Capitol security doubted after crash

how the pilot got through. Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, who oversees the Secret Service, said the review also would look at the adequacy of procedures to protect the president and first family.

"We take this incident seriously," Clinton said, "because the White House is the people's house, and it's the job of every president who lives here to keep it safe and secure."

White House security was immediately tightened. Pennsylvania Avenue, which Clinton has been crossing each day between Blair House and the White House, was closed for most of the day.

No shots were fired at the incoming plane, and security agents spotted it only at the last second, with just "enough time to run for cover," Secret Service spokesman Carl Meyer said. "I don't think there was all that much time, to be quite honest with you."

One witness said the plane was silent as it went over the fence, as if its engines had died or been turned off. It flew that way for several hundred yards before hitting the lawn.

It was the worst breach of White House security since 1976, when a man tried to ram a beat-up pickup through the White House gate. He was stopped by the steel bars. Two years earlier, an Army private stole a helicopter and landed it on the White House South Lawn. The soldier was hit by shotgun fire.

"This has been quite an unusual day here at the White House," Hillary Rodham Clinton told a group of guests. Before the wreckage was carted off, she was seen peering at it from a balcony.

Relatives said the 38-year-old pilot was distraught over the death of his father and the breakup of his marriage.

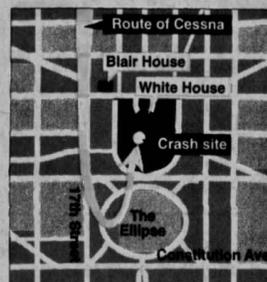

One relative said Corder had never been in trouble with police and had no strong political beliefs. The Secret Service said he had a history of mental illness but also said that could include drug and alcohol problems.

The Secret Service refused to speculate on a possible motive but said Corder's intrusion "does not appear to be directed toward the president." No bombs or weapons were found in the wreckage, the agency said.

The Secret Service said it was looking into whether there was any connection between the president's trip Sunday to Aberdeen Proving Ground and his mention of the nearby Perry Point Veterans Hospital, where Corder once underwent alcohol detoxification treatment.

Coralville motel peephole case sent to jury

Closing arguments were given Monday by Coralville hotel owners being sued for invasion of privacy and the Indiana couple who found that their room's mirror had peepholes.

Norman and Elizabeth Meintel sued the Westfield Inn, Coralville, after reading about a similar case in 1992. Although the Meintels' incident occurred in 1990, they brought court action because Iowa has no criminal law in such a case.

The mirror functioned as a kind of window from a storage room of the hotel's maintenance manager, Tom Robbins. The Meintels charge that Robbins knew of the mirror months before the inn's owners did.

The Kineth Hotel Corp., which owns the Westfield Inn, has a net worth of $759,460. If found guilty, it will be liable for compensatory and punitive damages.

Jury deliberations began Monday after closing arguments.

Political party reform touted by Perot

ATLANTA (AP) — Former presidential candidate Ross Perot said Monday he has given up hope of establishing a viable third party and is pushing for reforms in the Republican and Democratic parties.

"If you built a new political party, it would take several years. We don't have several years," Perot said in a conference call with reporters on the eve of a visit with supporters at Georgia Tech.

Perot said the rally is not meant to signal his interest in a 1996 bid for president but to bolster his United We Stand organization's effort to influence the November congressional elections.

"It has nothing to do with '96," Perot said. "It has everything to do with '94."

He said United We Stand is targeting congressional candidates who promote big government and complained that many candidates who ran as reformers in 1992 have failed voters.

slammed down on the South Lawn and cartwheeled against the mansion two floors below President Clinton's private quarters.

The pilot, killed in the crash, was identified as Maryland truck driver Frank Corder, said to have a history of mental illness. Clinton and his family were not in the White House when the small, single-engine plane hit at 1:49 a.m. They were staying in a government guest house across the street because of White House repairs.

The Secret Service launched an immediate review of whether security procedures were followed and 2,000 people gathered at lunchtime to mourn the victims of USAir Flight 427.

"Maybe God will give me some answers to what happened," said Pam Kastelmeyer, whose neighbor's daughter was among 132 people killed when the jet crashed Thursday in a wooded ravine.

Some of the victims' loved ones remained stoic through several prayers, but they broke down and sobbed when a priest read the names of the dead. A wreath adorned with red carnations and tiny white flowers stood alone in front of a stage set up on Market Square, in the city's business district.

About 20 miles away at the crash site, investigators continued their search for clues.

Carl Vogt, a member of the National Transportation Safety Board, told reporters Monday night investigators are using a computer model of the plane to test three possible scenarios they think may have caused the crash.

One scenario is that the right engine of the Boeing 737-300 inadvertently went into reverse before the plane nose-dived six miles short of Pittsburgh International Airport. A flight crew reported problems with the engine's thrust reverser 2 1/2 months ago.

Another scenario is that the right engine came loose from its position near the wing. The right engine's rear mount has not been found, although the forward mount has been located.

The third possibility is that air-brakes on the wings, which help control the plane's direction, may have deployed improperly.

Investigators believe something caused the plane's right wing to rise, which in turn caused the plane to drop to the left, Vogt said.

"We want to examine everything that might have caused the right wing to rise," he said. ABC reported Monday night that Boeing and the Federal Aviation Administration knew that the thrust reverser systems on 737s could be dangerous.

Iowa Poll ranks I.C. tops in geniality

"Piss off" was how one Iowa City resident responded to the town being ranked Iowa's friendliest city in a recent poll.

Iowa City ranked a 3.9 on the "urban hostility index," a rating scale used to rate Iowa's largest cities from one to 10. The Iowa Poll, conducted by The Des Moines Register July 16-21, used a rating of one on the scale as the least hostile, 5.5 as neutral and 10 as the most hostile.

Some residents may dislike the sickly sweet, cheery atmosphere, but others think the harmony in Iowa City is standard for this region.

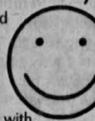

"This is the Midwest — it just has soul," Iowa City resident Jason Pace said.

The Register formulated the in-state survey and scientifically selected 811 residents to rate Iowa's largest cities after Des Moines was divested of its smile

DISCUSSION TO BE HELD TONIGHT

AIDS-afflicted kids to speak at forum

Sheba Wheeler
The Daily Iowan

Camp Heartland is determined to provide children with HIV and AIDS an opportunity to regain their childhood in a supportive environment free of ignorance and discrimination.

Seven camp representatives between the ages of 11 and 20 will have an opportunity to heighten AIDS awareness by candidly disclosing how AIDS has impacted their lives in a public presentation tonight at 7 in the Main Lounge of the Union.

Camp Heartland, which has locations in Wisconsin and New Jersey, is asking for a $2 donation at the door.

Campers like 11-year-old Jonathan Swain, an HIV-positive boy from Des Moines, think the directors are doing a great job. Swain said that besides riding horses, one of the best things about Camp Heartland was not having to answer questions about medication.

POLICE SEARCH FOR SUSPECT

Irate man fires shotgun at party

Tom Schoenberg
The Daily Iowan

The party continued Friday night even after a disgruntled partygoer thrown out for trying to steal the beer tapper returned with a loaded shotgun.

No one was injured, and police are searching for the man, described as 5 feet 10 inches tall with short black hair, who drove away after a shotgun blast ripped through a doorframe at 316 E. Davenport St.

Eyewitness Troy Eustice said he was sitting on the stairs inside the house at around 1:30 a.m. when a man armed with a shotgun walked in through the front entrance and yelled that he had returned.

"I had heard earlier that this guy had been kicked out for trying to steal the tapper," Eustice said. "The next thing I knew, two guys had jumped on him and were yelling, 'Drop the gun.'"

Eustice said that sometime during the struggle, the shotgun was fired.

"I thought at first that the gun wasn't loaded," he said. "It really freaks me out that it was."

Another partygoer, UI sophomore Molly Rutten, said she was in the backyard when the gun went off.

"I heard the shot go off, but I thought it was a car backfiring," Rutten said. "A gun being fired was the last thing I ever expected to have happen at a party in Iowa City."

Partygoers tried to restrain the suspect, but he broke free and escaped in his car.

"People were trying to hold him down, but he jumped up and ran down the street," Eustice said.

Police arrived at the scene at 1:56 a.m. and found the shotgun, along with five shotgun shells. Iowa City police Sgt. Craig Lihs said the incident is still under investigation.

"We're still looking for witnesses to find out what exactly happened," he said.

Rutten said that although some of the 75 guests were disturbed by the incident, others were unfazed.

"The thing which scares me the most is that the party did not stop," she said. "Even though police were walking through the house collecting evidence, it wasn't even brought up that we should go home."

Law professor crusades for rights of natives

Karin Wahl-Jorgensen
The Daily Iowan

Motivated by his Native American ancestry, UI law Professor Stephen Anaya works for the rights of indigenous peoples around the world and has become a leading authority in that area.

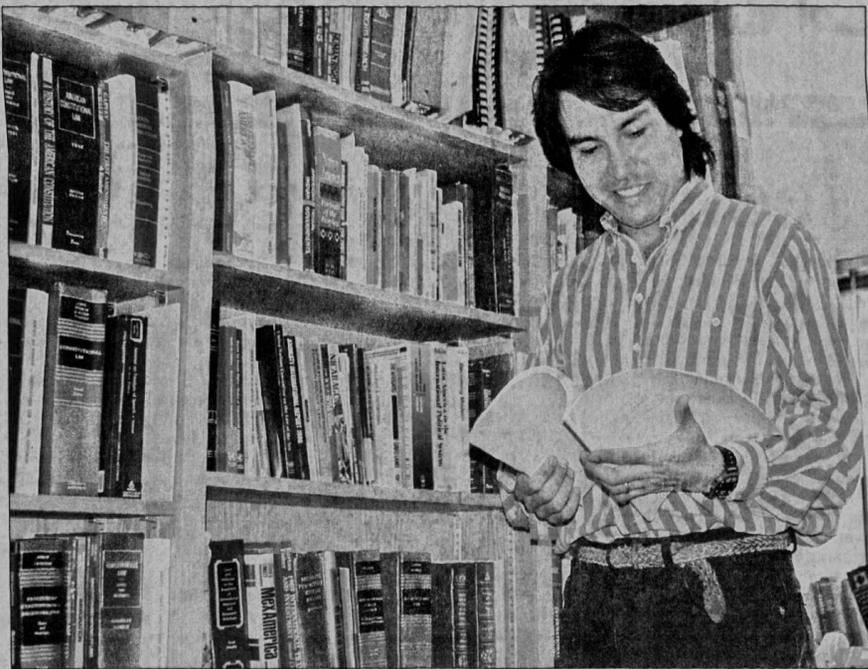

DAY IN THE LIFE

Most recently, he helped a group of native Nicaraguans gain economic independence through a land agreement with the Nicaraguan government and a Dominican timber firm.

"The purpose of the agreement is to ensure a just portion of economic development benefits goes to the Indian community," Anaya said. "Such an agreement is moving them toward economic sustainability, self-determination and control over their own resources. It's not simply their selling the trees and saying, 'Come here and take it.'"

Native peoples have historically been victims of pressure and exploitation from commercial firms, Anaya said.

"The indigenous communities have reasons to be suspicious of outsiders," he said. "They've been taken advantage of, and their lands have not been respected. Timber companies acted as if there were no indigenous lands."

The group of Sumos from Nicaragua that Anaya worked with — an isolated group of 1,800 people — is vulnerable to pressure from commercial groups because it is not used to interaction with the larger society, he said.

"It's new for the Indians to have themselves represented," Anaya said. "Every decision we made was at the direction of the indigenous community."

Originally from New Mexico, Anaya got his undergraduate degree in economics and political science at the University of New Mexico. After obtaining his law degree from Harvard University, he began working at an Albuquerque law firm specializing in federal Native American law.

"It wasn't until my third year in law school that I decided that I wanted to apply my legal skills to the area," he said. "I clerked with big-city firms and had gotten a sense of what that kind of law practice would be like. It convinced me that I wanted to work in a field I was truly interested in and had views about. Being able to pursue my interest through law is a privileged situation."

Currently, Anaya is working on a book, "Indigenous Peoples in International Law," and is teaching a seminar titled Indigenous Peoples in the International Legal System.

In the seminar, students are developing a United Nations declaration of the rights of indigenous peoples, he said.

Anaya said he is optimistic about the future of indigenous peoples and welcomes programs such as the UI's American Indian and Native Studies Program.

He said significant measures have been taken in the past 20 years to improve the conditions of American Indians.

"Their voices are heard for the first time in history through media, courts and forums," Anaya said. "International awareness has been created, and the United Nations is taking clear initiatives."

Kerrigan ponders motivation behind clubbing attack

BOSTON (AP) — Nancy Kerrigan has no doubt whodunit. She just wonders why.

Kerrigan

Kerrigan told The Boston Sunday Globe that she's sure Tonya Harding was involved in the clubbing attack that nearly cost her a trip to the Olympics.

"I would like to know how she could do it, but I don't think there's an answer," said Kerrigan, who won a silver medal. "How could anyone do violence to someone? I think she needs help in her head."

Four people, including Harding's ex-husband, were sentenced to prison for their part in the Jan. 6 attack. Harding pleaded guilty to conspiracy to hinder prosecution but was not given a prison sentence.

Kerrigan said she has spoken to Harding only once since the attack, in the Olympic village in Norway.

"She was standing right there in front of me," Kerrigan said. "I just said, 'Hi. It's been a tough month for us, huh?' And she said, 'Yes.' And I said, 'I have to get ready.'"

Watching Agassi was difficult for Shields

NEW YORK (AP) — If you think Andre Agassi had a hard time winning the U.S. Open, you should have seen Brooke Shields try to watch it.

"It was very difficult, actually," she said Sunday after Agassi, her boyfriend, was crowned champ. "It's a lot more difficult than I have ever anticipated, but I promised everybody in the group I would get better, that I would breathe. I wasn't breathing at all in the beginning, and now I'm starting to breathe."

Emmy win provides revenge for Letterman

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — David Letterman made sure he didn't leave anyone out of his Emmy acceptance speech.

"Thanks to anybody drawing breath right now," Letterman said Sunday, holding up the trophy he won for best variety, music or comedy series.

Letterman's Emmy victory was a measure of revenge. Among others, he beat out NBC's "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno." Letterman left NBC after Leno was chosen instead of him to replace Johnny Carson.

And what is the secret of his success?

"I have very little to do with the show," Letterman said. "Every day about 5, after my manicure, I put on a suit and go to work. The success that we've enjoyed the first year is all credit to staff members and crew and some of the people you see standing behind me."

The model whose eyebrows have launched a thousand ads said she was proud of the way Agassi stood up to the pressure of the Grand Slam event.

"He handled Shields himself like a real gentleman," she said. "I would have cracked under the pressure, and yet he managed to maintain his sense of humor and his respect for all those lucky enough to be around him."

Spielberg changes mind about sequels

NEW YORK (AP) — Steven Spielberg appears to have overcome his disdain for sequels.

The director, who once called sequels a "cheap carny trick," plans to follow up his blockbuster "Jurassic Park" in 1997, according to Forbes magazine.

"It's not so precious to me, and I'm not so personal about 'Jurassic Park' that I have any reason not to give the audience what they want," Spielberg said.

Winfrey applauded for 25K run

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Oprah Winfrey got cheers for finishing a 15.5-mile run in hot, humid weather in a respectable 2 1/2 hours.

The 40-year-old talk show host limped slightly as she walked off the effects of Sunday's City of Lakes 25K.

Winfrey

"This took a toll. Even though I am getting into this running thing, the conditions today were difficult," she said. Humidity was high, and temperatures were in the 70s.

Judge gives go-ahead for Elizabeth Taylor miniseries

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A judge refused to block the broadcast of a miniseries on Elizabeth Taylor, ruling NBC had a First Amendment right to show it.

Taylor had argued that the miniseries, based on an unreleased book by C. David Heymann, is inaccurate and an invasion of privacy.

Among other things, the book contends Taylor was beaten by husbands Mike Todd, Nicky Hilton and Richard Burton.

Superior Court Judge Diane Wayne said the series can be broadcast but that Taylor can seek damages later. The judge gave Neil Papiano, Taylor's attorney, the opportunity to argue again for an injunction Sept. 28.

CONDOM USE RECOMMENDED

Increase of gonorrhea cases reported by health officials

Devon Alexander
The Daily Iowan

Iowa City is reflecting the 13.6 percent national rise in gonorrhea cases this year found by a national Centers for Disease Control survey, local clinic directors say.

"Although it isn't an epidemic, there has been a rise in cases of gonorrhea, according to our preliminary statistics," said Michelle Bonds, director of public affairs for the CDC.

Gayle Sand, associate director of the Emma Goldman Clinic for Women, 227 N. Dubuque St., said gonorrhea and chlamydia cases are dangerous and on the rise in Iowa City. Unfortunately, the disease exhibits few symptoms in men and almost none in women.

Some of the symptoms include yellow discharge from the genital area, burning sensation during urination and, in women, pelvic inflammation. Sand said that symptoms can appear as soon as 48 hours after infection.

Gonorrhea has serious complications for men and women. Infertility, scarring in the genitals, brain damage and blindness are possible if the disease is left unchecked.

Bond said each state is funded by the CDC to provide outreach and treatment for sexually transmitted diseases (STDs). Gonorrhea is detected by swab testing the infected area and is treatable if discovered.

The standard cure for gonorrhea is penicillin, says Mary Jo Gagan, a nurse practitioner at Planned Parenthood of Greater Iowa, 2 S. Linn St., but there are strains of

"Safe sex is important in a secure, responsible relationship. Some people think that they're immune to everything."

Kesha Bruce, UI sophomore

the disease which are penicillin-resistant. These strains can be treated with a drug called Ofloxacin, said Gagan.

Both Gagan and Sand said gonorrhea is preventable if the proper precautions are used.

Using condoms with the spermicide Nonoxynol-9 is a recommended method to combat the disease, but Sand said that using contraceptive sponges in addition to condoms is an even better protection.

Peggy Clarke, president of the American Social Health Association, said women who take birth control pills often mistakenly believe that they are protected.

"One of the things that we do when a woman chooses the pill is emphasize that it does nothing against STDs," Sand said.

A 1991 UI study on sexual health said two out of five students had had more than one partner in the last year. Of these, only one in 10 said they always used a condom.

Reasons for nonuse included condoms being perceived as unnecessary or as decreasing pleasure, and that using a condom wasn't discussed between partners, the study found.

Despite the rise in gonorrhea cases, not all UI students are in the dark. UI junior Dave Blaha said he uses a combination of precautions as well as remaining monogamous.

"Birth control is our main concern, but if I were just out screwing around, I'd be even more careful," Blaha said.

Kesha Bruce, a UI sophomore, said that sex should always be safe.

"Safe sex is important in a secure, responsible relationship. Some people think that they're immune to everything," Bruce said.

INCREASED RECOGNITION DESIRED

Service office assists students in probing perplexing problems

Tom Schoenberg
The Daily Iowan

Use of the office of the ombudsperson is up by 34 percent this year, ombudsperson Maile-Gene Sagen said, but the office is still unknown to many. Lack of advertising last year kept the caseload to 328 at the office, which was started 11 years ago to give students, faculty and staff a confidential, independent problem-solving system.

"We're slowly getting the word out through publicity," Sagen said. "We've put posters on the Cam buses and in the dorms."

With a staff of one full-time ombudsperson — Sagen — and one part-time ombudsperson, Nancy Hauserman, an associate professor in the College of Business Administration, the office listens to everything from professor complaints to insurance dilemmas.

"People can get lost at a big university, and our notion is to make sure people have a safe place to go and talk confidentially," Hauserman said.

Sagen and Hauserman said they encourage people to approach the problem at the source.

"We try to get to the root of the problem by talking to professors, deans, employers or anyone else associated with the problem," Hauserman said. "Our purpose is not to assume responsibility for other people but to help people figure out how to work within the system, or sometimes around it."

Hauserman said many problems stem from miscommunication between two people.

"We realize that there are two sides to every story," she said. "When contacted, many people said they were unaware that there was a problem."

Students having problems with professors should call the office early in the semester, Hauserman advised.

"It's much harder to change things after an exam or grade has been given," she said. "It also diminishes the strength of the appeal if action is taken after the semester."

Although the ombudspersons hear many minor complaints, they also deal with major issues, such as harassment.

"If people feel they are being harassed, then they can talk to us and we'll make a record of it and tell them their options," she said. "Harassment is a hard thing for students to handle, which makes them very vulnerable to it."

Hauserman said that although the ombudspersons are employed by the UI (the office disburses $70,000 a year in personnel salaries), they are an independent entity.

"We're not an arm of the administration in a negative way," she said. "We're not solving problems the way someone higher up in the administration would like us to."

The ombudspersons produce yearly reports analyzing situations they have dealt with so that the UI can see recurring problems.

Problems noted in the 1994 report were faculty plagiarism of students' work, deteriorating relationships between professors and students, sexual harassment and lack of procedural uniformity between the various colleges.

Some students who are aware of the office of the ombudsperson said they would only use the system under extreme circumstances.

"If there was a severe problem which I thought was out of my hands, then I would use the system," UI sophomore Tricia Musel said. "Normally, if I had a problem, I would try to go to the source directly instead of someone else."

UI junior Doug Larson said if students knew how much the UI spends on the office, it would be enough to get them to use it.

"If more people knew of them and how much they're getting paid, then the amount of cases would go up," he said.

Hauserman stressed the availability of the system for many situations. She said the office is not a counseling center, but it does refer people to psychologists.

"If you feel there's nowhere you can go, then call our office," Hauserman said.

The ombudsperson is an advertised position open to all faculty and staff. A committee composed of UI staff and students reviews applications and submits a short list of candidates to UI President Hunter Rawlings.

Rawlings then appoints an ombudsperson from the list who serves a designated term, usually four years. Hauserman was appointed in June 1993 and Sagen in May 1990.

The office of the ombudsperson is located in room C108 of Seashore Hall and is open Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The phone number is 335-3608.

SEARCHERS RECOVER MISSING MATERIAL

UI library plagued by lost books

Amy Biederman
The Daily Iowan

Locating a misplaced book in the UI Main Library can be like searching for a needle in a haystack.

Home to 1.8 million books, 955,000 periodicals and more than 3 million microforms, the building's nooks and crannies can hide books from even the sharpest eye.

Popular books, such as those about sex, are the most commonly misplaced, said Susan Marks, coordinator of access services at the library.

Not only do staffers work daily to keep books in the correct order and on the right shelves, but the library also has a full-time "searcher," she said.

"Sometimes books can sit in the wrong place for a long time," said Edward Shreeves, director of collection management and development of UI libraries.

Searcher Kim Carr spends most of her time at work hunting for books no one else can find. Carr said she knows a few tricks that give her an edge over the average library user.

Before beginning a search, Carr said, she asks students if they have looked on the correct floor for the book. She then confirms the book's call number and checks to see if the book has been moved to a new section. If it's a new book, it may still be in the cataloging or marking department, she said.

All books are kept on file in OASIS, the library's on-line system, Shreeves said.

A recently returned book may be available for check-out but not yet on the shelf, Carr said.

When Carr begins the actual book hunt, she looks above and below the book's correct slot on the shelf and behind, where books can sometimes fall. She also turns call numbers around to adjust for a library user's dyslexic slips and checks those shelves.

For example, Carr said, if a book's call number begins with PN but is not on the shelf, she'll turn the letters around to NP and look in that spot.

"I just go by hunches," Carr said. "More often than not, I find it right where it's supposed to be."

Books purposely hidden by students are the most difficult to find, Marks said. Such mischief occurs with illicit materials or when a particular book is assigned for a paper or project, which is why teachers are encouraged to use the reserve book room, she said.

If Carr's sleuthing instincts run dry, she marks the book missing, checking again in two weeks and then again in 18 months. If a book is still lost, a decision is made on whether to replace it, she said.

"We have 57 books not recovered since a search for them in February 1993," Carr said.

Unpopular or older books are not usually plagued with such misplacement, Marks said. Books in the general stacks with check-out dates as early as 1915, the '20s and the '30s still sit on the shelves, she said.

The chance that a missing book was removed from the library because of its old age or unpopularity is minimal, Shreeves said.

The decision to remove a book permanently from the shelves is not based on its check-out rate, he said.

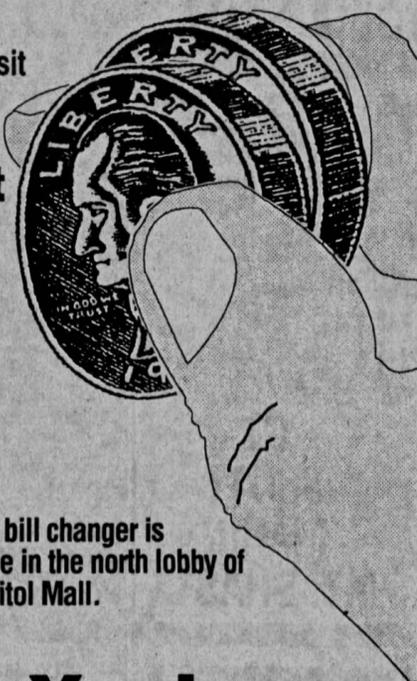

"A research library tends to not get rid of books, even if something is not heavily used," Shreeves said.

The removal of a book primarily occurs upon its physical death — when it becomes so fragile that it cannot be used, Shreeves said. Extra copies of books that were once popular are also removed.

Unusable books are recycled if possible, while others are sold at annual UI library book sales or even sent abroad. For example, books were sent to the National Library of Romania after that country's revolution, Shreeves said.

ELECTION TO BE HELD TODAY

UI staffer challenges incumbents for open school board positions

H. Fields Grenée
The Daily Iowan

Incumbents Al Leff and George Matheson will take on Janice Simmons-Welburn for two Iowa City Community School Board seats which are up for grabs in the election today.

The candidates had an opportunity to voice their concerns and answer questions from the audience last week at a "meet the candidates" forum in the central administration offices.

The top issues were growing enrollment rates, effective financial planning and the police/school liaison project, which is still in the planning stages.

Leff, an investment broker, was elected to the board in 1988 and is seeking a third term. He is encouraged by the fact that more than two candidates are running but said he would like to see more choices for voters.

"We're going to need continued community input to face major discussions we're going to have as our enrollments increase and our space becomes more critical," he said. "I want the public to have that opportunity to participate."

Leff said he decided to run again because there were not enough candidates running for the open seats and he wants to finish what he started.

"I feel a commitment to the district to see that what we have set into motion continues to develop and move forward," he said.

Matheson, a partner in a real estate firm, is running for a second term. A former teacher and coach, he said he brings a different perspective to the board — the ability to empathize with the concerns of parents and teachers — because he has been there.

Matheson received a doctorate in philosophy from Purdue University in counseling, is a parent and has been in private practice for the last 17 years. He said he has lived in Iowa City for about 28 years and has seen the positive changes made by the board.

"The board has made a lot of progress during the last few years," Matheson said. "We have a solid foundation that I would like to build upon."

The community has felt a great deal of satisfaction in the direction the school board has been taking, Matheson said, and it wants to see more of the same.

"We need to keep pushing; we can't just sit back and just be satisfied with what has taken place thus far," he said. "We need to encourage more community participation in all facets of the district and keep working toward building a positive and nourishing environment."

Janice Simmons-Welburn, head of the Information and Instructional Services Department at the UI Main Library, said that serving as a director on Iowa City's school board offers the opportunity to represent the entire community.

"It is important that every child has a chance, and I will use this as the basis for the kinds of tough decisions that the board will face in the next years," Simmons-Welburn said.

There should be constant communication among students, parents and administration, she said.

"I decided to run because my own experiences in education — as a student, a librarian and as a parent — have given me the incentive to join the effort to support quality and innovative schools," Simmons-Welburn said.

She ran for the board during the 1993-94 elections but lost by 202 votes to Sally Staley.

Simmons-Welburn has also held positions on numerous committees including president of the Parent Teacher Association at Horn Elementary School. She is currently a member of the Parents in Education Committee for the Iowa City Community School District.

She said her commitment to meeting the needs of all Iowa City schoolchildren and her dedication to excellence in public education should be the grounds on which she is judged on election day.

BENEFITS OF PROGRAM QUESTIONED

Council nixes police in schools

Sara Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

The proposed "officer liaison program," which would have put an armed police officer in Iowa City junior-high schools, was shot down by the Iowa City City Council Monday night.

A majority of the Council didn't support the program at its informal work session Monday, but the final decision as to whether to have police officers patrol the halls will fall to the school board.

Police Chief R. J. Winkelhake spoke to the Council to promote what he called a public relations and prevention measure. He said police need to get involved with teen-agers early to help prevent them from committing crimes. The program, Winkelhake said, would also help build positive relationships between the students and officers.

Councilors were concerned because officers would be fully uniformed in the schools and carry loaded guns. Winkelhake responded that officers would have to be prepared for a nearby outside emergency or to act if a situation arose in the school.

A majority of the Council didn't support the program at its informal work session Monday, but the final decision as to whether to have police officers patrol the halls will fall to the school board.

Another concern was how the success of the program in other communities could be measured.

"I don't know what we call success," City Councilor Bruno Pigott said. "How do you measure success in something so intangible?"

Councilor Karen Kubby also questioned some aspects of the program. One of her concerns was that the students would shift their perception of authority from the teachers to the police officers. She also said it is prevention by the wrong people.

"When the community is saying the only way to control preventative measures is through officers, it's saying the teachers aren't doing their jobs," she said.

If the proposal is passed by the school board, the Council will discuss how to fund the program.

HUSBAND CONSULTED ABOUT ENDORSEMENT

Grandy's wife favors Campbell

Mike Glover

DES MOINES — Democrat Bonnie Campbell, who has avidly courted supporters of Republican Rep. Fred Grandy, was touting the endorsement of Grandy's biggest backer of all Monday — his wife, Catherine Mann.

At news conferences in Des Moines and Sioux City, Mann bestowed her backing with a mix of praise for Campbell and stinging criticism of GOP Gov. Terry Branstad.

"Terry Branstad, in my opinion, exhibits no principles and the lowest level of politics," Mann said. "Bonnie Campbell, on the other hand, exhibits strong principles and thoughtful politics."

Grandy lost a hard-fought 52 percent to 48 percent election to Branstad in the June primary, but Mann said her decision wasn't sparked by lingering hard feelings from that race.

"I will say sour grapes lasted a little while, but I would hope that I'm over that," she said.

While stressing that the endorsement was hers alone, Mann said she discussed the issue with her husband.

"I would not be standing here talking about this if I had big-time feelings that my husband was a big Branstad supporter," Mann said. "I know he will never endorse Terry Branstad."

Repeated phone calls to Branstad's campaign office seeking comment were not returned. Christina Martin, spokeswoman for the governor's office, said a response was delayed because Branstad was out of the country Monday.

Campbell has focused heavily on Grandy's supporters, speaking with Grandy himself the day after the June 7 primary.

"They were people who had an expectation that change would be a good thing," Campbell said. "They wanted to do business differently in state government."

She touted Mann as "the Grandy backer closest to Fred Grandy, clearly."

GOP REQUESTS CONGRESSIONAL APPROVAL

Associated Press

A Haitian woman, among more than a thousand paramilitary recruits who trained Monday, takes aim behind a bush in a plaza in front of Port-au-Prince's presidential palace.

Additional forces head for Haiti

George Gedda
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Seventeen countries, including three NATO allies, Israel and far-off Bangladesh, have pledged a combined minimum of 1,500 troops to assist a U.S.-led invasion of Haiti, the State Department said Monday.

Meanwhile, Republican leaders said Congress should debate a resolution authorizing the commitment of U.S. forces to an invasion.

Pentagon officials announced that as part of an ongoing buildup, two aircraft carriers are being readied to carry troops and special forces into Haiti should an invasion be ordered.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher said the commitments of the 17 countries give a "strong indication of the resolve of the international community to join us in seeking the restoration of democracy in Haiti."

The administration has been pushing hard to recruit troops to join American forces in liberating Haiti after three years of military dictatorship. Current planning calls for the deployment of about 20,000 U.S. troops.

The 17 countries, some of which had been announced previously, are Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, The Bahamas, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Bolivia, Dominica, Guyana, Israel, Jamaica, The Netherlands, Panama, St. Vincent, Trinidad and the United Kingdom.

The non-U.S. personnel would be sent to Haiti after the initial invasion force — virtually all U.S. personnel — established a "secure environment."

Other officials said the actual contributions of the 17 nations probably will exceed 1,500, mostly military forces and police.

Speaking to reporters at the State Department, Christopher said the administration, in seeking to reinstate deposed President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, is pursuing the same goal sought by President Bush.

Republicans, while favoring that goal, generally have opposed the use of American force to achieve it.

On Monday, a group of Republican leaders sent a letter to House Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash., and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, saying there is "ample time" to debate the Haiti invasion question since the United States and its citizens are not immediately threatened.

Signing the letter were Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan.; Minority Whip Alan Simpson, R-Wyo.; House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill.; and Minority Whip Newt Gingrich, R-Ga.

The Republicans noted that the Bush administration received prior approval for launching Operation Desert Storm to liberate Kuwait from Iraqi invaders.

"President Bush took a risk in coming to Congress, but the U.S. policy was immeasurably strengthened after the congressional votes in support of authorizing force in the Persian Gulf," the Republicans wrote.

They noted that Mitchell and Foley said at the time that Bush was required to seek prior approval.

Gingrich said Monday a U.S.-led invasion of Haiti will cause "revulsion" among Americans.

"He (Clinton) is so far out on a limb I don't see how he can avoid it," Gingrich said at a luncheon with Associated Press reporters and editors.

Sen. Dan Coats, R-Ind., a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said, "It is time, Mr. President, to put an end to gunboat liberalism."

Sen. Judd Gregg, R-N.H., said an invasion would put American lives at risk without the administration "having properly explained to the American people why."

But Christopher said the stakes for the United States include defense of democracy in the hemisphere as well as protection of human rights.

"This government that has overthrown the legitimate government has been repressive in the extreme," Christopher said.

Despite continuing U.S. threats, Christopher said, there is no indication Haiti's leaders are willing to step aside voluntarily.

He said training requirements of the additional troops do not necessarily mean the invasion will be delayed. Announcements of additional contributions are expected in the coming days, he said.

Seeking to defuse criticism that Haiti is a potential quagmire for the United States, Christopher said the U.S. role there is not "nation building," a task he said should be left to Haitians.

ARRANGEMENT OK'D MONDAY

Custody of Simpson kids taken by parents of murdered ex-wife

Associated Press

ORANGE, Calif. — The children of O. J. Simpson and Nicole Brown Simpson were placed in the guardianship of her parents under terms of a petition approved Monday by a judge.

O.J. Simpson didn't contest the arrangement, which makes his former in-laws, Louis Brown and Juditha Brown, legal custodians of the children.

Simpson is scheduled to go on trial Sept. 26 in the murder of his ex-wife and her friend, Ronald Goldman.

Sydney Brooke Simpson, 8, and Justin Ryan Simpson, 6, have been staying with the Browns at their seaside home in Dana Point since the June 12 slayings.

On Aug. 31, Simpson filed court papers agreeing to the Browns' guardianship until he is released from jail.

The change was routinely approved by Orange County Superior Court Judge John Woolley at a "calendar clearing" session of uncontested cases on Monday.

Neither Simpson, the Browns nor the children were at the hearing. Simpson also has two adult children by his first wife.

Meanwhile, Los Angeles County District Attorney Gil Garcetti was questioned on Monday about his office's decision not to seek the death penalty for Simpson.

"I certainly understand the feelings many people have concerning our decision," he said at a news conference announcing the creation of a real estate fraud unit. "But whatever decision I made there was going to be a fire storm of response."

He said he would not discuss the factors that went into the decision until the trial is concluded.

$20,000 CHARGED TO KILL RHINOCEROS

Zoo animals shot in closed hunts

Ronald Powers
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Some of those furry creatures at America's zoos could end up decorating the dens of people who pay big money to bag trophies at hunting ranches, the Humane Society says.

Farms and ranches offering what critics call "canned hunts" are springing up across the country. For zoos, circuses and animal farms, the ranches can provide a convenient and often profitable way to dispose of surplus animals.

For hunters with the cash — price lists quote $350 for a pygmy goat and up to $20,000 for a rhinoceros, the society says — it's a quick and easy way to claim an exotic ornament.

It is illegal to bag a rhinoceros in this country, and the group says it does not have evidence that rhinos or other endangered animals have been killed in canned hunts.

But hunters armed with bows, high-powered rifles and pistols pursue other prey, sometimes in areas as large as hundreds of acres, but other times in enclosures as small as 25 square feet. It's virtually impossible for the animals to escape and most operators guarantee a kill.

"Once the animal's head is on a wall, the hunter can make up some story about traveling to Africa or Asia," said Humane Society spokesman Wayne Pacelle.

Officials of the controlled-hunt industry voice outrage at "caged kills," but they defend hunts of exotic breeds on large, open ranches.

"We're a conservation organization that recognizes that ethical hunting — fair-chase hunting — is an appropriate management tool," said Harvey Hilderbran, head of Exotic Wildlife Association, a Texas-based trade group. The association has some 400 members, about half of whom are involved in this type of hunting.

Michael Winikoff, a Humane Society lawyer and investigator, said hunt outfitters rely largely on breeders for their game but sometimes buy exotic animals born at roadside attractions and large zoos.

According to the society, animals from zoos all across the country, from California's prestigious San Diego Zoo to Washington's National Zoo, have gone to hunting farms.

"The public is interested in seeing cute little animals. Animals don't remain cute and little very long," said Patrick Martin, a New York state biologist who has followed animal trades. "The zoos trade animals, they try to keep the exhibits fresh, but there is always a surplus."

For years, according to the Humane Society, Busch Gardens in Tampa Bay, Fla., has sold gazelles, impalas, zebras and other animals to people involved in hunting.

Officially, the zoo abhors the practice of canned hunts.

But Busch Gardens executive Gerald Lentz acknowledged some of its animals may have ended up on Texas hunting ranches. He said the zoo was investigating.

Victim of circumstance?

There was a vigorous manhunt for 11-year-old Robert "Yummy" Sandifer for the alleged shooting and killing of a 14-year-old Chicago girl. On Wednesday, Sept. 7, Robert was laid to rest. His body was found lying in the mouth of a pedestrian walkway in Chicago. He was killed execution style — shot twice in the head. Two brothers, ages 16 and 14, were charged with first-degree murder in the killing. The elder brother, who allegedly pulled the trigger, is being held on a $5 million bond. Police believe the brothers had orders from higher ranking gang members who thought Robert might implicate them in some way if he was ever taken into custody. In the cycle of death and destruction of mere babies, little "Yummy" became a violent statistic. In the process, four peoples' lives were destroyed: two lives were lost and two futures were disassembled.

Statements have been made that this child deserved what he got because he allegedly killed a 14-year-old girl; some people have said that he was simply a victim of circumstance. Whatever the case, four young lives were ruined, and no one seems to have a good answer for why or what should be done to stop this violence.

Think back to when you were 11. You were probably playing, laughing, riding your bicycle and entering the sixth grade, which is what "Yummy" should have been doing. He walked and talked like an older man, his eyes did not exude childish spirit and there was no regularity of youth in his body. When you were that age, most likely you did not experience these things. For instance, one UI student from the inner city told a story of coming down his apartment stairway and finding a 12-year-old companion on the floor with his heart blown out of his chest.

At 11, you most likely couldn't, if asked, spew out the names of guns you've used. Ask a young inner-city child about guns they often see on the streets and use. They can spit out names faster than you can blink: "Sawed-off shotguns, .22-calibers, Uzis, 9 millimeters, 12-gauges, .45 automatics and .38 longs!" You'll wish you hadn't asked.

At age 11, FBI agents weren't swarming around your neighborhood looking for you, someone you knew or a relative. In Chicago and many other cities, the FBI task force join city police to fight gangs. Another UI student from the inner city gave an example of just how bad the situation is. She told of how one gang had an initiation where if they saw anyone blinking house lights, they would kill them. A family came home innocently flicking their lights on and off as they entered the house, and they were all wiped out — from a baby to the grandparents.

The violence in the inner city continues to escalate. Sometimes you are much safer if you do join a gang. To be able to live in a place like Iowa City would be heaven for these children. You don't have to jump every time someone walks up behind you. When a car backfires, your heart doesn't stop out of worry that you've been shot.

It hurts to hear statements like, "He deserved what he got." Granted, no one has the right to take anyone's life, but every child should have the right to know what it is to live. Robert was one of thousands like him who at age 11 and under kill, sell drugs and are in gangs. These children don't live, they survive. Who is to blame? Robert "Yummy" Sandifer, may you rest.

Tactic was nauseating

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to Jonathan Lyons' article "Real facts about 'real food for real people'" that appeared in the DI. I found the title of the article, "Real facts..." to be misleading for an opinion column. If Lyons intended to present real facts, he did injustice.

I am sure that the Beef Council and Beef Board would be disappointed in Lyons' generalization of their "real food for real people" campaign to be associated with what Lyons terms the "Meat Board." To my knowledge, there is a Beef Board, Pork Board, Turkey Federation, Egg Council, Dairy Council, and the list goes on. These organizations are in competition with one another and would surely be offended by Lyons' generalization. I represent none of these organizations. Rather, I represent the public who have the right to form their own opinions based on the presentation of unbiased facts. As a registered, licensed dietitian I felt a professional obligation to set these facts straight.

Causation, the fact that a disease or other outcome is the direct result of some effect, as defined by epidemiologists, is difficult, if not impossible to prove. "It seems beef is killing a lot of people" and "Red meat is directly linked to heart diseases, strokes and cancer" are strong statements in Lyons' article that would be in question. True is the fact that there are several risk factors associated with these disease states. Of these, diet is only one. The consumption of red meat alone will not cause instantaneous death or even illness. Diets high in fat, especially saturated fats such as tropical oils, palm and coconut oil and animal fats are associated with a greater risk for these diseases. Yet, the total lack of meat in one's diet can potentially be problematic also. Meat provides protein, iron and zinc, as well as other vital minerals and nutrients. Iron deficiency anemia is the most prevalent form of nutritional inadequacy in the U.S. Red meat is the best source of iron and is most readily absorbed by the body. Moderate amounts of lean cuts of meat are appropriate to a healthful diet.

Lyons encourages the reader to consider vegetarianism. There are several reasons individuals may choose vegetarianism — religious, political, economical, personal preference or health reasons. Whatever the reason, I would encourage the vegetarian to consider evaluation of the adequacy of their protein and iron intake. If meat is not part of the diet, alternative sources of protein and iron are essential for proper nutrition.

As for the conclusions and gross generalizations Lyons makes about the meat industry after citing a few extreme cases of poor food handling, he belabors the descriptions as a tactic to play on the readers' emotions. I found this tactic to be more nauseating than the descriptions themselves.

LEA HARAVON

Bite into the joy with all of your teeth

This column is dedicated to the memory of Elena Haravon, who was born on this day in 1905.

I have lots of names. This is because in the Romanian language, people are called by much more than just their given names. My parents and their Romanian friends can reel off nickname after nickname for themselves, each other and their children. My given name, Leslie, quickly became Lesica, Lini, Linica and Leslini, while my sister, Anica, was called Aniti, Anituli, Anitica and so on. It didn't really seem to matter too much what your birth name was — affectionate nicknames were what gave you identity and a sense of belonging.

My grandmother, whose birthday is today, was named Helen, which in Romanian is Elena. After World War II, she moved to France, where she used the French version of her name, Helene. To us, she was always Lenutza (for those of you whose Romanian is a little dusty, this is pronounced "Lenootsa").

Lenutza was the first person with whom I fell in love. I know this sounds strange when talking about one's grandmother, but these are the words that come to me when I think of her. I did not see her often, as we lived in the United States and she lived in France, so perhaps part of the passionate attachment I felt for her was caused by the ocean of distance between us and by the knowledge that our visits would always end with a long separation.

I remember sitting down to write a letter to Lenutza after she left for France. I was about 11 years old. I remember holding the pen in my hand, trying to figure out how to express to her how much I loved and missed her, how to make sure that she would understand how big my heart felt when I thought of her and how empty it was when she was gone. I still remember her words in response to my letter: "I have often received letters from people who liked and loved me, but never a letter like this." This was the first of hundreds of letters we wrote to one another over the next 12 years.

On this, Lenutza's birthday, I can't celebrate with her or write to her, so I write about her.

Fortunately, we both loved to write. I told her about my friends, crushes, books I was reading; she wrote about her housemate, her poker games, her parties, her visits to family in Romania and her job (she played piano for a ballet school). She always had commentary and advice regarding my problems, particularly those of the heart. She apparently had a lot of experience in this area. She mourned with me my unrequited loves and rejoiced with me when I found a new interest to pursue. Lenutza often told me that I was too serious and that I thought too much. Her favorite saying was "Mords dans la vie a pleines dents" (Bite into life with all of your teeth), and from what I could see, she still lived by it.

When I was younger, Lenutza would paint my fingernails, play the piano and teach me poker games. She would tell stories about her childhood, about her boyfriends and about the war. She always brought two small framed pictures of my grandfather with her wherever she went and told me he was the most handsome man in the world. A few years ago, Lenutza had a stroke. She could no longer speak or write, but she could understand others' writing and speech. I went to visit her as soon as I could. We talked together — me with my spoken mix of French, English and Romanian, and she with her nonverbal gestures and her eyes. When there was nothing left to say, I curled up next to her on the hospital bed, listening to her heartbeat and holding her hand. I still remember the paper-thin feel of her skin, which was soft in the way only old people's skin can be. This was our last chance to be together, and we both knew it. There was nothing to do but to savor the feeling of her skin and the sound of her breath.

I still have the first writing I received from Lenutza after her stroke. She had been receiving therapy and had regained minimal use of her hand. On the front of the card was a picture of a ballet dancer, and inside was a short note written with a shaky hand and signed with her name — Elena — misspelled. I keep it and remember that in Romanian, birth names don't mean as much as the affectionate names we give each other.

On this, Lenutza's birthday, I can't celebrate with her or write to her, so I write about her. If she could see me now, I think that she would still say that I am too serious. Perhaps what I need to do for her birthday is to remember her by biting into the joy of today with all of my teeth.

Lea Haravon's column appears Tuesdays on the Viewpoints Pages.

GUEST OPINION • JIM GERARD

Value, don't control, the liberty of others

There have been many editorials and letters in Iowa papers of late on the subject of the radical right feeling they are being ridiculed for their opinions and persecuted for their beliefs. A case in point is a letter in the Aug. 25 Daily Iowan by Don Klotz which, though it is not by far the worst letter of this type I've seen, attempts to pass off statements as reasonable which in fact are not supportable by history.

Yes "love your neighbor" and "do not covet" and "do not murder" and "do not bear false witness" are all fine ethical constructs found in the Bible, but they are all found in more ancient codes as well.

Klotz, as have many of his kind, writes, "Eighty-five percent of Americans believe in a creator." Klotz uses this as supporting evidence of Christianity's monopoly on morality and of the United States being a "Christian nation," and of the latter being a good thing. I must point out that I am a proud, tax-paying U.S. citizen who believes in a creator, but my religion is Wicca so I do not believe in "YaHVeH," nor the mispronounced Jehovah nor Jesus. I don't believe sex is by its very nature a sin (though sex within a power imbalance such as in rape or pornography or with a minor is certainly immoral). I don't believe homosexuality is wrong nor do I believe AIDS is divine judgment against it (any more than polio was a divine judgment against children who swam in public pools in the '30s).

Yes "love your neighbor" and "do not covet" and "do not murder" and "do not bear false witness" are all fine ethical constructs found in the Bible, but they are all found in more ancient codes as well. On the other side of the biblical morality coin are engraved laws such as Numbers 15:32-36, which states that old men caught working on the seventh day of the week are to be killed; Numbers 31:13-18, which says that a victorious army has the legal right to keep all the virgin girls from their defeated enemies for themselves as long as they kill all of the nonvirgin women and all the men and boys; and Deuteronomy 13, which states that members of religions other than one's own should be killed.

It kind of appears to me that modern Christians and Jews do have a moral code, but they pick pieces out of the Bible agreeing with their culturally derived ethics and ignore aspects of that same Bible which are not by any modern standards moral and then they call it "biblical morality."

Take slavery for example. The ancient Hebrews had slaves. The Bible contains many laws governing the keeping of slaves, but there is not one law in the Bible that abolishes slavery. Yet to the vast majority of the modern world, slavery is immoral. This is an example of nonbiblical morality, as is the women's rights movement today as well as other such equality movements.

Another point that needs to be made is to correct the notion that our country is in dire straits because we've distanced ourselves from God's moral laws; as Klotz put it, "cultures have violated these directives to their sorrow." The ancient Egyptians, Greeks, Romans and other even older cultures went on and on for thousands of years before Christianity. While the ancient Hebrews were slaughtering the Canaanites for their desert, the Egyptians were enjoying the fertility of the Nile valley for 4,000 years. But the Canaanites were the only people weak enough for Moses' army to steal from. The only reason the Egyptians didn't destroy both the Hebrews and Canaanites is that neither group had anything of value.

It kind of appears to me that modern Christians and Jews do have a moral code, but they pick pieces out of the Bible agreeing with their culturally derived ethics and ignore aspects of that same Bible which are not by any modern standards moral and then they call it "biblical morality."

My wife and I are Wiccans, neo-Pagans who are religious non-Christians (which is not anti-Christian), and we are just as ethical as any member of our society. We both work in human services — she with abused children and I with the mentally challenged. We value life and liberty, that of others as well as our own. And we are tired of hearing from people who not only do not value the liberty of others but seek to control it and then complain they are being abused when they are not allowed to do so.

I thank the goddess for our First Amendment protections in this country every day.

Jim Gerard is a human services worker and a practicing Wiccan. He lives in Ames.

A USAir jet passes by workers unloading the contents of a refrigerated truck in front of the morgue that has been set up in an Air Force Reserve hangar in Imperial, Pa.

Wreckage of USAir plane probed by myriad of forensic specialists

Robert Dvorchak
Associated Press

ALIQUIPPA, Pa. — The work is painstaking, meticulous, grisly and necessary — recovering human remains from a catastrophic plane crash and identifying the 132 dead.

Hard at work at this seemingly impossible task is a diverse team of experts. Their ranks include an archaeologist who last week was examining 14,000-year-old bone slivers, FBI fingerprint experts and 150 dental students from the University of Pittsburgh.

"It's like putting the pieces of a puzzle back together," said Chris Kelly, spokesman for the Washington-based Armed Forces Institute of Pathology.

"It's never easy. But there are lots of methods that can be employed to make identification certain," he said. "Our medical examiners look at everything. Everything — no matter how inconsequential it may seem — tells a story."

The institute, which had its origins in the Civil War and investigates 40 to 60 military air crashes a year, sent a nine-person team Monday to help the Beaver County coroner's office in its work. They will work with the National Transportation Safety Board, which is investigating the cause of the crash.

Sleuthing is going on at two sites: the wooded ravine six miles from the Pittsburgh International Airport where USAir Flight 427 nose-dived into the ground Thursday, and a morgue set up inside two hangars of the Air Force Reserve's 911th Military Airlift Group.

The crash site must be mapped, diagrammed, photographed and sketched because the location of human remains could provide clues as to who was sitting where on the plane, which plunged 6,000 feet in 23 seconds and slammed into the ground at about 300 mph.

"One of the consequences of the impact is not only the shredding of the aircraft — I've never seen human beings reduced to virtually unrecognizable pieces," said James Adovasio, director of the Mercyhurst Archaeological Institute in Erie, Pa.

"Some remains were driven 3 feet into the ground. The closest approximation of the scene might be a trench in World War I after a bombardment that lasted several days."

Mercyhurst's mapping equipment was being used last week near Avella, about 30 miles from the crash site, to analyze the activities of prehistoric hunters at the oldest known site of human habitation in North America.

Now one piece of equipment, an infrared device called a theodolite that can precisely locate objects in the ground, is being used to find remains of the crash victims. Each spot is marked with a red flag, and in one 1,000-square-yard area, a forest of crimson markers flutters under a canopy of silver maple and hemlock trees.

Once marked and tagged, the remains are taken by refrigerated trucks to the makeshift morgue.

Inside the hangars, which normally house C-130 cargo planes, more detailed investigation is being done. About 10 FBI agents and fingerprint specialists are analyzing tissue.

Forensic dentists are examining teeth, the hardest and most durable material in the body. Dental records are being assembled for the 132 victims so identification can be made by matching X-rays, dentures, crowns and fillings.

Among those taking part are Dr. Jon Suzuki, dean of the University of Pittsburgh's dental school, and 150 student volunteers from Pitt.

As tough as the work may seem, it is vital for the peace of mind of the victims' friends and loved ones, said Dr. Cyril Wecht, a nationally known pathologist and former Allegheny County coroner.

"It's very important to the families for religious, psychological and emotional reasons because they want to know they're getting the remains of their loved ones," he said.

"There's also a practical reason. Identification must be made before the coroner can issue a death certificate, which is necessary to assist with insurance policy claims and death benefits," Wecht added.

The work is slow and methodical, and although some tentative identifications have been made, it may take three to four weeks to complete the work. Some victims may never be identified, Coroner Wayne Tatalovich said.

"It's going to be rather impossible, quite frankly," he said.

NO IMPACT ON VIOLENT CRIME REPORTED

Record U.S. prison population revealed in newly released study

Jim Abrams
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States has a higher rate of incarceration than any country in the world except Russia, according to a study released Monday by a private group.

The group, The Sentencing Project, which promotes alternative sentencing, concluded that the get-tough policies of the past two decades have failed to reduce violent crime.

The study found there are 1.3 million inmates in American prisons, and the incarceration rate has reached an all-time high of 519 per 100,000 population, up 22 percent since 1989.

Of 52 nations surveyed, only

Russia had a higher incarceration rate, 558 per 100,000.

Others with high rates of incarceration in the 1992-93 period were South Africa at 368 per 100,000, Singapore with 229 and Hong Kong with 179.

England had 93 behind bars for every 100,000, while France had 84, Germany 80, Japan 36 and India 23.

The report found that black Americans are incarcerated at six times the rate of whites, and that the 583,000 black men in prisons and jails surpassed the 537,000 enrolled in higher education.

It said that despite the doubling of the inmate population since 1980, there has been "no consistent impact" on violent crime. Only 16 percent of the 155 percent increase in new court commitments to state prisons from 1980 to 1992 came from violent offenders, while drug, property and public-order offenders accounted for 84 percent.

The current emphasis on tougher penalties continues policies adopted over the past 20 years "that we now see have failed to reduce violent crime," said Marc Mauer, assistant director of The Sentencing Project. "There is no reason to believe that continuing to build and fill more prisons will stop the crime and violence in our communities."

The $30 billion crime bill that President Clinton will sign into law today includes more than $10 billion to build new state and federal prisons.

SEXUAL PRACTICES HIGHLIGHTED BY PROSECUTOR

Friend of 'Hogan's Heroes' star put on trial for actor's slaying

Eun-Kyung Kim
Associated Press

PHOENIX — Bob Crane was bludgeoned to death by a friend who feared the "Hogan's Heroes" star was about to cut off the supply of women the skirt-chasing actor had shared with him, a prosecutor said Monday.

John Henry Carpenter "fed off the energy and fame of the actor," Bob Shutts, Maricopa County deputy attorney, told the jury in his opening statement. "Bob Crane became a source of women that he could never obtain for himself."

Days before he died, Crane had complained to friends and his son that he was getting irritated with Carpenter, and he told one woman he and his friend were "on the outs," Shutts said.

The evidence is expected to include a home video of Carpenter and Crane simultaneously having sex with the same woman.

Crane's body was found in 1978

in an apartment in suburban Scottsdale, where he was staying while performing in a dinner theater production of "Beginner's Luck."

An electrical cord was wrapped around his neck, but investigators said he was killed by a blow to his skull. A murder weapon was never found, although investigators theorize it was a camera tripod.

Carpenter, 66, was a suspect from the start but wasn't charged until 1990, when a new county attorney pushed to clear the books of old murder cases.

Defense attorney Stephen Avilla was expected to hammer away at the slim physical evidence and suggest that others besides Crane's best friend had motives to kill him.

Crane starred as the wisecracking Col. Robert Hogan, who outwitted his bumbling Nazi captors and even engaged in a bit of romance while a prisoner of war. "Hogan's Heroes" ran on CBS from 1965 to 1971.

By the time Crane was killed, he was 49 and long out of TV, but he continued to trade on his fame in the late-70s singles scene.

Carpenter, a salesman of electronics gear who now lives in the Los Angeles suburb of Carson, was his sidekick. The men recorded their exploits in Polaroid snapshots and early home video.

Carpenter had been visiting Crane in Scottsdale at the time of the slaying and left the morning the body was found. Two hotel desk clerks said he appeared nervous while waiting for a cab to the airport, Shutts said.

The key physical evidence against Carpenter apparently is a photograph of a speck of what's alleged to be body tissue on the inside door panel of a car Carpenter rented while visiting Crane the week of the slaying.

Experts have said the spot was probably fat tissue, which Shutts said is found in wounds created by excessive force.

POLITICS NOT CITED

Capitol plane crash thought to be suicide

Sandra Skowron
Associated Press

PERRY POINT, Md. — His marriage had just fallen apart, his father had died of cancer, he had problems with drugs and alcohol — and he had talked of suicide.

It all caused Frank Corder's relatives to say it was not politics but a determination to end his life that motivated him to steal a small plane in the middle of the night, fly it to Washington and crash it on the White House lawn.

"He did this to destroy himself," said an aunt, Edith Dishman.

"Frank has been down on drugs and alcohol before. He told me that sometimes ... he just wished he had a gun," added a cousin, Dee George.

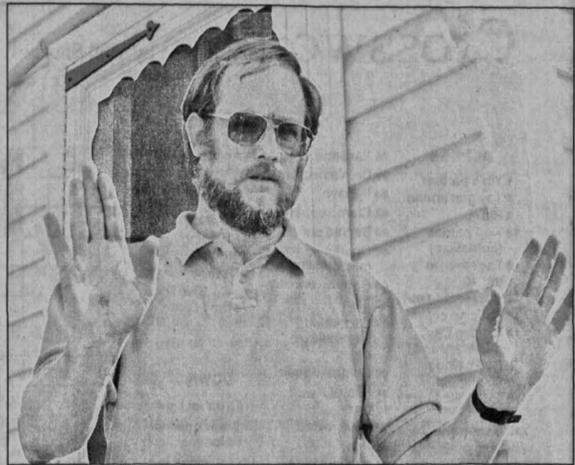

Corder, 38, who worked as a self-employed freight truck driver and had a student pilot license, died in the crash.

The Secret Service reached the same preliminary conclusion as Corder's family — political considerations didn't play into his decision.

"It does not appear to be directed toward the president," said Special Agent Carl Meyer of the Secret Service, reporting on the results of a preliminary investigation.

"Frank has never said anything against this country or anyone else," said Dishman.

"It was the drugs," she said.

Associated Press

Frank Corder's brother, John, tells reporters to leave from outside the house of Corder's mother in Aberdeen, Md. Frank Corder died when he crashed a small plane into the White House lawn Monday.

"That's the only problem that I know of that Frank had. It was just like the devil will get hold of you and won't let go."

George described Corder as "a jeans-and-flannel-shirt type of guy, a typical American Joe."

George added, "He was real friendly. He'd talk to anybody. He'd help anybody."

She said Corder seemed upbeat when she saw him for the last time, five days ago.

Corder had no criminal record, state police said, but he was convicted of drunken driving last year and lost his commercial driver's license for 90 days.

He grew up in Aberdeen, a town of 13,000 next door to the military's Aberdeen Proving Ground. He dropped out of Aberdeen High School in 10th grade, but an older brother, John, said Corder eventually earned a GED, the equivalent of a high-school degree.

Corder enlisted in the Army in October 1974 and received an honorable discharge nine months later, according to military records.

George said Corder's problems with drugs and alcohol started when he was a teen-ager.

His father died of cancer at age 64 in April 1993, Dishman said.

John Corder said he hadn't talked with his brother since Frank Corder moved out of the Perry Point house he shared with his wife, Lydia, three weeks ago. The couple didn't have any children.

Neighbors said they were a quiet couple who had moved to Perry Point about six weeks ago.

"I can't explain it," John Corder said of his brother's actions. "I don't know. It came as a real surprise to me."

Corder was reported to have undergone alcohol detoxification at the Perry Point Veterans Hospital, where his estranged wife works as a licensed practical nurse.

WHITE HOUSE

friend of Clinton's, expressed surprise that a plane could get to the White House, given the millions of dollars spent on security.

"The security's been paid for, and I just don't know why it did not function. Maybe it malfunctioned," Pryor said.

Bentsen said, "We are always concerned when the issue of the president's safety is involved." He added, "The Secret Service is studying procedures right now, but we need to get more facts to fully understand what happened."

The plane, a red and white, two-seat Cessna 150 trainer, was stolen Sunday evening from a small airfield in Harford County near Baltimore. Witnesses said it flew into Washington from the north, heading down 17th Street toward the Potomac River. It turned near the Washington Monument and circled back toward the White House.

One White House official said 14 seconds elapsed between the time the plane entered the restricted zone and the crash, but the Secret Service refused to confirm that. Sharpshooters are routinely stationed on the White House roof, and security forces have been reported to be armed with shoulder-fired Stinger anti-aircraft missiles. Typically, a plane straying into the restricted air space would be detected by radar, and law enforcement officials would be notified. Meyer suggested a plane wouldn't be spotted if it were flying at tree-top height, as Corder's was, and the plane's transponder was turned off. The transponder identifies a plane in response to a radar signal.

Radar readings are recorded, and the National Transportation Safety Board said it was collecting the records to see what signals had been picked up.

Treasury Undersecretary Ron Noble, charged with leading the review of security procedures, said much of the information about the case could not be divulged.

Asked directly how such an intrusion could occur, Noble said, "That's precisely the sort of question I can't answer. ... Just as if you had a security measure or alarm system in your house, you wouldn't give me the code for it, I'm not here going to give you at this point any specific answers until I complete the review."

Clinton was awakened at 2:35

a.m. and notified of the crash by Chief of Staff Leon Panetta.

Slamming into the South Lawn, the plane tumbled across the White House driveway and sliced through a gnarled magnolia tree planted by President Andrew Jackson. It came to rest against the White House at the window of the White House physician's office, just below the State Dining Room, about 50 yards from the Oval Office.

Meyer described a scene of frantic uncertainty as the plane approached, with officers trying to alert their command center by radio that a plane was coming in.

"The first thing we had to determine was what was the situation? I mean, was this just a plane that ran out of gas? Did somebody have a heart attack? We just didn't have a good sense of what was involved here. Or was it a diversion? Was something going to come?"

He said an emergency plan was put into action, notifying fire and rescue units and summoning bomb experts. Asked if there had been a security lapse, he said, "That's getting a little ahead of us here."

FRIENDLY

last May. That's when USA Today printed a poll announcing that Des Moines residents tend to be more hostile than residents of Chicago, Detroit, Denver and Seattle.

Iowa's worst cities are among the nation's mediocrities, the poll indicated. Davenport, Des Moines and Waterloo rounded out the survey with scores of 4.7, 4.7 and 5.8.

Don Graham, a Des Moines resident, said Iowa City is more communal than Des Moines.

"The people here are all young," he said. "And they at least let you cut in traffic."

UI freshman Dave Goldfried and temporary resident Adam Beatty, both Los Angeles natives, find the small-town atmosphere enjoyable.

"I think it is beautiful here," Goldfried said. "The people smile at you, I like that."

Beatty agreed that the easygoing lifestyle and the lack of violence are appealing.

"In Iowa City, there are less pressures. You can avoid the violence, the bad scene, and it's easy to hang out and develop superficial friendships," he said. "Everyone here is the same age, have the same goals and all want to party."

Rain McNally, a transient from Philadelphia, noticed after one week that people in Iowa City share an invisible bond.

"I've met people in New York, and they put up a defense mechanism. Then I've met the same people here, and they are much more open. I think it must be something in the water," McNally said.

Teaching Assistant Steve Wurtzler prefers the New York lifestyle and is anxious to leave this city and its friendliness behind.

"It takes forever to get a cup of coffee here. People make small talk, all that friendly day-to-day bantering. I want a New York City cup of coffee. They know what you want, they give it to you and you are on your way."

"In New York, you have a non-relationship relationship with the people on the street," he said. "Because this is Iowa City, people are always smiling at you. It's the perpetual smiling that makes Iowa City painfully friendly — annoyingly friendly."

gles of Thailand in 1991, killing 223 people, occurred, according to the government of Thailand, when its thrust reversers engaged in midair.

The following year, Boeing issued a bulletin to its 737 customers recommending changes be made in that model's thrust reversers. USAir told ABC it began making those modifications on the recently crashed plane but halted them after Boeing said the new design wasn't working properly.

In July 1993, Boeing issued a second bulletin with another design, ABC said. Three months after that, the network said, an FAA safety review "revealed that in-flight deployment of a thrust reverser could result in significant reduction of controllability of the airplane."

"There have been no instances of in-flight deployment of systems creating reverse thrust on 737-300 aircraft," Boeing said in a statement Monday. Asked if there had been any instances on other aircraft, Boeing spokesman Jerry Johnson said he would not comment beyond the statement.

The FAA declined to comment on the ABC report.

When activated, a thrust reverser closes across the rear of a plane's engine so hot exhaust is deflected to counteract the plane's forward motion. Passengers can hear the process as a roar from the engines just after the plane touches the ground.

Five actuators, which control the position of an engine's thrust reverser, were recovered from the crashed plane's right engine. Three were in the deployed position, but it wasn't clear whether they were in that position before the plane hit the ground at more than 300 mph. Two were not deployed.

The actuators are controlled by levers usually arranged on the same console as the plane's throttle. Donald Ward, an aeronautical engineering professor at Texas A&M University, said the controls were designed so they can't be moved accidentally. The devices can't control just one engine at a time.

All four actuators recovered from the left engine were in the proper position.

Records show that a crew flying the 7-year-old plane reported difficulty 2 1/2 months ago in putting the right engine into reverse, said National Transportation Safety Board member Carl Vogt. Part of the reverser was replaced July 3 and the device was lubricated, Vogt said. There had been no complaints since then.

Investigators are trying to locate the pilot of a corporate jet bound for Allegheny County Airport, who was believed to have been in a good position to see Flight 427 during its final moments, Vogt told reporters Monday night.

He also said a USAir maintenance employee reported seeing the plane's fuselage emit a reddish-brown wisp of smoke just before Thursday's crash. It wasn't immediately clear what that might mean, however.

Meanwhile, at the memorial service organized by the Salvation Army, mourners overflowed into streets lined with restaurants as a band played hymns.

One of the mourners, Marina Raykin of Monroeville, lost her husband, Eugene. USAir officials have called her every day to tell her his body hasn't been identified yet. She said she went to the service "so I wouldn't have to sit around waiting for them to call me."

She fell sobbing into a relative's lap when her husband's name was read.

Kirk Lynn of McKeesport was also killed. He recorded a religious song just two weeks ago and it was played at the service.

"Strengthen our course with every prayer. Let heaven's breezes speed us there. And grant us mercy evermore, as we sail to heaven's shore."

always asking, "Why do you have to take medicine?" Swain said. "Here, you don't have to explain to people why you take medicine — everyone knows."

Children who have parents or siblings with the disease or relatives who have died from AIDS, also attend the camp in Milwaukee, Wis., to spend time with other kids and people like them who know what it's like to live in the clutches of AIDS.

For at least one week, the children who participate in the summer camp revel in giggling and frolicking with others who do not view them as different. Hugs and handholding are commonplace because no one is afraid of touching or displaying emotions.

"Perhaps for the first time in their lives, they feel they are a kid and not a monster," said the camp's executive director, Neil Willenson. "Being given one week to feel normal can last a lifetime. Once they come here, they realize they are not alone and their disease is not a secret. They know they have the right to live."

Swain said he is looking forward to speaking in Iowa City.

"I'm not really going to be nervous, because I've spoken in front of people before," Swain said. "I just go out there and say what I feel. I just don't want people to be ignorant or afraid; I want people to learn about AIDS."

The kids infected with AIDS raise empathy and public awareness of the disease by stripping away fear and dispelling myths about people living with AIDS, Willenson said.

Many of the campers, some of whom are hemophiliacs, either contracted AIDS through tainted blood transfusions or were born with the disease.

"Doctors may give factual lectures about the AIDS disease, but no one knows better about what it's like to live with this than children who first recognize they are children and then who recognize that they have AIDS," Willenson said.

"Once you've met someone with AIDS, you realize they are no different than you," Willenson said. "They have the same likes, hopes and dreams as all of us. If you are not compassionate after meeting a child with AIDS, then in my opinion you are cold."

Willenson, 23, and a group of student volunteers founded the Camp Heartland Project in 1993. The camp is the nation's largest summer camping program of its kind, accepting participants from 30 states. In its first two seasons, the camp served 325 children affected by the disease.

The camp pays 100 percent of each child's expenses, between $500 to $700 per week. Funding comes from foundations, corporate donations and other sources, including a volunteer organization called Students for Camp Heartland. The association conducts fund-raisers at colleges and high schools nationwide.

The camp project has been receiving national recognition. CBS will be airing a special two-hour documentary about Camp Heartland titled "Before Your Eyes" in February 1995. In addition, Willenson donated $25,000 to the camp from the Arthur Ashe Voice of Conscience Award, which he received for achievement in social service.

Willenson hopes to raise $2 million in donations to purchase the nation's first permanent year-round camp and conference center for an AIDS education and prevention center. With a new, spacious facility, directors would not need to worry about turning children away due to lack of space.

"We turned down 40 children because we didn't have enough money or space," he said. "I think this is a small price to pay to these kids who may never see adulthood."

Willenson said his work is important because he strives to give each child a life before it's stripped from them.

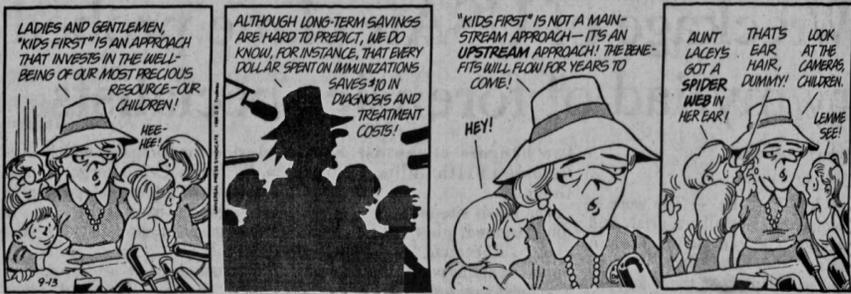

"AIDS is a scary disease, but the people who have AIDS are not scary," Willenson said. "Children have been stigmatized and denied their childhood because of others' irrational fears. They need our support. We must ensure that whatever time they have is memorable, significant and happy."

Barkley sets platform

HORSHAM, Pa. (AP) — Charles Barkley, who has said he plans to run for governor of Alabama when he retires from basketball, put down a few planks in his platform Monday.

He intends to run as a Republican in four years and he has sought support from conservative broadcaster Rush Limbaugh and former Vice President Dan Quayle.

"People just assume because you're black and from the South that you're a Democrat," the Phoenix Suns star forward said. "But I don't think like Bill Clinton does, that you should penalize people for being successful."

Barkley spoke at the Grand Champions Celebrity Golf Classic at Commonwealth National Country Club outside Philadelphia. Also playing were former Philadelphia 76ers star Julius Erving and Philadelphia Flyers captain Eric Lindros.

Sanders surrenders to police

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Reds outfielder Deion Sanders surrendered to city police Monday on new criminal charges related to his scuffle with a police officer Aug. 8 at Riverfront Stadium.

Sanders, 27, was released on his recognizance after he and his lawyer, James Keys Jr., went to the police Monday morning.

Police on Friday filed a new felony charge of failure to comply with a police officer's order, and a misdemeanor charge of fleeing the scene of an accident. Those allegations were in addition to the original misdemeanor charges of resisting arrest and failing to provide a driver's license.

Police said they filed the new charges because the officer involved in the dispute with Sanders, Herb Korus, 52, a 28-year Cincinnati police officer, is still off duty recovering from his injuries.

Bears' comeback falls short

Barry Wilner
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — It was vintage Randall at the Vet, and the Philadelphia Eagles needed all of it.

Randall Cunningham picked apart Chicago's defense Monday night, passing for 311 yards and three touchdowns as Philadelphia opened a 30-point lead and held on to beat the Chicago Bears 30-22.

Cunningham threw for 250 yards in the opening half, with two touchdown passes to Calvin Williams and one to Maurice Johnson.

And he never cooled off. Cunningham finished 24-of-36 in his 11th career 300-yard passing effort and the first time he has done it in successive games; he had 344 yards in a loss to the New York Giants last week.

Cunningham wasn't the only star on a night when the Eagles did little wrong until the fourth quarter before a raucous crowd of 64,890 at Veterans Stadium. Williams had all six of his receptions in the first half for 85 yards, and Fred Barnett added eight catches for 102 yards.

The defense, meanwhile, shackled the Bears early, holding them to 70 yards and three first downs in the first 30 minutes. By the time the Bears got their offense in gear, they had to fight back from a 30-0 deficit in the fourth quarter.

Chicago scored on a 22-yard pass from Erik Kramer to Curtis Conway with 12:15 remaining, an 85-yarder to Conway with 5:53 to go — Conway also caught a 2-point conversion — and a 16-yarder to former Iowa tight end Marv Cook with 3:35 to go.

But then Cunningham connected on two passes on Philadelphia's final possession, enabling the Eagles to run out the clock.

The victory snapped Philadelphia's seven-game losing streak against Chicago. The Bears were 4-0 in preseason and beat Tampa Bay in their opener. They've lost only five of 31 meetings with the Eagles.

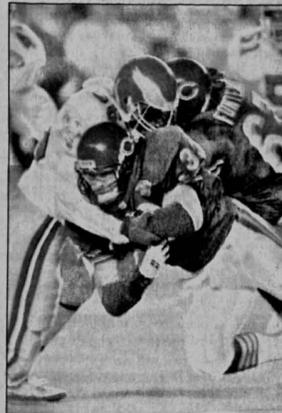

But they were never really in this one, especially after losing their best cornerback, Donnell

Woolford, early in the game with a concussion.

Williams made a reaching catch of a 9-yard pass on a fade pattern for Philadelphia's first score, concluding an 83-yard drive on which Cunningham was 6-for-8. Williams then beat Mark Carrier to the back left corner of the end zone for a 14-yard touchdown pass.

The Eagles' third touchdown was set up by Jeff Sydnor's 47-yard gallop on a punt return. He was stopped at the Bears' 19, and Cunningham found Johnson at the 1 five plays later and he back-crawled into the end zone for a 21-0 lead.

Eddie Murray tacked on a 41-yard field goal with two seconds left in the second period.

Chicago's Merrill Hoge is stopped after a short gain by Philadelphia's Byron Evans during the first quarter Monday.

Selig may wipe out World Series today

Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Though Bud Selig won't be pinned down, the rest of baseball is braced for what may be inevitable: the cancellation of the season today or Wednesday.

"It's unreal. I can't believe it," Atlanta Braves president Stan Kasten said. "We're about to lose the World Series."

But Selig, the acting commissioner, wouldn't establish a date for calling off one of the more memorable seasons in baseball history. "I can't give you a specific date because I don't know myself," said Selig, who last Friday allowed his initial deadline for canceling the season to pass. "We're just going to play it day by day."

Later, on ABC's "Monday Night Football," Selig said: "We're either very close to the end or within a day or two."

Selig repeated an earlier statement that teams would not play the postseason unless the regular season was resumed. That means the World Series would be wiped out, too — for the first time in 90 years.

"That would be an amazing day, the day that there was no World Series," Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher Orel Hershiser said. Selig said he saw no harm in delaying a decision.

"It's sort like taking chicken soup when you have a cold," he said. "Nothing bad can come from it. You keep trying because you hope there's some triggering mechanism that nobody's thought about."

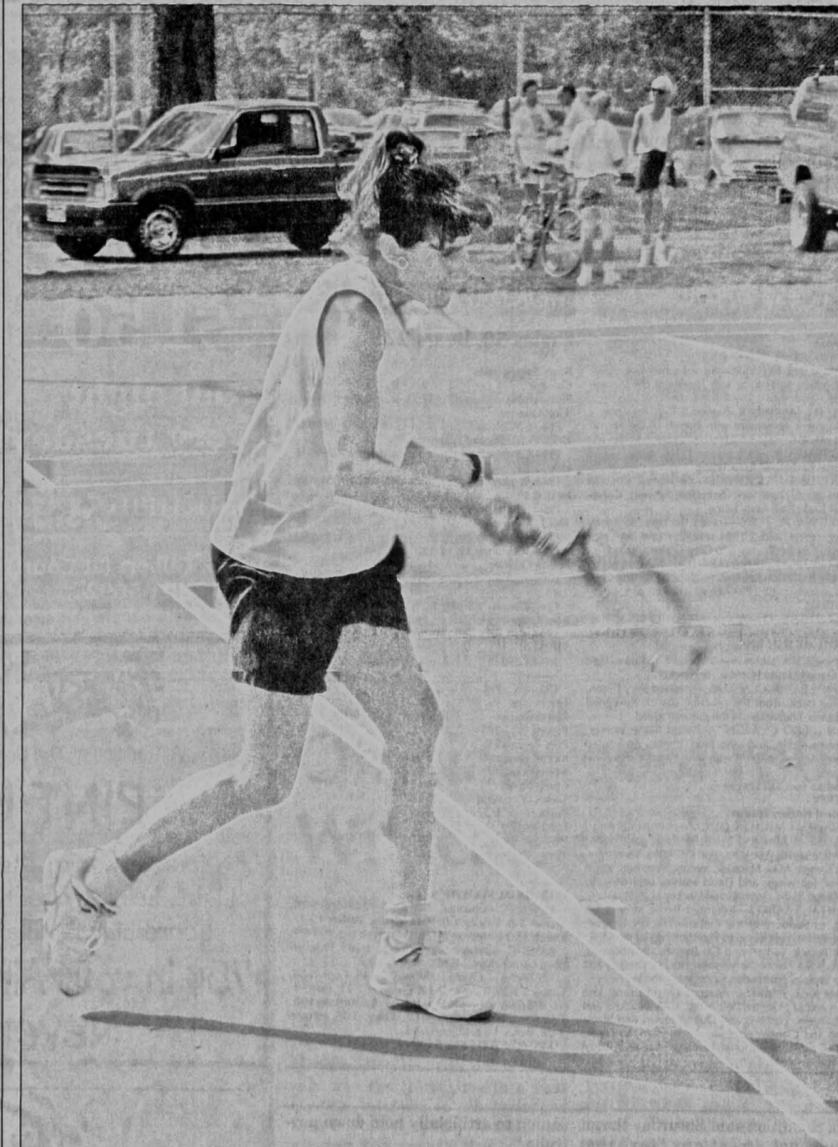

But even Selig admitted, "We know it's a longshot."

Players, attending the union's executive board meeting in New York, said they, too, were prepared for a decision to cancel the Series.

"Given the way things have gone, I think it's just a matter of time before Mr. Selig makes his announcement," Paul Molitor of the Toronto Blue Jays said.

"I think both sides will regret it if it happens," Hershiser said. "There will be extensive damage to the game, extensive damage to the season. It's a sobering thought." Selig announced Sept. 2 the deadline for making a decision on the season — and the World Series — would be Sept. 9. Eugene Orza, the union's No. 2 official, said Monday he thinks the sides have until Sept. 15 to 17 to reach an agreement that would allow regular-season games to resume and until "eight or nine days after that" to

NFL SETTLEMENT MADE

Players cash in on '87 strike

John D. McClain
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — About 1,300 professional football players will share in a record $30 million settlement of charges arising from the 24-day NFL strike in 1987.

The National Labor Relations Board said Monday the agreement between the NFL Players Association and the NFL Management Council is the largest such award in NLRB history. The settlement includes backpay, incentive bonuses and interest.

A breakdown of how much players from each of the 28 teams would receive was not available Monday, but the agency said distribution of the award was expected within a couple of months. The NLRB said further details are to be announced at a news conference today.

There was no immediate reaction from the Players Association.

But the management council attempted to play down the settlement, saying the award was "part of the $195 million overall settlement that the NFL reached with its players' union in January 1993."

After receiving a complaint from the NFLPA, the NLRB had ruled the council and NFL teams had unlawfully refused to allow returning players to participate in games immediately after the end of the strike Oct. 15.

"The board found that the denial of the returning strikers the right to play or be paid, as well as other acts by league management such as withholding game checks for certain injured reserve players, constituted unfair labor practices in violation of the National Labor Relations Act," NLRB general counsel Fred Feinstein said.

After the NLRB upheld the initial ruling by an administrative law judge, the team owners appealed to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, which had the decision under review.

"This settlement would obviate the need for any additional proceedings before the circuit court," said David Parker, the NLRB director of information.

The strike began Sept. 22 after the NFLPA and the management council were unable to agree on several issues, including free agency.

In its decision in September 1992, the NLRB found the owners had adopted a rule about two weeks into the strike requiring any player wanting to play in a Sunday or Monday game immediately following a settlement or end of the strike to report to work by 1 p.m. on the previous Wednesday.

However, replacement players could be signed to play in Sunday games as late as 4 p.m. on the Saturday before the games and in Monday night games as late as 4 p.m. on the same day, the NLRB said.

It noted the players had ended the strike on Oct. 15.

According to the ruling, that discrimination amounted to illegal coercion by the owners in violation of the National Labor Relations Act.

BIG TEN PLAYERS OF THE WEEK

Hawkeye athletes earn top conference honors

Chris Snider
and Mike Triplett
The Daily Iowan

Iowa field hockey's Debbie Humpage and volleyball's Katy Fawbush were named Big Ten Players of the Week in their respective sports Monday.

Humpage, who came to Iowa from Cheshire, Conn., scored both Iowa goals in the Hawkeyes' win over No. 3-ranked Maryland.

"She had two beautiful goals against Maryland," Iowa coach Beth Beglin said. "You couldn't have asked for more beautiful shots, and that was the game for us."

Earlier in the year, Humpage made the switch to the sweeper position, which is the director of the defense, in order to shore up an Iowa defense that lost key players to graduation.

Fawbush recorded 89 kills, a .309 hitting percentage, 70 digs, nine assists, six block assists, five service aces and one solo block in five matches last week. She was named the Hawkeye Classic MVP and helped pace Iowa to a 5-0 record.

"She's a big addition to the team," Iowa coach Linda Schoenstedt said. "She's really paying off right now."

"It's great to be recognized by the Big Ten office because there are 11 teams in the conference and four are ranked."

TCI pushes for ESPN2

Roxanna Pellin
The Daily Iowan

An official at TCI of Eastern Iowa, the cable television company that services the area, said airing Saturday's Iowa football game at Penn State is still a possibility.

The game will be shown on ESPN2 by Cox Cable in Cedar Rapids. ESPN2 is not carried by TCI Cable, but William Blough, general manager at TCI, said Monday he's trying to get a waiver to air the channel for Saturday only.

He hopes to hear from national headquarters by Wednesday to see if the game can be shown here.

"Our system doesn't have the capacity to carry it," Blough said. "We're trying to find out if we can carry it on a one-time basis."

Dubuque is the only city in Iowa where ESPN2 is offered as an ongoing service, Blough said. If TCI can get a waiver to show the game, Blough said he hopes it can run on one of the local channels.

Local bars also are waiting to see if they can air the game.

Jim Grutzmacher, assistant manager at Sports Column, 12 S. Dubuque St., said he expects a large crowd will show up if the game's not on cable.

"But there are always good turnouts even when the games are televised," he said. "People want to come out and be together to cheer on the Hawkeyes."

The game also will be shown by satellite at Micky's, 11 S. Dubuque St. and The Airliner, 22 S. Clinton St.

Ryan denies any QB controversy

Mel Reisner
Associated Press

TEMPE, Ariz. — Buddy Ryan doesn't care who gets angry. It's his show and he'll put at quarterback whoever he wants.

"I came here to win football games, not to win friends and influence people," the Arizona Cardinals coach said Monday.

"And I'm going to try to win ball games."

On Sunday, Ryan said there was no quarterback controversy on his club, even though Jim McMahon replaced Steve Beuerlein during a 20-17 loss to the New York Giants.

Now Ryan has thrown Jay Schroeder into the mix, saying nobody has locked up a starting job. The coach plans to announce his decision Wednesday.

Ryan said Beuerlein was No. 1 for the time being. But McMahon, who was 4-of-5 for 50 yards late in the game, and Schroeder are in the wings.

Beuerlein said he wasn't surprised at being yanked but still considers himself the team's best quarterback.

"I know exactly what I have to do, and I've done it before, and there's no reason why I can't do it again," he said. "I'm 29 years old. It's not like I'm over the hill, it's not like all of a sudden I don't have an arm. I just have to figure out what I'm doing wrong and get it right."

McMahon and Schroeder, who make less than $400,000 apiece to Beuerlein's $1.9 million, said they expect Beuerlein to hang on. But Schroeder, a former starter for Washington, the Los Angeles Raiders and Cincinnati, said he wouldn't be surprised to get the call.

"I wouldn't be here if I thought I was done with my career," said Schroeder, a free agent signed a week ago. "I can still play the game."

Ryan took responsibility for the loss to the Giants. In the "Monday Night Cardinal Report" on KTVK-TV, Ryan put himself and offensive coordinator Dave Atkins in "Buddy's Doghouse," a graphic showing a sleeping mutt.

But Ryan also gave the team an earful.

"I don't know how much tougher I can get on them," he said. "I think I've been about as tough as you get. We need to win some games. It's their ballclub. They can make it whatever they want to; they can go to the playoffs, or they can be another 4-12 Cardinal team."

PREPARING FOR COLORADO

Open date concerns Michigan's Moeller

Associated Press

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Common sense says it's a good thing for Michigan to have a week off between its games with Notre Dame and Colorado.

History suggests otherwise. In 1991, the last time the Wolverines had a week off after a victory over Notre Dame, they suffered a 51-31 drubbing at the hands of Florida State.

"We're not used to handling these situations and if history tells you anything, it's bad for us," Michigan coach Gary Moeller said Monday.

But the quality of the opposition was a bigger factor than having a week off, he said.

"We gotta remember that a couple years ago we played a great Florida State team," he said.

"And the team we're playing next week is a good football team. It's as talented as any we'll play all year. Without having studied them, I think Colorado is as talented as Notre Dame. It's a big play team that's fast on defense and has great skilled players."

Moeller said his biggest concern with the break is it might break the Wolverines' normal practice routine.

"You get a chance to catch your breath and maybe let a few bumps and bruises heal, but the thing you have trouble with sometimes is that the kids get out of routine," he said.

He pointed out that both of Penn State's losses last year — to Michigan and Ohio State — came on the heels of a week off for the Nittany Lions.

"Sometimes you can lose focus if you try to do things differently than you're used to. All of a sudden you start hitting harder the first week and then take it easier the next week so you're fresher for the game. And then you play like you're trying to stay fresh," Moeller said.

"We'll take a little different approach, but I don't know exactly what we'll do yet. Maybe we'll hit earlier in the week next week and then ease up a little."

BIG EIGHT CONFERENCE

Cyclones' Walden takes heat for winless start

Chuck Schoffener

Associated Press

Call Jim Walden what you want. But please, the Iowa State football coach says, lay off the players.

Walden said Monday he can stand the heat from disgruntled fans upset with the Cyclones' 0-2 start and their listless offense. What bothers him is when the players are criticized, too.

"The tragedy of college athletics is when people start being cruel," Walden said. "They just kill the young people. We're trying our best to keep a curtain around them and keep them as much away from that as we can."

"But regardless of the whole situation, there's people that want to speak their piece and that's just adults trying to be cruel. I just wish they wouldn't be so cruel to our players."

Losses to Northern Iowa and Iowa have Walden's critics howling, with many saying he should be fired. Walden did some criticizing of his own Monday, taking a shot at newspapers that run comments from fans.

"When you're taking quotes from people over the phone and running them in your newspaper, that's slut journalism to start with," he said. "You're paying someone else to do your slutt work."

"If certain people out there in this world feel better about saying something bad about a football coach, if that makes your day, it's going to be said. It's a shame because young college kids shouldn't have to put up with that."

NBA

Judge rules on contracts, keeps Grant waiting

Wendy E. Lane

Associated Press

NEWARK, N.J. — A federal judge Monday upheld the contracts of NBA players A.C. Green, Chris Dudley and Toni Kukoc, rebuffing the league's claim that the deals circumvented the salary cap.

However, the decision by U.S. District Judge Dickinson Debevoise left free agent Horace Grant in limbo less than four weeks before training camp. He wanted his $22 million contract with Orlando upheld, but the ruling gave the NBA the right to challenge the pact.

The judge said he was unable to determine whether that deal was intended to get around the cap. Grant's attorneys said they will seek a hearing as soon as possible.

Green of Phoenix, Kukoc of Chicago and Dudley of Portland recently signed new deals, using contract clauses that allowed them to become free agents after one year. Because they re-signed with their old teams, the new contracts weren't subject to salary cap limitations.

The NBA invalidated all three contracts, saying the players initially signed for less than their market value and that the one-year opt-out clauses were attempts to get around the cap.

But Debevoise decided the players' deals were valid based on his ruling last year when Dudley signed a seven-year, $10.5 million deal. The league challenged that contract and lost.

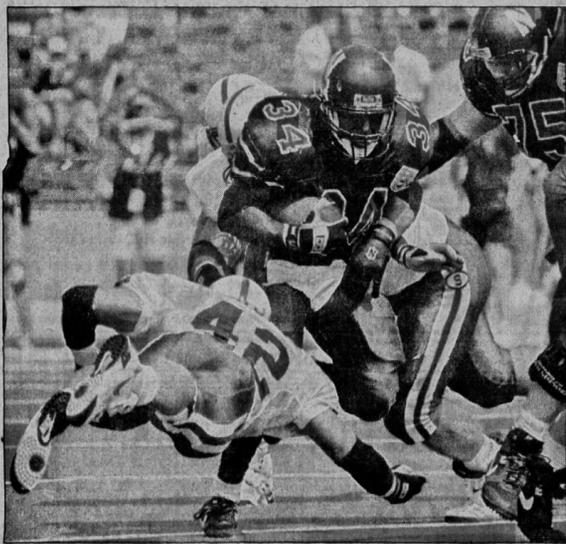

Green and the Suns filed suit last month after the NBA voided the 6-foot-9 forward's five-year, $26 million deal signed July 26. Green, who signed a five-year, $15 million contract with Phoenix before the 1993-94 season, used an opt-out clause that made him a free agent after the end of last season.

Dudley, whose new deal pays him $24 million over six years, and the Chicago Bulls, who signed Kukoc for an average of $4.1 million over six years, filed similar complaints against the league.

Despite losing the latest round, the NBA considered the judge's latest ruling an impediment to new contracts containing opt-out clauses. Grant's deal with the Magic would allow him to become a free agent after earning just $2.1 million this season.

BIG TEN FOOTBALL

Officials' goof robs Wildcats of victory

Mario Fox

Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Big Ten said Monday that officials mistakenly awarded a touchdown to Stanford in the Cardinal's 41-41 tie with Northwestern, but the error won't change the outcome of the game.

It was the third time in a year that the conference acknowledged that mistakes by Big Ten officials altered the result of a football game.

"We don't have an instant replay or access to go upstairs and look at a monitor and reconsider the call," David Parry, the league's supervisor of officials, said from his Michigan City, Ind., home. "There is not much to do but live with the judgment."

On Saturday, Stanford's Mike Mitchell fumbled as he was about to cross the goal line and Northwestern recovered the ball in the end zone for an apparent touch-back. But officials conferred and decided Mitchell had crossed the goal line before losing the ball.

After reviewing ESPN replays, however, the conference said Monday that "game officials were not in position to see Mike Mitchell's fumble between the 2- and 1-yard lines." The league said that resulted in "an obvious error in judgment" and "the Wildcats should have been awarded possession."

Parry said the officials might eventually be disciplined, but the league wouldn't make such action public.

"The officials are rated and graded, and records are kept. I can assure you of that," he said.

On two occasions last year, Illinois lost because of bad calls.

New Music Review

Idha
Melody Inn

Idha Ovelius was born a few decades late, or so one might think from her choice of style. Not only is Melody Inn, her first album, informed by the country-flavored folk that flourished in the '60s and '70s, it contains covers of songs by some of the artists she emulates, including Janis Ian, Gram Parsons and Tim Hardin.

Her unabashed imitation may make her sound too familiar to some, but her talent is unmistakable. Cloaked by slide guitars, harmonicas, pianos and other folk accouterments, Idha's strong, dreary voice shines like the first hesitant glimpse of sunlight after a storm - murky, yet gentle and remotely comforting.

Idha's music draws comparisons to Mazzy Star and the quieter moments of Madder Rose, but she does it with less pretense and more raw emotion. The original songs on the album, such as "More Love," "Another Door" and "Stockholm," are actually better than the covers, proving Idha is more than just a hanger-on to the legacy of her idols. Melody Inn suggests a different direction for Creation Records, best known for noisy ambient, and a promising career for its creator.

Echobelly
Everybody's Got One

Echobelly's debut Everybody's Got One, while never quite living up to its full potential, is still easy to recommend. After being lumped in with Suede and the Auteurs as "art rock," Echobelly added the vaguely threatening Debbie Smith on guitars and built a tougher, more credible sound around her. Sonya Aurora-Madan, while she may not be the definitive voice of '90s feminist rock (as she has already been tagged), is an accomplished lyricist and appealing vocalist. The refurbished "Bellyache" is a diesel-driven machine, rendering and mulching the raw fodder of the past into a road kill of relationships. The anger and passion on "Bellyache" and "Call Me Names" carries an understated but powerful emotive fury.

Still, at times the London inner-circle snippiness and self-referentialism slips in and drags down a track, such as "Give Her A Gun."

Whether Echobelly will transcend their oh-so-hip influences and become something truly of their own creation is yet to be seen, but Everybody's Got One ("ego"), is still a dang good first record.

HO HO, VERY FUNNY

'Comedy' special insults Iowa, state fair

'Fair Enough' has little to do with the Iowa State Fair — and a lot to do with lame "hick" humor.

Paul Ferguson
The Daily Iowan

Des Moines' annual Iowa State Fair is a true piece of Americana — a legitimate phenomenon. Where else can you experience dangerous carnival rides, the unmistakable scent of farm animals and life-sized sculptures made of butter? The fair is as silly as it is strange, and like any other silly American event it deserves to be made fun of a bit.

Martin Mull obviously thinks so, too, and his mostly fictional account of his excursion to Iowa's annual farmfest is documented in "Fair Enough: Martin Mull at the Iowa State Fair," currently airing on Comedy Central.

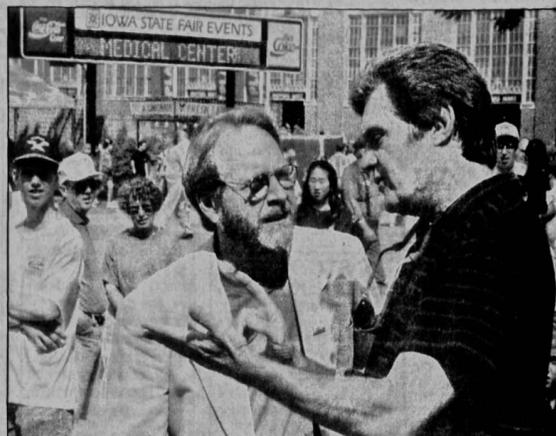

The Los Angeles-based Mull experiences a fair bit of culture shock as he wanders around the fairgrounds, admiring the "true pioneers who aren't afraid to put the 'new' back in 'nutrition,' the 'air' back in 'fair' and the 'fun' back in 'dysfunctional.'"

The man who picks up Mull as he hitchhikes across America toward the fair happens to be Mull's regular cohort Fred Willard in his usual "dumb guy" persona. Willard accompanies Mull to the fair, only to wander off (which, sadly, becomes a recurring joke), leaving Mull to make predictable jokes about the fair all by himself.

Mull and Willard find plenty of things to mock at the 140th annual Iowa State Fair, including a band of instrument-playing ducks, a rooster who beats Willard at tick-tack-toe, lots of colorful, stereotypical Iowans and, of course, the butter sculptures of a cow and Garth Brooks. Even Mull couldn't make this stuff up.

Not surprisingly, they take plenty of cheap shots at the locals, implying that naming a girl Fred Willard or a boy Elvis is common practice in Iowa, as well as pointing out only the most bizarre of the fairgoers. Not only is the show unlikely to make its way into any Iowa tourism promotions, it reinforces numerous stereotypes of Iowans (though the state fair tends to do that all by itself).

Mull and Willard even find bad puns in the livestock exhibits. Inspecting the world's largest boar, Mull quips, "Well, now you'll have something to shoot for, Fred." (Ha! Get it?) Mull also points out that a goat on display is "absolutely adorable and darn good eating" and asks a confused woman where he might find the "heavy petting zoo."

The biggest disappointment in the show is that the fair is really just a backdrop for Mull's somewhat tired brand of one-liner comedy. Known most recently for "The History of White People in America," a book and cable program lampooning most of the United States, Mull seldom rises above "Laugh-In" in terms of complexity. Much of the humor he squeezes out of the fair has nothing to do with the event, while the dopey chemistry between Mull and Willard was drained years ago.

Another disappointment is that Comedy Central, best-known for unearthing some of the most original comedy around, is still convinced that comedians who reached their prime decades ago are worthy of their attention (witness Harry Shearer's astonishingly dry attempt to make some Richard Nixon film outtakes funny in a recent program). Considering successes like "Mystery Science Theater 3000," the network is probably better off finding fresh faces than expecting the same old ones to still make people laugh.

"Fair Enough" airs today at 8:30 p.m., Wednesday at 12:30 p.m., Thursday at 7 a.m. and 6 p.m., Friday at 2:30 a.m. and Saturday at 1:30 p.m.

"Obvious World" mixes sight and sound for his weekly psychedelic show at the Union Bar & Grille.

DJ's 'musiomagical experience' coming alive at downtown bar

Clint Marsh
The Daily Iowan

For many people, achieving an altered state of consciousness implies the use of meditative ritual or little colored dots on an expensive sheet of paper. But through music?

Welcome to the new dimension. Your guide: Matthew Ahearn, a.k.a. DJ "Obvious World."

On Wednesday nights, under the command of Obvious World, the back room of the Union Bar & Grille, 121 E. College St., is transformed into a stage for a new brand of musical encounter. He describes his show as a "musiomagical experience." He calls it "OM."

"The name denotes oneness and unity," Ahearn says. "OM flows from all kinds of music: techno, ambient, hard-core and others." He says the final goal is to bring the listener in touch with their higher self. "From the higher self comes all possibilities. This is a very powerful system."

"Today's audioscape has become almost detrimental," Ahearn says.

"Industrialization has caused sound to become an enemy. Every sound affects the body."

OM is meant to tap into bio-rhythms in the human physiology, including heart rates. Dancers don't listen to the music so much as they experience it.

Ahearn explained that there are actions people repeat so often in their daily lives that the body can become as numb to movement as the ear has to sound.

"We need to dance beyond our normal structure — we need to dance with full movement," he said.

To help achieve the full body/mind/soul experience, Obvious World uses a multitude of swirling colored lights and video clips ranging from perfume ads to computer animation — all intended to draw the dancers into the full experience. The result is amazing; it's easy to physically respond to the tempo of the music, to get lost in the visuals.

Ahearn aims at bringing a feeling of happiness and fullness. "People should walk away feeling the hum of their own body. You're not stepping on anyone's flowers when you dance to this music."

In some ways, the OM experience is similar to a rave. "Rave culture was infested with drugs, and it started off as spiritual," Ahearn says. "Now the rave is all about money. We think we're getting into ourselves, but with drugs we are alienating ourselves."

He said that OM is not about drugs, money or even style, only self-expression. "OM is more unity-oriented than money-oriented."

While stressing individualism, OM's long-term goal is a revolution of modern culture. Ahearn is ready to turn on a whole new group through sight and sound, and he hopes to teach them some lessons, or at least bring up some interesting questions. Obvious World believes that people in the '90s can take positive aspects from past decades and combine them for a revolution of the consciousness. "Through OM," he said, "all are one, all are human. What are we as a human race capable of?"

"OM" begins at 9 p.m. The Union is a 19-and-up bar.

THE IMITATION TREND CONTINUES

Original 'Mask' comic may surprise, warn film fans

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

With the financial success of "The Crow," "The Flintstones" and "The Mask" assured, Hollywood seems to have gone comic-book crazy. From the "Judge Dredd" and "Sgt. Rock" movies now in production to the unearthing of the ancient James Cameron "Spiderman" movie rumors, dozens of popular comics are on the bargaining tables and the sound stages.

But before jumping on the Hollywood bandwagon, comics fans might want to take a careful look at the downhill trend in comics-to-film adaptations. A favorite character on its way to the silver screen won't necessarily be remotely recognizable when it gets there. Film fans have only to pick up one issue of John Arcudi's original comic "The Mask" to see what changes may lie in store when their favorite comics hit Hollywood.

It's surprising that Arcudi even got credit for creating "The Mask" — the main character. The similarities between his comic and the New men by the dozens and chokes a grade-school teacher to death in front of her class. Where the movie deals at length with Ipikiss' attempts to romance an attractive woman, the comic has him exacting gruesome revenge on anyone who's ever offended him — then dying abruptly to make way for a series of other mask-wearing lunatics.

Arcudi's comics have their own brand of humor — a grim and distinctly nasty one. It's possible to laugh as Ipikiss chuckles, "A little song, a little dance, a little ammo down your pants" while shooting someone — but the laugh is an uncomfortable one, only made possible by the book's deliberately grotesque, over-the-top attitude toward life and death.

The question is: Who read these bloody, intense books and envisioned a light, romantic comedy starring a television comedian? The logical leap is implausible at best.

Granted, there was no chance of Arcudi's dark, brutal stories making it to the screen intact — the body count in his comics rivals a "Rambo" movie and even his most sympathetic characters are cold-blooded serial killers.

And it certainly won't come as news to anyone that Hollywood adaptations never leave their source material completely intact. But it's certainly rare to see any artist's story quite this oddly mangled. "The Mask" movie doesn't have anything remotely resembling its source material's tone, mindset or thrust, let alone such inconsequential elements as plot and characters. And this kind of freeform "take what you want and dump the rest" mentality seems remarkably pronounced when it comes to comics. "Batman," "The Crow" and "The Shadow" came out better than most but still showed distinctive signs of tampering. On the other end of the spectrum, the confusing, mutilated "Punisher" film shows how bad things can get when writers and directors meddle with established successful formulas.

None of this is to say that "The Mask" film is inherently bad just because it's not a word-for-word rendition of the comic. In fact, the film is funnier, more varied and more palatable than its source material. (By contrast, the comic is more outlandish, striking and original, not to mention less contrived.) But the fact that the movie doesn't in any way draw on the comic's true strengths bodes ill for the future.

Dark Horse Comics

It's a proven axiom that in Hollywood, success breeds imitation — and in most cases, the imitations are weaker, more derivative efforts. The unprecedented financial success of three films in a row that take their cue and characters — if not always their gestalt or specifics — from comics is likely to lead to a series of sanitized, Hollywoodized adaptations with no resemblance to the original product. And next time we may not be as lucky as we were with "The Mask."

There's still plenty of room for quality adaptations. But unless fans are eager to see a "Sandman" movie filled with car chases and explosions or a "Watchmen" sporting a tacked-on romantic subplot and a happy ending, they're going to want to watch their steps as the comics revolution continues.

Speaking of adaptations ...

After a year of delays, Fox has finally gotten Ben Edlund's hyper superhero parody "The Tick" on the air. The show, which currently airs at 10:30 a.m. Saturdays, had a lively first outing last week, but subsequent episodes look less promising. Still, if the writers stick to Edlund's style — a fast-paced combination of cheerfully brainless slapstick and more subtle satire, "The Tick" will be a TV standout. Set those VCRs.

Line Cinema fans are limited to the main character's name, the plot device of the mask itself and a few sight gags.

Where the movie's protagonist, Stanley Ipikiss, is at heart a clumsy, shy, down-on-his-luck nice guy, Arcudi's work spotlights a main character Jim Carrey wouldn't touch with a 10-foot pole — an obsessive sadist who kills police-
