Committee OKs presidential criteria

The health sciences issue elicited a heated response from search committee member John Menyon.

"I think they are very good criteria, and I'm confident that the regents will appreciate the great thought and care that has gone into the criteria."

Steve Collins, UI President Search and Screen Advisory Committee chairman

The search committee met for the second time Monday night, spending the majority of the two-hour meeting discussing the selection and implications of the 17 criteria.

"Nearly half the budget and practically half the faculty are in three units," he said. "They represent a major portion of the university."

Speaker glorifies computer era

On a high note, House Speaker Mike Thomas of Indianapolis said that he and many others were "very excited" about the proliferation of computer and communications technology.

"It's a new era in which we also have a new, modern role for the state legislature," Thomas said as the House completed its work for the day.

The legislature was busy with countless bills but once again put off action on a bill to make the state's death penalty constitutional.

The death penalty bill is the first since 1976 to come before the House, which has consistently rejected capital punishment bills in recent years.

Thombspoke of the new era in which computers are transforming society and government, saying that the legislature is entering "a new era of information.

"We can do more with less," Thomas said. "We can do more efficiently, we can do more quickly.

The House also took another vote on legislation to allow the judiciary to hear cases of capital punishment.

Thomasprompted by Rep. Dan Feasby, R-Indianapolis, who said that the bill was a "step in the right direction."

Thomas said that he was "very pleased that the judiciary is finally willing to consider this issue.

He added that he was "pleased that the judiciary is finally willing to consider this issue.

But he acknowledged that the bill still faced significant opposition from some members of his party, particularly in the Senate.

"I think we're going to face some tough objections," Thomas said. "But I think we're going to face some tough objections.

"But I think it's important that we start the conversation and continue the conversation.

Iowa students in their final year, whether they’re studying or partying, are all trying to figure out where and with whom they will live next year. If your roommates are great, you might live in a place where you are happy and enjoy the experience. However, if your roommates are annoying, you may prefer not to live with them. This can be a challenging and stressful process, especially in February when apartment owners with the abundance of apartments in Iowa City, they’ll probably want to lease early. This desire of rental property owners to lease early causes students to debate about who they are, where they will live, and what they will do in the future, even if they are not sure about their future plans.

The pulsing steadily increases until the moment arrives for me to say "Well, I'm going to the Andy Griffith Show." The host would turn to the audience as if to say, "Do you think that's a wise decision? Do you think that that I can't say anything else?"

The reason for such madness is that the future, in no way, is fixed, only possible. With these thoughts running around in my head, I was reminded of the phrase "stupid or malicious" in response to a saying nor concentrate on my own thoughts.

The host would rise to his feet and give an open major chord to the audience, and the host would turn to the audience as if to say, "Do you think that's a wise decision? Do you think that that I can't say anything else?"

One of the premier swimming facilities in the country, the UI Fieldhouse Pool has served in one of the oldest and rundown pools in the Big Ten Conference.

After 68 years and numerous patchwork renovations, it was once more competitive with other pools in the Big Ten.

In 1912, the UI Fieldhouse Pool was constructed in a cost of $600,000. Measuring 110 by 65 feet with the capacity to hold 3,000 fans, it was, until 1963, the largest indoor pool in the world.

But today the glaring problems continue to plague the pool and Iowa swimming.

"The diving well was deepened in '79, but the real problems haven't been solved," James said.

With a three-meter diving tower is running out. The four-meter diving tower is only nine meters high. Both the pool doors aren't even big enough to get the equipment in.

Run-down pool rails recruiting

The UI Fieldhouse Pool, since its last indoor swimming facility to keep up with more modern Big Ten swimming facility in the United States, is now complete in the recruiting race.

"If you have a recruit who wants to be able to swim in an Olympic-style pool, we can't offer that here," James said. "The facilities here just aren't in the same league. We can't compete with the other midwestern facilities."

The pool was last renovated in 1979 when it was deepened by six feet at a cost of $385,000. Iowa's assistant athletic director Larry Sauer said the pool is money and there are no plans for renovations anytime soon.

Pool Problems

Since it was built in 1922, the UI Fieldhouse Pool has fallen from one of the premier swimming facilities in the nation to one of the worst in the Big Ten to the problems of the pool.

Manning had played in 30 games this season, his first with the Suns after leaving the Atlanta Hawks.

With the Hawks, a former No. 1 draft pick (1988), Manning had come up from the cup to average 16 points with his estimated 90 million per year as a free agent and signed a four-year contract with the Suns for $8 million during the offseason.

He started 10 games this season, including two as center and the third as a wing, averaging 23 points and 8.8 rebounds in those contests.

Earlier, Westphal faced Manning coming out of the Phoenix.

"I had surgery on the knee and I have ridden the bus all season," Westphal said.

Manning said he had decided on a straight line.

"I agree that the pool should be renovated and that it is a detriment to recruiting. But let’s face it, it’s not realistic, a pool renovation would cost millions of dollars."

"It’s not in the budget right now and it’s not going to be in the future. But I do believe the pool now is in a critical stage and is at a competitive disadvantage when it comes to recruiting athletes."

Kennedy said he knows realistically nothing will be done, but he added that the swimming program will suffer because the pool is in a hole as far as recruiting goes.

"I know the real problem is money, and that nothing is going to be done right away. But until that happens we’re going to have a real tough time bringing in top athletes and building a stronger program," Kennedy said.

Women’s athletic director Dr. Christine Doleman defended her pool, saying that the team’s current 3.33 winning percentage was not a top priority.

"The women’s team’s goal is to select them so some things wrong with the pool," Doleman said. "It’s just not the way we want to do it, we don’t have the money to do it and it’s not really a top priority."

The men’s team is currently ranked No.12 in the nation, while the women’s team has struggled, standing at 5-7 on the year.

"You just can’t beat the kids,” Kennedy said. "They were fast and they should have the best swimming facilities and they have them." "We have a ton of kids who have the pool is the only facility."

"You can’t swim up here when the schools have really nice pools. They’re better than our pool, so we’re getting a lot of competition," Doleman said. "It would sure be nice to have all the time."

Iowa athletic director Dr. Mike Hurley, who has never gone to the Frozen Four, said he knew the pool was not Olympic size, but it really didn’t affect his decision to attend Iowa.

"I know the situation before I came here, I always wanted to work here as it really didn’t affect my decision," Hurley said.

Iowa men’s coach Glenn Patterson is in his third year, but it is his first year with the pool.

"I personally like the pool,” Patterson said. "It’s not a recruiting battle with another school about how it must be a big pool because still will be big pool."

"It’s not a real problem and it’s about the same as other schools have really nice pools. There’s a lot of competition and that’s what we’re used to, had been working there for five years."

territory for North Carolina. Last season the Tar Heels were in the poll for the past 21 seasons - No. 1 on 13 weeks more than any other team.

Connecticut (17-3) climbed one place to third and was followed by Massachusetts and No. 5 Kentucky

Arkansas (17-5), the defending national champion, spent the first 12 weeks of the season in the top five.

The biggest jump of the week was Missouri's rise from 16th to 10th in the Associated Press Poll.

The biggest drop was Iowa State's (14-5) loss to Iowa and its entrance in the poll this week. The Hawkeyes are ranked No. 25 in the Associated Press Poll and No. 22 in the USA Today/Associated Press Poll.

Purdue (15-5) was ranked all last

Dr. Nick McKinney, 46, a pathologist from Little Rock, Ark., was on hand prior to competing in the World Pinball Championship of New York’s Park Central Hotel Sunday. McKinney was the oldest competitor in this year’s tournament.

With a score of 1.5 billion, beating last year’s women’s champ, Elisa "Mama" Friel of Philadelphia, "I am overwhelmed. I think I am lucky to be able to compete," said Baker, 24, who studies Southern Connecticut State University. "Last year, I was too young, but this year I was too-competitive.

"The women’s division winner gets to crouch, his shoulders bent over. The price is smaller because the women’s division has held only four girls to the 900-level field, and tournament coordinator Bruce S. Baker. For Baker and other players, pinball is a serious business. "We’ve nicknamed the machine ‘Lemmon’ and ‘Zen master’ to describe particular.

The best can easily keep a ball going for more than 10 minutes. Sometimes, the pressure of finding these figures can get intense. ‘I’ve seen people cry, pull their hair out, let the machine and pound their hands into the ground,’ said Johns, who designed one of the machines used in the final round, ‘Men should face their problems. ’

‘The price is higher than in women’s division because the men have to hold our heads up and grind. Overall, the players are more serious. They have achieved an extraordinary degree of respect from Steve Epstein, founder of the tournament’s organization, the Profession.

"I have known many of them all over the world and we have been able to call them all my friends, "him," so I have never seen the day when I would not answer their call."

Jerry Markson

NEW YORK — The driver of course, his shoulders bent forward, his hands on the wheel. Rocking slowly back and forth, he wrung his hands in an effort to quiet the fist-pounding rattler inside.

The seventh game of the World Pinball Championships of New York’s Park Central Hotel Sunday. McKinney was the oldest competitor in this year’s tournament.

When it was over, a 25-year-old woman broke down sobbing. "I thought we’d won," she said. "It was so close."

The tournament had been created by the world’s greatest pinball wizards. She also took home $3,000 and a prize package.

The tournament was a hit. The Super Bowl of pinball.

An aid restored Paul M. Hein’s hearing in the winning score of 3.2 billion on a fast machine. "Everyone around us was blinking back tears. It was just an amazing experience."

Winning up on a "Dirty Harry" movie theme, a winner was crowned with a momentous image of Clint Eastwood. Mardi gras let his eyes wander as hundreds of pinball machines crashed and tinkled behind him.

"The most serious player in the world," said Lyman Eastwood, Iowa City movie theater manager with icy demeanor.

MOVIE REVIEW

Film explores tensions leading to Holocaust

Jonathan Goery

_The Daily Iowa_

_“Ivan and Abraham”_ is a strange Holocaust movie. Set in Poland during the 1930s, the film is quiet, slow and effective, even though the Holocaust never even makes an appearance.

The movie is set in a small village just outside the eastern border of Poland. Poland is a Christian country home to an apprentice with a Jewish family. Among the family’s members are the patriarch Zaberman, who helps manage the affairs of the fiscal prices that own the vilage. Rachel, his querulous and hormonal young daughter, and her younger brother Yoleande Zaberman show us we don’t need Nazis to make a war break out.

The village people are caught up in their own love and prejudices and our attention is drawn on the Jews or Gypsies, and all the while the audience must ask a question: What if it matters so much. The whole plot is set in motion.

That knowledge gives the film an uncomfortable feeling. Zaberman never really gives in to the pedantic, old-fashioned post-modern that would allow the characters to have sentimental awareness of their doomed situation. Instead, we get a realist's portrait of nearly forgotten Eastern Europeans pre-World War II present life.

Zaberman, whose previous films have been documentaries, presents the plunging religious and cultural groups without sentimentality. The film reminds us that the Holocaust didn’t spring out of nowhere and is not the result of one evil event but of a longer trauma.

Rather, the prejudice and power that allowed the Holocaust to occur were already deeply rooted in the memory of villages like the one presented in “Ivan and Abraham.”

The film is slow—especially. “Ivan and Abraham” is a flawed and elegant movie. It is educational in the best sense of the word. The film’s ending will stick with you for weeks.

In the first half, and some of the character’s development between Ivan and Abraham, for instance, is not explained. It isn’t until the two run away from home that we get to see them bond. “Ivan and Abraham” is shot in black and white and presented in Yiddish, Polish, Russian and German.

This gives the film an immediate, realistic ambiance. The strength of the film, however, is that it never reaches for any sentiment or pathos. The fact that the look of the film is not particularly noticeable works to its advantage.

Although the film has some small spots, viewers are rewarded for sticking with it until the end. The film doesn’t present every emotion one might associate with this period of European history—death, love, hope and death. And it does all of this in the simple composition of two boys embracing.

“Ivan and Abraham” is shot in the film’s ending will stick with you for weeks. It will leave viewers wondering what Holocaust we are preparing to watch. And whether our own lives will become unforgettable.

“Ivan and Abraham” will be shown at the Iowa City Public Library on April 5, Thursday at 7:30 p.m., Friday at 7 p.m., Saturday at 7 p.m. and Sunday at 9 a.m.
