Fire-safety system alarms students

On the night of Oct. 28, UI sophomore Jessica Templeton witnessed a fire on the fifth floor of Burge Residence Hall, pulled a nearby fire alarm ... and nothing happened.

It wasn't until minutes later, witnesses said, that the alarms went off and the Iowa City Police Department and the UI Department of Public Safety were notified. After notification it took firefighters three minutes to arrive, Iowa City Fire Marshal Andy Rocca said.

The delay in the sounding of the alarms and notification of officials was due to the UI residence halls' "monitor system," in which the fire alarm is verified by the front desk before notifying the fire department. Representatives from the fire department and public safety said the system is safe and effective for the situation.

The UI is not the only university in Iowa which has a monitoring system for fire alarms in residence halls. Due to a large number of false alarms at Iowa State University, ISU has also adopted the system, said Ames Fire Department inspector John Dethrow.

"We're trying to negate the number of false alarms," Dethrow said. "We've adapted what I call 'the Iowa City approach,' where we have 'investigators' on the scene — meaning dent, said she was concerned about the amount of time it took for the alarms to go off Oct. 28. She said we have RAs and people in the residence halls checking things out before we're called."

ISU implemented the system last summer and is using it on a temporary basis to see if it will work, Dethrow said.

"We have a similar environment as the UI with a college community, and we needed a way to deal with the problems false alarms present to fire personnel," he said. "It has worked well in Iowa City and we're very, very happy with the program. So far, it has done very well."

she saw several alarms pulled — with no response.

"I don't think it's the safest system," Gryglas said. "I mean, if there's a fire ... I don't think it's good."

All residence halls currently run on the monitor system, Rocca said. The system consists of a monitor in each residence hall who is alerted when a fire alarm is pulled and checks out the area to see whether the alarm is false. If there is a fire, the fire department is notified and the alarms ring, Rocca said.

He said the fire alarms will automatically ring in the residence hall and at the fire department if the system is not shut off within three minutes of the alarm being pulled.

When there is no one to monitor the system, it directly notifies the fire department, Department of Residence Services director George Droll said in a fire-safety memo to Joanne Fritz, director of University Relations. Public safety is then notified by the fire department.

The main reason the UI changed to this type of system was to cut down on the number of false alarms the fire department had to

Fire Alarm Facts

■ A standard alarm response costs $365. That accounts for about one hour of time, two fire engines, one truck and a battalion chief but doesn't include administrative overhead.

■ It takes the Iowa City Fire Department approximately three minutes to respond to a call to any UI residence hall.

■ Residence halls can be evacuated in seven minutes, and each hall has a fire drill in early to mid-September during Fire Safety Week.

■ All residence halls are equipped with smoke detectors in the hallways and in rooms. The detectors are run by electricity; they're not battery-operated. All halls also have fire extinguishers, and Quadrangle Residence Hall has sprinklers in all rooms.

■ The entire fire-safety system is checked at least twice a year, and the alarms are checked and reset each time they go off.

Accused South Carolina mother may plead insanity

UNION, S.C. (AP) — Susan Smith's lawyer said Monday he may mount an insanity defense for the mother who told police she was suicidal the night she rolled her car into a lake and drowned her two sons.

"I'm going to consider everything," David Bruck said.

He said he may also ask that the trial be moved from Union, where crowds jeered Smith outside the courthouse Friday.

Bruck, who visited Smith in prison Saturday with a psychologist, refused to comment further, saying the judge in the case had asked him not to discuss the matter.

Smith, 23, was charged with murder Thursday after police said she confessed to buckling her children — 3-year-old Michael and 14-month-old Alex — into their safety seats before rolling her car into a murky lake.

Teen-age killer of 4-year-old gets maximum penalty

BATH, N.Y. (AP) — Heeding a heartbroken father's plea, a judge sentenced a teen-ager Monday to nine years to life in prison — the maximum — for luring a 4-year-old boy into the woods and crushing his skull with a rock.

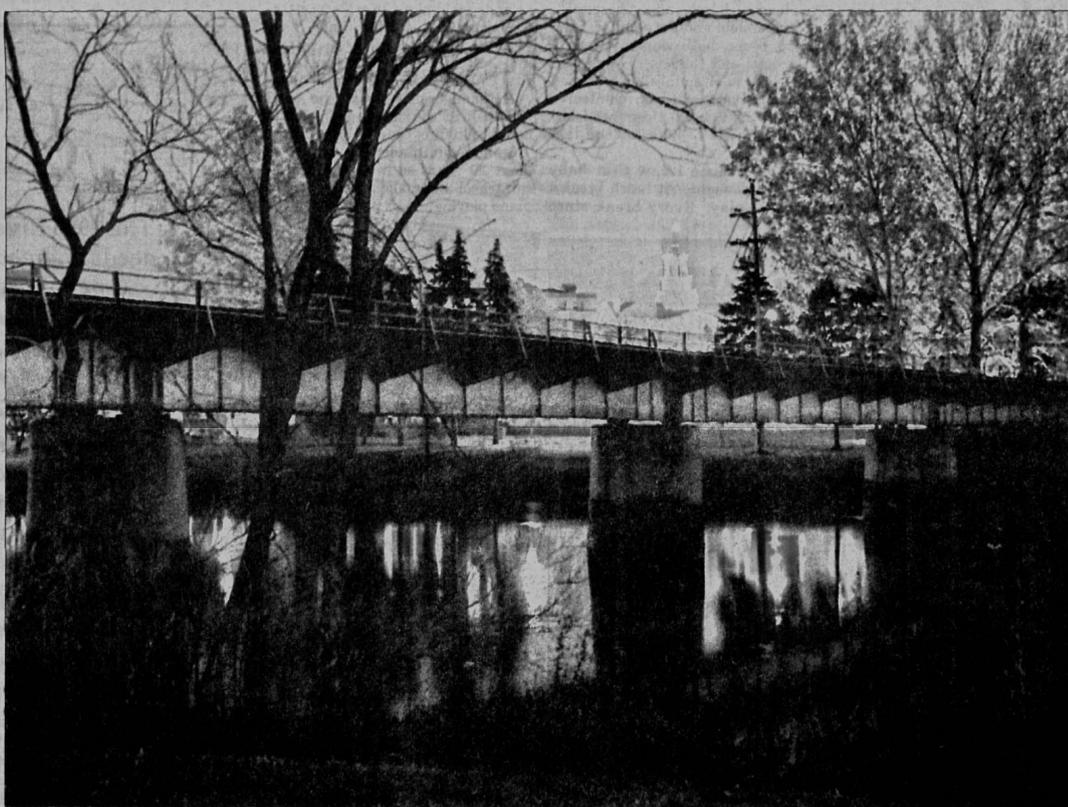

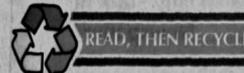

The 14-year-old killer, Eric Smith, cast his eyes downward but showed no emotion.

Smith confessed in 1993 to leading Derrick Robie on a supposed short cut to a day camp they attended in the western New York village of Savona. In an overgrown lot, Smith choked the boy and bashed his head with a 26-pound rock. He then sodomized the body with a stick.

"When Derrick came into this world I cried, and when Derrick left this world I cried," Dale Robie, his voice trembling, said in asking the court for the maximum. "I have felt the whole realm of loving and losing."

Parties endeavor to get out vote

John King
Associated Press

A surly midterm campaign sure to increase Republican clout in Congress closed Monday with President Clinton's imploring voters to keep Democrats in control. The fight for the Senate and several statehouses was so tight it hinged on which party proved best at getting voters to the polls.

On election eve, a new national poll showed Clinton's approval rating over 50 percent for the first time in months and Democrats running even with Republicans when voters were asked which party's candidate they planned to support for the House.

But that good news for Democrats was tempered by this: Seventy-three percent of the "ABC News" poll respondents described themselves as dissatisfied or angry voters. Clinton rode such discontent to the White House two years ago, but this year those voters said they favored Republicans.

As is tradition, candidates plunged into one last day of handshakes and rallies — and paid for polls today because he said students don't feel like they have the time.

Negative advertising and student ambivalence notwithstanding, the early votes cast in Johnson County are setting records. As of Monday afternoon, 6,851 people had returned ballots for the 1994 general election.

"There is very strong interest in voting early in this election. I hope that will translate into a record turnout on Election Day, too, but I'm pretty pessimistic about that," Slockett said. "Everything I've read is that one of the reasons we have such large numbers of undecided voters is because they don't intend to vote. The expectation is that it is going to be a low turnout nationwide."

Students are much more involved in college activities than they are in national and state politics, and they have never participated in high numbers, said Arthur Miller, UI professor of political science.

"Traditionally, students participate at about half the rate as everyone else," Miller said. "It's something about their lifestyle that hinders them from participating at a very high level."

Although Iowa pre-election polls show Gov. Terry Branstad with a sizable lead over Democratic candidate Bonnie Campbell, a UI business professor said the race may be closer than it appears.

UI marketing Assistant Professor Thomas Gruca, who has been doing poll research for the past year, said the media's interpretation of polls is often wrong.

"Many times the media simply divides the undecideds equally between the candidates, and that is a mistake," Gruca said.

"It really is pretty costly if you think about it in terms of cost-effectiveness, of trying to get a student to go out and vote vs. somebody who is not a student to go out and vote," Miller said. "It is my feeling that there isn't a great deal of resources that a candidate would devote to mobilizing the student population."

Pianist plays into hearts of I.C. listeners

Kathryn Phillips
The Daily Iowan

In between the women's lingerie and hand bag departments at Von Maur in Sycamore Mall, Verne Sandersfeld sat at the bench of a black baby grand piano.

With a halo of white hair and a look of concentration, his nimble fingers played "Alexander's Rag Time Band." A silver-haired woman stood near the piano tapping her foot, while two young children sat on a winged-back couch bobbing their blond heads to the vibrant song.

Joe Murphy/The Daily Iowan

Sandersfeld paused between songs for compliments.

"Wonderful, beautiful — how do you remember all of those notes?" the woman asked.

He just smiled, his left foot keeping time as he swung into another tune without sheet music. A piano player since age 5, Sandersfeld, 59, never learned to read notes.

"If I can hum a song, I can sit down and play it no problem at all," he said.

Sandersfeld can hum ragtime, country, gospel and rock 'n' roll. His repertoire includes more than 1,000 songs.

"Music is hereditary," he said. "My dad played in a dance band. We didn't have baby sitters back then, so my brother and I would go along with him. We'd sit on either side of the piano player and watch him play. It was in my blood since I was young."

Music was a common bond in his family. His mother, four sisters and older brother all played the piano and sang in choirs. Having lived in such musical surroundings, he also can play the trumpet, the saxophone, the harmonica and the accordion.

"When I was 16, I started my own band. We called ourselves the Swingsters because that's what we played," he said.

A pianist for the Rock-N-Flames,

Verne Sandersfeld, 59, has been playing piano since the age of 5 and currently plays at Von Maur in Sycamore Mall and in the UI Hospitals and Clinics lobby. His musical tastes range from ragtime and country to rock 'n' roll. "If I can hum a song, I can sit down and play it no problem at all," he said.

Sandy's Trio, the Buzzin' Cuzzins, and Al and the Untouchables, Sandersfeld mastered rock 'n' roll, old-time and "all around" tunes. He also played for two years at Shakey's Pizza & Buffet in Cedar Rapids.

On some occasions, Sandersfeld inspires sing-alongs and draws an assorted crowd while he works at Von Maur.

"I was playing one day and this old man — he must have been 85 years old — just started singing old standards with me. I got a real kick out of it," he said.

Sandersfeld has become a small-town celebrity famous for his spirited playing, but he takes all the attention in stride.

"People know me all the time and I don't know them," he said. "They call me by name, and I don't know them from Adam."

He said he has finally found his niche playing for the community, preferring the casual atmosphere of his solo career.

"I've been away from bands now for quite a few years," he said. "I have more fun playing at senior citizen homes, church and the hospital."

Sandersfeld and Patricia, his wife of 35 years, both work at the UI Hospitals and Clinics. He works in the General Hospital's Laundry and Linen Services and has volunteered to play the General Hospital's lobby piano on his breaks for the last eight years.

"The minute I saw that baby grand I thought, 'At lunch break I have to play.' Every break since then I've been playing," he said.

Playing at the hospital is very rewarding, Sandersfeld said.

"People leave napkins or envelopes with notes on the piano," he said. "They're having a tough time, their kids are sick. But they feel good because of the music. They're uplifted by the piano."

Sandersfeld plans to sell cassettes to raise funds for the hospital.

"I want to make some cassettes and then the volunteers at the hospital could sell them and raise money for some organizations," he said. "I'm still in the process of getting permission from the university."

Sandersfeld plans to retire in at least 10 years so he and Patricia can travel and make a living off his piano playing.

Big stars to shine on special 'Jeopardy!'

NEW YORK (AP) — Will Norman Schwarzkopf take military history for $200? How about famous tall guys for $500 for Kareem Abdul-Jabbar?

The retired general and the former basketball star take buzzers in hand this week with a slew of other big names for the third annual "Celebrity Jeopardy!"

The stars played each other in five shows, with the first show scheduled for broadcast Monday. The celebrities taped the shows weeks ago but pledged not to reveal the big winner.

The prize money goes to the celebrities' favorite charities. USA Today said the grand total was $175,000.

Schwarzkopf battled Tony Randall and Stefanie Powers. Abdul-Jabbar went up against Larry King and Alexandra Paul of "Baywatch." Jason Alexander of "Seinfeld" and David Hyde Pierce of "Frasier" were also contestants.

Jerry Orbach of "Law & Order" was the big winner last year with $34,000, and Cheech Marin was the victor the year before that with $25,000.

Actor Rourke and supermodel wife make small amends

NEW YORK (AP) — Carré Otis and Mickey Rourke followed up a week of stormy headlines with some nightclub hand-holding and a near-exchange of drinks.

The supermodel walked up to her estranged husband early Sunday at Club Expo and sent him and pal Tupac Shakur a round of drinks, witnesses said. Rourke tried to reciprocate with an expensive bottle of champagne, but Otis handed it off to a bystander.

The two held hands, spoke briefly and appeared to brush cheeks. Then she was gone.

Last week, Otis was quoted in the tabloids as saying she was afraid of Rourke and had him banned from fashion shows where she was walking the runways. Rourke then trashed his $5,000-a-night suite at the Plaza Hotel, and hotel owner Donald Trump reportedly banned him for life.

Otis and Rourke married in 1990. Rourke is scheduled to appear in court Nov. 21 in Los Angeles on charges he slapped and kicked Otis in July.

Leno retorts to use of jokes in campaign ads

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — Jay Leno is an equal opportunity heckler.

He was outraged when congressional candidate Mark Takano ran an ad using a "Tonight Show" clip of Leno joking about Takano's opponent, Rep. Ken Calvert.

"I'm furious," he said Sunday in an interview. "I try to humiliate and degrade all candidates equally. I don't like people to think I'm taking sides."

Leno is seen joking in the ad about police catching Calvert in a car with a prostitute last year. "He says he had no idea she was a prostitute or he wouldn't have done it. And today the prostitute said, 'Hey, I didn't know he was a congressman or I wouldn't have done it either.'"

Leno asked Takano to pull the ad, and Takano quickly complied. Leno said he was satisfied.

"It looks like I'm against the guy," Leno said. "For all I know, the other guy's just as bad."

Motor Voter registration may have missed the majority of college students, but a new plan called Register Once is being considered by Congress to increase student voting.

The plan is sponsored by Lead or Leave, a Washington, D.C., organization aimed at getting college students to vote by putting a polling place on every U.S. campus with 250 or more students.

This would make voter registration as easy as checking a box on a university registration sheet of a tuition bill. The legislation will be filed in Congress sometime after the fervor from today's general election settles.

Although the UI already has polling places on campus, the legislation would make it easier for UI students to register to vote.

Jon Fogarty, a UI sophomore and a senator in the UI Student Government, is heading up the UI effort to get the legislation passed. He said the plan could fill gaps in the recently passed National Voter Registration Act (also known as the Motor Voter Bill), which registers people to vote when they renew their driver's licenses.

"The Motor Voter act totally misses us (college students)," Fogarty said. "If you get your driver's license when you're 16 and don't renew it until you're 22, that's missing four years of voting."

There are a number of reasons students have low Election Day turnout, he said.

"Basically there are three main reasons that students don't vote," Fogarty said. "Most of us are moving every year, the location of the polling place is sometimes inaccessible and students don't realize what kind of effect politics has on their lives."

People who are first-time voters need some extra guidance through the process, he said.

"Some say we're asking for special privileges, but we are the only group of first-time voters," he said. "Every time you start something new there is some kind of introduction or guideline. Why not do the same with voting and make it plain and simple?"

He said student apathy in the political process is confusing because voting is a basic right as a citizen.

"I don't understand why people wouldn't want to vote," Fogarty said. "It's the basis for all other constitutional rights."

He said student apathy in the political process is confusing because voting is a basic right as a citizen.

"I don't understand why people wouldn't want to vote," Fogarty said. "It's the basis for all other constitutional rights."

UI President Hunter Rawlings said the proposed plan would be a good idea if it was feasible.

"While I haven't seen the plan and therefore I can't fully endorse it, in general I would certainly say that it's important for students to vote," Rawlings said. "In the past, student turnouts have been a bit disappointing, and I think that it's definitely important to encourage students to get registered and to vote."

UI students and other college populations have a personal stake in what happens in the political process, Rawlings said.

"Students strike me as a group that is potentially persuadable since they're interested in education," he said.

Rawlings said at least one aspect of college life makes it hard for students to get to the polls.

"I understand that it's difficult to vote because students are a very busy group," he said. "Making it easier to vote is definitely a good idea."

Johnson County Auditor Tom Slockett, whose office runs all county elections, said he is in favor of such a plan because the student population could be a real political force if they chose to vote.

"Students make up a huge reservoir of unregistered adults," Slockett said. "It's important to target that segment of the population."

The Motor Voter plan alone doesn't include all U.S. college students, he said.

"I think it's an excellent idea in that it's following the Motor Voter legislation," Slockett said. "But many students get their driver's licenses in their home community, where they're less likely to vote."

Students have special needs because of their tight schedules, he said.

"Students are some of the busiest people we have, and often that's not recognized," Slockett said. "What we find in nonvoters is not that they're vile people or lawbreakers, but that they just have no time."

The Auditor's Office sent out 13,600 voter registration cards to nonregistered students. Of that number, 1,360 — or 10 percent — sent the cards back. Although that may seem like a small number, he said he considers it a good response rate and it may be indicative that Register Once may be successful.

"If you can get 10 percent in one effort, maybe in a cumulative effort like this one we can get the student registration level up to that of the rest of the population," he said.

8 OFFICERS MAY BE HIRED

Additional police plan considered by Council

Sara Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

Eight Iowa City police officers will probably be instituted over a period of four years, favorable discussion by the Iowa City City Council indicated during Monday night's meeting.

"The federal crime bill doesn't say what neighborhood policing is, so we can really make our own definition. The policing will vary in different neighborhoods."

R.J. Winkelhake, Iowa City police chief

The city was given a federal grant to hire officers for a Neighborhood Policing Program with the condition that all the money must be used within 36 months of the date of hire and that the officers be used for the neighborhood program, police Chief R.J. Winkelhake said.

He added that the definition of the Neighborhood Policing Program will be open for debate.

"The federal crime bill doesn't say what neighborhood policing is, so we can really make our own definition," he said. "The policing will vary in different neighborhoods."

Winkelhake said neighborhood policing is the best method to provide police service to the community because it will enhance police-citizen communication and will help police to prioritize calls.

A concern raised by Councilor Larry Baker was how the city would pay the salaries of the eight officers after the three-year grant ended. The yearly cost of the officers after the grant expires will be $370,000, Winkelhake said.

City Manager Steve Atkins said he and Winkelhake had discussed the necessity of about 12 new officers before they knew of the grant. The grant caused them to speed up the process of adding officers to the force, Atkins said.

In other business, the Council decided to postpone voting on a rate increase for water and wastewater fees until its next meeting in two weeks. The Council decided to postpone the voting so it could take into account any matters brought to its attention at a public hearing tonight.

"If we hear something that will change our plan, we can do that," Councilor Karen Kubby said. "It may screw up our calculations and our money for the fiscal year, but we should be open to it."

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL FUNDS PLUNDERED

Money from charity dance nabbed in theft

Tom Schoenberg
The Daily Iowan

Patrons and management of Gabe's Oasis, 330 E. Washington St., donated $115 to Amnesty International — although they had already paid to get in — after the dance benefit's cash box was stolen Thursday.

At approximately 10:45 p.m., a man who had been standing near the ticket collector grabbed the cash box, which contained between $300 and $400, and ran, Iowa City police Sgt. Craig Lihs said.

"He must have done it calmly because nobody downstairs noticed anything unusual going on," he said. The man was chased north on Gilbert Street by a member of Amnesty International but got away.

The robber was described as a black male, 5 feet 6 inches tall, wearing a dark blue jacket, blue jeans and white shoes. Lihs said because the description is general, the chance of finding him is slim.

The robbery dampened the excitement of the concert, but patrons and the management of Gabe's contributed more money to help compensate for the loss.

"A woman in the bar area took up a collection," said Amnesty International president Kathy Steichen. "Everyone pulled together, and it kind of made a positive impact on the situation. The reaction was great."

Doug Roberson, who books acts for the bar, told Steichen it was the first robbery at Gabe's. The bar helped Amnesty International by not charging it for the use of the building.

The money loss is a setback, but Steichen said Amnesty International has a lot of ideas for future activities. The organization must start another fund-raising campaign because of the theft, she said.

Steichen said she believes the man was there with the intent to steal money, and she hopes his actions were not reflective of negative views towards the group.

"I hope he didn't know what Amnesty is about," she said. "If he did and stole the money anyway, then it would make me even more upset."

YOU'RE LOOKING AT TWO COMPLETELY OPPOSITE, FUNDAMENTALLY DIFFERENT WAYS TO INVEST IN STOCKS. WE RECOMMEND BOTH.

Introducing the CREF Growth Account and the CREF Equity Index Account.

Whether you want a fund that selects specific stocks or one that covers the market, we're on the same page. The CREF Growth Account searches for individual companies that are poised for superior growth. In contrast, the Equity Index Account looks for more diversification, with a portfolio encompassing almost the entire range of U.S. stock investments. It will invest in stocks in the Russell 3000 a broad index of U.S. stocks.

Like our CREF Stock Account, which combines active, indexed, and foreign investing, and our Global Equities Account, which actively seeks opportunities worldwide, the new funds are managed by experienced investment professionals. They're the same experts who have helped make TIAA-CREF the largest pension system in the U.S., managing over $130 billion in assets.

POLICE LEADER'S QUESTIONS CHALLENGED

Charges leveled against chief by labor union

Sara Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

A complaint was filed against Iowa City police Chief R.J. Winkelhake last week by the Police Labor Relations Organization of Iowa City for interference in union activities.

Winkelhake

The prohibited practice complaint states that Winkelhake questioned several members of the union about the proceedings of a union meeting.

Officer Dan Dreckman, president of the union that represents patrol officers, said he filed the complaint with the Iowa Public Employment Relations Board after he was told that Winkelhake questioned union members and a union lawyer.

Dreckman said the union was discussing the school liaison program, which would put armed officers in Iowa City's junior-high schools.

"He started asking questions about what happened at our meetings, and that's against the law," Dreckman said. "The people he spoke to on both occasions were on the executive board of the union. They came to me, and I told him his actions were against the law. He then called the union's lawyer and questioned him about the meeting." Winkelhake said he could not comment but added that Dreckman's charges were unfounded.

"He filed a complaint and he can say whatever he'd like," Winkelhake said. "We will respond to the allegations, but let me say they're baseless."

Dreckman said he has previously filed a complaint against Winkelhake and he thought the earlier conflict was resolved by the complaint. This time, the union is seeking a written apology from Winkelhake and an order from the state that he refrain from such action in the future.

"Three to four years ago, I filed a complaint against him because I felt he was harassing me for my union activities. The outcome of that was that the city agreed they knew what the law was. Now several years later it appears they forgot what they agreed to in the past."

Dreckman said it is important that Winkelhake not interfere with union meetings.

"For him to attempt to interfere or intimidate the workings of the union is against the law. For him to ask how people voted - it's very intimidating. He could hold it against them. Our meetings are not public record. It's literally none of his damn business. It's not his place to call my people in and interrogate them."

If the complaint can't be resolved by the Public Employment Relations Board, there will be a public hearing to decide a course of action. Dreckman said he just wants Winkelhake to comply with the law. "I can't interfere in how the city does their stuff, and they can't interfere in how I do mine. If someone on the board wants to go up and tell him what happened at the meeting, that's fine. But he can't call people and interrogate them."

FAITH LOST

U.S. voters disillusioned by politics

Mitchell Landsberg
Associated Press

Listen: The sound you hear Election Day may be the voice of innocence lost.

You can hear it at a union of in Los Angeles, in tidy bungalow Chicago, at a marble-floored salon in Dallas and at a tattered linoleum-floored barber shop Brooklyn, N.Y.

You can hear it all over the country. Americans once had a reputation for a certain naiveté about politics. But as pollsters keep telling us, as interviews across the country this past week affirmed, a sense of cynicism has crept across the political landscape.

Most voters can now be divided into two groups: those who have become disillusioned about American politics and those who already were.

You can hear it in the wind that blows the season's first snow across the rolling wheat fields of east Washington state, where House Speaker Tom Foley is struggling to save his career.

Here, Phil Evans runs an insurance business from the back of an ancient Freeman Store, south of Spokane. He hears a lot about local disgust with politics.

"We're not getting anything from government except higher taxes, less and less return from those taxes," Evans said. "I think Congress has forgotten about agriculture, Congress has forgotten about small business."

For 45 nonstop minutes, Evans rails at his government, thoughts drifting from one complaint to another:

- A nation that denies its farm a decent living.
- Voter apathy.
- And Congress? Oh, Congress filled with arrogant, power-hungry career politicians who have touch with the people.

Evans, 50, said he never noticed Foley until the speaker went to court to challenge Washington state's new term limits enacted by the voters.

"He took his constituency court," Evans said. "I can't for him for that."

William James takes a break from cutting hair at Chico's Barber Shop in Brooklyn, N.Y., Thursday. James has worked at the shop since 1978 and is a registered Democrat.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, whose district cuts through a mostly middle-class swath of Chicago. Rostenkowski, an 18-term incumbent, is under federal indictment for offenses ranging from ghost payroll to theft of his House postage money.

And to be sure, there are voters who won't forgive him. But many are willing to shrug it all off with a resigned acceptance about the true nature of politics.

"I think he's done as good a job as anybody else," said Florence Egan, who lives in the bungalow belt on the city's northwest side. "This post office business ... what congressman hasn't done the same thing, maybe not with postage but something else? Who knows if it's really all crooked or not?"

Egan, 62, is a lifelong Chicagoan who has worked as a teacher's aide in the public schools for 30 years. Her husband is a retired postal worker, bar owner and factory worker.

Egan's not happy about the partisan bickering in Congress. She wishes politicians could work together. But, "I gather there's nothing I can do about it," she said dryly.

To Geri Hatch, the problem is one of morality.

For years, Hatch has volunteered with the Republican Women on Election Day, handing out ballots at her local precinct in north Dallas, but not this year.

She's disillusioned with politicians — Clinton prominently among them — who seem to forget they are role models for the nation's youths.

"I was brought up very morally. It really bothers me because of the young people that look up to him,"

Hatch said. As she speaks, her hair is swept into an Ivana-esque French roll at a beauty salon with marble floors and crystal chandeliers.

Hatch hasn't entirely lost faith.

"I hope Republicans take control of Congress because the Democrats have had it so long," she said, brushing aside an errant wisp of hair. "I think it's time the Republicans show what they can do."

In 1897, William James, the psychologist and philosopher, said there is only one unconditional commandment: "to vote and to act as to bring about the very largest total universe of good which we can see."

In 1994, William James, the barber, smiles serenely in the din of his comfortably disheveled shop in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn and said, "I'm going to vote — no ifs, ands or buts about it."

James is a tall and bony man of 63. His gray-speckled hair springs out around the sides of a battered fedora. He is a churchgoing man, proud of being one of the first black Marines and he cuts through political double talk as easily as he buzz-cuts a head of hair.

"All politicians are liars," he said. "I think it's been the same ever since I could remember. It's just promises, promises, promises, and they all get broken anyway. ... The sun still rises in the east."

But still he votes. "You hope it's going to be better," he said. "You elect some man, you hope he's going to change things."

It's just that if you're William James — or Phil Evans or Florence Egan or any number of American voters this gloomy Election Day — you don't dare hope too hard.

CAMERAS TO BE ALLOWED IN COURTROOM

Simpson judge relents on filming trial

Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Despite a mountain of mail from fed-up TV viewers, the judge in the O.J. Simpson murder trial backed down from his threat Monday and allowed cameras to stay in court.

Superior Court Judge Lance Ito said the media have been more responsible since an erroneous KNBC-TV report in September that Nicole Brown Simpson's blood had been found on a sock in Simpson's home. The judge also acknowledged that any inaccurate reporting happened outside the courtroom and not because cameras were inside.

"I do not make any decisions in this courtroom based on public opinion polls," Ito said, sitting beside 21 cartons filled with nearly 15,000 letters, most of them urging him to bar cameras.

He said the letters do not necessarily reflect public opinion because they were solicited by columnist Mike Royko, who railed against TV coverage of the case.

In a televised hearing, First Amendment lawyers argued in favor of keeping the cameras in court, saying they help educate the public and deter inaccurate reporting.

"The camera pleads absolutely, 100 percent not guilty," "Court TV" lawyer Floyd Abrams told Ito, borrowing Simpson's famous innocent plea. "It didn't do anything wrong. It hasn't shown anything wrong. It hasn't violated any court rule."

"Court TV" operates the single pool camera, which photographs the courtroom proceedings and provides a live feed to other electronic outlets.

Ito, however, was skeptical that TV coverage serves an educational purpose. "Do you think there is a fundamental educational value in a case that is so unusual?" he asked one lawyer. "This is really atypical."

The judge said he would allow TV coverage but would require that a remote-control camera, operated by a technician outside the courtroom, be used whenever witnesses are testifying. He said cameras make some witnesses nervous.

The prosecution argued in favor of cameras, as did the defense, as long as TV coverage wouldn't lead the judge to sequester the jury.

The defense opposes sequestration; prosecutors want jurors sequestered for the entire trial. Ito said sequestration is a strong possibility but hasn't yet decided.

Kelli Sager, a lawyer for more than a dozen media outlets, argued that live coverage would offer a valuable civics lesson for the nation.

"Removal of the camera will only punish — if anyone is being punished — the public, and they have done nothing to deserve it," she said.

Douglas Mirell, an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union, said cutting off TV coverage would lead lawyers to conduct "spin control" news conferences and force the media to create stories where none existed.

Simpson listened passively and occasionally took notes as his lawyers argued they want his trial televised because it will convince the public that he is innocent of the June 12 slayings of his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman.

Negative campaigning

Election Day 1994 is upon us, and all over the country the battle for elected positions is intense. In Massachusetts, Sen. Ted Kennedy is up against his first real threat in years, and in Washington state, Speaker of the House Tom Foley is expected to lose. The competition is fierce because voters all over the country are fed up with politicians, especially incumbents. They are frustrated by all the political bickering and gridlock, and they want change.

Since the competition is so tight, we have been seeing a great deal of negative campaigning. All over the country, politicians are calling each other liars, hypocrites and cheaters. For every attack there is a counterattack, and for every counterattack there is a response — the cycle goes on and on. This is fairly standard campaign propaganda, but this election seems particularly inundated with negative campaigning.

Why are politicians using so much of this negative campaigning? To put it simply: It works. They know that many of the Americans who do bother to vote aren't very well-informed on the issues. This means that their stance on most issues isn't so important as long as it's not radically out of the ordinary. What is important is any dirt they might be able to dig up that would harm their opponents in the eyes of the voters. This is something the voters can easily relate to and form a definite opinion about.

Another reason negative campaigning is used is because it's easy to do; most politicians have something in their background that can be used against them. One of the easiest targets is campaign promises. All politicians make them, but they don't follow through on all of them either due to political opposition or because they never intended to. It's also easy for politicians to distort what their opponents say and take their quotes and actions out of context. Sometimes they just flat out lie. The skillful politician can always find ammunition for attacks.

So where does this leave us as voters? Do we select the candidate who makes the best case against his or her opponent? That's what politicians seem to count on us doing. A better option is to be informed on the issues. We need to be able to ask politicians pertinent questions about the issues when they are out campaigning. Also, if we are more knowledgeable we can vote intelligently by choosing the candidate whose position on the issues matches our own rather than choosing the candidate who slings the most mud.

We have to prove to politicians that their stances on the issues are what matter to us. This won't be easy and it will take quite a commitment on our part. It's worth undertaking, though, because these politicians make decisions which could have a significant effect on our lives. If we don't elect quality people, we have no one to blame but ourselves.

Death penalty not proven tough on crime

To the Editor:

During this election year there is a very serious debate going on regarding re-establishing the death penalty in Iowa. Gov. Branstad's commercials claim that by re-establishing the death penalty our state would be "tough on crime." This slogan sounds good because most voters do not have access to the facts concerning capital punishment. The fact is that the death penalty has never proved to be tough on crime.

Capital punishment is not a proven deterrent for criminals. Homicide rates in Iowa consistently rank lower than neighboring states which carry out executions, and since Iowa revoked the death penalty, homicides within the state have actually decreased. Also, juries that sit for death row cases tend to be biased, sending a larger percentage of men and blacks to death row than corresponds to the percentage of crimes committed. In other words, our juries are more willing to execute a male than a female who committed the same crime. In addition, an execution costs roughly three times as much as life imprisonment from age 17 to 70. Finally, capital punishment is final. Justice cannot be served to those who are proved innocent after their execution. A report issued in 1993 listed over 45 cases of persons who recently spent time on death row who were later released due to significant evidence of innocence.

Commercials are asking us to think about the victims and their families. I have sympathy for them, and many agree that capital punishment is not the solution. We cannot effectively condemn violence with another act of violence. If we are going to be tough on crime, let's work to change the laws so that violent criminals are kept in jail. By not reinstating the death penalty and by changing the present laws, Iowa will really be "tough on crime."

Leach campaign: not a 'true statesman'

To the Editor:

I've recently seen a fund-raiser letter from the Leach campaign. It states that if Leach isn't returned we would lose a "true statesman who has always maintained high standards and strong conviction." Such a statesman who has for the past year brought Whitewater to the attention of the public in an attempt to distract us from all the legislation our president has managed to pass. Further, he has such high standards and strong convictions that he has continued this effort despite no evidence of wrongdoing. Just last month when Leach was speaking at the Cedar Rapids Rotary, he was asked if he thought he had taken Whitewater too far. His reply: Yes, he probably had. So much for statesmanship.

The letter says we "would lose a representative who has stayed in touch and faithfully carried our values to Washington." Wrong again. Jim Leach has not provided leadership on any key issue addressed by Congress this session.

The letter then goes on to say we "would lose a friend of the family farmer whose voice is strong, sure and knowledgeable." This is the man who voted for a plan that would have decreased the number of farm acres eligible for price support payments, costing the state's farmers over $67 million.

Glen Winekauf will be a much better representative for our district. As the son of a small farmer, he knows from firsthand experience the struggles the Iowa farmer has faced the past several years. As a veteran, Winekauf served our country and earned G.I. benefits for college. He continues to serve as a member of the Iowa National Guard. Winekauf will truly be our representative in Washington.

Make your election opinions known

I remember the first time I voted in an election. George McGovern was running against Richard Nixon in 1972, and everyone in my kindergarten class lined up against the chalkboard waiting to enter our makeshift polling booth. We were playing grown-up and it was fun. I remember turning to my friend in line behind me.

"Who are you going to vote for?" I asked her. "Who are you going to vote for?" she countered. We decided to count to three and at the end of the count announce our choice for the presidency. We were gleeful to find that we both said "Nixon" after we said "three." Little did we know that we would spend our first-grade year hearing daily about the Watergate scandal.

I remember feeling nervous about the prospect that my friend and I would be voting for different candidates. What would it mean if we had? Could we no longer be friends? Would we have to "discuss the issues" (hardly possible for 5-year-olds — I remember wanting Nixon to win because I saw McGovern on a poster in town and did not like the way he looked and because my dad was voting for Nixon). What would we have found out if we had talked about differing opinions?

I remember asking my kindergarten teacher who she was voting for in the real election — the one that the grown-ups voted in. She would not tell me. I remember being confused by this. I asked her again, but she remained resolute in her privacy.

While elections are a necessarily public event, voting is a private affair (although we must write our address and sign our names countless times before we turn in the "secret" ballot). Just like asking an acquaintance how much money they make violates a social norm, so does asking "Who are you going to vote for?" of those we do not know well. We can ask them if they are going to vote but not for whom. Why?

While I can understand that we would not necessarily want our individual voting practices or patterns kept on record at any government agency, I do see a value in discussing elections (or incomes, for that matter) with other voters. Instead of having debates among the candidates, why not a more informal citizens' discussion of who we are going to vote for and why? When politicians speak, I either know what they are going to say because they only say one thing or I don't understand what they are saying because they are not saying much. But a discussion with other voters might make things more clearer for me. It is like one of the students in my class says: He understands the material better when one of the other students (or a good TA) explains it to him than when the professor speaks about it in lecture.

Whose interests does it serve to keep our voting choices a secret? Are we afraid to discuss our choices with each other because we wish to avoid conflict? Would the act of discussing force many of us to admit to ourselves that we are not really familiar with the issues in any sophisticated way?

One of the characteristics of voting in the United States is that for better or for worse one does not have to be politically informed in order to vote. We can vote for a candidate for any reason we choose, and we have neither to justify our choice nor prove our reasoning to anyone. Of course, the founders of this system included the Electoral College, that seldom talked about but always enduring preventative measure, in their plan in case the public made a really stupid (according to them) call, but generally the election is posited as an exercise of choice in which most U.S. citizens, regardless of their fluency with "the issues," can engage.

Many people claim that voting is our civic duty. I am not of this opinion. I think that it is our civic duty, whether we vote or not, to make it clear to both ourselves and at least a few others why we are choosing to do one or the other. For example, if I decide I am not going to vote in this election because I am dissatisfied with the candidates, that is a legitimate decision only if I make it clear to myself and those around me why I am not voting and for what kind of candidate I would vote. It is the same kind of situation as boycotting an establishment because it has, for example, a cigar-store American Indian in its window. My boycott means little unless I tell the owners of the store what I am doing and why I am doing it. Only then can something come of my (politically motivated) inaction. Perhaps others will agree with me and join my boycott, or perhaps they will disagree and we will discuss it. Either way, it is better than silent, disgruntled complacency.

I encourage you to vote or not to vote, but be clear about why you are doing which one and to make your opinions about this election known.

Coffee and carnage: enough pontificating

It is Sunday morning and I am sitting at The Java House reading Newsweek because some Neanderthal has stockpiled all the Rolling Stones. It's early yet, so all the cool people are still asleep and the place is actually somewhat quiet and calm except for the guy behind me with the baby so cute everyone who passes by him on the way to the bathroom feels the need to comment on her and make strange guttural cooing noises.

But that's OK because I am sitting in my armchair reading Newsweek and writing my column and drinking the coffee it took me 10 minutes to order:

Me: "I'd like a cup of coffee."
Coffee guy: "What kind of coffee?"
Me: "A plain cup of coffee."
Coffee guy: "What type of bean?"
Me: "A plain bean. A plain, ordinary cup of coffee."

Coffee guy: "We have 30 different types of plain coffee. You're going to have to pick one while I help the guy behind you. Oh, what a cute baby."

And so here I am reading Newsweek and sipping my overpriced cup of plain, uh, American Gothic. (They must charge extra for the name.)

I am especially interested in a photograph on page 35. It is a full-page color glossy of that bus which exploded in Tel Aviv, Israel. It is a gruesome image. All that is left of the bus is its metal frame. The driver is slumped over on one side, the arms and legs of his clothing completely blown off, exposing his white flesh. He is a round man with hair which is just starting to go gray and he reminds me a little of Bob, the man who used to drive my school bus before he had a massive coronary and died at age 40. (The driver who replaced him told us Bob had died in bed with a stewardess, but I think he was just trying to soften the blow.)

At the bottom of the photograph toward the corner lies another man, his back on the pavement, one foot still in the bus, the other beneath it. He is wearing a gray suit like the ones Robert Young used to wear in "Father Knows Best," but the leg of the suit is missing and the tie is a mangled mess around his throat. There is blood all around him, though I'm not sure it is his as he doesn't seem to be bleeding.

Across from the photograph on the opposite page is another, smaller photograph of an Israeli policeman carrying a survivor from the wreckage. She is wearing white, and the whole length of her body is smeared with blood so bright and red it looks like the cheap stuff they use in B slasher movies when they need a wall to bleed.

What strikes me about these two photographs is not just their stark violence and grisly subject matter, but their position in the magazine. The cover of this particular Newsweek does not feature one of the many photographs of the magazine allude to the story in any way; instead, the cover is dedicated to a cheerful spread of the cast of the new TV series "ER." There they are, the smiling men and women of the "Health-care program that really works," hoping that we'll invite them into our homes on Thursday evenings.

The accompanying story is three times as long (seven pages) as the bus story and even includes a half-page sidebar recounting the history of television doctors. To make matters stranger, the spread features several pictures of the TV doctors in action, one of which depicts an emergency room team desperately attempting to save a dying patient. The young man on the table has obviously just been brought in, and though we're not sure what exactly is wrong with him, it must be something pretty bad because he is covered in blood, as is the doctor who is trying to save him. It is a bizarre picture in juxtaposition to the ones from Tel Aviv. All three are visually disturbing and violent. All three depict death and suffering and loss. But one isn't real.

And this worries me. It worries me when a fictional team of doctors from a fictional hospital on a fictional TV show make the cover of a national news magazine. It worries me when fantasy is deemed more newsworthy than reality. And it worries me that I can look at a photograph of a dead body in Israel and at a photograph of an actor playing a dead body in a L.A. sound stage and my first reaction to both is to wonder how real the blood looks.

The debate over our generation's sensitization to violence is an old one, and I'm not going to go into it. I grew up watching all the shows they're criticizing, and I haven't ax murdered anyone yet.

But sitting here in the back of this coffee house, it occurs to me for the first time that I may have given something up for all those hours in front of bad TV: the ability to be horrified. Not just by bad acting, but by real life. I want to be able to look at that photograph on page 35 and throw my hands up in the air, lamenting the nature of humanity. I want to be disturbed the way my mother was disturbed by "Pulp Fiction." Instead, my lines of reality and fantasy have been so blurred by the culture that I live in that I can't even be shocked by mass destruction anymore. After all, when you've seen 700 dead bodies, what's a few more?

Still, it is one thing when the line blurs for me and another when it blurs for Newsweek. I like "ER," but is it news?

OK, enough pontificating. I've had this Newsweek open to page 35 for the past half-hour and the woman across from me is starting to give me funny looks. Must be some sort of psycho loony toon, she's thinking. After all, only an insensitive boob would be able to look at a picture that gruesome for so long.

Much less write about it.

Do you think Susan Smith, the South Carolina mother who allegedly killed her two sons, should get the death penalty?

Rita Belda, UI freshman majoring in film studies

Matt Rowe, UI freshman majoring in anthropology

"In most cases I'd say no because I don't believe in the death penalty. The fact that children are involved bothers me, but I don't like the idea of the death penalty."

Michele Petersen, Iowa City resident and teacher

"No, because I don't think killing people who have killed people is a solution. Somewhere, compassion has to fit in. It's obvious that this person needed help, and it's a shame she didn't get any."

Jenna Sorensen, UI freshman with an open major

"Yes, because I don't think she deserves to live after what she did. She's a sick person. I believe in the death penalty."

To the Editor:

In your article about the 1st District congressional race titled "1st District hopefuls duel for House seat" (DI, Nov. 3), candidate Glen Winekauf's criticism of Jim Leach's efforts to clean up our nation's savings and loans was disgraceful and factually twisted.

Winekauf accused Rep. Leach of not being a vocal leader during the savings and loan crisis of the 1980s. In fact, Rep. Leach won universal praise for his work to clean up the S & Ls. According to William Greider's book on the S & L crisis, "Who Will Tell the People," "Leach saw the savings and loan crisis approaching for approximately the same reasons, and ... year after year, he spoke out. He called press conferences and issued dramatic warnings. He produced financial analyses that described the prospective losses mounting for the taxpayers."

And the Los Angeles Times said this about Leach: "Until now, Leach was perhaps best known for the crusade he waged in the Banking Committee during the 1980s to stave off what we warned was an impending S & L crisis by requiring thrifts to increase their capital and restrict speculative investments. At the time, he was widely ignored by both the Democrats and GOP, who now ruefully admit they were wrong while he alone was right."

Winekauf should be ashamed for his desperate, misleading attempts to gain votes. He owes Leach an apology — today!

Family Opportunity Plan and taxes

To the Editor:

In August, Gov. Branstad and Republican legislators announced the Family Opportunity Plan, which is our proposal to reduce property taxes and phase in a 15 percent reduction in personal income taxes. It is called the Family Opportunity Plan because our chief goal is to return to the taxpayers money no longer needed for deficit reduction. This will allow families to make their own investments rather than having state government make those choices for them.

Our plan was carefully thought out and designed to accomplish several specific goals. It puts together both sides of the ledger — spending and revenues — and shows specifically how the promised tax deductions can be delivered. The Family Opportunity Plan has already withstood several months of detailed public scrutiny. However, I want to remind Iowans about some of the basic elements of the plan in the hope that they will share my confidence about this plan becoming a reality.

One of the keys to understanding the Family Opportunity Plan is that it is built on controlling spending, not on revenue growth. Extraordinary revenue growth does not drive this plan! While the economic forecast for Iowa is very optimistic, the tax projections used in the plan are modest. The plan assumes that revenue growth will be 4 percent each year. However, data indicate this is a very conservative assumption since the growth in receipts has fallen below 4 percent only three times in the past 30 years.

Control of spending is what will make tax cuts possible. In the Family Opportunity Plan, the overall growth in spending is limited to less than 4 percent per year. This will be accomplished through spending reductions in some parts of the budget and by limiting our commitments for increased spending to priority areas such as education, corrections and infrastructure. This commitment to control spending must come first. Experience has shown me that if we approached this issue from the opposite direction — applying the available funds toward tax cuts only after spending commitments are made — the tax reductions will never materialize.

Interestingly enough, the Aug. 24 edition of State Budget and Tax News identified Iowa as one of 15 states that has the capacity to reduce taxes in the upcoming budget year if we choose to use our flexibility that way. The Family Opportunity Plan makes that choice, and it is deliverable.

In defense of professor

To the Editor:

I'm sure Professor Schoenbaum does not need me to defend himself. I just want to share my experiences from his history colloquium from a few years back. I found Professor Schoenbaum to be demanding of his students. Reading lists were long, and the class rigorous. From his students, Professor Schoenbaum demands two things. The first is that the students do the reading, in a history class, not too many students can recall from direct experience what went on during the time period under discussion. The literature available is the best source of information that we have, and often there is a lot of it. Failure to read it before class is inexcusable.

The second is that one thinks before speaking. History is not a comparative literature class or sociology class where students can discuss how they feel about something. One must know the facts, must interpret them according to the available evidence and, if one wishes to speculate, must be able to find some scrap of corroboration. Sure I have seen Professor Schoenbaum's temper, but it is a justified reaction by a dedicated scholar and determined educator who seeks to end the short cuts in learning in which too many now engage.

Professor presents interpretation of article

To the Editor:

Caught in the arms of journalism, where talented reporters are constrained by space, I should like to present my interpretation of a recent interview (DI, Nov. 7). On the matter of students who left a Unified Program class taught by Professor David Schoenbaum, my comments focused on the students, not the professor.

Stating at the outset that I was not privy to that class and therefore had no comment on those particular charges, I went on to make a general plea for the future handling of such cases — that the College of Liberal Arts institute a standing board with a procedure for giving these cases a fair hearing. As matters stand now, I pointed out, the politics of academic life dictate a course wherein silence reigns; chairs of departments and colleagues remain mute in the interests of the department, and the Office of Academic Programs may not release information on complaints. As a result, students who bring complaints find themselves stranded within disabling rhetoric which reverses their position, turning them into liars, turning them into the accused: statements that the course is very difficult (suggesting they do not wish to study), that students need to be challenged (suggesting they do not care to struggle with difficult questions), that the pursuit of knowledge is a fearsome process (suggesting they are not capable of danger) and so forth.

A few years ago in an address given to the alumni Presidents Club, I made the following remarks about UI students: "They walk the path of intellectual argumentation somewhat gingerly at first, and when they get their bearings here with us they grow intellectually at a very rapid pace. They are quite capable of heated critical discourse and much to their credit, they are also capable of maintaining and fostering collegiality and respect for one another. By the time they are ready to leave the university, their demeanor, once hesitant, has become much more innovative and bold, even risky, in the best sense of the term."

I stand by that statement. Learning is not an absolutist prescription bestowed from on high; it is a two-way process wherein respect for one another, students and instructors, enables the transmission and encourages the transgression of knowledge.

'Hey' song: Nothing better to do

To the Editor:

A few adults log complaints about the student section using an obscene word during a song that is played to get the crowd excited. The complaints did not go ignored. What happened? The "Hey" song got banned from football games. There is something dreadfully wrong with this scenario.

When students complain, our complaints usually go ignored. When we complain about tuition increases to the Iowa state Board of Regents, they say they understand us but do not listen to us. When we complain about lack of parking and reasonable parking rates, the Iowa City City Council counters by proposing a parking rate increase. When we complain about rent, dorm or university fee increases, nobody listens. When we complain about Brother Jim or John, the one with the "1-800 number to God," calling all of us whores or whore-mongers, we hear the administration does not like what he says, either. Yet, he has the right to say what he wants, no matter how offensive.

What am I trying to get at? Students have the right to say or chant whatever they want, whether it be on the Pentacrest or in Kinnick. A few people complain about obscene words from us. Guess what, people. Obscene words are a part of life. That is a fact.

The chanting will not subside nor will the use of profanity just because our song got taken away. In fact, the chanting will probably get worse. It is a brief fad that will pass in time, just like pet rocks and bell-bottoms did. Remember the "Fuck you" and "Eat shit" days of 1985? That incident died after a few games. This would have died, too, on its own. The only way to remedy the problem now is to ban students from the final game. Swearing does not give the UI a bad name. People who whine about swearing because they have nothing better to do give the UI a bad name.

Don't take a gamble on Campbell for governor

To the Editor:

These past several days have provided Iowans with a clear contrast between our two political parties and their candidates for governor.

Attorney General Bonnie Campbell had President Bill Clinton come to Iowa to campaign for her. Two years ago, President Clinton campaigned on the same ambiguous call for change that Bonnie Campbell is using today. We saw what kind of "new" Democrat Clinton was, and we are paying for it out of every paycheck. Campbell will be the same.

Promoting Lupus Awareness Month

To the Editor:

Since this is Lupus Awareness Month and I am a lupus patient, I would like to share with your readers what it is like to be a lupus patient.

I am always in some degree of pain, but I do not look sick. At times, I have very rosy cheeks from the lupus. Most people associate rosy cheeks with good health, but I am not healthy.

When I have to take steroid drugs to reverse potentially life-threatening symptoms, I gain weight. Most people associate weight gain with feeling good, but I do not feel good.

I almost always have overwhelming fatigue, so I cannot be as active as I would like. Most people associate inactivity with laziness, but I am not lazy.

Lupus attacks many organ systems. Although the symptoms vary from patient to patient, they can include joint pain, muscle aches, skin rash, photosensitivity, hair loss, inflammation of the membranes around the heart or lungs, anemia and other blood abnormalities, kidney involvement and others. Even physicians tend to associate symptoms in many organ systems with hypochondria, but I am not a hypochondriac.

respond to every year, Rocca said. "In the mid-'80s, we would have 800 to 900 alarms to UI residence halls alone," Rocca said. "The false alarms taxed our resources until something had to be done. We'd get a block away from the dorm and then we'd have to go right back."

While the fire department may think this is the best system, many residence hall residents don't agree.

UI freshman William Wilson, a resident of Currier Residence Hall, doesn't like the current fire alarm system because he said the convenience doesn't outweigh the risks.

"If there's a real problem, it just takes longer to get the alarms to go off and warn people," he said. "It also leaves more time for the fire to spread."

Wilson said the fire alarm system should be live all the time and directly notify the fire department.

"Right when the alarm is pulled, it should go off," Wilson said. "It would cause more false alarms, but it would benefit people when a real fire happens."

Gryglas agreed the fire alarm system should always be live. It's important to have an immediate response so residents can get out of the building as quickly as possible, she said.

UI freshman Kristina Kauffman, a resident of Daum Residence Hall, agrees that the system has its drawbacks, but she said she has mixed feelings about it.

"It's good because a lot of times the alarms are pranks and not real," she said. "It makes sense if it's not a fire. But if it is a fire, then the system sucks. If an RA has to check it out, you lose a lot of time."

Continuous training of residence hall staff makes up for lost time, Rocca said. Fire drills are conducted annually, and the fire department is constantly recommending improvements to the current fire-safety plan.

"As long as cooperation continues it will be a good program," he said. "Cooperation is a key factor and must exist."

Rocca said cooperation includes very detailed evacuation plans for the residence halls and training of residence hall staff. Residence hall staff members have refresher training courses on fire safety every two months, Droll said.

The staff actually helps the fire department get to the fire more quickly if it is a real emergency, Rocca said.

"This way there are people immediately on the scene beginning to evacuate people," he said. "They know what the problem is and can tell us instead of us spending time looking around."

Residents also go through a Fire Safety Week early in the year, receive flyers on fire safety and practice a fire drill. Many students, like UI freshman Ben Vesely, a resident of Rienow Residence Hall, weren't in the halls when the drill was held, and others, like Wilson, didn't read their fire-safety flyers.

This training is very important, Rocca said, but it is largely up to the residents to perfect their safety skills.

"It's important that people practice these things," he said. "People need to take responsibility and be accountable for their own actions."

UNIVERSITIES

Iowa also has a form of the monitoring system, with a slight variation. UNI's public safety department is notified by computer when fire alarms are pulled, and officers from public safety are sent to check out the alarm instead of RAs, said Ron Bigelow, safety coordinator for public safety.

"We prefer to check out the alarms with our officers to control and manage false alarms," he said.

It may take up to five minutes for an officer to get to the location of the alarm, he said, and the officer is required to do no more than use a fire extinguisher to fight a blaze. If the officer encounters a fire, he or she then calls the Cedar Falls Fire Department.

"The only way that process can be circumvented is if one of the residents directly calls 911," Cedar Falls fire Marshal John Bostwick said.

one last night of attack ads. Clinton visited three states hoping to tilt a few Senate contests.

Democrats felt somewhat better about their incumbents' chances in the combative Senate contests in Pennsylvania and Virginia. But Republicans still were within clear reach of the Senate majority.

By itself that would dramatically reshape the second half of Clinton's term, forcing him to regroup on such issues as the balanced budget amendment and health care.

And gaining the 40 seats necessary to control the House for the first time since the Eisenhower administration was hardly out of the GOP's reach. Republicans also predicted gains in statehouse contests, though not of the scope they anticipated just a few weeks back.

With so many close races, the parties could agree on one thing: Turnout operations would prove key in a handful of Senate races that will decide who runs the chamber in January.

POLLS

he studied.

The research compared media poll predictions and actual election outcomes in 138 gubernatorial and U.S. House and Senate races in 1990 and 1992.

Gruca's research on political polls confirmed the existence of "The Incumbent Rule," which was first described by Nick Panagakis of Market Shares Corp. in the late 1970s.

Many media analyses of pre-election polls are flawed because they fail to consider the incumbent rule, Gruca said.

"Let's say you have an election poll showing 50 percent for the incumbent, 40 percent for the challenger and 10 percent undecided," he said. "When many people look at this poll they feel that the incumbent will win by 10 points, the same margin as in the poll."

"However, my research shows it is a much more likely outcome to have a 52-48 percent outcome than it is to have a 55-45 percent outcome. A majority of undecideds usually vote for the challenger."

Incumbents who pulled ahead in final opinion polls but did not have 50 percent of voter support were often edged out by a challenger, Gruca's research indicated.

"We looked at 33 cases in which the incumbent was ahead but did not have the support of 50 percent of the voters in the final poll," he said. "More than a third of them ended up losing the elections."

The polls are not wrong, but the way the media presents them leads to public misinterpretation, Gruca said.

"The media must prepare readers and viewers for surprises," he said.

"We found that in 62 percent of the elections we studied, the challenger gained 10 points or more between the final opinion poll and Election Day."

Many people falsely believe that undecided voters will not vote in elections, Gruca said.

"Some people have the impression that undecideds are people who aren't going to vote," he said. "That's not necessarily true. If someone says they are very likely to vote, they are probably going to vote even though they may be undecided."

UI political science Professor Arthur Miller said he does not agree with Gruca's conclusions.

"I think it's very interesting research, but the outcome really does depend on the particular aspect of the election taking place," he said. "That's just an average, and the average doesn't necessarily apply to this election. Whatever is happening in the closing days of the campaign is going to affect how the election is going to end up."

The rapid rise in the number of independent voters will affect election outcomes, Miller said.

"Our data suggests that the percentage of independents is up and those independents will make up their mind within the last days," he said. "Quite a percentage of voters are still volatile."

UNI's Allen on Iowa State's wish list

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Iowa Athletic Director Gene Smith said he will discuss his football coaching opening with Northern Iowa coach Terry Allen and that he would like to name a successor to Jim Walden by early December.

He also said Nebraska coaches Kevin Steele and Ron Brown are also on the list of potential candidates.

"I don't know if Terry is interested in us, but there will be a point in time when I call (Northern Iowa Athletic Director) Ritrievi and ask for permission to talk with him," Smith said Sunday.

"Then I'll ask Terry if he's interested in us. I don't know what he'll say, but I'll pop the question."

Ritrievi has said he would grant permission for Allen to discuss other coaching jobs.

Walden said he would resign after the final game of the season. Allen's Panthers started losing on its 0-8-1 record with a 2-1 victory Sept. 3 in Ames. Allen has a 53-18 record as coach at Iowa.

"Terry has had a great deal of success at Northern Iowa as a proven winner," Smith said.

Smith said he wants to hire somebody as quickly as possible because December is a key month for football recruiting.

"If we have a coach by the end of the year, we'll be fortunate. Still, I'm going to strive to have someone by early December," he said.

"We're looking for someone who is a proven winner, someone who has been a part of a winning program. We're looking for someone who knows how to roll up their sleeves, someone who understands that this is a little tough situation," Smith said.

Carter snags player of the week honors

CHICAGO (AP) — Penn State running back Ki-Jana Carter of Ohio State cornerback Mark Kerner were named Big Ten players of the Week on Monday.

Buckeye punter Scott Turner took special teams honors.

Carter had 10 carries for 100 yards, including an 80-yard touchdown in Penn State's 35-29 victory over Indiana on Saturday.

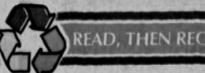

Kerner intercepted two passes in the third quarter and added a tackle in the Buckeye's 24-17 victory over Wisconsin.

Terna had a 48-yard average on five punts.

Willis goes to Heat

(AP) — The Atlanta Braves traded one of the NBA's best power forwards Monday, sending Kevin Willis and a No. 1 draft pick to the Miami Heat for Reggie Miller, Grant Long and a second round draft choice.

"I'm on the way to Oakland and I'll strap on a new uniform tomorrow night," Willis said in a telephone interview from Salt Lake International Airport in Salt Lake City. "I'm glad (Miami owner) Bill Cunningham and (coach) Kevin Loughery see that I'm a player who can use."

Hawkeyes host Cal in first round

Iowa will meet California Thursday at Grant Field in the first round of the NCAA tournament. The winner will face Old Dominion.

Chris Snider
The Daily Iowan

Somebody forgot to tell the Iowa field hockey team that "13" was supposed to be an unlucky number.

The Hawkeyes will begin their 13th straight NCAA tournament appearance this Thursday, when they host California at 2 p.m. on Grant Field.

The road to the NCAA's was not an easy one for the Hawkeyes, which had to win the Big Ten tournament, including three games in three days against quality opponents to get there.

Iowa entered the tournament 10-7, ranked No. 12 in the nation, but played above and beyond its ranking to earn a trip to the tournament.

"It was really the first time all year that we really jelled as a team," sophomore goalkeeper Jessica Krochmal said after winning the Big Ten tournament. "We played with poise and we played with power and we executed when we were tired. We played three games in three days, and two of them went to overtime. Fatigue played a factor, but nobody really was showing it. It was the first time we actually played with heart and played with poise and worked together."

Junior Ann Paré, who has played on two Final Four teams at Iowa, knows it wasn't easy for this team to make it to the NCAA's.

"(It took) hard work and perseverance and the belief in each other that we could do it and we could overcome any circumstance that came before us," Paré said.

The fact that their first tournament game is at home could prove very crucial to the Hawkeyes, coming off the tough weekend on the road.

"I'm just really happy that we played well enough over the last period of three weeks, when crunch time was on, to earn ourselves a first-round game at home," coach Beth Beglin said. "I think that was real important for us just because of the fact that the Big Ten tournament was tough and I think our kids are real tired right now. It was really nice to know that we don't have to get on an airplane late Tuesday night or early Wednesday morning to get to the site where we'll be playing."

Senior Debbie Humpage agreed that the home field will play an important role for the Hawkeyes. "I think it's very important," she said. "We're all tired and I think traveling one more time this week would just kill us. Playing at home, there's more pressure off of us. We can relax a little bit. We usually play well on Grant Field, so I think we're all excited to play just one more game at home."

Beglin is not looking past Cal, which she still knows very little about until she receives game tapes, but mentions getting past second-round opponent Old Dominion would be difficult.

"Obviously, should we get by Berkeley, Old Dominion is going to be a tough opponent, but no matter who you play, any one of the top four seeds will be a difficult opponent."

The top four seeds include No. 4 Old Dominion, No. 3 James Madison, No. 2 Northwestern and No. 1 North Carolina.

Those four teams earned first-round byes and will play their first games Sunday on their home fields.

Northwestern is the only one of the top four seeds that Iowa has faced this season, with the Hawkeyes coming out victorious two of the three times they met.

Overall, four of the six teams in the Big Ten conference made the NCAA field, including Iowa, Northwestern, Penn State, and Ohio

IOWA MEN'S TENNIS

Crowley advances to national tourney

Chris James
The Daily Iowan

Hawkeye senior Bryan Crowley became the first Iowa men's tennis player to win the Rolex ITA Regional tournament Monday.

Crowley defeated Jayson Bedford of Michigan State in the semi-finals in straight sets (6-4, 6-4) then he defeated Mike Sprouse of Notre Dame (7-6, 6-3) for the title.

"It still really hasn't hit me," Crowley said. "Maybe in a couple days I'll realize what I have accomplished. But for now I'm just going to rest."

Crowley capped an incredible weekend winning seven matches in a row, including the final two in a matter of hours.

"It was a little strange because there were hardly any people there for the championship match. Usually you have your teammates and the crowd supporting you but today was an exception," Crowley said.

Crowley said there was no pressure after winning the semi-final match, because he had already qualified for the nationals.

"Once I got through the semi-final match I felt really confident. I knew there was no pressure so I just went out and played," Crowley said.

Iowa coach Steve Houghton said Crowley's title will help the Hawkeyes in more ways than one.

"This is really a great milestone for the program. It's not only an accomplishment for Bryan but for Iowa tennis," Houghton said. "This will give us a lot of respect. It will definitely give us a boost when the regional rankings come out."

The tournament almost saw an all Iowa final as senior Bob Zumph had advanced to the quarterfinals but had to withdraw due to a back injury.

Crowley said this was the biggest accomplishment of his tennis career.

"I'm tired and sore but it feels great. I'm glad for the program and coach Houghton and my teammates. I just felt I had to go out and prove myself and I did."

Four experienced starters should make Stan Van Gundy's transition from assistant to head coach at Wisconsin an easy one.

Van Gundy replaced Stu Jackson, who took a job as general manager of the NBA Vancouver Grizzlies. At age 35, Van Gundy is the youngest head coach in the Big Ten Conference.

Van Gundy said he's adjusting to his new duties as head coach.

"Obviously my role changes, I was never the guy pulling them out and sitting their butt on the bench," Van Gundy said. "It just changed a little bit, but not as drastically as some people may believe. The relationship off the court will basically stay the same. On the court, I have to make some decisions and at times, they're going to be upset with that. That's nothing new."

In a preseason media poll, Wisconsin received nine first-place votes after Indiana (49 votes) and Michigan (14). The Badgers will try to improve on last season's seventh-place finish in the conference. Wisconsin hasn't finished in the CHICAGO — Toni Kukoc scored 19 of his 28 points in the fourth quarter, when he and Chicago's other reserves outscored the Philadelphia 76ers 34-14 and rallied the Bulls to a 98-83 victory Monday night.

It was the second straight career-high scoring game for Kukoc, who during training camp balked at being a backup. The second-year pro from Croatia had 25 points Saturday against Washington.

Scottie Pippen, the only Chicago starter to play in the final period, scored 22 points. Jeff Malone had 25 points for the 76ers, who fell to 0-3.

The Bulls trailed by 16 points in the third quarter but pulled to 69-62 entering the fourth.

Kukoc scored the first nine Chicago points of the final period, Greg Foster made a hook shot and Jo Jo English hit a 3-pointer to give the Bulls their first lead, 76-73, with 8:47 to play.

A 3-pointer by Kukoc gave Chicago a six-point lead before baskets by Scott Williams and Dana Barros cut Philadelphia's deficit to 79-77.

English then converted a three-point play, Kukoc hit two free throws and a 3-pointer, Steve Kerr made a jumper and Pippen dunked in the only fourth-quarter points by a Chicago starter for a 91-79 lead.

Rounding out the field of 12 are Boston College, Northeastern, Ball State, and Princeton.

After making it all the way to the Final Four before being knocked out of the tournament last season, the Hawkeyes truly believe they can contend for the title again this year.

33-POINT UNDERDOG

Walden prepares for final 'at-bat'

Chuck Schoffner
Associated Press

His final home game as Iowa State's football coach holds no special meaning for Jim Walden. Other than trying to survive, that is.

Walden, who last week announced he'll resign at the end of the season, will coach his last game at Cyclone Stadium on Saturday against No. 1-ranked Nebraska.

"I just hope they don't stomp us to death," Walden said Monday. "The special meaning is I wish I didn't have to play the best football team in the United States. Because I certainly don't have the best team in the United States."

Certainly not. The Cyclones are 0-8-1 and 33-point underdogs. Walden said the fact he'll be facing Nebraska, where he spent four years as an assistant, won't make it any more meaningful than if it were Kansas or Rice or Akron.

Associated Press

Iowa State coach Jim Walden pleads for a call during a game against Oklahoma State Oct. 23 in Ames. The Cyclones have an 0-8-1 record with Nebraska and Colorado left on their schedule.

"Your last game to me is like your last at-bat. It's no different than your first at-bat," Walden said. "I don't think I'll have any special meaning. It's just a game to look at and move on."

"Life moves on. You can't dwell on things. It's a game to play and to coach and do the very best we can and then move on."

Even if the game has no special significance to Walden, he does admit to having fond memories of his time at Nebraska. He was an assistant to Bob Devaney's staff from 1969-72 and the Cornhuskers won two national championships during that time.

"It was a special place when I was there. It will always be a special place to me," Walden said.

WHITE SOX FARM SYSTEM

Nashville outfield job Jordan's to lose

Joe Edwards
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The Chicago White Sox hope Michael Jordan can make the big leagues late next season, the president of their Triple-A farm team said Monday.

"I'm sure their goal is for him to be a September call-up next year," Larry Schmittou said.

He said the White Sox expect Jordan to begin the year playing for the Nashville Sounds in the American Association.

"It's his job to lose in spring training. He still has to make the team," said Schmittou, a former executive with the Texas Rangers. "All indications point to him being here."

Jordan is batting .256 for the Scottsdale Scorpions of the Arizona Fall League, where he is a designated hitter, left fielder and right fielder. He has 13 runs, one double, one triple, no home runs, six RBIs, eight walks, 20 strikeouts and one stolen base in three attempts. He has 31 putouts, no assists and two errors.

Last season he played right field for Class Double-A Birmingham, where he hit .202 with three home runs, 51 RBI and 30 stolen bases. He hit .380 in the last month of the season.

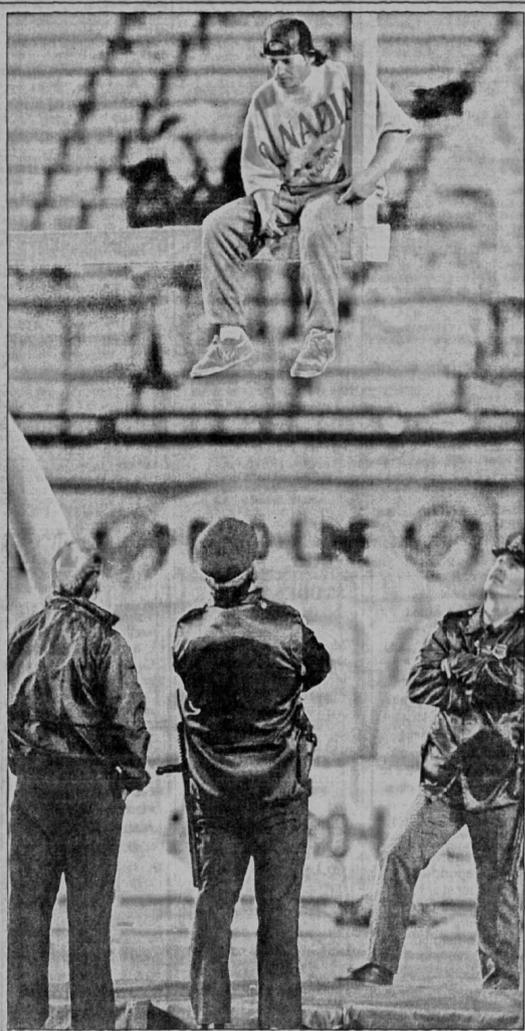

Schmittou said Jordan will find the pitching at Triple-A much stronger than at Double-A. "He'll find no gifts in Triple-A," he said. "The pitchers think they are just 12 hours from the major leagues."

Schmittou said the Sounds have been told by the White Sox to make housing arrangements and other provisions for Jordan. He said a TV commercial is in the works showing him in a Nashville uniform.

"I fully anticipate seeing him in left field here," Schmittou said.

Jordan is good for baseball, he said. "He brings new fans to the park, especially younger fans."

Game over

A Hamilton Tiger-Cats fan keeps police at bay after he climbed one of the goal posts following Hamilton's loss to Saskatchewan Sunday. The loss crushed the Tiger-Cats' hopes of a playoff spot and, with the future of the team in Hamilton uncertain, could have been the club's last game in Hamilton.

HEAVYWEIGHT CHAMPION

Foreman's marketability skyrockets

Skip Wollenburg
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Even before his improbable heavyweight title victory over a man young enough to be his son, George Foreman was making television commercials for snack food, sneakers and mufflers.

Can new roles — maybe pitching pain medication to his fellow middle-agers — be far behind?

"His stock is way up," said Lloyd Kolmer, who matches celebrities with advertisers. "He just made it for every old fat bald person in the country."

Foreman, two months shy of his 46th birthday, knocked out Michael Moorer, 26, on Saturday and recaptured part of the championship he lost when he was knocked out by Muhammad Ali more than 20 years ago. He became the oldest fighter to win a championship in any weight class.

Foreman had amassed an impressive list of commercials since resuming his boxing career about seven years ago.

The list includes regional or national ads for KFC chicken, Oscar Mayer hot dogs, McDonald's hamburgers, Nike sneakers and Texaco gasoline.

Boxing has seldom produced athletes who are both widely known and are embraced by Madison Avenue for their ability to influence consumers.

But American Data Sports found in a survey of more than 2,400 people last year that Foreman placed 11th out of 77 athletes in terms of consumer recognition and was 17th in terms of influence as a product endorser.

"If he did that well just being a contender, the victory probably increases his endorsement potential geometrically," said Harvey Lauer, president of the leisure research firm in Hartsdale, N.Y.

In a vicious sport, Foreman has cultivated a remarkably warm persona.

"He was in a commercial for Doritos in 1992 with his four sons," said Lynn Markley, a spokeswoman for the tortilla chip brand's owner Frito-Lay Inc. "He is a lovable guy who has a big presence. He delivered for us."

Henry Holmes, a Beverly Hills, Calif., lawyer for Foreman, said his client is currently appearing in ads for Meineke mufflers and brakes and for Thompson's water sealant.

Minnesota pursues Cowboys, 49ers

Ron Lesko
Associated Press

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. — With every week and every win, the Minnesota Vikings become more confident of challenging Dallas and San Francisco for the NFC title.

And the last-second victory over New Orleans now has the Vikings

They beat the New York Giants and Tampa Bay, both on the road, by a combined 40 points. At home, they beat Green Bay and New Orleans by four total points, going into overtime to edge the Packers.

They are off to their second 7-2 start in three seasons under coach Dennis Green, the best Vikings record since 1976.

Green doesn't think Minnesota's success is predetermined. He believes in fundamentals, preparation and execution.

"I know if you block and tackle and get some first downs, you have a chance to win some games," Green said.

"After the game, I told some of the guys that when you win games like this, that shows that there might be some destiny involved."

Warren Moon, Vikings quarterback believing fate could be on their side.

"After the game, I told some of the guys that when you win games like this, that shows that there might be some destiny involved," Warren Moon said Monday. "Because it didn't look very good."

Moon's 11-yard TD pass to Qadry Ismail with five seconds left Sunday gave Minnesota a 21-20 victory, its fourth straight victory since a bungling 17-7 loss at Arizona.

The Vikings (7-2) have won on grass and on artificial turf, on the road and at home, in blowouts and close games.

'Interview' just part of film's bloody banquet

ian Corwin
The Daily Iowan

The film adaptation of Anne Rice's "Interview With the Vampire," which opens in Iowa City Friday, is set for a trial by fire. "Interview" will either give this culture's fascination with eternal life a transfusion or it will drag a tired obsession kicking and screaming into the light of day to be burned alive.

Vampires and the defiance of death which surrounds them have always been prime targets for pop culture's existential fixations. "Interview" promises a different look at the old legends, focusing on nosferatu who relish their evil ways, as well as those who find the notion of immortality a curse rather than a blessing.

For film treatments of vampire lore that depart from standard bastardized Hollywood efforts, take a trip to the local video boutique and fish around for these titles:

"The Hunger" (1983) is about as far away from Bela Lugosi and Christopher Lee as you can get. Based on a novel by borderline crackpot author Whitley Streiber, "The Hunger" takes cues from Rice's myths by delivering its powerful bloodsucker/antiheroine roots in the context of ancient Egypt-they invariably turn to dust and she's forced to seek solace in the arms of another.

As "The Hunger" begins, Miriam is living in New York with her mate du jour, John (a suave David Bowie), who has begun to disintegrate after 200 years of companionship. Seeking a solution to her lover's problems, Miriam goes to see Sarah (Susan Sarandon), a doctor who specializes in aging, but she winds up falling in love with her and abandoning John to his decrepitude.

"The Hunger" poses some interesting alternatives to established legend. Not only are vampires robbed of long sharp teeth to hunt with (Miriam gives her lovers knives in the shape of Egyptian anks), but they can walk around in daylight and are not at all impervious to trivial things like aging and sleep deprivation.

Cinematically, "The Hunger" is more than worth the watch. It's director Tony Scott's first film, done before he ian history. Miriam (Catherine Deneuve) is an ancient vampire who takes a new lover every few hundred years and promises them eternal life. But due to some sort of aging disorder,

Nine Inch Nails whirl through with seething, breakneck show

Ian Corwin
The Daily Iowan

Cranked-up Nine Inch Nails fans couldn't hold out for the band to hit the stage Sunday night at Carver-Hawkeye Arena. Just before the lights went down, hundreds of screaming moshers formed a human tidal wave and stormed a security barricade, pouring onto the floor of the arena and transforming it into a simmering pit of sweat.

Arms outstretched in supplication, NIN auteur Trent Reznor made his entrance decked out in leather shorts and a chain-mesh sweater. Swaggering out through a back-lit silk scrim as the mounting pulse of "Pinion" crunched out of the speaker stacks, Reznor gave the crowd just enough time to recognize him and verify his presence. Then he tore down the scrim and ripped into a two-hour set which bled the band white and left fans screaming for more with torn vocal chords, waving sweat-stained T-shirts above their heads and casually holding their cracked ribs in place with shaking fingers.

In concert, Reznor and NIN are dominant and absolutely riveting, hurling their music into a crackling, murky territory that thrums with the energy of 10,000 ravers dosed on speedy acid. Blasting from a set of regular stereo speakers, NIN's screeching soundscapes are threatening enough, but thundering from two-story public-address stacks while the band ripped apart its instruments and howled into the blackness of the seething arena, the group's music became nothing short of heart-stopping.

Reznor and company used Carver-Hawkeye's high ceiling and steel trusses to their advantage, turning the whole place into a post-industrial cathedral. The sense of organic sound mixing with inorganic machinery — a biomechanical union which saturates Reznor's music — was carried to a hypnotic and occasionally disturbing extreme.

A riveting light show and inventive stage setup provided the link between living sound and industrial space. Most of the minimal lighting for the show came from six or seven spotlights set up on top of 15-foot pedestals on the stage itself; amber, violet and green light dominated, seeping across the arena and refracting off the draped and stitched rubber-fetish backdrop with near-organic intensity. But these elements never outshone the music itself.

The massive bass tones and high metallic guitar screeches, with Reznor's agonized vocals pinned and wriggling in the center, were all surprisingly clear, alternately absorbed into the crowd and clanging around from floor to ceiling. Even wall of noise NIN faves like

Trent Reznor of Nine Inch Nails roars into "Mr. Self Destruct," his first vocal performance of Sunday night's concert in Carver-Hawkeye Arena. According to University Box Office figures, approximately 7,400 concert tickets were sold. Show capacity was 10,200.

"Wish" came through with startling articulation and clarity while never losing sight of the music's basic goal — to splatter fans' brains across the soundboard in back.

A more cohesive and varied rhythm for the show as a whole would have been a welcome change; a slow spot in the middle during which black-and-white films were shown was the only tempo change in a two-hour set that flew by at breakneck speed. But when the proceedings throttle along as fast as Reznor and NIN can go, it doesn't matter much what gear it's all in because the brakes become useless.

After hurtling through favorites from The Downward Spiral like "Mr. Self Destruct," "Piggy" and "Reptile," Reznor and NIN drew the audience into a deafening whirlwind with a truly phenomenal extended version of "Happiness in Slavery." Concluding the song with a sustained climax of hypnotic noise and pulsing soundscapes, Reznor brought out a brand-new keyboard, took it to the front of the stage and proceeded to remove all the keys with the heel of his boot.

NIN didn't reach that level of intensity again until Reznor pulled out all the stops for the show's finale, dusting off Pretty Hate Machine's two most enduring anthems, "Down In It" and the venom-saturated "Head Like a Hole." Both tunes stirred some raw energy back into the rapidly tiring pit and inspired a bizarre, almost chantlike sing-along which nearly drowned out the roar from the speakers.

A weak, two-song encore was the only flaw in an otherwise remarkable performance. Reznor returned to the stage to launch into the crowd-pleasing MTV staple "Closer," and left the arena with a quiet "Thanks" one song later looking ghostly and drained.

But who can blame him, after two hours spent sustaining a raw energy buzz the size of Cleveland? Reznor deserved a standing ovation just for being able to maintain his distinctive brand of intensity and rage, a relentless speed rush that lasted long enough for even the most experienced of moshers to lose their front teeth and scatter their brains to the wind.

spiraled into the morass of "Top Gun" and "Days of Thunder." His lush visual sensibilities and impeccable taste give "The Hunger" a distinctive feel. Add to that an eclectic soundtrack that contains everything from Bauhaus to Delibes, and you can't miss.

For a comedic approach (gaspl), check out 1985's "Fright Night." It's an old-fashioned chiller that uses tongue-in-cheek humor to usher a fresh feeling into the old and musty horror genre.

High-school senior Charlie Brewster (William Ragsdale) is convinced that a vampire has moved into the house next door. When his worst fears are confirmed, he enlists the help of washed-up horror film star Peter Vincent (Roddy McDowall) to stake the joint out and do in the neighborhood leech.

This one lacks the latter film's refinement, but it's genuine fun and produces some true chills. Chris Sarandon's smooth-talking vampire Jerry Dandrige is alternately threatening and hilarious, and the strange father-son chemistry between Ragsdale and McDowall is a treat to watch. Look for a young Amanda Bearse (TV's "Married ... With Children") as Charlie's girlfriend.

Roddy McDowall stars in "Fright Night," a comic vampire flick far from the gothic melodrama of Anne Rice's "Interview With the Vampire." The film based on Rice's book opens in Iowa City on Friday.

Vampires have always been around in legend and in art. The trick has usually been to either make them believable or ridicule them beyond belief. In view of all the careers riding on "Interview," let's all pray for the former.

An explosion of cheer greeted the announcement that Terry Branstad would begin his 13th year as governor, and Branstad called Democratic challenger Bonnie Campbell "the stiffest competition" he's encountered.

What was predicted to be a horse race turned into a relatively easy victory for Branstad, who captured 57 percent compared to Campbell's 42 percent when 90 percent of the votes were counted.

"I am humbled by the support that I have received, the strong vote of confidence that we've received tonight," Branstad said. "As governor I am very honored and very proud to have this unique opportunity to serve a fourth and final term for the people of this state."

Winning a fourth term is unprecedented in Iowa history, and Branstad's win makes him one of the longest office-holding governors in the country.

"We did it against the odds, against the anti-incumbent trend, against the pundits and against the stiffest competition we have ever seen," Branstad said.

His victory speech was routinely interrupted by the more than 700 cheering Republicans in attendance at the reception in the Des Moines Marriott Hotel.

"I want to acknowledge my opponent Bonnie Campbell, who fought a tough race," Branstad said. "I want to thank her for having the decency to call me tonight and to congratulate me and to wish me well."

He said he intends to follow through on his campaign promises to cut income taxes and give Iowa families more money to spend.

"We intend to reinstate the death penalty to make our neighborhoods safer for our kids," Branstad said.

Efficient and effective schools and government are priorities for the next four years, he said.

"I want to lead Iowa to the best day in our state's history," Branstad said.

An Associated Press exit poll declared Branstad had 60 percent of voter support and voters were unconvinced that 12 years in office is too long to serve.

Although Branstad won statewide, Campbell triumphed in Johnson County with 59 percent compared to Branstad's 38 percent.

A dreary-eyed yet cheerful Campbell told a crowd of about 200 supporters at Des Moines' See BRANSTAD, Page 10A

Students fail to make

Michele Kueter
 The Daily Iowan

The exact student voter turnout wasn't known Tuesday night after election results were tallied, but many students cited the inconvenience of registering as one of the reasons for not showing up at the polls. Johnson County Auditor Tom Slockett said student voting figures may be available today.

"We don't really know yet, but (student turnout is) always terrible," Slockett said. "I hope we made
