Clinton out; Congress at bat

Republicans cry foul over president's baseball proposal

Ron Blum
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said Tuesday night he will ask Congress to pass emergency legislation sending the 6-month-old baseball strike to binding arbitration.

"We're going to send it up tomorrow, and I'd like to have it considered expeditiously," Clinton said at a hastily called news conference after participating in hours of behind-closed-doors negotiations at the White House.

Clinton said he had been optimistic earlier in the evening that he might be able to announce a settlement, or at least steps toward one, that would assure "that baseball was coming back in 1995."

"Unfortunately, the parties have not reached agreement. The American people are the real losers," he said. "Clearly, they are not capable of settling this strike without an umpire. The only way to do this appears to be for Congress to step up to the plate and pass the legislation."

Earlier Tuesday, Republican leaders on Capitol Hill discouraged Clinton from turning to Congress for a solution. And after hearing the president's plan, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole and House Speaker Newt Gingrich said they were still reluctant to step into the problem.

"The president has apparently thrown the ball into Congress' court. We maintain our view that Congress is ill-suited to resolving private labor disputes," Dole and Gingrich said in a joint statement.

Both Republicans said they wanted to hear personally from mediator W.J. Utery why the talks broke down.

"I know that people in Congress say they have other pressing business, and they certainly do," Clinton said. "I regret very much having to send this legislation there, but spring training is just nine days away, and I think many Americans consider this press-

Coralville man sues bar, alleged assailants

A Coralville man who was assaulted last July outside the Union Bar & Grill, 121 E. College St., filed suit Tuesday against the bar and the two Cedar Rapids men he claims attacked him.

Time out

With that extra quarter forgotten, the time on the meter near this Iowa City vehicle expired as the driver was engaged in issuing citations to other illegally parked vehicles Monday afternoon.

Under Iowa City parking codes, commercial vehicles are allowed 15 minutes of free parking to load and unload their cargo. According to Parking Systems manager Bill Dollman, this courtesy does not extend to city vehicles.

He said when the driver of a city vehicle stops to issue parking citations, the vehicle must have a flashing warning light (other than hazard lights) on and be parked in a manner that does not obstruct traffic or business. Metered parking is off-limits unless other options are unavailable.

Dollman said he would investigate this particular incident and the policies concerning parking city vehicles in commercial zones.

Charges fly on pick for Board of Health

After resigning from a prominent UI committee in 1990 while facing accusations of being homophobic, Sharlene Lenhart is experiencing more heat because of her recent appointment to the Johnson County Board of Health.

Despite standing allegations that Lenhart made comments against homosexuals, her board duties will include allocating funds for a number of local organizations like the Iowa Center for AIDS Resources and Education.

Richard Shannon, a member of the gay and lesbian community in Iowa City, expressed concern over the Johnson County Board of Supervisors' Dec. 29 appointment of Lenhart at Tuesday's informal board meeting.

Shannon told the supervisors he was worried they were not taking seriously the implications of Lenhart's alleged statements against homosexuals.

"We are concerned with the actual appointment itself as well as with the Board of Supervisors, and what we see was a lack of understanding and a lack of concern for the gay and lesbian community in Iowa City," Shannon said.

The Board of Health is comprised of five members who serve three-year terms. Lenhart was the only appointee in December.

"We all say things that get quoted, and we wish we hadn't said them, but I really don't believe she Judge Lance Ito dismissed a 63-year-old white female juror who has been treated for arthritis by the same doctor as O.J. Simpson. She was replaced by a 54-year-old black man.

Several of Ronald Goldman's co-workers from Mezzaluna restaurant testified, detailing the dinner Nicole Brown Simpson shared with her family the night of the murders.

Defense attorney Carl Douglas said prosecutors lagged in disclosing a home video which showed Simpson laughing and smiling outside his daughter's dance recital the day of the murders.

It's a way of life for some UI students who are under 21 and willing to face hefty fines and time in jail for a few beers.

fiscates are found during routine bar checks. Last weekend, 36 minors were issued tickets for possession of alcohol under the legal age.

GUIDELINES CALLED TOO HIGH

Report: U.S. weight standards hazardous

Brenda Coleman
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Middle-aged women should weigh far less than most people think and less than the government recommends in order to have healthy hearts, Harvard researchers said.

New findings from a study of more than 115,000 nurses strongly indicate that U.S. weight guidelines are too lax and encourage obesity in both men and women, the researchers said.

"We found that about 40 percent of all heart attacks that occur in middle-aged women are due to overweight," said Dr. JoAnn Manson, co-director of women's health at Harvard-affiliated Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. She said similar results are found in men.

The study showed that women of average weight had about a 50 percent higher risk of heart attack than women who were 15 percent less than average U.S. weights.

And women who gained 10 or fewer pounds in early to middle adulthood had the lowest risk of heart attacks, the researchers reported in the Feb. 1 issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

For instance, a 5-foot-6-inch woman had the lowest risk if she weighed less than 130 pounds. At the same height, a weight of 130 to 142 pounds carried a 20 percent higher risk. At 142 to 155 pounds, it was 50 percent higher; at 155 to 180 pounds, it was double; and at more than 180 pounds, it was 3 1/2 times higher than for the 130-pound woman.

"I don't want to be scaring people with these findings, but we have been overly complacent about obesity and weight gain in adults," Manson said by telephone Monday.

The federal government in 1990 revised its guidelines upward for desirable weights, saying Americans over age 35 could be significantly heavier than under 1985 guidelines.

The 1990 revisions were based on life insurance data that failed to account for the fact that many lean people were smokers or had life-shortening illnesses, Manson said.

PROPOSITION 187 PROTESTED

Socialists speak out against California law

Tom Schoenberg
The Daily Iowan

About 20 members of the Iowa International Socialist Organization braved a wind chill factor of minus 20 degrees Tuesday to gather on the Pentacrest to protest California's Proposition 187, which they deemed as "racist legislation."

"Hey, hey, ho, ho, racist laws have got to go," the IISO members chanted as they walked in a circle to keep warm.

Proposition 187, a California law that denies health care and education to illegal immigrants, was passed by voters Nov. 8. The law has drawn staunch criticism and heated protests on college campuses nationwide.

"We're here to support the students across the country involved in campaigns against Proposition 187," said Donna Flayhan, IISO member and UI rhetoric Teaching Assistant. "Since Proposition 187 is in California and not here, we want to show our solidarity with all those who oppose racist opposition."

Flayhan said the law is a "vile form of racist scapegoating" intended to blame immigrants for many of the problems

Social scene flourishes in high-school halls

Prasanti Kantamneni
The Daily Iowan

At 7:15 a.m., the sound of footsteps bounced off the hallway walls as students slowly trickled into West High School for another day of education.

Each day, nearly 1,200 high-school students and teachers walk, run and trudge through the hallways of West

DAY IN THE LIFE

High, 2901 Melrose Ave., to get to classes and lockers. The hallways, like most other high-school corridors, are lined with beige lockers, bulletin boards, posters and trophy cases.

However, the West High halls are not just a means of travel from one class to the next. For many high-school students, the hallways are the place to hear all the gossip about who's going out with whom and who did what the night before.

Although West High's doors open early, most students came in after 7:30 a.m. Lockers opened and closed as students hung up their coats, threw in their books and prepared for their first class of the new day.

Small circles of students, sitting and standing, gathered at lockers in the designated 10th-grade hallway. West High students were seen conversing and/or copying homework.

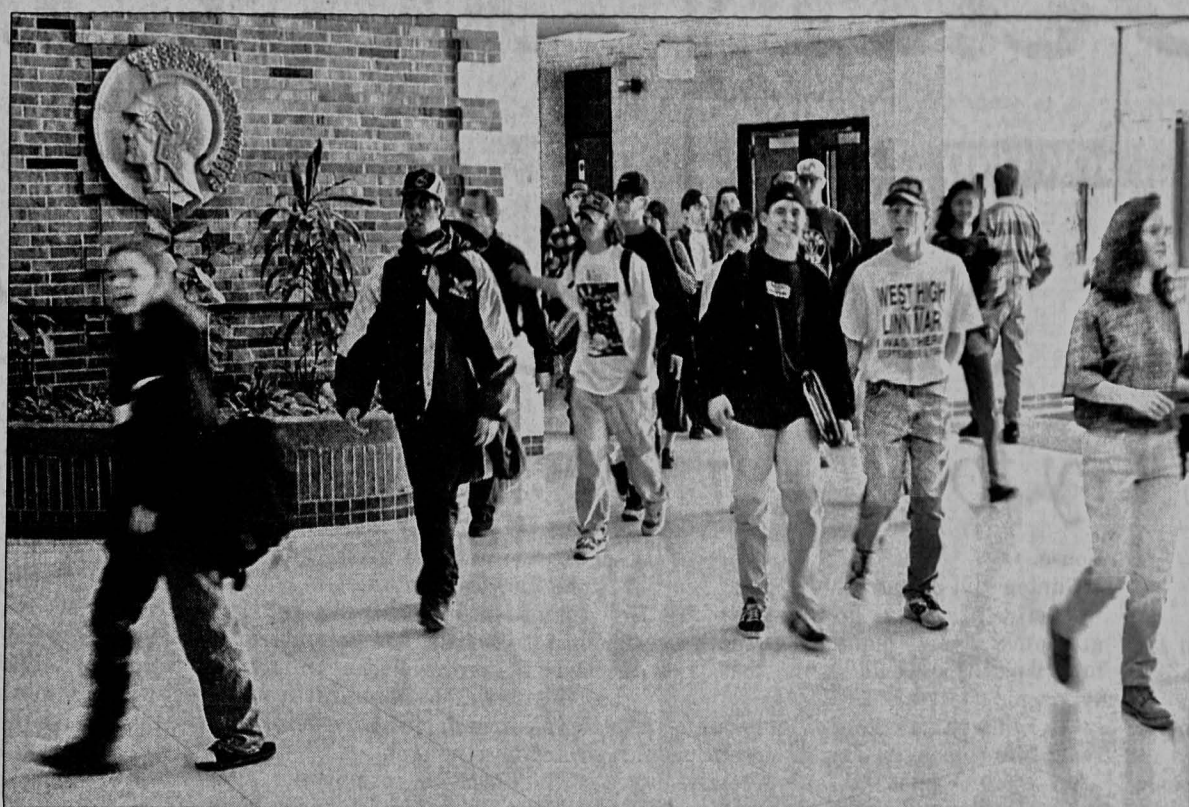

"Do you have your math homework done?"

"I heard the greatest pickup line last night. You say, 'Can I have breakfast with you?' And if the girl says yes, you say, 'Do you want me to pick you up or nudge you?'"

"Where did you get those pants?" As more students gathered in the hallways, conversations began to fly. Time passed quickly as students talked, laughed, copied homework, held hands and even smooched.

At 8:01 a.m., two groups of male students prepared to fight by a line of lockers located near the teachers' lounge. Other students on their way to class slowed down and gathered around them.

Michael Jackson's "Billie Jean"

Carly Delso-Saavedra/The Daily Iowan

Whether rushing off to lunch or sprinting madly to their lockers in the sophomore hallway, these West High students comprise of a wide variety of people, cultures and backgrounds that on occasion make for some wild and interesting interaction in the few minutes they're let loose to wander.

blared out of one group member's book bag. As he danced, other members of the two groups began yelling at each other.

"You're talkin' a big game," one male said. "Let's just have it out right now, right here."

"I want to take it outside," said a student from the opposing side.

As the two students continued to argue over whether they should fight in school or outside, other group members began to voice their opinions on where the fight should take place.

"If you're so tough, then why can't you just fight here?" one student asked. "Who's gonna care if you have it here or outside? What's the difference?"

Soon the crowd of students and the Michael Jackson music caught the attention of a passing West High teacher. The teacher yelled at the two groups to quit arguing and then stepped in to break up the argument. Members of the two arguing groups and other student spectators hesitantly left the site and headed back to their clusters, lockers and classes.

At 8:05 a.m., the first bell rang. Students slowly began to disperse from their circles and gatherings. Lockers closed, and students started heading for class. As the clock quickly approached 8:10 a.m. — when the tardy bell rings — students rushed to their first classes, emptying the hallways.

After the tardy bell rang, class doors shut and teachers could be heard from behind closed doors. Through windows in the doors, students could be seen seated at desks while teachers lectured in front.

During class time the hallways were barren. Only a handful of students getting drinks from the water fountain and visiting the rest rooms roamed the halls.

At 9:03 a.m., the bell ending first period sounded, and students poured out of the classrooms. Lockers slammed open and close as students dashed to their next class.

During the time between classes, students conversed about the fight that almost took place earlier in the day.

"That's where Randy and those guys were," said one male in a tan flannel shirt as he and his friend passed the site of the argument.

Throughout the school day, tired, bored, alert and panicked students could be seen either rushing to class or just waiting for the day to end.

Finally, at 3:21 p.m., the last bell rang. Students swamped the hallways once again and prepared to go home or to after-school practices.

Breeders' guitarist denies heroin allegation

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Kelley Deal, guitarist for the alternative rock group The Breeders, pleaded innocent Tuesday to drug charges.

Deal, 33, was arraigned on charges of signing for a package that contained four grams of heroin and was released on her own recognizance. She faces up to 18 months in prison and a $2,500 fine if convicted.

She and her twin sister, Kim, started The Breeders in 1990. The band hit the Top 40 with the single "Cannonball."

Actor backs clubhouse for cancer patients

HUNTER, N.Y. (AP) — Mandy Patinkin, who lost his father to pancreatic cancer, understands how important it is for cancer patients and their families to have a place to unwind.

So Patinkin, star of the CBS series "Chicago Hope," is throwing his support behind a Catskills benefit Saturday for Gilda's Club, a cancer support group named after the late comedian Gilda Radner.

The organization offers a clubhouse in New York City where cancer patients and their families can relax free of charge.

"It's a place for people to come who are part of a club of which they don't want to be a member," said Patinkin, who sits on the club's board but won't be able to attend the celebrity benefit at Hunter Mountain.

"I realize the desperate need a lot of people have to share their experiences," he said in a phone interview Monday from Los Angeles.

Radner, an original cast member of "Saturday Night Live," died of ovarian cancer in 1989. The club was founded by her husband, actor Gene Wilder.

New citizen awaits speedy passage through customs

GARDINER, N.Y. (AP) — Concert pianist Vladimir Feltsman is looking forward to shorter customs lines now that he's become a U.S. citizen.

The 43-year-old Feltsman, who performs around the world and still visits his parents in Russia, was naturalized on Jan. 27.

A resident of Gardiner, about 65 miles north of New York City, Feltsman said his new status will make traveling abroad easier. He teaches at the State University of New York in nearby New Paltz.

"Without needing my old visa, at least the lines at the airport will be a lot shorter," he said.

Former Gov. Cuomo takes firm position

NEW YORK (AP) — Mario Cuomo, fresh from his co-starring role as a pitchman for Frito-Lay, has settled on a new job.

The former governor and might-have-been candidate for the Oval Office and the U.S. Supreme Court has gone back to law. He joined Willkie Farr & Gallagher as a partner, effective Monday.

"I look forward to practicing law in an environment that will present many exceptional professional challenges and that will allow me to use all I have learned about life and the law in my public and private careers," Cuomo said in a statement released by the firm Tuesday.

Cuomo, who lost his bid in November for a fourth term as governor, twice toyed with running for president and turned down President Clinton's offer for a Supreme Court post.

Last month, he appeared with former Texas Gov. Ann Richards in a humorous commercial for Doritos during the Super Bowl.

Select few procure Pearl Jam tickets

Only members of the Pearl Jam fan club received the coveted

Dozens of disappointed Pearl Jam die-hards were turned away Monday from Moore Theater in downtown Seattle, the rock group's hometown.

Pearl Jam has been in a protracted legal battle with Ticket-Master over the fees it charges fans who buy concert tickets, and the group has not performed publicly for more than a year. The group is gearing up for an overseas tour and may schedule an American tour this summer.

POSITIVE MEDIA IMAGES URGED

Panel calls for action to dispel black myths

Sheba Wheeler
The Daily Iowan

A panel of five African-American men from the UI said at a forum that education, a strong self-concept and motivation are tools for dispelling misconceptions that black men are "destructive and lazy."

About 45 to 50 people attended the forum titled "Dispelling the Myths ... Images of African-American Males" Tuesday night in the Pappajohn Business Administration Building. It biased myths about African-American men, audience members asked them what could be done to dispel the myths.

Several panelists voiced dissatisfaction with negative media portrayals of black men.

"Every time a black person commits a crime, you see them on the TV or on the front page of newspapers," Coleman said. "What type of image is this constructing when those of middle-town Iowa find these images in their homes?"

Crank said the only way African-Americans could successfully combat portrayals that depict black men as "not mature or responsible" was to act as positive role models.

"Let these brothers see you doing things within your communities instead of putting a bug in their ear," he said. "Once you get your degrees, go back to your communities and help end the hopelessness many blacks are feeling."

The discussion quickly moved from challenging biased portrayals to developing economic stability for struggling minorities. The panel also discussed the increasing role of minorities in leadership positions within society.

If African-Americans are continually portrayed as violent people in American society, then many may believe they must become like those violent images, Harris said.

"We need to develop at a grassroots level that entails education and revamping our psyche from those images that affect us," he said.

One audience member wondered what impact the forum would have.

"If you leave here with nothing than a better understanding of yourself and something more to possibly build on, then this has been an accomplishment," Crank said.

Group denied funds by UISG

Sara Teasdale
The Daily Iowan

At least one UI student group will not receive initial funding from UI Student Government because they missed a Feb. 3 application deadline and did not attend budgeting workshops.

In a UISG meeting Tuesday night, Tim Zuck, treasurer of the Iowa American Student Dental Association, said his group did not receive notification of workshop dates and application deadlines for Class I and II student groups.

He asked the UISG to consider an appeal from the dental association that would grant his group a week extension to watch the videotape which explains the application process and to fill out the request form.

However, his appeal to the UISG failed.

"It's disappointing that this didn't pass," Zuck said. "We are a worthy organization, and we do a lot of great things. It's unfortunate. I don't feel we were properly notified."

However, Student Assembly Budgeting and Auditing Committee members said they sent more than 300 letters to UI student organizations announcing when applications were due for funding consideration. Groups were also required to attend the budgeting workshop to learn how to fill out the budget form.

Budgeting committee members said the budgeting workshops were also advertised in The Daily Iowan for five days, and two Saturday makeup sessions were added in case organization members could not attend the workshops during the week. However, Zuck said he reads the paper regularly and did not see the advertisement.

The dental association and other Class I and II student groups which missed the Feb. 3 deadline can apply for supplemental funding from UISG in the fall.

Rakhi Roy, executive officer for the Undergraduate Collegiate Senate, said the UISG made the right choice in not making an exception for the dental association.

"I was against them being allowed to submit their budget request," she said. "Not because the committee doesn't want to give out funding, but because a precedent was established last year that must be followed. If we start making exceptions, then where do we draw the line? I really encourage them to apply for supplemental funding."

The application deadline for Class III student group funding is Friday.

I.C. Council pumps money into festivals

Sara Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

Investments in Iowa City's downtown area were a high priority for the Iowa City City Council Tuesday night.

The City Council allotted $5,000 for both the arts and jazz festivals held downtown during a budget meeting for the 1996 fiscal year. The City Council also consented to the addition of five or more additional police officers, some of whom will be assigned to patrol the downtown area.

Councilor Jim Throgmorton said the Jazz Festival brings more than just money from the people who come to Iowa City for the event.

"The city as a whole profits from it," he said. "It provides a sense of community, and we should be willing to put some money into it."

The Arts Festival will not receive its money until the 1996 festival, but the Jazz Festival will receive money this summer because it is in the 1996 fiscal year, which begins July 1.

A $1 million federal grant, intended to initiate "community-policing programs" around the country, brought up the subject of adding officers to the Iowa City police force. The grant could supply the salaries of eight officers for three years.

The councilors agreed the addition of officers was necessary and that this grant was a good opportunity to add to the force, but some were concerned about how to pay the additional officers after the three years.

The council settled on five additional officers with the possibility of adding more.

In other budget business, Kubby proposed a $1,000 pay raise for each of the seven councilors. The raise would begin after the next City Council elections because the council cannot give itself a raise. This would increase each councilor's pay to $6,012.80 per year.

Senate OKs new clinical faculty posts

Patricia Harris
The Daily Iowan

The UI Faculty Senate approved a plan Tuesday that would provide for the hiring of clinical-track faculty members and give them the opportunity for advancement at the UI.

Faculty Senate President Richard Hurtig, a UI associate professor with the Department of Speech Pathology and Audiology, said clinical faculty members are hired to perform primarily service duties — such as treating patients — and are usually employed by medical schools and medical programs.

The plan does not require the hiring of clinical faculty; it only allows for hiring if necessary.

Hurtig said the clinical faculty could be important additions to the UI because they would take over some important clinical duties from physicians who are also full-time professors and researchers.

Tenure-track faculty are required to perform three duties: teaching, research and service.

The clinical-track faculty would be very different from the tenure-track faculty, Hurtig said.

"The primary reason for the hiring of clinical-track faculty members is to provide patient care," he said. "Incidental to it, medical students and interns work with them."

The Faculty Senate debated the role of clinical faculty and the possible abuses of the new positions by faculty members who are unable to get tenure. However, Hurtig said nontenured faculty members cannot use the clinical track as a backup to having tenure.

"It won't be the case that someone who can't get tenure gets dumped into this," he said.

The new track of UI faculty members will impact the UI College of Medicine in two ways, said Susan Johnson, acting associate dean for medicine administration.

"I think for us the impact is twofold. We will be needing to provide care to more people in the clinics, and we will need the clinical-track faculty members to staff these clinics," she said.

Medical students will benefit from the new faculty members because of lower student-faculty ratios, Johnson said.

"We're going to be changing the way that we educate medical students. We're changing to a more impatient way of educating our students," she said.

Nursing day to examine morals

Michele Kueter
The Daily Iowan

Ethical issues in health care, such as dealing with abuse of the elderly, will be discussed during Progressive Nursing Day, from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. today in the Main Ballroom of the Union.

Jean Reese, UI associate professor of nursing and co-adviser of Progressive Nursing Day, said the conference, which will break into sessions in the afternoon, is open to nursing students from across the state to professional nurses who are continuing their education.

"(The conference) exposes the students to in-depth content in a specific area and allows them to hear from experts they're not normally exposed to," Reese said.

Dr. Kay Weiler, UI assistant professor of nursing, stressed the importance of ethics in the health-care professions.

"I think they permeate the whole nursing profession and decisions that are made in providing nursing care," she said. "They impact how we define problems, how we perceive them and how we resolve them."

Weiler will give a speech on ethical issues that can evolve into legal issues. She will use as an example teen-age mothers who have limited resources.

Another scenario Weiler will discuss is one of an elderly person who is losing his or her decision-making ability. Weiler said the issue that comes up is the question of when a legal substitute who would make decisions for the elderly person should be introduced.

Weiler will also discuss abuse of the elderly and when nurses should intervene.

Dr. Robert Weir, UI professor of pediatrics and medical ethics, will also speak.

"I'm going to be talking about ethical issues in genetics research — in particular, the issue of informed consent in genetics research for people who participate in such research," he said.

Also speaking will be Dr. M. Patricia Donahue, professor of nursing, and Lou Ann Montgomery, clinical nurse specialist in the pediatrics / obstetrics and gynecology nursing division of the UI Hospitals and Clinics.

Keynote speaker Dr. Amy Hadad, professor of nursing and assistant dean of the School of Pharmacy and Allied Health Professionals at Creighton University in Omaha, Neb., will discuss the challenges and resolution of ethical issues.

Reese said she expects a turnout of about 300 people.

"It's really a big event for students," she said. "It's usually well-attended."

Reese said the conference will also feature a job fair where recruiters will be available to answer questions and distribute information.

The conference is sponsored by the UI Association of Nursing Students and the Gamma Chapter of Sigma Theta Tau International, an honor society for nursing students.

Death penalty bill overcomes 1st test

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — The drive to end Iowa's 30-year ban on capital punishment cleared its first legislative hurdle Tuesday, getting approval from a House subcommittee.

Both sides in the debate said they were trying to protect human life.

"Iowa is overdue for a death penalty," said Rep. David Millage, R-Bettendorf. He said there is overwhelming public support for the death penalty.

"I think they have made a moral judgment in their support of the death sentence," Millage said.

"The taking of human life is wrong," said Rep. Jack Holveck, D-Des Moines. "If it's wrong to take the life of a fetus, it's wrong to take the life of an adult human."

"It's a sad day and a dark day for Iowa," said Holveck.

After arguing for weeks, a House subcommittee approved its version of a death sentence on a 3-2 vote, sending it to the House Judiciary Committee, which will begin debate today.

The proposal is broader than the death sentence proposed by Gov. Terry Branstad. Branstad proposes a death sentence in cases of multiple violent felonies, such as when a rapist kills his victim.

The bill approved Tuesday adds the killing of a child under 12, killing of witnesses and killing of some law enforcement officials, such as prison guards and judges.

It spells out a two-step process, with a trial first on the crimes and then a separate proceeding where a jury would have the option of choosing a death sentence or a life term in prison without parole.

Rep. Minnette Doderer, D-Iowa City, is one of two legislators who were members of the Legislature in 1965 when it repealed the death sentence. She said legislators are being stampeded into a simplistic answer to public fears of violent crime.

"The death penalty is not a cure for what is ailing us," said Doderer. "It is not a solution."

Rep. Steve Grubbs, R-Davenport, who headed the subcommittee that approved the bill Tuesday, acknowledged broad public support for the death sentence but said there are other reasons for backing capital punishment.

"I don't seek the death penalty because it's a deterrent. It may be, it may not be," said Grubbs. "People have lost faith in the criminal justice system because they don't see criminals balancing out the scales of justice."

"Most people I've talked to feel like if you're going to murder someone, you've got to balance those scales with your own life," Grubbs said.

Tuesday's vote came after two high-profile public hearings where death penalty foes and backers clashed. It also came as mainline churches were beginning an intense lobbying campaign to head off capital punishment.

The subcommittee waded through amendments proposed to restrict any death penalty and rejected all of them on 3-2 votes.

GOVERNOR DISPUTES CHURCH LEADERS

Branstad feels most support proposal

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Gov. Terry Branstad said Tuesday that church leaders who are out of touch and "liberal lawyers" are the ones opposing the death penalty.

At his weekly news conference, Branstad said death penalty opponents are "very well-financed, have a lot of money, a lot of expensive lawyers on their side" but don't represent the views of "the average blue-collar working family."

Branstad has asked the Legislature for a death penalty for very limited circumstances, but his proposal faces a tough fight in the Legislature, particularly in the Senate.

Mainline church leaders are leading the opposition. Legislators report they are being flooded with mail from religious groups and that is swaying some who are wavering.

Branstad said those church leaders are out of touch.

"You talk to the preachers who are against it, but you talk to their congregations and you find out they're for it," Branstad said. "Their leadership is all against it, but their congregations aren't."

Included in the church-based opposition is the Roman Catholic Church, of which Branstad is a member.

The governor conceded "the hierarchy of the Catholic Church" opposes his death sentence proposal. "I respect the opinions of all those people," Branstad said.

"I disagree on this issue," he said.

Mississippi House passes bill permitting corporal punishment

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — When it comes to punishing scofflaws from graffiti artists to petty thieves, some lawmakers think the best idea is a good old-fashioned spanking.

Of several states that have considered the idea, Mississippi has gone the furthest. The state House adopted a bill Monday that would allow judges to order paddlings instead of prison sentences.

The legislation does not spell out how, when, where or by whom the punishment would be administered. It would not apply to the most serious crimes, like murder or rape.

Opponents believe it is more — unconstitutionally cruel, humiliating and uncomfortably reminiscent of the whippings doled out to slaves and the beatings endured by civil rights demonstrators.

Wife claims man fired upon White House to get help

WASHINGTON (AP) — The wife of Francisco Martin Duran, the man charged with attempting to assassinate President Clinton, said in a television interview Tuesday that Duran's shots at the White House were a cry for help.

"He was not shooting at the president but at the White House for what it represents, which is the government," Ingrid Duran said on "A Current Affair."

"It is my belief that he was sending a cry for help. A man who has been railroaded through the military justice system, his career taken away from him, and nobody wants to help him or he's not sure how to ask for help," she said.

Bosnian food plight turns 'critical' due to Serb barriers

Liam McDowall
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Tens of thousands of civilians are increasingly short of food in northwestern Bosnia, U.N. officials said Tuesday, because Serb allies are blocking aid convoys.

A spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees played down Bosnian government reports that people are starving in the Bihac pocket. "We would not talk about starvation at the moment," Kris Janowski said.

But food shortages are getting worse for the 180,000 people in the region. The 340 tons of food the agency was able to deliver in January "falls very short" of the 2,100 tons needed a month, Janowski said. "The food situation in Bihac is critical," said Alemka Lisinski, another representative for the U.N. aid agency. "At the moment, only the hospital and cases of utmost priority are being given food."

Food shipments into Bihac are being restricted by Croatian Serbs and renegade Bosnian Muslims who surround the area and clash with government forces. Bosnian Serbs and the Muslim-led government signed the latest truce of the 34-month-old war, but Serbs from Croatia and the rebel Muslims did not.

About 100 people protested outside the offices of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Bihac on Monday. "Some of them said they haven't eaten for days," Lisinski said.

Local officials did not release their last food stocks from warehouses because they were afraid of causing a riot, U.N. officials said.

Ron Redmond, an agency spokesman in Geneva, said the United Nations had considered air drops of food but abandoned the idea for fear the planes would be shot down.

Train attack victim called timorous

Pat Milton
Associated Press

MINEOLA, N.Y. — The defendant in the Long Island Rail Road massacre on Monday tried to portray one of the survivors as a coward who used another passenger as a shield.

John Aspel, a father of two from Hicksville, was grilled for 45 minutes about what happened on Dec. 7, 1993 — the evening he was shot three times while crouched with a stranger beneath their seats on the train.

Six people were killed before the shooting stopped; Aspel and the stranger, Elizabeth Aviles, were among 19 passengers wounded. Aviles was struck by a bullet that apparently glanced off Aspel first.

"Do you remember pulling the lady down on top of you to protect yourself?" defendant Colin Ferguson, acting as his own attorney, asked Aspel during cross-examination.

"I remember getting on the floor," replied Aspel. He and Aviles both testified that they clutched each other and ducked beneath the seats in an effort to hide from the gunman.

ITO BANS ANGEL PIN

Attorneys retrace night of homicides

Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Prosecutors in the O.J. Simpson case Tuesday laid out a time line for murder centered around the victims' final steps and a dog's "plaintive wail" in the middle of the night.

Pablo Fenjves, whose home is across an alley from Nicole Brown Simpson's, testified that about 10 or 15 minutes into the 10 o'clock news on June 12, he heard "a very distinctive barking" coming from the area of Brown Simpson's home.

"It was at a significant pitch, and as you may recall, I described it at the time as a plaintive wail," said Fenjves.

Prosecutors contend that Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman were slashed to death about 10:15 p.m. outside her condo and that the barking came from Brown Simpson's Akita, which left bloody paw prints around the murder scene.

With large color photos of the victims' faces displayed on a courtroom easel, the jury also heard testimony from employees at Mezzaluna, where Goldman worked as a waiter and where Brown Simpson ate her final meal hours before her slayings.

Earlier in the day Tuesday, another juror in the case was replaced. And the day ended with a bitter argument between Prosecutor Marcia Clark and defense attorney Johnnie Cochran Jr. over a small angel pin the prosecutor had on her lapel.

Cochran complained that the pin violated Superior Court Judge Lance Ito's order that no one in the courtroom could display symbols of support for one side or the other. Brown Simpson's family has adopted angels as a symbol for her.

Ito barred Clark from wearing the pin in court.

Simpson Jury

Judge Lance Ito Tuesday dismissed a juror who has the same arthritis doctor as O.J. Simpson. The makeup of the jury:

Men

- 52-year-old married man, half American Indian and half white, high school teacher
- 32-year-old single man, half Hispanic and half black, delivery man
- 46-year-old married black man, courier
- 43-year-old married black man, marketing representative

Added

- 54-year-old married black man, postal worker

Alternates: The pool of alternate jurors has now shrunk from 12 to nine. They include one black man, four black women, three white women and one Hispanic woman.

Women

- 50-year-old divorced black woman, vendor
- 25-year-old single black woman, flight attendant
- 37-year-old married black woman, post office employee

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF HIROSHIMA

New display not accurate

Later this year, the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., was to open an exhibit commemorating the 50th anniversary of the dropping of the atomic bomb on Hiroshima. None of the more than 1 million people who visit the Smithsonian's National Air and Space Museum every year will ever see the exhibit as it was intended to be seen, however.

As progress on the exhibit was made and the Smithsonian got closer to the opening date, a draft of the exhibit script was released. It caused a tremendous amount of protest by veterans' groups and conservative legislators who felt the exhibit was a one-sided apology piece that did not accurately represent the views of the soldiers who fought in the Pacific campaign or the men who flew the Enola Gay, the plane that delivered the bomb. The people who run the Smithsonian worked with veterans' groups to make the exhibit more palatable, but the results of their revisions caused historians to erupt with anger and call the exhibit propagandistic.

The way the exhibit was set up, viewers would enter the large display on one side, where they were to be greeted by an explanation of the significance of V-E Day and a kamikaze plane. There were newsreels of kamikaze missions and an explanation of the Pacific campaign. This was a considerable bone of contention with veterans' groups who felt the museum underestimated the number of possible casualties a prolonged invasion of Japan would have caused.

There was also a model of the Fat Man bomb and displays illustrating the various events that led up to President Truman's decision to use it. These also caused distress among the veterans' groups which felt that discussion of Truman's motives (if he wanted to impress the Russians, for example) was appropriate.

In the largest room of the exhibit was to be the fuselage of the Enola Gay and various exhibits on how the bomb was delivered. These included photos and text of the crew and role of the B-29 in the war against Japan.

As the viewer would have exited the room with the Enola Gay, there was a room that led to the exit and probably caused the greatest discomfort to detractors. The displays that would have been viewed here included much discussion of the aftermath of the bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, with testimony from survivors, photographs of badly burned victims and various other uncomfortable reminders of just how devastating Truman's decision was. In the final corridor before the exit, there were to be displays that showed the ensuing arms race and the beginning of the Cold War.

None of this will be seen now. I. Michael Heyman announced last week that the Smithsonian will open a scaled-down exhibit that features only the fuselage of the Enola Gay, photos and testimony from Americans who fought in Japan. There will be (and probably rightly so) a greater focus on Japanese aggression.

What the museum caved in on is inclusion of the Cold War materials and the number of artifacts illustrating the suffering of the Japanese. Visitors to the National Air and Space Museum in May will not see a thought-provoking, perhaps even difficult, examination of the cause, action and effect of our use of atomic weapons on Japan. They will see a sanitized "rah, rah" display that will not provoke thought or debate of any kind.

SPIRITUALITY IS NOT A WEAPON

The unholy side of religion

As commonly accepted and valued religion is worldwide, there are alternative perspectives that can indicate a more unholy side, which most people neglect to consider. There is nothing false in the beauty within the spirituality of religion: it's a strong bond within all heritages; it has rich traditions; it teaches invaluable morals and ethics; it adds structure to people's lives; it provides a positive path for people who are lost in life and it gives people something to believe in. Religion is undeniably a crucial part of life in these respects.

There is a more destructive side, however, that is created when holy scriptures are misinterpreted or manipulated. Historically, religion has been used as a tool for the majority to rule the minority and to conquer and convert different cultures in their own land. It has and is used to assimilate or "civilize" other races.

Problems arise when moral absolutists try to impose their beliefs onto others because they believe their way is the only way. Fundamentalists don't accept the right for other cultures to believe in their own god. When taken to the extreme, religion does not tolerate independent thought, which has been the only way intellectual and medical advancements have been made. There is a real injustice when religion infringes on personal freedom.

There's an unfortunate but valid correlation between religion and many problems that have plagued all societies since the beginning of time. It has been an element of genocide, the cause of perpetual holy wars within and between nations, grounds to turn groups into scapegoats, an obvious force behind World War II, breeding grounds for cult groups, etc.

Religion inevitably sets people apart, but it is intolerance that instantly causes tension and hostility. It's not only a matter of respecting other people's views, but allowing them to have them in the first place. Only the government can make laws by which all people must abide. There is a reason why there is a separation of church and state: Religion is by choice, not law. Religion is meant to signify a spirituality that contradicts much of its perverse practice through time. Spirituality is meant to work within people, not as a weapon between them.

Feeling at home in my Iowa City hammock

It is my 23rd birthday, and I am sitting in my new hammock, swinging. It has taken me two hours to get the hammock up. I had to call my friend Frank to ask him what kind of hooks to use and then, after distressing him with my lack of hook knowledge, pick him up and take him with me to the hardware store. Two S hooks, two loop screws and a trip to Hardee's later, it was back to his house for the power drill and then back to mine to knock on walls and wind long screws into hard wood.

But now it's up, and I am in Iowa City and I am 23 years old and I am in my new hammock, swinging. This fact is a source of much introspection for me, as I never thought I would spend another birthday here in the town I was born in and left 17 years ago. When I came back to go to graduate school, I walked around with my head cloudy with a 6-year-old's memories: getting ice cream bars at "Dirty John's," riding the Ferris wheel at City Park, pressing my face up against the glass of the seagull display at Macbride Hall. I always wanted to come back, for the same reason, I guess, that when things got tough, Richard Nixon would always return to San Clemente, Calif., to pace the beaches in his suit and loafers. I've lived in a lot of places, but Iowa City will always be my home.

When I was a kid growing up in Washington and people would ask me where I was born, I would lie and say Los Angeles. Later, when I lived in Los Angeles, it became a point of pride that I had been born somewhere where Pete Wilson had never held elected office.

"Iowa?" my California friends would repeat incredulously, overenunciating it like a foreign word.

"Iowa," I'd say for the 40th time. "It's all those tiny little fields you have to fly over to get to New York City."

"We know where Iowa is," they'd lie.

Finally, when I told them that I was moving back, that for some insane reason I had to come back to Iowa City before I could go on with the rest of my life, I was greeted with the same expressions Jimmy Stewart met with when he tried to convince his family that he knew a 6-foot rabbit named Harvey.

But they humored me, as did my parents, both of whom had moved from here by 1979. It was either coming back to Iowa, I told them, or therapy. And in the long run, coming back to Iowa would be cheaper.

So here I am. I live in the apartment I had always imagined myself living in, just two blocks away from the house I used to live in as a child with my mother. I go to the bars that my parents used to go to and do my laundry in the same laundromat that they did theirs in.

Sometimes I will leave the house and just walk. I never know where I'm going, but I always seem to follow that 6-year-old's steps to somewhere important: my old elementary school, a house a friend of my parents lived in, a good patch of grass I used to sit on to look for a four-leaf clover. You can appreciate the oddity of this, of being someplace new yet completely familiar. Every day I walk to school in awe of the fact that I am here, that I actually made it this far upstream, that I am not still stuck in traffic on Sunset Boulevard, choking on smog and listening to my friend tell me how she once did heroin with a well-known actor in the bathroom of a well-known club on a well-known street in Los Angeles.

I came here looking for the footprints of my 6-year-old self, but in following their path I found some of the people who I had left behind. I found my cousins and my aunt and uncle. I found my parents' old friends, Frank and Donny. It is these people who have made the journey something other than a psychotic episode I will tell my grandchildren about to make them giggle. They have made me feel welcome by taking me in as if I had never left, as if I had skipped out the door to go to kindergarten and returned a few minutes later a college student and they are just too polite to comment on the unusual growth spurt.

I know that I am lucky. Few people get the chance to make an actual pilgrimage. Even Scarlet O'Hara had to wait for a sequel to be written before she could claim her ancestral home. And even though I wonder sometimes if this strange joy I feel from being here could be cured with a daily dose of Prozac, I am enjoying my dementia regardless, as there is something to be said for embracing madness.

And when it gets cold — like it is today — and my car won't start and I can't find one glove and the wind burns my cheeks, I just remember catching fireflies in College Hill Park with my dad and the orange light they gave off from the jar on my bedside table and the memory warms me from the inside out. Then I climb into my hammock — this hammock — the one my mother sent me for my 23rd birthday, and I push off with my foot and lie back and ponder, with the utmost surprise and delight, the fact that I am in my apartment in Iowa City, a few miles away from the hospital where I was born. And for the first time since I left, I don't feel like I should be somewhere else.

Americans lack a definite sense of conscience

In the last week I've come to hate that trite child's cliché "Finders keepers. Losers weepers."

The sing-song refrain chides me every time I think about the camera I left sitting under a chair in the Great Midwestern Ice Cream Co.

It's gone — my Canon AE-1 35mm that I've owned only since August.

After the monthlong holiday break, I wasn't used to carrying around my camera, and I left with some friends without a moment's thought for my equipment. It wasn't until the middle of the night that I realized with a sinking feeling what I had done, but by that time there was little I could do except wait for morning and hope.

Perhaps it's the remnant of a small-town mentality, but I really expected that some honest soul would turn it in. After all, I would.

But instead, the person who walked off with my camera didn't feel any responsibility to me. They probably chuckled at the moron who left a $300 camera for such easy pickings.

I put notes up about my "lost" camera, offering a reward; went to all the camera stores and pawn shops; and lamented to all my friends and acquaintances, but to no avail.

Now I'm left only to try and picture the culprit as I wish them bad luck. Is the person a student? Are they young or old? Do they look like someone who'd rip you off the first chance they got? What really goads me is that it was taken from a coffee shop I've frequented daily for 3½ years. I've probably seen the thief around or maybe even smiled and said "Hi."

It may sound a little exaggerated to call the person a thief, considering they didn't grab it off my shoulder and push me down onto the street. I admit it was stupid and irresponsible to forget my uninsured camera, but what I think is even more sad is that someone would take it. Make no mistake — it's called stealing.

In the context of what's going on in the world today, lifting a used camera from a college student is not that bad, but it's also not justifiable. I hardly think they're using the money to feed their starving family. I imagine a strain of thought that went more like "Gee, no one will ever know, and I'm behind on my rent anyway."

Perhaps they thought I had a lot of money to throw around since I could just carelessly leave an expensive camera under a chair. I hate to burst anyone's bubble, but Daily Iowan columnists make enough per month to maybe buy a couple of compact discs.

There don't seem to be many people left who actually think about the principle of whether it's right or wrong to take something that isn't their own. A lot of people out there aren't opposed to stripping off a bike tire every once in a while or taking an item when no one is looking. The logic seems to be if you don't get caught, it doesn't hurt.

Having my camera taken has caused me to wonder about my own set of values and if they're somehow out of date in today's society. It's true that the possible consequences have helped dissuade me from stealing, but it's more than that. It's also the knowledge that whether I took from a monster corporation or some college student, it's going to affect someone somewhere in a negative way.

In the Feb. 6 issue of Newsweek, the cover story addressed how to bring back a sense of right and wrong to America. With a child wearing a dunce cap and the word "shame" emblazoned across the front, it seemed a bit judgmental, but as I reflected I had to agree that Americans do seem to lack a definite sense of conscience.

The Newsweek article took a look at social stigmas and whether they should be used to deter sex crimes, theft, teen pregnancy and even divorce. In the article, the author interpreted the movement for morality: "The goal is not mere retribution but conformity — good conformity, the kind that makes it easier for people to form communities."

As someone who firmly believes in the ideology of "live and let live," I'm not particularly fond of social stigmas or conformity. I've always believed that morality is between a person and their higher being — that is, until their actions begin to hurt others.

In light of my recent experience, I appreciated the Memphis, Tenn., judge mentioned in the article who ruled that victims of burglaries could go into the thieves' homes and take anything they wanted in exchange for giving the thieves parole. Perhaps getting a taste of their own medicine will make them think twice.

I think my new favorite cliché is "What goes around comes around."

Who knows what next

I don't remember looking forward to the mail delivery as much as I have the last week.

It began when a nice widow in Arizona read about my wife's disgust with my old winter overcoat — a frayed, soiled, grungy garment I have worn for many years.

In the nice lady's closet was a splendid blue-black wool overcoat — virtually new — that had belonged to her late husband.

She said she wanted me to have the coat because her husband had been a fine man and she thought that I was, too.

It fit perfectly, and my wife and co-workers said I had never worn a coat that made me look so successful and dignified.

They did express some mild reservations about whether wearing the coat was appropriate. As one put it, "Don't you think wearing a coat that belonged to a dead stranger is kind of weird, even for you?"

Or, as my wife said, "OK, if you insist on wearing it, then wear it. But do you really have to brag and tell everyone we meet — even the hat-check girl in the restaurant — where you got it?"

Why not? It is a gift. A strange gift, I had to admit, but a gift nonetheless. And my grandfather always said, "Don't pull on a gift horse's tail, or you might get kicked."

Besides, we are constantly told to recycle. So what is the sense in letting a perfectly good coat become moth food?

I was so grateful to the nice widow that I wrote a column about receiving the coat. And at the end I wondered what happened to her husband's ties.

Unfortunately, that lady did not have any ties. But in a few days, a package arrived from Wisconsin with a note that said, "My husband has been gone for two years. He's not dead, which wouldn't break my heart. I threw him out because he was a bum and I caught him playing around with a friend of mine."

"He left town in such a big hurry — my brother was going to break his neck — that he didn't take all of his clothes. I put them in a box in the basement, and I have been meaning to give them to the Salvation Army and take a tax write-off, but I never got around to it."

"My husband was short and fat and kind of ugly, and you don't look short and fat, so I don't think his clothes would fit. But you mentioned ties, so I am sending you a few of them."

"I think you are just the person to have them because they are awful. He always had terrible taste, and I have the feeling that you do, too."

"From what I have read, you sound like just as big a bum as he was, so it is only right that the ties should go around your neck. Knot them real tight, and your wife might be as happy as I am."

While her sentiment could have been a bit warmer, the ties were excellent by my standards — which means that they did not have any stains from gravy, pasta sauce or drool. And they all had labels. It's my experience that a tie that doesn't have a label is usually not high-class. However, they can be worn backward once the front becomes gloppy.

The next day, this letter arrived from a lady in Columbus, Ohio:

"Your article on the overcoat got me thinking."

"I, too, am a widow living alone. So don't publish my name or address."

"Among his personal effects are about 50 jockey briefs, of which 20 are still in original plastic packages. My husband never passed up a jockey briefs sale."

"Under separate cover, I'm sending the lot to you by UPS."

"I should tell you that the waist elastic in some of the used ones has stretched. But you can gather the waist in with a safety pin like he did. They are size 38."

"They are all perfectly laundered. My husband had a saying about such things: 'Rich, not gaudy like a cat pawing cabbage.'"

My sentiments exactly. Show me a cat pawing cabbage, and I'll show you cabbage being pawed by a cat.

So now I have an overcoat, several ties and almost a two-month supply of underwear. Is this a great country or what?

And I'll wear it all, although my wife said, "A dead man's underwear? You can't, you won't. I don't believe this." But as I always say to her, "Has anyone ever told you that you're beautiful when you cry hysterically?"

Who knows what will arrive in the next mail? (Coat size, 43; trouser waist, 37; inseam, 32; shoes, 12 wide.)

Gosh, I've always wondered what it would be like to have a Mercedes.

GUEST OPINION

A techno-vision for Iowa

Imagine if every child in Iowa could sit down with a multimedia computer, complete with visual and audio aides now available and access to the finest learning software in the world. For special-education students, this means technology fitted to their unique learning needs. For college-bound students, it means software that will teach advanced math, engineering and science courses that a school could never afford to offer for a handful of students. For parents, it means voice-mail access directly to their child's teacher and immediate access to nightly homework assignments. For teachers, it means having John Kennedy giving a full-motion speech to students followed seconds later with the first lunar landing.

While all of this sounds like something out of the 21st century, the reality is that this techno-vision is within the grasp of our children today because Iowa embarked on the trailblazing effort to build the Iowa Communications Network (the 2,800-mile fiber-optics network in all of Iowa's 99 counties).

Iowa's schools may be the first in the world to have access to the most advanced learning-software library available anywhere. From a computer in any classroom, a student could lead the learning software of their choice onto the computer in their homeroom. And while family or school district could afford all of this software on their own collectively, the state can afford to provide it for all schoolchildren.

In the past, the most talked about use for the communications network has been two-way interactive distance-learning classrooms. The general concept has been that one or a few of these classrooms would exist in each of the school districts, limiting access to the learning technology to a small percentage of students. While this is still part of the potential, the computer and software capabilities will bring the network into every classroom, providing access to all of our children.

Naturally this will cost some money, which causes us to consider whether the state should put all its education money into the general school formula or whether we should specifically target a portion of our new education money to technology infrastructure. Teachers, school board members and administrators know that money put into the formula will inevitably be bargained into salaries or be spent for transportation. While both are worthy and necessary, we must also upgrade the learning tools available to students.

Our plan to pay for this technology infrastructure calls for the state to increase the general growth rate by 3 percent so that salaries will keep up with others in Iowa. Then we will create a separate four-year $150 million technology fund so that schools can upgrade their infrastructure.

In essence, this technology fund will be distributed on a per-pupil basis and allow schools the flexibility to choose the way they move into the 21st century. Some schools may want to pursue distance education, while others might choose a wide-area network with a computer in every classroom that hooks into the state learning-software library; most will pursue both. Either way, it will be a significant investment in Iowa schools by the taxpayer.

The alternative plan being considered in the Legislature is to put all the new school money into the general school budget (4.5 percent allowable growth), withholding none for technology infrastructure. To us, this is shortsighted. At some point we must begin making the necessary investment into technology so that our children will have access to the best learning software and most advanced classes in the world.

Consider joining us in support of the 3 percent allowable growth rate. Without your active interest in education, Iowa will fail to capitalize on this very important opportunity, and that would be a tragedy for all of Iowa's children.

Ron Corbett is the speaker of the Iowa House of Representatives, Brent Siegrist is the Iowa House majority leader and Steve Grubbs is the Iowa House education chairman.

in jail, while the state bureau determines whether driving privileges will be revoked. If the license was borrowed from a friend, both people's driver's licenses could be revoked, Lihs said.

"Unlike a lot of things, you are considered guilty until proven innocent," Lihs said. "Unless you can satisfactorily explain what's going on, you'll probably get your license revoked."

"Jon Price," the false name that appeared on a UI senior's fake ID for four years, made a military ID while still in high school.

"I had a friend in the Army with an ID, and we figured out we could use my dad's copy machine to photocopy red. Then we just whited out the black parts," he said.

After making a template, he said, they each chose bogus names — drawing from Pink Floyd band members — and used school supplies and Polaroids to construct IDs.

"For the picture part, you hold up a board with your name and the letters look like lettering on a school bulletin board, so I asked the school secretary if I could borrow their letters for a project in mass communications. And, of course, she let me," he said. "I never was turned down with it, unless it was a place that didn't take military IDs."

"We see anything from really childish to ingenious."

tary IDs."

For those less interested in making an ID with "MacGyver" methods, borrowing from an older friend or sibling may be a better bet.

Jamie, 20, a UI junior, bought his fake ID from a relative last year.

"I was telling my cousin how hard it is to get into bars and buy beer and everything, and he said, 'God, I had a fake ID when I was younger. You've got a long time to go, so I'll sell mine to you,'" Jamie said.

However, the $20 was not necessarily worth the money. The license is expired, and he looks only vaguely like the cousin, he said. He has been turned away from bars five or six times but was grateful police did not discover the ID when he was busted for public intoxication.

"I stuck it in my underwear when I got caught," Jamie said. "I was so lucky they didn't find it."

Another route to nabbing a fake ID is to obtain the birth certificate of someone who is at least 21 years old. Nikki, a 20-year-old junior, bought a phony birth certificate for $30 from a friend in her hometown.

After she had lost her first fake ID, Nikki went back to the driver's license station with the birth certificate stating she is 21 years old. The ID has her picture on it, so she rarely faces problems with bouncers.

"It's completely legal," she said. "I give it to cops, and I check out as a real person."

Joan McCarville, public services supervisor of the state driver's license department, said clerks in all the bureaus are trained to detect fraud, but seekers of fake IDs often seep through.

She said clerks often ask customers tricky questions like the name of the hospital where they were born or the county where they took driver's education. However, discovering false birth certificates is not easy, McCarville said.

"Unfortunately, there's no uniform birth certificate in the state of Iowa," she said. "It's a real problem."

When clerks do realize a person is attempting to commit fraud, she said the department processes the application anyway. People cannot be charged until they sign a document affirming their identity and pose for a picture.

Andy Lewis, an investigator with the Office of Motor Vehicle Enforcement, said there are three degrees of seriousness for people attempting to get fake IDs. The least serious is a simple misdemeanor, which is charged for a fraudulent presentation of the ID to a police officer. A serious misdemeanor is charged for anyone attempting to use wrongly a birth certificate — whether altered or borrowed. Those who bring friends to verify their identity may be charged with perjury, a class D felony.

From clear contact paper and pencil to computer-rendered images, Lihs said many students will try anything for a beer.

"We see anything from really childish to ingenious," Lihs said.

Usery met separately with owners and players during the day in one last attempt at a settlement. But that backfired, and players said they felt "betrayed" by Usery's recommendation for a luxury tax plan, two sources close to the union told the Associated Press, and tempers flared.

Owners plan to start spring training with replacement players, a move the Clinton administration opposes. Players vow never to accept a salary cap or any other financial system they believe will limit salaries.

"I think both sides have to share the blame," Clinton said.

There has been virtually no movement since the strike began Aug. 12, and baseball's eighth work stoppage since 1972 canceled the World Series. Players, trying to preserve decades of gains that have pushed their average salary to nearly $1.2 million, walked out to fight off owners' demands for a cap on each team's salary.

Clinton directed the sides to resume bargaining last week and set a Feb. 6 deadline for progress. Players and owners ignored the president's call and did not even speak to one another in the two days leading up to the deadline.

Clinton, Vice President Al Gore and several aides met with Usery for 35 minutes in the Oval Office to hear an outline of the mediator's plan before ordering the owners and players to the White House.

When the negotiators arrived, it was clear how far apart they were. Even though the sides were sitting together in the Cabinet room, they still wouldn't speak to one another.

"They did not do much conversation with each other. They addressed their remarks to each other through either the vice president or through the president," White House spokesman Mike McCurry said.

Details of Usery's plan were not released, but the AP learned that Usery proposed a special payroll assessment that would kick in at just under the average payroll, which was $40.7 million in 1994, including health and pension benefits.

the country is facing.

"Immigrants are keeping their kids out of school and are not getting lifesaving medical treatment because they are afraid of being deported," she said. "People are dying as a direct result of Proposition 187."

The group considered Tuesday a day of campuswide action against Proposition 187, which is why they rallied, despite the subzero weather.

Gerhardt Goeken, a member of the Spartacus Youth Club, said California voters passed Proposition 187 because of the statewide hysteria whipped up by legislators.

"My sister works as a teacher in San Diego," he said. "I asked her if she had had to deal with Proposition 187 yet. She said she hadn't thought about it but didn't think denying immigrant children education would be her job. Now it just may be."

is homophobic," Supervisor Don Sehr said.

Shannon said he is concerned funding for AIDS advocacy and research groups may dwindle with Lenhart on the board.

"I'm not too sure until you've been on the receiving end of it that you can make the assumption that she is clearly not homophobic," Shannon said. "Maybe she'll never do anything clearly homophobic, but how does it reflect in her decisions?"

Supervisor Steve Lacina checked on allegations after the December appointment but said he found most of the accusations were unverifiable or untrue. Lacina said he was impressed with Lenhart's background in finance when he nominated her and did not feel she would ignore the needs of the homosexual community.

"In the past, before AIDS was so severe, we were there," Lacina said. "We are there now. We will be there in the future. The perception is she will do a good job for everyone."

Lenhart resigned from the Human Rights Committee in October 1990 after Ozzie Diaz-Duque, another member of the committee, resigned days before. Diaz-Duque is a UI professor in the Spanish and Portuguese department.

His resignation four and a half years ago was based partly on comments made by Lenhart after a committee hearing, Diaz-Duque said.

"She pointed out to me that she didn't like homosexuals, and she felt I had an agenda as far as being faculty representative because I was gay," Diaz-Duque said. "She said she thought homosexuals shouldn't be teachers because they could be child sex abusers."

Lenhart's comments followed the committee's handling of a complaint from Brett Beemyn, then a UI graduate student, who filed a grievance with the committee over a Campus Review display in the Union. The cartoon featured Bart Simpson holding a slingshot with the caption "Back off, faggot." The committee found the display did not violate UI policy.

Lenhart, a secretary in the UI English department, would not give her reason for resigning from the committee in 1990 but was adamant she would not discriminate against homosexuals.

"That was all aired then," Lenhart said. "That's long, long ago, and it's all passed. There is nothing to it — I'm not homophobic."

David Coleman, who was chairman of the Human Rights Committee at the time of her resignation, said Lenhart was not forced to resign.

Beemyn, now a graduate instructor in the African-American World Studies Program, said when he presented his side to the committee in 1990, he felt he was forced to defend himself and his position as a homosexual to Lenhart.

"From what she said, it was clear to me she did not believe gay people deserve to have equal rights in this county," Beemyn said.

He could not recall Lenhart's exact words, but was quoted in The Daily Iowan on Oct. 25, 1990 as saying Lenhart asked questions he thought were "insensitive and had nothing to do with the question at hand."

Beemyn said he is opposed to Lenhart's appointment.

"I am appalled the Board of Supervisors would have to appoint someone with a long history of intolerance not only of gay persons or persons perceived as gay, but also to people with an interest in centrist or leftist political positions," Beemyn said.

Diaz-Duque said he is not bothered by Lenhart's appointment.

"I only hope that she has changed some of her views or at least not let them affect the decisions she makes regarding homosexuals," Diaz-Duque said. "I wish her luck."

Lacina, Sehr and Charles Duffy voted for Lenhart's appointment. Joe Bolckow voted against it. Newly elected Sally Stutsman had not started her term at the time of the vote.

Triplett leaves football for UI administration job

The Iowa football team lost a coach Tuesday when the UI gained a full-time director of development for the College of Liberal Arts.

Running backs coach Dave Triplett was hired to fill that position by the University of Iowa Foundation. He has been an assistant coach at Iowa since 1989.

"I have a great love and respect for the UI, and I have enjoyed my years with the athletics program. But as a graduate of the College of Liberal Arts (here at Iowa), I am excited to have this opportunity to work for the benefit of the academic programs that were so beneficial to me," Triplett said.

Triplett, a former honorable-mention all-Big Ten wide receiver for the Hawkeyes, served as head football coach at the University of South Dakota for 10 years before returning to coach at Iowa.

NCAA championship tickets sold out

According to ticket sales, Carver-Hawkeye Arena will be full next month when the NCAA wrestling championships come to Iowa City.

Every one of the 13,100 all-session tickets has been sold or given out to participating teams. A slim number of tickets may be made available Feb. 20 if they are returned by other schools.

High school junior commits to Iowa

Cedar Rapids Washington junior Ryan Luehrsmann, on Tuesday, became the third Iowa high school underclassman to verbally commit to the Iowa basketball team.

Luehrsmann, a 6-foot-1 guard, is averaging 22.3 points per game for the fifth-ranked Warriors.

He joins sophomores Dean Oliver of Mason City and Ricky Davis of Davenport North in announcing their intentions to play for the Hawkeyes.

"I'm real comfortable with the Iowa program," Luehrsmann said.

"I really like the coaches; they are very positive people. And I like the way they play. Watching them over the years, I've seen that they always play hard. That's the kind of program I want to play for."

Luehrsmann said he gave consideration to several schools before making his decision, including Iowa State and Arizona.

The earliest he could sign his national letter of intent is next November.

49ers hire VP, offensive coordinator

(AP) — The Super Bowl Champion San Francisco 49ers hired Marc Trestman Tuesday to replace Mike Shanahan as the team's offensive coordinator.

The team also hired former 49er wide receiver Dwight Clark as the new vice president. Clark spent the last three seasons as San Francisco's coordinator of football operations.

Gable: We want to be the show

Shannon Stevens
The Daily Iowan

It won't be long until the NCAA wrestling championships roll into Carver-Hawkeye Arena, and no one is more aware of that fact than Iowa coach Dan Gable.

After an easy 40-0 rout against Northwestern last Saturday, it's time for Iowa to start taking a closer look at the Big Ten and NCAA tournaments.

Gable said he hopes to create that tournament-like atmosphere when No. 2 Oklahoma State battles the top-ranked Hawkeyes in Carver-Hawkeye Arena on Saturday night.

"From a national tournament point of view, my team needs to see the stands as full as possible. We've had good crowds this year, but we haven't had capacity crowds," Gable said. "The national tournament is basically sold out, except for a few tickets coming back possibly from some of the teams. It's going to be a setting that I'd like to kind of simulate for Saturday night."

Gable said Iowa has the capability of being a good tournament team and said the Hawkeyes' toughness would carry them a long way.

"I do have some individuals that maybe people are looking at and saying 'well they can fall to the sides', but I'll tell you what; they're not showing that to me," Gable said.

"When I see a guy working so hard in practice that he starts crying, that he's pushed himself to that level of increase, then I know that there's some meaning. There is meaning with a lot of these guys."

With less than a month left until the Big Ten tournament, the Iowa coaching staff is working hard to improve individual Hawkeyes that aren't No. 1 in their weight class.

"The difference between first and fourth and fifth in some of those guys is so slight at the Big Tens and nationals, that why not take advantage of that closeness," Gable said. "I see in the eyes of most of my kids right now, the ones that are fourth, fifth, and sixth, that they're not going to be satisfied in that position."

Gable said the Hawkeyes need to use the next couple dual meets for momentum going into the national tournament.

"At this time of the year with only four competitions left, with what you've already proven, you'd hate to get upset, you'd hate to get off track," Gable said. "We feel like right now this could be the best national tournament ever in terms of attendance and in terms of the show. We want to be the show and it's that simple."

Iowa last faced Oklahoma State in the finals of the National Duals on Jan. 22. The Hawkeyes won that match 31-3, but Gable said he isn't taking the Cowboys lightly.

"Based on the finals of the National Duals,

Carter works way into starting job

Patrick Regan

The Daily Iowan

Eleven days ago John Carter slipped on the ice, injured his back and did not see one second of playing time in Iowa's 55-54 loss to Minnesota. Now Tom Davis has promoted the 6-foot-9 senior to the Hawkeyes' starting lineup.

Davis announced Tuesday at his weekly press conference that Carter would replace junior Russ Millard in the Iowa starting five for the Hawkeyes' Thursday night game with Northwestern.

Tipoff at Carver-Hawkeye Arena is scheduled for 6:35. The game will be televised by ESPN.

Carter's improved play in practice, and the need to bolster Iowa's frontcourt prompted Davis to make the change.

"Because we're having so much trouble with our interior defense as well as our rebounding, hopefully he can give us a boost in that area," Davis said. "Hopefully he can block a shot or two or get a couple key rebounds and strengthen our inside game a little."

Iowa has been outrebounded in its last six games. Carter, while playing only 10.4 minutes per game, averages 3.1 points, 3.5 rebounds and .7 blocks. Carter joined Iowa last season after transferring from Southeastern Community College in Burlington.

"John deserves to start," Davis said. "We've been struggling in there so badly anyway that it's a good time to look at him in a starting role."

Millard is averaging five points and 3.8 rebounds in eight games this season, compared to 11.2 points and 5.3 boards last year.

"I would have hoped that he would have come (along) much quicker. He would have hoped that I think," Davis said. "Hopefully you'll see him start to break out these remaining nine games."

Carter, who hails from Oklahoma City, said he is looking at this opportunity as his last chance to make a major impact on the collegiate level.

"It's a great opportunity for me," Carter said. "This is my last chance. I'm a senior, so this is my last go-around. I'm going to try to give my all Thursday night."

Carter started one other game this season, scoring five points in Iowa's win over Long Island.

Davis indicated the injury report for Iowa appears to be improving.

Jess Settles, who has seen limited playing time since returning from a four-game absence with back problems, practiced Monday and Tuesday. Davis said Settles was battling the flu Saturday, which sidelined him for most of Iowa's 74-64 loss at Penn State.

Settles showed up for practice Tuesday with a sign taped to his chest reading: No back questions.

"The reason I don't like (talking about my back) is it's a distraction from my teammates," Settles said. "I'm trying to get back into shape little by little, but I just can't get back like I want to or I'll just end up not playing at all."

Kenyon Murray, recovering from pulled muscles in his neck and lower back after a hard pick by Penn State's John Amaechi Saturday, did not practice Monday.

"John deserves to start. We've been struggling in there so badly anyway that it's a good time to look at him in a starting role."

Tom Davis on John Carter

"I kind of felt bad watching everybody else practice and not being in there," Murray said. "I'm not going to sit out (Thursday). I don't know if I'll start. It's all up to Coach (Davis)."

Davis said Kevin Skillett may start in place of Murray if the junior forward doesn't get enough practice time this week.

At 13-8, Iowa will have to put together a big winning streak if it has any postseason aspirations.

According to Davis, Iowa will have to win a minimum of five, and probably six, of its last nine games just to get consideration for an NCAA tournament berth.

"This last part of the season is critical," Davis said. "You could play your way in or you could play your way out."

Student uprising halts Rutgers-UMass game

Tom Canavan

Associated Press

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — Students protesting racially inflammatory comments by Rutgers president Francis Lawrence staged a halfcourt sit-in Tuesday night, causing the suspension of a basketball game between No. 4 Massachusetts and Rutgers.

The protest started with a black female student sitting at the jump ball circle just before the second half was to begin. Security guards came out to talk to her, but the protest escalated after two minutes and more than 150 students, nearly all black, eventually sat on the floor.

Police and university officials negotiated briefly with the students, while the sellout crowd of mostly whites shouted "Get off the court" and "We want hoops" to those on the court.

Atlantic 10 commissioner Linda Bruno, citing safety concerns, ordered the game suspended 24 minutes later and the crowd of 8,526 was asked the leave Rutgers Athletic Center. Rutgers was leading 31-29.

Massachusetts coach John Calipari and Rutgers coach Bob Wenzel were asked to take their teams to their locker rooms shortly after the sit-in started. The teams were taken out of the building after the game was suspended.

Lawrence, who was not at the game, has been sharply criticized by many university students and faculty, as well as state legislators, for his comments last fall

HALL OF FAMER

Kareem laments state of NBA

Wendy E. Lane
Associated Press

NEW YORK — There's precious little room in the slammin', jammin', woofin' NBA of the '90s for the sky hook.

Even the man who originated that graceful and effective shot, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, sees its time is past.

"Dr. J and Michael Jordan really ruined it for all of us big guys," Abdul-Jabbar said.

"Nobody wants to see somebody playing with their backs to the basket."

"People would rather look like Michael Jordan on the highlight film than be seen shooting the sky hook. It's just an element of style."

The former Lakers star, who returned to his hometown Tuesday to be honored as a Hall of Fame inductee, sees little similarity between the game he played for a record 20 seasons and the role of today's centers like Orlando's Shaquille O'Neal.

Television has changed the face of the game, Abdul-Jabbar said.

"Certainly style over substance is important now," he said. "They didn't have 'play of the day' when I was playing."

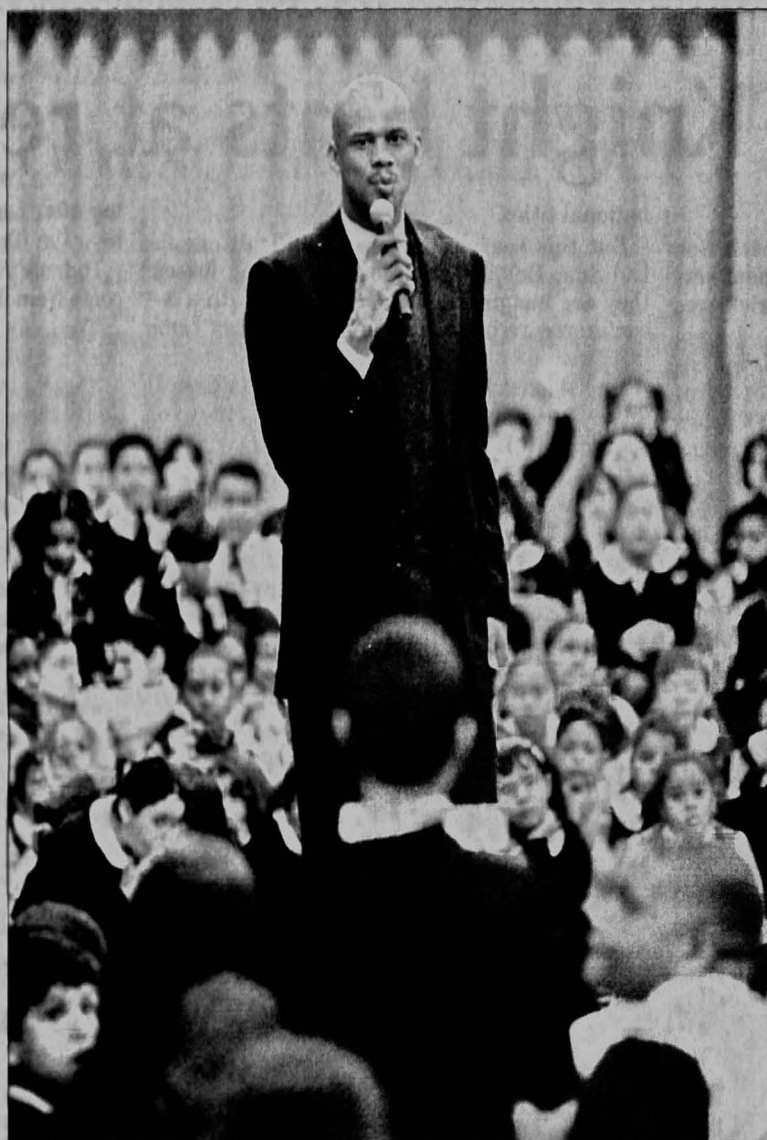

What hasn't changed: a dominating center is still considered a ticket to the NBA Finals.

Abdul-Jabbar, the NBA's leading scorer with 38,387 regular season points, led Milwaukee to one title and the Lakers to five more. That came after a college career in which he won three NCAA championships under UCLA coach John Wooden.

"I was able to beat one-on-one coverage every time and shoot high percentage shots that created a lot of stress on the defense," he said. "That gave everybody who played on the perimeter for the Lakers an extra step, and we were able to win consistently using that theory of play."

"Nowadays, I don't see anybody that's in there able to score as consistently as I did as far as shooting percentage and getting good shots."

Not even O'Neal, although Abdul-Jabbar acknowledges that

Associated Press

Basketball legend Kareem Abdul-Jabbar speaks to assembled students at his old elementary school, St. Jude's, in Manhattan Tuesday.

the muscular Magic center has developed his own dominating high-percentage game based on getting dunks off offensive rebounds.

"I saw his rap video where he said he don't need no hook, so I'm not going to offer him any advice," Abdul-Jabbar said. "It's too bad he doesn't have a shot he can shoot against the double-team. And free throws, I won't talk about free throws."

So who does Abdul-Jabbar like among today's dominating centers? Denver's Dikembe Mutombo, a center known more for his shot-blocking defense than his scoring.

"He's a great athlete and a team player," Abdul-Jabbar said.

"People talk about Olajuwon and Robinson and Shaquille, and they deserve all the ink they get, but there are different reasons to appreciate things, and Dikembe really impressed me."

Perhaps there was another reason Abdul-Jabbar singled out Mutombo, since Denver has a coaching vacancy and he has expressed interest in getting into coaching.

60-DAY SUSPENSION

Drug tests nail Strawberry

Ben Walker
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Darryl Strawberry tested positive for cocaine on consecutive days last month, according to documents obtained Tuesday by The Associated Press.

Strawberry was suspended by major league baseball Monday for 60 days for violating the game's drug policy and terms of his after-care program. The San Francisco Giants immediately released him.

Strawberry missed the first two months of the 1994 season after admitting to a substance abuse problem and seeking treatment. Although there was speculation at the time that it was a cocaine problem, it was never officially confirmed by representatives of baseball or Strawberry.

A letter sent by acting commissioner Bud Selig to Strawberry at his home in Rancho Mirage, Calif., last week informed the outfielder that "on Jan. 17 and 18, 1995, you submitted urine samples which tested positive for an illegal drug."

The letter, a copy of which was obtained by the AP, does not detail which drug was involved.

But an additional document on Strawberry's case showed he tested positive for cocaine when the samples were evaluated Jan. 20. In drug testing, it is standard to perform a confirming test on an additional part of each sample. Strawberry's "B" test was conducted Feb. 1 and also was positive.

Major league baseball spokesman Rich Levin had no comment Tuesday on Strawberry's situation. Levin said as a rule, the commissioner's office does not comment on drug tests of its players.

Strawberry, who turns 33 next month, has been selected to eight All-Star teams during a 12-year career with the New York Mets, Los Angeles Dodgers and Giants. He is the Mets' career home run leader with 252 and led the NL in homers in 1988 with 39.

For all his power and potential, however, Strawberry has been beset by personal and physical problems.

In December, he was charged with evading federal taxes. He pleaded innocent, but is expected to plea-bargain a three-month sentence to be served following the 1995 season.

Strawberry, limited to a total of 10 home runs in 1992-93 for Los Angeles because of chronic back problems, told the Dodgers last April that he had a substance abuse problem.

Because Strawberry voluntarily entered a treatment center, the Betty Ford Clinic, he avoided a suspension. But he was told at the time "that a subsequent violation of major league baseball's prohibition on illegal drug use, as set forth in the commissioner's program, would result in discipline," Selig's letter said.

Strawberry finished his stay at the Betty Ford Clinic on May 6, and three weeks later, the Dodgers released him. The Giants signed him on June 19, and he hit .239 with four homers and 17 RBIs in 29 games for San Francisco.

Even though Strawberry had not signed for the 1995 season, he figured in the Giants' plans. On Jan. 19, Strawberry and the team exchanged salary arbitration figures for the upcoming season, asking for $1.8 million and being offered $750,000.

Houston Rockets Robert Horry and Vernon Maxwell leave the court Monday night escorted by security guards after Maxwell went into the stands and allegedly attacked a fan during a game.

Maxwell faces penalty for alleged attack

Bob Baum
Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Hot-tempered Houston Rockets guard Vernon Maxwell quietly left Portland with his teammates Tuesday as NBA officials weighed what penalty he would face for allegedly punching a fan.

"You know I'm not going to talk about it," Maxwell said as he left a downtown hotel.

Witnesses said Maxwell charged up a dozen rows into the Memorial Coliseum crowd during Monday night's 120-82 loss to the Portland Trail Blazers and punched 35-year-old Steve George in the jaw.

George and his attorney said they plan to press charges and are considering a lawsuit.

A police report filed by George at 1:36 a.m. Tuesday was forwarded to the Multnomah County district attorney's office.

Maxwell likely would face a misdemeanor charge of fourth-degree assault if George signs a complaint, Portland police spokesman C.W. Jensen said.

George's attorney, Richard Maizels, said his client would sign the complaint but didn't know when.

Maizels said there's a good chance any civil lawsuit could be avoided by an out-of-court settlement.

George, who is deaf in his right ear, was examined at a hospital emergency room late Monday night to make sure his other ear was not damaged in the incident. So far, there was no indication of any serious injury, Maizels said.

A freelance television cameraman captured the altercation on video and sent the tape to the NBA's office in New York. Rod Thorn, the NBA's vice president for operations, said no action would be taken before Wednesday.

Thorn said a player has never gone into the crowd to assault a fan in his 10 years with the league. In March 1991, Charles Barkley was fined $10,000 and suspended for a game for spitting on fans. His target was a heckler, but he hit an 8-year-old girl instead.

Cameraman Carl Wikman said his tape clearly shows Maxwell going into the crowd and striking George.

The incident occurred during a timeout with 3:33 left in the third period and Portland leading the Rockets 79-52.

The section of fans beneath the backboard next to the Houston bench had been riding Maxwell all night, and the temperamental guard had returned the taunts with obscenities, Wikman said.

AFTER 24 SEASONS

Indiana's Knight hints at retirement

Associated Press

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Indiana coach Bob Knight has mentioned the word retirement several times this season, and his son Patrick sees it as a possibility.

"I wouldn't be surprised," Patrick Knight, a senior guard on the Indiana team, said Monday.

The younger Knight said he doesn't know whether his father, coaching the Hoosier basketball team for the 24th season, will hang it up at the end of this campaign because he hasn't discussed it with him.

"It's like talking about Michael Jordan: What's he got left to prove?" Patrick Knight said.

Bob Knight has coached the Hoosiers to three national titles.

But this season has been a difficult one for Indiana. Despite some disheartening losses, they are hanging in the Big 10 race with a 5-4 conference record and an NCAA tourney berth is a possibility.

And Patrick Knight said calling it quits after such a tough season would go against his father's nature.

"He's such a great competitor I don't think he would want to leave on this note," he said.

Still, Bob Knight this winter for the first time tossed out the word retirement in post-game press conferences and on his Sunday television show.

He also has said he's done a poor job of coaching after certain games, something seldom ever heard in the past.

Patrick Knight feels some of the comments come from frustration.

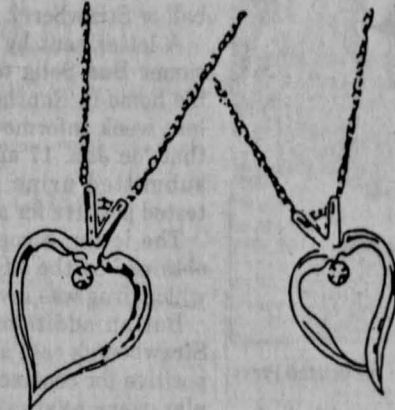

"You can tell it is wearing on him. We are such a sporadic team," he said.

This is Patrick Knight's final season of play, so this would be an appropriate time for father and son to step out together.

Part of the problem for Bob Knight this season has been the fans' reaction — groans and boos — to the floor appearances of his son. Patrick has been a role player after starting at the beginning of the season.

"They want to get to my father through me," he said. "That's the way people are."

IOWA STATE VS. MISSOURI

Tigers shoot for season sweep of Cyclones

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — There's really no way Missouri should be this good.

Not after losing four starters from last season's team, which was unbeaten in the Big Eight Conference. And not after seeing the lone returning starter, Kelly Thames, go down with a preseason knee injury.

Yet the 13th-ranked Tigers are sitting pretty at 16-3 overall and they're third in the Big Eight at 5-2. A victory over No. 19 Iowa State, which visits the Hearn Center tonight, would move Missouri into a tie for second with Kansas.

Missouri has beaten Iowa State once already, 80-71 in Ames on Jan. 30. That's Iowa State's only loss at home this season and started them on their current three-game losing streak.

So who are these guys in the Missouri uniforms? A bunch of overachievers?

"I don't think we're overachieving," coach Norm Stewart said. "I think the players are coming together. We're just really happy about that. When you take that many new players, you can have a lot of things happen."

"Our guys have really been good from the start from the standpoint of getting along well and trying to have a good basketball team."

The Tigers were certainly that in Ames, especially in the second half. They shot 72 percent in the final 20 minutes of the game and contained Iowa State center Loren Meyer during that stretch.

Meyer had only two points in the second half after getting 16 in the first.

With Meyer in check, even Fred Hoiberg's school-record eight 3-point baskets couldn't save the Cyclones.

"We got the ball in Loren's hands in the second half as frequently as we did in the first half," Iowa State coach Tim Floyd said.

"They just did a great job of doubling down and we didn't make great decisions out of the double teams."

Floyd said the Tigers' offensive success in that game had a lot to do with their defense.

LOW-KEY ATMOSPHERE BROUGHT TO BAR

High and Lonesome members shift gears for loungelike act

Paul Ferguson
The Daily Iowan

Regulars of the Union Bar & Grill, 121 E. College St., may be used to strange things, but they probably aren't used to their very own lounge act. The Revolving Hillbilly Orchestra is filling that previously neglected niche — at least for a little while.

High and Lonesome's Dave Zollo is making the Union Bar & Grill a slightly weirder place Wednesday nights with an amorphous assembly of local musicians which plays free of charge in the front section of the bar at 10 p.m.

Tonight will be the orchestra's third performance, featuring pedal steel guitarist Marty Letz, in addition to pianist Zollo and High and Lonesome guitarist Darren Matthews.

"It's just not often you get to hear (a pedal steel player) anywhere, let alone in the front bar of the Union," Zollo said.

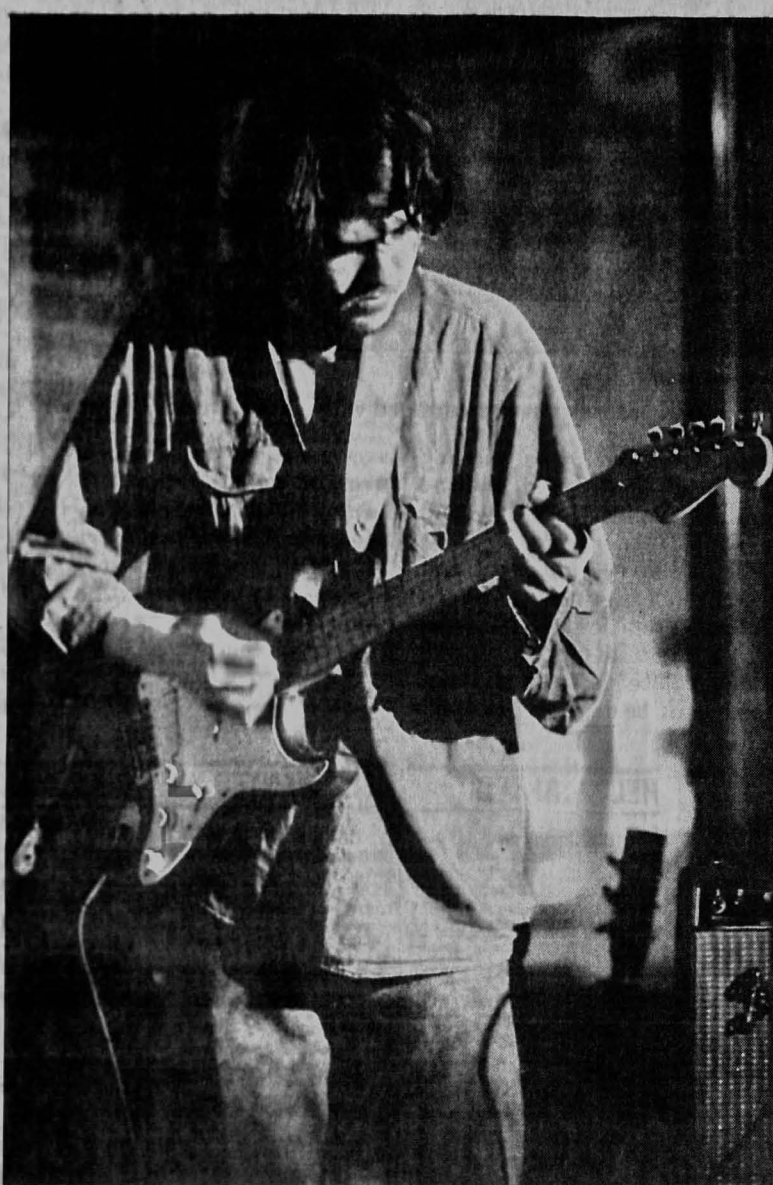

Given the orchestra's changing lineup, including several members of High and Lonesome, it's not surprising that its sound is similar to the melange of blues, country and roots music for which High and Lonesome is known. The difference is the lack of volume and the low-key atmosphere.

"It's similar (to High and Lonesome) in the sense that musically I think it's coming from the same place, but it's different in that High and Lonesome is a band, a full-on, full-tilt, loud rock and roll band, and this is not that type of setting," Zollo said.

Jeff Semones, who handles bookings at the Union Bar & Grill, approached Zollo with the idea, which Zollo said was originally conceived as a "tongue-in-cheek lounge thing." Though it has become a more conventional outfit, Zollo still sees the orchestra as less than serious — the name is something of a giveaway.

The structure of the front bar and the informal setting, with the band set up in the corner, gives the bar much of the lounge atmosphere the players desire.

High and Lonesome's Darren Matthews joined bandmate Dave Zollo at the Union Bar and Grill, 121 E. College St., last Wednesday night as part of the Revolving Hillbilly Orchestra.

ble isn't the usual fare at the bar, Zollo has plenty of experience with it, having played venues like The Mill Restaurant, 120 E. Burlington St., and the Sanctuary Restaurant & Pub, 405 S. Gilbert St.

It could be said that Zollo is bringing a bit of those places to the Union.

"There's been a nice group of people there," he said. "The music isn't completely in your face — it's not real loud. It's just two or three musicians playing without a huge PA and a blasting rhythm section, so it's kind of got that feeling to it where people can talk and drink."

The Revolving Hillbilly Orchestra is a short-term project, with the final performance planned for March 21, so anyone wishing to experience the laid-back demeanor of a lounge in cozy downtown Iowa City should reserve a Wednesday evening for Zollo and his revolving gang.

24 DISPLAY WORK IN SHOW

Museum unveils faculty art exhibit

Charles Monson
The Daily Iowan

UI art instructors get a chance to prove their mettle in "Faculty Exhibition 1995." This installment of the UI Museum of Art's biennial display brings together 24 artists who collectively have cooked up an offbeat show.

One example is Tim Curtis, who has erected nothing less than a forest shrine in the museum. The piece, which incorporates several small trees and a rock altar shrouded in candle wax, is a pleasant surprise among the relatively straightforward paintings and pastels around it.

Curtis has a unique way of conceptualizing and executing art, and if the results are occasionally silly or self-indulgent — as with his cedar trees suspended in honey and petroleum, which are visually striking but thematically shallow — it's easy to forgive him.

Self-indulgence definitely isn't the problem with Deborah Boardman's "Home. Casa. Domu." The piece, a multimedia work relating to a collaboration between Chicago religious congregations, is the fruit of a laudable project. Unfortunately, ambiguities in the format make it difficult to appreciate the piece. Its audio system and Plexiglas doors suggest that it's supposed to be interactive, but it's not really clear how, and the brief accompanying booklet is no help.

Delanie Jenkins' mixed-media piece, which carries the triple-entente title "shed," is a wood-floored room containing flower petals, strands of hair and other items which suggest shedding or casting things off. "Shed" can't help but carry a whiff of the frivolous fun-house quality which plagues this sort of installation art, but it's still agreeable and even elegant in its own way.

Steve Thunder-McGuire's works are on a smaller scale but are still mixed media of a sort. Two of them relate explicitly to his recent Alaskan bike trip; the more interesting one is "Stories of Fine Madness," which incorporates a relief map and text about his trip. It's a little rough-edged, but then, so is Alaska.

The multimedia pieces are fun, but several of the remaining works have a strong macabre element. Margaret Stratton's video, "Kiss the Boys and Make Them Die," is a morbid meditation on topics ranging from suicide to childhood ostracism.

Stratton's frank narration fits the intimacy of the video format, and she manages to steer clear of the myopia and self-pity which can taint such intensely personal projects.

T.L. Solien's oil-on-canvas "He/I/ King" and "She/I/Queen" seem to be composites of a specific person as viewed from various perspectives or time frames. It's a nice idea, but it gets lost in the styling — "King" and "Queen" do grab one's attention, but only because they're so jarringly ugly. "King" is just distorted, but "Queen," with its glassy Cyclopean eye and partially exposed teeth and gums, looks like some horrific rotting corpse. Both are carefully styled and executed, but viewers may be too nauseated to notice.

Joseph Patrick's oil-on-canvas "Oaxaca" pieces have a photo-realistic quality which hint at the surreal edginess of last year's James Valerio display. They're technically exacting, with excellent use of light and shadow, and they evoke the ramshackle flavor of Mexican life without showing anything animate.

John Dilg's pseudo-hieroglyphic oil-on-canvas line drawings sit at the opposite end of the realist spectrum. Some of his pieces are just visual puns, while others are abstractly risqué looks at sexuality. A few of them, particularly "Adolescence," make clever observations that seem all the more apt for the odd way they're conveyed.

Sue Hettmansperger's work, with its environmental influences and careful explorations of form, uses a style somewhere between Patrick's and Dilg's. The huge pastel-and-mixed media "Through the Lens of ..." is elaborate and absorbing, but the elegant simplicity of "World and Inversion" and its effortless environmental commentary make it her most appealing piece.

K's Choice

The Great Subconscious Club

The fact that K's Choice mixes folk and pop makes it unusual enough, but its charting of so many points in between makes it an oddity truly worth exploring.

The threads of sweetness and unadorned truth woven throughout The Great Subconscious Club bear some resemblance to those of the Indigo Girls, who are reported to be fans. But the packaging K's Choice wraps those threads in prevents the group from becoming more melancholy than necessary.

To this band, sadness is only there to allow us the joy of getting over it.

K's Choice also has no fear of instrumentation, something the Indigo Girls occasionally seem stricken with. The folks skeletons of these songs have living flesh, electric guitars and upbeat tempos that lift their spirits while allowing their sentiments to float effortlessly.

"Me Happy" and "I Smoke a Lot"

in particular show off the band's pop presence and clever, quirky lyrics. The frank sexuality of songs like "I Wanna Meet the Man" and "Breakfast" is one of the most refreshing aspects of the entire album.

Even though "What the Hell is Love" and "Laughing As I Pray" are less than cheery, The Great Subconscious Club isn't about moping; it's about learning why we need to mope, and why we need to stop.

Throwing Muses

University

The Throwing Muses have had more than enough reasons to hang it up over the years.

After spending the late '80s in relative obscurity, hidden among British gloom rockers on the 4AD label, founding member Tanya Donnelly left the band in 1991 to form Belly, which soon went on to establish itself at the forefront of today's college rock scene.

Then last year, lead songwriter Kristin Hersh released her first solo album, the acoustic wonder Hips and Makers. Seen as almost a throwaway "secret" album by Hersh herself, Hips and Makers went on to be listed virtually everywhere among the year's best albums, outselling anything in the Muses' back catalog by 2-to-1, leading to another round of speculation that the Muses' day was done.

The natural response to University, then, is, "What's the point?" University responds to the challenge with a thrillingly diverse collection of tracks. While it occasionally drifts too far into rock 'n' roll power chords, such as on "Start," the overall result is quite impressive.

Highlights include "University," a sparse instrumental featuring

Dink

Dink

Though dance music and rock have coexisted for decades, only rarely have the genres overlapped, and when they have, it hasn't always been pretty.

Dink's foray into the dance / rock abyss comes at a time when the music world is still reeling from the fall of Manchester's shaggy late-'80s brand of dance / rock, making the band's venture even more risky.

Not to worry, though — Happy Mondays it isn't. Dink flops around as unpredictably as a dying fish, leaning dangerously close to punk on some tracks, veering toward Public Image Ltd. on others and giving a sly wink to Jesus Jones much of the time.

More surprising than Dink's mix of influences is the fact that it works so well. The infectious groovy "Green Mind" sees vocalist Rob Lightbody throwing his percussive voice around over a dense field of jittery guitars and a rhythm section powerful enough to rattle teeth. This continues on songs like "Get On It," "3 Big Bags" and "Water."

Not every song hits the mark, but the band's sense of humor makes up for most of its shortcomings.

Stuart Reid

Paul Ferguson

The Throwing Muses have re-emerged with a new release, University.

Hersh's infant son Dylan warbling along in the background, and the beautiful simplicity of "That's All You Wanted."

Tracks like "Snakeface" and "Hazing" both show that the Muses still serve a function beyond giving Hersh a chance to plug in her guitar. "Snakeface" features a slinky, sinewy back beat, while "Hazing" takes a simple but powerful structure and builds from a willow opening into a heaving climax.

University, like Hips and Makers last winter, is a pleasant surprise, filled near to bursting with ornaments both bright and mysterious. It is easily recommended.
