actually more of a dark muddy brown-like color when you moved in and that the fist-high hole in the wall next to the television effectuated by the 1992 National League Championship Series would be the perfect place for the new tenants to hang a cool painting or something.

"So, when could I get my depos—" you rejoin before being stopped.

"Uh, no."
"Nothing?" you ask.
"Nada."
"Please."
"All right," your landlord sighs, taking notice of your pathetic, world-weary countenance, "I'll give you 20 bucks."

"Sounds good," you say.

Chasing away those interim blues

It's an Iowa City axiom which holds true interim after interim; when the cat's away, the mice bust out the beer bong.

If you're sticking around for the break between semesters, keep an eye out. You'll get a glimpse of the weird switcheroo that goes on during downtime in I.C., when the hard-core students split town and the local natives begin to emerge cautiously from semesterlong hibernation.

These curious creatures may look like frightened animals crawling out from underground burrows after a stampede, but don't let their bewildered looks and nervous tics fool you. High & Lonesome returns home Sunday for a show at The Mill.

Metro, 121 Iowa Ave., went all out and sold their souls to these local hedonists. How else would you explain tonight's show by Funky Reggae Party? Here's a band that's part Rasta, part serious jazz and part lounge act. Pop quiz ... what do you do at their gigs? Sport dreds, look urbane and sing Wayne Newton ballads. Saturday night, experience the rumble of "hot rod music" with The Bent Scepters and their rockabilly guests from Minneapolis, The Vibrochamps. Sounds like some sort of marital aid.

Gabe's Oasis, 330 E. Washington St., seems to've been convinced that one night with The Blues Instigators just isn't enough. Usually it's not so B.F. Burt and the boys will slog the blues both tonight and Saturday. Burt's voice alone may cause riots among indigenous Iowa Citizens ... perhaps they'll storm city hall and demand an 8 o'clock curfew for all patrons of the Sports Column. I can dream, can't I?

The Steve Grismore Quartet provides jazz to melt the senses tonight and Saturday at The Sanctuary Restaurant & Pub, 405 S. Gilbert St. And since the AUR apartment complex across from the Sanctuary may be virtually empty during break, all Pub patrons are encouraged to bring spray-paint, blowtorches and anything else which could be used to creatively alter that drab brick facade.

Two other momentous events of note:
• Orchestra de Jazz y Salsa will be jazzing it up on the Pedestrian Mall tonight, beginning at 6. Cuervo is a must for this one, kids.

• And Sunday night sees the long-awaited return of I.C.'s own High & Lonesome, who will play a relaxed gig at The Mill Restaurant, 120 E. Burlington St.

And so the weekend love shack closes its doors for two weeks while I build a deck. I leave you with the immortal words of Napoleon, who said, "If this pastry is to bear my name, it must be richer! More cream!"

TELEVISION

Fall season: Themes like old times again

Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Take a moment to reflect on how lucky it is that the people who make television shows aren't in school. If they were, they would all flunk for copying their neighbors.

That's television's prevailing lesson as the roll is called for the new fall lineup.

The "Single Parent Syndrome," for instance, is still hot 34 years after Fred MacMurray took on the role of a widowed father of three boys. Soon joining the schedule already laden with the likes of "Full House," "Grace Under Fire" and "Blossom" is ABC's "Me and the Boys," starring Steve Harvey as the widowed father of three boys.

Sure, there are differences: The (white) household of "My Three Sons" included Steve Douglas' father-in-law, while the (black) household of "Me and the Boys" includes Steve Hayes' mother-in-law. (It took them 34 years to come up with this twist?)

Meanwhile, a variation on the form can be found in the Fox drama "Party of Five" and the ABC sitcom "On Our Own." In each of these new series, both parents are dead. (Viewers won't be feeling too good themselves.)

"The Honeymooners" traded in on the Odd Couple theme more than a dozen years before "The Odd Couple" hit the air, and four decades later this formula is going strong.

Now, joining such favorites as "NYPD Blue," "Love & War" and "X-Files," look for these new Odd Couples:

• "New York Undercover" on Fox, pairing a black cop with a Latino cop.

• "Due South" on CBS, pairing an upright Canadian mountie with a slick Chicago cop.

• "Fortune Hunter" on Fox, pairing a dashing James Bondlike sleuth with a nerdy high-tech wizard.

• "Sweet Justice" on NBC, pairing a young white woman lawyer with an older black woman lawyer.

Another trusty formula calls for jamming generations in the same house or office, then letting the fur fly. Joining "Frasier," "Thunder Alley" and "Empty Nest" in the "Tight Little Island" motif are such newcomers as:

• "The Boys Are Back" on CBS, starring Hal Linden and Suzanne Pleshette as a couple all set to enjoy their golden years — until their grown children move back home. Sure to provide hilarious clashes.

• "All-American Girl" on ABC, starring Margaret Cho as a hip, young Korean American woman who still lives with her close-knit, very traditional family. Sure to provide hilarious clashes.

• "Madman of the People" on NBC, starring Dabney Coleman as an irreverent and irascible magazine columnist whose new boss is ... his daughter. Sure to provide hilarious clashes.

There are other formulas, of course:

• "You CAN Go Home Again." On ABC's drama "McKenna," Jack McKenna's estranged son returns to help the family's struggling outdoor tour business.

• "Fish Out of Water." On CBS' police mystery "Under Suspicion," Rose "Phil" Phillips must cope with being the only woman detective in the squad room.

• And joining "Ellen," "Seinfeld" and "Living Single" in the "Pals" category, look for Fox's new "Wild Oats" and the aptly named "Friends" on NBC, each about twentysomethings hanging out, horny and underemployed.

Seems like where television is concerned, there's a formula for everything. Everything but an automatic hit.

Howard Stern now 'running for pope,' not governor

Richard Pyle
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Radio shock jock Howard Stern said Thursday that he has dropped out of the governor's race. The man who loves to discuss his sex life and everyone else's is concerned about the private parts of his finances.

Earlier this week, a court ruled that he must file a financial disclosure form with the state if he is a candidate. Stern, whose raunchy on-air stunts have brought his syndicated radio show millions of fans, had challenged the disclosure law.

Stern denied speculation he was using the court setback as a pretext to get out of the race, saying it was simply a matter of wanting to keep private how much he earns and how much he has in the bank.

"I'm getting 15 to 20 percent of the vote," he complained. "It's a joke. I am not a candidate for governor. You just have to live with a governor who tells you how much stock he has in IBM but won't tell you what's in his head or his heart."

There was also a published report that the party was having trouble getting enough signatures to put Stern on the ballot. The Albany Times Union said that with an Aug. 23 deadline, it had only about one-third of the needed 15,000 signatures.

Stern had said he was running on just three promises: to reinstate the death penalty, streamline toll collections and require road crews to work at night. He said once those goals were accomplished he would resign.

Although he is no longer in the governor's race, Stern added Thursday, "I am running for pope."

DIARY ENTRIES CONTRADICTED

First lady's role probed in hearings

Mike Feinsilber
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans zeroed in on Hillary Rodham Clinton's interest in Whitewater Thursday, but her chief of staff testified the investigation has been a distraction, not an obsession.

Margaret Williams disputed a colleague's diary that said Rodham Clinton was "paralyzed" by the Whitewater affair and otherwise downplayed her efforts to keep track of a savings and loan investigation that was potentially embarrassing to the first family.

"I made a conscious decision that we would not spend our time discussing Whitewater with Mrs. Clinton unless we were responding to press inquiries," she told the Senate Banking Committee.

At a parallel hearing in the House, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen gave his embattled deputy, Roger Altman, a verbal embrace, warmer than the one he was willing to offer the day before.

"I find him a very intelligent, hard-working man and I believe in his integrity," Bentsen said, following President Clinton's lead.

But the secretary refused to take sides when asked whom he believed — Altman or the department's top lawyer, Jean Hanson. They have given conflicting testimony.

"That is for them to state," Bentsen said.

Altman has emerged as the central figure in the hearings because his testimony is at odds with that of other administration officials.

As both the Senate and House investigations revisited old ground, some Democrats called the hearings a dry hole.

"We've been here four days now trolling, hoping someone would run into a hook," complained Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, D-Colo.

With her mother sitting behind her, Williams sought to counter an impression that Rodham Clinton was deeply concerned about the investigation into the failure of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan.

Rodham Clinton represented Madison as a lawyer in Arkansas, and the S & L's owner was a business partner with the Clintons in the Whitewater land venture.

Altman's diary quoted Williams as saying Rodham Clinton was "paralyzed" by the Resolution Trust Corp.'s Madison investigation.

ATTORNEYS AIM TO USE NEW MEASURE

Pizza theft may make '3rd strike'

Associated Press

REDONDO BEACH, Calif. — A man could be sent to jail for 25 years to life because of a slice of pepperoni pizza.

Police say Jerry Williams stole the slice from a group of children.

On Wednesday, the District Attorney's Office said it would prosecute Williams for the alleged theft under the state's new "three strikes you're out" law because he has two previous serious or violent felony convictions.

Williams, 27, has pleaded innocent in Municipal Court to a felony charge of robbery and a charge of petty theft. He was being held in lieu of $100,000 bail.

Williams, who stands nearly 6 feet and 5 inches, took the slice of pizza Saturday from four children at the Redondo Beach pier.

The children, ages 7 to 14, were eating the extra-large pizza near the boardwalk while their parents ate elsewhere on the pier, said Detective Mark Sturgeon.

The pizza shop manager, who saw the incident, called police. Williams was arrested at a nearby arcade.

"Later, he said that he did this on a dare by his brother-in-law and it wasn't that he was hungry," Sturgeon said. "He said it was pepperoni, and because he doesn't eat pork, he threw the piece of pizza in the ocean."

Cannabis conflagration quelled

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Authorities raced to the fourth floor of a smoky Manhattan building and found 400 burning marijuana plants.

"The joint was rolling in cannabis," said Detective Andrew McInnis, a police spokesman.

No one was in the apartment when police and firefighters got there. Police removed the plants and destroyed them.

The fire was deemed suspicious and was being investigated.

McInnis also answered another burning question:

"They did not inhale."

It's about time.

On time.

We don't make you wait. We respect the importance of your time. In the last year 97% of all our patients were seen by their doctor within 10 minutes of their appointment.

All the time.

You can count on personal care after hours. We know that often when you need us it's not between 9 and 5. In the last year 99.3% of our patients who needed care after hours were personally seen by our staff, usually by their own doctor.

Plenty of time.

In the last year, routine well-child checkups lasted 30-60 minutes, one-on-one with a medical provider. We believe providing health education for parents is critical for healthy children.

First time.

A free home visit is part of our special care for all newborns and parents. We think that the first weeks of life are critical to start off right for healthy children. We are concerned that attempts by insurance companies to discharge newborns at 24 hours will compromise care. We will be there to help make sure everything is fine.

We're part of the Mercy Hospital Community of Caring Physicians. For more information or to make an appointment, call us at 337-8467 or come visit us at 540 E. Jefferson Street, #102, Iowa City.

Refugees trek back to Rwanda

Brian Murphy
Associated Press

RUHENGRI, Rwanda — The old man rubbed his plastic crucifix and struggled up the banana grove path leading to the home he fled a month ago.

When he saw the two-room hut was neither damaged nor looted, he let go of the cross and clapped his hands together.

"It's still here, it's still here," he repeated Thursday as he touched his wife's hands, then the mud-brick walls.

Sebohozo Concord didn't know what to expect when he set out for home from a Zairian refugee camp last week with his wife and two relatives, including a handicapped grandson confined to a heavy wooden chair.

The defeated Rwandan army has spread rumors that the former Tutsi rebels would slaughter them. Many villages were leveled in the final battles for control of western Rwanda last month.

But Concord, 80, was certain what would happen if he remained in Zaire.

"I would die. I am old and getting weaker," he said. "I will not have the strength for this trip soon. I needed to be home."

More and more Rwandans are making similar treks. They would rather face their war-ravaged homeland than the diseases and squalor in the camps. But they also leave behind the channels for food and medical attention.

Rwanda has been stripped bare by civil war. Unharvested fields of corn and grain are rotting and food is scarce. The United Nations estimates 350,000 to 500,000 people were killed in the first eight weeks of the Rwanda crisis.

U.N. observers estimate nearly 130,000 Rwandans have crossed back into their country. They hope to encourage more by appealing to Rwandan civil leaders to lead their villages back. A radio station is expected to begin broadcasting information today designed to counter the army's massacre rumors, which have never been confirmed.

A nurse with the Dublin-based GOAL relief organization distributes vitamin C tablets to children in the Orphelinat orphanage at the Mugunga refugee camp near Goma, Zaire. Officials estimate more than 20,000 children have been misplaced during the exodus of Rwandan Hutus into Zaire. The nurse declined to be identified.

But aid groups say they are too overwhelmed by the more than 1 million refugees in Zaire to set up convoys over the border. Refugees must walk home, often for days.

The 90-mile road from the Zairian border to Ruhengeri then Kigali loosely follows the rebels' final offensive, which touched off the epic refugee exodus.

At Gisenyi, the border is marked by a dented gate arm across the road.

Kobgemana Alitier's wheelbarrow tipped over as he tried to steer around it. Out spilled his possessions: blankets, cooking pots and some cartoon books that belonged to his daughter, who died of cholera in the camps.

He made sure the books were tightly tucked in the blanket folds before heading off toward home in Musanze, about 35 miles away.

The first few miles cut through the remains of the army's last stand and the bedlam of the refugee flight: burned-out vehicles, trampled belongings, the stench of rotting bodies.

It was near here that Sabimana Jamhari said he spotted a small girl who collapsed by the roadside on Monday. Four days later, she was groggy with fever on the floor of his hut in Rubavu, about 12 miles up the road. Jamhari said he only knows the girl's name — Irambiya — and nothing else about her.

"I was coming back to my country with hopes all the killing would be over," he said. "It did not seem right to leave someone to die without trying to help."

Yugoslavia closes border off to Bosnian Serbs

Roland Prinz
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Serb-dominated Yugoslavia withdrew support for Bosnia's Serbs Thursday, backing out of a war it bankrolled for more than two years at the risk of its own economic ruin.

The Yugoslav government, which represents Serbia and tiny Montenegro, immediately sealed the 300-mile border between Yugoslavia and Serb-held Bosnia to exports of everything except food, clothes and medicine.

It also said all Bosnian Serb leaders would be banned from its territory.

Bosnian Serbs have depended on Yugoslavia for weapons, fuel and other supplies throughout the 28-month war against Muslims and Croats. The severing of political and economic ties could be a turning point in the war if Belgrade is true to its word.

Yugoslavia has clamped down on Bosnian Serbs before. But a stinging attack on Bosnian Serb leaders by President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia suggested that this time, the rift is for real.

Milosevic, the region's main power broker, said Bosnian Serbs had jeopardized their people by rejecting an international peace plan.

"That is why we have to cut off all further relations and cooperation with such a leadership," Milosevic said.

He appealed to Bosnian Serbs to oust their leaders, whom he branded as "war profiteers."

Montenegro and Serbia are the only two republics remaining in Yugoslavia. The secession of Slovenia and Macedonia was relatively bloodless, but wars erupted in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina when they declared independence.

Milosevic is widely viewed as the chief instigator of the fighting in Bosnia as well as the earlier conflict in Croatia.

But Serbia, which dominates Yugoslavia, faces a tightening of 2-year-old trade sanctions punishing it for its role in the war. Milosevic apparently wants to stave off further economic ruin that could jeopardize his hold on power, even at the price of abandoning his Serb brethren in Bosnia.

In recent weeks, Milosevic's Socialist Party has set up an offshoot in Serb-held Bosnia. Milosevic's appeal to jettison Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic indicated he wants to become leader of the Bosnian Serbs.

Karadzic warned his people to prepare for rationing and other hardships. But the Bosnian Serb assembly speaker, Momcilo Krajcinik, offered to resign. Hinting at a possible rift in the Bosnian Serb leadership, he said others also were willing to step down to appease Yugoslavia.

At the White House, press secretary Dee Dee Myers called Yugoslavia's decision "a positive step."

A hard-line Bosnian Serb leader, Biljana Plavsic, was turned back at the Yugoslav border Thursday, Bosnian Serb spokeswoman Sonja Karadzic told the Associated Press.

Associated Press photographer Srđjan Ilic reported from the border that Bosnian Serb trucks were backed up at two crossings where the atmosphere was nervous and tense. Only empty trucks were allowed to proceed.

Yugoslavia's announcement was the first indirect admission that it did supply the Bosnian Serbs with fuel and other military supplies. Belgrade constantly denied doing so.

Yugoslavia denounced the Bosnian Serb leaders for rejecting the peace plan that would reduce Serb holdings in Bosnia from 70 percent to 49 percent of the republic. A Muslim-Croat federation, which has accepted the plan, would get the rest.

The plan, sponsored by the United States, Russia, France, Britain and Germany, would kill the Bosnian Serbs' dream of linking their holdings with Serb-held land in Croatia and Serbia proper in a "Greater Serbia."

In rejecting it again on Wednesday, Bosnian Serb leaders called it an attempt to get Bosnian Serbs "to sign their own death warrant."

After the Bosnian Serbs turned the plan down the first time, the five sponsoring nations decided to ask the U.N. Security Council to toughen its sanctions against Yugoslavia in an attempt to pressure it to bring its proxies in Bosnia to heel.

Bosnian Serbs went to war in April 1992 after Muslims and Croats voted to secede from Yugoslavia. More than 200,000 people have been reported killed or missing.

In their stronghold of Pale, Bosnian Serbs were defiant but worried.

"History has not seen such a betrayal," said Milanka Mitrovic, 36. Others feared poverty. A Bosnian Serb soldier, who identified himself only as Lt. Stevo, vowed to fight on regardless. "If we run out of ammunition, we are going to fight with our bare arms. We are not afraid to die," he said.

Intense artillery and infantry battles raged Thursday in central and northeastern Bosnia.

Muslim-led government forces gained some ground near Vares, 18 miles north of Sarajevo, and along a key Serb supply route in the north called the Posavina corridor, said Maj. Rob Annink, a U.N. spokesman.

In Sarajevo, two people were wounded by Serb sniper fire. Annink reported Serb soldiers for a second day threatened to retake U.N.-guarded weapons near Sarajevo by force. They placed mines around two French armored personnel carriers blocking one collection site but later withdrew, he said.

In northwest Bosnia, government forces appeared on the verge of defeating rebel Muslim forces loyal to Fikret Abdic, a former businessman seeking to create a ministate in the predominantly Muslim Bihać region.

A rebel commander was killed and most of his troops surrendered to government forces in the town of Pecigrad. About 100 rebel troops were holed up in a castle there, said U.N. spokesman Maj. Dacre Holloway.

The government said Bihać town authorities had filed war crimes charges against Abdic. He was accused of ordering troops to attack civilians, mistreat prisoners of war and destroy cultural monuments.

ABUSE

had to go to a policy where we are prepared to seek a contempt citation against a victim who dishonors a subpoena," White said.

But Cris Kinkead, director of the Domestic Violence Intervention Program, said a subpoena does not make a woman who has been battered safe. "If it's not safe for her to testify, she's not going to testify. I think it's revictimizing the victim of a crime."

"We need to look at the law. As the law in Iowa stands now, she is needed to testify," she said. "We need to find a way to do that in our judicial system so they can prosecute without her on the stand."

White said he would not support legislation taking the victim out of a domestic abuse trial because they would be less successful in prosecuting offenders and because subpoenas are intended to serve the same purpose.

"There are going to be some cases where you can prosecute without the victim, but the vast majority of them you will have to have the victim's testimony," White said. "We need to devise techniques to try to prepare to do these cases without the victim for when it happens, but juries want to hear from the victim. The conviction rate without the victims is going to be pretty small."

However, Kinkead said the bottom line should be the victim's welfare.

"First and foremost, we need to look at the safety level. Lots of times a no contact order just doesn't cut it and she knows if she's safe or not."

How to ensure safety
Regardless, no-contact orders are the safety solution the justice system has decided to pursue.

Along with the mandatory arrest law that went into effect in 1986 came the mandate that judges be required to enter a no-contact order if they find the individual to be a threat to the victim, White said. In the majority of circumstances, a no-contact order is entered.

Sandy Bucher, victim witness coordinator at the Johnson County attorney's office, said 102 domestic abuse cases were filed in the year ending June 30, 1994. In all 102 cases, the judge issued no-contact orders to the offenders.

A no-contact order is a court order signed by a judge designed to protect a victim from an abusive partner. If the victim contacts the police when a no-contact order has been violated, the police may arrest the abuser on the spot.

If the victim has a civil no-contact order rather than a criminal no-contact order, the court must be notified first and then the court would notify the police department.

An addendum to the stalking law enacted July 1, 1994 also makes it possible to renew a no-contact order for one year annually for as long as a person fears contact from an offender, White said.

The new stalking law punishes personal contact with the intent to threaten or intimidate. Neither physical contact nor a specific threat of bodily injury is required to be considered stalking. Previously, only harassment by phone or in writing was covered under the law.

Botched bombing kills 7 in Lebanon

Edmond Shedid
Associated Press

DEIR ZAHRANI, Lebanon — An Israeli jet bombed a two-story house in a Lebanese village Thursday, killing seven civilians, including two children, and wounding 13, security sources said. Israel said the attack was a mistake.

The building in the Shiite Muslim village was destroyed when a jet fired a missile into it. The casualties were among three families living there.

"A house in Deir Zahrani was struck by error by a bomb that missed its target," the Israeli military said in a statement. "Innocent people aren't targeted for attack," it said, and expressed "apologies for the losses."

The attack on Deir Zahrani followed two raids on a base in southern Lebanon of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, which Israel has blamed for recent bombings of Jewish and Israeli targets in Latin America and Britain.

The attacks heightened tensions as Secretary of State Warren Christopher prepared to visit the Middle East this weekend to promote Israeli-Syrian talks.

The first raid began when four fighter-bombers fired four missiles at the Hezbollah base in the village of Ein Bouswar Thursday evening, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

SEX

"The terminology for a man who tends to engage in casual sex is stud, while a woman is a slut — we judge them differently. So it's common sense that there is this difference," she said. "Women are rewarded for using more discretion about sexuality."

Margolin also thought the fear of pregnancy is an important factor in keeping women from having casual sex.

"If a woman gets pregnant and she's not married, she's much more likely to get pressured to take responsibility for the child emotionally and economically," Margolin said. "A woman would be ruined if she got pregnant. Men don't have to worry as much about these things. Women complain that men are not as interested in commitment."

Laurie Haag, acting director of Women's Resource and Action Center, said the findings of the study don't surprise her. University students who have career ambitions worry about getting pregnant.

"It suggests to me that women are being careful about their behavior. Older women get choosier about their relationships," Haag said. "Men don't have as many consequences; they don't have to deal with it in the same way."

John Harvey, a UI psychology professor, said the findings of the study conflict with his experiences as a teacher.

"Students think it's folly. In my classes, there's often debate about this. There seems to be much less of a gap in the willingness to have casual sex than these studies indicate," Harvey said.

Harvey also questioned the use of the term "casual" to describe sexual interaction between individuals.

"It's much more complex for people who engage in it than for people who talk about it," Harvey said. "Is a one night stand casual? I think it may have a strong emotional content."

Harvey said the research needs to be scrutinized because the researchers may be trying to advance their own agenda.

"These findings are consistent with evolutionary psychology. This school of thought holds that there are inherent differences between men and women. The view is getting a lot of heat and it deserves to get a lot of heat — it's downright sexist," he said.

don't think it was from a lack of preparation," the 6-foot-2 senior said. "The coaches and players always do everything they can to be ready."

Hartlieb and Longo agreed that everyone is working hard.

"It falls right in line with the type of players coach (Hayden) Fry recruits which is kids that all have a desire to win," Hartlieb said.

Like a good manager, Longo was secretive about his training methods and did not want to reveal any specifics. However, he did say there are some unique aspects to his program.

"We're doing a lot of different cutting-edge type things that I

Royals run streak to baker's dozen

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Royals beat Oakland 5-2 Thursday and matched the major leagues' longest winning streak in two years with their 13th straight victory.

Felix Jose had three hits and Kevin Appier (7-6), with only one decision in his eight previous starts, pitched a four-hitter. The Athletics lost their sixth straight.

The Royals' streak started July 23 in Detroit and includes a club-record 10 straight wins on a homestand. It's the longest in the major leagues since Atlanta won 13 straight in 1992.

Dodgers 1, Padres 0

LOS ANGELES — Kevin Gross combined with Todd Worrell on a six-hitter and Mike Piazza homered as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the San Diego Padres and moved 2½ games in front of idle San Francisco in the NL West.

Gross (9-7) gave up all six hits in eight innings, struck out four and walked none. He hasn't had a shutout since he pitched a no-hitter against the Giants on Aug. 17, 1992. Worrell pitched a 1-2-3.

Marlins 5, Cubs 1

CHICAGO — Mark Gardner allowed five hits in 7½ innings and Gary Sheffield had three RBI as Florida beat Chicago for its third straight win.

The teams weren't sure they would play until less than an hour before the game started as the Players Association considered moving up their Aug. 12 strike date in response to the owners' refusal to make a pension plan payment.

Gardner (4-4) held the Cubs hitless for 4½ innings in beating Steve Trachsel (9-7), who was activated from the disabled list before the game.

Pirates 5, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Jon Lieber limited Philadelphia to three hits in 7½ innings and Dave Clark drove in two runs as Pittsburgh handed Curt Schilling, last year's NL playoffs MVP, his eighth loss in nine decisions.

Lieber (6-6) struck out six and walked one. Schilling, 16-7 last season, allowed all five runs on 11 hits in 6½ innings.

Cardinals 7, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Bob Tewksbury allowed on five hits and Todd Zeile hit a grand slam as St. Louis ended Montreal's six-game winning streak.

The loss, only the second for the NL East-leading Expos in their last 16 games, ended the Cardinals' losing streak at four.

Tewksbury (12-10), 1-3 with a 9.43 ERA in his previous four starts, retired 10 straight to start his fourth complete game.

Blue Jays 5, Red Sox 2

BOSTON — Joe Carter reached 100 RBI for the sixth straight season and John Olerud knocked in two runs with a groundout as Toronto defeated Boston.

Todd Stottlemyre (6-7) allowed two runs on seven hits in seven innings. He struck out five, fanning the side in the sixth, and walked five.

Astros 6, Rockies 2

HOUSTON — Scott Servais and Craig Biggio drove in two runs apiece and Houston earned its third straight win against its most troublesome foe.

Darryl Kile (8-6) allowed eight hits and two runs in 6½ innings as the Astros won for only the seventh time in 24 games against Colorado. He struck out five, did not walk a batter and retired 13 straight in one stretch.

Yankees 9, Twins 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Bernie Williams had three of New York's season-high eight doubles and Jim Abbott got only his third victory since May 30 as the Yankees won their seventh straight game.

The only runs off Abbott (9-7) in his 5½ innings came on a two-run second-inning homer by Kent Hrbek, who earlier in the day announced he will retire after the season.

Hrbek got a standing ovation before his first at-bat and then sent a 1-1 pitch over the left-field fence. It was only the ninth homer for Hrbek, whose 13th big-league season has been his least productive.

Brewers 5, Orioles 3

MILWAUKEE — Jose Valentin hit a two-run homer and John Jaha had a pair of RBI doubles as the Milwaukee Brewers snapped a three-game losing streak.

Cal Eldred (11-10) won his second straight game, allowing seven hits in 6½ innings. He walked four and struck out five. Mike Fetters pitched the ninth for his 17th save.

Rangers 4, White Sox 1

ARLINGTON, Texas — Brian Bohanon turned in his best start of the season and the Texas Rangers stretched their lead to 4½ games in the AL West with a victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Rusty Greer hit a two-run homer and Jeff Frye and Juan Gonzalez had RBI singles to help the Rangers move within four games of .500 and boost their lead over the Oakland A's.

Robin Ventura went 3-for-4 for the Sox, who saw their lead in the Central cut to a half-game over the Cleveland Indians.

Boston Red Sox John Valentin, left, tags out Toronto Blue Jays' Domingo Cedeno as he attempts to steal second base at Fenway Park in Boston Thursday.

SPORTS QUIZ

Q How many times have Iowa and Missouri played each other in football and which team holds the series lead?

See answer on Page 9.

SportsBriefs

LOCAL

Iowa, Missouri to restart football series in 2005

Iowa and Missouri will meet in football in 2005 ending a 95-year standstill in which the neighboring schools have not played each other on the gridiron. The announcement was made jointly Thursday by Iowa athletic director Bob Bowsby and Joseph Castiglione, Missouri's athletic director.

The schools signed a four-game contract with the initial contest set for Kinnick Stadium Sept. 3, 2005. The remaining three games are slated for Sept. 23, 2006 in Columbia; Sept. 8, 2007 in Iowa City and Sept. 20, 2008 in Columbia.

The all-time series between the two schools began in 1892. The teams played 12 times between 1892 and 1910 with the Tigers holding a 7-5 series edge. All but four of those early contests were played at Missouri.

"It's amazing this series has remained dormant for almost 100 years considering how close the two schools are geographically," he said. "It's still a long way until 2005, but at least we've got it down on paper."

NBA

'Chief' moves into Hornets nest, will take backup role

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Robert Parish, arriving with three NBA championship rings and a pending invitation to the Hall of Fame, insists he doesn't mind taking a backup role with the Charlotte Hornets.

"My ego has been in check for a long time," the nine-time All-Star center of the Boston Celtics said Thursday after signing a multi-year contract with the Hornets.

"I've played with Larry (Bird), Kevin (McHale) and some other great players," Parish said at a news conference at the Charlotte Coliseum. "This isn't about ego. It's about finishing my career out in the best fashion."

"Coming off the bench behind a fine young center like Alonzo Mourning fits my style," said the 7-foot Parish, the NBA's oldest player, who will turn 41 on Aug. 30.

While terms weren't disclosed, published reports said Parish agreed to a two-year deal with an optional third year, and a guarantee of about $5.5 million. That amount would increase to about $7.5 million if Parish plays for three seasons.

Parish will make about $1.9 million the first season and $2.5 million the second season under terms of the verbal agreement, sources told three area newspapers.

"From a business standpoint this is a better situation for me," Parish said. "I won't have to play so many minutes carrying the load in the middle. It's going to be the Alonzo Mourning show."

Parish foresees himself playing about 10 to 15 minutes a game.

BASEBALL

Marino's group interested in buying Pirates

MIAMI (AP) — Dan Marino is ready to try another sport — as an owner.

The Miami Dolphins quarterback said Thursday he's part of a group interested in buying the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The group is led by Larry Lucchino, like Marino a Pittsburgh native.

"He contacted me a couple of months ago and wanted to know if I'd be interested," Marino said. "I said yeah, I would be."

Others identified as being involved with the group include Pittsburgh Penguins owner Howard Baldwin and John Rigas, chairman of Adelphia Communications.

Marino, 32, declined to say what percentage of the team he would own.

Athletes' graduation rates a concern for UI

Liza Roche
The Daily Iowan

Despite several years of progress, black male student athletes at the UI continue to graduate at a considerably lower rate than their white peers, according to the NCAA News.

Only 42 percent of black male athletes who enrolled at the UI in 1987 have graduated, according to a study in the July NCAA News, compared to 68 percent of white male athletes in the same time period. The average for all UI students is 62.2 percent.

This comes eight years after the heightened academic standards for entering freshmen that were introduced with Proposition 48 — standards the UI even exceeds.

"This has been a concern for a long time," said Fred Mims, associate director of men's intercollegiate athletics.

Mims said the university has tried several routes to increase graduation rates among black male athletes, including focus groups between faculty and students.

Overall, UI student athletes are graduating within six years at 66.7 percent — more than 9 percent higher than the national average — yet graduation rates for blacks at the UI are less consistent.

Currently the UI is ranked fourth among Big Ten schools in graduation rates of student athletes. Northwestern is at the top with 84 percent of their student athletes graduating within six years; Michigan State and Minnesota take up the rear at only 52 percent each.

Meanwhile, debate for proposition 48 and its August 1995 predecessor, Proposition 16, is keeping them in the boiling pot as officials grapple with the knowledge that minority athletes and those from lower socioeconomic standards are still not graduating from American universities at the same rate as their athletic peers.

The rules applied in 1986 were hoped, in part, to raise graduation rates of black athletes closer to the average. Black male freshmen entering NCAA schools in 1987 graduated within six years at 43 percent, compared to 34 percent prior to the new standards.

Carol Gruber, director of student services in women's intercollegiate athletics, said the UI numbers are consistently higher than the national average because of the UI's affiliation with the Big Ten, which enforces higher standards than the NCAA.

"The requirements at the UI are relatively steep," Gruber said. "If they meet our requirements, 99.9 percent of the time they will meet NCAA requirements, too."

Gruber said the debate boils down to whether socioeconomically disadvantaged athletes will be able to enroll with the current and future standards. Academic standards are necessary, she said, but she is not sure if the current standards are the most fair for everyone.

She said she is concerned that the current standards, which revolve around completion of high-school core courses, grade-point average and standardized tests, are not fair to students who went to inferior high schools.

"We have to be extremely careful that we don't stop them from getting a quality education because of something possibly biased like a test score," she said. "We want to make sure academic standards are accurate and challenging and yet make sure they won't keep diverse people from getting a quality education."

Academics vs. athletics
The bottom line is that Big Ten schools have seen an overall drop in the graduation rates of their student athletes since the beginnings of proposition 48, and the UI is one of only three Big Ten schools to see

DREAM TEAM II

U.S. win leaves hint of doubt

Bill Barnard
Associated Press

HAMILTON, Ontario — The question before the 1994 World Championship of Basketball started was whether Dream Team II could beat the original Dream Team that won the 1992 Olympics.

When the U.S. team trailed late in the first half Thursday night, the question was whether it could beat Spain, fifth in the European championships and a 41-point loser to Dream Team I in the Olympics.

Dream Team II went on to win its first-round, Pool A game 115-100 behind the outside shooting of Joe Dumars and Reggie Miller. But the ease with which Spain scored on the Americans leaves some doubt about how the heavy gold medal favorites will fare the rest of the 11-day tournament.

Dumars scored 21 points and Miller had 20 for the Americans, who pulled away in the second half as Spanish coach Manuel Sainz benched several of the players who did so well in the first 20 minutes.

Dumars, the only U.S. team member with an NBA championship ring, scored 12 points in the first 10:07. When his 3-pointer with 9:53 left in the first half gave the United States a 34-22 advantage, the Americans looked unstoppable.

But for the next four minutes, the Spaniards dominated, outscoring the U.S. team 20-7 for a 42-41 edge with 5:26 left. Backup forward Alberto Herreros scored eight of his 11 first-half points in the run, including a shocking 3-pointer that put Spain ahead.

The slim advantage lasted just six seconds, however, as Kevin Johnson converted a three-point play that put the United States ahead to stay. Johnson's free throw with 3:7 seconds left made it 59-51 at halftime.

The original Dream Team, led by Michael Jordan, Magic Johnson and Charles Barkley, had one brief first-half scare at the Olympics, trailing Croatia 25-23 with 9:44 left in the gold-medal game. The Americans went on to win that game by 32.

Spain trailed just 62-55 early in the second half before the Americans pulled away with a 16-0 run capped by two 3-pointers from Miller and one by Dumars, who had three 3s in the second half.

The burst gave Dream Team II a 78-55 lead with 14:10 left, and it went on to lead 99-74 before Spain closed to 110-98 with 2:37 left behind Jordi Villacampa, who scored 23 of his 28 points in the second half.

Juan Antonio Oranga 14 points for Spain. Herreros did not play in the second half, nor did Ferran Martinez, who had 10 first-half points.

In Thursday's other Pool A game, Brazil played China at night.

In Pool B, Croatia beat Cuba 85-65 as Dino Radja of the Boston Celtics had 25 points and eight rebounds.

Associated Press

USA center Shaquille O'Neal towers over two Spain defenders as he takes an outside shot in the first half during the World Championships at the Copsps Coliseum in Hamilton, Canada Thursday. In its first game, the U.S. team defeated Spain 115-100.

IOWA PRESEASON

Football more than four-month season

Pat Regan
The Daily Iowan

It's out of season and the coaches aren't there to oversee and analyze every move, but 55 to 65 UI students spend over three hours a day, five days a week sweating it out.

They are members of the Iowa football team and the majority of them stay in Iowa City during the summer to train under the tutelage of strength and conditioning coach Paul Longo.

"The summer is really the foundation of your season," Longo said. "No longer can you come into camp like in the old days and try to work yourself into shape. You've got to be in great shape when you come into camp, and you've got to use the off-season to improve and compete at this level. If you're not doing these things, you can bet other people are."

Longo and the football coaches analyze what areas each athlete needs to work on during the summer months and a training program and manual is devised for every player based on those needs. NCAA restrictions mandate that any summer training program must be a voluntary one; therefore, some players go home to train during the summer. The NCAA also prohibits football drills from being part of an off-season training program.

Linebacker John Hartlieb said Longo's program has been successful.

"(The weight and conditioning staff) have pushed us extremely hard this summer both in the weight room and on the workout field," Hartlieb said. "I think we've taken it upon ourselves to make up for a lot of disappointments last year."

The Hawkeyes finished eighth in the Big Ten Conference last season with a 6-6 overall record. Hartlieb said the teams' recent performance has not been indicative of their off-season effort.

"Although the results haven't shown it the last couple years, I

TWIN RETIREMENT

Injuries hamper Hrbek

MINNEAPOLIS — Kent Hrbek grew up near old Met Stadium and, he says, bleeds Minnesota Twins red, white and blue.

No longer able to wear his uniform proudly, the big first baseman announced Thursday that he will retire at the end of the season.

"I feel I can still hit. The problem is getting there after I hit it," said Hrbek, who has battled several injuries the last five years.

"Hitting the ball off the wall and not being able to make it to second base, I don't like that. And I can't play first base like I used to. It's not that I really wanted to, but I think I had to. I wasn't doing the job."
