Regents fill search committee

DES MOINES — The 21 representatives who will lead the search for a new president were announced and approved unanimously by the Iowa state Board of Regents Wednesday.

The University of Iowa Presidential Search and Screen Committee consists of 21 voting members and one nonvoting member. Of the 21, there are 11 women and 10 men representing every college in the UI.

UI President Hunter Rawlings, who will assume the presidency of Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., on July 1, said the proceedings were somewhat awkward for him.

"It does feel a little bit odd, but any time you make an announcement six months before leaving, it results in a lame duck period, and I am certainly a lame duck," he said. "But on the other hand, giving six-months' notice enables the university and the board (of Regents) to conduct a search which is expeditious and names someone before I leave."

Faculty members are aware of the responsibilities that come with membership on the committee, said Richard Hurtig, a member of the committee, president of the Faculty Senate and a professor of speech pathology and audiology.

"Everybody selected for this committee realizes that this is an extremely important process for the university and realizes that their colleagues are depending on them to represent them," he said. "As sort of the elected leader of the faculty, I feel I carry an extra obligation to represent my colleagues."

The extra pressures and time consumption will all have to be taken in stride, Hurtig said.

"It's a lot of time, but I still teach my classes and get my Faculty Senate work done now," he said. "Everything will get done."

UI junior Kristin Mensing was ecstatic to hear of her selection as the undergraduate representative

Paula Jones eager for trial

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The woman who claims President Clinton sexually harassed her while he was governor is appealing a federal court ruling delaying a trial until Clinton leaves office.

In papers filed Tuesday, Paula Jones asked the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis to reverse decisions that postponed the trial and allowed Clinton to delay response to her lawsuit.

Although she postponed a trial, U.S. District Judge Susan Webber Wright ruled Dec. 28 that fact-finding procedures such as taking sworn statements from witnesses could proceed while Clinton is in office. The president has appealed, asking that all action on the lawsuit be delayed.

The lawsuit filed May 8 seeks more than $700,000 in damages.

Rattlesnake toted to church delivers deadly bite

ENIGMA, Ga. (AP) — A man died after being bitten by a rattlesnake, which he had taken to church because the Bible says believers "shall take up serpents."

Dewey Bruce Hale, 40, was bitten during Sunday services at New River Free Holiness Church and died at home late that night, the sheriff's office said. The death was ruled accidental.

"The sheriff's department was not called by family or the church," said Sheriff Jerry Brogdon. "Nothing was reported. If he had gone to the hospital, it would've all been different."

Witnesses said Hale took the rattlesnake to church in a box and was bitten on the hand when he took it out.

Martha Hale, a cousin of the victim, said church members take the Bible literally, particularly a passage in Mark saying that one sign of those who believe in Jesus is that "they shall take up serpents."

"Many have been bitten and were healed at that church," she said. "They feel he didn't die because of the snake, but that he died because it was his time to go."

A few survivors were pulled from collapsed buildings Wednesday, but hopes faded for more than 600 still missing from Kobe's earthquake disaster.

As the death toll topped 3,000, thousands tried to flee what was once a sleek and efficient city of 1.4 million people, many of them bandaged as they limped past huge piles of rubble and fallen buildings.

New fires erupted in downtown Kobe Wednesday. Firefighters appeared powerless against a raging blaze that had broken out at the block-long Sannomiya market.

Rescuers, often working with bare hands, sifted through the ruins looking for survivors from the 7.2-magnitude quake. But the likelihood of being found faded with each passing hour for the 634 people still listed as missing.

CONFIDENTIALITY QUESTIONED

Shelters fear effects from Simpson trial

Confidential information about Nicole Brown Simpson's stay at a woman's center, which is being released for the O.J. Simpson trial, is raising fear of a backlash against women's shelters across the nation.

Program, said using the information sets a precedent which will make it unclear where women's rights to confidence end and judicial rules begin.

"There is fear concerning how often information will be released, who will have access and in what other cases it will be allowed — if the precedent would spread to welfare, divorce and custody cases," she said.

With release of this information, Kinkead said the shelter may change their record-keeping system to make sure women do not stop seeking help.

"The purpose of a shelter is to keep women safe from their abusers," Kinkead said. "We are not mandated to keep information. The reason we keep it is for our own purposes. Shelters used to be fully anonymous. If they mandate us to keep records, that will make the shelter ineffective."

Restoration resumes for fraternity house

Tom Schoenberg
The Daily Iowan

Almost a year after a fire tore through a UI fraternity house and left its 25 residents homeless, the building has entered a second stage of repair and is expected to be completed this summer.

The Jan. 20, 1994 fire gutted the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity house, 323 N. Riverside Drive, causing an estimated $1.2 million in damages. The structure was first suspected to be a complete loss because only the surrounding walls and foundation lay intact.

Last year, insurance, alumni donations and a benefit concert launched a plan for reconstruction.

However, insurance problems halted the first stage of construction last semester, after only the basic plumbing and heating systems had been laid and the new floors, staircase and roof had been

Staff worker battles tasks at housing project

Each morning, as Pat Jordan climbs the stairs of the large gray house on the corner of 331 N. Gilbert St., she prepares herself for the chaotic atmosphere of another day at Emergency Housing Project Inc.

shelter's residents are schizophrenic and in need of funding to pay for treatment programs, Jordan said.

When Jordan isn't taking care of an emergency, she's putting her English degree and marketing experience to work on the Emergency Housing Project's various administrative needs as well as the "Early Bird" program, whose director recently left.

"Basically, in addition to my job — which is the director, the development director, the marketing director, the finance director and the program development person — I'm now doing the 'Early Bird' program," she said.

Jordan developed "Early Bird" to provide one-on-one counseling for residents. The purpose of the program is to provide the residents with attainable goals, such as housing and employment. It also teaches money management and job maintenance.

Later, the quiet of Jordan's cluttered office is interrupted by a frantic call from a resident's parole officer and calls from residents needing checks cashed and volunteers with questions.

One resident entered Jordan's office to ask for a $5 loan, which Jordan gave without apprehension.

Over time, Jordan says she is able to trust many of the shelter's residents and doesn't mind helping them when they need it.

"I just love the people," she said. "They are very caring, perceptive people."

Word of Jordan's work with the shelter has brought others to Iowa City. She said one man came to the Emergency Housing Project after learning of her from an inmate in prison.

Jordan said her impact on some of the residents can become a burden when they attribute their success to her.

"One of the people said to me the other day, 'It's because of you I don't go out and drink,'" she said.

Jordan attributes the success of some former residents to the Candle Program, a local program providing employment for the homeless through making candles and candle holders.

"I've seen people I've sent to that project, for whom people have no hope, who have literally turned their lives around and are now understanding what it's like to have a little money and ... a brand-new TV and ... an apartment," she said.

Jordan often leaves the office at 4 p.m., but most nights she travels to speaking engagements and arrives home at 11 p.m. She says she loves her job.

"When a person comes back and says thank-you and tells you how much you helped them, what other legacy could you possibly want?" Jordan asked.

Although her life is hectic, Jordan has no plans to leave the Emergency Housing Project soon.

The "Early Bird" program has been successful in helping residents find jobs and aided in dropping the number of residents from 39 per night in December to 25 per night in January.

"Someday I'm going to take a year off and bake cookies, but for now I'm having a lot of fun with a lot of wonderful people," Jordan said.

Shaq competes against himself in new Reebok ad

NEW YORK (AP) — So, who wins that one again?

Shaquille O'Neal, the NBA's leading scorer, matches muscle with his alter ego when he takes on the ultimate challenge — playing every position — in two TV commercials to introduce Reebok's Shaq Attaq IV basketball shoes.

"Shaq is probably the only athlete today who could pull this off," said Reebok's Dave Ropes. "He has an innate gift of holding a viewer's interest."

In the first ad, which premieres Sunday, the 7-foot-1-inch center for the Orlando Magic plays tough defense on himself. At one point, he replaces himself in the lineup and asks, "Who are you guarding?"

The game ends in the second ad when O'Neal, a notoriously weak free-throw shooter, buries his head in a towel while a sportscaster is heard saying, "Looks like we're going shoot free throws to settle this one."

Ex-'Walton' finds roots through historical film

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Former "Waltons" star Richard Thomas is more appreciative of his heritage after narrating a film history of West Virginia.

In 1921, pro-union forces in Matewan battled a trainload of detectives hired to halt the unionization of coal fields. The shootout inspired the 1987 movie "Matewan."

Thomas said his father "reminded me that when my grandmother was a girl she was passing through Matewan on the day of the big shootout."

Thomas got a sneak preview Tuesday of "West Virginia, A Film History," an unfinished documentary produced for WNPB-TV in Morgantown and for the West Virginia Film History Project.

"I have a special place in my heart for Appalachia," said Thomas, whose grandmother, aunts and uncles still live in Paintsville, Ky., near the West Virginia line.

Harlem choir heads to S. Africa for fund raising

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The Boys Choir of Harlem will make their first appearance in South Africa this year.

The choir said Wednesday it will give eight concerts in August and September to raise money for the new Harmony Children's Foundation.

The foundation was created to teach poor youngsters about the arts and to provide academic support.

The Boys Choir of Harlem, which has been performing for 25 years, canceled a trip to South Africa and Ghana last year because it couldn't raise the $200,000 needed.

Howard Stern looks to courts for help with free speech

HACKENSACK, N.J. (AP) — Howard Stern's mouth got him into trouble and now he's turned to an appeals court to get him out of it.

On Tuesday, Stern's lawyers asked the state appellate division to delay his Jan. 30 trial on a lawsuit claiming Stern aired the toll-free number of a rental agency during a skit about suicide doctor Jack Kevorkian.

Stern states that his actions were inadvertent and that he was exercising his right to free speech.

Lori Gedon, who owns the rental agency in Norwood, sued Stern and WWOR-TV of Secaucus for $60,000 in lost business, telephone bills and punitive damages.

The appeals court can decide to hear the case or wait until the trial is over. A decision is expected in two weeks.

Costner lyrically waxes on turning 40

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kevin Costner turned 40 Wednesday with a philosophical attitude about where he's been and where he's going.

"It's living a life and I'm living one, and that means all the good and bad that goes with the life," the actor / director said in an interview one week before his birthday.

He divorced his wife, Cindy, last fall.

"That doesn't mean you don't hurt, and your heart's not on the ground," Costner said. "But you're a professional and you have to focus. You have to."

Asked if he is concerned that the breakup of his 16-year marriage will hurt his image, he said, "I think people look at me as just a person. No better, no worse. And there's a lot of people that go through life experiences like I've gone through."

Costner's last three movies — "A Perfect World," "Wyatt Earp" and "The War" — were box-office disappointments.

Women apt to buy more condoms

Devon Alexander
The Daily Iowan

"Ah, excuse me, uh ... where are the ... condoms?" is a question being asked more frequently in Iowa City by women who are taking responsibility for their sexual health.

Val Oestrich, a pharmacist at Osco Drug in Old Capitol Mall, said the number of women buying condoms has risen in the last few years.

"There are a lot of women buying condoms these days," Oestrich said. "I'd say it's about a 50-50 male-to-female ratio."

UI freshman Leah Milcarek said an increase in sexual activity could explain why more women are buying condoms.

"You can't just tell people to stop having sex because they are much more comfortable with it these days," she said. "But I think condom use is very important."

Apprehension about buying condoms doesn't make sense to some UI students. UI freshman Laurel Nakadate said buying condoms should become routine.

"I don't look at getting condoms as anything special," she said. "You should use a condom every time you have sex, and if you need them, you buy them each time you get groceries."

UI senior Tim Frantzen said he would have no problem sharing the responsibility of buying condoms.

"The woman can carry them or I can. It doesn't make a difference," he said. "There's no honor thing there; it's just to keep yourself safe."

Angie Schenkel and Jodi Parsons, sales clerks at HandiMart Food Stores, 204 N. Dubuque St., said they notice a difference when women purchase condoms.

"When women come in to buy them, they're usually shy compared to guys," Schenkel said. "They usually buy something else with them or try to explain why they're buying them."

Parsons explained how men purchase condoms.

"Sometimes we have guys come in and buy a rose, a pack of gum and a box of condoms," she said. "Once a guy came in and yelled, 'Where are your rubbers? I'm in a hurry!'"

HOT SUMMER PREDICTED

Warmth ignites students

Patricia Harris
The Daily Iowan

Unseasonably warm temperatures are allowing people to roam the streets of Iowa City in January without having to bundle themselves up to their ears in coats, gloves and scarves.

On Jan. 19, 1994, the high temperature was 2 degrees and the low was minus 12 degrees. That wasn't including wind chill. Today, the expected high is about 28 degrees.

The change from last year's harsh temperatures is caused in part by a tropical weather pattern that has driven jet streams over the United States further north, pushing local temperatures above normal. The pattern is called El Niño, said Harry Hillaker, state climatologist for the Iowa Department of Agriculture.

"El Niño is a tropical weather pattern that affects the two gulf streams over the U.S. — the polar jet stream and subtropical jet stream," Hillaker said. "El Niño has forced both jet streams further north, making the Iowa area warmer than usual for mid-January."

The polar jet stream is generally colder and runs through the northern United States. The subtropical jet stream is warmer and usually centers over the southern United States.

Hillaker said although El Niño is affecting the temperatures now, long-range estimates of temperatures for the coming seasons are difficult to predict.

"The effects of El Niño will vary a lot," he said. "Typically, there are mild winter temperatures, but after March there's not really any set thing you can say about El Niño."

Hillaker said state records indicate a warmer than usual January and February, like the one Iowa is seeing now. Although he expects typical spring temperatures, Iowa may be in for a blazing summer.

"Looking back at records ... there are pretty good odds that the summer months will be warmer than usual," he said. "Usually, El Niño lasts six to nine months. This one has been going on for about three years."

The temperatures are affecting UI students in a variety of ways. Their attitudes toward the weather seem to depend upon what climates they originate from.

"It's a lot colder here most of the time," said UI senior Andria McConnell, comparing Iowa to her hometown of Ketchikan, Alaska. "Despite what people think of weather in Alaska, I freeze my ass off here most of the time."

McConnell said people's preconceived notions of the Alaskan climate lead them to believe she can easily deal with cold weather.

"When I go to the bars and people look at my ID, they laugh and say, 'Well, you must be used to this cold,' and I'm like, 'No, not really,'" she said.

McConnell said Ketchikan is in southern Alaska and has a climate somewhat similar to the northeastern United States.

Natives of warm weather climates may have a difficult time dealing with cold weather, even if the temperatures are higher than normal.

"I will never get used to this," said Simone Edwards, a UI senior and a native of Kingston, Jamaica. "This weather is still cold for me. Last year, it was a nightmare."

Edwards said she is used to temperatures that hover around 80 degrees in Jamaica — even in the middle of January.

The wind chill is worse than the actual temperature, Edwards said.

"I hate the wind chill," she said. "It kills my mood. I just hate cold weather."

At least one student has a reason to appreciate this warmer than usual weather. Last year at this time, UI sophomore Rich Scott was in a body cast after a sledding accident.

"Last year, the cold was really bad because I was in a cast and I had to move slowly and I couldn't frolic," Scott said. "This year, it's nice and warm; I don't have a cast and I can frolic like I usually do."

CHECHEN-RUSSIAN RIFT HITS CLOSE TO HOME

Local residents express concern

Tim Howe
The Daily Iowan

The strife-ridden Russian republic of Chechnya endures long nights of gunfire and deaths half a world away, but for some local residents the pain hits close to home.

"I am afraid that the Russian army will increase its soldiers and that my husband and brother will have to serve," said Alia Rakova, a visiting Russian associate professor. "My son is only 8, but the time will come when he will be 18 and will have to serve."

Thousands are believed to have been killed in the breakaway southern republic since Russia attempted to reassert sovereignty over the region Dec. 11.

Rakova said her family in Rostov-na-Donu, a Black Sea coastal city, has suffered economic difficulties because of the fighting. The war has damaged Russia's economy, consuming 5 trillion rubles, or $1.3 billion, according to Russian government officials.

However, the greatest hardship has been the uncertainty created by the conflict, said Rakova.

"My daughter said it was dangerous with the refugees and all," she said. "Everything there is difficult, and who knows what the next few months will bring?"

Russia's intervention in Chechnya is a threat to peace and Russian democracy, said UI graduate student and former Moscow resident Marina Mikhaliyova.

"I very much disapprove of Russia's intervention," she said. "A lot of people have lost trust in (Russian President) Boris Yeltsin. Another leader may come to power, and who knows who that will be."

UI Russian Professor Vadim Kreyd disagreed, saying that Russian intervention is understandable and has been distorted by American news media.

"The American media is one-sided in covering the issue because its emphasis is on what it calls Chechnya's heroic resistance," he said.

Kreyd, a native of St. Petersburg, Russia, attributed the prolonged nature of the struggle in part to mercenaries fighting for the Chechen government as well as tactical military errors.

"I understand that the war is conducted in a clumsy way," he said. "To have such massive bloodshed is a tragedy."

Kreyd predicts that all major fighting will be over by the end of January because the Russian army will overwhelm Chechen rebels.

An end to the fighting may come too late because much damage has been done, said William Reisinger, UI associate professor of political science. He compared Russia's growing involvement in the republic to America's involvement in Vietnam in the 1960s and '70s.

"The war is bad for the economy and it's obviously bad for the people who live there," he said. "It raises all sorts of worries about a possible return to an authoritarian regime. It's a real tragedy on every score."

Russian troops suffer small defeat at hands of Chechens

GROZNY, Russia (AP) — Chechen fighters recaptured Grozny's train station and were fighting for the central market Wednesday in a push that was close to wiping out all gains made by the Russian army in the last two weeks.

Chances of a cease-fire, scheduled for Wednesday night, appeared slim despite earlier Russian peace overtures. In Moscow, President Boris Yeltsin ruled out talks with Chechen leader Dzhokhar Dudayev. In Grozny, the Chechen capital, defenders said they would never lay down their arms.

Russian artillery and rockets pounded the city center Wednesday to hold back the Chechen forces. Sukhoi fighter jets flying in pairs screamed over the city, rocketing buildings, and a Tupolev heavy bomber was seen flying back from a mission.

The Russian troops had used the central market as a base for attacks on the presidential palace, a symbol of Chechnya's independence drive, and had captured the railway station in early January.

A few hundred Chechens have fought one of the world's most powerful armies to a standstill in the winding streets of Grozny. The Russian army's overwhelming superiority in men and weapons has been blunted by the Chechens' courage and skill in a monthlong battle that has cost a reported 1,200 Russian lives.

Still, the Russians reported some progress Wednesday, saying its armies had managed to encircle the presidential palace overnight.

Study claims boys who act girlish become gay men

NEW YORK (AP) — Boys who persistently play with girls' dolls, dress like girls and display other stereotypically feminine traits will probably grow up to be gay men, researchers say.

Playing with dolls does not cause homosexuality, but it's a possible early sign, said researcher J. Michael Bailey.

"If you have a very feminine boy, one so feminine that he's constantly wanting to dress up as a girl and wants to be a girl, chances are he's going to be a gay man," said Bailey, a psychologist at Northwestern University.

The chance is probably about 75 percent for these boys, who also generally prefer playing with girls and taking the female role in games like "house," he said.

Brian Gladue, a University of Cincinnati psychologist who has studied homosexuality since 1980, said very feminine behavior in boys is widely accepted by researchers as a strong sign the boys will probably become gay men.

Dr. Margery Sved, president of the Association of Gay and Lesbian Psychiatrists, called the work a "very fair" description of existing research.

While the studies say very feminine boys are likely to become gay men, most gay men were probably not so extremely feminine as boys, she said.

Father accused of killing infant son

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A single man so eager for a family he paid a surrogate mother $30,000 to bear his child was charged Wednesday with beating his 5-week-old son to death.

James Alan Austin told police he had beaten the boy with his fists and a plastic coat hanger, authorities said.

The 26-year-old bank analyst from the Bethlehem area was arraigned on charges of criminal homicide in the death of Jonathan Alan Austin. Bail was set at $500,000.

Jonathan was born Dec. 8 to Phyllis Ann Huddleston, 29, of Lafayette, Ind., who had been paid to be artificially inseminated with Austin's sperm.

The boy died Tuesday at a Philadelphia hospital, more than a week after he was taken to a hospital in the Bethlehem area, unconscious, with a fractured skull and internal bleeding.

Simpson judge OKs abuse reports

Michael Fleeman
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The judge in the O.J. Simpson case ruled Wednesday that the jury can hear about several instances of violence in Simpson's marriage to Nicole Brown Simpson, including a 1989 incident in which he pleaded no contest to wife beating.

Superior Court Judge Lance Ito said most of the domestic violence evidence can be presented because it is necessary to prove motive and intent in the June slayings of Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman.

Among the evidence he included was a 1989 New Year's Day outburst by Simpson documented by Brown Simpson's 911 emergency call, which led to criminal charges against Simpson, and a 1985 baseball bat attack on Brown Simpson's car.

A tape of Brown Simpson's 1989 call to 911 was widely broadcast after Simpson's arrest.

The decision was a major victory for prosecutors, who hope to use evidence of domestic violence during Simpson's relationship with Brown Simpson to support their contention that her slaying was the culmination of years of abuse and degradation.

Before it was released, District Attorney Gil Garcetti called the impending decision "the most critical ruling this court will make."

Associated Press

Prosecutor Marcia Clark confers with defense attorney Johnnie Cochran, Jr. during a hearing in the O.J. Simpson trial in Los Angeles Wednesday morning.

Earlier, Ito ruled that relatives of the victims may sit in the courtroom for most of the trial.

Ito also severely restricted Simpson's jail visitation privileges after the sheriff's department complained a book author met Simpson in a room reserved for attorneys and material witnesses. The judge also said Wednesday that he would allow jurors to have conjugal visits.

NEIGHBOR FINDS KIDS 5 DAYS LATER

Mother shoots children, then herself

Ike Flores
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Shot in the neck and paralyzed, 11-year-old Adam Fowler managed to roll off the bed — and onto his dead mother. His sister, Jessica, was able to crawl into the living room despite a bullet in her neck.

For five days without food or water, they called out feebly and tried to make enough noise to attract neighbors' attention. Adam Fowler banged on the wall with a nonworking telephone. Jessica Fowler, 13, struggled to turn on the TV full blast.

When they weren't making noise, they prayed and encouraged each other to hang on.

Finally, on Tuesday, they were discovered after a concerned co-worker of the mother called police.

Investigators determined that Carrie Lee Rhodes, 38, had shot her children with a .357-caliber Magnum in a bedroom of their rented house and then killed herself with the gun.

Rhodes, a nurse, left a note saying she was depressed over a failed love affair and numerous money problems, Sgt. Mike Holloway, a police spokesman, said Wednesday. She was divorced from the children's father.

Both children were paralyzed and dehydrated but still able to talk when they were found, Holloway said.

They were in serious but stable condition Wednesday. Doctors weren't sure of the extent of the paralysis or whether their spinal cord injuries were permanent.

NEWLY ELECTED OFFICIALS

Will promises be kept?

Resolutions both by individuals and our leaders lend a new feeling of optimism, which generally makes people believe that tomorrow will be better than yesterday. This new optimism hangs over 1995 like a pale sun on a rainy day. After the elections in 1994, the new ideas and promises made by those who won offices will either be pointless resolutions or pathways to a better future.

On the national level, the new Republican majority in Congress must live up to their billing as the enemy of big government. Promises of trimming overbudgeted committees and other inefficient and often unproductive government devices could lead this nation to a future where government actually gets things accomplished. Will the new Republican Congress be able to pass their resolutions through themselves, let alone a Democratic President Clinton? Their response to this challenge will tell the nation just which kind of leaders they elected.

On the state front, a new / old Terry Branstad was re-elected to yet another term as Iowa's governor. His slam campaign did contain some promises, however. One issue that became a focal point as the election drew near was the death penalty. This issue, while popular to debate, had lacked key state prominence prior to 1994. However, the abduction and murders of two elderly women in Des Moines this last summer as well as the murder of Anna Marie Emry have shown the people of Iowa that the death penalty is indeed a key issue.

Right or wrong, the death penalty would have a tremendous impact on the prosecution of these cases. Branstad vowed to reinstate the death penalty. This promise — and whether or not it is kept — will have important implications for the legal progress of this state. With the death penalty, a child killer like Lary Morgan would likely pay the highest price for his crime. With public concern for crime at an all-time high, this issue must be resolved by Branstad.

The promises made by the newly elected governmental officials will either lead us in a positive new direction or send us down the same old path of government inaction. Despite being fooled by the empty promises of government, the American public still becomes optimistic every time new leaders take office. These leaders will soon have to ante up and carry out their promises because an increasingly agitated public will only give them so many opportunities. The fresh winds of potential change are carrying the optimism of a new year and a new start. Maybe this time our leaders will live up to their end of the bargain.

INTERVIEW WITH GINGRICH'S MOTHER

Connie Chung's blunder

Now that it is a new year, there will be new gossip and controversy in the media. A recent interview with Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich's mother, Kathleen, not only stirred up talk, but anger and embarrassment as well. The interview, which was led by Connie Chung, unnecessarily revealed feelings about individuals due to a deceiving approach.

In an interview aired on Jan. 5, Chung met with Gingrich's parents, a confrontation that may have destroyed her career. What actually happened? A question was raised by Chung about Gingrich's feelings toward President Clinton. The Gingrichs responded, but wouldn't provide all the details about their son's attitude toward Hillary Rodham Clinton. Chung attempted to make Kathleen Gingrich feel at ease by asking her to whisper the information — "It will just be between you and me" — leading Gingrich to believe that the information would be private. Unfortunately, Gingrich trusted Chung, and an unpleasant comment about the first lady was revealed to the public.

Chung, who is one of this country's most respected journalists, went against her word and caused tension, hurt and embarrassment in the White House. She not only deceived people, but she had a choice whether or not to air that portion of the interview. Chung spoke with Gingrich's mother for eight hours, and only 15 minutes were aired on television. It is probable that during those eight hours, there were more important things said. Instead of emphasizing real news, Chung focused primarily on entertainment.

One of the main responsibilities of a journalist is to be accurate and precise, and Chung went against this. A professor of journalism at Northwestern University summed it up well, stating that what Chung did was unethical and she was being a poor journalist. Talk radio listeners had negative comments and many of them claimed that they would no longer tune in to her show.

If Chung would have edited this portion of the interview out, there would be no problem. However, the fact that she allowed the Gingrichs' comments to be aired on national television is a travesty and an unprofessional approach toward journalism. Following the interview, Chung came on the air and mentioned that Gingrich had known all throughout the interview that she was on camera. Nevertheless, it seemed as though Chung was covering up what she had done. In turn, she made matters worse by not even apologizing.

When a person says to another person, "Whisper it; it will just be between you and me," that usually means that nobody else will know what was said. It is, however, obvious that to Chung "you and me" also includes millions of television viewers in the world. She made an enormous mistake, and her popularity will no doubt decline because of it.

GLORIA MITCHELL

Debating baby seals, fake fur, cockroaches

"We have to be consistent."

Consistent, she apparently means, with the view that no animal ought to be made to work for humans.

This sort of consistency is a prime example of the problems that extremists of all kinds face when trying to convince all the mainstream stick-in-the-muds that theirs is the path to salvation.

Let's say that I am an average Joe (Jane, rather) who feels that cruelty to animals is wrong. I've given up Big Macs and am careful to buy only those personal hygiene products that are nonanimal tested.

But with concerns over the cruelty of wool, silk, honey and now Seeing Eye dogs, I quickly find myself losing the moral high ground. Instead, I become embroiled in an unending series of messy ethical dilemmas.

I've compiled a few examples.

Ethical dilemma No. 1: baby seal fur. Now, I doubt that any of you are in favor of clubbing baby seals, but here's the dilemma presented to me by my (vegan) brother: His girlfriend Suzanne bought a pair of boots at a used clothes store which she later determined had baby seal fur on them (I don't know if she thought at first that the fur was fake or what).

Given that the original sellers of these boots have already gotten their money for them (from the boots' first owner), ditto with the traders who obtained the fur, and given that she has already bought the boots, should Suzanne wear them? Or would it just be promoting the fur industry, possibly inspiring other young women to run out and buy new fur-lined boots themselves?

I would say wear them, but then I don't know of anyone who has been inspired to buy something because I was wearing it. Perhaps Suzanne is more of a fashion plate.

Ethical dilemma No. 2: fake fur. In high school, I attended an anti-fur rally in which the more vocal protesters hurled vituperative abuse (and sometimes spit) at passers-by wearing fur.

The passers-by were mostly stooped white-haired old ladies with watery blue eyes, and I figured if they hadn't had the sense to look down the sidewalk, see what was coming and duck into Saks for cover, their mental abilities may not have been up to the challenge of questioning whatever lifetime of assumptions led them to buy their coats in the first place.

By contrast, other furry-coated women would pass by and endure a few insults before exclaiming self-righteously, "It's fake!"

The protesters were not only apologetic; they often congratulated these women on the wisdom of their choice of outer wear.

Here's my question: What's so great about fake fur, anyway? True, no animals were killed to make it, but it looks like fur. Does it promote the notion that people should want to wear fur?

And how eco friendly are synthetics? Mightn't it be better just to wear wool? (Ah, I've lapsed already. Clearly, enforced haircuts are cruel to sheep.)

Ethical dilemma No. 3: cockroaches. If you are so spiritually advanced that you can live in peace and harmony with all things, including creepy disease-spreading bugs that get into the cereal boxes, congratulations.

What should the more squeamish, but still morally upright, among us do about cockroaches in our apartments?

Beetles, spiders and our other smaller animal brethren can be captured and taken outside to live out the rest of their insect or arachnid days.

Cockroaches, on the other hand, are not outdoor bugs, at least not in the Midwest. (Do not try and tell me about the giant cockroach you saw crawling around outside last summer. It was a June bug, trust me.)

If you put a roach outside, it will either find its way back home and live happily ever after on its natural diet of crushed corn chips and spilled apple juice or it will die a lonely death, bereft of any cockroach companions.

Perhaps we could somehow encourage cockroaches to evolve to a point where they could survive and even thrive in the cold outdoors. But to do this, we would have to make the indoor environment somehow less hospitable than the outdoor one — which would mean only one thing: Black Flag.

There are many more problems to be faced, such as what will happen the day we set the cows free — only to have them turned into steak tartare for the local wolf population. Then there was the rumor making the circuit when I worked at a camera store that all photographic film and paper has gelatin in it (gelatin being generally made from leftover cow). So far my research has turned up only vague references to "emulsion" and "photogelatin," but once I uncover the truth, I expect organized protests in front of everything from photo labs to movie studios.

I don't fault the animal rights people for wanting to stick to their rules — certainly Seeing Eye dogs would logically be examples of "animals that work for people."

Perhaps the problem is in saying that if you are being made to work, you are being treated cruelly or unfairly.

If you feel this way about your job, perhaps you should try complaining to PETA.

Put the stapler down and gimme my money

On Jan. 3, 1995, my financial aid check was abducted by a fascist clip-winged regime, operating under the modus operandi of "the bureaucrats."

Let me start from the beginning. I woke up that morning under what appeared to be normal conditions — other than the fact that the fire alarm in my bedroom was still ringing from the past weekend's festivities, my incense burner was smoldering and a fortress of champagne bottles was amassed at the foot of my futon in what appeared to be a makeshift shrine honoring the god of Tylenol. But that's a whole other story.

As usual, the source of my real troubles began when I opened my mail. Wedged between belated Christmas cards and "fan" mail from Allah, I came across an official-looking letter from financial aid (a clever oxymoron created by some administrative sadists whose papers get ruffled every time they use irony at the expense of others).

Inside the envelope, I found my financial aid check and immediately launched into the ritualistic "I'm rich" dance — which consisted of me prancing around my living room in Bugs Bunny slippers, my arms flailing overhead like a set of Prozac-induced windshield wipers, as I belted the lyrics, "I'm rich! I'm rich!" over and over until I became completely winded (roughly 30 seconds).

After I completed the capitalistic ritual, I added my own bit of modern improvisation to the archaic dance by spiking my financial aid check on the living room table. Unfortunately, what I failed to notice in my preliminary perusal of the envelope's contents was an adjacent memo, which initiated the first step in an abduction process — a ransom note.

The ransom note demanded that I endorse the check and send it back to its original captors, "the bureaucrats," who would hold my poor defenseless check captive for a seven- to 10-day stretch upon the resumption of classes for "processing" purposes. Now we all know that this judicious use of the word "processing" is merely a euphemism for captivity, or worse, torture.

I can only imagine what my check might have during its imprisonment: sealed off and smothered by fellow captives in a giant cardboard box with no ventilation, no contact with the outside world as its desperate cries are muffled and suppressed by duct tape, simply waiting to be interrogated by ruthless "bureaucrats" as work-study employees eventually break down their morale by opening the top of the box — only to poke sticks at the frightened checks, demoralizing them even further with an ominous laugh which slowly ascends to the point of hysteria.

What's even more disturbing about the whole ordeal is the "bureaucrats'" sadistic manipulation of kidnapping protocol. Only the evil one himself could have had an active role in waving the abductee in front of my face — only to rip it from underneath my Bugs Bunny slippers with the power of mistrust.

I had no other choice but to sign and return the check. Although before I endorsed the check, I practiced forging on the back of the envelope "The University of Iowa" in my fanciest cursive manuscript. Unfortunately, my forged signature was more reminiscent of a traced "Hubbell Elementary School" than an authentic "University of Iowa."

With this in mind, I searched for someone in the Iowa City area who might be a more suitable personification of the UI. I reasoned that if someone looked like the university, then surely their writing would resemble the UI's. After a thorough investigation, headed by yours truly and a basset hound wearing a Herky the Hawk sweater, I discovered that the person most resembling the UI was at home in Chicago for winter break.

Meanwhile, as my financial aid check suffers at the hand of the untrustworthy abductors, I've been left with no other choice but to suffer as well. Instead of receiving my check on the first day of classes, when my expenses technically begin (a practice which was abandoned in order to make room for a new stapler and to keep students from going to the track and throwing down their entire check on a long shot horse named Moving Paper Fantasy), I have to endure another stretch of suffering at the ubiquitous shuffling hands of the "bureaucracy." Unlike my kidnapped check, at least I have access to Ramen noodles and Iowa City water.

If it's any consolation, at least my financial aid check wasn't abducted by aliens from outer space, who are attempting to figure out why the tiny piece of paper induces earthlings to freak out and dance wildly, shouting "I'm rich! I'm rich!" over and over in some sort of primitive manifestation. However, they'd probably give me my check back a lot faster.

By the way, if this column impedes the release of my financial aid check in any way, I'll have no other choice but to march straight down to police headquarters and fill out the necessary paperwork, which in turn will initiate a thorough investigation into the matter.

I'm not kidding! I do mean thorough.

Tom Lindsey's column appears alternate Thursdays on the Viewpoints Pages.

READERS SAY...

The UI has selected students to be on a committee to search for a new university president. Would you want to be on it? Why or why not?

Kim Herman, UI graduate student majoring in biomedical engineering

"I would because I think it's important that we have a president who represents everybody."

Andy Wallin, UI junior majoring in business and accounting

"Probably not, because I wouldn't know what to look for. I'm not really into the administrative part of the university."

Kevin Kaye, UI sophomore majoring in business

"I wouldn't because I feel I'm not qualified enough. I've never really looked into recruiting a president for a school or any sort of work like that."

Laurie Simington, UI senior majoring in education

"I probably wouldn't. It'd probably be a waste of time because they probably wouldn't listen much to you anyway."

NO REPORTS OF LOOTING

Associated Press

Volunteers feed quake victims a hot meal Wednesday night in the Nagata section of Kobe, one of the hardest-hit areas. A major earthquake, measured 7.2 magnitude, jolted Kobe, one of Japan's largest ports, early Tuesday morning, killing more than 2,800 people and leaving tens of thousands homeless.

Japanese weather quake stoically

Peter Landers
Associated Press

TOKYO — They stand in an orderly line for food and water. Nobody cuts in.

They walk by easy pickings in shattered storefronts and homes. Nobody loots.

They witness the painfully slow arrival of desperately needed medical aid and other relief. Nobody whines.

A remarkable calm characterizes the Japanese attitude toward the country's worst urban disaster of modern times, an earthquake that tore apart the port city of Kobe.

Before the television cameras of the world, the country is displaying the value it still places on the tradition of "gaman," or endurance, in the face of disaster. Extravagant grieving is frowned upon; heartbreak is better kept inside.

Yes, Kobe survivors wept and grieved, but they tried to keep their tears off-camera.

A year ago in Los Angeles, torn up by a quake, and in 1992 in south Florida, ravaged by a hurricane, authorities descended in force to halt looting and mobs of frustrated people at shelters and food centers.

Here's the rundown on looting in Kobe:

"We have no reported incidents of looting. I guess no Japanese could be so cold as to loot during such a disaster as this," said Keiichi Shibamoto, the police superintendent in hard-hit Nishinomiya.

In Tokyo, the quake produced no financial panic. Instead, shrewd investors bet on a rebuilding boom.

Food, medicine and other basic, badly needed aid made its way to Kobe with painful slowness, but complaints were muted. People without blankets, food or water at shelters bore their suffering mostly in silence.

Yes, a few survivors were heard complaining about not having enough to eat.

But how did Kazuo Nakagawa, the governor of Osaka, respond? They "should cook food for themselves but lack the will to do so," the Kyodo News Service quoted him as saying.

Efforts by the Associated Press to reach Nakagawa for further comment were unsuccessful. Osaka, Japan's second-largest city and a neighbor of Kobe, was largely unscathed in the quake.

The most potent symbol of the nation, Emperor Akihito, did not rush out with any statement of condolence. That's not the custom in disasters, though later the emperor will often visit stricken areas.

Of course, the calm only went so far. Newspapers ran huge black headlines on page after page, while television stations canceled regular programming and broadcast quake news almost continuously for 36 hours or more.

The devastation shattered the confidence many Japanese had in the earthquake-resistant engineering employed in many buildings and roads in their cities. It failed to hold up in Kobe.

LEADER DEFENDS SHABAZZ

Farrakhan blames feds for persecution

Sharon Cohen
Associated Press

CHICAGO — When the feds announced they'd broken up a sensational murder plot against a fiery black leader, the intended target lashed out, but not at the accused, the daughter of Malcolm X.

He saw another enemy: the very U.S. government that said it was trying to protect him.

Since Qubilah Shabazz, the 34-year-old daughter of Malcolm X, was charged last week with trying to arrange the murder of Louis Farrakhan, the Nation of Islam leader has defended Shabazz and castigated the authorities.

Rather than praising the FBI agents who say they foiled a plot to kill him, he asserts the plot is a government ploy to undermine black unity.

Farrakhan's charges are the latest example of the deep-seated suspicion of U.S. government that some experts say is common among American blacks.

"There is a genuine distrust and it's well-earned," said Zak Kondo, author of "Conspiracies: Unraveling the Assassination of Malcolm X" and an assistant history professor at Bowie State University in Maryland.

"They know how the judicial system works," he said. "They know what police brutality is. They know what discrimination is. ... Whenever the government is acting like it likes blacks, antennae are going to come

"The old, false, filthy propaganda campaign has been dug up, dusted off and redirected, this time against Louis Farrakhan."

Louis Farrakhan, leader of the Nation of Islam up and people are going to say, 'What's going on here?'

It doesn't take much questioning to reveal widespread black distrust of authority. In the inner cities, rumors abound of vague government conspiracies to destroy black America, by pumping in drugs, spreading AIDS or locking its young men in jail.

Other circles, though, can point to concrete examples of government persecution. They cite documented FBI harassment of Martin Luther King Jr., Malcolm X and the Black Panthers in the 1960s.

Associated Press

Betty Shabazz, wife of the late Malcolm X and mother of Qubilah Shabazz, addresses the media outside the Federal Court Building in St. Paul, Minn., after her daughter pleaded innocent Wednesday to charges that she tried to hire a hit man to kill Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan.

And they update their lists of grievances with recent federal prosecutions of black elected officials, notably Marion Barry, the Washington, D.C., mayor convicted of cocaine possession after an FBI sting videotaped him smoking crack. Some blacks suggest Barry was entrapped, reviving a claim that prosecutors selectively go after successful black politicians.

"There's a folk notion in the black community that black people are more heavily scrutinized than whites ... and there are people out to get you," said Elijah Anderson, a sociology professor at the University of Pennsylvania.

Farrakhan made just that point Tuesday night by telling cheering supporters the government is trying to smear him, spread dissension and revive speculation that he was involved in the 1965 assassination of Malcolm X.

"The old, false, filthy propaganda campaign has been dug up, dusted off and redirected, this time against Louis Farrakhan," he said, while reasserting his innocence in Malcolm X's death.

Three Muslims were convicted in the murder, but Malcolm X's widow, Betty Shabazz, has said publicly she believes Farrakhan was involved. On Wednesday, reacting to his speech, she said she was surprised by "the extent of his humanity."

She spoke outside the St. Paul, Minn., courthouse where her daughter pleaded innocent to charges of plotting Farrakhan's murder. Nearby, demonstrators waved a banner proclaiming "The Real Hitmen: The Feds" and featuring pictures of King, Malcolm X and Black Panther leader Fred Hampton, who was killed in a police raid in Chicago in 1969.

Prosecutors have not identified the alleged hit man Shabazz contacted, but published reports say he is Michael Fitzpatrick, a childhood friend and longtime government informant facing drug charges.

His unsavory background has stirred the young woman's friends and family to suggest she was merely a pawn; Farrakhan claims the government was trying to take him down, not save him. The Justice Department declined comment on those accusations, but others voiced skepticism.

"I have no sense at all that the government is out to get Louis Farrakhan," said Clayborne Carson, author of "Malcolm X: The FBI File" and editor of the Martin Luther King Papers Project at Stanford University.

"I don't think he represents a threat to them, so it's hard for me to put him in the same category as the victims of political repression during the 1960s."

That FBI campaign of harassing, spying on and wiretapping King, Malcolm X and even moderate civil rights organizations is proof, some leaders say, of how far the government has been willing to go to disrupt the black community.

up the search for the living and said that they wouldn't be able to dig out the dead until all hope was lost. Some survivors kept vigil outside destroyed homes where loved ones lay buried.

An 85-year-old man was pulled from the rubble of his house in Nishinomiya on Wednesday, 33 hours after the quake. His life had still collapsed; his 83-year-old wife died while waiting for help.

"If they had just come earlier, my wife would have lived," Kaoru Azuma told the Asahi newspaper. She died 30 minutes after the quake while her husband gripped her hand to give comfort as they lie pinned beneath furniture.

By early Wednesday morning, Japanese police reported that 3,081 people had been killed in the quake. More than 14,672 were injured and more than 20,000 buildings heavily damaged or destroyed.

Criticism mounted that Japanese authorities, despite their long experience with earthquakes, were clearly unprepared for a disaster of this magnitude.

Japanese Self-Defense Forces sent about 2,000 soldiers and 50 aircraft to the stricken city. But it took more than four hours even to begin mobilizing them.

The flood of misery overwhelmed local hospitals, depleting their supplies. Some of the hospitals also were without water and were relying on generators for their electricity.

"Our only treatment now is painkillers," said Dr. Toshihiko Oi at a hospital in suburban Ninomiya.

on the committee.

"I'm a little overwhelmed," she said. "I'm very honored to represent the undergraduate student body."

Academic strength will be Mensing's standard for the new president. She said she'll be looking for someone who is very diverse and academically oriented and who will uphold the standards of the UI.

Law Professor Michael Green is focused on the daunting task of finding a suitable replacement for President Rawlings.

"One reaction is that I think the committee bears a heavy burden to fill very large shoes," Green said. "I'm disappointed on behalf of the university that he's leaving."

Green said finding someone to promote undergraduate education as well as having strong communication with students, faculty and the state will be his focus in the search.

He said he will be looking for academic values and commitment to education.

This will be Green's third search committee experience. He was also on the committees which nominated UI General Counsel Mark Schantz and UI Hospitals and Clinics director R. Edward Howell.

The search for Hunter Rawlings' replacement should be as broad as possible in its initial stages, said regents President Marvin Berenstein.

"The first go-around, dealing with people who are interested in living in Iowa City and in a Midwestern mentality, should be pretty broad-based," he said. "I think that if we have 150 applicants for this job, that there should be all kinds of different attitudes, and then I think you start to narrow down."

Berenstein indicated familiarity with medical administration might be a factor in choosing the new president.

"With all this progress that we have had over the last six to nine months with delivery of medical services, we need a president with an understanding of the basic fundamentals of the delivery of medical services," he said. "With our setup of the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics and the medical school, we certainly need a president who understands the intercoordination of a teaching hospital and a college of medicine."

While Berenstein said the new president would most likely come from a school with characteristics similar to those of the UI, he is not ruling out any possibilities.

insurance company was reluctant to give us money until they worked out the details of the policy."

Doug Parsons, Phi Kappa Psi alumni corporation president, said insurance problems arose when the fraternity changed insurance companies after being with the same one for 12 years.

"It was a shock to the new insurance carriers that after a week they already had their first huge loss they had to cover," Parsons said. "The new policy was a better policy than before. We're lucky to have had as much coverage as we did."

With the insurance dilemma recently solved, the second stage of construction is about to begin and should be finished in the next 30 days, Sieling said.

"The stuff they do now will be inside the internal structure such as putting up walls, getting the rooms set and all the other bare essentials," Sieling said. "The last bid will be for finishing up stuff."

Although things look good for the fraternity's reconstruction, Parsons said the insurance only covered two-thirds of the damage. The other third will be paid through fund raising.

CLASSES

advising center has been aware of the problem for about five years, it has recently developed a plan to correct the problem.

In an effort to enable students to enroll in conflicting courses, the center has introduced a program where students attend one class and watch others on videotape at alternate times.

Pre-med student Eric Downey said he will take advantage of the videotapes this semester, which will allow him to take a required physics course that conflicts with a required biochemistry course.

"If it wasn't for this video thing, I'd have to stay up here this summer (and take classes)," Downey said.

Downey said he plans to supplement the videotapes with visits to his professor during office hours.

The spring semester lectures of biochemistry will be videotaped and shown at special times for students.

Juliet Kaufmann, director of the advising center, said the program is important because the required courses of Biochemistry, Physiology, Organic Chemistry II, Physics II and Anatomy are all scheduled at 8:30 a.m. Compounding the problem, Biochemistry and Physiology are offered only during the spring semester.

The completion of a combination of the five courses is required for 17 UI majors and preprofessional programs.

BACKLASH

Women may be forced to seek help on their own if shelters are forced to comply with judicial standards, Kinkad said.

"What you had in the '60s was battered women reorganizing from shelters, forming their own grassroot shelters," she said. "They felt more secure."

Monique DiCarlo, director of the Women's Resource and Action Center, said today's centers learned from women's centers of the past. Shelters made changes concerning notes and confidentiality, and the Simpson case threatens these accomplishments, she said.

"Women are afraid that what they say, or even a little of what they say, will be made public," DiCarlo said. "They are afraid that their abuser might find out what they have said — if there has been sexual abuse in the relationship or extramarital affairs. The women are afraid their abusers may retaliate with more violence or pursue them."

UI law Professor Jim Tomkovicz said one argument is that the relationship between a battered woman and a counselor is akin to a doctor and a patient. If there was this kind of recognition of privilege for women's centers, information could be kept out of trials.

"It is not a big step from psychotherapy," Tomkovicz said. "It is so close, so analogous, that the same reasoning should hold. If the information is destructive, if it does more harm than good out of court, the inclination is toward the recognition of privilege."

Former umpire Luciano dies at 57

ENDICOTT, N.Y. (AP) — Former major league umpire Ron Luciano was found dead Wednesday in the garage of his home. He was 57.

Police said Luciano was discovered at about 3:50 p.m. in the garage area of his home in Endicott, just west of Binghamton.

Broome County coroner Dr. Michael McCarville ordered Luciano's body taken to Our Lady of Lourdes Hospital in Binghamton for an autopsy.

A preliminary investigation showed no apparent signs of foul play, said Endicott police Lt. Harlan Ayers.

Police were releasing no other details.

An AL umpire for 11 years, Luciano brought great showmanship to the job and worked the 1974 World Series and the AL championships in 1971, 1975 and 1978.

The 300-pound former football lineman retired from baseball in 1980.

He then worked as a television commentator for NBC and wrote a book about his baseball experiences, "The Umpire Strikes Back," in 1982.

Browns' fullback to undergo surgery

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cleveland Browns fullback Tommy Vardell had hoped to avoid further surgery to repair damage still remaining following surgery on his left knee in October. But the operation will be needed.

Vardell suffered tendon and ligament damage to his knee in a game Oct. 2 against the New York Jets, and he missed the rest of the season.

He had surgery to repair a torn tendon.

The second surgery will be done to repair a torn anterior cruciate ligament.

Vardell, the Browns' first-round draft choice in 1992 out of Stanford, made the decision to undergo further surgery after a doctor in Indianapolis examined the knee Tuesday. The surgery will be done at the end of this month.

Vardell's contract with the Browns runs through 1995.

Millard returns to bolster ailing Iowa

Back injury may sideline Settles for Wisconsin game

Patrick Regan
The Daily Iowan

Russ Millard will see his first action of the season Saturday when Iowa hosts Wisconsin, but Jess Settles could miss his second straight game due to his injured back.

Tipoff is set for 7:05 p.m. at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Iowa coach Tom Davis said Settles' status for the Wisconsin game is "very questionable," but the return of Millard, a 6-foot-8 forward, will help shore up the Hawkeyes' inside game.

"He can play both of our so-called power positions," Davis said of Millard. "How many minutes he'll play Saturday will just depend on his conditioning."

"It's good to have him back. He's such a good team player that it will be only positive to have him back."

Millard missed the first half of the season for academic reasons, but he has been practicing with the Hawkeyes since the end of the fall semester.

"I'm ready to go. Practice has been going great. It's good to be back," Millard said. "I'm just trying to get ready for Saturday."

Millard averaged 11.2 points and 4.7 rebounds per game last season. His return was expected to establish Iowa as a potential Big Ten Conference title contender. However, with Settles' availability unknown, any plans at a title run will have to be put on hold.

The 6-foot-7 sophomore is Iowa's top scorer, averaging 19.2 points per game, and has been named the Big Ten player of the week twice already this season. Settles was at his home in Winfield, Iowa, last weekend and did not attend the Hawkeyes' 84-83 loss to Purdue.

In order to avoid adding stress to his back, Settles said he refrained from watching the game until the final minutes.

"I turned on the last five minutes of that sucker and it was a bad idea," Settles said. "It made me feel bad I wasn't here. That's the worst part of it. You can't contribute on the floor, you can't help everybody out and I miss my teammates."

Settles said Iowa fans have given him all kinds of suggestions to help him recover. Last season's Big Ten Freshman of the Year said in three days he received approximately 65 messages on his answering machine from concerned Iowa fans.

"Everybody's been real supportive," Settles said. "The Hawkeye people are unbelievable. I guess you find that out when you get down like this and you get hurt."

Although Iowa is reeling from three straight one-point losses and desperately needs to get back into the win column, Davis is not pressuring Settles to return before he is ready.

"He shouldn't come back based on what the team needs," Davis said. "He should come back based on what he needs."

While Settles, who did not practice Wednesday, insists his injury is nothing too serious, most players find it difficult to return from any kind of back problem. Settles said it's not likely he'll miss the entire season but he's not ruling it out.

"I'm planning on coming back," he said.

"I don't know when, but I don't think I'll miss the rest of the year. But you never know."

Davis said all of Iowa's starters had been suffering nagging injuries. As a result, the Hawkeyes took three days off and on Wednesday held their first practice since the Purdue game.

"Literally, every starter I had was hurt. We're not just talking Jess," Davis said. "That's how tough physically our schedule has been."

Tourney offers hope to Hawks

Mike Triplett

The Daily Iowan

If only they could wipe the slate clean, forget the 6-9 start, forget the 2-3 Big Ten Conference record, start from scratch.

No, the Iowa women's basketball team can't start the season over, but they can come close. For the first time since 1981, the Big Ten Conference will finish the season with a women's basketball tournament. And the winner of this four-day event will receive an automatic berth to the NCAA tournament a week later.

All 11 teams will meet in Indianapolis March 3-6 to battle for that spot in the tourney. And one team that certainly will be hungry is Iowa.

"We have to look forward to the tournament," Stringer said.

But that doesn't mean the Hawkeyes are going to lay back and wait for March to come around.

"While all the teams may be invited to the Big Ten Tournament," she said, "you have to remember that where you're seeded is also very important. So it's all relative."

Although this year's tournament seems to be made for Iowa, every coach in the league is looking for a chance to win. Glen Rice added 20 points and Billy Owens 18 for the Heat, who never trailed in the contest. A season-high seven players scored in double figures for Miami.

Dino Radja led Boston with 25 points and Sherman Douglas contributed 19.

Miami maintained a double-digit advantage throughout the second half, leading by as many as 31 in the fourth quarter.

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Eric Snow scored 21 points and Shawn Respert added 16 to move into second place on Michigan State's career scoring list as the 12th-ranked Spartans beat Northwestern 93-56 Wednesday night.

Respert needed 15 points to pass Scott Skiles and take over second place behind Steve Smith. Respert trails Smith, who scored 2,263 points, by 116.

Respert failed to lead Michigan State (11-2, 3-1 Big Ten) in scoring for the first time in 29 games, dating back to Jan. 15, 1994, when Anthony Miller led the Spartans in a game against Northwestern.

Michigan State, which leads the Big Ten in shooting percentage and is seventh nationally, shot 60 percent.

Jamie Feick scored 11 points and grabbed 10 rebounds for the Spartans, while Jon Garavaglia and Quinton Brooks added 10 points each.

Kenneth Lee led Northwestern (4-9, 0-4) with 17 points and Geno Carlisle had 12.

The Spartans, who led 38-27 at halftime, began the second half with an 11-4 burst and had a 10-0 run a few minutes later to open a 62-38 lead.

Michigan State's lead eventually reached 38 points as the Wildcats shot only 30 percent in the second half.

New York Rangers captain Mark Messier stretches. The Rangers are scheduled to meet the Buffalo Sabres in their season opener Friday night.

Season kicks off in the Garden

Ken Rappaport
Associated Press

Forget about the "Madhouse on Madison." How about the madhouse at Madison Square Garden? The Garden will be THE place for hockey fans when the New York Rangers finally open the NHL season Friday night with a game against the Buffalo Sabres, one of eight in the league that night.

Their fans have waited a long time for this night — first 54 years for the Stanley Cup and then another three months for the 1994-95 season to open.

With the owners' lockout behind them, the Rangers will finally raise the Stanley Cup banner to go alongside the other three that have hung there since 1940.

The Vancouver Canucks played in a highly-charged environment in Game 7 of the Stanley Cup Finals. Now it's the Sabres' turn to play in another emotional environment.

John Muckler, the Sabres' coach-general manager, doesn't think it will affect his team.

"We have an older team," Muckler said. "We're pretty mature. I would like to think we can handle a situation like that."

Muckler said the Sabres have requested that the Sabres not sit on the bench during the ceremony, "out of courtesy."

"I haven't talked to (Rangers general manager) Neil Smith yet," Muckler said, "but I'm planning to have our players on the bench. We want to watch the ceremonies, too."

The Rangers will open the season with four home games within a six-day period under the NHL's revised schedule.

"I know teams want to get off to a fast start" and playing at home may help the Rangers," Muckler said. As for his team, he didn't see opening on the road as a problem.

"I feel we're going to have a pretty good club," Muckler said.

"Besides, we were only a .500 club at home last year."

The Rangers will feature many of the same players who helped them win the Cup last season — including Mark Messier. The Ranger captain, who had still not settled his contract dispute with management, said he would be at the Garden to help raise the banner.

Meanwhile, the so-called "Madhouse on Madison" will be quiet in Chicago while the Blackhawks travel to Detroit for their opening-night game. The Blackhawks, who will be playing in the new United Center across from the old, noisy arena on Madison Avenue, won't christen their new place until next Wednesday against Edmonton.

In other games Friday, it's Pittsburgh at Tampa Bay, Chicago at Detroit, Calgary at Winnipeg, Anaheim at Edmonton, Dallas at Vancouver, St. Louis at San Jose and Toronto at Los Angeles.

Dolphin assistant retires after 26 seasons

Associated Press

MIAMI — John Sandusky, who spent 26 years as an assistant under coach Don Shula, retired from the Miami Dolphins on Tuesday after 43 years in the NFL as a player and coach.

Sandusky has been the Dolphins' offensive line coach since 1976 and assistant head coach since 1989. He also coached for the Baltimore Colts (1969-72) and Philadelphia Eagles (1973-75).

The Dolphins' likely successor as offensive line coach is Rich McGeorge, who has been their assistant offensive line coach the past two seasons.

"I enjoyed my association with the Dolphins," the 69-year-old Sandusky said in a statement, "and I certainly enjoyed working with Don Shula for more than 20 years in Miami and in Baltimore. ... But now I feel it's time to move on."

TENNIS

Pierce blossoms in father's absence

Steve Wilstein
Associated Press

MELBOURNE, Australia — Mary Pierce remembers how doggedly her father pushed her, hour after hour, day after day, for eight years. She hasn't forgotten him screaming at her, taunting her, goading her.

Banned from watching his daughter at tennis tournaments because of his disruptive behavior toward her and her opponents, Jim Pierce remains on the outside looking in from far away.

Yet, if there is one thing that Mary Pierce doesn't lament about her relationship with her father, it's the attitude he instilled in her about working on her game.

"I don't think it was safe for me to train so much. I love putting the hours in ... but I think I was doing too much."

Mary Pierce

"He pushed me really hard, which I don't regret," she said Wednesday night after reaching the third round of the Australian Open with a 6-1, 6-2 victory over Elina Reinach. "He gave me the hard work ethic. In the eight years that I was with him (as coach), I probably played 15 years worth because I put so many hours in. I perfected my strokes pretty much then."

Though she once hired a bodyguard to keep her father away from her and her mother, and still doesn't see him much, Pierce is not completely estranged from him.

"I talk to my Dad," she said. "Not every day, but I talk to him often sometimes."

The effects of being apart from him as she's traveled the WTA Tour and Grand Slam circuit the past year have been to allow her to blossom as an individual, to feel freer at 20 than she ever had been. She reached the final of the French Open and came into the Australian seeded No. 4.

Rams to require licenses for seats

R.B. Fallstrom
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Now that the Rams have committed to St. Louis, it's time to come up with the money.

That's where personal seat licenses come in, a tactic first used by Charlotte, N.C., in securing an expansion franchise in 1993.

The license, a one-time fee ranging from $250 to $4,500, must be purchased before buying a season ticket and gives the buyer the right to keep the seat for life.

If that sounds expensive, you're right.

Throw in ticket prices estimated at $25 to $45 at the new domed stadium, and the total package will run from $500 for the end zones to nearly $5,000 at midfield for 10 games, including two exhibitions.

That's minus the hot dogs and beer.

But officials from FANS Inc., the civic group that courted the Rams, have little doubt they'll sell. On Tuesday, the day the Rams officially announced their intention to leave Southern California after 49 years, operators fielded 2,500 calls from people wanting applications. Another 700 were accumulated on voice mail overnight.

Phone lines were jammed again Wednesday, and officials took out a two-page ad in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch to explain the concept and cut down on the volume of calls.

During Charlotte's campaign, an average of three PSLs were requested for each application, said Jim Zweifel, executive director of FANS Inc.

Associated Press

France's Mary Pierce returns the ball to South Africa's Elina Reinach en route to a 6-1, 6-2 second-round victory at the Australian Open Tennis Championships in Melbourne Wednesday.

"A lot has changed," she said. "As a person and as a tennis player, I'm more confident with myself and more relaxed."

"Almost everything in my life (has changed), everything from the training that I did, how many hours I train a day in tennis. I have more free time for myself. I realize that tennis is my main priority right now in my life, and I'm really enjoying it. I'm having lots of fun."

Just how much fun she's having was evident in practice just before the Australian started, when she worked out on center court wearing a skimpy gray bra shirt and hot pink shorts.

She laughed between rallies, joking with her new coach and hitting partner. Asked if she would wear such a risque outfit during the tournament, she giggled and said, "No. They won't let me." Her face, once so full of worry, has become more relaxed and happier.

Under her father's guidance, training was often a cruel grind.

"All day long, until the sun went down and from early in the morning, that's what I used to train," she said. "Now I finish earlier, sometimes 5 p.m., sometimes 6. I have a break in between. I'm able to relax in the evening, go to see a movie, or eat dinner with some friends, go to the beach or something."

"I don't think it was safe for me to train so much. I love putting the hours in ... but I think I was doing too much. And sometimes when you do too much, you don't enjoy it as much."

Jim Pierce recently was hired to coach a 14-year-old German girl, Marlene Weingartner, but that relationship ended quickly a few days ago. Mary Pierce declined to comment on why any parent would allow her father to coach another girl.

Pierce described herself as disciplined, "kind of a perfectionist," who has learned to drive herself as much as she has to. But she has also learned her limits.

BIG EIGHT FOOTBALL

Hawaii running back commits to Iowa State

Associated Press

AMES, Iowa — Running back George Ornellas III of Honolulu is leaving his surfboard behind to join the rebuilding effort at Iowa State.

"I don't think the surf is going to get me anywhere in life," said Ornellas, a weekend surfer who committed to Iowa State this week.

Ornellas' decision to attend Iowa State, which was 0-10-1 last fall, rated page one coverage in the sports section of the Honolulu Star-Bulletin and a kicker on the front page of the newspaper.

He's the all-time leading scorer in the Interscholastic League of Honolulu and was the Star-Bulletin's offensive player of the year in 1994. USA Today named him its player of the year in Hawaii and made him a second-team All-American.

"I know some people will be tripping out over this," Ornellas told the Star-Bulletin. "But nobody influenced me. It was my decision all along."

Ornellas visited Iowa State last weekend, and Cyclone coach Dan McCarney visited Ornellas' home Monday night. The 5-foot-8, 185-pounder said he made his verbal commitment when McCarney visited but actually had made up his mind while he was in Ames.

"I liked the people, I liked the campus and I liked the offense," Ornellas said in his Star-Bulletin interview.

"The coach said they're going to use the same offense as the Dallas Cowboys and Wisconsin. The whole offense centers around the running backs. I would touch the ball a lot."

This is the second straight year that Iowa State has wooed a highly touted running back from a warm-weather state.

Former coach Jim Walden's staff signed Troy Davis of Miami, Fla., last year.

Davis rushed for 187 yards in 1994 and set an Iowa State record with a 99-yard kickoff return for a touchdown at Colorado.

PAC-10 BASKETBALL

UCLA, Arizona play for high stakes

Beth Harris
Associated Press

Three years ago, Don MacLean led UCLA into Tucson to play Arizona and the Bruins broke the Wildcats' 71-game home winning streak with an 89-87 victory.

Fourth-ranked UCLA (9-1, 3-1 Pac-10) hasn't won at McKale Center since, and the memory of that game remains strong for forward Ed O'Bannon.

"I remember that we came in and played our hearts out," the senior said. "I remember Don just going crazy and hitting everything that he was putting up. It was an intense game and fun-filled."

O'Bannon has his last chance tonight to beat No. 11 Arizona on the road.

"We haven't had a bigger game yet," he said. "It's just going to be a dogfight."

At stake is control of the Pac-10, with possible later implications for a No. 1 seeding in the NCAA tournament. Although 17th-ranked Oregon (11-1, 3-0) leads the conference, UCLA or Arizona are still favored to be on top in March.

"Almost definitely the winner of the conference will get a No. 1 or No. 2 seed," Bruins coach Jim Harrick said.

The matchup is part of a two-game road trip for UCLA that concludes Saturday at Arizona State. The outcome of both games is so critical that Harrick said it's "my toughest trip in 30 years of coaching."

Arizona (12-3, 2-1) brings greater momentum into the game, coming off a sweep of Northern California schools last weekend, defeating California 99-86 and No. 21 Stanford, 89-83 in overtime.

The Wildcats have played a tougher schedule, too. They beat Michigan on the road and have losses to No. 6 Syracuse (94-84) and No. 13 Arizona State (53-52).

"If we can take care of our home court and win five on the road, that should be enough to win the league," Arizona coach Lute Olson said. "If they were to get us here, it would give them a big step up."

SUPER BOWL

Lack of tickets disappoints fans

Bernie Wilson
Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Wednesday was T-Day for thousands of season-ticket holders, the momentous day they found out whether they were selected to buy tickets to see their beloved San Diego Chargers play in their first Super Bowl.

For many, there was disappointment.

For the chosen few thousand, glee at getting a chance to see the Chargers play the heavily favored San Francisco 49ers in Miami on Jan. 29.

"God, I was nervous," said Timm Tesch of San Diego, who went to the Chargers' ticket office at Jack Murphy Stadium and calmly absorbed the news that his name was chosen in a computer lottery to buy two tickets for $200 apiece.

"I don't know what to say," said Tesch, who quickly realized his good fortune. "I get face value, whereas some people are paying $1,000 apiece. I've got reservations for two with a broker for $900 apiece. I'll call the guy back and politely tell him to keep his tickets."

Two of Tesch's friends also are season-ticket holders. One got tickets, the other didn't.

"We might have to leave the women at home," said Tesch, who's had his season tickets for nine years. "We'll have to handle that delicately."

The Chargers conducted the lottery Sunday night after San Diego upset the Pittsburgh Steelers 17-13 at Three Rivers Stadium.

The lottery was based on longevity, meaning a person who held season tickets since 1961, the Chargers' first year in San Diego, had 34 chances.

Letters were mailed on Tuesday to notify the 4,500 lucky season-ticket holders that they could buy two tickets apiece.

"We were hoping to get them. We've been fans forever, and unfortunately, we're not the type of fans who can pay $1,000 a ticket."

Cathie Fryer, Chargers fan

Many, like Tesch, were too impatient to wait for the mail and headed for the stadium.

"I didn't want to wait," Tesch said. "I couldn't wait."

Ron Tuck, director of ticket operations, said reactions were obvious.

"Disappointment if they didn't get them, or ecstasy, jumping up and down, screaming and hollering if they did."

By midday, at least 300 people had called the ticket office. For the majority, the news wasn't good.

"We didn't get any. I'm very cranky," said Cathie Fryer of Orange County, whose father first bought season tickets when the Chargers moved from Los Angeles in 1961 to play in San Diego's Balboa Stadium.

For Fryer and her husband, Steve, it was a double loss. Besides the account her father opened in 1961, they bought more tickets when the stadium was expanded in 1983.

Getting tickets through the lottery was the only realistic way of going to the game. And the odds were slim. Ron Tuck, director of ticket operations, said the Chargers have 16,700 season-ticket accounts, for a total of 48,000 season seats.

"We were hoping to get them," Fryer said. "We've been fans forever, and unfortunately, we're not the type of fans who can pay $1,000 a ticket."

"I talked to a couple of other people and they said, 'Cathie, that's the way the Super Bowl is. People are going to pay $1,000 a ticket.'"

Fryer works for a travel agency in the Los Angeles area, but the agency did not buy Super Bowl tickets and she'd have to go through a broker to get some.

Despite her disappointment, "I will always cheer for my beloved Chargers," Fryer said.

Super Bowl XXIX ticket breakdown

AP/Ed De Gasero

So will Tesch, who was off to make travel arrangements. He had heard it might take four or five days after the Super Bowl to get a return flight from Miami.

"It'll be well worth it," he said. "It's a once in a lifetime thing. This is the very first time they've gone, and I've never been to a Super Bowl."

And he thinks the Chargers are going to upset the 49ers, 24-17.

Assistant coach reunites with Cooper in Columbus

Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — It was like old home week when Lovie Smith joined Ohio State football coach John Cooper's staff as defensive backs coach.

Smith played for Cooper for three seasons at Tulsa and signed on as an assistant right after graduation.

The defensive backs coach at Tennessee the past two seasons, Smith began his new duties at Ohio State on Tuesday, taking the place of Larry Coker, who Cooper moved to quarterbacks coach, replacing the fired Ron Hudson.

Cooper still has one more slot to fill, that of tackles-tight ends coach, left vacant when Lee Owens became head coach at Akron a month ago.

Smith said he was excited about rejoining his mentor. "John Cooper has done a lot for me," Smith said.

"I had a chance to play for him for three years at Tulsa. I go the chance to work under him for a couple of years as an assistant coach. And now, here I am again, working for what I believe is one of the best coaches in college football."

Baseball talks remain stagnant

Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Baseball owners said Wednesday they will return to the bargaining table only when asked by mediator W.J. Usery, and they accused the union of threatening to take money away from possible replacement players.

On Tuesday, union head Donald Fehr accused acting commissioner Bud Selig of lying to members of Congress by saying the union is refusing to resume negotiations. Selig, claiming Fehr was relying on "second-hand information," said he told congressmen that the union hadn't seriously bargained.

"I and other club owners told members of Congress that the strike will be resolved only when both parties return to the bargaining table and address the fundamental issue of labor costs," Selig wrote in a letter to Fehr.

"If Bud would actually come to negotiations, he might know what was actually going on. He doesn't," Fehr countered. "I notice he emphatically does not deny that it was them who broke off negotiations, withdrew all their proposals and imposed their salary cap."

Former Iowa and current San Francisco 49ers cornerback Merton Hanks waves to reporters at the 49ers training camp in Santa Clara, Calif., Wednesday.

Floyd flows with confidence

Dennis Georgatos
Associated Press

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — William Floyd is the San Francisco 49ers' confidence man, and it's been that way from the moment he joined the team.

The rookie fullback out of Florida State exudes confidence through his talk and swagger, and he inspires it in others through his play.

"I don't think it's any coincidence that our offense has been more productive since he's been in the lineup. You know, he came in here saying he was the best fullback in the league, bar none, and you won't hear me arguing with that," linebacker Gary Plummer said.

Neither would Floyd, who has adopted the nickname "Bar None" and signs autographs using that moniker. Indeed, he says maybe he underestimated himself a bit.

"I believe I was the best fullback in the NFL last year, and I was still in college," he said. "I don't want to be just a good fullback. I don't want to be a guy who kind of falls off. From now on, every time another fullback comes up behind me, I want them to be compared to me."

The 49ers drafted Floyd in the first round as a replacement for Tom Rathman, a 7-year starter who was lost to free agency. But coming out of training camp, Marc Logan had the fullback's job.

It wasn't until the sixth game of the season that Floyd moved into the lineup, and it could be a long time before there's another change.

Pacers struggle to win at home

Indiana falls from top of Central Division after losing six of last 10 games

Steve Herman
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — After reaching the Eastern Conference finals for the first time last year, the Indiana Pacers set their goal even higher this season. Maybe that's why their recent slump hurts so much.

"We're a little down emotionally, mentally, and I think we all understand why," guard Byron Scott admitted.

"We're not playing the type of basketball that we know we're capable of playing. So we're a little down right now."

"I don't think anybody on this team thinks expectations were too high," he said after Tuesday's practice.

"The most important thing is the effort. If we play hard like that every night, we're going to win some games. And it won't come down to free throws."

Haywoode Workman,
Pacers point guard

"We knew our expectations were very realistic. At this point right now, we just feel we haven't lived up to them. We've got 50 games, or whatever it is, left and we've still got a lot of time and a lot of improving to do."

The Pacers are 20-15 on the season.

Going into Wednesday night, Indiana was ahead of Chicago by 5½ games.

Indiana has lost six of its last 10 games, including two straight at home for the first time in a year.

Since a fast start put them atop the Central Division standings, they have fallen to third, behind the Cleveland Cavaliers and the Charlotte Hornets, going into Wednesday night's game against the Los Angeles Lakers.

Haywoode Workman started in place of Mark Jackson at point guard in a 99-98 loss to Utah on Monday night, when the Pacers missed four of five free throws in the final two minutes of overtime. Indiana failed on 16 of 40 foul shots for the game.

"If we knew why, we wouldn't have been in a slump last night," Scott said.

"That's something you can't really answer. It's just some nights you've got it going, some nights you don't."

Said Workman, who missed all three of his free-throw attempts, "The most important thing is the effort. If we play hard like that every night, we're going to win some games. And it won't come down to free throws."

Coach Larry Brown said slumps like that happen to everyone.

"Sometimes it's contagious. When one guy misses, the others start to miss too. How can a 90 percent shooter (Reggie Miller) go 3-for-6? It just happens."

But at the end of the game, we had been struggling a little bit, and we just missed some key free throws. It cost us the game," Brown said.

There was no extra work on free throws in Tuesday's practice.

"Sometimes you can harp too much on that," Brown said. "I've had teams I never said one word about free throws to and we made them all; I've had some teams I never said one word to and we didn't make many. But this is one game. If you get alarmed about one game..."

Of more concern is the rotation at point guard, where Workman was demoted to benchwarmer a few weeks ago, but started and played 29 minutes on Monday.

"When you don't know how much you're going to play, when you go in there, you try to do everything right," Workman said. "Instead of letting it come to me, I'm always thinking, 'If I shoot this shot and it's a bad shot, I'm going to come out.' So I should just play, because I'm going to play regardless. We don't know if I'm going to start or not, but I'm going to play."

Associated Press

Indiana Pacers' forward Dale Davis, left, pulls down a rebound in front of Houston Rockets' forward Carl Herrera during a game on Nov. 9, 1994, in Indianapolis. Davis leads the Pacers in rebounds and blocked shots. Indiana (20-15) has slumped recently, falling to third in the Eastern Conference Central Division behind Cleveland and Charlotte going into Wednesday night's game with the Lakers.

Jackson, the 1988 NBA rookie of the year with the New York Knicks, came to Indiana in June in a trade with the Los Angeles Clippers.

But he hasn't given the Pacers the consistency they were looking for.

"It's a combination of things: playing with new people, trying to live up to expectations, whether you say it or not. There's a whole combination of things. I don't know what the answer is," Brown said.

"It's not like he's not going to play — he played 24 minutes — but maybe sitting there can be helpful."

"But we need him, it's obvious. We need him badly. We need him to play like he's capable of playing."

Hall of Fame honors former all-American

Associated Press

LARCHMONT, N.Y. — Paul Robeson, the Rutgers all-American who became famous as a singer and movie star, will be posthumously inducted into the College Football Hall of Fame this year after being spurned for decades because of his politics.

Blacklisted on Broadway after 1945 as a communist sympathizer, Robeson was passed over by the Hall for many years until it announced Wednesday he was among 13 new inductees.

Robeson, who died in 1976, was an all-American in 1917 and '18 and is considered by many the greatest athlete in Rutgers history. He also lettered in baseball, basketball and track.

Also among the inductees announced by the National Football Foundation were running back Jim Brown of Syracuse and coach Frank Kush of Arizona State.

Robert Casciola, the foundation's executive director, called Robeson "one of the great players of his time."

Former Rutgers sports information director Bob Smith said Robeson was nominated to the College Hall of Fame in the early 1970s and passed over every year since.

Smith said it was made clear to the school by the 12-member "honors court" that chooses honorees that Robeson was not selected strictly because of his politics.

"They only wanted 'clean' candidates," said Smith.

"In short, they just didn't think Robeson was worthy because of what they thought was his communist sympathies, if not his communism. It was a very conservative group. You couldn't criticize your country with them."

Smith said the faces on the selection board have changed in the past few years, as old members were replaced with newer and younger faces more willing to look strictly at the All-American's football talents.

SACRAMENTO'S SURPRISE

Grant boosts Kings to strong start

Rob Gloster
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Brian Grant has always been comfortable playing in obscurity, from a small-town high school to Xavier University to the usually woeful Sacramento Kings.

But now Grant and surprising Sacramento are coming out of the shadows.

Grant is among the league's top rookies in most offensive categories and has helped lead the Kings to their best start since 1982-83 — when the team was still in Kansas City.

The 6-foot-9 forward had career highs in points (26) and rebounds (16) Tuesday night as the Kings went on a late 15-0 run to defeat the Portland Trail Blazers 95-88 in a game that featured a fight and three ejections.

The victory gave Sacramento, shut out of the playoffs since 1985-86, the seventh-best record in the Western Conference at 20-15. That's an improvement of eight games since last season.

And it's threatening to ruin Grant's quiet life.

"I like this," he said earlier this season, "because it's a place where you can grow. The team has been down and there's no exposure."

Grant is nicknamed "General" because he grew up in tiny Georgetown, Ohio, the boyhood home of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant. As a teenager, he expected to stay in that farming town or get a factory job — until he played a year of varsity basketball.

He went on to star at Xavier, but got little attention outside Cincinnati. He was characteristically humble when the Kings made him the No. 8 pick in the NBA draft, saying, "Just give me about $2.50, so I can get me a Dr. Pepper and a bag of chips."

Grant got considerably more than that. After holding out for most of training camp, he signed a 13-year, $29.3 million contract.

He has averaged 16 points and 10 rebounds per game since moving into the starting lineup on Dec. 27. Long arms, a soft shooting touch and exceptional quickness allow Grant to post up against smaller players and drive to the basket against bigger opponents.

Grant showed off all those skills on one sequence Tuesday. He blocked a shot, then finished off a Sacramento fast break with a finger roll.

"Brian has unbelievable quickness inside," Detroit coach Don Chaney said after a recent loss to the Kings. "He presented a problem for us with his quickness. He played very aggressively."

The Kings, who didn't win their 20th game until March 9 last season, have not allowed an opponent to score 100 points in seven straight games.

They held Portland to 22.2 percent shooting in the fourth quarter Tuesday.

Portland's Rod Strickland and Sacramento's Olden Polynice were ejected for fighting in the second quarter, and Portland's Cliff Robinson was thrown out for getting two technicals in the fourth period.

Local dance floors let UI students Get into the groove

Patricia Harris
and Lesley Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

Whether it's the latest techno, swinging '70s, live jams or awesome '80s, students are filling Iowa City dance floors nearly every night of the week.

And whether they do it for exercise, fun, inspiration or just to get into the groove, several Iowa City clubs have made dancing a business.

Business has doubled for Soho's, 1210 Highland Court, since a dance floor was installed in the sports bar last September, manager Dave Moore said.

One of their biggest draws is a Wednesday Sub-Cult night.

"Our two DJs, who go by Tim O. and Dan, make every Wednesday different and unusual," he said. "They run super-eight film loops and use '60s and '70s mood lighting. They play alternative music, and the dance area has a really alternative look."

Moore said the look is continually changing.

"They want to make it fresh, fun and different each week," he said. "Sometimes we hold contests — we've had a Halloween contest and a tattoo contest — it's a completely different scene."

The success of Sub-Cult nights brings more people to the bar throughout the week, Moore said.

"People come back on Friday and Saturday nights," he said. "We've had a huge increase in business with our dance floor open Wednesday through Saturday. We're really happy with it."

Theme nights

Downtown Iowa City has a number of bars that cater to different crowds. Like Soho's, many have a special night where one kind of music is designated as the sound for the evening. One such place is the Union Bar & Grill, 121 E. College St., where '80s Night, held on Tuesdays, has become a staple of the Iowa City dance scene.

Union managing director Paul Daugerda said business would only be "fair" without the dance floor.

UI junior Sam Paxton said '80s night at the Union can be a lot of fun, but he prefers dancing to live music at Gabe's, 330 E. Washington St., or the Metro.

"We do disco-esque moves like the freak, the bump and the hustle," he said. "I learned my moves from watching John Travolta in 'Saturday Night Fever' and 'Grease.'"

But like many students, Paxton said it would be rare to find him out on the dance floor sober.

"When I'm liquored up, I'm uninhibited and I don't care what people think," he said. "If I'm at Vito's or (One-Eyed) Jake's, I'll go dance, but sometimes it's so packed that you can't move and show off your moves."

RT Grunt's, 826 S. Clinton St., is also planning to jump on the theme night bandwagon. Assistant manager Peggy McGuire said the bar will be starting a '70s and '80s night next Thursday.

"People can request stuff from the DJ," she said. "We play mostly Top 40. I think the dance floor is great for business."

McGuire said RT's hasn't ruled out providing live music either.

"We're leaning towards having bands out in the beer garden when it gets warmer," she said.

One downtown bar that often gets overflow from the Union is Vito's, 118 E. College St., manager Brad Vokac said.

"We don't really cater to the dance crowd until about 12:30 or 1 a.m.," he said. "That's when people are pretty much pickled."

The mixed crowd at the 21-and-over bar varies as much as the music, Vokac said.

The 'cheesy' factor

"We have a very diverse crowd," he said. "Our music ranges from everything from the Grateful Dead to Nine Inch Nails, even some Barry Manilow."

Barry Manilow?

"We gotta kick the 'Copacabana' once in a while," Vokac said. "People like to get cheesy every so often."

He said that while dancing isn't really the focus of nightlife at Vito's, it is good for business.

"The dance floor is definitely an integral part of Vito's," he said.

For those who like to get away from the downtown scene for a night of dancing, Maxie's, 1920 Keokuk St., offers a plethora of dance activities.

"We have a really diverse mix of people," manager Brett Boren said. "Typically on Fridays, we hit the college crowd."

Wednesday nights at Maxie's are deemed country night.

"We've been characterized as a country bar, but a lot of different types of people come," Boren said. "It's not the rural country folk of Iowa that come in here. The majority of the people who come in are just Iowa Citizens who want to enjoy some country dancing."

M. Scott Mahasky/The Daily Iowan

The live vibe

One of the many downtown bars that relies heavily on live music for entertainment is the Metro, 121 Iowa Ave.

Live music tends to get people out on the dance floor quickly, said manager Nick Ridenour.

"Sometimes it takes a while, but once the bands start, people get out there," he said.

Ridenour said one particular Iowa City band gets crowds dancing immediately.

"Dagobah is probably the best band to have for people to come in dancing," he said. "They really get the crowd going."

The Que Sports Bar, 211 Iowa Ave., has a dance floor in the upstairs area of the bar, but it was mostly rented out for private parties until the middle of last semester when bands began performing, bartender Chris Gangi said.

"It's been better for business," Gangi said. "Usually no one was upstairs at all."

Gangi said the dance crowd varies depending on the band.

"The crowd upstairs is usually different from the crowd downstairs. The people upstairs are usually here specifically for the band; they don't just wander in from downstairs," Gangi said.

With all the choices available, the next time dance fever hits, don't be afraid to join the masses and get into the groove. Iowa City bars are waiting for you.

Uncle Jon's Band, an act that primarily plays Grateful Dead cover songs, will take the stage at Gabe's, 330 E. Washington St., tonight and Friday. Saturday night Tripmaster Monkey, out of Champaign, Ill., will take over. Doors for both shows open at 9 p.m.

TWO I.C. FAVORITES TO TAKE THE STAGE

Live music at Gabe's could help to cure the back-to-school blues

Paul Ferguson
The Daily Iowan

As the first grueling week of classes comes to a close, the inevitable student exodus toward the peaceful shores of inebriation has doubtlessly already begun.

One advisable stop along the way is Gabe's, 330 E. Washington St., where Uncle Jon's Band and Tripmaster Monkey headline a weekend lineup perfect for dancing away those bookworm blues.

Uncle Jon's Band

Uncle Jon's Band, arriving in town Thursday night for a relatively unusual two-night stand, should provide a soothing atmosphere all by itself.

It may not be the Grateful Dead, but the band does its best to sound like it. It specializes in Grateful Dead cover songs, throwing in tunes by the Doors, Eric Clapton and the Beatles for good measure. In a town known for its love of the Dead (or those little bears, anyway), it's not surprising that the band visits Iowa City

"The nature of the Grateful Dead material is such that you can put a lot of your own touch on it and enjoy it, instead of being so stiff with it."

Rick Cinquemani,
member of Uncle Jon's Band

often.

"I really enjoy playing (Grateful Dead songs)," said Uncle Jon's Band member Rick Cinquemani. "The nature of the Grateful Dead material is such that you can put a lot of your own touch on it and enjoy it, instead of being so stiff with it."

The most unusual thing about the Chicago-based band is not its affinity for the Dead, but its backward progression from playing original material to covering other artists almost exclusively.

While it is common for young bands to cut their teeth covering other artists, Uncle Jon's Band is hardly a fledgling outfit — it has been through some 14 years and 20 members. A combination of personnel changes and audience enthusiasm led the band to cover Dead songs live and record original material, producing one CD, UJB, along the way.

"We used to do a 50-50 show, original songs and Grateful Dead, but a lot of people came to hear the Dead covers, so what we decided to do was record another album of our own music," Cinquemani said.

In concert, the band has often let the audience decide whether it plays original material or covers.

"(We often) sort of let the audience tell us what to do," Cinquemani said. "We'll lay a couple of songs on them, and if they prefer the Dead tunes, fine. Then we'll have a separate entity that's the original band."

The audiences' love of dancing to Dead songs has even led the band to rethink its old material.

While Cinquemani has plenty of it — "about 100 90-minute tapes full," — he has decided to add more upbeat rhythms to original songs written some time ago, making Uncle Jon's Band even more unorthodox.

"If there was a tune I originally wrote that was sort of slow, I might put a groove on top of it," Cinquemani said. "With most of the songs I'm writing and rewriting, one of the criteria is that it have a nice solid groove to it."

Tripmaster Monkey

Local noisemaker Tripmaster Monkey returns Saturday night along with Champaign, Ill., favorites Suede Chain and Des Moines' Squidboy. Bassist Wes Haas is looking forward to playing Gabe's, as it is one of the few predictable things about the band's touring schedule.

"Gabe's always has a good sound system, and we've figured out how to make the sound work our way," he said.

Tripmaster Monkey usually attracts a respectable crowd with its rough melodic music, a melting pot of suburban misery and adolescent wonder with more enthusiasm than pretense. Since its last stop in Iowa City, the band has recorded two new songs in addition to continuing its tour of the Midwest.

Touring has been the least of the band's worries lately, as it is in the process of changing managers as well as labels. Haas said he has seen a bit of irony in the fact that the band's personally chosen manager has caused the band problems, while the band's label has been supportive and optimistic.

"It's kind of funny because you hear all these stories about how the record labels are so awful, but we're quite happy with them right now," he said. In fact, the recent shuffling of label heads at Warner Bros. has left the band officially on Elektra / Sire, which, Haas said, should mean more support for the band's album, Goodbye Race.

For local fans not placated by the band's show, Tripmaster Monkey plans to release its second single, "Albert's Twisted Memory Bank," sometime soon along with at least one new track.

LoveSlinky counts on new fans at shows in laid-back locality

Ian Corwin

Local groove / roots band LoveSlinky will take its infectious brand of blues-infused dance music to a slightly different venue this weekend, hoping to broaden its fan base while contributing to the tradition of musical variety as practiced by the owners of The Mill Restaurant, 120 E. Burlington St.

LoveSlinky will play two free shows at The Mill this Friday and Saturday night beginning at 9:30. It's an arrangement that benefits both the musicians and the restaurant itself, as owner Keith Dempster has recently been looking to broaden The Mill's existing mass appeal.

"Keith has been trying to draw a younger crowd," said Aaron Oster, LoveSlinky's guitarist and co-vocalist. "We're hoping that the shows this weekend will draw in our established fans and our friends, and that they'll like what they see and stick around."

Last semester, The Mill expanded its lineup of live music, which had consisted of local and visiting acoustic acts in previous as well as a handful of bluegrass, folk and blues bands. Local rock and dance acts — such as High & Lonesome, Divin' Duck, Dagobah and The Blues Instigators — have all played at The Mill since Dempster began booking a wider variety of music and all have met with varying degrees of success.

LoveSlinky represents a challenge for the venue itself. The band has made it a tradition at each performance to give away one Slinky to the best dancer in the crowd. The Mill's more relaxed atmosphere may dictate a quieter show, but it doesn't necessarily mean the band will do anything different musically.

"We'll be playing the same show we always play," Oster said, adding that the nebulous blend of blues, funk and Cajun music LoveSlinky has always played seems to go over well with older crowds.

LoveSlinky has taken off in the past few months and exposure is what they'll be thriving on, having recently established themselves as a band with permanence in the ever-changing musicscape of Iowa City.

Their new CD, Slinkyland, which contains nearly an hour of new all-original music, will be on sale at The Mill shows this weekend and will be available in February at BJ Records, 6 1/2 S. Dubuque St.; the Record Collector, 4 1/2 S. Linn St.; and Apollo

LoveSlinky, like High & Lonesome and Divin' Duck before them, should be another perfect choice for The Mill's expanding lineup; any band with music constituted of a fusion of traditional influences, like blues and roots rock, will undoubtedly win new converts from The Mill's diverse clientele.

Iowa City native Rinde Eckert, 43, will play an array of recognizable fools — from terrifying stupidity to holy madness — in “The Idiot Variations” tonight and Friday in the Hancher Auditorium Loft at 8 p.m. The event is an acoustic evening of song and story, spotlighting the solo performance of Eckert.

Eckert's ‘The Idiot Variations’ makes debut on Hancher stage

The UI's 1995 performing arts schedule kicks off this weekend with a return home for performance artist Rinde Eckert, whose one-man show, “The Idiot Variations,” makes its world premiere at 8 p.m. on Thursday and Friday in the intimate setting of the Hancher Loft.

The performances mark the end of Eckert's two-week residency at the UI, where City High School and the UI alumnus have reunited with director Robert Woodruff for the final development of the one-man show.

As Eckert explores the various permutations of the idiot in this “acoustical evening of song and story,” he will employ a variety of instruments that include, but are not limited to, cow bells, the Boy Scout drum, the accordion, the penny whistle, a bizarre slide guitar and the harmonica.

“The Idiot Variations” demanded a beginner's mind, so I put myself in a situation to challenge myself with instruments I was not familiar,” Eckert said. “I had a vision of a guy playing a baritone horn, so I had to learn how to play it.”

Eckert traces the origins of the piece back to a day a couple years ago in Seattle, when he witnessed a group of people throwing stones across a lake. Eckert said he “was struck by the beauty of one of these stone throwers” — a mentally challenged boy whose approach to throwing stones differed from all of the others.

“He was in conference with those stones,” he said. “He was completely attentive to every aspect of the process: the shape of the stones he chose, the way he threw them. ... Everyone else had an agenda with them — a father and son were having a throwing competition ... (but) for him it wasn't about achievement or result, even though he was supposedly the least intelligent person out there.”

Eckert later realized that his favorite musicians shared the boy's process-oriented approach to their own craft, and the connection eventually formed the basis for “The Idiot Variations.”

For his latest show, the 43-year-old San Francisco resident — whose previous UI appearances include the Woodruff-directed “Pioneer” and “The Gardening of Thomas D.” — has abandoned the high-tech wizardry of past collaborator Paul Drescher, keeping amplification and stage lighting to a bare minimum.

“It's scaled down considerably in terms of production values,” Eckert said. “The entire show is lit by a single 500-watt lamp, and there are no more than one or two lighting changes at the most. ... I'm kind of calling it ‘garage opera.’”

While Eckert's work falls under the rubric of performance art for practical purposes, traditional labels can only give hints to the bold new directions he navigates as he moves away from conventional notions of the genre. And if anyone can figure it all out, it's the audiences in Iowa City, who Eckert calls “among the smartest I've encountered. They're actually a little brighter than the ones in San Francisco, I have to admit.”

Tickets for “The Idiot Variations” on Jan. 19 and 20 are $22 ($17.60 for UI students and senior citizens and $11 for people under 18). Entry to the Hancher Loft is through the stage door, near the auditorium's loading dock, on the parking lot side of the building.

CHARLES GRODIN TAKES ON NEW ROLE

‘Beethoven’ star inherits turn on late-night talk show circuit

Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK — You take a master of the put-on like Charles Grodin, who can string you along like wash flapping in the breeze ... what do you do with a chap like that if you're a li'l ol' cable network based in Fort Lee, N.J., with a nightly slot to fill?

If you're not too dumb, you put HIM on!

This, CNBC has done with the famously droll star of the “Beethoven” films and “Midnight Run,” now taking a hiatus from his movie career to host a talk show which began last week. Live from Fort Lee, “Charles Grodin” can be seen at 10 p.m. EST Monday through Friday.

“I would prefer to do this than to be a movie actor,” Grodin said during a recent debriefing at CNBC headquarters. “Counting the commute, now I've got a four-hour day.” He didn't say if CNBC picks up his mileage, but he sounded serious anyhow.

There was more to the story, of course. On Grodin's opening show, only hours before the slot's previous occupant, Tom Snyder, would begin his new talk show in the uptown neighborhood of CBS, Grodin told viewers he originally had planned to do a syndicated late-night hour — a demanding big-time project to go up against the likes of Jay Leno and David Letterman.

Everything changed when Letterman, alarmed at the news, plucked Snyder from CNBC and awarded him the coveted after-Dave berth, said Grodin.

Thus did everybody win: Snyder got what looks like a promotion;

Associated Press

Charles Grodin is the newest late-night talk show host, with his show airing on CNBC at 9 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Grodin inherited the easier, less-stressful CNBC hour that Letterman lured Snyder out of, and Letterman averted the threat of Grodin as a rival. “I'm sure he will deny it all,” Grodin noted.

How that Chuck Grodin carries on! Yet here's a yackkonteur who's sufficiently aboveboard that he confesses he's not always certain when he's serious and when he's not.

“I really do think about it,” he said. “But to tell you the truth, I'm really not sure.”

Imbued with this refreshing honesty, Grodin's show has a simple-as-pie format: a long interview segment, then a musical guest.

“It's supposed to be like a little dinner thing,” he said.

But it kicks off each night with Grodin doing his hangdog, slightly put-out brand of verbal riffing. It's spontaneous storytelling on the order of a Regis Philbin or, yes, that Snyder fellow — funny, freewheeling and sublime.

“I think I really solidified my intention to do that kind of thing on TV the night Chevy Chase premiered,” Grodin said. “You could switch channels and see Chevy, Jay and David all at the same time, and, for better or worse, they were tapping the same well. Which was sarcasm, really: ‘Hey, I see where President Clinton ...’”

“That can be funny, but it's not the only source of comedy.”

Another thing refreshing about Grodin, he seems not only genuinely pleased and grateful to be hosting this program, but — at a time when your own talk show is about as notable as having indoor plumbing — he seems downright humbled by his new opportunity. It's kind of sweet.

Meanwhile, his expectations aren't too terribly high. Indeed, as he spoke, he wondered if he'd last beyond the first week.

“What a misjudgment CNBC made!” said Grodin, stepping into the role of an aghast viewing public. “Did you see it? There were only four shows and they'll NEVER be rerun. They're being held as evidence in a lawsuit.”

Of course, Grodin has since confounded himself by staying on the air twice that long with no end in sight. But another concern plagues him — the public's deadly silence at the prospect of no more Charles Grodin films for the foreseeable future.

“I was waiting for an outcry,” Grodin said. “I expected pickets here around the building. I thought people would go, ‘No! He can't leave the movies! My God!’”
