Drug traces found in body of dam drowning victim

Toxicology reports on the body of Cameron Inghram returned positive for marijuana and possibly for alcohol.

Inghram, a 22-year-old Iowa City resident, drowned in the Iowa River near the Burlington Street dam Oct. 3 after trying to jump across the 6-foot-11-inch gap that divides the eastbound and westbound lanes of the Burlington Street bridge.

State Medical Examiner Dr. Tom Bennett said the report cannot say for sure if Inghram was using marijuana the night he drowned.

"The screen cannot reliably indicate if the person was using the drug the day he died," Bennett said.

Bennett said the presence of ethanol, or grain alcohol, could have come from alcoholic beverages or from the decomposition and fermentation of the body.

The report listed the official cause of Inghram's death as drowning and categorized the level of the body's decomposition as "advanced."

Man plays real-life vampire after seeing 'Interview'

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A woman says her boyfriend stabbed her and drank her blood two days after they saw the movie "Interview With the Vampire."

Daniel Sterling, 25, was jailed on attempted murder charges in the attack on Lisa Stellwagen, who suffered seven stab wounds in the chest and back.

Stellwagen, 23, said the couple saw the vampire movie on Nov. 7, and the next morning she woke up and found Sterling staring at her.

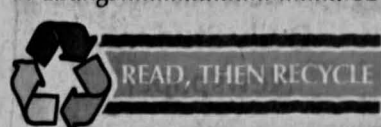

According to the woman, she asked him what was wrong, and he replied, "I'm going to kill you and drink your blood."

The next day, Sterling stabbed her in their bed, police said.

In a jail interview, Sterling said, "I was influenced by the movie. I enjoyed the movie. But I cannot sit here and blame the movie."

Council rejects 'sex act' policy

Patricia Harris and Rima Vesely
The Daily Iowan

The phrase "unusual and unexpected materials" in the classroom materials policy was unanimously opposed at the UI Faculty Council meeting Tuesday and may end up in the Iowa state Board of Regents' lap for another go-around.

Council President Richard Hurtig called regents President Marvin Berenstein about the Council's decision Tuesday night. If passed by the Faculty Senate, the debate will move to the regents.

Berenstein said the debate is not meant to cause tensions between the UI and regents. "I really believe that this is a bonafide difference of opinion, not an adversarial situation," he said. "That's the world we live in. You don't have to be angry with people to disagree with them."

Hurtig agreed that the relationship between the regents and the Council would remain friendly.

"At this stage, I will let the regents know what the sense of the Council is," Hurtig said. "We have an open direct line of communication with the regents, and they understand that we can disagree with the policy." Berenstein said he is surprised the vote was unanimous but is still convinced that a content-specific policy is necessary.

"It sounds to me like they're having a problem with the definition of 'unusual and unexpected,'" he said. "It would be my preference that the policy only include sexually explicit materials. Then the definition of what is 'unusual and unexpected' would be solved."

Students from West Branch High School placed poems, letters and photos around the locker of classmate Chad Gates following his funeral Monday afternoon. Gates, 16, died Friday after being shot in the back of the head in a hunting accident.

West Branch plagued by series of tragedies

Heather Pitzel
The Daily Iowan

The death of 16-year-old Chad Gates was the "proverbial straw that broke the camel's back" in a continuing string of tragedies that have struck the town of West Branch, Iowa, said a local resident.

Gates, a high-school sophomore, was accidentally shot Friday while hunting with his cousin Luke Kowalczyk and his friend Jeremy Hollingsworth in the northeast area of Iowa City and died that night at the UI Hospitals and Clinics. The incident is still under investigation and as yet no charges have been filed. West Branch has never had a year quite like this one, said resi-

"The Gates thing is sort of the proverbial straw that broke the camel's back, him being so young.

I think it finally made the community focus," Arensdorf said. "People are wondering, 'Why are all these things happening here?'"

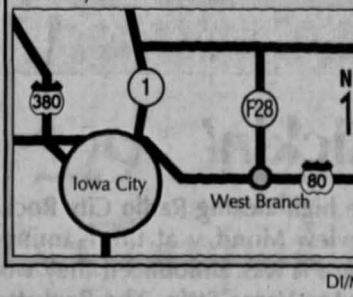

The tragedies began Sept. 25, when two men who worked at Cargill Nutrena Feeds in West Branch were shot to death near Atalissa, Iowa, and has continued since then:

- Mark Gregory, a 1988 graduate of West Branch High School, shot his girlfriend, Kelly Asher, 30, and then killed himself in front of their infant twin daughters inside a mobile home near West Liberty on Nov. 5.
- 1993 West Branch High School graduate Curt Hammel,

GATT glides through House

Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House, brushing off critics who protested the legitimacy of a vote by a lame-duck Congress, passed a sweeping world trade agreement Tuesday. President Clinton hailed it as a "historic vote for American workers, farmers and families."

The House voted 288-146 for the rewrite of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), sending the measure to the Senate, where supporters were still searching for the votes needed for passage.

What's next

The accord moves to a Senate vote Wednesday or Thursday. The vote is expected to be much closer. If it passes, President Clinton will sign it.

What the accord means

- Tariffs on food, electronics, cars and clothing will be cut by about 38 percent worldwide.
- Beer, toys and paper products will ultimately become duty-free.
- GATT rules will apply to agriculture, copyrights and patents.
- A World Trade Organization will be created to oversee trade disputes.

The four hours of debate were brought to a close by House Speaker Thomas Foley, who in his final speech in the chamber where he had served for 30 years, urged his

Rugged winter ahead for Iowa

Mick Klemesrud
The Daily Iowan

The mass of cold Canadian air has planted itself on top of the Midwest, making Iowa City a cold, wet, windy and miserable place for some and a playland of winter sports for others.

Tim Speece, a meteorologist at the National Weather Service in Waterloo, said this December should be normal as Decembers go, but after that, watch out.

"We'll have about the average amount of precipitation in December like we've had in past Decembers," Speece said, referring to periodic snow fall. "We'll have a good drop off in temperatures after December."

The cold weather is a welcome sign for winter activities, such as snowmobiling, ice hockey and skiing to many students and Iowa City residents. Average temperatures in the area vary slightly, averaging 28.9 degrees for December, 23.7 degrees in January and 29.4 degrees for February. The average low temperatures for that same time period are 11.7 degrees

Proposed water rates to jack up I.C. rents

Michele Kueter
The Daily Iowan

If the proposed water rate increases are approved next month by the Iowa City City Council,

"For us to have the same amount of money available for maintenance, the rent will have to go up the same amount as the water bill does."

Ed Barker, apartment complex owner rental rates for UI students and other Iowa City apartment tenants may skyrocket.

Anna Buss, of AB Property Management & Sales, 525 W. Benton St., said depending on the apartment building, Iowa City landlords may raise rent anywhere from $23 to $55 a month.

The Council is scheduled to vote on the proposal Dec. 6 for a 40 percent increase in water rates starting in January 1995 and a 75 percent increase starting in January 1996.

A second and third vote will be taken by the Council on Dec. 20. The Council will also be voting on a 35 percent increase in wastewater rates for 1995 and a 40 percent increase in 1996.

Ed Barker, owner of Seville Apartments, Westgate Villa Apartments, and Emerald Court Apartments, said under the current water rates the bills average $18 per month for a two-bedroom and one-bathroom apartment. With the new rates, it will be $25 a month in 1995 and $39 a month in 1996.

"For us to have the same amount of money available for maintenance, the rent will have to go up the same amount as the water bill does," Barker said.

The average Iowa City residence uses 1,500 cubic feet of water, City Manager Steve Atkins said. The charge for that now, which is billed every two months, is about $75. At Funk 'disciple' spins tunes for weekly show

Tom Schoenberg
The Daily Iowan

As classes end and the weekend parties begin, Dr. K emerges as the DJ of funk for his "Toast to the Boogie" every Friday from 9 p.m. to midnight on KRUI, the UI student radio station.

"Toast to the Boogie" is a show on 89.7 FM consisting of funk music from the 1970s to the present. Dr. K plays a variety of music from Parliament to Marvin Gaye to even rare tracks from Duran Duran.

"The premise of the show is Dr. K — a disciple of the P-funk generation who has been sent to Iowa City to anoint people with funk," Dr. K said. "Funk is a music thing. When you hear the music and your body moves involuntarily and your face looks like it smelled something bad, that's what funk is."

Although the music is an important part of the show, Dr. K enlightens his listeners with his smooth voice and funky rhymes.

"I begin the show every week with 'Good evening, Iowa. The mothership has landed. You've been instructed not to touch your radio for we will resume our normal programming as soon as you are groovin'," Dr. K said. "That's the type of persona I want to portray in my show."

Dr. K said outside of the KRUI staff, only 10 other people know his real identity. However, Dr. K did disclose the fact that he is a UI graduate student from Los Angeles and he doesn't want to be known because of the possibility of his department's administration looking unfavorably upon his work outside the department.

He has a scholarship, which he received under the understanding that he would limit his outside activities, Dr. K said.

"As far as Dr. K is concerned, (his secret identity) keeps the aura going," he said.

Since "Toast to the Boogie" began in fall 1993, its popularity has moved it from a 4 a.m. time slot to the new Friday "prime-time" slot at 9 p.m.

"The ratings were good and the

Imagine, if you will, a man with a wide-brimmed hat topped with a single pink feather, clad in platform shoes, sitting in his Cadillac, smiling his smile of gold-studded teeth, one with the word "Dr.," the other with "K." He turns to you and says, "Good evening, Iowa. The mothership has landed." You response was good, so I got the 9 p.m. to 12 a.m. slot," he said.

To keep listeners involved, Dr. K said he tries to keep the music fresh and new.

"I'm always fearful that no one is listening, especially when no one's calling," he said. "You gotta keep things fresh with a lot of new music."

Dr. K said he tries to keep his program fresh by working to enhance his show every week.

"I listen to the tapes (of my show) and try to improve," he said. "I listen to how I sound on the radio."

UI senior Brian Mildestein said Dr. K's variety of song choices is what keeps him listening.

"He plays pretty much anything, and that's why I think it appeals to me," Mildestein said. "The music he picks out is really good."

Dr. K said he tries to have continuous music, but he also works on improving the flow of the music he plays.

"I don't go from playing a Marvin Gaye song to a Fishbone song," he said. "Execution is the hardest part. Also, playing music while I speak helps with the flow and sounds more professional."

However, not all of Dr. K's listeners enjoy his voice interruptions, but Dr. K said he disagrees with their arguments.

"I got this one call last week by a guy who said, 'I love your show, but you talk so much,'" Dr. K said. "I told him to buy the record because this is live radio. I like the way the show flows."

Besides playing his favorite music and taking on a secret identity, Dr. K said his favorite part of doing the show is when the listeners call to thank him for playing a song from their past.

"I would say when someone calls up and says, 'I haven't heard that song in years' — that's what it's all about, right there," he said.

Dr. K said he gets a lot of athletes and band members calling in requests, and more recently UI professors have been calling to request their favorite funk tunes.

Although he didn't come to the UI to work at KRUI, his schoolwork cannot compare to his job as a DJ, Dr. K said.

"I'm not a music major, so it's a total about-face from what I do," he said. "I think if you can get on the air and be someone else and have people say they appreciate it, then there's no comparison — at least not now."

Many needy children in Iowa will be guaranteed opening at least two presents this year donated by Iowa residents.

The Marine Corps annual Toys For Tots drive has been helping children in Iowa for the past 40 years. The program is designed to provide children with Christmas gifts through the collection of 1st Sgt. Jim Goodman Waterloo Marine Corps.

"Most of the kids we need. Their parents can't buy them Christmas gifts. For them to get a toy is a real deal," Goodman said. "I just see their faces light up when they get the toys. What a person ask for?"

Iowa City and Coralville students may drop off toys in the Reserve's barrel in the Reserve's barrel at Mustang Market Texaco store, which is at 933 S. Clinton St. at the junction of Interstate Highway 965 in Coralville. Donations are also accepted at the Mustang Market purchase new toys.

Wendy Senn, assistant manager of the Coralville Mustang Market, said few people have toys so far.

"Our employees are ones putting toys in. We have 12 toys," Senn said. "I'm just kicking off. I hope people will start bringing toys when we get closer to Christmas."

Senn said she hopes the toys will donate toys.

"The toys make Christmas a little brighter for kids whose parents can't afford to buy toys," she said. "It's not just for the kids, but for the Christmas, not toys. The toys make it brighter for them."

The collection barrel at the Mustang Market will be open mid-December. The Mustangs will then collect all toys and donate them for distribution.

The Waterloo Marine Reserve's goal is to collect more than 200 toys — the amount of

Dancer attributes his success to mother's prodding

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gregory Hines says the secret to his success is a little motherly encouragement.

"My mother saw that my brother and I had a little interest and ability in tap dancing," the 48-year-old actor and dancer said Monday at a forum sponsored by an educational arm of the Smithsonian Institution.

The Tony-winning star of such movies as "The Cotton Club" and "White Nights" began performing with his brother, Maurice, at age 3.

"My mother was always saying, as I was progressing, 'You're good at this. You can do it.' In her way she would encourage me," Hines said.

NEW YORK (AP) — On the day after their daughter's birth, Kurt Cobain brought a gun to the hospital and proposed a suicide pact to his wife, Courtney Love. She agreed.

Then, she said in the Dec. 15 issue of Rolling Stone, she had second thoughts.

"I held this thing in my hand. And I felt that thing that they said in 'Schindler's List': I'm never going to know what happens to me. And what about Frances? Sort of rude.

Cloudy weather halts Duchess of York's charity appearance

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Nasty weather grounded the Duchess of York but couldn't stop a party in her honor.

Soccer star kicks off push for investment in city

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Pele introduced soccer to the world. Now he'd like to introduce more businesses to his hometown.

"I will ask my businessmen friends in Japan, the United States and other First World countries to come invest in Rio," the soccer star said in an interview Tuesday with the newspaper Jornal do Brasil.

Pele, now a 54-year-old wealthy businessman, said he feels it his duty to help lift Rio out of violence and decay. Things are so bad the army is patrolling the streets to fight crime.

"The time has come for the turnaround," Pele said. "That's where we come in, with a great movement in favor of Rio. All must help the city grow."

Marines collect toys for needy tots

Prasanti Kantamneni
The Daily Iowan

Many needy children across Iowa will be guaranteed the joy of opening at least two Christmas presents this year with toys donated by Iowa residents and stores.

The Marine Corps Reserve's annual Toys For Tots campaign drive has been helping needy children in Iowa for the past 47 years. The program is designed to provide children with Christmas joy through the collection of toys, said 1st Sgt. Jim Goodman of the Waterloo Marine Corps Reserve.

"Most of the kids we serve are needy. Their parents can't afford to buy them Christmas presents. For them to get a toy is a big deal," Goodman said. "You can just see their faces light up when they get the toys. What more can a person ask for?"

Iowa City and Coralville residents may drop off toy donations in the Reserve's barrels at local Mustang Market Texaco Convenience Stores, which are located at 933 S. Clinton St. and at the junction of Interstate 80 and Highway 965 in Coralville. Cash donations are also accepted and will be used by the Marines to purchase new toys.

Wendy Senn, assistant manager of the Coralville Mustang Market, said few people have donated toys so far.

"Our employees are the only ones putting toys in. We only have 12 toys," Senn said. "But things are just kicking off. I think more people will start bringing toys in when we get closer to Christmas."

Senn said she hopes more people will donate toys.

The collection barrels will be at the Mustang Markets through mid-December. The Marines will then collect all toys and donations for distribution.

year — to Iowa children this Christmas, Goodman said.

"We always try to exceed what we collected during the previous year because we always seem to fall short," Goodman said. "It's not fair that some kids don't get toys."

The toys should be new or in good shape so children may get more use out of them and enjoy them more, said Sgt. Chris DeFrieze of the Waterloo Marine Corps Reserve.

MOVIE ON COLLEGE RELATIONSHIPS SCREENED

Date rape addressed with film, forum

Jen Dawson
The Daily Iowan

More than 200 UI students, faculty and community members gathered in the Ballroom of the Union Tuesday night to view "A Reason To Believe," an independent film about friendship, college life and date rape.

The visit by the filmmakers was a way to educate students about the filmmaking industry and discuss date rape, said University Lecture Committee Chairman Andy Peebler.

"This issue of date rape is something faced in all aspects of society today," Peebler said.

The movie's producer, Ged Dickerson, and writer/director Doug Tirola have been touring the country since September and have shown their film at more than 20 college campuses.

The film, which focuses on a college student who is raped by a friend, is a more realistic portrayal of college life than other movies, Tirola said.

"There are a lot of films about date rape, and I would say most of them are ineffective in their goal," Tirola said.

Although the film focuses on rape, Tirola's original concept had nothing to do with violent crime. The first themes of the film were college life and friendships, but Tirola said once he wrote about the rape the film developed a new theme.

"By writing about date rape, I was able to bring about all the issues about friends," he said.

The film is not intended to bring about social action, but Tirola said he hopes it will get people talking about the issue.

The forum following the movie screening consisted of a panel of the filmmakers, UI staff members and representatives from local women's advocacy programs and greek organizations.

Information and resources were made available at a table outside the ballroom sponsored by the Rape Victim Advocacy Program (RVAP) and the Women's Resource and Action Center.

The table was an opportunity to provide information to students who might be dealing with date rape, said Ashley Sovern, director of education for RVAP.

"Sometimes something like this can bring a lot of stuff up," Sovern said.

An increased awareness of date rape as an important issue was Sovern's goal for the forum. She said 144 rapes were reported to RVAP in fiscal year 1994.

"I hope that people don't see it as something that doesn't affect them," she said.

UI freshman J.D. Cartier attended for two reasons.

"I've got to write a paper for rhetoric," he said, adding he has also "heard about things like this happening."

Cartier said he hoped the experience would give him insight on how to help friends in similar situations.

In addition to its educational value, Tirola said the most important goal of the evening was to have fun.

"It's a good movie, it's entertaining," he said.

Tirola and Dickerson hope to release the film nationwide after their college tour.

The film and forum were sponsored by the University Lecture Committee, Associated Residence Halls, Interfraternity Council, National Panhellenic Council, Rape Victim Advocacy Program and Women's Resource and Action Center.

COMMISSION DECISION APPEALED

Suspended officer requests reversal

Tom Shoenberg
The Daily Iowan

An Iowa City police officer found guilty by the Iowa City Civil Service Commission for using excessive force during the May arrest of a bicyclist filed an appeal in Johnson County District Court Monday.

On Nov. 9, the commission filed its formal written decision which upheld Iowa City Police Chief R.J. Winkelhake's decision to suspend Officer Edwin McMartin for two days without pay. The decision stemmed from three days of hearings in late September and early October.

McMartin's appeal asks that the commission's decision be reversed and that he be compensated for the two-day loss of pay. The appeal also asks that legal costs be paid for him.

The incident McMartin was punished for occurred May 3 when McMartin stopped Chris Lenz, 19, after seeing him ride his bicycle through the Pedestrian Mall. According to McMartin's testimony on Oct. 4, after he asked Lenz for his identification, Lenz fled the scene.

Lenz was stopped soon afterward in the 500 block of East College Street, where he was detained by officers Becki Strommer and Al Mebus until McMartin arrived. When McMartin attempted to arrest Lenz, a struggle began between McMartin, Strommer and Lenz.

During the struggle, McMartin unleashed his police-issued asp baton and swung it twice. The first strike hit Strommer while she grappled with Lenz. The second blow, which struck Lenz in the leg, happened while Lenz was being physically restrained by Strommer and Mebus.

After listening to the testimony of both Strommer and Mebus, the commission determined that Lenz presented no physical threat at the time he was hit with the asp baton.

Therefore, the commission found that the use of the baton a second time by McMartin was unnecessary because Lenz seemed to be under control at the time.

RADICAL REMEMBERED FOR COURT ANTICS

Chicago Seven activist dies after accident

Jeff Wilson

Associated Press

Jerry Rubin, who died Monday, two weeks after being struck by a car in Los Angeles, arrives at a House Un-American Activities Committee hearing on Capitol Hill in this Oct. 3, 1968 photo. Chicago.

Rubin wrote a political autobiography called "Do It! Scenarios of the Revolution," which became a best seller.

During the 1970s, the bearded Yippie radical evolved into a tailored, clean-shaven young urban professional, writing the book "Growing (Up) at 37" in 1976.

In the '80s he became known for organizing "networking" parties that attracted thousands of people to the Palladium nightclub in New York on Tuesday nights. During that period, he confronted Hoffman, his former sidekick and a lifelong radical, in a series of "Yuppie vs. Yippie" debates held around the country.

When he died, Ruben was organizing gang leaders into distributing the health drink he marketed through his Life Extension International health foods business. He moved to Los Angeles in 1991.

"Instead of distributing crack, he was getting them to distribute his product," said Krassner, editor of the quarterly newsletter The Realist. "In the end, he was combining his altruism with business."

Rubin was perhaps best known for his outrageous behavior at the Chicago Seven trial, during which the defendants baited U.S. District Judge Julius Hoffman.

The trial was a spectacle: Defendants Rubin, Hoffman, Hayden, Rennie Davis, David Dellinger, John Froines and Lee Weiner wore judicial robes to court.

"It was like going to the dentist to get a root canal each morning. I never saw a courtroom disrupted like that," said prosecutor Thomas Foran.

Foran recalled Rubin shouting and being in an LSD-induced state during the trial.

"He once told me he used LSD 300 times," Foran said. "He pretty much conquered that and became a very productive person. ... Once I met him on an airplane coming back from Washington, D.C. He was trying to get me to invest in one of his companies."

Defense attorney William Kunstler said, "Jerry and Abbie kept us laughing, kept the humor coming into the situation, gave the comic relief and made political points using burlesque and satire as their fulcrum."

He is survived by two children, Juliet, 7, and Adam, 5. He will be buried Thursday.

LOS ANGELES — Yippie-turned-yuppie Jerry Rubin was a merry master of political theater: He mocked a judge by wearing a judicial robe to court, appeared before a congressional committee in Revolutionary War costume and showed up at protests shirtless, wearing an Uncle Sam hat and toting a toy M-16.

Rubin died at age 56 Monday, two weeks after he was hit by a car while crossing a street. He never regained consciousness after the accident.

His former wife, Mimi Leonard Fleischman, acknowledged that his death came with a final act of non-conformity: jaywalking.

"He was a great life force, full of spunk, courage and wit," said California state Sen. Tom Hayden, a co-defendant in the Chicago Seven trial.

The son of a Cincinnati truck driver turned union official, Rubin catapulted to fame during the anti-Vietnam War protests of the 1960s. Along with Abbie Hoffman, Paul Krassner and other radicals, Rubin founded the Youth International Party, or Yippie, movement, dedicated to disrupting "the system."

In 1969 he was one of eight defendants who went on trial on charges of conspiring to incite rioting during the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago.

Black Panther leader Bobby Seale, after being bound and gagged in the courtroom, was tried separately, so the defendants became known as the Chicago Seven. Rubin and four others were convicted, but the convictions were overturned on appeal.

During a House Un-American Activities Committee investigation into the anti-war movement, Rubin showed up in a Revolutionary War costume with a three-cornered hat. "He was a kind of Paul Revere calling attention to the war in Vietnam. ... It was a cultural civil war," Krassner said from New York.

Committed suicide in April 1989 at 52, using phenobarbital and alcohol. Had been the most politically involved Yippie leader, although he vanished for seven years in New York to avoid cocaine possession charges.

BOSTON — Eight men have claims against Jenny Craig Inc., ing women co-workers sexu harassed them by commenting a "tight buns" and suggesting th man had to wear a bra or under sex change to get promoted.

The men, who call themselves "Boston Eight," have filed complaints against the diet company with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination. Mission spokeswoman Jane Bra said Tuesday.

The commission notified the men Monday that it found a probable cause of gender bias. Co-workers will begin mediating dispute in January, and if the sides cannot reach agreement, commission can hold a hearing.

If the commission finds discrimination, it can order Jenny Craig pay damages.

Jenny Craig Inc., based in Mar. Calif., calls the claims frivolous. Company officials told the commission the men's work was inadequate and in a statement said advancement was "based only on demonstrated ability and performance."

The commission did not rule on the cases of the five men who had gone ahead and sued Jenny Craig.

The eight men claim they were denied promotions because of their sex, given poor sales assignments, ordered to perform demeaning tasks and sexually harassed.

One of the three pursuing claim through the commission, Joseph Egan, told The Wall Street Journal that his female co-worker commented on his impressive biceps, nice eyes and "tight buld" and one female supervisor told she had dreamed about seeing him naked.

INDIANAPOLIS — Former Vice President Dan Quayle underwent treatment Tuesday for a blood clot in his lung just weeks before he was expected to announce whether he will run for president in 1996.

"The doctors are very optimistic about Mr. Quayle's condition right now. He's doing extremely well and he is progressing very nicely," said Pam Perry, a spokeswoman for Indiana University Medical Center.

The 47-year-old Quayle is expected to make a full recovery, a spokeswoman said.

He was being treated with anti-coagulants to prevent further clots while natural enzymes in Quayle's body dissolve the lodged clot, said the physician treating him, Dr. Homer Twigg. After four days, most likely will be put on another blood thinner for about three to months.

Twigg said it can take up to a year for a clot to dissolve completely.

While clots can be life-threatening because they interfere with breathing, Quayle required only a small amount of oxygen when he was admitted to the hospital.

FORMER EMPLOYEES SUE JENNY CRAIG INC.

Men accuse diet firm of harassment

Associated Press
BOSTON — Eight men have filed claims against Jenny Craig Inc., saying women co-workers sexually harassed them by commenting about "tight buns" and suggesting that a man had to wear a bra or undergo a sex change to get promoted.

The men, who call themselves the "Boston Eight," have filed complaints against the diet company with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, commission spokeswoman Jane Brayton said Tuesday.

The commission notified three of the men Monday that it found probable cause of gender bias. Case-workers will begin mediating the dispute in January, and if the two sides cannot reach agreement, the commission can hold a hearing.

If the commission finds discrimination, it can order Jenny Craig to pay damages.

Jenny Craig Inc., based in Del Mar, Calif., calls the claims frivolous. Company officials told the commission the men's work was inadequate and in a statement said advancement was "based only on demonstrated ability and performance."

The commission did not rule in the cases of the five men who have gone ahead and sued Jenny Craig.

The eight men claim they were denied promotions because of their sex, given poor sales assignments, ordered to perform demeaning tasks and sexually harassed.

One of the three pursuing his claim through the commission, Joseph Egan, told The Wall Street Journal that his female co-workers commented on his impressive biceps, nice eyes and "tight buns," and one female supervisor told him she had dreamed about seeing him naked.

Associated Press

Former Jenny Craig Inc. employees Tracy Tinkham, left, and Joseph Egan, right, listen during a news conference Tuesday in Boston. The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination announced Tuesday it had found probable cause that three men were discriminated against on the basis of their sex while employed by Jenny Craig Inc. Tinkham and Egan are among a group of men accusing Jenny Craig Inc., known as the "Boston Eight."

Egan, former manager of a Jenny Craig program in Burlington, said nearly everyone associated with the company is female, and female talk and issues permeated the workplace.

"It was, 'Who to marry? Who is pregnant? How to get pregnant? I have my period' — girl talk," Egan said in Tuesday's Journal.

Furthermore, male employees were made to wear the same uniforms as the women: white coats and pale blue scarves.

The uniform was just one thing Tracy Tinkham found insulting about working for the company. Tinkham, who quit in 1993 and is suing the company, was a top-earning program director who couldn't seem to get promoted, he said.

He claims his female co-workers resented his presence and at one point told him the only way he could get promoted was to have a sex-change operation or wear a push-up bra.

Tinkham called that just one incident in a pattern of "men-bashing" at Jenny Craig.

"If I was having a bad day, it was not uncommon for one of the women to say, 'You must be having your period,'" Tinkham said.

FULL RECOVERY EXPECTED

Quayle hospitalized for clot in lung

INDIANAPOLIS — Former Vice President Dan Quayle underwent treatment Tuesday for a blood clot in his lung just weeks before he was expected to announce whether he will run for president in 1996.

"The doctors are very optimistic about Mr. Quayle's condition right now. He's doing extremely well and he is progressing very nicely," said Pam Perry, a spokeswoman for Indiana University Medical Center.

He was being treated with anticoagulants to prevent further clotting while natural enzymes in Quayle's body dissolve the lodged clot, said the physician treating him, Dr. Homer Twigg. After four days, he most likely will be put on another blood thinner for about three to six months.

Twigg said it can take up to a year for a clot to dissolve completely.

While clots can be life-threatening because they interfere with breathing, Quayle required only a small amount of oxygen when he was admitted to the hospital and wasn't in immediate danger of dying, Twigg said.

Twigg said at a news conference that Quayle is otherwise in excellent health.

Twigg said it isn't known what causes such clots, called pulmonary embolisms. They often occur in people who are sedentary for long stretches, such as truck drivers, and can be hereditary, but Quayle had no such predisposition, the doctor said.

Quayle has been promoting his book, "Standing Firm," and appearing frequently on behalf of Republican candidates over the last year.

Quayle's wife, Marilyn Quayle, said the illness would not affect her husband's political future, which could include a run for the 1996 Republican presidential nomination.

"It's nothing. It's basically a blip, and he will continue with the timetable that he set for himself and will be back on his feet shortly and will decide what he wants to do with the future," she said.

Quayle went to the emergency room for a chest X-ray Sunday because he wasn't feeling well, said Dr. Deborah Allen, his family physician. Allen said doctors were exploring a number of diagnoses, including walking pneumonia, before conditions worsened Monday.

Hurtig said the language creates a potentially stifling environment in which students are afraid to ask questions and instructors fearfully limit their materials because they are afraid of not being supported by the UI.

"We want to have a discussion of the impact that a policy such as this — written or otherwise — has on the climate in the classroom," he said. "There is a wariness on the part of faculty members, Teaching Assistants included, to introduce certain materials and a wariness on the part of students to pose certain questions because it would label them politically incorrect heathens."

A letter written by the American Association of University Professors to the Faculty Senate requesting that the classroom materials policy issue to be reopened sparked Tuesday night's discussion.

Ruth Wachtel, president of the local chapter of the association and UI associate professor of anesthesia, said the wording of the policy is an infringement on academic freedom.

"We object to the phrase 'unusual and unexpected materials,' " she said. "That's really the basis of academic freedom, and that's why we're here."

Faculty members should support one another, especially associate professors and Teaching Assistants that are not protected as tenured professors, Hurtig said.

"The senior faculty should back up the junior faculty, and all faculty should back up the TAs," Hurtig said. "I'm much more concerned because there are segments of the teaching staff that feel at risk because of ambiguity on where we stand with the issue of academic freedom."

English Teaching Assistant and Campaign for Academic Freedom Co-chairman Israel Reyes said faculty members need to oppose the policy instead of compromising their values as educators.

"Even though it is a 'regential' policy, some of the administration has always talked about compromise," Reyes said. "Compromise has two meanings: one, where both parties are on an even playing field. In

UI Classroom Materials Policy

Responsibilities to Students:

It is also the faculty member's responsibility to provide students and prospective students with adequate, knowledgeable choices about whether to enroll. This information may be provided by course syllabi, lists of readings and other course materials, or other appropriate instructional aids. These informative materials, as appropriately supplemented by class discussion and announcements, should also be used to provide appropriate contexts for individual class sessions and to give students adequate indication of any unusual or unexpected class presentations or materials. Faculty should respect reasonable decisions by students not to attend a part or all of a particular class session; students remain responsible for learning class material and completion of course requirements.

In this case, one party has had to forgo their interests so another party can feel secure."

Peg Burke, Faculty Council member and an associate professor in physical education and sports studies, agreed the policy has a negative effect in classes.

"It is an erosion of academic freedom," Burke said. "Our broadening of the statement has made it worse."

Reyes said he is pleased with the Council's reaction and CAF will continue to work toward eliminating the policy.

"I'm glad the faculty has come out with a strong statement saying they oppose the policy and they are planning to take further action," he said.

Hurtig said if the matter goes to the regents he is doubtful any major changes will be allowed.

"Clearly, if we were to suggest that the policy be dropped, we would get nowhere with the board of regents," Hurtig said.

CAF member and Teaching Assistant in French and Italian Jean Falow said the warning must be completely eliminated.

"This policy is an embarrassment to the UI and to the state," she said. "It devalues a UI diploma."

19, committed suicide last month.

A traffic accident on Nov. 21 took the lives of 18-year-old Eric McNamara of West Liberty and Philip Houchens, 19, of West Branch on Interstate 380. McNamara had also attended high school in West Branch.

The mother of a local high-school student, 37-year-old Pamela Pedersen, was killed in a car accident on Highway 151 Sunday night.

"Until now, we've been sort of lucky," Arensdorf said. "There was one incident about 10 years ago, but we didn't have things back to back."

It's been the worst year Ed Hauth, West Branch High School principal, has experienced.

"I've been in three states, five school districts and schools with 2,500 kids," Hauth said. "I've found in a small school like this they're a close-knit group, a blending of grades where classmates transcend grade levels. In this situation, when something happens to one of us, it affects all of us — faculty as well as students."

School was canceled Monday, but counselors were available after Gates' funeral Monday afternoon and Tuesday for students who wanted to talk. They also helped train between 15 and 20 peer counselors, he said. The first hour of the school day was allotted for classes to talk about the incident and share their feelings.

Hauth said one classroom was used as a full-time counseling center, but many students took advantage of the two blue plastic chairs in front of Gates' crepe-papered locker to sit and grieve.

Arensdorf said the school did an excellent job in handling the death.

"This community is so small — everyone knows everyone," he said. "You better not say anything nasty about anyone because there's always a relative around. But when something happens, everyone's genuinely concerned. I think the funeral's attendance of around 700 people is evidence of that."

West Branch police officer Dan Knight said he's not looking forward to winter weather and the traffic accidents or fatalities it may cause.

"You have X amount of fatalities every year," Knight said. "It just seems like right now every time you pick up a paper it's a West Branch man here and a West Branch woman there. I don't remember anything like this."

UI freshman Mike Schnieders, a West Branch High School graduate, said he attended three wakes for the most recent accident victims over Thanksgiving break.

"I played football with Chad," Schnieders said. "He played on the varsity team his freshman year when I was a senior and he lived about a mile away from my house. We weren't social friends because of the age difference, but we waved and said hi."

The tragedies are especially difficult for high-school students who don't have much experience with death, he said.

"Most people are kind of hoping this will end. We've had our fair share for a while," Schnieders said.

WATER

the end of the two-year increase, it will be about $140 — a $65 increase.

Atkins said the proposed increase is in response to federal government orders to comply with the Safe Drinking Water Act and the Clean Water Act.

"Essentially, the money will build the new water plant and connect the two wastewater treatment plants," Atkins said.

The new facilities would meet the federal standards, Atkins said. The present plant has many problems, such as being vulnerable to flooding, and many parts in it are more than 100 years old, so it's the only choice, he said.

UI junior and Iowa City apartment renter Greg Cresto said as long as the water plant is built, the increases are worth it in the long run. He said the chlorine levels in the water are too high and the water plant will help that.

"The only problem I see is they'll increase the rates and the plant will never get built, or I'll never see it, but I'm paying for it," Cresto said. "In the short term it sucks — we're paying for it, but we don't get the benefits."

UI senior Candice Bowen, who also lives in an Iowa City apartment, said the increased rates would be unfair since the cost of living in Iowa City is already high, but she thinks the water needs to improve.

"I agree the present water in Iowa City is inadequate," Bowen said. "But it's unfortunate that (the water plant) is the last resort to have cleaner water."

With many leases not ending until later in the year and the proposed rate increases starting in January, the new leases will show the increase if water is included in a tenant's rent, Buss said.

"Most of our leases run August to July," Buss said. "The water rate increases start in the middle of the leases. We can't change our leases. Come August, we're going to have to figure what the 1996 fee will be and add that to our tenants' rents because that's where we're going to be affected."

UI students who live in the residence halls won't be affected unless they are housed in Mayflower Residence Hall, said George Droll, director of residence services. Mayflower Residence Hall is the only UI building that uses the Iowa City water system. All other UI buildings use the UI water system. Droll said at this time there are no estimated figures as to how much costs of living in Mayflower Residence Hall will increase if the new water rates are passed.

Barker said the City Council needs to give more thought to other available alternatives. Buss suggested UI engineering students bring their proposals to the meetings to influence the Council. Buss also suggested an alternative to building the Iowa City water plant.

"Eventually Coralville will face the same problem," he said. "Why don't we work together?"

colleagues to pass the measure.

"It is impossible to imagine a single act of this Congress that can do more to contribute to our economic growth," said Foley, who was defeated in the November elections in a Republican sweep that gave control of both the House and the Senate to the GOP for the first time in 40 years.

Foley was one of 85 House members who were either defeated or chose not to seek re-election participating in the first lame-duck session of Congress in 12 years, a fact that GATT opponents pointed to often during the debate.

The GATT accord would cut tariffs by 38 percent worldwide, expand the rules of world trade to new areas such as agriculture and services, and create a new, more powerful World Trade Organization (WTO) to referee disputes.

The administration estimated that the reduced tariffs equate to a $744 billion global tax cut over a decade. For Americans, it would represent a $70 billion cut in border taxes on imported goods and services over 10 years.

Foley and other supporters argued that a defeat of the trade agreement would be disastrous for America's standing in the world. But opponents pleaded with equal fervor that the 124-nation GATT accord was too complex to be settled "on the 11th hour" by many lawmakers who had been voted out of office.

The 142-vote margin of passage represented a victory for President Clinton, who had worked the telephones throughout the day talking to undecided lawmakers.

It was the first postelection test of whether the White House and Republicans who will control Capitol Hill come January could work together.

the seasons," Mullins said. "I'm looking forward to playing some hockey when the lakes freeze up."

Unlike hockey, other winter sports require snow, and the bulk of winter precipitation is in late November, December and February.

UI junior Jason Greenwaldt enjoys snow, just as long as he doesn't have to go anywhere. Green-waldt was in Rochester, Minn., over the weekend and got caught in the season's first taste of winter.

Being trapped somewhere when it snows and not being able to drive are the downsides of winter, he said.

"I don't mind winter too bad," Greenwaldt said. "I bundle up warm, get all my mittens and hat and get in the right mind frame. We're going to get the snow now, and as long as I don't have to go anywhere, I like the snow."

As the temperatures have dropped this week, sales of warm clothes at Active Endeavors, 138 S. Clinton St., have increased.

"In the last couple of days, the focus has been on hats and gloves, socks and long underwear," Active Endeavors owner Mark Weaver said.

He said popular warm clothing this fall includes Patagonia Capilene long underwear, fleece gloves with a wind stopper, "wild crazy Aunt Mabel hats" (long stocking hats with a tassel on the end), coats and headbands.

Judge bars Penthouse from publishing photos

Larry Neumeister
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Penthouse magazine was ordered Tuesday not to distribute or promote partially nude photographs of Paula Jones, who has accused President Clinton of sexually harassing her while he was governor of Arkansas.

U.S. District Judge Peter Leisure issued the temporary order in a $30 million lawsuit Jones filed against the magazine earlier Tuesday.

Jones said the photographs were taken by a former boyfriend, Mike Turner, and were intended for his eyes only.

Victor Kovner, a lawyer for Turner and Penthouse, said the order was too late to stop distribution of the photos because the January issue hits the newsstands Dec. 6.

"I'm deeply distressed that what appears to be such an unconstitutional order could be granted,"

Kovner said. "The First Amendment protects this publication and bars prior restraint."

Jones, a former Arkansas state employee, said in a May 6 lawsuit filed against Clinton in Little Rock, Ark., that he exposed himself to her in 1991 and suggested they engage in a sex act after summoning her to a hotel room. She said she quickly left the room.

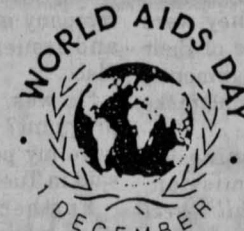

According to the lawsuit against Penthouse, the photographs were taken in 1987 by Turner, whom Jones dated for a year. The lawsuit said she was 19 and he was about 32.

Jones said in an affidavit that she posed for photographs in various stages of undress at Turner's request.

"In response to my demands of him, Mr. Turner assured me that he would not show or give the photographs to anyone and he also assured me that they were for his own personal viewing," Jones said.

IOWA STIGMA

Standing up for the UI

As an unpleasant wake-up call, it might come as a surprise to find that the UI isn't given the amount of respect it deserves outside of state lines.

When identifying yourself to people from California, New York or even Chicago, be prepared to receive a look of confusion or to be the subject of a corn joke. Whether you've experienced this or not, it's a reality to be dealt with some time or another. Many people outside the state of Iowa have not only never heard of this school's positive reputation, but they can turn it into the butt of any joke with the blink of an eye. When mentioning our beloved school, the word "university" seems to fall on deaf ears. All your money and hard work for school is reduced to another's amusement in your humiliation.

When mentioning our beloved school, the word "university" seems to fall on deaf ears.

The UI, however, is ranked 49th among other U.S. colleges and universities for being well worth tuition dollars according to U.S. News and World Report, a fact that is unfortunately not widely recognized.

The problem results in a mistaken identity from an inability to disassociate the school from the state. Iowa's reputation as a rural state clouds people's ability to view the UI as a serious academic institution. Though it may be valid to say that Iowa City is no metropolis, it's not exactly a village in the middle of the corn fields either.

More crucial than respect is what transpires when you're out in the real world trying to get a job. It might not be helpful to have the stigma of an education from a school that isn't taken seriously.

As a student, you can do your part by standing up for a university that helps define who you are and symbolizes your talent, hard work and intelligence.

There exists no simple solution when many people aren't even aware of the problem at hand. Investigate for yourself: Talk to other UI students and test any individuals you come in contact with outside the state of Iowa. As a student, you can do your part by standing up for a university that helps define who you are and symbolizes your talent, hard work and intelligence. You can spread the word to fill the void that cuts this school so short.

Offering a different interpretation

To the Editor:

In the Nov. 11 DI, Pastor Tom Miller offers an appalling abuse of the Bible to justify the death penalty. Quoting Genesis 9:6 — "Whoever sheds the blood of man, by man shall his blood be shed; for in the image of God has God made man" — he interprets these words prescriptively as an inflexible divine command to use capital punishment, even when there is a risk, as there always is, of executing the wrong person.

But this passage can also be understood, with even greater moral authority, not prescriptively but predictively in the same sense that Jesus' words were predictively true when he warned, "Those who live by the sword will die by the sword" (Matthew 26:52). Similarly, when my mother said, "If you play with fire, you are going to get burned," she was not saying that I deserved to get burned, and if it didn't happen accidentally she would burn me herself. She was warning of the probable consequences of a certain type of behavior.

Genesis 9:6 warns us that attempts to solve human problems by bloodshed and violence can only ultimately result in the creation of a more violent and bloody world. This understanding, I suggest, is more in keeping with the spirit of Jesus, who consistently taught that we should not respond to evil with more evil but with good. The words Miller quotes are not only inadequate as a moral justification for capital punishment, they are actually an argument against it — against a continuing spiral of violence repaid for violence.

Obviously, certain biblical passages do prescribe the death penalty for some situations. Still, I doubt even Miller would call for their universal and literal application. One startling example is Deuteronomy 21:18-21, which provides that stubborn and rebellious children should be sentenced to death by stoning. I suspect most of us, perhaps even including Miller, can feel very grateful that no court took these words literally in our own cases.

Most of us are concerned with the bewildering array of problems that face us as a society. There are no quick fixes — not even in the Bible. But the real and enduring answer the Bible does give is not the seek vengeance, bloodthirsty and fear-driven capital punishment but the slow and patient way of redemptive love. This, the Bible says, is ultimately "God's way."

No guarantee with purchased notes

To the Editor:

In response to the articles on I Notes and the frequent advertisements by this firm that have appeared in The Daily Iowan, the College of Liberal Arts reminds students that on March 18, 1988, during a time when other firms (now no longer in business) were selling notes, the Educational Policy Committee adopted the following statement:

"It is educationally unsound for students to use purchased lecture notes as a substitute for regular attendance at lectures, discussion sections and laboratories or as a substitute for the experience of learning to take complete and accurate notes. Moreover, purchased lecture notes cannot capture an instructor's emphasis and enthusiasm, nor can they portray the full value of visual materials."

There is a better way than buying notes

On rare occasions, you get advice that sticks in your mind. A professor of mine once told me about the best way to take notes for a class. With "Notegate" hitting the campus, I'll share that advice on taking notes as well as other thoughts about this whole business of note-taking.

The best way to take notes for a class is a method called the Columbia note-taking strategy. Under this active strategy, you are supposed to go to class full of energy and ready to write most of what your professor has to say. It is exhausting work.

Preferably you have read the material that your professor is going to cover. This helps, but is not absolutely necessary. A professor talks for an hour, and obviously you cannot write all he or she has to say. Realistically, though, each lecture has a few major themes, and the professors simply repeat (and, unfortunately, embellish) easy concepts unnecessarily.

You need to leave a 1-inch margin on the left side of each page of your notebook. Take notes only on one side of each page. Under the Columbia note-taking method, you must take notes in full sentences. Try to get the main ideas your professor is trying to convey and put them in complete sentences.

The reason for this is simple. Let's say you take notes in an outline form. Then you try to use the notes from the beginning of the semester to study for finals. Most of what you have in your notebook in outline form will not make any sense to you. On the other hand, if you take notes in full sentences, you could understand them even if you haven't looked at them for a long time. When taking notes, remember to put the sentences that convey a central message in one paragraph. Pay attention to the way a professor divides the topics and main ideas. Your notes should be organized based on the divisions of topics and ideas as set out — sometimes subtly — by your professor.

As I said, the Columbia note-taking strategy is hard work, but the work is not done yet. After class, you need to set aside at least 10 minutes to review the notes you took. Fill in any gaps and clear up any incomprehensible sentences you may have in your notes. This is the best time to do this because the lecture is still fresh in your mind. In the left margin of your notes beside each paragraph, write a very short description of what the main idea of each paragraph is. This helps you when you go over your notes later on. Also, it will give you an idea what the major themes of the lecture were.

Ideally, you must read the assigned readings covered by each lecture. That is what the skipped pages in the notebook are for. As you read the assigned readings, you should take notes of your own, putting them on the other side of the page in your lecture notes covering the same topic. This will make your notes the ideal studying tool. Your notes will not only have your professor's views on a topic, but also what the assigned readings have to say about it.

To be honest, I have never followed this method for an entire semester. As I said, it requires hard work. But anybody who follows this plan for the whole semester will definitely get a very high grade.

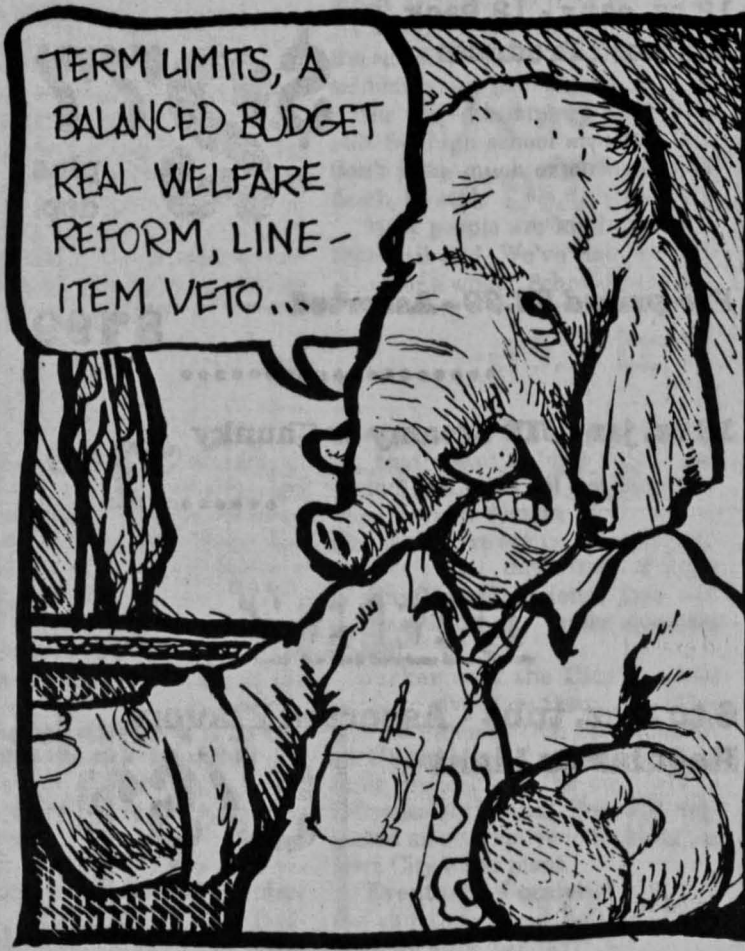

The job of students, however, will get a lot easier if the professors — especially those upset with the selling and buying of their lecture notes — made their notes available to students. Why don't professors put their lecture notes on reserve in the library so any student could copy them if they wish? If the students have the notes for a class available to them, they could then relax and just listen to the lectures.

I understand there is a lot of pride of authorship any professor has with his or her lecture notes. But I think their job and the students' jobs will be a lot easier if the professors stopped hiding their lecture notes as if they were some state secret. Let the students see what is in your notes. Let the students know your thought process. Isn't learning how to think a central purpose of education? Why is it that only the professor is supposed to know how students think about a subject matter? It would be refreshing if students also got a chance to know how a professor thinks on a topic.

Djalal "D.J." Arbabha's column appears Wednesdays on the Viewpoints Pages.

REPUBLICANS WORKING FOR CHANGE:

DEMOCRATS WORKING FOR CHANGE:

GUEST OPINION • ANDREAS MAURER

Students should not bear tuition burden

"BAFÖG" is the abbreviation for "Bundesausbildungsförderungsgesetz," the Federal Education Support Act — a legal term that presumably sounds as terrible in English as it sounds in German. Nevertheless, for about 30 percent of German students, only BAFÖG makes it possible for them to attend a college or university.

To the outrage of German youth, the German Parliament recently decided not to increase this support program. At about the same time, to the outrage of Iowan youth, the Iowa state Board of Regents raised tuition at the three state universities. Both are politicized decisions, and the protesters in both cases are aware of this. However, Iowan students may not quite understand the level of indignation of their German colleagues because there is one major difference between the German and the American educational systems: Germans don't have to pay tuition at all!

Iowans will find this much familiar. With few exceptions, German universities are state-run and state-financed — paid for by taxpayers. But beyond this, some German students also get money from the state. Why, if they don't have to pay anything in the first place? The answer lies in the German understanding of equal opportunity.

Germany considers itself a "social welfare state," which means that it subsidizes every individual who lacks means. The country has a strong social support network, mostly organized by the federal government and regulated by federal laws. The most prominent example is Germany's health-insurance system, which could have been, but wasn't, a model for President Clinton's health-care reform plan. The program covers nearly every medical treatment for every German citizen and applies to foreigners in Germany for the same low costs.

The same principle applies to the educational system. Going to school is expensive in Germany, too. Even if you don't have to pay tuition, you still need accommodations and food. In the United States, the answer is often student loans. But no German bank will gamble on the prospect of a well-paying job after graduation as security — there are simply too many unemployed university graduates around. Another answer is grant scholarships. But the number of scholarships available in Germany is very small, and the situation is therefore even more competitive than in the United States.

Government support from the BAFÖG program is based entirely on need, as gauged by the income of students and their parents. The maximum sum a student can get per month if studying in Germany is equivalent to $500 — just enough for the bare necessities of life. And half of the BAFÖG merely is an interest-free loan. After finishing their studies, students have to pay back 50 percent of the money they have received.

Without receiving money from my government, I would not have been able to study in Germany and I couldn't even think of studying in a foreign country. For me it's been enough, but fewer than one-third of German students receive money from the government under BAFÖG; the rest are supported by their parents or jobs.

I don't know if Americans can understand the German system and the idea behind it. Over the last two or three years, some discussion about introducing tuition at German universities emerged — mostly started by conservative politicians. This idea was quickly abandoned because it simply wouldn't be acceptable in our society.

On the other hand, the American system of tuition seems to be well-entrenched in this society. Why does nobody try to change it? Why do students only protest against the increase of tuition and not against the idea in general? From all that I've seen in the United States and what I've read and learned about this country, I think there is a major emphasis on individualism here. American society asks for more personal treatment in one's life than most other societies in the world do. Paying tuition is the American student's investment in his or her personal career. Students pay for their education with the assumption of benefit.

I don't believe that professors in Germany intend to send their students into unemployment. But German universities have (or pretend to have) some broader approach. Above all, they still hold to the idea of humanistic education as introduced by Wilhelm von Humboldt in the early 19th century. This attitude is changing now at more and more schools, but still it sounds a bit indecent to talk about life after the university while still attending school there. The main goal seems to be academic.

No doubt, the German and American educational systems are different because the societies are. I am not passing judgment on either. Perhaps each is right for its own universe, but it's worth learning about the other.

Regents out of touch

To the Editor:

It seems as though the Iowa state Board of Regents should consider more factors when trying to determine the fairness of tuition increases. The reactions of regents in an article titled "Regents to tackle tuition boost" (DI, Oct. 18) showed how out of touch they are, concerning what it is like to be trying to get through college. The regents were planning to vote on a tuition increase of 4.2 percent for non-residents, along with raising health computer fees $4 per semester. The proposal passed the next day.

A comment that was particularly out of touch was by board member Tom Collins, who said that if students were to get out of college in four years they would save around $10,000 and e-

Headline, group play

To the Editor:

On the morning of Oct. 17, I opened The Daily Iowan and sat down to read the water. However, as I was gulping the story titled "Study: I.C. water supply choked on my water!" As I read on, that the water is actually not hazardous because as a busy college student readers, I rarely have time to fully read a story and often rely on the headline's latest information.

The author, Sheba Wheeler, presciently stated that the drinking water that was cited in the study was drinking water. UI water utilities must be the report is "misleading, and overstated." He said that the Environmental Agency (EPA) sets standards for water considered safe. If there was a danger, we should take the necessary action.

A message to students

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the letter to the editor titled "Everyone struggles regardless of race" (DI, Nov. 16).

The letter was written by an Iowa City resident discussing her reservations with Kobie Coleman's column titled "Where is the power, respect?" (DI, Sept. 6), an article that chronicled a personal experience with the arrest of two black men and police brutality. The writer felt that Coleman was biased in his examination of the experience.

Obscenity should be banned

To the Editor:

As a freshman at the UI, I have opened day to see The Daily Iowan laying in my lap. I have picked it up and have taken it to read it in a hurried frenzy before my few months of school, the DI seems to be a professional student newspaper that covers events, but national and international news. In the past few weeks I have opened this "newspaper" — only to never done so.

What about the DI sicken and sicken the publication of obscene and abusive content, the DI has no qualms about publishing in most circles as unprintable. When uproar over the "Hey" song, the DI caused the song to be banned. The same word, along with equally offensive letters concerning the same song, nearly caused me to choke on my breakfast also sickened my stomach to see such

Audience questioned

To the Editor:

We are writing to pose a question to approximately 75 percent of the crowd who ventured to Gabe's on Nov. 19 for the Epic Soundtracks and Evan Dando show. At the end of the evening, after a stellar performance, we both left the show full of tension and anxiety. Why? Because the crowd that night was without a doubt the roughest gathering of people that we have ever had the displeasure of being a part of.

Obtuse was the word of choice for the evening. Who did you people think that Epic Soundtracks was talking to when he prefaced a song with, "Now here's another little song for some of you to talk through?" You probably didn't hear him.

Regents out of touch

To the Editor:
It seems as though the Iowa state Board of Regents should consider more factors when trying to determine the fairness of tuition increases. The reactions of regents in an article titled "Regents to tackle tuition boost" (DI, Oct. 18) showed how out of touch they are, concerning what it is like to be trying to get through college. The regents were planning to vote on a tuition increase of 4.2 percent for non-residents, along with raising health and computer fees $4 per semester. The proposal passed the next day.

A comment that was particularly out of touch was by board member Tom Collins, who said that if students would get out of college in four years they would save around $10,000 and earn $20,000. If a student has to work one or two jobs just to be able to afford to go to school here, it's asking an awful lot of them to be able to stay on course to graduate in four years and maintain a halfway decent GPA. Another board member, Elizabeth Hendricks, tried to dodge the bullet by saying that students should be more concerned about raises in health and computer fees. I think most students are going to be a lot less concerned about $4 when compared to the tuition increases.

Something that should be of real concern to students is that even though tuition is being raised, there are no real guarantees that the money gained will ever make it to the UI. The budgets for the universities must be approved by the state Legislature. If Iowa is really such a leader in education, then affordable education should be available to any student who seems capable of handling college work.

The final act of the regents that I found offensive was their plan to request $937,000 to establish 150 scholarships for American Indians from out of state whose tribes have low backgrounds. The scholarships would make their tuition equal to in-state rates. I have no problem with the establishment of new scholarships. What bothers me is that these scholarships are discriminatory. I have never heard of the regents trying to establish a scholarship exclusively for Caucasians, and if they did they would never hear the end of it. So why then is it right to favor the American Indians on this issue?

Burlington Street dam inaction frustrating

To the Editor:
When I saw the headline "Agencies act to halt dam deaths" (DI, Nov. 11), I was relieved and happy — then I read the fine print. It is laudable that the number of cables and chains hanging from the Burlington Street bridge will be increased, but I don't understand why the steps taken in Des Moines, Cedar Rapids and Coralville can't be taken in Iowa City. Every semester, hundreds of young people move to town, people who see an inviting river to boat on and who have never heard of "low-head dams" (which you quote Steve Fairbanks, park ranger in Des Moines, as calling "effective killing machines"), much less expect to find one inadequately marked inside the city limits of a major university town.

The article states that six people have died — five in boating accidents — since 1990. Yet the thrust of Iowa City's "safety measures" seems mainly toward protecting bicyclists. Why can't the dam be redesigned or removed? It would cost money, but how much is even a single human life worth? Why, for that matter, can't officials find out who owns the damn thing? (Give me a break!) And especially, why was there a veto on putting up more warning signs or a sign stating how many deaths by drowning have occurred since 1990? These measures would seem very cost-effective, if money's the problem.

The inaction of our enlightened City Council would seem to indicate it shares Chuck Schmadeke's view that "It is not possible to construct devices ... to protect individuals intent on committing foolish acts." Of course it's possible — it's done all the time. Behind this remark is either inexcusable laziness or the self-righteous attitude of someone determined to "teach people a lesson." Well, it's an effective lesson. Unfortunately, the people who learn it will be the parents (or children), brothers, sisters and friends of the next person killed by the Burlington Street dam. I only hope that when it's all over they have enough funds and energy left to launch a major lawsuit.

Headline, group play on emotions

To the Editor:
On the morning of Oct. 17, I opened my door, grabbed The Daily Iowan and sat down to read it with my glass of water. However, as I was gulping the water I read the cover story titled "Study: I.C. water supply hazardous." I nearly choked on my water! As I read on, I was surprised to learn that the water is actually not hazardous at all. This is upsetting because as a busy college student, like many other DI readers, I rarely have time to fully examine the details of a story and often rely on the headline to update me on the latest information.

The author, Sheba Wheeler, presented the facts of the study, which stated that the drinking water contains 10 times the normal level of five weed killers. However, the water that was cited in the study was surface water, not drinking water. UI water utilities manager Ken Lloyd said that the report is "misleading, and the risks implied are overstated." He said that the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) sets standards for water levels as to what is considered safe. If there was a danger, the EPA would intervene and take the necessary actions. For the weed killer Atrazine, the UI level is actually below the EPA's maximum level. He also stated that a person could drink the water for 70 years and be in no danger.

Iowa Citizen Action Network (ICAN) is one group speaking out about the dangers of the water. ICAN is serving a just purpose by making people aware of the risks, but some of the facts they are presenting are slanted. They are assuming that the herbicides are not able to be removed by the water treatment facilities, which, according to officials, is not true. The officials at the water plants in Iowa City are taking note of the study and taking actions to minimize the possible risks involved with drinking the water.

After I finished the article, I was stunned to find that the headline of the article was strongly slanted and that the article contradicted exactly what the headline claimed. Isn't the purpose of journalism to report factual stories and headlines? Using the word hazardous is bound to send many readers into an uproar after reading only the headline. Groups such as ICAN feed on similar misguided facts and statements to arouse people's emotions.

A message to students

To the Editor:
I am writing in response to the letter to the editor titled "Everyone struggles, regardless of race" (DI, Nov. 16).

The letter was written by an Iowa City resident discussing her reservations with Kobie Coleman's column titled "Where is the power, respect?" (DI, Sept. 6), an article that chronicles a personal experience with the arrest of two black men and police brutality. The writer felt that Coleman was biased in his examination of the experience by excluding pertinent information on the origin of the attack that led police to the scene in the first place.

She expressed that her opinion about Coleman's critique on the arrest was "unprovoked" or "the repercussion of a previous interaction." She makes the request as if its answer would be justification in finding fault with Coleman's concerns.

A message to those white students who have a problem with black students who think:
All of you were not missionaries
Some of you enslaved.

All of you were not immigrants from Prussia,
Some of you lynched.
All of you are not worldly artists
Most of you discriminate.
All of you were not kind white children
A few of you cheat.
In other words: Face reality, baby!
A woman in a bikini doesn't justify the rape.
Does it?

Obscenity should be omitted

To the Editor:
As a freshman at the UI, I have opened my door each day to see The Daily Iowan laying in front of me. Each day I have picked it up and have taken it to breakfast — where I read it in a hurried frenzy before my first class. For the first few months of school, the DI seemed to be a blessing: a professional student newspaper that not only covered local events, but national and international events as well. Unfortunately, in the past few weeks I have unsuspectingly opened this "newspaper" — only to wish later that I had never done so.

What about the DI sickens and saddens me? Put simply, the publication of obscene and abusive language. Apparently, the DI has no qualms about printing what is regarded in most circles as unprintable. When reporting about the uproar over the "Hey" song, the DI printed the word that caused the song to be banned. The DI also printed the same word, along with equally offensive words, in subsequent letters concerning the same song. Not only did this nearly cause me to choke on my bagel at breakfast, but it also sickened my stomach to see such filth in print.

Each day as I walk around campus, obscene and abusive language can be heard coming from mouths both near and far away. The lowest form of language is always present, but just because it is present does not mean that it should be uplifted, substantiated and exalted through publication. Not only does the DI do this when it prints obscene language, but it also lessens the image of the students, faculty and alumni of the UI in the eyes of the greater community. The "Hey" song was banned for just this reason. In accordance, the DI should act in a similar fashion. The DI has a responsibility to students, faculty and alumni to not print such language — a responsibility which the DI currently fails to fulfill.

So when the DI is presented with such obscene and abusive material in the future, it would do its readers a great service by omitting or editing such filth — a policy common among reputable newspapers across this state. Not only would this be better for the UI, but for my poor stomach as well.

Audience questioned

To the Editor:
We are writing to pose a question to approximately 75 percent of the crowd who ventured to Gabe's on Nov. 19 for the Epic Soundtracks and Evan Dando show. At the end of the evening, after a stellar performance, we both left the show full of tension and anxiety. Why? Because the crowd that night was without a doubt the rudest gathering of people that we had ever had the displeasure of being a part of.

Obtuse was the word of choice for the evening. Who did you people think that Epic Soundtracks was talking to when he prefaced a song with, "Now here's another little song for some of you to talk through?" You probably didn't hear him.

And for the overdressed females who squealed, "I just stood next to Evan Dando!" Do you actually believe that he remembered any of your faces for more than five minutes? You flatter yourselves. You, the same women who were so enthralled with Dando's presence only moments before, were too self-absorbed to realize that it was your babble that caused him to give up the stage and sing without a microphone in an attempt to force the crowd to shut up and listen.

Finally, we would normally have no argument with people who like to sing along because at most shows they are in competition with multiple stacks of amplifiers. But for the idiots who got blasted before the show and screamed out the lyrics, we have a basic mathematical problem for you: there was one Evan Dando with an acoustic guitar and no microphone, and there were at least six of you. Which number is larger? Now try this one. When Dando moved out into the audience, how did you think that people would be able to hear him over you?

Although the show still ranks among the best we've attended, such flagrant disregard for the performers and other audience members sets a tone for future concerts that we wouldn't want to wish on anyone.

So now we return to our original question for the offending parties: If you didn't intend to listen, why did you go to the show? If you can't answer this, please allow us to make a suggestion: next time, don't.

Judging by the attendance, not many people have seen what the Iowa volleyball team can do this season.

But tonight Hawkeye fans will get the opportunity to see Iowa host its first ever NCAA tournament match at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Iowa earned an at-large bid to the 48-team tournament after compiling a 24-8 record and finishing third in the Big Ten Conference. Tonight at 7:30 p.m. the Hawkeyes will welcome Pittsburgh, which finished the regular season with a record of 20-10.

"Everyone's really excited that we're playing at home," senior Heather Grim said. "I heard that our crowd was over 700 people on Saturday. That's a lot over Thanksgiving weekend. Hopefully we'll have a big turnout tonight."

Kingsbury snaps Hawkeye record

Sophomore reserve drills nine 3-pointers in Iowa's 103-68 victory against Drake

Patrick Regan
The Daily Iowan

DES MOINES — Iowa crushed Drake 103-68 Tuesday night, but the real game was between Chris Kingsbury and the Hawkeye recordbooks.

The Iowa sophomore put on a show for the soldout Knapp Center, draining a Hawkeye record nine 3-pointers on 12 attempts. Kingsbury poured in a career-best 29 points and added eight rebounds.

The previous record for the most 3-point shots in a game by a Hawkeye was set in 1988 by Jeff Moe, who had seven against Oral Roberts.

"Tonight you saw Chris Kingsbury really break out," Iowa coach Tom Davis said. "He's done that at practice a few times, but he's not had a game like that and it seemed to be contagious."

Iowa knocked down 14 3-pointers, tying the all-time school record. The Hawkeyes improved to 2-0 on the season. Drake fell to 0-1.

The Hawkeyes started slowly as Drake built a 12-7 lead, but from there it was all Iowa. The Hawkeyes nailed four 3-pointers during a 27-5 run midway through the first half and the rout was on with Iowa holding a 34-17 advantage.

But the explosion wasn't over yet.

Kingsbury hit four 3-pointers in the final eight minutes of the first half, and Iowa took a 54-32 lead into the lockerroom.

"We played pretty well in that stretch and I think that's where our relative experience played off," Davis said.

Drake was overpowered inside and resorted into taking long-range jumpers. But unlike Iowa, the Bulldogs couldn't hit anything. They connected on just nine of a school-record 45 3-point attempts.

But all eyes were on Kingsbury. "I haven't had that since high school," Kingsbury said. "I had a couple decent games where I scored some points, but if I can get to the foul line and do some other things, I could have some good nights for us."

Drake coach Rudy Washington was stunned by Kingsbury's marksmanship.

"Kingsbury shot the ball as well as anyone I've ever seen," Washington said. "He had a great game."

Kingsbury was originally expected to start, but freshman Ryan Bowen replaced him in the lineup for the last two games.

Bowen stepped in after Kingsbury missed a practice because of

BASEBALL PAYROLLS

Salary cap would hurt Tigers most

Ronald Blum
Associated Press

LEESBURG, Va. — Twenty-one teams would have to reduce their payrolls by a combined $55.8 million if owners impose a salary cap, with Detroit cutting the most, according to calculations by The Associated Press.

Owners are expected to implement the cap when they meet Monday in Chicago, and players are expected to challenge it in court and before the National Labor Relations Board.

Under management's plan, the Tigers would have to slash their payroll by slightly more than $5.6 million. Atlanta, the Chicago White Sox, New York Yankees, San Francisco and Toronto all would have to cut more than $4 million apiece.

Cincinnati, Kansas City and Los Angeles would have to trim more than $3 million each, and Baltimore, Boston, Oakland and Texas would need to scrap more than $2 million apiece.

Cleveland, the Chicago Cubs, Houston and Philadelphia would have to cut more than $1 million. Seattle and California would have to erase more than $500,000. St. Louis would have to cut about $116,000 and the New York Mets' payroll would have to go down about $28,000.

Only two teams would have to increase payrolls to reach the minimum. The San Diego Padres would have to add about $1.5 million and Montreal would have to tack on about $470,000.

The figures are based on management's estimate that 1994 revenue without a strike would have been $1,743,296,000, not including licensing money.

Notre Dame pushes past Indiana, 80-79

Nancy Armour

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Notre Dame hit five free throws in overtime Tuesday as the Irish overcame a 14-point halftime deficit to upset Indiana 80-79.

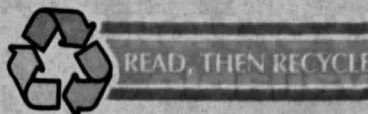

The loss drops the Hoosiers to 1-3, their worst start since the 1976-77 season, when they finished 16-11.

Michael Hermon sank his second of two free throws to tie the game at 69 with 54 seconds to play. Notre Dame (2-0) inbounded the ball and took it down the court, but Keith Kurowski missed a baseline jumper. Hermon missed on an airball and the ball went out of bounds as the buzzer ran out.

The referees put 2.6 seconds on the clock and Ryan Hoover attempted a three-pointer that Irish had trailed 45-34 at the half, but sparked by two treys from Billy Taylor and another from Justice, Notre Dame went on a 14-5 run to open the second half and tie it at 50 with 15:34 to play.

 The Irish took the lead, 56-55, for the first time since the opening minutes of the first half on another Taylor trey with 11:25 to play.
 Indiana's Alan Henderson led all scorers with 21 points. Notre Dame was led by Hoover and Kurovski, who each had 16.

Schoensted said. "That's what we're going to keep doing. We'll take one match at a time and go as far as we can."
 "I think our players are ready to prove more. We've gone 9-0 in five-game matches and that shows a lot of mental toughness. Mentally they just seem to be there when we need it. I think I'm going to let some of them play the lottery for me."
 Maybe the Hawkeyes aren't ready to win the lottery, but they certainly appear prepared to win on the court.
 "Saturday night (in a win over Illinois) we played really good," sophomore Teri Fleming said. "We're peaking right now and this is the right time to peak."
 "We're all really excited and we want it to keep going. We don't want it to stop here."
 Grim shared Fleming's confidence.
 "We wouldn't be where we are if we didn't do something right this season," Grim said. "Right now everyone is basically 0-0. Everyone's starting fresh. If we can play our game and stay confident, I think we can beat anybody."

 Schoensted said the confidence of the players has been a leading force in Iowa's remarkable season.
 "Making the tournament is far better than anyone expected, except for my players," Schoensted said. "I think they're the ones that believed the most. (The tournament bid) shows that I've got the greatest group of student-athletes anyone would want to coach."
 Schoensted also mentioned two other important factors.
 "One is that we recruited all players that were successful on their club teams and high school teams," she said. "The second thing I think is pivotal is our chemistry. That's something that you can't necessarily manipulate. It's just something you hope will happen."
 "And I think for a team like us, expected by me to finish .500 and by the conference to finish last, that has made the difference."

 sickness and academic reasons.
 "Ryan's the one who came in to start for me, and he hasn't done anything wrong," Kingsbury said. "It's his spot, and I've got to beat him out."
 Davis said Kingsbury's record-setting night wouldn't affect the lineup for the Hawkeye Invitational this weekend.
 "I won't change right now, we're playing too well," Davis said. "We'll stay with this for a bit. Chris is a very unusual, young guy. He wants what's best for the team. If he can have a night like that coming off the bench, why switch?"

 Bowen finished with four points and six rebounds in 22 minutes. Kingsbury's night overshadowed another stellar night for sophomore Jess Settles, who had 22 points and a team-leading nine rebounds. The sophomore also picked off a career-high nine steals.
 The only bright spots for Drake were a career-high 13 rebounds by junior Bruce Overton and 16 points from sophomore Lynnrick Rogers.

 "It's been fantastic. And long-awaited," Grim said. "This season makes up for the hard work I've had to put in the last three years."
 In those last three years the Hawkeyes managed just 31 wins combined and just 10 in the Big Ten. That is probably why Iowa was predicted to finish last in the Big Ten this season. But, as Grim explained, this season was

CHICAGO BEARS
Walsh with 7
 Rick Gano Associated Press
 LAKE FOREST, Ill. — Times his passes flutter rather spiral. He's not quick, as Walsh doesn't scramble either.
 Two years ago he didn't even into a game. Last year he played only two.
 He began this season on the bench with the Chicago Bears three games when Erik Kramer was hurt and then returned to sidelines. Now he's starting apparently for good.
 How could he not be?
 Steve Walsh is unbeatable may not have the strongest throw the prettiest passes or the most mobile quarterback in NFL, but he's 7-0 and the Bears are in first place.
 After languishing on the sidelines in first Dallas and then in Orleans, making only 24 starts in six seasons, Walsh realized he had to have to be in the chance. That's the life of a backup quarterback.

Salaam plans to stay next season
 Associated Press
 BOULDER, Colo. — After learning Rick Neuheisel would replace Bill McCartney as Colorado's head football coach, Heisman Trophy finalist Rashaan Salaam said he is staying at CU his senior year.
 Later, he qualified his decision, saying he was "90-10" favor of finishing his college career before going to the NFL.
 This season, he became only the fourth player in NCAA history to rush for 2,000 yards and led the nation in rushing.
 He was expected to be a high first-round NFL draft choice.
 Asked about all the money he would pass up by waiting a year to go to the NFL, he said, "I can get it next year."
 He said the determining factor in his decision was Neuheisel — "someone from the family getting the position."

CHICAGO BEARS

Walsh takes off with 7-0 start

Rick Gano
Associated Press

LAKE FOREST, Ill. — Sometimes his passes flutter rather than spiral. He's not quick, so Steve Walsh doesn't scramble well, either.

Two years ago he didn't even get into a game. Last year he played in only two.

He began this season on the bench with the Chicago Bears, won three games when Erik Kramer was hurt and then returned to the sidelines. Now he's the starter, apparently for good.

How could he not be?

Steve Walsh is unbeaten. He may not have the strongest arm, throw the prettiest passes or be the most mobile quarterback in the NFL, but he's 7-0 and the Bears are in first place.

After languishing on the bench in first Dallas and then New Orleans, making only 24 starts in six seasons, Walsh realized he'd have to play well if he finally got the chance. That's the life of a backup quarterback.

"I knew that I needed to get an opportunity and get in soon because it's hard to be on the bench and be the No. 2 quarterback and not get to play and stay in the league," he said.

"You need to get out there and perform. It was frustrating at times but I never really lost confidence in my ability."

The Bears signed Walsh to a one-year, $600,000 deal as backup to Kramer, who got a three-year, $8.1 million contract.

Walsh led Miami to a national championship in 1987 when Chicago coach Dave Wannstedt was an assistant with the Hurricanes. And when Kramer struggled after returning from a shoulder injury, the job was Walsh's, on a temporary basis at first.

Wannstedt is not surprised Walsh has led the Bears to four straight victories heading into Thursday night's game in Minneapolis.

"This is what Steve is capable of doing. I'm happy and excited for him," said Wannstedt.

With Walsh, the Bears have used a ball-control offense that features short passes to the tight ends, backs and wideouts, a steady running attack and an occasional foray over the middle when necessary. Walsh hit passes of 44 and 50 yard to Jeff Graham last week in an overtime victory over the Arizona Cardinals.

"I feel (confident) that way with all the quarterbacks, all three of them," said Graham, who had eight catches for 154 yards last week.

"It's just the confidence level Steve has to be able to put me in a situation to make those plays."

Said Walsh: "I think this is a team of overachievers and there's nothing wrong with that."

The Bears were a beaten team the last time they played the Vikings, losing 42-14 in the third week. Walsh did not play.

"They really dominated us in the first game but we like to think we're a different ball club and that will make a difference," said

Walsh, who rooted for the Vikings growing up and was voted the Minneapolis-St. Paul metro prep Football Player of the Year in 1984.

"I've had a couple of games that have been unique situations, going down to Miami where I played in college and where I had a lot of friends in the stands. And playing against the Saints and starting. I've always been good at focusing in once the game starts."

FIRST TO CLINCH PLAYOFF BID

49ers to focus on home-field advantage

Dennis Geogatos
Associated Press

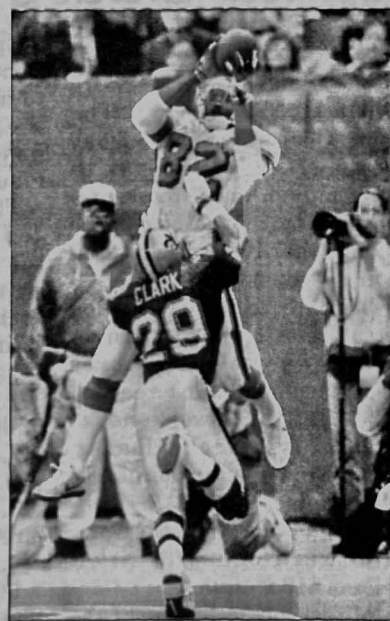

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Wary of another postseason pratfall, George Seifert wants the San Francisco 49ers to spend the final month of the season driving for home-field advantage throughout the playoffs.

"I think we learned last year the importance of homefield advantage," the 49ers coach said Tuesday, recalling San Francisco's 38-21 loss at Dallas in last season's NFC championship game.

"We still have a ways to go to see exactly where we're placed in this whole playoff picture," Seifert added. "But that is something to strive for. We're kind of in a neck and neck battle with Dallas. So each game for each team is very, very critical. It's the one who blinks first, I guess, who gets hurt."

San Francisco (10-2) won its seventh straight game Monday night by beating the New Orleans Saints 35-14. The victory clinched the 49ers' 11th NFC West title since 1981 and sent San Francisco to the playoffs for the 12th time in 14 years.

It was the second earliest division clinching win since the NFL went to the 16-game format in 1978. Only the 1985 Chicago Bears clinched sooner.

"We expected to be here — maybe not this early — but we expected to be in the playoffs," strong safety Tim McDonald said. "We didn't come here to be division champs. Guys are here to get to the Super Bowl."

Toward that end, San Francisco maintained a tiebreaker edge for home-field advantage over Dallas (10-2), having beaten the Cowboys 21-14 on Nov. 13.

TALKS RESUME

Agreement to end strike seems unlikely

Ronald Blum
Associated Press

LEESBURG, Va. — Less than a week before the deadline owners have set for determining baseball's new economic order, talks resumed Tuesday with little hope for an agreement.

Owners were awaiting a counteroffer from players to the luxury tax plan management presented Nov. 17. Free agent outfielder Brett Butler said there was sentiment to wait until after the union's executive board meets in Atlanta next week, but owners said that would be too late.

"Once you go past the point implementation, it's difficult to put the yolk back into the egg," management negotiator John Harrington said.

Atlanta Braves president Stan Kasten, a member of the owners' bargaining team, said management would implement a new system if there isn't an agreement by Monday, when owners are scheduled to meet in Chicago. Players weren't so sure.

"Words are cheap," Butler said before the meeting. "You can say one thing and do another."

The sides met for two hours in the late afternoon before a short break and were scheduled to get back together in the early evening.

"It's going to be pretty tough to get something done by next week," Butler said.

Owners want to change the economic system before Dec. 7, the last date for teams to offer salary arbitration to their former players who became free agents.

Eighty-two players face the deadline. Another, infielder Felix Fermin, agreed Tuesday to a two-year contract with the Seattle Mariners.

Tense, unpleasant 'Monkey' explores painful family ties

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

"Spanking the Monkey" is not what most people have in mind when they talk about family movies. And this grimy, gray story of incest, lust and emotional debilitation isn't the uplifting film most families will be looking for to fill their happy holidays.

But family is the key to "Monkey," an unpleasant but incisive look at parent-child relationships and twentysomething stress. It's no wonder this film — the winner of the Audience Award at the prestigious Sundance festival — has attracted so much renewed interest to independent filmmaking.

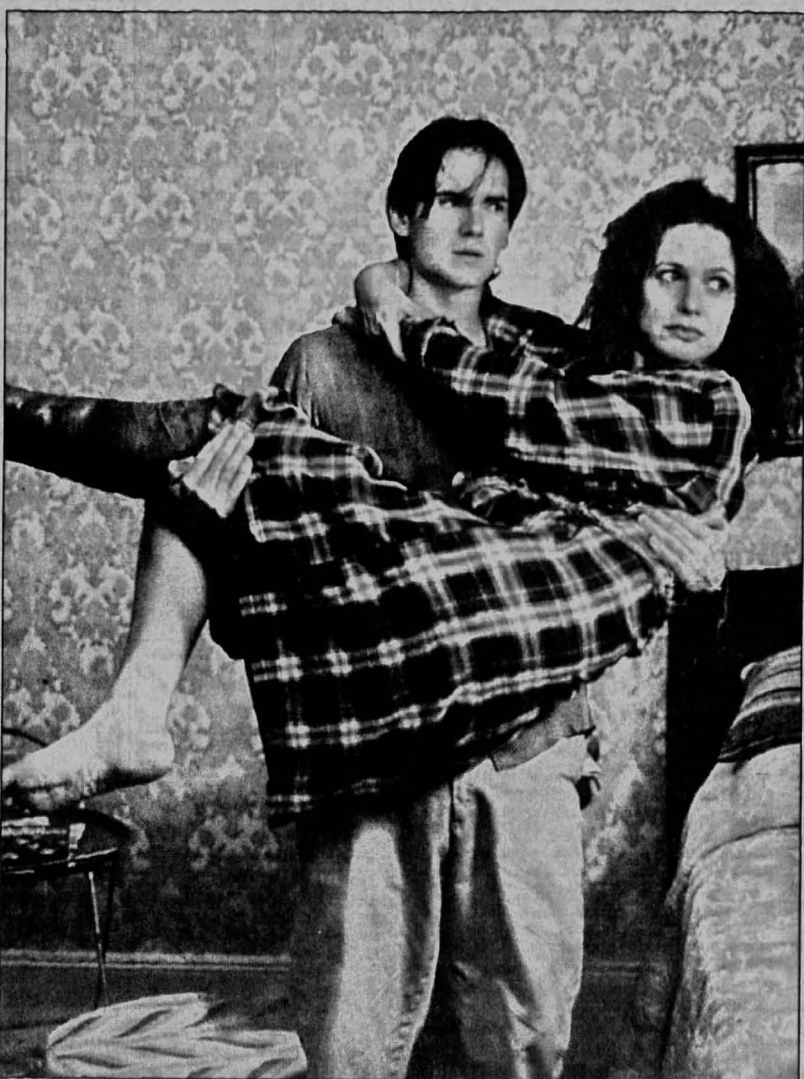

Jeremy Davies stars as Ray, an MIT student eager to begin his once-in-a-lifetime internship with the surgeon general's office. But when he stops at home for what he thinks is a two-day visit to comfort his depressed mother, he finds himself shanghaied into a summer of servitude. His mother, apparently having overdosed on her depression medication, has fallen and broken her leg, and his father is about to leave on a monthlong sales junket that he calls "the biggest trip of the year."

With barely a complaint, Ray drops his plans and settles in to such exciting responsibilities as emptying his mother's bedpan, fetching her water, rubbing lotion on her feet and brushing the dog's teeth. But his attempts to get out of the house continually fail, and his parents hound him for any minor deviations from their demands. When even his furtive attempts to masturbate in the bathroom are repeatedly disturbed, he starts coming unglued.

Ray's sexual frustration is a central focus of the story. From his bathroom failures to his choppy romance with a neighbor's high-school age daughter to his forced, repeated proximity with his mother's naked body in the shower, he has more sexual tension than he can handle. Obviously not particularly emotionally stable to begin with, Ray bottles up his frustration, tries to keep everyone happy and slowly boils his brain in the process.

"Monkey" is not a fun movie to watch — cinematically claustrophobic and deliberately harrowing, it drags viewers through Ray's misery without pulling any punches. But it has all the fascination of a car wreck as independent writer/director David O. Russell deftly and gradually piles agony on agony and builds up a spellbinding tension.

Russell shows his strength best in his deceptively low-key dialogue. Ray's father, Tom (Benjamin Hendrickson), is a marvel of abuse — without raising his voice, without once threatening violence, he's still capable of making an entire audience cringe and clutch protectively at their genitals.

And where Tom comes across as straightforwardly selfish and "Everyboy" drawn into a series of unconscionable acts by pressures no human could be expected to bear — pressures a lot of viewers may well remember from their Thanksgiving breaks. Caught between a jealous, demanding mother, a glacial, demanding father and an self-contradictory, demanding girlfriend, Ray is no better equipped for survival than anyone else with family problems. His awkward, painful way of dealing with them rarely fails to be fascinating.

"Spanking the Monkey" is a singular debut, a promising trial ground for Russell's skillful command of story, language and image. It may also be an antidote for the current barrage of cute holiday films. But remember to leave the kids at home — and, while you're at it, you may want to leave the parents too.

"Spanking the Monkey" plays at the Bijou tonight at 9, Thursday night at 7 and Friday through Sunday night at 9. Tickets are $3.50 and are available through the University Box Office of the Union.

supercilious, Ray's mother, Susan (Alberta Watson), smiles sweetly until she can go for the jugular. Both characters are painstakingly drawn to play off each other quietly and horrifically.

And Ray, similarly, is a generic

Jimmy Page and Robert Plant
No Quarter: Jimmy Page and Robert Plant Unledded

After years of quipping "What for?" to myriad pleas from fans, critics, their wallets and each other for a reunion, it seems Led Zepelinites Robert Plant and Jimmy Page have finally had enough of the noise. No Quarter: Jimmy Page and Robert Plant Unledded is their musical retort — an effortlessly brilliant collection of revamped oldies and three radio-friendly new tracks.

The tight quality of musicianship on No Quarter is awe-inspiring — Page and Plant fit together like long-lost puzzle pieces, sounding lean, young and completely on top of what they're doing. Middle Eastern, Indian and North African musicians enhance songs like "Kashmir" and "Battle of Evermore" in ways die-hard fans wouldn't believe.

"Evermore" especially glistens. Page's guitar and mandolin playing is as sweet and clean as ever, and the duet between Plant and Najma Akhtar is chilling and soaring.

And the knuckle-biting redo of "Gallows Pole" has already been monster-mashing many radio stations — like a hayride down Mount Olympus, Page and Plant whoop the song into a galvanizing frenzy from bar one.

Here's something else to gnaw on: This duo will also have a live MTV performance released on VHS in December. Can you say "Christmas present?"

(That's not even mentioning the upcoming tour — on which they sure as hell better cut former Zep bandmate John Paul Jones in on the greenbacks).

Eagles
Hell Freezes Over

Though it may remain debatable whether the Eagles sold out when they reunited this year, the quality of their latest album, Hell Freezes Over, is beyond debate. After a 14-year hiatus in its music-making, the band has reunited and turned out a high-quality album.

Four new tracks retain the Eagles sound of the '70s. "Get Over It," Hell's first single, kicks off the album with a quick-paced tune. The lyrics could very well tell the story of the antagonism within the Eagles prior to their reunion, despite promotional claims. "Get over it, get over it, all this bitchin' and moanin' and pitchin' a fit, get over it, get over it," the song's chorus adamantly states.

"Love Will Keep Us Alive," "The Girl From Yesterday," and "Learn to Be Still," by contrast, all have more of a balladlike quality. While the new songs do reveal the talent of the band, it doesn't seem likely that this reunion effort would have been nearly as successful had the Eagles put their classics behind them and tried for a whole new sound and a whole new album. They are vintage musicians and because they chose to retain at least a portion of what triggered their original success, their music doesn't suffer.

The rest of the album consists of 10 classic Eagles tunes, including "Hotel California," "Tequila Sunrise" and "Life in the Fast Lane." All of the older songs are live recordings from the Eagles' reunion sessions — tunes that resonate on the album — retain the quality of the Eagles' original recordings.

Regardless of the conditions of the Eagles' demise, they were able to come together and once again

Grant Lee Buffalo
Mighty Joe Moon

Grant Lee Buffalo's second album is enough to leave listeners gasping rapturously for oxygen. Lead singer Grant Lee Phillips has a voice like beautiful sex and violent death that can spiral softly through the ceiling or drill through a cement foundation.

Moon feels like a summertime drive through the Appalachians at midnight. This L.A. trio, including bassist/producer Paul Kimble and drummer/percussionist Joey Peters, slips through layers of ether and the bayou on 13 songs.

Crying-jag hyperventilation is interspersed with short and slurry phrases in "Sing Along," and the exquisite weariness of "Demon Called Deception" has traces of America's "Horse With No Name." Singing of some incubus monkey on his back, Phillips tells us, "In the fields, how I sang my prisoner song / well deception whistles right along." The bardic, folk-song quality of "Last Days of Tecumseh" has such a minimal arrangement that the throbbing banjo might be from a previous century.

Elements of Grant Lee Buffalo's previous album, Fuzzy, seep generously into Mighty Joe Moon. While Phillips still sounds like the loneliest coyote ever to stray out of the desert, these songs seem to come from some rarefied air.
