Regents to tackle tuition boost

Easy passage of proposal expected at Wednesday meeting

Kirsten Scharnberg
The Daily Iowan

The proposed UI tuition increases will probably become a reality at Wednesday's meeting of the Iowa state Board of Regents in the Union.

The regents have recommended approval for tuition increases of 4.2 percent — $103 per semester — for residents at the three state universities, and 6 percent — $495 per semester — for nonresidents. In addition, mandatory health and computer fees will each be raised $4.

Despite fervent protests from student representatives of the three universities during September's regents meeting, the proposed increases remain unchanged.

A decade of tuition increases has yielded staunch criticism from students, but the regents defend the tuition boosts. The increases are below the medians of other Big Ten Conference universities and comparable institutions, board member Tom Collins said.

"My feeling is to say that as long as we are staying within guidelines and below the other universities in the Big Ten, it's OK," Collins said. "Of course, we will hear any other information presented about it on Wednesday. It's become a tradition that whatever the raise, people are going to complain."

Taking more than four years to complete a college education is more of an expenditure than the $144 tuition increase, Collins said. He said if students would get out of college in four years they would save approximately $10,000 per year in tuition, and in addition they would be earning approximately $20,000 per year in the work force.

"If somebody would zero in on getting students out of school in

Tom Collins, board of regents member four years, they'd save tuition money and would be earning income," Collins said. "We're talking about $30,000 here, and that's big money."

During September's meeting, Collins proposed that the regents conduct a study to examine reasons students take longer to graduate. Collins said he will voice the idea again Wednesday.

"I'm going to raise the issue in a way that doesn't blame anyone for the problem," he said. "I just think that everyone would be better off if they got out of there sooner. I'm not going to say it's happening because students are lazy; I don't think that's the case. It's everyone's responsibility, but we're talking about a major waste of money."

Student displeasure over the tuition increase was not demonstrated at the University of Northern Iowa during the last meeting, Collins said.

What students have to do to grab the regents' attention is unclear, but Gretchen Lohman, vice president of UI Student Association, said she wouldn't be surprised if there was a protest Wednesday.

"What do we have to do to create a controversy?" Lohman asked. "Arrange a protest with signs? The last regent meeting was at UNI. When has there ever been a protest at UNI?"

The regents have already decid-

UI Tuition Increases

The Iowa state Board of Regents will vote Wednesday on a proposal to raise tuition next year for students at state universities. Under the proposal, UI students will be affected in the following ways:

■ Tuition will increase by 4.2 percent for Iowa residents, except for law and pharmacy students.

■ Tuition will increase by 6 percent for nonresidents, except for law and pharmacy students.

■ The law department will complete a two-year program by increasing tuition 12.3 percent.

■ The pharmacy department will continue with the second year of a four-year program by assessing an additional 7.5 percent surcharge on top of the base resident and nonresident increases.

■ The health fee will increase from $80 per year to $84 per year.

■ The computer fee will increase from $84 per year to $88 per year, except for engineering students, whose computer fee will rise from $240 per year to $320 per year.

1994 Nobel winner presents findings to UI

UI medical students and faculty flocked to the Medical Alumni Auditorium Monday morning to listen to a lecture by Dr. Alfred Gilman, co-winner of the 1994 Nobel Prize in medicine for his research on the communication system between cells. Gilman, who worked for about 20 years to identify molecular details in the shape and function of cells, discussed the subject of "G-proteins and the Regulation of Adenyl Cyclase."

He and Dr. Martin Rodbell of the National Institutes of Health researched separately how G-proteins transmit information from the outside to the inside of cells and convey information from hormones and drugs to the proteins in cells. Rodbell was a co-winner of the Nobel Prize in medicine.

Diseases such as cancer and cholera result from dysfunctional G-proteins. No new treatment has been discovered from Gilman's and Rodbell's research.

Gilman, professor and chairman of the pharmacology department at the University of Texas at Dallas' Southwestern Medical Center, is currently teaching biomedical students. He was selected by UI pharmacology students as the Brody Memorial Lecturer.

The lecture was broadcast live on UITV to the Bean Room of the UI Hospitals and Clinics and will air again today and next Tuesday.

2 LAPD officers guilty of drunken shooting spree

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two police officers were convicted Monday of negligent discharge of a firearm for shooting at a California Highway Patrol officer during a drunken off-duty freeway spree.

The jury acquitted Ted Teyechea and Michael Herrera of assault with a deadly weapon and shooting at an occupied vehicle.

The defense said the officers, both 9-year department veterans, were shooting at freeway signs and mounds of dirt from their pickup, not at CHP officer Scott Wall, as Teyechea blew off steam after finding out he wasn't getting a raise.

Natural gas explosion blasts Waterloo bar

Associated Press

WATERLOO — Five people died Monday when a natural gas buildup exploded, destroying a Waterloo tavern.

Three other people were injured in the blast, which leveled Buzz's Bar. One was reported in critical condition and another was in fair condition while a third, who was in an adjoining building at the time of the blast, was released after treatment.

There were seven people in the tavern when the explosion occurred, said Dennis Duggan, assistant fire chief in Waterloo.

The explosion occurred shortly after 10 a.m. Witnesses said a fireball shot 100 feet or more into the air over the tavern, located on Rainbow Drive in Waterloo.

Rudy Osterlee, owner of Woodland Pattern Co., the adjoining business, was inside when the blast occurred. He said he heard two other smaller explosions after the initial blast.

"It knocked the hell out of us. We crawled out (of the building)," Osterlee said.

Fire Chief Frank Magsamen said the blast was caused by a buildup of natural gas in the building, sparked by compression or mechanical equipment.

A witness, Sam Annis, president of Sam Annis Petroleum Products, said the explosion broke windows in his nearby building and knocked insulation out of the ceiling.

"I thought it was one of our tanks," he said.

Annis said he was in his office talking on the telephone when the

AIDS advocate succumbs to illness

David Ellingsworth, an influential local AIDS activist and nominee for the national HIV / AIDS Council, died from complications related to the disease Thursday at age 30.

Ellingsworth, originally from Davenport, left a lasting mark on people who knew him through his membership in numerous HIV- and AIDS-awareness groups.

"He was very committed to the issue of HIV / AIDS," said Laura

Hill, executive director of the Iowa Center for AIDS Resources and Education (ICARE), 320 E. College St. "He wasn't afraid to speak out and combat the misconceptions and myths about HIV and AIDS and about people with HIV and AIDS."

Hill met Ellingsworth three years ago when both were working with the ICARE program. She said HIV and AIDS education was Ellingsworth's main concern.

"He was a spokesperson for the community of those who had HIV and AIDS," she said. "He wanted people who had HIV or AIDS to be a self-advocate for themselves." Ellingsworth was a member of numerous advocacy groups on the local, state and national levels.

He was affiliated with the AIDS Action Council in Washington, D.C., the National Association of State and Territorial AIDS Directors, the AIDS Project of Central Iowa and the Quad Cities AIDS Coalition, among many others. He also spoke to a number of local schools and UI classes.

PLOY DEEMED A HOAX

Flyers for supremacist group lead to dead end

Patricia Harris
The Daily Iowan

Flyers around the UI campus have been advertising a student group that doesn't exist and a contact person who doesn't know anything about the group.

The Daily Iowan received a news release about a group called the White Students' Union announcing a talk titled "Hypocrisy of Racism, When is a Majority a Minority." The event is supposed to take place today on the Pentacrest at 5 p.m., and the announcement listed a contact person and phone number to call for information.

The phone number is actually for the UI Registrar's office.

"We received one other call about this," said a worker in the registrar's office, who wished to be identified only as Michele. "It sounds like a hoax to me."

Michele said the racist connotation of the announcement is not something the registrar's office would be involved in.

"It's definitely not something we would promote," she said.

The contact person listed on the notice is Kelly O'Hara, a UI freshman and prelaw major. She said she knows nothing about the organization.

"I've never heard of them," she said. "It would bother me if people thought I was involved with this group."

O'Hara said she doesn't think the announcement is a personal attack. "All my enemies are at home," she said.

She said the announcement is most likely a publicity stunt, and the group probably doesn't exist.

"It's totally asinine," O'Hara said. "Do they think they're going to draw a crowd at the Pentacrest or something? They're just looking for attention."

Susan Mask, director of Affirmative Action and assistant to UI President Hunter Rawlings, said at least one part of the announcement was funny.

"I thought it was amusing that they were going to meet on the Pentacrest at 5 p.m., when there are not any students around," she said.

Nonhlanhla Makwakwa was only 5 when she saw the student uprisings in Soweto, South Africa. After witnessing numerous violent events, she realized she wanted to fight apartheid.

"It is the most frightening day

Joe Murphy/The Daily Iowan

Nonhlanhla Makwakwa, a native of South Africa and UI graduate student, left her country six years ago in the middle of turmoil and upheaval. Makwakwa has been fighting apartheid ever since then and hopes to contribute to rebuilding South Africa with the knowledge she's gained in the United States.

and later in a secretarial school led by two white women, she continued her political activities. She became the first woman president of the youth league in her neighborhood, where she arranged rallies and political education for young people. She also observed and protested violence.

"The army created a situation where my parents didn't need to say anything - I saw it all," she said. "I could see on TV how white people live, and I could go to my gate and see how police treat black kids. I got used to the presence of violence."

After graduating from secretarial school, Makwakwa applied for scholarships to study in the United States because she felt the need to get away from South Africa. In 1989, she received a full scholarship to study at Grinnell College in Grinnell. A year later she transferred to the UI.

When Makwakwa left South Africa, many of her friends had been killed. She said there were times when she went to a funeral every weekend.

In spite of knowing her life was in danger, Makwakwa was reluctant to leave South Africa.

"I was feeling guilty," she said. "If nothing was going to come out of South Africa, I wanted to be there and face apartheid."

The week before she left for the United States, she visited her best friend, who had been imprisoned for anti-apartheid activities.

"After coming to visit him, I realized that I was truly committed to the cause, but I needed to take a break to get away from all this pain and all this suffering."

"I don't think I was ever really afraid of dying," Makwakwa said. "I had a certain level of will to die for the country. If you were to die, you would be removed from seeing other people dying, from being harassed by police and white storekeepers."

Makwakwa is the manager of the Afro-American Cultural Center and has also been the president of the South African Student Association at the UI. She was also an intern in Washington, D.C., last summer researching South African women.

She said being in the United States hasn't slowed her activism and has enabled her to see clearly the horrors of apartheid.

"In South Africa, I didn't realize how destructive the military was to the inner soul; I was absorbed with surviving from day to day and I didn't do any soul-searching," Makwakwa said. "But now I cry whenever I see anything about South Africa on TV, and I feel it has done a lot of damage to me."

DAY IN THE LIFE

"I've ever experienced," she said. "Students of Soweto boycotted school. The army came in, and there was shooting, tanks, police dogs and we were trapped in the school."

Makwakwa ran home after school and hid under the covers of her bed. Her cousin, who had been hit in the forehead with a tear gas canister, was crying because her face was swollen and aching.

For Makwakwa, now 23, it was her first experience with a brutal South African military and the pain of being black in an apartheid system. Ever since, she's been afraid of police and armed forces and has been involved in political activism.

A South African native and a UI graduate student in education, Makwakwa has been living in the United States for six years. Now she is observing the changed conditions in South Africa and hoping to contribute to rebuilding her native country with the knowledge she's gained in the United States.

"It feels like I'm walking a very tight rope," she said. "Going home, I'm still part of the community, but I realize I've had privileges. I have to stay conscious to realize my commitment to the community."

Coming from a family of strong women with a mother who started a cooperative for women and a grandmother who worked as a nurse and teacher, Makwakwa grew up accustomed to high expectations.

Because of her abilities in math and science, she was selected for a gifted education program for black students in Soweto. Soon after, she was teaching math at her school when her teacher had to be absent.

Makwakwa said being in the gifted program allowed her to reflect on the political situation of her country and made her more politically conscious and active.

Though she enrolled in a conservative boarding school on a scholarship

CANDIDATE VOWS TO SERVE ONLY 8 YEARS

Campbell declares support for governor term limits

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Democrat Bonnie Campbell on Monday proposed limiting the terms a governor can serve and said she would voluntarily leave after eight years in office.

Campbell said a governor should be limited to two four-year terms because "we must be serious about reforming the way our government does business."

"I'm very happy to stand here and pledge that I would step aside after eight years as governor," said Campbell.

"I'm leaving after eight years, no matter what," she said.

At a news conference, Campbell also said she would support changes to make term limits apply to all future governors. Aides said that would involve a constitutional change, which they said Campbell supported.

The proposal would cover only the governor's office and wouldn't apply to other state offices, said Campbell. She said the distinction is justified because of the unique powers of the governor's office.

She compared the proposal to the two-term limit on presidents.

"In the case of a governor, just as in the case of a president, too much power in the hands of a chief executive can have a bad effect," said Campbell.

During a series of weekend appearances, Campbell talked about term limits but stopped short of a full-blown call for limiting terms in office. She took that step at her news conference Monday.

With her step, Campbell moved to return to one of her core campaign themes: the argument that Republican Gov. Terry Branstad has been in office too long.

Branstad has been in office 12 years and is seeking a fourth four-year term.

Branstad was in Omaha, Neb., Monday. Spokeswoman Christina Martin said Branstad was sticking with his position of favoring term limitations when they are applied to all officeholders.

"He is in favor of term limits when they apply across the board," said Martin.

Campbell said she came to her backing for term limits reluctantly after concluding that other political reforms such as changes in the method of financing elections are unlikely.

"Change is a good and a healthy and a natural thing," said Campbell.

In making her proposal, she noted that Republicans have held the governor's office for 26 years and that's too long for any political party to hold power. She said that breeds cronyism and stagnation in state government.

"Given the absolute clout that a governor has, it's simply not healthy," she said. "It's a problem with the power of the chief executive."

Campbell said she would ask for the resignation of all department heads if elected and said, "I will accept a good number of them."

"By and large I'd want an opportunity to put my own team together," said Campbell.

Campbell argued that an overwhelming majority of states limit the terms of governors, and that hasn't disrupted government operations.

"I think about 40 other states are doing it, and they don't seem to be in any great state of crisis," said Campbell.

Iowa has the nation's longest string of Republican governors, but Campbell rejected suggestions she was seeking partisan gain with her proposal.

"It isn't self-serving. If there had been Democrats there for 26 years, I'd say the same thing," she said. "It's very unhealthy."

Campbell said her two-term limit would stand, regardless of whether the constitution was amended to require that turnover.

"I don't think anybody ought to serve more than eight years," she said. "If you can't get done what you want to do as governor in eight years, you should move on and let nature take its course, bring new blood and people and ideas."

"The entrenchment of this state bureaucracy is stifling, it's absolutely stifling," said Campbell.

Campbell argued it makes sense to draw a distinction between governors and legislators, because the Legislature has more turnover. Besides, she argued, lawmakers don't have nearly the power of a governor.

PROSECUTORS DENOUNCE 'STALL TACTIC'

Accused man retracts guilty plea to murders

Associated Press

DAKOTA CITY, Neb. — A man who pleaded guilty to three murder charges in two states in a deal aimed at avoiding the death penalty asked the court Monday to let him withdraw the pleas to two Nebraska murders.

Juan Manuel Ortega voluntarily returned to Nebraska after refusing to return to Nebraska voluntarily for his scheduled sentencing Monday.

Already sentenced to life in prison in the Iowa murder, Ortega is being held at the Woodbury County Jail in Sioux City, Iowa. Because no extradition order had been sought, Ortega could not be forced to return to Nebraska.

A hearing on Ortega's request and the sentencing tentatively were rescheduled for Dec. 21 in Dakota County District Court.

Ortega, 18, first pleaded guilty in Iowa to the June 16 murder of Stephanie Woods of Sioux City, who had been stabbed and run over with a car. Under an agreement with prosecutors, he also pleaded guilty to the March 22 beating death of Cleo Sherman of Macy, Neb., and the June 12 shooting death of Gary P. Miller of South Sioux City, Neb.

In exchange for his pleas, Nebraska prosecutors agreed that Ortega's sentence in Iowa would be served first. Prosecutors also agreed not to seek the death penalty in the Nebraska murders, according to a motion filed by Greg Jones, Ortega's lawyer.

Iowa does not have a death penalty. Nebraska conducted its first execution in 35 years in September.

In a three-page motion seeking to withdraw Ortega's pleas in the Nebraska murders, Jones accused prosecutors of breaking the plea agreement by including police reports of Ortega's confessions in presentence investigations.

"These confessions were made by the defendant who relied on the assurances of the county attorney and his counsel that the confessions would not be used against him to seek the death penalty," the motion says.

In an affidavit supporting the motion, Jones said prosecutors have told defense lawyers they plan to present evidence at Ortega's sentencing hearing in Nebraska.

"The evidence proposed by the prosecuting attorneys and included in the presentence investigation would tend to show aggravating factors in favor of the death penalty," Jones said.

Jones also argued that Ortega did not understand the nature of the charges and the rights he was waiving when he pleaded guilty.

Deputy Dakota County Attorney Robert Finney called the move a stall tactic.

"We've got an 18-year-old who's going to spend the rest of his life in prison, and he's got nothing to do but play games," Finney said.

"Unfortunately, he's just victimizing the families of the victims," Finney said. "They want to put this behind them and get on with their lives."

A transcript of Ortega's July 27 shows Dakota County District Judge Maurice Redmond was careful to make sure Ortega understood the consequences of the plea, Finney said.

Ortega lost a similar claim in Iowa, where he tried unsuccessfully to withdraw the guilty plea he had entered to the murder of Woods. Woodbury County District Judge Phillip Dandos rejected arguments that he had not fully explained all the elements of one crime to Ortega. Dandos sentenced Ortega on Sept. 23 to life in prison with no chance of parole in Iowa.

Death penalty draws 'suicide' criminals

CEDAR FALLS — A University of Northern Iowa professor said Iowa might attract suicidal criminals if the death penalty is reinstated.

Professor Katherine van Wormer said she has uncovered 20 cases nationwide in which criminals chose states with the death penalty to commit their murders.

"Some murderers have purposefully gone to states that have capital punishment to do their killing just so they will be executed," she said.

The evidence includes the case

"Some murderers have purposefully gone to states that have capital punishment to do their killing just so they will be executed."

Katherine van Wormer,
University of Northern Iowa professor of two men who were among the last to be executed in Iowa, which repealed the death penalty in the mid '60s.

Charlie Brown and Charles Kelley were hanged at the state penitentiary after they were convicted of killing a Walnut man and taking his car. They had also killed people in Minnesota, but they asked to be tried in Iowa because Iowa had the death penalty and Minnesota did not.

"I want to die for what I did. I don't want to spend the rest of my life in jail," Brown was quoted as saying.

Van Wormer said she has found 20 similar cases across the country.

In another, a California man convicted of three rape-murders was asked what would have happened if that state did not have the death penalty.

"I would have had to go to another state where they did have capital punishment," he said.

Van Wormer said that limiting the scope of the death penalty would not do any good.

"Some (people) would like to see a limited death penalty, one that would apply to the murder of prison guards or police officers. I believe that would have the opposite effect. Suicidal killers would then look for opportunities to kill guards or police officers," she said.

CLINTON TO ATTEND SIGNING CEREMONY

Israel, Jordan pen ground-breaking peace accord

Jamal Halaby
Associated Press

AMMAN, Jordan — Jordan and Israel initiated a draft treaty Monday to end nearly a half-century of hostility, intensifying pressure on Syria to move toward ending one of the world's longest-running conflicts.

The accord, reached after an all-night session that resolved disputes over water rights and borders, was expected to be quickly ratified by the Jordanian and Israeli legislatures. The Israeli Cabinet approved it within hours after it was signed.

After Monday's ceremony, Israeli President Ezer Weizman said Syrian President Hafez Assad "should look around and see. ... He may be the last in line" to make peace with Israel.

In Damascus, where government-run newspapers have said daily that Israel was not to be trusted, Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa said, "We hope the Israeli government will realize the fact that without achieving peace with Syria and Lebanon, there will be no peace in the region. ... This is the reality."

King Hussein of Jordan, who maintained clandestine contacts with Israeli leaders for years despite the state of war between the two countries, insisted the treaty heralded a new era. "Hopefully, it is a fresh beginning and a fresh start," he said.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin of Israel called it a "historically unique moment" and said he hoped a full-fledged treaty would be signed by the end of next week.

Israel TV said the full accord would be signed Oct. 26 on the Jordan-Israel border. President Clinton accepted an invitation to attend, the White House announced.

Israel and Jordan signed a nonbelligerency pact in Washington July 25 and since then had been working to resolve differences that stood in the way of a full-fledged peace treaty.

"I believe this peace is an important achievement," a weary Rabin told reporters in Jerusalem after returning from Monday's ceremony and the overnight meetings in Jordan. "I think it will also have repercussions where Syria and the Palestinians are concerned."

Peace talks with Syria have lagged over Damascus' demand that Israel relinquish the Golan Heights captured in the 1967 Middle East War. Polls show most Israelis oppose giving up the Golan.

Monday's accord, signed by Rabin and Prime Minister Abdul Salam Majali of Jordan, came after a rocky week for peace talks with the Palestinians.

Israel suspended negotiations with the PLO after Islamic militants kidnapped an Israeli soldier. The soldier was killed by his captors Friday as Israeli commandos stormed their hide-out, but talks will resume today in Cairo, Egypt.

Clinton said he was "delighted" by the developments in Amman, adding, "This agreement reminds us that moderation and reason are prevailing."

Jordan is only the second Arab country to make peace with Israel. Egypt broke ranks to do so in 1979.

LEADER'S SECURITY CHALLENGED

Continued violence jeopardizes effectiveness of Aristide's rule

Michael Norton
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — President Jean-Bertrand Aristide preached anew for reconciliation from behind his bulletproof shield Monday, hours after a mob torched the family home of Haiti's new army commander.

Fifteen buildings were set afire, and one man was killed in the coastal town of Gonaives after a false rumor spread Sunday night that Maj. Gen. Jean-Claude Duperval had led a coup attempt against Aristide.

After three years of army rule, Aristide faces a major challenge in persuading his nation to put aside the desire for vengeance.

At the same time, concern for Aristide's security has practically made him a prisoner of the National Palace, where his appearances have been from behind a bulletproof shield on the palace steps.

The mob attack in Gonaives, 100 miles north of Port-au-Prince, occurred after Aristide summoned Duperval to the National Palace Sunday to discuss how to dismantle the military, including cutting the army roster by 80 percent.

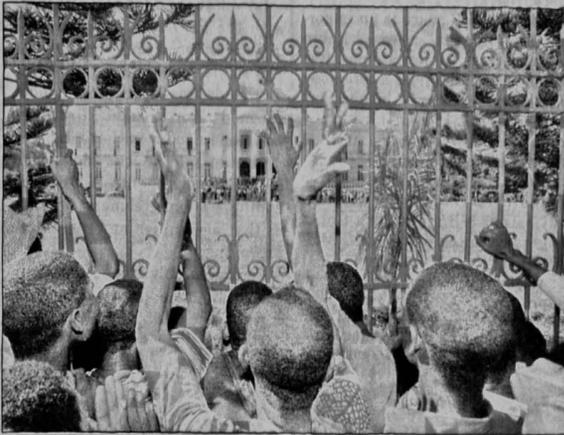

U.S. troops guarding the palace unloaded Duperval's normal sidearms, prompting unfounded rumors to spread that the army chief had tried to topple Aristide.

At least 10 houses and five stores were burned in the city of Gonaives, including one belonging to Duperval's mother and another belonging to the grandmother of former junta leader Lt. Col. Michel Francois. A grain depot owned by the Brandts, one of Haiti's richest families, was looted.

Radio Signal FM said U.S. and Haitian soldiers arrested 109 people in putting down the violence in Gonaives.

In a brief speech Monday at the National Palace, Aristide urged "creating a state of law, like all modern societies."

Underlining Aristide's plea for reconciliation, Duperval joined the Haitian leader on the palace stairs

Haitians crowd the iron fence around the National Palace in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, Monday in an attempt to see President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, who spoke from the front steps of the palace. About 5,000 Haitians gathered at the palace to hear a commemoration address for the death of Haiti's founding father, Jean-Jacques Dessalines.

and helped him hoist the Haitian flag.

Then Duperval offered Aristide a crisp salute and energetic handshake. The army chief was promoted last week to replace coup leader Raoul Cedras, who fled into exile.

Enthusiastic crowds briefly prevented Aristide's motorcade from leaving the palace to lay a wreath at Haiti's national museum to commemorate the assassination in 1806 of Jean-Jacques Dessalines, one of Haiti's founding fathers.

Aristide's motorcade retreated then used a back exit to get to the nearby national museum.

Later Monday, Duperval ordered all soldiers on leave to return to their posts today. Only a small fraction of Haiti's soldiers have been reporting for duty since Cedras' resignation. Aristide plans to cut the forces from 7,450 to 1,500.

Aristide officials sought Monday to put an end to the violence. Information Minister Herve Denis said anyone caught looting or targeting the homes of Aristide's political opponents would be arrested.

The lower house of Parliament protested the violence in a statement. "It doesn't seem that President Aristide can control the people," said Emmanuel Reyme, an opposition legislator and secretary of the Chamber of Deputies.

Violence has been compounded by the disappearance of many of Haiti's soldiers and police, putting American troops and international police monitors in the middle of disputes that are difficult to decipher.

During one street dispute in Port-au-Prince Monday, a pregnant woman told American troops that a man had threatened her. But a crowd told the Americans she was using them to settle a business quarrel.

Meanwhile, the U.S. military said the bodies of two slain men were discovered Sunday near the Cite Soleil area. A spokesman, Navy Lt. Mark McCaffrey, had no further details.

6-YEAR-OLDS KICK CHILD TO DEATH

Girl killed by playmates in Norway

Pamela Fornell
Associated Press

OSLO, Norway — Three 6-year-old boys are suspected of kicking a 5-year-old girl to death at a playground, police said Monday.

The girl, Silje Marie Redergard, was found dead Saturday in Tiller, a town on Norway's western coast.

The boys have not been charged because Norwegian law does not allow murder charges against minors. At least one of the boys has left police custody for home.

"This is not a matter for the police but for the social authorities," police Chief Per Marum was quoted as telling the national news agency NTB. He said police questioned the three boys and their parents about Silje's death. At first, the boys blamed the attack on teen-agers. But in seven hours of questioning, they broke down and recounted their actions, the mother of one boy said.

"The last thing on Earth that I

"This is not a matter for the police but for the social authorities."

Per Marum, Oslo, Norway police chief could have imagined was that my little son could have participated in something like this," the mother was quoted as telling the Swedish newspaper Expressen. The paper did not identify her.

"This is terrible, but my son suffers too. He believes that people can get back up after being beaten down," she was quoted as saying.

The four children were playing Saturday morning when the boys decided "to be mean," according to Expressen and the Oslo newspaper Verdens Gang.

Verdens Gang said the boys persuaded Silje to take off her clothes then took turns pushing and jumping on the crying girl.

One boy allegedly picked up a stone and hit her on the head and body, Verdens Gang said. The boys told police they held the girl down by the arms and legs and kicked her.

Police would not confirm the details of the slaying as recounted by the newspapers.

The slaying was grimly reminiscent of the beating death of a 2-year-old British boy in Liverpool in 1993. Two 10-year-old boys were convicted in that case.

CHARLES' CONFESSIONS SPARK CONTROVERSY

British monarchy questioned as biography triggers tempest

Maureen Johnson
Associated Press

LONDON — His father rebuked him and others castigated Prince Charles on Monday for talking about his unhappy childhood and miserable marriage in a remarkable outpouring that has rocked Britain's troubled royals.

Princess Diana was reportedly numbed by Charles' admission in an authorized biography that he never loved her.

Charles' father, Prince Philip, showed his disapproval. But royal aides denied the family was split, calling it a "healthy debate."

Betting shops, reporting a rush of new gamblers, shortened their odds on the once unthinkable: the British monarchy being abolished by the year 2000.

Prime Minister John Major interrupted his working day Monday to assure the public that the British monarchy was "very sound and very secure."

Supporters said the fact that Charles crashed through royal convention to discuss personal heartache may set the House of Windsor on course to becoming a more open and modern monarchy with less mystique.

"We need a new sort of public life, and we need a new sort of monarchy to go with it," said David Starkey, a leading British constitutional expert.

"Charles is in a very odd, funny, cack-handed, folkish kind of way — is pointing the direction toward just that kind of more open monarchy," Starkey said.

To the chagrin of the Conservative government, the furor overshadowed Monday's departure of Queen Elizabeth II and Philip on the first state visit to Russia.

"I've never discussed private matters, and I don't think the queen has either. Very few members of the family have," Philip, 73, said in a rare interview with London's Daily Telegraph, published Monday before the trip.

Philip emerges from the biography as a bullying, overbearing father who pushed Charles into proposing to the teen-age Lady Diana Spencer, a nursery school teacher and earl's daughter.

They were married in 1981 when she was just 20 and he was 32. The

Associated Press

This is a composite of British daily newspapers with front pages featuring reaction to a new book on Prince Charles, the heir to the British throne, Monday. The book, "The Prince of Wales," by Jonathan Dimbleby, alleges that Prince Philip pushed his son into a loveless marriage. The frank revelations in the authorized biography have upset several members of the royal family — not to mention Princess Diana.

couple, who have two sons, Prince William, 12, and Prince Harry, 10, formally separated in December 1992.

Diana, 33, drove from her Kensington Palace home to her gym — a regular Monday routine — ignoring photographers.

London's Daily Mirror newspaper quoted an unnamed friend of the princess as saying, "She is devastated. She can hardly believe what her husband has done to her."

The Sunday Times began serialization of "The Prince of Wales" Sunday. It is due to be published by Little, Brown Nov. 3.

Charles, 45, gave the author, broadcaster Jonathan Dimbleby, long interviews and access to more than 10,000 of his private letters and diaries.

Newspaper headlines Monday declared "Crown in Crisis" and "War of Windsors."

"There must now be serious doubt about his fitness to wear the crown," commented the Today newspaper.

The biography, about which Buckingham Palace says Charles has no regrets, shows the marriage went wrong almost from the start and depicts Diana as self-absorbed, obsessively jealous, bored and neurotic.

Diana had already let friends talk to author Andrew Morton for a 1992 book that portrayed Charles as cold, remote and persistently unfaithful with an old flame, Camilla Parker Bowles, 47.

In a book published two weeks ago, Diana's former riding instructor, ex-army Maj. James Hewitt, claimed he began a five-year affair with the princess in 1986.

Some royal watchers see Charles as gambling that his unusual frankness will revive acceptance of him as king.

The biography appeared to make a divorce more likely. Charles so far has shied from this partly because the monarch is temporal head of the Church of England, which frowns on divorce. As it is, Diana would become queen if Charles' mother died.

"I think people would find that a bit unfitting," commented Oxford historian Vernon Bogdanor.

Bookmaker William Hill reduced odds from 6-1 to 5-1 on the 1,000-year-old monarchy being gone by the end of the century.

herd guard dog.

Around 7:45 p.m., the men went to the house at 716 Walnut St., where Hastings threatened the lives of the two residents of the house with the shotgun while Jarman and Cordell took cash from the victims, according to court documents.

An Iowa City police officer, acting on a description of the perpetrators and their vehicle, located the suspects, who were then identified by the victims. A search warrant was issued, and the weapon thought to be used in the crimes was located and seized.

Although details of the crime are sketchy, police Sgt. Craig Lihs said the suspects unknowingly robbed the wrong house.

"They thought the house had drugs," Lihs said. "They picked the wrong place."

Cordell and Jarman were both charged with aiding and abetting a first-degree robbery in the house incident and aiding and abetting a second-degree robbery in the Ace Auto Recyclers incident.

They are being held on $50,000 bond each and are awaiting a preliminary hearing scheduled for Oct. 27.

Hastings was charged with first-degree robbery for the house incident, second-degree robbery for the Ace Auto Recyclers incident and causing injury / death to an animal in the shooting death of the guard dog.

He is being held on $75,000 bond and is also awaiting a preliminary hearing scheduled for Oct. 27.

explosion occurred.

"I saw a huge ball of fire, and I saw kindling all around where the fireball was. It went right straight up about 100 feet," he told the Waterloo Courier.

Jeff Whitaker, manager of Whitaker Foods, heard the blast from his office nearby.

"I just looked over at the window and it was a huge boom and a huge fire. It just exploded. The fire was just, like, everywhere," he said.

"It's gone," Whitaker said of the bar.

Ron Bright, vice president of Whitaker Foods, said he and two other people in the plant ran over to aid in rescue attempts.

"I could see at least six bodies underneath the rafters, and we were down there trying to get people out," Bright said.

Whitaker said Buzz's served breakfast and was popular with third-shift workers at the nearby Deere & Co. plant.

Police said those killed were Jerome Joseph Weber, 44; Fred Arthur Richmond, 85; and Duane Apfel, 58 — all of Waterloo; James Combs, 42, of Evansdale, Iowa; and Melanie Vernier, 23, of Cedar Falls. Allen Memorial Hospital officials said Dale Holien, 51, of Waterloo was in fair condition and Jon Christensen, 37, of Waterloo, co-owner of the bar, was in critical condition. The hospital said three of the dead were killed instantly and the other two died en route to or at the hospital.

TUITION

ed to increase the tuition, Lohman said. A petition has been circulated stating opposition to the increases; Lohman said it may be submitted at the meeting.

Holding the regents and the university accountable for their spending of money raised from tuition increases is vital, Lohman said.

"They've pretty much decided to pass the increase — that's not anybody's secret," Lohman said. "But I want to see the UI held accountable for spending the money the way they have promised. Are we really going to see building renovations or will that just keep getting held off until the next year?"

The mandatory fee raises should cause more discontent than the tuition increases, board member Elizabeth Hendricks said.

"Where I feel we should be taking some serious looks are at the fees," she said. "You would think this is where students would be expressing opposition. For example, the student health fee is charged to people even if they are only taking a few hours of classes at the university or people who have full health insurance. Students would be more effective to look at this kind of allotment."

A general student concern has been whether money will be spent where the regents say it will. Hendricks said she believes money is spent in its designated way.

"I firmly believe that money goes where it is earmarked to go," she said. "But to use an analogy, it's like looking at a married couple. When the wife manages the finances, the husband always wonders where the money went (and vice versa). It's a natural suspicion."

The board may approve priorities for designated spending the three schools have set for their operating budgets, which will then have to be approved by the state legislature.

It is impossible to predict whether the state legislature will give the schools the requested money, Hendricks said.

"I do think the state's in a better budgetary year than it has been in the recent past, but there are also going to be more people competing for that money," Hendricks said. "I don't know what the legislative spending attitude will be."

The regents will also request $937,500 to establish 150 scholarships for out-of-state American Indians whose tribes have historic ties to Iowa. The scholarships are intended make up the difference between nonresident and resident tuition rates without affecting overall tuition rates.

POLITICIANS

Searching for a candidate

Where have all the real politicians gone? As the 1994 gubernatorial campaign draws to its final month, that is the question voters are left to ponder. In many cases, the question would conjure up images of honorable and virtuous souls who want to lead Iowa into the next century. What voters actually want, though, is a sleazy campaign that rips the truth out from its sockets and throws it into the wind. We want the type of campaign that leaves stragglers choking on the dust of those who have had the guts to take the bull by his horns and not let go until Nov. 8. But we're in Iowa, and that's not going to happen.

Democratic candidate and Attorney General Bonnie Campbell has resorted to the tired tactics of using one piece of information and shoving it down the commercial-viewing audience's throats. Is anyone else sick of seeing faceless gun-toting men behind a chain-link fence? The commercial has Iowans shaking in their boots on the basis of a small number of isolated incidents — yeah, right. Not that the Republican candidate isn't giving people something to sink their teeth into.

Incumbent Republican Governor Terry Branstad is desperately trying to hold onto one of the nation's last vestiges of the failed game of Reaganomics Russian roulette. He does try to give us a taste of the old-school politics, though. Unfortunately, it is wrapped up in cheesy innuendo and wimpy accusations of its being Campbell's fault a man gunned down a couple of St. Paul, Minn., cops. If the man lived in Iowa at some point, it isn't Campbell's fault he killed someone in another state.

The national political spotlight is heating up as we witness some of the craziest races of the latter part of this century. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., a man who was once thought to have his backside permanently imprinted on his Senate seat, is fighting for his life in his first real battle since the Jurassic period. He is being hounded by a first-time office seeker, Mitt Romney. Romney claims he's an outsider since he's never run for public office. He wants everyone to forget the fact that he grew up in the Michigan governor's mansion and that his daddy, Pete, got beaten by Nixon in 1968.

If Kennedy's status as the raving lunatic of the Senate scares you, the replacement lunatic may be even worse. Military hero (and lying cheat) Oliver North is trailblazing his way from a convicted perjurer to a senator from Virginia. It will be a miracle if North can convince a majority of Virginians he is actually not the same person who arranged arms deals which were then used to kill American Marines. Come on, folks, 1987 wasn't that long ago, and isn't everyone still mad that their soaps were pre-empted for a month during the summer so we could watch North lie to Congress live and on network TV?

As we continue our search for the real old-school politician, we look around and see that they all have some of these attributes. We can't trust any of them, and searching for any amount of virtue in them only leads to painful headaches. Maybe we should just stay home and watch "NYPD Blue" on that fateful Tuesday night in November instead.

MEDIA SEDUCTION

On sex and our society

His hands are wrapped tightly around her neck as he roughly has sex with her. She seems to be gagging for air, crying and enjoying it at the same time. Jumping to the next frame, a man and a woman are ripping each other's clothes off, banging into walls, fighting, screaming and having sex at the same time. Sex and violence are portrayed as an enjoyable duo — just take a peek at movies such as "Basic Instinct."

Panning to real life, we are slapped with posters that scream, "One out of every six of you will be a victim of rape this year." Females talk about sex like it is candy, rejoicing about what they did last night and with whom — it seems to be a different guy frequently. Males go from one girl to the next with their buddies often running through the same girl like a train. This is all discussed casually and comfortably in public as if it was the weather.

Society doesn't look down on promiscuity, but embraces safe sex as it plays peekaboo with its next subliminally seductive panty, beer or perfume commercial. Everywhere we turn, flesh is thrown in our faces. The characters seem to get younger and younger and the repercussions of the way sex is portrayed are damaging to issues such as rape, disease and pregnancy.

There used to be a time where a person was stoned or killed for fornicating. Then came a time when the perpetrators were forced to be married if they were caught in the act or even seemed to be in a compromising situation. They were heavily disciplined, scheduled for birth control and educated about safe sex. Now, in the presence of babies having babies and under the glare of AIDS, casual sex is more popular than ever.

Older methods used to reprimand fornicators may have been a little extreme, yet there was an understanding of the reasons why the situation was being dealt with swiftly and harshly. They understood that sex was not just a meeting of bodies, but of minds and souls — something that shouldn't be tampered or experimented with.

This beautiful act was to be shared by two people bound by marriage and love so that they could grow together in understanding the emotion and not be destroyed by rushing into something. It was understood once that they must not take just themselves into consideration — no one wanted to tamper with putting a baby into the hands of inexperienced and emotionally inept couples.

Today we talk about how old-fashioned people were. Yet they understood both the joy and pain that could come from sex. The level of respect and protection was demanded in favor of the females' purity and the males' honor. Society had a vested interest in the future of their youth. Now we throw all this to the wind as society flavors us with so much seduction. As we dance to its tune — accompanied by AIDS, teen pregnancy, rape and emotional setbacks — do we dare ask, "What is the world coming to?"

Learning about life: semiotics and pigeons

I'm sitting on a bench outside, reading a long article about semiotics and television. Ultimately, the article proclaims to be about social change, but it goes through semiotics, the study of words, to get there. But I am not sure how that works yet — something about how people can "read" television programs in a resistant way rather than unthinkingly following the dominant ideologies promoted by the shows.

The weather is warm and breezy, and I am almost sweating under my two layers of clothing. It is that fall kind of in-between weather: too cold to take off my jacket but not cool enough to really want to leave it on. To my right is a too-full garbage can, around which congregate the requisite late-fall wasps. A young man to my right tosses whole slices of bread at ducks, and a woman whose baby is dressed in a new yellow outfit watches the feeding. Greedy birds chase after and fight over those pieces of bread, and I keep reading.

A man dressed in a worn ensemble of flannel, denim and leather approaches, carrying a brown-paper bag which is soft and wrinkled in the way that only old paper bags can be. I look up as he heads toward the garbage can and removes its lid. He sifts through its contents, dodging wasps, while I sit with my semiotics near the well-dressed baby and the man with his duck-destined loaves of bread. I can no longer read, but I sit in silence, staring down and paying my own form of homage to this man's plight while feeling paralyzed by its proximity.

I figure he is looking for cans. I think of my semiotics and its declarations of social change. I notice that he finds food in the garbage bin and throws it to the ducks — bags half-full of corn chips, a whole sandwich, fries from McDonald's. He then reaches into his worn paper bag and pulls out a pigeon. He looks over at me. "Want to hold her? I trained her when she was a baby."

I put out my hand and take the bird from him. She jerks her head in the way that pigeons do. He tells me that he is looking to borrow a Polaroid camera so that he can take a picture of her and send it to Oprah and a few other talk show hosts. He says he wrote to them but has not heard back. He explains that he is going to get a cage for his pigeon so that she can come on the airplane. I forget about semiotics.

Nobody I know really likes pigeons much. They are considered dirty, stupid city animals that carry disease. But this bird is his companion. She sits on his shoulder, arm or knee, wherever he puts her. He feeds her "by hand only," he tells me. He talks to her. "She likes to have her neck rubbed," he says, and he does so. "Does she fly?" I ask.

"I trained her not to," he tells me. She sits on his shoulder as he looks in the garbage for more food for the ducks. She jerks her head around and preens herself, and I am thinking about how quiet she was in the paper bag, how well-behaved she is.

He tells me that he sometimes buys whole bags of feed and leaves them for the ducks. It is cheaper than buying loaves of bread he says. He says that he thinks he can get $1500 for his pigeon. I wonder if he could part with her should the right offer come along.

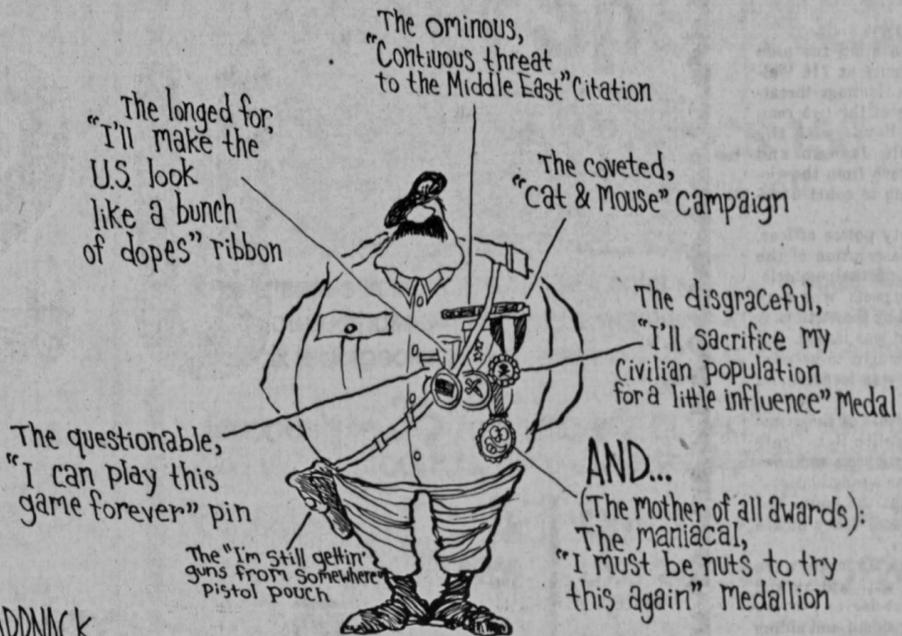

He sits on a nearby bench and smokes a cigarette, telling the woman with the clean baby about his pigeon and its road to stardom. The baby seems to like the bird. She reaches for it. The bird preens.

I return to my thick article. The author is talking about the media's influence over us, how it makes us think certain ways about ourselves and how we use it to make sense of our own lives. It says that a study of men in a homeless shelter showed that they would rather watch violent movies from a VCR than television shows about home and family. They cheer when the "bad guy" outwits the police, and they turn the movie off before the predictable ending.

I leave the benches and the man with his pigeon. I think about his dream, about the ducks to whom he feeds scraps and about the bird who does not fly but sits quietly in the worn paper bag. I throw away a greasy piece of wax paper — my own contribution to the overfull garbage can — and I walk back home, semiotics firmly in hand, obedient and resigned.

What to keep for future fashion trends

Everything old is new again.

This is especially true in the clothing business, where fashion designers are prone to sycophantic blathering about the "inspiration" they draw from the couture kings and queens of the past — as though creativity and artistic endeavor reached their zenith with the Chanel suit.

Designers build on these "classic" concepts in fashion, changing them a little each season so that they can keep selling new versions of old standbys. The Chanel suit in boucle! The Chanel suit in plaid! The Chanel suit in leather! They're all must-haves for any decent wardrobe!

If it were only European designers who were prone to resurrecting the clothes of decades past, the fashion world would run smoothly. The Ivana Trumps of the world would keep spending. ("Look! It's a Chanel suit in denim! Couldn't you die?") Taiwanese garment manufacturers would stay in business. The rest of us would make fun of Karl Lagerfeld.

But in fact, it's the rest of us that tend to run into trouble with fashion. Members of the hoi polloi want to be trendy and stylish, too, and that's how we wind up wearing knockoffs of knockoffs of something we bought 20 years ago.

In order for consumers to keep coming into malls and department stores at a healthy rate, they have to think that the clothes they have are out of fashion. Middle-class mallgoers have to get tired of their clothes at a faster rate than they wear them out.

So doing its part to stimulate the economy, the fashion industry dictates a new look every season.

But since designers — couture and otherwise — seem a little dry of ideas these days, the "new" look is often something we've seen before. In the past few years, we've been sold red lipstick and cashmere sweater sets (Jayne Mansfield), fake eyelashes and miniskirts (Twiggy), and bell-bottoms and platform shoes. (I don't know who popularized these — no one seems to want to own up to it.)

The problem with recycled trends is that just a few years ago there were people who couldn't seem to get their lace-up hip-huggers to Goodwill fast enough. People who thought they'd die before ever wearing a white vinyl skirt with orange go-go boots again. People who never wanted to see another Bee Gee, much less look like one.

If any of them had been brave enough to keep their relics of the disco era (8-tracks notwithstanding), they could have either supremely trendy clubwear for themselves or cold hard cash from selling their "vintage" clothing. ("Look at this! Genuine Mylar!")

Instead, people let all this stuff go, only to see it sold again in malls two decades later.

If Ivana Trump wants to spend thousands of dollars buying the exact same clothes over again every year, she can go ahead. She's probably got a lot of closet space to fill.

But for most of us, following the dictates of designers can be a serious waste of money. Imagine someday giving your teen-age daughter an allowance and then finding out she spent it on something you thought no one would ever, ever wear again.

Well, now is the time to prevent this from happening. In cleaning out your closet, the advice from fashion magazines is often "If you haven't worn it in a year, you'll never wear it again."

They lie.

You should keep anything that was ever part of a "look," however briefly. Someday you will want it again, or else your kids will want it or a trendy vintage clothing store will want it. Here's how to keep an eye out for clothes that may someday be part of retro trends of the future:

• Exercise chic. This was definitely a look in the '80s. Think Olivia Newton-John in a terry-cloth headband. Think Jane Fonda in leg-warmers. Don't toss those bubble-gum pink Reeboks yet. They may be just the thing for your daughter's aerobics classes someday.

• The preppy look. Sure, right now you're thinking you'd look like a geek in that kelly-green Izod shirt. But we bought them once, and we'll buy them again. With chinos, penny loafers and a Shetland sweater tied around the shoulders, designer Polo shirts are sure to come back as a "classic" style.

• Trailer-park trashy. Mobile home parks were not always as classy as they are today, and they used to have a real subculture that has yet to be properly appreciated and integrated into mainstream fashion. If you're lucky enough to have been brought up with such plebeian roots, rest assured that you have a fashion treasure trove for the years to come. Men, is there really anything more alluring on a woman than stretch-denim jeans paired with spike heels and an off-the-shoulder blouse? And women, admit it. Nothing says, "Here, girl!" like an enormous belt buckle emblazoned with the name of a guy's favorite brew.

• Techno chic. Although at the moment, watches with hands are favored as "classy," who's to say that the fashion savvy of the future won't return to the digital watch that tells you the times in Reykjavik, Lisbon and Beijing?

Readers, before you throw away that pair of moon boots, ask yourselves: Five years from now, will I be paying $150 for boots just like these?

An honest answer now could save you big money in the future.

What do you think of the new university billing system?

Yolondia Cullum, UI junior majoring in prenursing

"It's not as efficient as it could be as far as mailing out bills."

Kem Kavars, UI senior and nursing major

"I think it stinks. It's just increasing the amount of fees and late penalties they can tack on. It's hard to make the payment in 10 days if you have to send it home."

Jim Corelis, UI sophomore and open major

"They wouldn't take all of my U-bill out of my financial aid check so I had to pay a late fee. They wouldn't take anything out except my tuition. And the check came after the due date so I had to pay an extra $20."

Maroof Haque, UI freshman

"Well, I'm a freshman so I'm not familiar with the old system. I haven't had any problems, but I've payed the last day every time. But that doesn't matter."

Campus leader urges students to take action

To the Editor:
There are several issues that I would like students to be aware of because they will be playing a large role in all of our futures.

First, the Iowa state Board of Regents will be in town this week to vote on the proposed tuition increase. The student governments here at the UI and the other regent institutions tried to reason with the board's members at their September meeting; however, this action was to no avail.

The next step is to show the regents your concern by attending their meeting Wednesday at 11 a.m. in the Triangle Ballroom of the Union. All you need to do is take 20 minutes of your time and go to the Union, and this could save your family some money. Your visual presence at the meeting will show the regents that you are concerned about the increase and that they cannot just put it on your shoulders without looking you in the face. The only suggestion that I have is that when you show up, do not be disruptive. Your presence will be proof enough to them that you are concerned. I will continue to communicate with the regents up to the time they vote, but your attendance will be welcomed.

The second issue is that I want to remind you to register to vote for the upcoming elections. I have been dealing with many politicians from the local level to the federal level regarding student issues, and they blatantly say that they do not listen to students' concerns because students do not vote. I hope that more students will be voting and those politicians that don't look at students' issues will get an unpleasant surprise when Election Day comes. I implore you to first register to vote and then, more importantly, vote in the upcoming elections. With the increase in student voting, this could inevitably affect a wide range of student concerns anywhere from the drinking age to the sex act / classroom materials policy imposed by the regents.

The impact that all of us could make is overwhelming. Instead of having people who disregard our importance control our destiny, we can control our own destiny. In Iowa, you have to register 10 days before the elections. If you have questions on how you can register or where you can vote, you can call my office at 335-3859. I will keep you up to date on candidates and their concern or lack of concern for student issues.

UI animal coalition examines the facts behind hunting

Hunting season has begun — the beginning of the end for many animals living in the wild. Every day in North America, more than half a million wild animals are killed as a result of the combined efforts of recreational hunters, state federal managers and "varmint" shooters. Tens of thousands of other animals are wounded or crippled by bullets or arrows, are maimed by steel traps or suffer slow deaths from poisoning.

Hunters and government wildlife officials call these enterprises "wildlife management," but many naturalists, ecologists and animal rights activists consider these practices cruel and irresponsible. The term "wildlife management" is a euphemism that has long been used to uphold the rights of recreational sports hunters. Many arguments that hunters and wildlife agencies have frequently used to protect their right to slaughter wild animals include the following "myths":

Hunters are conservationists and really care about wildlife. Sportsmen's groups have fought hard for the establishment of new areas of protected wilderness.

Fact: Hunters are not conservationists. Conservation means the preservation, guarding or protecting of something — keeping something preserved in a safe or entire state. Hunters only care about "conserving" certain "game" species and increasing their populations to protect their right to kill the very same wildlife they seek to "conserve." Natural forests are also often clear cut or burned to allow hunters easy access to certain "trophy game."

It is mainly hunters' money that supports wildlife restoration, which includes nongame and endangered species programs, and therefore hunters have a right to "harvest."

Fact: Hunters claim that they pay for "conservation" by buying hunting licenses, duck stamps and other "conservation" paraphernalia. But the relatively small amount each hunter pays does not cover the cost of "nongame" wildlife programs which taxpayers are encouraged to pay. Wildlife agencies such as the Iowa Department of Natural Resources also limit their constituency to hunters only (hunters' licenses pay for their salaries!) so that nonhunters have little say in how wildlife should be protected. At the same time, the public lands that many hunters use are supported by taxpayers who oppose hunting, yet the latter must give up their right to a safe environment because of hunters' recreational demands.

Man is a predator and a part of nature. He is part of an ecological niche and helps keep nature in balance.

Fact: Nonhuman predators usually live in the natural ecosystem that is as well-bal- anced. However, the disappearance of certain species because of irresponsible hunting policies (the eradication of wolves, cougars, bears, etc.) has contributed to the overpopulation of one species — forcing the ecosystem to be disrupted. Another example includes our own Iowa Department of Natural Resources, which is known to work toward increasing deer herd numbers for the benefit of hunters despite the complaints from the farming and urban communities, and plant and animal specialists.

The deer will starve to death if hunters don't shoot them.

Fact: Nonhuman predators control deer populations naturally. However, wildlife-management policies have eradicated many of these predators and have purposely increased the deer population for recreational purposes. Initially, some deer might starve, but once wildlife management has stopped increasing deer populations, a natural balance between deer and their food resource will be achieved — thus eliminating future starvation.

Hunting deer prevents diseases from spreading.

Fact: Hunters like to kill the healthiest, strongest and largest animals. This tends to weaken the gene pool, which is contrary to Darwin's "survival of the fittest."

Nature can be a cruel place for animals. Predators demonstrate cruelty toward their prey. Hunters are simply following the "law of nature."

Fact: To say a predator is cruel because it kills for survival is based on an anthropocentric view of nature. Animals kill to feed their young and themselves. These animals kill for one reason — to survive. But most hunters kill for recreation. Hunters should not compare themselves with predators because they are not similar biologically or ecologically. Moreover, humans have a choice whether or not to inflict cruelty by hunting or trapping.

These are just some of the myths hunters and wildlife officials and agencies will use to perpetuate the slaughter of thousands of wildlife each year. To find out more, contact the UI Animal Coalition. The UI Animal Coalition will also co-sponsor a lecture with the Johnson County Humane Society, the Iowa Advocates for Animals and the Humane Society of the United States on Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in Meeting Room A of the Iowa City Public Library, 123 S. Linn St. Dr. Allen Rutberg, senior scientist for wildlife and habitat protection for the Humane Society of the United States will give a speech titled "Nonlethal Approaches to Suburban Deer Management."

Abigail Leisinger is co-chairwoman of the UI Animal Coalition.

Challenging the regents

To the Editor:
Poor Marvin Berenstein! In the Oct. 12 DI, the regents president says of the Campaign for Academic Freedom, "They don't want to talk to me, they want to yell at me" and claims that members of CAF have been unwilling to go through official channels to have the classroom materials policy revoked. Perhaps this could have something to do with Berenstein's response when CAF members have attempted to engage him in a formal dialogue on the policy: In each instance he invoked the regents' powers to threaten students and to avoid public debate on the issue.

Last October, when the regents met in Cedar Falls and imposed the first version of the sex act policy, members of CAF were in attendance and presented extensive arguments against it. Their remarks, made formally and on the record, urged the regents not to let a handful of homophobic complaints serve as the basis for an assault on academic freedom and quality of education at the UI. All seven people who addressed that meeting spoke strongly against the imposition of a policy and not a single one spoke in its favor. When it was all over, Berenstein smugly noted that the "channels of communication" between regents and students were open and then proceeded to impose the policy over all objections.

Appalled by the regents' autocratic stance, CAF members challenged them to a public debate in Iowa City, offering the board the opportunity to explain the policy's imposition and to publicly engage the arguments against it. Regent Thomas Collins declined the challenge, stating royally that when the regents make a decision, "That ends the matter."

Then, when CAF sponsored a peaceful but spirited protest at the February meeting in Iowa City, Berenstein's only response was to indicate that he would be willing to "have a dialogue" about rearming campus security officers.

It would seem that it is the regents and not CAF who have been "confrontational and unwilling to talk formally about" the policy. That's why when the board comes to town Wednesday I will be among those gathering on the Pentacrest at 12:15 p.m. to give them an earful and to demand that the classroom materials policy be stricken from the books. And if Marvin Berenstein wants to "have a dialogue" about something other than shooting students who challenge his decrees, CAF invites him to belatedly accept our debate challenge.

Taking a chance on Iowa City streets

To the Editor:
Jonathan Lyons' "orange pajama slumber party" (DI, Oct. 7) illustrated quite sadly how the Iowa City police have obtained a carte blanche to administer "justice."

When I first moved to Iowa City I was shocked to hear that I could get busted for walking while intoxicated. On those nights when I had been to a bar I made a 50-minute walk (or shucked out six mighty bucks for a cab) back to my residence from downtown because I didn't want to make the illegal and / or lethal drive. Plus, even if I had not been drinking I knew from past experience that after midnight I could be pulled over and harassed for the most minute reason. I thought I was being a good citizen by walking, but all along I was taking a chance.

Police claim they need the law to protect people from hurting themselves and others, but Lyons' article pointed out that there are no real restrictions on how the police must evaluate a potential suspect, even allowing the police to arrest people for simulated intoxication (not even Foster Brooks is safe). The police should also realize that harassing people walking home only helps to create the small-town bored cop stereotype. The Iowa City Police Department's claim that it needs reinforcements seems humorous when one hears that three cars showed up to arrest Lyons and his friend (two nonviolent jay-walkers), who instead should have been patted on the back for not driving.

In a city where there is no free public transport after midnight, people should not be penalized for walking home from a bar. Troublemakers can be incarcerated for the legitimate offenses they are committing and people who fall down drunk with no one helping them can be jailed for self-protection (as is done in many cities). A fair police force should realize that the public intoxication law is intentionally fuzzy, encourages drunken driving and should be done away with.

Iowa death penalty

To the Editor:
I understand there is a debate going on regarding re-establishing the death penalty in Iowa. What usually happens at those debates is as follows. The abolitionist states his points, which are:

- No. 1. The death penalty is not a deterrent.
- No. 2. It is much more costly than life imprisonment.
- No. 3. There is a risk to execute the innocent.

No. 4. You want to state that killing is wrong by killing.

No. 5. In your sorrow for the victim's family you create another set of bereaved people.

No. 6. Only a small percentage of convicted murderers get the death penalty. The choice is not by any means decided by the gravity of the crime; minorities, the mentally ill and those without the means for hiring a good lawyer will be executed.

In light of this last point, the whole debate seems to me utterly ludicrous. To be "tough on crime" means to kill one or two criminals out of a hundred. Ninety-eight of them in prison is all right, but to kill one or two will make us safe from crime!

Iowa wrestling ranked No. 1

The Iowa wrestling team was ranked No. 1 in the College Sports magazine preseason Division I poll.

The Hawkeyes were 11-3 last season and finished second in the NCAA tournament to Oklahoma State. The Cowboys are ranked second.

Iowa returns nine of 10 starters from last season, including six all-Americans and NCAA champions Lincoln McClravy and Joel Sharrott.

Big Ten rival Penn State was ranked third, followed by Oregon State and Arizona State. Minnesota came in sixth, followed by North Carolina while Iowa State tied for eighth with Nebraska.

The Hawkeyes open the season Nov. 26 at the Northern Open in Madison, Wis.

Iowa City rugby splits

The Iowa City Ducks rugby team lost to Iowa Falls 15-10 before beating Bremer County 17-15 Sunday in Waverly, Iowa.

Dan Johnson and Joel Johnson each scored 5 points in the first game. Dan Doyle, Ben Johnson and Andy Adams led in scoring with five points each against Bremer County.

Andy Webb was selected most valuable back and Brad Webb was named most valuable forward.

Alou snags NL Manager of the year

NEW YORK (AP) — Felipe Alou, who guided the young Montreal Expos to the best record in the majors before the strike stopped the season, was a near-unanimous choice Monday as National League manager of the year.

Alou got 27 of 28 first-place votes, with Dallas Green of the New York Mets receiving the other one.

The Expos, who have shown steady improvement in Alou's two-plus seasons, exceeded even their own high expectations this year by going 74-40.

IOWA STATE

Walden predicts he will be fired

(AP) — Iowa State football coach Jim Walden thinks it's a "foregone conclusion" that he'll be fired at season's end.

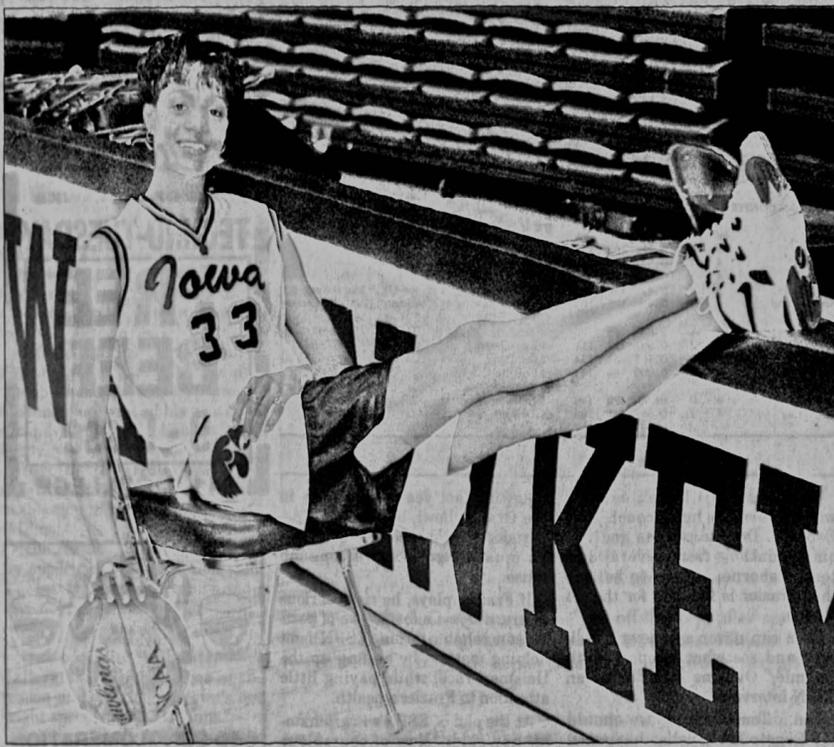

Walden, whose team is 0-6, said Monday the only pressure he feels now is to win a game for his players' sake.

"It has nothing to do with pressure of saving your job," he said during the weekly Big Eight teleconference. "I think that's really a foregone conclusion."

Walden made the remark as an aside while talking about how important a victory would be to his players and did not elaborate. In an interview later, Walden said that while he didn't intend for his job situation to be the main point of his comment, he meant exactly what he said.

"I think everybody would say there's sure a pretty good chance (of a coaching change)," he said. "I don't want to put any thoughts in anybody's mind, but if they're going to do it, they're going to do it."

Iowa's Jackson shoots for full recovery

M. Scott Mahaskey/The Daily Iowan

Iowa senior Tia Jackson, who had knee surgery in January, says she doesn't "want to see the floor if I'm not close to 100 percent." Last season the 6-foot forward led the Hawkeyes with 16.8 points per game before the injury ended her season after Iowa's fourth game.

A fresh start.

There might not be a more fitting theme for the 1994-95 Iowa women's basketball team. For Tia Jackson in particular, the term "fresh start" fits like a glove.

Most of the buzz surrounding this year's program has been focused on seven incoming all-American recruits. But it's the 22-year-old Jackson to whom Iowa will look to for the leadership on the court.

In January, the 6-foot senior forward underwent surgery to repair a torn anterior cruciate ligament in her knee. This year Jackson hopes to come back stronger than ever.

Last season, Jackson was heading into what should have been her last year at Iowa with great expectations. The Hawkeyes were ranked No. 3 in the nation and Jackson was a preseason honorable mention all-American in two national publications.

Jackson lived up to the billing, averaging a team-high 16.8 points through four games before her season came to an abrupt end. She went down with a season-ending knee injury 33 seconds before half-time of the fourth game of the season.

"The last 10 months has been long. It was a trying time," Jackson said. "Frustrating is the best word I can come up with. Knowing that there were some things I could do to help the team, but not being able to do about it except yell it at them from the bench. It was very frustrating to me."

"I had every doubt that was possible. I never thought I would get hurt like this. Now I thank God

"I didn't think I was going to have to be a team leader coming into this season, but they all seem to look up to me."

that the season is here and I'm ready," she continued. "I mean, I told Coach (C. Vivian) Stringer that I didn't want to see the floor if I'm not close to 100 percent. I don't. But now I feel that I'm near a level that will please her and please myself."

Stringer discussed Jackson's injury at the preseason media day press conference last Wednesday.

"The trainer has assured us that now that she's a little sore, it's going to be more psychological than anything else," Stringer said. "She used to spring from anywhere into a crowd of seven or eight people

Hawkeye veterans help freshmen adjust to college game

David Schwartz
The Daily Iowan

With seven players returning from last season and seven top freshmen recruits, it might be time for several members of the Iowa women's basketball team to get acquainted with the bench.

But that's not the case.

Intense, pressing defense, an up-tempo running game and a wide variety of plays should provide playing time for each type of player, Coach C. Vivian Stringer said last Wednesday.

"There's a lot of talent on this floor. It's going to take a while to get the freshmen in the game because there are so many plays," senior Simone Edwards said.

To help accommodate for the surplus of talent, players are setting out roles for themselves. They view the team as the first priority, not just racking up as many minutes as they possibly can.

"I'm just gonna try to get everybody in the game," senior point guard Arnela Yarbrough said. "If somebody is left out, the whole team gets hurt. I'm just gonna pass the ball around as effectively as I can, without turning it over."

Getting as many people into the game is also one of the goals of junior guard Karen Clayton.

"I'd like to make sure the freshmen are involved, make it a little easier for them. We're gonna be pretty quick, full-court press at a high pace for the whole game," Clayton said.

Helping the freshmen make the transition to college ball is a common thread among the veterans.

Kansas City's Willie Davis (84) is tackled by Denver's Elijah Alexander (58) after a four-yard pass reception during the first quarter Monday night. Davis caught a seven-yard pass reception from Chiefs' quarterback Joe Montana with 13 seconds remaining in the game for a 31-28 win over the Broncos.

MEDIATOR CALLS FOR TALKS

Hershiser, Winfield raise free agent total to 22

Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Players and owners bickered over free-agent eligibility even as mediator W.J. Usery called for negotiations to resume Wednesday in Washington, nearly six weeks after talks broke off.

Seventeen more players attempted to file for free agency Monday and four were rejected by management's player relations committee, which claims they don't have enough service time.

The four — Kansas City pitcher Tom Gordon, Atlanta pitcher Gregg Olson, Colorado pitcher Greg Harris and Los Angeles outfielder Tony Gwynn — need the 52 days of service time from the strike to reach the required six years.

Four others were rejected Saturday, the first day of filing: pitchers Jack McDowell of the Chicago White Sox, Jim Abbott of the New York Yankees, Kenny Rogers of Texas and Erik Hanson of Cincinnati.

Union head Donald Fehr said players will challenge the rejections but the union must decide whether to fight through a grievance, the National Labor Relations Board or in court. Twelve players eligible for free agency are affected by the dispute.

"It's a matter of considering the various legal options that are available, talking to the players," he said.

The 13 players who were allowed to file included Los Angeles pitcher Orel Hershiser and Cleveland outfielder Dave Winfield. They raised the free agent total to 22.

Usery, appointed Friday by the Clinton Administration, will attend Wednesday's meeting, Usery aide Doug Henne said in Washington. Officials of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, which entered the dispute a day after the strike began Aug. 12, have failed to alter management's demand for a salary cap, a move players say they'll never accept.

"We'll have to wait and see," Fehr said when asked what difference Usery could make. "He's supposed to be very skilled and very persistent. I certainly hopes he makes a difference."

11TH MANAGER IN 12 YEARS

Cubs fire Trebelhorn after last-place finish

Mario Fox
Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Chicago Cubs got rid of their 11th manager in 12 years Monday, firing Tom Trebelhorn after a last-place finish in the NL Central.

Trebelhorn, hired last October, was the fifth major league manager dismissed since the strike stopped the season Aug. 12.

"This is not an easy thing to do," said general manager Ed Lynch, who was hired a week ago. "But sometimes a managerial change is necessary for an organization to move forward."

Chicago finished 49-64 this season, second worst in the league.

Trebelhorn's firing completed a shakeup in the Cubs' front office. Andy MacPhail was hired last month as the team's president from the Minnesota Twins and Lynch was hired from the New York Mets.

Trebelhorn was hired last year by former general manager Larry Himes, who himself was demoted to a scouting job two weeks ago.

Trebelhorn was given the news

Tom Trebelhorn

during a morning meeting with Lynch at Wrigley Field, then declined interviews and left for a friend's home in Milwaukee.

It was the second time in three years he had been fired as manager. In October 1991 he was dismissed as Milwaukee's manager.

A week ago, he told Chicago's WSCR Radio he thought he had done a good job as Cubs manager, but his players didn't perform and he deserved another chance.

There had been speculation Lynch, hired last week, would promote Tony Muser, the Cubs' third base coach, to manager. While an executive with the San Diego Padres, Lynch in 1992 interviewed Muser for a Triple-A managerial job.

"All I can say is I'm hoping to have a manager and coaching staff in place for the team's organization meetings the first 10 days of November," Lynch said. "I will interview Tony Muser, but I have not made up my mind and will probably interview at least one or two others."

Trebelhorn, 46, was promoted to manager on Oct. 13, 1993, after he had spent the previous two seasons as a coach under manager Jim Lefebvre.

He has a career record is 471-461 in his six-plus seasons as major league manager.

Osborne, ESPN misplace priorities

As Nebraska disposed of Oklahoma State two weekends ago, the Big Eight Conference juggernaut rolled along without a hitch, playing as flawless as it had all year. The only difference was the man running the offense Brook Berringer.

Berringer, nursing an injured left lung, handled the Husker's wishbone offense to perfection, thus keeping Nebraska secure in its No. 2 ranking. The absence of starting quarterback Tommie Frazier proved to be insignificant.

Frazier was in the hospital recovering from surgery to remove a blood clot behind his right kneecap, his second clot in two weeks.

The first blood clot was discovered two weeks ago in his lower, right leg following Frazier's complaints of discomfort after the victory over UCLA. The clot was quickly dissolved with blood thinners and enzymes. A return for Frazier, in time, appeared possible.

Frazier was on the sidelines to watch Berringer beat Wyoming in his first college start, but talks of a return for the Oklahoma State game began to make the rounds.

Then came the news of a second clot. Frazier would have to undergo surgery to remove a vein from his lower leg. ESPN broke the story on the 5:30 p.m. edition of Sports Center.

IOWA FOOTBALL

Fry, QBs send different signals

Patrick Regan
The Daily Iowan
CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — With all five of Iowa's quarterbacks banged up and hurting, Iowa coach Hayden Fry said he might turn to wide receiver Willie Guy or defensive back Plez Atkins to guide the offense Saturday against Michigan State.

Offensive coordinator Don Patterson would not confirm rumors last Saturday that Guy ran the option at quarterback last season during practice.

"I can't remember that far back really. He's an old high school quarterback so certainly he knows how to handle the ball," Patterson said.

Iowa's two healthy quarterbacks went down against the Illini but home state.

"When Iowa plays Iowa State, that's a big rivalry. I'm not from

GAME NOTES

Iowa so to me that was a game," said Goff, who hails from Peru, Ill. "This was a game that means a lot to me and it hurt pretty bad losing. I was hoping to come in here and win."

Goff was heavily recruited out of high school by both Illinois and Iowa. The 6-foot-6, 278-pound freshman has worked his way up to second-team guard behind Matt Purdy.

Despite the Hawkeyes' 2-5 record, Goff said he has no regrets in choosing to play at Iowa instead of Illinois.

"The reason I came to Iowa was my opportunity to play," Goff said. "I'm getting that opportunity and I have no regrets whatsoever."

'Out of sight' — Punter Nick Gallery had his best game of the season and was one of Iowa's few bright spots against the Illini.

Gallery averaged 45.7 yards on six punts and scored Iowa's only touchdown, a 1-yard pass from Jefferson Bates, after coming into the game as a tight end.

"Our punting was great," Fry said. "Nick Gallery just finally got the rhythm going and kicked the ball out of sight."

Fry said Gallery's touchdown was an indication of just how bad the injury plague has hit the Hawkeyes.

"I'll be in there. I'll be ready to play, even if I have to wear a cast."

neither of them appeared to be in as bad a shape as Fry indicated.

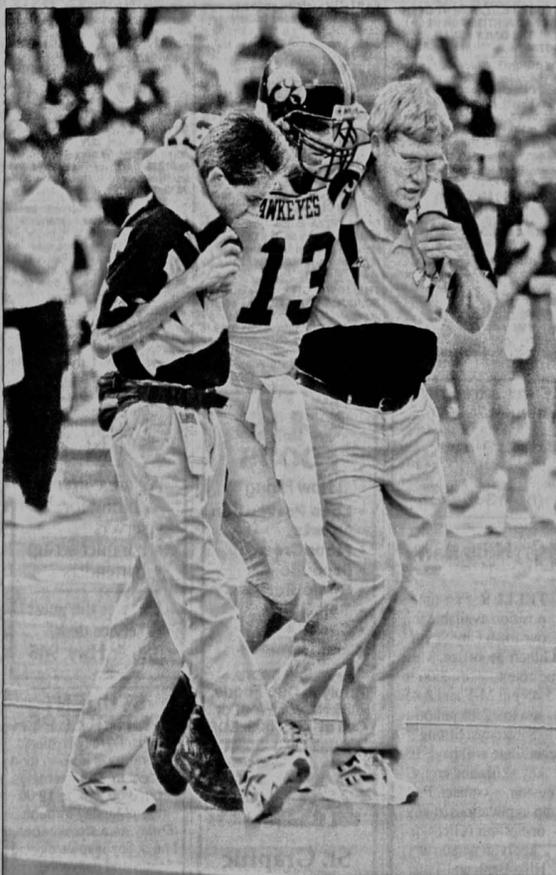

"I just got a couple bumps and bruises but pretty much my whole body is fine," Duprey said. "It's day to day, we'll have to see what happens."

Corby Smith was on crutches after the game with a sprained right ankle but said Guy would not need to play quarterback in Iowa's next game.

"I'll be in there," Smith said "I'll be ready to play, even if I have to wear a cast."

Bitter rivalry — Iowa's 47-7 defeat at Illinois was more than just another loss to some Hawkeyes.

Offensive lineman Mike Goff was especially bitter after losing in his Iowa quarterback Corby Smith is helped off the field after spraining his right ankle during the Hawkeyes' 47-7 loss at Illinois. Smith vowed he would be ready to play Saturday against Michigan State.

"Our punter catches our only score," Fry said. "He caught the touchdown, that might tell you something there."

Gallery said his big day was of little consolation.

"We still lost," Gallery said. "I'm happy with the way things are coming around. I've just got to keep improving every week."

Duprey recovers — Iowa had only six first downs after three quarters against the Illini defense, but managed to pick one up in the second period after a 13-yard loss.

Quarterback Mike Duprey was hit and fumbled at the Hawkeye 23-yard line.

Illinois linebacker Dana Howard picked the ball up and returned it to the 8-yard line where he attempted a lateral that Duprey intercepted.

Duprey was brought down at the 10 giving the Hawkeyes a first down, 13 yards behind the original line of scrimmage.

CHICAGO BEARS

Second concussion forces Hoge to retire

Rick Gano
Associated Press

LAKE FOREST, Ill. — In the hospital he was dazed and lost. Merrill Hoge didn't know his wife, his brother or that he had a 14-month-old daughter. His phone number? Didn't have a clue.

Two weeks later, he was still in a fog. And after consulting three doctors following his second concussion in six weeks, Hoge had a choice to make, although it was really no choice at all.

He had to give up the game he

Merril Hoge, Chicago
fullback

loved so much. Hoge, 29, still feeling the effects of a blow he took to the head while blocking in a game Oct. 2, announced Monday he was retiring from football and the Chicago Bears.

"It's the end to a career but not to a life," said Hoge. "This is not a sad day. It's the end of a career and the start of something new."

Hoge, casually dressed, sat on a bench surrounded by a throng of TV cameras in a small, tree-shrouded patio outside Halas Hall. Signed as a free agent in March after seven years with the Pittsburgh Steelers, he wanted to help the Bears make the playoffs.

Now his concern is to be a normally functioning human being again. Without the headaches, dizziness, memory loss and lethargy that have been part of his life for too long.

He talked with Al Toon, who also retired because of recurring concussions, and Lynn Swann, who had also suffered concussions. Doctors, two in Chicago and one in Pittsburgh, told him he risked even more damage if he tried to play football again.

"To be honest, it was none of my decision. In order for it to be my decision I would have to go against every doctor I had seen. I went to these guys for the fact I trusted them," said Hoge.

"It's not like a knee or an ankle. I'm suffering things right now as I sit on this bench. If I laid down, I would go to sleep. My whole body is completely numb right now. I don't feel good. My entire body is affected. They can't tell you in two weeks you will be better — like a knee (injury). We know you will, just don't know when. That's scary enough."

Hoge sustained his first concussion Aug. 22 against Kansas City. He thought he would recover fully, but at this point he knows he's still not the real Merrill Hoge.

"It's an awful feeling right now. I can't imagine it being one degree worse than it is right now," he said. "I don't have a lot of emotions either way. That zest for life, they say it will come back."

Hoge, a popular fixture in the locker room and a co-host for a local radio and TV show, told his teammates Monday morning he was retiring. Doctors say he'll make a full recovery but don't know when. Hoge hopes to stay in contact with his teammates and perhaps join them in workouts.

"The most frustrating thing about the injury is that there is no control. I have no control over getting better," said Hoge, who hadn't been taking medication because he couldn't remember the dosage. "I'm at the mercy of time."

Hoge, used mainly as a blocker, gained only 24 yards on six carries this season while catching 13 passes for 79 yards. He signed a three-year, $2.4 million contract in March.

Tarantino tears back into film with triumphant 'Pulp Fiction'

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

As directors from Orson Welles to John Singleton would attest, it's difficult to follow up on genius. But second-time director Quentin Tarantino has put both of them to shame with "Pulp Fiction." His second shot at directing — pronounced best film of the 1994 Cannes Film Festival — proves it's possible to improve on perfection.

"Pulp Fiction" is far more ambitious and complex than Tarantino's brilliant 1992 debut "Reservoir Dogs," but his style loses virtually nothing in the upgrade. Stellar characterization, whip-crack dialogue and a killer sense for plotting and pacing all add up to a movie that begs for repeated viewings.

Tarantino goes out of his way to make it clear that his screenplay plays on two distinct dictionary definitions of "pulp" — "a shapeless mass" or a form of fiction dealing with "lurid subject matter." Both are apt descriptions; while less excruciatingly violent than "Dogs," "Fiction" still delves deeply into kinky sex, graphic violence and tawdry relationships of every kind. And the plot, while strikingly coherent, is unquestionably amorphous.

"Fiction" boasts at least three discrete plot lines and a half-dozen offshoots, but all roads lead back to crimelord Marcellus Wallace (Ving Rhames of "Dave" and "Homicide"). Though a relatively minor character in the film, Marcellus sets most of the stories in motion with his power over the local community.

As the film begins, he's sent small-time enforcers Jules Winfield (Samuel L. Jackson) and Vincent Vega (John Travolta) to locate a special item. He's ordered Vincent to spend an evening baby-sitting his beautiful new wife, Mia (Uma Thurman) — without laying a finger on her. And he's preparing to pay off local boxer Butch Coolidge (Bruce Willis) to throw a fight. Meanwhile, two small-time robbers, a heroin dealer and his happy family and some very strange sadists lurk in the wings waiting to skew the wandering plot further off course.

Tarantino gathers these threads and blends them with an elemental wizardry that briefly looks haphazard — until his style begins to pay off. As with "Dogs," he organizes scenes for effect rather than continuity, jumping around in time and space to bring stories together at precisely the right moment.

The threads intersect with machine-gun precision, resulting in a series of agonizingly tense confrontations that would have made Hitchcock proud — and might even have baffled him with their subtlety. As what looks like a continuity error unfolds into one of the film's most riveting stories, it's clear that Tarantino's signature style has endless possibilities that more mainstream directors have never dreamed of.

The same directors have apparently missed out in their casting choices. Tarantino somehow manages to take a handful of actors more known for their recent failures than their past successes, and boost them all back on the road to Tarantino's brilliantly mundane dialogue and razor-edge characterizations that shine far more than any one actor.

The only sour notes in "Pulp Fiction" come from smaller roles. Former "Saturday Night Live" star Julia Sweeney — whose "It's Pat" movie is apparently headed directly to video — is insipid in her mercifully brief role. More surprisingly, veteran Tarantino actor Harvey Keitel is bland and uninspired in his cameo as "The Wolf," a reprise of his recent role in the truly awful "Point of No Return."

But good things come in some of the film's other small packages. Christopher Walken puts in a brief, bittersweet appearance as a friend of Butch's father. Amanda Plummer is beautifully twisted in a tiny role as a manic holdup artist. Eric Stoltz and Tim Roth both pull off quirky minor roles in memorable style. And Tarantino himself delivers a few unforgettable scenes as a put-upon family man dealing with someone else's problems.

Welles and Singleton could both testify that expectations for a director's second film are the highest — and the least likely to be justified. But Tarantino's skipped the sophomore slump with seemingly effortless verve.

The only question he raises is "Can he pull this off a third time?" We should be so lucky.

Travolta ("Look Who's Talking"), Jackson ("Amos & Andrew"), Thurman ("Mad Dog and Glory") and Willis ("Color of Night") owe Tarantino an immeasurable debt of gratitude for remaking their images in ways that will enable all but the most hardened cinematic cynics to forget their past roles. All four perform admirably — but in the end, it's

Guitarist living out a lasting love of music

Melanie Johnson
The Daily Iowan

Duke Robillard is a blues guitarist with a rock and roll heart. As a little boy, he was so taken with his older brother's collection of '50s rock 'n' roll albums that when his parents wouldn't get him his own guitar, he made one for a science project. He was in a band the next week.

Years later, he's a music veteran who's worked with everyone from Count Basie to Dr. John, and he'll be jamming at The Metro tonight.

"I guess all the great music I heard when I was a kid still inspires me," said Robillard. "So many things influence me — mainly artists from the '40s and '50s like B.B. King and T-Bone Walker. But I just keep learning. It's important to keep forging ahead."

Robillard doesn't break any new ground with his music. As a classic rock and blues guitarist, his talent lies in his ability not only to imitate, but to create rock and blues music worthy of the artists who influence him. Robillard started rocking back in the late '60s, with the creation of the critically acclaimed Roomful of Blues. Sitting in on sessions with Muddy Waters throughout the '70s, Robillard recorded a few solo albums, ending up as Jimmy Vaughn's replacement in The Fabulous Thunderbirds in 1990. His latest solo effort, Temptation, showcases his talent as a blues guitarist.

With this album, Robillard says he was trying to feature his own musical strengths, as well as recreate the feel of his live shows. "I wanted to make a recording that shows off my singing and songwriting," he said. "I hope the album makes people want to see the songs live."

While Robillard may not be a household name in these parts, the musician is an example of a hard-working blues guitarist. He'll be aiming to please Iowa City this evening.

"Expect a lot of different things," he said. "Depending on what the audience likes, they'll hear a lot of blues stuff from the album, a few tributes to favorites and a touch of jazz."

Blues artists in Iowa City are a dime a dozen, but it's not often old-time rockers roll into town. So if the midweek blues are upon you, check out Duke. He knows how you feel.

Duke Robillard appears tonight at The Metro, 121 Iowa Ave., with opening band Glovebox Whiskey. Tickets are available for $7 at the door or $5 in advance at The Metro; Co-op Records, 119 E. Washington St.; or BJ Records, 6 S. Dubuque St.
