California plagued by third clinic fire in a week

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. (AP) — A suspected arson fire destroyed a Planned Parenthood center early Wednesday, the state's third suspicious blaze in a week at facilities where abortions are performed, authorities said.

The FBI and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms were investigating all three fires along the coast as probable arson, Justice Department spokesman Jim Russell said.

Their findings will go to the department's task force on anti-abortion violence, he said.

Authorities said it was too soon to know if the three fires were connected.

Maryland study claims massages cure headaches

BALTIMORE (AP) — Doctors may soon tell patients who complain of tension headaches, "Take two massages and call me in the morning."

A study suggests tension headaches start with tissue that links the brain with upper neck muscles.

If that's right, prescriptions to relax tense neck muscles could challenge the $2.2 billion headache remedy market.

Regents give criteria go-ahead

Patricia Harris
The Daily Iowan

CEDAR FALLS — It took just three minutes Wednesday for the Iowa state Board of Regents to unanimously vote to approve the selection criteria for the next UI president.

The set of 17 criteria, put together by the UI Presidential Search and Screen Advisory Committee, was met with high praise from the regents, who made no changes to the list.

Steve Collins, head of the committee and a professor of electrical and computer engineering, said he was happy the list was passed without controversy.

"The regents were actually quite laudatory about our efforts," he said.

The criteria sailed through the regents vote because the list is broad enough to produce a diverse candidate pool but spelled out what the UI wants in a president, said regents President Marvin Berenstein.

"I thought they were very conscientious and the committee did a great job," he said. "I think that the criteria sets up a flexibility to consider many different kinds of candidates, and I think we'll get a good pool."

The search committee's next move will be to begin a national advertising campaign. They will place ads in educational journals and send letters to colleagues asking for nominations to replace Hunter Rawlings. Rawlings will leave the UI to become chancellor of Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., on July 1.

"One of the goals the regents are quite serious about is that of achieving a diverse pool of candidates."

An advertisement has already been sent to The Chronicle of Higher Education, a Washington, D.C.-based publication, Collins said.

Collins said there wasn't an official budget for the ad campaign. However, the Chronicle charges $75 per column inch for advertising. The ad run by the UI seven years ago in the search for Hunter Rawlings was 2 columns wide by 7 inches tall. According to such dimensions, the ad in the Chronicle would cost $1,050 for one issue. Collins said the ad will run in two consecutive issues.

INDIAN WELLS, Calif. — "Oh no!" boomed the president of the United States as he planted his golf ball firmly in a sand trap. At least he didn't hit anybody. Partner George Bush clipped two spectators, and Jerry Ford hooked his very first shot into the gallery.

Three men who answer to "Mr.

President" went golfing with Bob Hope on Wednesday and between them produced as many bloopers as feats of athletic brilliance.

Ford sent his first drive into the crowd, but apparently it didn't hit anyone. Bush ricocheted his second shot off a tree into the face of an elderly woman who required stitches — and bounced a later shot off another spectator.

"Three presidents and a hacker," Hope declared, perhaps too kindly, before they started.

The historic group — including defending champion Scott Hoch — also produced some respectable shots on day one of the Bob Hope Chrysler Classic tournament.

They also seemed to have a great time as they worked their way around the course at Indian Wells. See GOLF, Page 8A

Alleged slayer outlines conspiracy

MINEOLA, N.Y. — The man accused of killing six people on a commuter train said Wednesday he would not take the stand, after delivering a monologue maintaining he is a victim of a conspiracy that is somehow linked to the death of serial killer Jeffrey Dahmer.

Colin Ferguson, allowed to act as his own lawyer despite advice to plead innocent by reason of insanity, also claimed he had been forced into an appearance on CNN's "Larry King Live."

Ferguson's announcement that he would not testify came shortly after the trial judge gave him a 2 p.m. deadline to either call a witness, testify himself or end his defense case.

"Mr. Ferguson, this is the moment of truth," Judge Donald Belfi warned him.

"It is something I would not like to do under the circumstances," Ferguson said of his much-anticipated appearance as a witness. "I will be forced to rest."

Ferguson will have a final chance to call witnesses this morning who were unavailable Wednesday but will not have the option of testifying himself.

Ferguson is accused of killing six and wounding 19 others on a packed Long Island Rail Road commuter train on Dec. 7, 1993.

He has claimed the shootings were committed by an unidentified white man who stole his gun. On Tuesday, he offered another theory: The killer was a black man who both looks like him and shares his name.

COFFEEHOUSES BROUGHT TO I.C.

Student transforms class into real life

Tracy Naden

UI senior Tara Cronbaugh has yet to graduate from college, but the 21-year-old entrepreneur has already made her mark as the one to bring specialty coffeehouses to Iowa City.

Cronbaugh is the owner of The Java House, 211 1/2 E. Washington St., and the Iowa City Coffee Co. in Prairie Lights Books, 15 S. Dubuque St.

Her dream of owning her own coffeehouse became a reality after she enrolled during the '93 fall semester in an entrepreneurship class taught by UI visiting finance lecturer John Buchanan.

"My project was to develop a business plan to open my own business," Cronbaugh said. "When I actually decided to do it, my friends thought I was crazy."

Cronbaugh, who is a communication studies major, researched the coffee business for three years. A native of Cedar Rapids, she traveled to California, where her dad and brother live, during every holiday break. There she knocked on the doors of more than 10 coffeehouses.

"I was a real nuisance, but a lot of business owners were willing to help," she said. "It's amazing how many connections you hook up with."

UI firm puts squeeze on local businesses

As downtown rental costs soar and local store owners fret over the rising price of staying in business, the UI is the landlord for some of the hottest — and most expensive — property in the area.

Store owners with businesses in the heart of Iowa City's downtown have begun to fear their shops will be forced out of business by increasing rental costs, utility fees and property taxes.

A prime downtown shopping location in Iowa City is the Jefferson Building, at the corner of Dubuque and Washington streets, owned by the UI. Of three local shops leaving Iowa City's downtown, two were in the Jefferson Building.

Bruce Sorrell, owner of Candy Malts News, said he could not afford to renew his lease because his rent was raised. Sorrell's landlord, the UI Facilities Corp., wouldn't budge on the amount of the rent increase, he said.

Job fair highlights openings

Paul Michas
The Daily Iowan

The UI Summer Jobs Fair held in the Union Wednesday proved to be a useful resource for both employers and students looking to fill summer positions.

The majority of jobs advertised at the fair were for summer camp counselors. There were also a number of local and out-of-town businesses looking for qualified UI students to fill summer openings.

"I've done a number of other college campuses, and we decided to give Iowa a try," said Len Keilin, supervisor for BBO Camping Services.

The camping service also relies on hiring people from outside the United States. It has had difficulty finding enough students to work as summer counselors because the pay is not very high, he said.

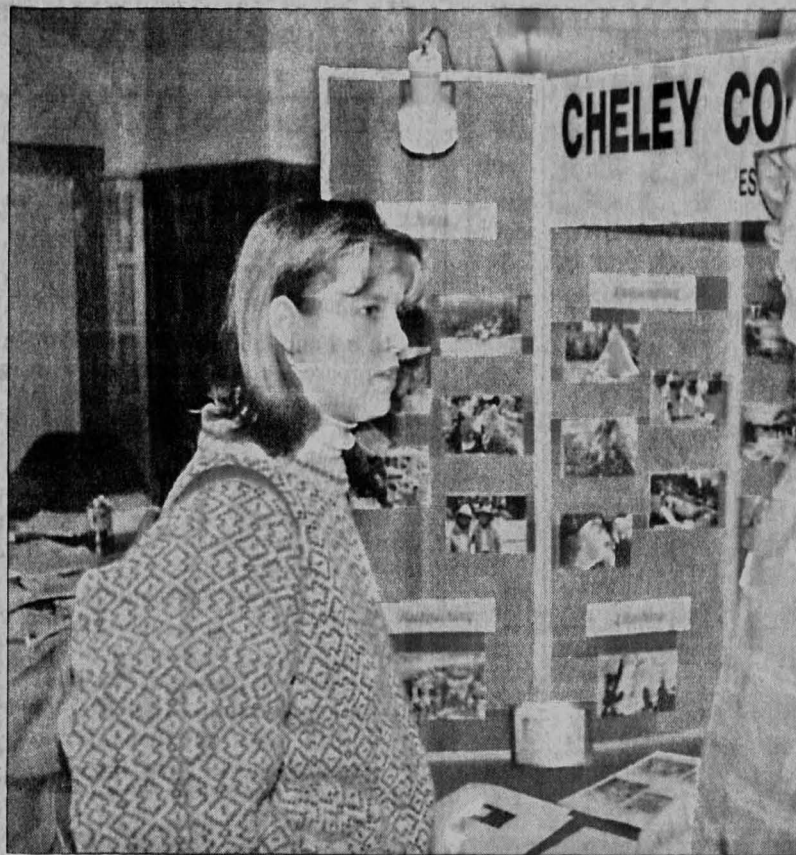

"A lot of college kids can't afford to work at camps because the cost of tuition is so high," Keilin said.

Jill Frey, coordinator for Camp Little Cloud in Dubuque, said in the past she has hired several UI students she met through the fair.

"I talk to a lot of people who seem interested and think it would be good," Frey said. "Since it's a seasonal position during the summer, students are the biggest group of people we get."

Students said the fair was a good place to make first contacts and possibly find a summer job.

"It gave me an idea of what jobs

Wednesday's Summer Jobs Fair in the Union's Main Lounge was a perfect opportunity for students — like UI junior Marney Davies, a business major — to get a head start in finding work. Davies said she was looking for a fun summer job.

She was available in Iowa City," said UI freshman Marsha Moss, who hopes to stay in town this summer.

Other students stopped by the fair simply to see what types of jobs were offered.

"I already have a summer job lined up in Cedar Falls, but I stopped in between classes to see if I missed any opportunities," said UI sophomore Steve Thill.

Some employers were on hand to offer summer internships that might lead to steady future employment.

"We've had a lot of success at Iowa," said Lori Glass, a State Farm Insurance personnel representative.

"This is one of our core schools for accounting."

State Farm hires two summer interns from each of 10 core accounting schools annually, including the UI. The students could be offered full-time jobs after they graduate, Glass said.

Jane Schildroth, director of the fair and associate for career planning at the UI Center for Career Development and Cooperative Education, was very happy with the student turnout at the fair.

"We think it's running very smoothly," Schildroth said. "We get good comments on the mix of the employers here."

Death penalty clears committee

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — The House Judiciary Committee on Wednesday voted to end the state's 30-year ban on capital punishment, with supporters contending "the people of Iowa deserve a debate" on the death sentence.

"I believe there would be children alive in Iowa today if we had the death penalty," said Rep. Steve Grubbs, R-Davenport, floor manager of the death penalty bill. "You don't have to be a law professor ... to have a sense of justice."

Critics fought the issue on moral and fiscal grounds, warning that innocent people would be executed while criminals aren't deterred by capital punishment.

They said that legislators were catering to polls which show most people favor the death sentence.

"It's an issue that was raised in a campaign," said Rep. Keith Kreiman, D-Bloomfield. "It's an issue which helped some politicians of both parties get elected."

The Judiciary Committee approved the death penalty on a 13-7 vote, sending it to the full House for debate in the next few weeks.

All seven opposing the measure were Democrats, while all 13 supporters were Republicans.

Legislators have been battling over the death sentence for weeks.

The bill approved by the committee Wednesday would reinstate capital punishment for a limited number of cases.

It could be imposed in cases of multiple violent felonies, such as when a rapist murders his victim. In addition, it could be applied in cases where children younger than 12 are killed and when some law enforcement officers are slain.

The bill is slightly broader than Gov. Terry Branstad sought, but most expect Branstad would sign it.

With the bill heading to the full House, debate certainly will be over how far the death penalty should be expanded. Some supporters of the proposal made it clear they will seek to apply capital punishment in a much broader range of cases.

"This bill, while a first step, doesn't go far enough," said Rep. David Millage, R-Bettendorf. "The argument over whether Iowa should have the death penalty is over."

The death penalty was a central issue in last year's campaign for governor.

"The citizens of this state are fed up with crime," said Rep. Michael Moreland, D-Ottumwa. "The easy solution for people to understand is to hang 'em."

"It may be a political game we're playing to say we're going to be tough on crime because we're going to kill a few people," said Moreland. But Grubbs argued for a balance of the scales of justice, saying that some crimes are so heinous they deserve the punishment of death.

While state law currently calls for life in prison without possibility of parole for the most violent criminals, Grubbs said many don't deserve the amenities of prison.

"I refuse to say that the most evil people in our society deserve to have these niceties for the next 50 years or 60 years," said Grubbs.

While critics argued that legislators were simply posturing, backers said the overwhelming support for the death sentence is a telling point.

"It would be arrogant of us to say we know better than the people of Iowa," said Grubbs. "The people of Iowa deserve a debate on this topic."

Under the bill, there would be a split trial for those facing capital charges. The first trial would be to determine guilt, while the second would let a jury determine if a defendant should face the death sentence. The method of execution would be lethal injection.

The debate over the death sentence is the most serious effort to reinstate capital punishment since the Legislature abolished it in 1965. There are 37 states with some version of the death sentence. Several states without the death sentence are considering reinstating it this year.

Gunman perfected technique

Richard Lrant
Associated Press

DEDHAM, Mass. — The man accused of last year's deadly assault on two abortion clinics bought his rifle months in advance and practiced firing bursts at close range a day before the attack, a prosecutor said Wednesday.

John C. Salvi III appeared in Norfolk County Superior Court and pleaded innocent to two counts of first-degree murder and five counts of assault with intent to murder.

The 22-year-old apprentice hairdresser from Hampton, N.H., is charged with killing two people and wounding three others at two family planning clinics in the Boston suburb of Brookline.

Assistant District Attorney John Kivlan described how Salvi bought a .22-caliber Ruger rifle on Oct. 11, then made it easier to hide and fire.

Salvi added a collapsible stock and two large "banana clip" magazines taped together to hold hundreds of rounds of hollow-point ammunition, Kivlan said.

A day before the Dec. 30 shootings, witnesses at a Salisbury shooting range watched as Salvi fired burst after burst.

"He was noticed because he fired in a rapid fire manner and with some accuracy," Kivlan said, and because he moved the targets closer and closer.

After the clinic shootings, the fugitive appeared at a Connecticut hair salon, where he called himself "Dan," and had his long curly hair cut short as descriptions of him were being broadcast nationwide, Kivlan said.

Salvi was arrested in Norfolk, Va., a day later, after allegedly firing the same rifle at a building housing an abortion clinic. No one was injured in that attack.

Kivlan also said the evidence would show that Salvi had made occasional contact with anti-abortion groups over the last year to try to sell them photographs. Kivlan said Salvi was not a member of any anti-abortion group.

Salvi, who has been jailed without bail since Jan. 9, faces a maximum sentence of life without parole, the state's mandatory penalty for first-degree murder. Authorities have postponed a decision on whether to seek federal charges that could carry the death penalty.

Jury blames Dow for faulty breast implants

HOUSTON — Jurors awarded $5.2 million to a woman and her husband Wednesday for physical problems she claimed were caused by leaking breast implants. It was the first time Dow Chemical Corp. has been found liable in a lawsuit over the product.

The jurors, in their 10th day of deliberations, decided that Dow Chemical was responsible for 20 percent of the damages suffered by retired nurse Gladys Laas and her husband; Dow Corning Corp., which is owned by Dow Chemical and Corning Inc., was found 80 percent liable. The jury rejected damage claims by another plaintiff, Army Dr. Jennifer Ladner of El Paso. The two women had sought a combined $29 million in damages from the companies.

Laas, a nurse from Bellville, and Ladner claimed that their faulty silicone implants caused a range of ailments, from simple fatigue to nerve damage. Ladner also said the implants caused her lupus.

UNLIKELY HERO SAVES 14

Juvenile delinquent battles Arkansas blaze

M.E. Freeman

PINE BLUFF, Ark. — Flames were melting a mobile home around him "like a marshmallow" when Steven Hines rushed inside to see if anyone was trapped.

Despite the violent blaze, "it was like they were all having the same dream, like they had all just finished playing," he said.

The 17-year-old boy — who has a delinquency record — roused them and single-handedly carried them outside.

He saved a dozen children ages 4 to 13 and their two adult baby sitters, both in their 70s.

It wasn't until hours later that he realized what he had done.

"I got scared then," he said.

Hines said he was riding his bicycle home from a grocery store Saturday night when he spotted flames from the house's chimney.

He called into the house but got no answer.

The door was unlocked, so he went inside, where his attention was drawn to the ceiling.

"Flames were moving across like waves on the ocean," he said Tuesday. "Stuff was melting. It was like a marshmallow."

One 9-year-old boy died in the house, and when authorities removed the body, Hines said he had to turn away.

"I didn't sleep that night. I was thinking about the boy," Hines said.

Authorities said the fire started near a wood-burning stove.

At Pine Bluff High School, where Hines is a sophomore, principal Andrew Tolbert wanted to recognize him at a school assembly Monday.

However, Hines cut school Monday, and Tolbert couldn't find him at his home.

"His attendance has not been consistent at best," Tolbert said Tuesday, adding that the boy's truancy shouldn't overshadow his heroism.

has been tarnished; he acknowledged he's been in state juvenile rehabilitation centers twice.

"I was young. I was doing things my brothers do and hanging with the wrong crowd," he said.

"I have to leave that alone," Hines added. "I have better things to do than that."

AMERICAN EXPERIENCE

CD-ROMs detrimental?

Over the past several years, technology has changed dramatically, especially with the many new features attached to computers. CD-ROMs are a brilliant invention and, in the near future, might even rule the education of our youth. However, the question that should be raised is, Are certain CD-ROMs more detrimental to us than others?

On Friday, Feb. 10, The Wall Street Journal published an article titled "U.S. history on a CD-ROM stirs up a storm," which explained a particular disk called, "A history of the United States between the years 1876 and 1914," which deals with issues such as homosexuality, birth control and abortion. Apple Computer Inc., which distributes the disk, has had complaints about the nature of the content. Among the audio clips on the CD-ROM is an interview with a woman who describes how to search for a birth-control device and a poem written by a homosexual cowboy. According to Stephen Brier, who helped put together the CD-ROM, "The sexual content amounts to only 40 pages and two interviews totaling 15 minutes." Brier feels that all the fuss over this disk is a little far-fetched.

The problem stems from the fact that the conservative point of view is very different from that of Apple. They state that the new CD-ROMs "don't pay attention to inventors, business leaders and people who made America great." Furthermore, "Focusing on these groups makes the American experience look less glorious than it ought to be." If it were up to them, this disk would not even be on the market. Apple, on the other hand, explains that the truth in history should not be ignored, and these subjects are certainly part of the present world. Conservatives, they assert, are trying to revise the historical record.

The points brought up by Apple and conservatives are strong. Nevertheless, the decision on whether or not to discontinue the disk should be up to consumers. If sales are low, then maybe the interest is as well. People who are offended by the material presented should simply avoid purchasing or viewing the CD-ROM. Oftentimes, it is difficult for people to openly discuss subjects such as these, but it is important for everyone to have knowledge about them. We may not always agree with certain ideas or thoughts, but expressing them and making them prevalent is our right as well as a large portion of the world we call our own.

ASSEMBLY LINE ATHLETICS

Producing sports stars

In an era of labor battles in professional sports, the National Basketball Association has been pointed to as the best example of a professional sport. Ironically, the marketing strategy which saved the NBA 15 years ago and made it a model for other sports to follow threatens to tear the league apart.

When Larry Bird and Earvin "Magic" Johnson arrived on the NBA scene, the league was far less popular than baseball or football. These two stars took their teams to the top immediately, rejuvenating the game by bringing to life one of the most storied rivalries in all of sport. Bird's Celtics and Johnson's Lakers played only twice a year, but the spotlight they brought to the rest of the league allowed other teams and players to rise to stardom.

While Bird and Johnson received most of the glory, they had tremendous supporting casts. The likes of Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, James Worthy, Kevin McHale and Robert Parish were all stars in their own right. Other teams had stars that achieved glory in the new spotlight of the NBA. Julius "Dr. J" Erving, Karl Malone, Charles Barkley and a young Michael Jordan all helped carry the bright NBA torch.

After the retirement of Bird, Johnson and Jordan, the league marketing experts decided the best way to replace these legends was to create stars for the '90s. Recently, however, they have found little star quality on teams other than Orlando, New York, Houston and Phoenix. Today's spotlight shines on a few isolated stars and a crop of unproven young athletes.

The excitement that was the lifeblood of the NBA in the '80s is now rapidly deteriorating. Last Saturday's slam dunk contest shows the tremendous difference between the star showcases of the '80s and '90s. The NBA used to pit stars and rising stars against one another in the slam dunk contest. Remember those showdowns between Jordan and Dominique Wilkins? Saturday was the most pathetic showcase of star power ever assembled during all-star weekend history.

Only Isaiah Rider and possibly new slam dunk champion Harold Miner could be classified as anything close to "rising stars." The collection of ball-tossing, dunk-missing no-stars battled their way to the worst dunk contest ever. The most amazing happenings during the contest were an air-ball dunk by Antonio Harvey and the inability of Tony Dumas to successfully slam even one dunk.

Instead of trying to produce stars the way assembly lines produce cars, the NBA needs to step back, give all the teams more national exposure and wait for the next real star to steal the spotlight. The next great star is probably right under the NBA's nose, buried underneath all of the superhype attached to wannabe stars like Chris Webber and Scottie Pippen.

The real stars of the NBA's past have always played within the framework of their team, which is what made them great. Maybe the next real stars are already in the league, on teams like Sacramento or Detroit that are rarely on national television. This once great game needs to focus more on its team play and less on the individual star power which suffered a severe outage on all-star weekend.

Take a break once in a while and lighten up the media these days is more fat.

I'm not about to launch a tirade against Kate Moss as the sole perpetrator of eating disorders among young women, but I do think the time has come for a broader (no pun intended) representation of both men and women in the images that surround us daily.

Our culture's ideal body type — as reflected in movies, television and print media — seems to have become more extreme and further removed from the bodies that usually spring from the human gene pool.

The figures of '50s sirens like Marilyn Monroe or Jayne Mansfield may have been more pronouncedly hourglassish than those of the general population, but they weren't altogether devoid of excess flab. Monroe reportedly wore a size 10, and pictures of her in bathing attire show wider hips and a more rounded belly than those of models we see today.

The sex goddesses currently lining runways and gracing magazine covers have the same inflated bust lines as those in decades past, but the rest of their bodies are taut, tanned and lean.

Today's models may naturally come by their seemingly unnatural bodies — no doubt some women are born with massive breasts atop an otherwise skeletal frame — but for many of the women who are sold this image, it is an ideal only attainable through cosmetic surgery; constant exercise; and a diet based mainly on peeled grapes, mineral water and laxatives.

The practical question, of course, is whether this kind of body is the only one that sells products: Would as many Diet Cokes, cars or cans of soup be sold without a fashionably emaciated body to catch consumers' attention?

If my boyfriend's somewhat over-evident admiration for Gillian Anderson — who plays agent Scully on television's "The X-Files" — is any indication, thin thighs may not be an indispensable component of sexiness.

I don't know Anderson's weight or dress size, but it occurred to me after watching several "X-Files" episodes that unlike the female police officers, detectives and federal agents of many TV shows, she doesn't habitually appear in miniskirts and high heels — rather, she wears suit jackets, slacks, long coats and the occasional sweat shirt. This not only lends veracity to the show (I'm so sure anyone could chase down criminals while teetering on 3-inch plastic spikes), it also supports my contention that viewers don't need to see buns, legs and abs of steel in order to respond positively to an actress or model (or the product she's selling, in the case of advertisements).

In our society, people do tend to associate thinness with desirability, but I doubt that there's an unbreakable genetic urge which makes us prefer thin people as mates — from prehistoric statuettes to Flemish paintings, many icons of beauty from other societies seem to indicate that a more-is-better attitude to fat prevailed.

Perhaps our current hatred of fatness stems from the fact that in America today, rich and high-calorie foods are easily available to everyone. Extra weight no longer proclaims the wealth and social status of its carrier. If anything, it tends to indicate the reverse — gym memberships and fresh produce are expensive; onion dip and Ding-Dongs are not.

Still, I can't believe that everyone is totally revolted by a few extra pounds, especially when so many Americans have a lot of extra weight. At a time when magazine pages and movies are supposedly open to more diverse images of people, when our ideal is no longer limited to the blond Cybill Shepherd-Christie Brinkley WASP look, I'd be surprised if bringing back the size 10 or 12 models would put people off entirely. At the very least, it would add a little variety.

I haven't made any specific mention yet of male actors and models, but the same goes for them, too — though the current standards for men seem a little less stringent than those for women, which perhaps explains why you will sometimes see a man just eat a doughnut instead of first discussing with a friend how they might be thinking about eating a doughnut and how terrible they feel about it and how many extra sit-ups they will need to do to get rid of all that horrible doughnut fat.

Eating healthily is all very well, of course, as is exercise — I highly recommend the former, and I've heard the latter is not so bad once you get used to it. But thinking that ordering the fettuccine Alfredo means that no one will ever want or love you is just pathetic. If we could start seeing media images of human beings with even a passing resemblance to the real thing, perhaps more of us would be able to enjoy ourselves once in a while.

This past Valentine's Day, I imagine that those of you who had your fill of chocolates and Barry White were in a better mood than those who kept strictly to the path of virtue with fat-free salad dressing and an hour on the Soloflex.

Any of you who feel compelled to keep up with Cindy Crawford and Claudia Schiffer should think about taking a break once in a while and — figuratively — lighten up.

TOM LINDSEY

We're now running a special on human worth

It's been just over two years since the untimely death of UI basketball star Chris Street.

For the most part, time has healed our community's wounds, but for Street's family, it seems that the wound will continue to remain open until it is filled with a couple of wheelbarrows full of monetary compensation. That's why Michael Street (Chris Street's father) has filed a civil suit against the snowplow driver, Charles Pense, who was found guilty of driving 7 miles over the speed limit when Chris Street pulled out in front of him during blizzard conditions.

Johnson County is also listed in the civil suit as a defendant because Michael Street claims Johnson County should be held accountable for inadequate lighting on the snowplow and for the sub-par training of its employees. In laymen's terms, Michael Street is suing Johnson County to fill the tremendous void left in the wheelbarrow after Pense's garden-shovel contribution. By the way, if you haven't noticed by now, Michael Street is essentially suing us — the citizens of Johnson County, the very same citizens who poured out their souls to the Street family after their son's death.

More significant is that Michael Street's attorneys are attempting to call in an ensemble of "expert" witnesses — including the likes of Bobby Knight; Don Nelson, coach of the Golden State Warriors (who just recently stepped down as head coach, citing that "I basically have done a lousy job this year, and I definitely deserve to be replaced"); and some NBA scouts — to determine what Chris Street's monetary worth would be had he lived.

I don't know about you, but this concept of placing a dollar value on a person's life bothers me. This is probably due to the fact that if you plugged my name, my current worth and my potential worth into an actuarial equation, I'm sure the computer would keep spitting out negative numbers, leaving me with the morbid realization that I should have been dead some time ago — just to break even!

Consequently, my raison d'être has been subsequently shattered with this realization as it slowly seeps its way into the dark contours of my subconscious mind, playing itself out as I dream at night about what I could have been, or more relevantly — what I could have been worth.

Act 5, Scene 7. A dingy courtroom with a dungeonlike atmosphere. The courtroom is completely quiet except for the slow dribble of water drops from the ceiling and the nervous tapping of a pencil by the plaintiff, Me (Tom Lindsey). The plaintiff's lawyer is pacing nervously at the front of the courtroom.

Lawyer of plaintiff: Your honor, as our next witness, I would like to call the defendant — one of the three goddesses of fate — to the stand. Also, let it be noted for the record that the other two defendants named in the case couldn't be summoned here today because of their prior commitments regarding the outcome of the O.J. Simpson trial.

The goddess of fate proceeds to the front of the courtroom, places her hand on a Bible, recites her part of the oath before the bailiff has a chance to open his mouth and takes the stand without any direction.

Lawyer of plaintiff: Is it true, Ms. Fate, that you dealt my client a crummy hand from the very day he was born?

Fate: Yes, this is true.

A collective gasp from the courtroom's spectators, followed by a melee of small conversations. The judge slams his gavel on the bench.

Judge: Order in the court! Please continue your line of questioning.

Lawyer of plaintiff: Is it also true, Ms. Fate, that no matter how hard my client tried, you continued to deal him anything but a face card on his second draw?

Fate: Yes, this is also true.

Lawyer of plaintiff: Your honor, on behalf of the plaintiff, I rest my case.

The lawyer of the plaintiff walks to his seat with an air of confidence as he winks at his client. The lawyer of the defendant approaches the stand, his hand cupped under his chin as if assimilating a thinking gesture.

Lawyer of defendant: Ms. Fate, could you go about telling the jury how you deal these cards in question?

Fate: It's very simple. I randomly shuffle the cards, and then I deal the top card from the deck. You know, like Vegas.

Lawyer of defendant: I see. So there's no way you could've known what card the plaintiff was to be dealt?

Fate: Correct. I just deal what comes to the top.

Lawyer of defendant: So there is absolutely no way you could be held personally accountable for the fate of the plaintiff? Nor is there any way that you could be held responsible for what the plaintiff could've been worth had he been dealt a different card?

Fate: You are correct.

Judge: With this last response in mind, I hereby rest my case on behalf of the defendant, thus exonerating her from any wrongdoings in regard to the potential worth of the plaintiff had he lived a financially prosperous life.

Upon hearing the words "had he lived," I snapped out of my dream only to find myself covered by the sweaty sheets which used to cover my hand-me-down futon. As I stared at the ceiling, I could hear the slow dripping of raindrops which fell outside my window, reminding me of the fact that it was only a dream and never could have happened had it been real.

Report connects Yasser Arafat to rights violations

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — New questions have been raised about how Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat deals with dissent and came amid fresh reports of beatings and humiliation of detainees in Gaza's police lockups.

Over the weekend, the New York-based Human Rights Watch said in a report that Arafat's government often acted in a "repressive fashion." It complained of arbitrary arrests, jail house beatings and the lack of due process.

Palestinian officials acknowledged Wednesday that there have been some transgressions by the security forces but denied there was a policy of systematic abuse.

"No one is more concerned about safeguarding Palestinian human rights than we are," the chief Palestinian prosecutor, Khaled Kidreh, told The Associated Press.

"Human rights organizations should deal with us as a sovereign democratic state and not as our custodians."

Arafat has been under growing pressure from Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to arrest and try Islamic militants involved in a rash of deadly attacks on Israelis. Rabin told Arafat last week that he would not negotiate a troop withdrawal from the West Bank until he complied.

Judge delivers shocking denial in Microsoft hearing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department and computer software giant Microsoft Corp. are carefully calculating their next legal steps after a federal judge's stunning rejection of their proposed antitrust settlement.

Although U.S. District Judge Stanley Sporkin has grumbled for months that the settlement did not go far enough in restricting Microsoft, his decision Tuesday to reject the deal was so unusual that both sides — Microsoft and the Justice Department — were stunned into virtual silence.

Microsoft spokesman Mich Mathews said in Seattle, "We are disappointed."

Attorney General Janet Reno said, "I'm going to read the opinion."

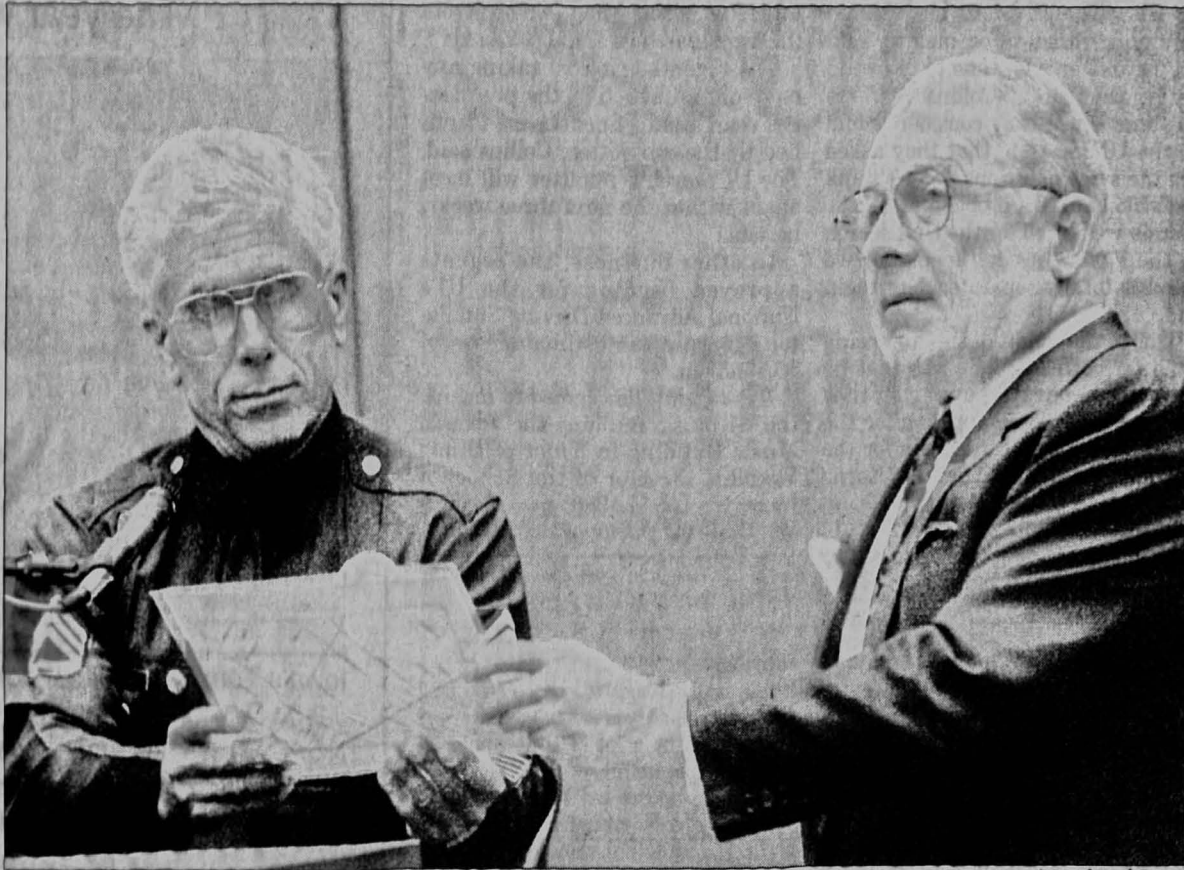

Both sides said they needed time to review Sporkin's 45-page ruling before deciding what to do next.

Microsoft's stock plunged Wednesday in heavy trading on the NASDAQ stock market. By mid-morning, Microsoft shares were down $2.12 1/2 to $59.75.

The Tunney Act requires that antitrust settlements be approved by a federal judge as being in the public interest. Approval is so common that it's assumed by all parties.

But in this case, Sporkin called the remedies in the proposed consent decree "too little, too late."

Sporkin's ruling leaves the government several options: It could appeal his ruling, it could go to trial on its allegations against Microsoft or try to negotiate a new agreement with the company that would satisfy Sporkin. The company could join an appeal, decide it wants to go to trial or offer to open new negotiations.

Associated Press

Ito allows emergency blood tests

Linda Deustch
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Hoping to demolish claims that police planted evidence to frame O.J. Simpson, prosecutors won approval Wednesday to retest blood from his home and the crime scene for traces of a laboratory preservative.

Superior Court Judge Lance Ito granted approval for the emergency FBI testing as a prosecutor said Simpson's blood was found on a gate in the alley at the condominium where his ex-wife and her friend were slashed to death.

Prosecutors contend that if police planted blood that had been drawn from Simpson or from Nicole Brown Simpson's corpse, it would have contained a commonly used lab preservative called EDTA.

If the tests find no EDTA, the investigators will be exonerated, prosecutor Rockne Harmon said during a hearing held with the jury out of the room.

The tests will be conducted Monday on such items as the blood on the gate and a sock found in Simpson's bedroom. The sock was stained with what prosecutors said was his ex-wife's blood.

The blood on the gate was identified as Simpson's by recent tests, Harmon said. Previously, prosecutors said Simpson's blood was found leading from the bodies toward the gate, through which the killer is alleged to have fled.

Police took a blood sample from Simpson the day after the murders, when the former football star came under suspicion. They also drew blood from Brown Simpson's body. Those samples were then mixed with EDTA, according to prosecutors.

Legal experts said the testing for EDTA may be unprecedented and ultimately less than definitive. Harmon, in fact, noted in court that EDTA also is present in laundry detergent and many foods and could be present on Simpson's socks.

In other developments, ABC on Wednesday showed a "closed-circuit presentation," filmed three months before the murders, in which Simpson touts a vitamin supplement called Juice-Plus and says it made him feel so good, he no longer had to take pain pills for his arthritis. The defense has claimed that Simpson's arthritis and bad knees rendered him incapable of carrying out the slayings.

After Wednesday's hearing on the blood, testimony resumed and the defense continued its campaign to suggest police overlooked or botched evidence.

Sgt. David Rossi, who was worked over by defense attorney F. Lee Bailey on Tuesday, returned to the stand and insisted he was careful not to obliterate any evidence by walking on it.

Bailey accused the officer of failing to follow police regulations for handling a crime scene, suggesting Rossi should have made sure the coroner was called immediately. The officer said that was not his job.

The coroner didn't arrive until hours after the bodies of Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman were found, thereby losing an opportunity to more closely fix a time of death.

In his opening statement, defense attorney Johnnie Cochran Jr. suggested police smeared Brown Simpson's blood on one of the socks in Simpson's room. Harmon said the gate blood will also be tested for EDTA in case the defense argues that a detective sprinkled Simpson's blood on the gate.

Michael Pasano, a Miami defense attorney and former federal prosecutor, said he has never seen EDTA become an issue in any cases he's handled.

"My reaction is, I'm not sure this testing will show much of anything," Pasano said. "EDTA is in a zillion things from what I understand. I'm not sure this will be of much real value. Unfortunately, it may confuse the jury, may sound like more than it is."

Penguin population poses problems

Larry Gerber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Urban life can take its toll on even the toughest old birds, and these birds were never very tough to begin with.

Forty-four black-footed penguins at the Los Angeles Zoo have died over the past 10 years; a population that once reached 27 is down to four.

"It would appear ... that it is the wrong exhibit for the species and, indeed, it probably is the wrong species for the L.A. Zoo," said Gretchen Wyler, president of the animal rights group Ark Trust.

These 2-foot-tall birds aren't from Antarctica, like the bigger, better-known Emperor penguins that look as though they're dressed in tuxedos. They sport black-and-white patches and stripes and come from the relatively warm coast of South Africa.

Their unusual braying call has earned them the nickname "jackass penguins," although it sounds more like the coo of an angry dove.

What would they have to be stressed about?

For one thing, there are three males competing for the attention of one female, a panel of experts noted.

For another, unknown predators have gotten into the open enclosure and killed six of the penguins.

And instead of a big cold ocean to swim in when they get hot and bothered, they have a 3-foot-deep pool.

The birds do just fine in other warm city zoos, the consultants said.

The panel's recommendations, issued last year, came to light this week in the Los Angeles Daily News, which also reported a Feb. 3 internal memo from animal curator Les Schobert.

That memo to zoo director Mark Goldstein urged that the exhibit be closed and the birds be sent elsewhere before summer.

"The penguin issue has gone beyond what is in the best interest of the birds, and I want to refocus on their welfare," Schobert wrote.

Schobert declined to discuss the memo.

Zoo spokeswoman Lora LaMarca acknowledged the penguin program has had its "ups and downs."

"We're out of kilter right now, definitely out of kilter," she said.

The last time activists got so upset at the zoo was in 1992, when Hannibal, a 5-ton African bull elephant, died after being tranquilized so he could be caged for shipment to a zoo in Mexico.

Most of the penguins died of diseases that were aggravated by stress due to heat, competition and poor nutrition, the panel of experts said.

The zoo has tried to give the birds more ventilation in their 30-by-40-foot pen, surrounded by concrete walls, by installing a fan and cutting back brush. It's also considering enclosing the pen and giving the birds air conditioning.

And it's looking at easing the gender pressure by boosting the population to six males and six females, LaMarca said.

ad will be Hispanic Outlook on Higher Education and Black Issues in Higher Education, Collins said. The two publications were chosen partly because they target a minority audience, he said.

"One of the goals the regents are quite serious about is that of achieving a diverse pool of candidates," Collins said. "In doing that, this is just a part of the effort."

To gather a variety of possible nominees, regent Tom Collins said there must be open communication between the search committee and the executive search firm — in the UI's case, Korn / Ferry International of Dallas.

"The recruiting companies know how broad (the pool) should be, and they seek out candidates that way, too," Collins said. "You're not going to find a president of the university who reads a want ad, so you have to make sure the recruiting firm you're working with knows that you want it very broad with no exceptions."

Korn / Ferry's UI representative, Bill Funk, will also be working for the University of Northern Iowa during its presidential search. UNI President Constantine Curris will be leaving the university June 1 to become the president of Clemson University in Clemson, S.C.

Both Collins and Berenstein said Funk's involvement in the UNI search won't detract from his duties at the UI.

"When (Funk) was hired to assist the UI with our search, the regents were quite insistent on making sure that he had enough time to devote to staffing the search," Collins said. "I'm sure that when they considered him for the UNI search, that they asked him the same questions. I don't think that's likely to be a problem."

Funk was hired for the UNI search on the basis that he keep the two searches totally separate, Berenstein said.

"One of the conditions in him being hired for both searches was that he have two separate panels, so that consequently people applying for the UI job will not be candidates for the UNI job," he said. "We figured (Korn / Ferry) was familiar with the situation and the process, and we could utilize what they had learned from the Iowa search for the UNI search."

The regents won't be taking any more official action in the presidential search until finalists are identified by the committee, Collins said. The UI search committee will meet again within the next three weeks, he said.

In other business, the regents approved funding for the UI's National Advanced Driving Simulator Project at an estimated cost of $5.7 million.

The regents also agreed to rename the UI Music Building the Voxman Music Building in honor of Himie Voxman, director of the School of Music from 1954-1980.

"We're not going to go too far right or too far left," he said in a promise that went largely unfulfilled.

"I would advise people they should stay behind us," Ford said before they started. That would have been good advice.

The group hit more than its share of shots into the galleries, and shouts of "Fore" rang out with regularity.

"It's the funniest thing I've ever seen," Geoff Russell of Golf World magazine declared midway through their front nine. "They're doing reecially bad."

They did improve somewhat as the game progressed, in keeping with Clinton's pregame description of his golf pattern.

"Half the time out here it takes six holes for me before I calm down and start thinking about what's going on," Clinton said while warming up. His mission was no doubt further complicated by the throngs of onlookers and armada of Secret Service agents in golf carts that tracked the team's every move.

After nine holes, Bush was out front at 45, while Clinton shot 47 and Ford 53. Par for the full 18 holes was 72. The official scorers declined to tally Hope's score, but he seemed to be doing well for a man of 91.

"I just want to thank the man upstairs for giving us this sun," declared Hope on a day that must have made Clinton glad he left Washington's snow and cold behind.

The tournament featured plenty of other big names. Golf greats included Arnold Palmer, Fuzzy Zoeller and Curtis Strange, and show business stars such as Joe Pesci, Clint Eastwood and Glen Campbell were on hand as well.

Clinton was playing without the benefit of his favorite putter, a 35-year-old Titleist Bullseye that he thinks he accidentally stowed in someone else's bag.

"Actually, I lost it on purpose so I could have an excuse," he joked.

Bush spent a lot of time apologizing to people he hit.

First he had to say he was sorry to 71-year-old Norma Early of Vista, Calif. Bleeding but unbowed, she told Bush, "I'm sorry I got in the way of your shot."

Later, Bush hit John Rynd of Chula Vista on the back of the leg and went up to ask him, "How's the wound?"

"No blood, no problem," Rynd told him and got an autographed ball for his trouble. "Sorry, sir, I wasn't looking," Rynd said.

out getting my parents involved," she said. "All the loans and stocks are in my name. For the most part, it entailed a lot of research, being able to know your business and loving it."

Two months after her Prairie Lights shop opened, Cronbaugh began to research the retail business.

"I got a little bored; the coffee company was running well and all the tweaks were out," she said. "I wanted a streetfront coffeehouse, so I researched, went back to the bank and opened The Java House the 19th of October."

Although Cronbaugh hasn't seen the financial statements and has big loan payments to make, she said the businesses are staying afloat and continuing to grow.

The Java House is constantly buzzing with diverse groups of people seated in funky mismatched chairs and sipping from jumbo-sized mugs and coffee cups.

"In the morning, we attract a professional crowd — such as lawyers, accountants and UI faculty," Cronbaugh said. "On weeknights, the crowd is mainly university students, with families and high-school kids on the weekends."

UI graduate student Dena Levy, who is studying political science, said the atmosphere and the popular modern folk music sets The Java House apart from other study spots.

"It is more inviting to stay," she said. "You're not rushed, it's not loud and smoky, and there are plenty of plug-ins for my computer."

Senior medical student Eric Straumanis and his three buddies designated The Java House as their new hangout.

"We are studying for the medical boards, so we will be regulars for the next two weeks," he said. "It's less cooped up than the library, and it serves good coffee."

The Java House staff consists of operations manager Steve Harris, who is Cronbaugh's boyfriend; a business manager; three or four supervisors; and 35 to 40 college part-timers. Making sure everything runs smoothly is a full-time commitment for Cronbaugh, who works six nine-hour days per week.

"Even when I'm not physically working, I'm mentally here all of the time," she said. "You have to carry it around with you always and constantly baby-sit the store because it is your reputation."

Cronbaugh plans to stick around Iowa City after graduating this summer to manage her growing businesses. She is currently in the process of researching her third company, a roasting facility. This would allow her to bring in her own beans instead of buying them from outside distributors.

"Although it won't involve a lot of staffing, it is a big project," she said. "I hope to build the company outside of Iowa City and have it open by September."

Even though her extracurricular activities consist of traveling to trade shows, conventions and committee meetings, Cronbaugh doesn't regret taking the plunge.

"I did the whole dorm thing for two years and activated into a sorority before getting really serious," she said. "After spending all of my Christmas, spring breaks and summers researching and thinking, 'I want to do this,' I finally did it."

FERGUSON

Wednesday, Ferguson launched into a wandering speech that claimed the Jewish Defense League knew of a plot to kill him.

He said last November's prison slaying of Dahmer, who admitted cannibalizing some of his victims, also was tied to the conspiracy against him.

"The Jeffrey Dahmer incident was not a coincidence. ... He was set up as a prelude against me," he said. "There's a conspiracy to murder me if I'm convicted."

Ferguson also complained that he was forced against his will to tape an appearance for King's show, a statement the judge found ludicrous.

"I saw you on Larry King last night, and you didn't appear to be under coercion," Belfi said.

On Tuesday, Ferguson grilled his only witness so far, Detective Brian Parpan, about computer files indicating that a Colin L. Ferguson — no relation — had a police record on Long Island.

Ferguson hinted that this man could be the real gunman. But Parpan said Colin L. Ferguson had nothing to do with the case.

chase the Jefferson Building — formerly a hotel — in 1951, said Larry Bruse, director of the Facilities Corp.

"I tried to negotiate with them, but they wouldn't," Sorrell said. "So I couldn't afford to stay."

The empty vendor space at 127 E. Washington St. — formerly Candy Malts News — is 900 square feet. Previous rent for the spot was $1,787 plus utilities and other overhead costs, which is based on a per-square-foot estimate.

Dan Black, who manages the Jefferson Building for the Facilities Corp. through Iowa State Bank & Trust Co., 102 S. Clinton St., said he is looking for new renters for the two empty stores but would not disclose the amount of the new rent.

Rents collected at the Jefferson Building are among the highest rent prices downtown, according to Ernie Galer, former president of the Iowa City Board of Realtors, 800 S. Dubuque St.

The Jefferson Building is considered extremely lucrative property, Galer said.

The top seven floors of the Jefferson Building are occupied by offices for UI Teaching Assistants. The rent increases are not a ploy so the UI can take over the entire building for office and classroom space, Bruse said.

"As far as I can say, the university doesn't have any other plans, except for eternally using the top seven floors for service and renting out the bottom floors to merchants," he said.

A portion of profits from the collected rents of the Jefferson Building is funneled into the UI Foundation, which raises money for the university, Bruse said.

"We net around $40,000 to $50,000 a year (from the Jefferson Building) and put it right back into contributions from the (UI) Foundation," Bruse said. "It all cycles back into the university in a circle."

The rest of the rent profits collected from the building tenants is sunk into building maintenance, he said.

The UI buildings on campus are exempt from property tax, but the Facilities Corp. pays property taxes on the Jefferson Building. However, the corporation is exempt from income tax.

The Facilities Corp. makes the final decision to raise rent, Black said.

"We stand in the owner's shoes," he said. "The decisions are made mutually, though."

The UI Facilities Corp. is presently negotiating with potential renters, Black said. Renovations will be made in the building as a lure for prospective tenants, he said.

Needed renovations to the Jefferson Building are a contributing factor to the rent increase, Bruse said. Black agreed.

"The Facilities Corporation has shown a lot of interest in it," Black said. "They're committed to making it (the Jefferson Building) look appealing."

Sorrell, however, said he spent his own money to make renovations in his store before he went out of business.

Sorrell said he is not angry with the UI about the increase in rent.

"It's just good business sense," he said.

Willa Dickens, co-owner of Herten & Stocker Jewelers, 101 S. Dubuque St., has been in the Jefferson Building for 50 years — dating back to the time it was a hotel.

The UI Facilities Corp. has been a silent landlord, he said.

"We really don't have anything to do with the University of Iowa," Dickens said. "There's no contact with the university at all because it's all taken care of through the bank."

Jim Moore, owner of Stewart Shoes, said the Facilities Corp. was a good landlord throughout his 38-year stay in the building.

Iowa City-Johnson County Fine Arts Council, 129 E. Washington St., is housed in the basement of the Jefferson Building. The group feels its monthly rent is worth the space, according to the interim co-president, Shirley Wyreck.

"It's the best building we can get in downtown Iowa City in our price range of being able to rent," Wyreck said. "We've had a very good relationship with the Facilities Corporation in the 15 years we've been there."

The high price of the Jefferson Building goes with the territory, Dickens said.

"The location has been very good, but I'm not sure it's as good as it was 10 years ago," Dickens said. "Now, the Pedestrian Mall is on the College Street side; the parking problem is always a constant; and our rent has become very, very expensive."

Selig admits baseball is hurting economically

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time, acting baseball commissioner Bud Selig admitted today that the strike had affected 1995 revenues for the sport.

Appearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on antitrust, business and competition, Selig painted a bleak economic picture. "There is very little sales in radio and television," he said. "Ticket sales are down. The national TV package is dormant."

But Selig said some clubs couldn't afford to play this season under the old contract. "We have a significant number of teams that are, quite frankly, hanging on for dear life. There are a significant number of clubs that could not make it through the season."

He got little sympathy from Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., who chastised Selig for promising to hire a commissioner to succeed Fay Vincent and then not doing it.

Simpson asked Selig not to tell Congress that the antitrust exemption was essential. "Please spare me that you have to have this or that for baseball to survive," he said. "It is pure humbug, babble. If it is so darned good and as essential as mother's milk, then why isn't baseball being played?"

Selig told the subcommittee that it would be up to American League owners to decide whether the league will attempt to force Baltimore Orioles owner Peter Angelos to use replacements.

Angelos has resisted that plan so far. Management lawyer Chuck O'Connor said he was informed today that the Canadian government had decided to allow the Montreal Expos to use replacements in Quebec. The Toronto Blue Jays, barred from using replacements in Ontario, have said they would play home games in Dunedin, Fla.

Selig and Donald Fehr were back before Congress after three senators introduced a bipartisan bill to partially repeal the 73-year-old exemption.

"We will play baseball in 1995 and we welcome all major league players who want to come back to work," Selig told the committee.

"None of that has a scintilla to do with the antitrust laws, with the antitrust exemption enjoyed by baseball."

Hawks finally figure it out

Iowa hangs on late to upset Gophers

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Iowa guard Chris Kingsbury amazes his teammates all week during the Hawkeyes' practice sessions. He did the same thing to the Minnesota Gophers on Wednesday night.

"He's one of the most amazing long-distance shooters at so young an age," Iowa coach Tom Davis said after seeing Kingsbury score 25 points in the Hawkeyes' 74-70 Big Ten victory over the No. 24-rated Gophers.

Iowa was without the services of forward Russ Millard, who remained in Iowa City, hospitalized with pneumonia.

Kingsbury, a sophomore from Hamilton, Ohio, hit seven of 12 3-point shots, including one with 1:22 to play that put Iowa on top for good at 72-70.

His hot shooting helped Iowa stop Minnesota's three-game winning string and also helped avenge a bitter one-point loss to Minnesota three weeks ago at Iowa City.

During a 5:05 stretch midway through the second half, Kingsbury connected on four straight 3-pointers as Iowa scrambled back from a six-point deficit.

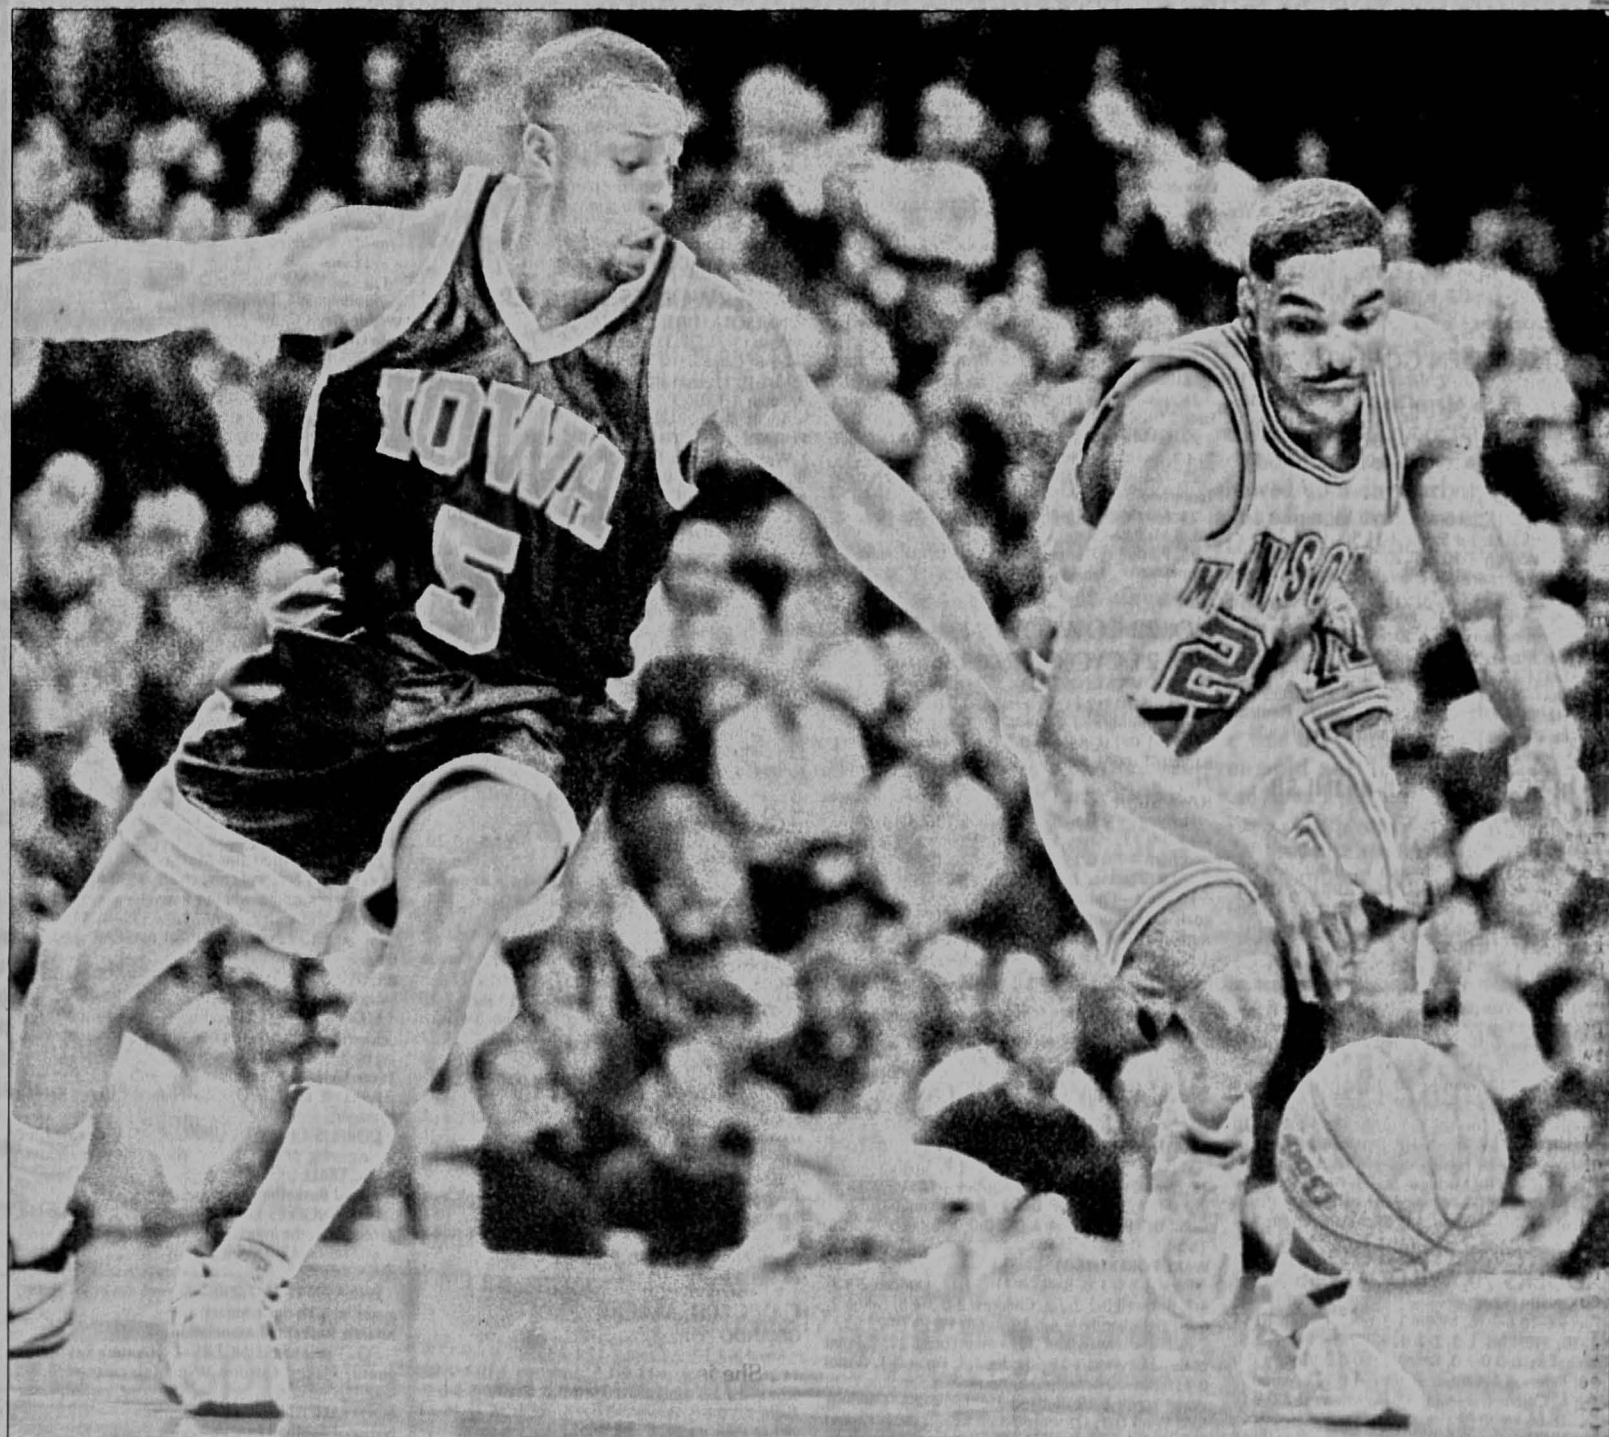

He also scored Iowa's final basket of the first half, a 3-point shot from at least 30 feet that brought gasps from the Williams Arena crowd.

"It's amazing the wrist strength he has," said teammate Jess Settles.

"In the gym, we've seen him make 50 of 60 during practice."

Iowa's guards were 12 of 25 from the field, compared to five of 22 by Minnesota's guards.

"That was the difference in the basketball game," said Minnesota Coach Clem Haskins. "I said all along that they were a dangerous club. The second half became the Chris Kingsbury show."

Kingsbury, who has made nine 3-point shots in a game twice this year, holds the Iowa record for 3-pointers made and attempted. He tried 19 3-point shots in a game against Long Island earlier this year, making nine.

"The coach doesn't have a problem with me shooting from anywhere, 19 feet or 30 feet," said the 6-foot-5 Kingsbury.

Iowa, which had lost four of its previous five games, raised its Big Ten record to 5-7, 15-9 overall.

Iowa shot 48 percent from the field, including 12 of 25 from 3-point range. Guard Andre Woolridge had 14 points for the Hawkeyes and Jim Bartles added 11.

Jayson Walton came off the bench and scored a season-high 20 points.

EXPANSION DRAFT

Jaguars make Beuerlein No. 1

Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Steve Beuerlein joined a "Who's Who in the NFL" club Wednesday when Jacksonville made him the first pick in the first expansion draft in 19 years.

For the rest of the day, it was mainly "who's that?" as the Jaguars and the Carolina Panthers went for the unknown, the underpaid and, in some cases, the relatively unfit.

Beuerlein, who fell out of favor with coach Buddy Ryan after a good 1993 season with the Arizona Cardinals, became an asterisk when the Jaguars made him the first pick.

"The quarterback position made him the proper choice," Tom Coughlin, Jacksonville's coach and general manager, said.

But after the 30-year-old Beuerlein, due to make about $2.7 million next year, the new teams turned to youth and salary, preferably low.

Rod Smith, a 24-year-old cornerback who started seven games for New England last year, was Carolina's first pick. "I'm just one of 30 guys," Smith said. "I'm not worried about the contract at this point."

And so it went, with each team required to spend at least $14 million against what's expected to be a salary cap of about $36 million next season. Of the first 36 players chosen, 24 made under $200,000 last year.

In Beuerlein, the Jaguars got what Coughlin said "was graded in the elite players in this particular draft." He will immediately jump to No. 1 on the depth chart ahead of Andre Ware, the former Heisman Trophy winner who was released by Detroit and Minnesota last year.

Beuerlein was philosophical.

"One of my claims to fame throughout my career is that I've always been able to take a hit," he said. "I'm sure that won't be any different going down to Jacksonville. I'll stand in there and take a hit with the best of them."

Carolina didn't take a quarterback until the 22nd round, when it took Doug Pederson, Miami's third stringer. The Panthers, however, are expected to make a strong effort to sign Frank Reich, Buffalo's third-stringer, who has an in with Bill Polian, the Carolina general manager who held the same position with the Bills for a decade.

But most of the choices were far lesser known and lower-priced than Beuerlein. And the existing teams, allowed to pull back one player after losing one, did the same as they protected their younger rather than the high-

Parity.

The meaning of the word has never rung more true than when describing the NCAA college basketball tournament. The big boys sit at the top of the polls now but some will not escape the curse of the underdog come March.

Teams like Connecticut, North Carolina, UCLA and Kentucky will gobble up the top seeds. But be warned that once the tournament pairings are announced, it will be a free-for-all.

The conference powerhouses must be weary of the Rider College's, the Santa Clara's, and Princeton's. If you don't recognize these teams, check with Connecticut, Arizona and Georgetown. They should have a pretty good idea.

This year's field will feature some teams that used to camp in front of the TV come mid-March.

Hawkeyes focus on fulfilling potential

Mike Triplett
The Daily Iowan

After squeaking by the Hawkeyes last weekend, the head coach of the Big Ten's No. 1 women's basketball team said that everyone would be apprehensive about playing Iowa.

"Gosh, they're good," Purdue coach Lin Dunn said. "They're real good."

That's no news flash to Iowa coach C. Vivian Stringer.

"We consider ourselves in the company of the Purdue and the Ohio States and the Penn States," Stringer said Wednesday in her weekly press conference. "I know that this team does not consider itself to be what its record is.

"We can say that best by showing on the floor that the Iowa Hawkeyes may be down, but don't think for a minute that we are not of this category."

The problem is, for the most part, Iowa hasn't been showing that on the floor. With just two weekends remaining in the regular season, Iowa is 8-14 overall and 4-8 in the Big Ten Conference, good for a ninth-place tie.

After last Friday's loss at home to Michigan State, Stringer admitted that the team does have excuses, such as youth and a multitude of injuries, but she knows Iowa isn't playing up to its potential.

"I don't think that there's any question that we need to win and we just aren't," she said. "The truth of the matter is I think we should be looking a lot better."

Wednesday, Stringer discussed

why Iowa isn't looking a lot better. She said that, at times, she has seen players like Tia Jackson, Tiffany Gooden, Tangela Smith, Jenny Noll and Shannon Perry play to their capabilities, but the team just hasn't put it all together.

"I know that this team does not consider itself to be what its record is."

Vivian Stringer, Iowa women's basketball coach

"Has it happened yet? No. Do we need it? Yes," Stringer asked and answered. "(Once it does), then we've got something there. We might get out there and stun these people at the Big Ten (tournament). And the next thing you know, we get invited to the NCAA."

"It's possible, not because you should dream and believe that anything is possible, but it's possible because, at various points through the course of the year, those little things that I'm talking about have been demonstrated."

Those "little things" are the fundamentals. In recent weeks, Stringer has said the team has gone back to focusing on the basics in order to get back on track.

"We do need to execute things, just the small things, in a better way," Stringer explained. "We're not talking about running any extra plays. We're talking about catching the ball and making sure that we're making good passing decisions. We're talking about little things like 'Were your hands out?' or 'Did you catch it and rebound it and bring it down to your knees or did you chin it?'"

"We're trying to recognize how

WHO ARE THESE GUYS?

No-names lead off spring training

Chris Sheridan
Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — A hodgepodge of potential strikebreakers, minor leaguers and non-roster invitees milled about the New York Yankees locker room Wednesday, giving a preview of replacement baseball. And like the strike itself, the presence of the players raised more questions than it answered. "We told them our policy, and I hope you get this correct, that they are not replacement players until April 3," general manager Gene Michael said. "We're not calling them major leaguers, we're not calling them minor leaguers, we're calling it Yankees' spring training, and if they make the team they'll become major leaguers and play the games," Michael explained. The Yankees, St. Louis Cardinals, Seattle Mariners and San Francisco Giants will have replacement players in uniform today when they open camps to pitchers and catchers. Other teams will begin practice by Monday. The Yankees held an orientation session in the morning, and players then underwent physicals, received uniforms and got a feel for the spring training complex. The Yankees issued a roster with 27 players' names, but the team made no differentiation between the 14 minor-leaguers who are going about business as usual and the 13 others who are either replacement players or non-roster invitees. When the baseball strike began Aug. 12, the 763 players who were on major-league rosters stopped working. Since then, the Players' Association has asked all players on 40-man rosters (major leaguers and top minor league prospects) to stay out of camp. That has pushed the total of potential strikers to nearly 1,100. "We're going to bring in the best players we can. We're hopeful that the caliber will be good enough, we don't know exactly what it is because it's new territory, but we are going to have baseball." At the Cardinals camp, players were told they'd be given different color uniforms, some with the same numbers. "I'm curious more than excited," manager Joe Torre said. "I think it'll be an opportunity to see the young players that you don't ordinarily see. The bulk will be our minor-league players." The Yankees' players who showed up a day early ranged from a confused and wary Triple-A starter to a sandlot player from Brooklyn who didn't hear from the Yankees' until Monday afternoon. There was a Double-A pitcher who promised not to play with replacements, a journeyman 32-year-old pitcher who didn't know if he was a replacement player, a 29-year-old satellite dish salesman who hasn't played baseball in three years, a 26-year-old right-hander who last pitched in Taiwan in 1993 and a bullpen catcher for the Blue Jays who is apparently looking for one more shot at the big time.

REFUSING TO USE REPLACEMENTS

Orioles' camp shows no signs of spring

Ben Walker
Associated Press

SARASOTA, Fla. — The locker room is deserted, and the only object in Cal Ripken's stall is a small, wooden stool. The practice fields are empty, except for a man on a lawn mower. A day before the start of spring training for the Baltimore Orioles, and all is quiet. "Maybe I'll get in the cage a little later, just so you can hear the crack of the bat," assistant general manager Frank Robinson said Wednesday. Then again, even that might be difficult.

"There are a lot of rumors and things out there, so it's a chance to hear them explain it from their side," Regan said. "I think the more accurate information that's out there, the better." Besides, aside from meetings, there hasn't been tons to do so far. At least, not anything that involves picking up a bat and ball.

"I'm trying to stay positive through this thing, but I guess it looks like they may not be coming in for a while."

Phil Regan, Baltimore Orioles manager

The Orioles, like many other major league teams, have not placed their bat orders because of uncertainty caused by the strike. Normally, on a slow day right before camp opens, there still would be some signs that baseball is about to begin again.

There might be a few early arrivals, chatting away and limbering up. Perhaps they would be working on the exercise machines, trying to lose a bit of extra weight, or maybe they might be more ambitious, tossing a ball and playing pepper.

Not on this day, though. Not with the regular major leaguers on strike and Orioles owner Peter Angelos' stand not to use replacement players. "I keep looking up, thinking Mike Mussina or Ben McDonald might come walking in," new manager Phil Regan said. "I'm trying to stay positive through this thing, but I guess it looks like they may not be coming in for a while."

With no team to manage, not even a collection of replacements, Regan and his staff plan to survey the Double-A and Triple-A players, who will start to arrive Thursday. The first workout for those pitchers and catchers is Friday.

"If there's something positive in this for us, it's that we'll get time to work with our younger players and get to know them," Regan said.

Regan plans to attend a meeting the players' union will hold Thursday evening for managers, coaches and trainers in Orlando, about 2½ hours away. Earlier in the day, players will be briefed by the union.

TO LANDRY'S SURPRISE

Illini ax offensive coordinator

Associated Press

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Both Greg Landry and Illinois coach Lou Tepper put an end to the speculation Wednesday: Landry not only is leaving his offensive coordinator job with the university, but he was fired.

"I was very surprised," Landry said. "There's been a lot of talk around here that I resigned."

"At no time did I resign to go to the NFL. I was told my job was not going to be renewed."

Newspapers reported Tuesday that Landry was leaving because he was not happy at Illinois and wanted to return to the NFL.

Tepper refused to discuss Landry's status except for a brief statement issued Wednesday.

"I did not renew Greg Landry's contract," Tepper's statement read.

"He (Landry) asked me to hold that statement until Feb. 15 and I abided by that," Tepper continued. "We had differences that could not be resolved and I don't think any further comment publicly would be appropriate."

Landry wouldn't discuss why Tepper fired him.

"He offered me an explanation, but that's between him and I," Landry said. "Until he talked to me and said he's going to release me, I never knew we had a problem."

"I wish I could have stayed at Illinois," he said.

Landry helped the Illini recruit Chris Redman, a record-breaking quarterback from Louisville, Ky.

Redman said when he signed a letter of intent with Illinois on Feb. 1 that Landry was the main reason for his college choice. Now Redman wants out.

"Chris was disappointed (about Landry's departure)," said Redman's coach and father, Bob Redman. "He liked (Landry's) style and what they were doing offensively."

"Until (head coach Lou Tepper) talked to me and said he's going to release me, I never knew we had a problem. I wish I could have stayed at Illinois."

Greg Landry, Former Illinois offensive coordinator

Bob Redman said he spoke briefly with Tepper on Tuesday and is to meet with him Thursday.

"This doesn't look like good faith to me," he said. "When you make a big decision like this, you like to know what you're getting into."

Redman, runner-up for Kentucky's Mr. Football honor, previously committed to play for Louisville but rescinded after Howard Schnellenberger accepted the head coaching job at Oklahoma.

"This is the second time we've had our wheels knocked out from us," the elder Redman said.

Landry said Tepper told him in a performance evaluation Feb. 2, the day after Redman signed, that his contract would not be renewed.

"The timing of my release is disappointing because it could prevent me from getting another coaching job," Landry said.

Landry, offensive coordinator for the Chicago Bears under Mike Ditka, came to Illinois two years ago under a two-year contract.

Landry said the Detroit Lions are considering hiring him as quarterbacks coach. The Lions have refused to confirm that.

Last week, Tepper hired Ball State head coach Paul Schudel to replace Mike Deale as offensive line coach. That move sparked speculation that Schudel, who led Ball State for 10 seasons, may be in line for Landry's job.

On Wednesday, Tepper confirmed that.

"Paul will make an outstanding coordinator," Tepper said. "He is extremely capable in that area."

HOUSTON ROCKETS

Drexler arrives; Maxwell missing

Mike Drago
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Clyde Drexler and Hakeem Olajuwon are together again. The reworked Houston Rockets, however, are far from settled.

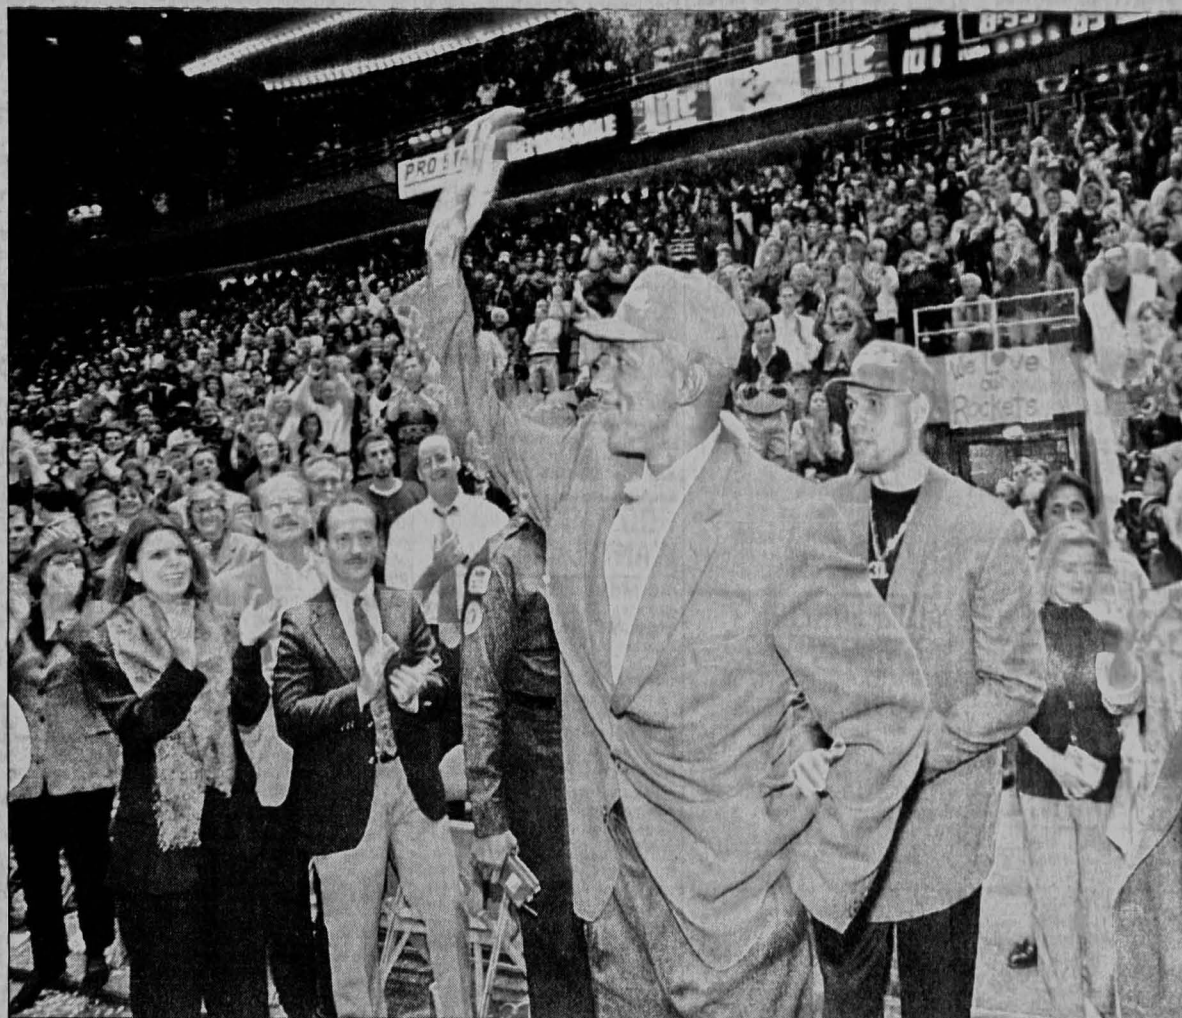

Drexler, traded to the Rockets on Tuesday in a deal that sent power forward Otis Thorpe to Portland, and his 22-point average gives Houston more scoring punch. The trade, though, leaves a hole in the Houston front line.

It also appeared to have further damaged the team's relationship with suspended guard Vernon Maxwell, who failed to show at practice Wednesday for the second time this week. Maxwell and Drexler both play shooting guard.

Drexler and Olajuwon, however, were all smiles about the trade that reunited two members of the University of Houston's "Phi Slama Jama" that made back-to-back Final Four appearances in the 1982 and 1983.

"This is a dream come true," Drexler said. "This is Phi Slama Jama II, on the professional level."

Drexler and reserve forward Tracy Murray, also sent to Houston in the trade, took their physicals Wednesday but didn't practice with the Rockets because Thorpe had not yet been examined by the Trail Blazers. Both were expected to play today when the Rockets play at Charlotte.

Wednesday's reunion celebration was dampened by the latest disappearance by Maxwell, who is allowed to practice despite a 10-game suspension imposed by the NBA for punching a fan in Portland last week. The volatile guard was a no-show Monday because of what team officials called a "miscommunication," but he had promised to attend workouts Wednesday.

Maxwell's repeat absence was not well-received by coach Rudy Tomjanovich.

"I talked directly to him," he said. "I don't know what he's going through. If he was here, I would know."

Tomjanovich refused to speculate on whether Maxwell was disgruntled about Drexler's arrival, which could mean less playing time.

Bob Weinbauer, Houston's vice president for basketball operations, also refused to speculate on why Maxwell was staying away.

"He's a part of this team," Weinbauer said. "He should be at practice, and we will talk to him. We'll deal with it internally."

Tomjanovich said he didn't expect the trade to produce drastic improvement in his club immediately, especially with forward Robert Horry on the injured list with an ailing back and Maxwell just three games into his 10-game penalty.

"We're not going to get magic results in a week," Tomjanovich said. "Human beings take time to adjust to one another."

He said he planned to try different combinations with his new roster, which now has a surplus of guards and a shortage at forward.

BIG TEN BASKETBALL

Respert lifts No. 8 Spartans over Illini

Associated Press

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Shawn Respert scored 35 points, including eight 3-pointers, and Eric Snow matched his career-high with 12 assists Wednesday night to lead No. 8 Michigan State to a 68-58 victory over Illinois.

The win kept the Spartans (18-3, 10-2 Big Ten) in first place in the conference.

Respert scored 24 points in the second half on the way to his sixth game of the season with 30 or more points.

Jerry Gee led Illinois (16-8, 7-5) with 11 points.

Kiwané Garrison, who scored 60 points in two Illinois victories last week to earn Big Ten player of the week honors, was held to seven points.

Michigan State led by 17 points at halftime and Illinois cut the lead to single digits only once.

A 10-2 run midway through the second half sliced the Spartan lead to 45-36 with less than 11 minutes remaining.

Michigan State answered with a 19-10 surge that featured two 3-pointers each by Respert and Ray Weatherly as the Spartans built their lead to 64-46 with less than four minutes to go.

The Spartans led 30-13 at halftime after closing the first half with an 8-0 run.

Illinois shot only 23 percent from the field (5-for-22) and committed 10 turnovers in the first half.

The Spartans were clinging to a 7-6 lead when they went on a 15-4 surge for a 22-10 lead.

Jamie Feick and Respert combined for 11 of the points.

Feick finished with 11 points for Michigan State.

DAYTONA 500

Auto racing's best prepare for showcase

Mike Harris
Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Dale Jarrett and Dale Earnhardt need to handle a few minor details before the two race favorites collide in the Daytona 500 on Sunday.

Jarrett, winner of the 1993 Daytona 500, won the pole for this year's race with a lap of 193.494 mph. Earnhardt took the outside front at 193.449.

The opening round of qualifying Saturday was the last time they met on the track. For today's Twin 125-mile qualifying races, they'll be kept apart, so they don't go at each other again until Sunday.

Jarrett will start from the pole in the first of today's 50-lap sprints, while Earnhardt gets the top starting spot in the nightcap. Both are assured their Sunday starting spots, so their chore in the sometimes wild and woolly Twins is simply to stay out of trouble and get ready for the big event.

"Things have been going pretty well since we've been here," said Earnhardt, the seven-time Winston Cup champion who already won the Busch Clash this week on Daytona International Speedway's 2½-mile, high-banked oval.

"I'm locked in for the 500, so we don't have to worry about what happens in the 125," he added. "You want to stay out of trouble, and the best way to do that is to stay in front. That'll be tough because there's a lot of good cars in our race."

Rookie Robert Pressley, taking the seat of retired Harry Gant, will be next to Earnhardt at the start, with an all-star cast, including Jeff Gordon, Mark Martin, Bill Elliott, Ricky Rudd and Ted Musgrave, all scattered behind them throughout the 32-car field.

Jarrett's challenge will come from the likes of defending Daytona winner Sterling Marlin, who will start from the outside of the front row in the opener, as well as Terry Labonte, Michael and Darrell Waltrip, Kyle Petty, Rusty Wallace and Ken Schrader, all lurking back in the pack of another 32-car lineup.

For Jarrett and Earnhardt, this will be, as Earnhardt says, "a 125-mile practice." For everybody else, it's the only way to get a decent starting spot in Sunday's 42-car lineup.

The top 14 finishers in each of the Twins, excluding the two pole starters, will fill positions 3-30 for the big race. The next eight positions are taken by the fastest remaining drivers from the time trials that set today's lineups.

Positions 39-42 will go to any remaining teams from last year's top-40 car-owner standings. The possibility of a 43rd starter exists, but only in the unlikely event a former series champion does not make the lineup any other way.

Jarrett, in his first race in Robert Yates Racing's powerful Ford Thunderbird, is enjoying his position as one of the top dogs.

"We've had to work pretty hard since Saturday, but I think we're finally in pretty good shape now," Jarrett said. "We've had to work hard to make the car stable enough to get it to do what we needed it to do."

WOMEN'S SWIMMING

Hawks look for reversal of fortune at Big Tens

Chris James
The Daily Iowan

The Hawkeye women's swimming team hopes to put a 1-7 dual meet record behind them as Iowa finishes up the 1994-95 season today at the Big Ten Swimming and Diving Championships.

The meet begins at 10 a.m. and runs through Saturday at the IUPUI Natatorium from Indianapolis.

"When you swim in the toughest conference in the country it's tough to be optimistic, but I know we will give 110 percent."

Pete Kennedy, Iowa women's swim coach best 387.15 points in the one-meter dive at the Iowa Invitational.

The Iowa swimmers are led by junior Rachel Bayster.

Bayster paces the Hawkeyes in five different events including the 200 butterfly, the 500, 1650 freestyle, and the 200 and 400 individual medley.

Coach Pete Kennedy said he knows it's been a down year, but anything could happen at the Big Ten meet.

"We've worked hard all year and hopefully some things will go our way. When you swim in the toughest conference in the country it's tough to be optimistic, but I know we will give 110 percent," Kennedy said.

Iowa hopes to improve on last year's ninth place finish. The Hawkeyes scored 163 points while Big Ten powerhouse Michigan ran away from the field, grabbing its eighth straight Big Ten title.

Iowa finished second, a school best, at the 1986 meet. Overall, the Hawkeyes have crowned seven individual champions, three diving champions and one relay champion at the Big Tens.

The one-two punch of sophomore divers Kelly McCready and Jessica Riccobono continue to be the strength of the Hawkeyes. Riccobono and McCready have finished in the top three six times this year. They have also finished first and second four times.

Riccobono recorded a team best 472.69 points in the three-meter dive at the Illini Classic. McCready saved her best performance for the home folks as she rang up a team-

Pinball fanatics rack up game's pros, cons

Wizards rate fave places for playing

Greg Stump
The Daily Iowan

If Tommy, the "Pinball Wizard," had to earn his reputation by playing the games of the '90s, The Who might never have written the song about him.

With elaborate video graphics, intricate strategies and verbal commands from celebrities like Clint Eastwood, today's pinball machines may be inappropriate for deaf, dumb and blind kids. The rest of Iowa City, however, has a plethora of choices, from classic games like "The Addams Family" to the latest releases like "Frankenstein."

With 11 pinball machines, the game room at Joe's Place, 115 Iowa Ave., has the biggest selection in town. UI senior Megan Wildblood said she prefers the easy atmosphere at Joe's for playing "World Cup Soccer" pinball.

"You can come in here at any time," she said. "You don't feel like you have to come in here for the bar scene."

The game is a favorite at Joe's. "World Cup Soccer" is a beautiful, beautiful game," said Steve Kordek, director of game design for Williams Electronics. "If you've ever played it, you know why I like it."

The tactics in "World Cup Soccer" include shooting the pinball past a mechanical soccer player, eliciting frenzied screams of "GOAL!" from a sports announcer and advancing the U.S. team in the tournament. Wildblood endorses the game because it's easy to figure out what you're shooting for.

In addition to "World Cup Soccer," Williams Electronics manufactures such local favorites as "Star Trek: The Next Generation," the company's most popular game right now, according to Kordek.

"It's been holding up pretty well since 1993," he said. "I personally really like 'The Shadow' and 'Dirty Harry.'"

Kordek isn't alone in his pinball preferences.

"My favorite game is 'The Shadow,' but today I played 'Dirty Harry' for the first time, and I spent an hour and a half on it," said Matt, an Iowa City resident who declined giving his last name.

He described the two games as uniquely taxing.

"There are very few games that challenge you and make you think about what you're doing as you play," Matt said.

He gave the nod to the Que Sports Bar, 211 Iowa Ave., for the best spot in town for pinball.

"The Que has the most room to play," Matt said. "At the Deadwood it's a little cramped."

If you're willing to sacrifice a little elbow room, you can usually play

photos by M. Scott Mahaskey/The Daily Iowan

"Jurassic Park," above, and "Corvette," left, are two of the 11 pinball machines in the game room at Joe's Place, 115 Iowa Ave.

the most recent games first at the Deadwood tavern, 6 S. Dubuque St.

While you're there, you might catch a few pointers from watching Deadwood employee Parke Heller. Two weeks ago, Heller and partner Steve Leventhal placed 15th in the doubles division of the World Pinball Championships in New York City.

"A lot of the top people there were game operators from the pinball companies," Heller said. He mildly dismissed their Zen-like strategies of being the ball and moving back and forth in favor of more basic maneuvers.

"You just have to know when to shake the machine and when not to shake it," Heller said. "Sometimes a slap is a good thing."

Currently, Heller is helping to organize league competition at the Deadwood, which will also host the Iowa Pinball Federation State Championships in April. He praised challenging, complex games like "Dirty Harry" while expressing disdain for really easy games like "Shaq Attaq."

"Just because you can win a replay and score a billion points doesn't make it a fun game," said Heller.

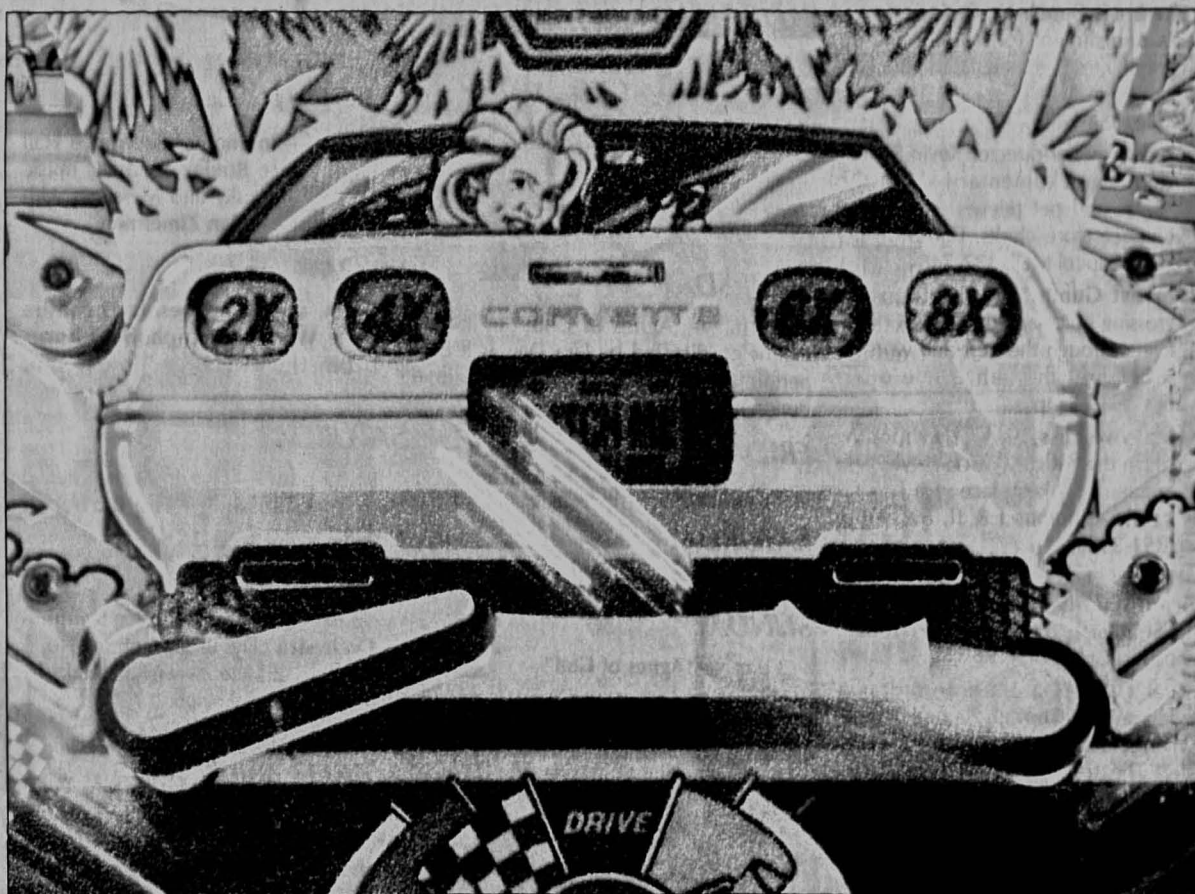

Kordek, who said he still plays enough pinball to make it interesting, listed music, sound effects and machine-player interaction as key elements for a winning game.

"The resurgence in pinball's popularity has to do with the development of 'solid state' games," he said. "Now, the machine can tell the player where to go, where the jackpot is lit and where to go for it."

While game designers continually try to top each other with dizzying ramps and graphics, they are forever indebted to Kordek for one of pinball's most basic innovations.

Kordek, who designed the landmark game "Triple Action" in 1948, was the first person to position flippers at the bottom of a game.

"I didn't develop the flipper, but I sure as hell put it in the right place," he said.

'Agnes of God' mixes spirituality with homicide in performance

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

The mysteries of religion mingle with a more mundane mystery of murder in "Agnes of God," which opens tonight in the UI Theatre Building.

John Pielmeier's play, which he adapted into film form in 1985, addresses issues of religious faith and emotional stability. But it also offers a compelling, gripping dramatic story.

Graduating UI senior Lisa Day, who is directing the play as an honors project, says she chose to put together a production of "Agnes" because the play's issues were especially relevant to herself and a college audience.

"Throughout college, I've struggled myself spiritually. I was raised in a Christian background, and just because of my own political, philosophical beliefs, I had a lot of questions about Christianity," Day said. "There were a lot of answers I wasn't given in my religion. ... I think this play deals a lot with that."

"Agnes of God" centers around three women: Agnes, a young nun who has apparently murdered her newborn baby; the mother superior trying to protect her; and Martha, the court-appointed psychiatrist assigned to determine whether Agnes is sane enough to stand trial for the killing.

But as she delves into Agnes' past, Martha sees echoes of herself and of her sister Marie, who died in a convent. Agnes' sanity is called into question but so is her guilt. Martha struggles to decide whether Agnes is a criminal, a saint or both, and eventually the mystery of whether Agnes murdered her child is subsumed by Martha's attempt to re-establish what she believes in.

Day said this internal struggle is one of the things that most made her want to direct "Agnes."

"Because (Martha) isn't given answers, she turns herself off to the questions altogether and decides she doesn't believe in anything," Day said.

But Day warns that the play doesn't necessarily provide the answers Martha's lacking.

"It doesn't necessarily have one specific message. I hope it doesn't," she said. "It's a play that I don't think gives answers. The characters start out in the beginning having all the answers, knowing exactly what they believe. They're not necessarily happy people or fulfilled people, but things make sense to them."

But as the play unfolds, all three characters are forced to re-examine their beliefs, which Day says opens the way for some really beautiful things.

Apart from the story, Day recommends the play because of the intensity and complexity of the characters. "You have the opportunity to get to know three really unique, special people in this evening," she said. "It's a very spiritual play."

"Agnes of God" will be performed in Theatre B of the UI Theatre Building tonight through Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 3 p.m.

FILM PREMIÈRES AT BIJOU

Director scores again with reliable formula

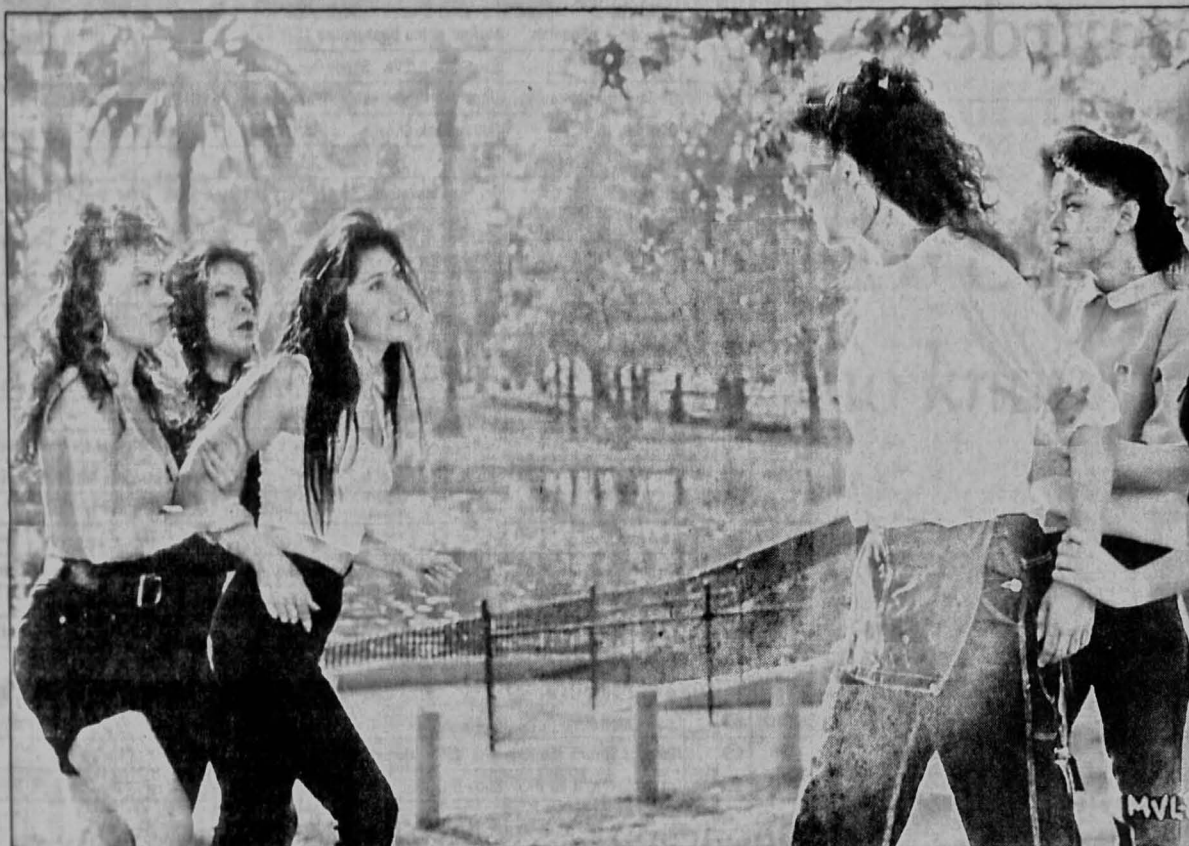

Tasha Robinson

The Daily Iowan

It's not hard to see where Allison Anders' interests lie.

The writer-director's first critical hit, "Gas Food Lodging," was the wandering, naturalistic story of a family of poor white-trash women trying and failing to make their lives better through their relationships with men.

By contrast, Anders' current critical hit, "Mi Vida Loca," is the wan-

Sony Pictures

"Mi Vida Loca" ("My Crazy Life"), an intimate, of contemporary Los Angeles is currently playing at multi-layered romantic love story set in the barrios the Bijou.

Ernesto, the father of the children, seems sweet-natured but casual about his two-timing; he delivers identical promises of fidelity and devotion to both women, thoughtlessly taking both sides when Mousie challenges Sad Girl to a duel over him.

As the two women prepare to fight it out — perhaps lethally — their mutual man is wandering the streets, selling drugs to support his kids and bragging to a partner about the power of holding out on addicted white women who may bargain with blowjobs once they run out of money.

The story's irony and poignancy sets a high point that the rest of the film can't quite meet. Anders ends the plot line abruptly and unexpectedly, moving on to introduce a half-dozen other characters, all of whom are interesting, but none of whom are as compelling.

There's Whisper, a young woman accidentally shot while dealing; Gigles, an ex-gang member just getting out of jail for a crime she didn't commit; La Blue Eyes, a hopeless romantic who spends her days writing poetry to an imprisoned felon she's never met; and so on.

None of Anders' ensuing half-dozen plot lines builds to an appreciable climax. Each one simply comes to the same conclusion: Men aren't the answer to the problems of poverty, dissatisfaction, anger and loneliness.

Anders' dialogue shines in this film as her protagonists tackle their life problems with weapons ranging from insightful self-discovery to vicious good humor to "thick as a brick" naïveté.

She evokes from her unfamiliar cast a wide range of convincing and moving performances, but she gives her film little focus, buildup or conclusion. The result is a hit-or-miss style that contains plenty of power but not much of a punch.

MOVIE REVIEW

Sandler just ekes by in 'Billy Madison'

Ian Corwin

The Daily Iowan

Little-boy charm gets "Saturday Night Live" comedian Adam Sandler a long way through "Billy Madison" — a muddled minefield of bad jokes and immaturity.

And with a vehicle as fluffy and nondescript as this, Sandler is lucky that his charisma and endurance are in peak form.

"Billy Madison" is definitely not a brain-teaser. The dramatic conflicts are spelled out a little too clearly; the good, the bad and the ugly characters are defined at the outset; and the plot twists come barreling down on an audience with all the subtlety and surprise of an attacking elephant.

And Sandler wanders around through all of it looking like a smug little fourth-grader who's just gotten away with poisoning his teacher's coffee. Sandler's cockiness, charisma and admirably twisted sense of humor actually save this exercise in cuteness from becoming unbearably trite.

Sandler is the title character Billy Madison, a slouchy and slovenly young man whose father, Brian (Darren McGavin), owns a successful chain of hotels. Brian wants to pass on the family business to his son, but one of his weaselly executives with ulterior motives of his own convinces him that his son is incompetent for flunking out of high school and shouldn't be trusted.

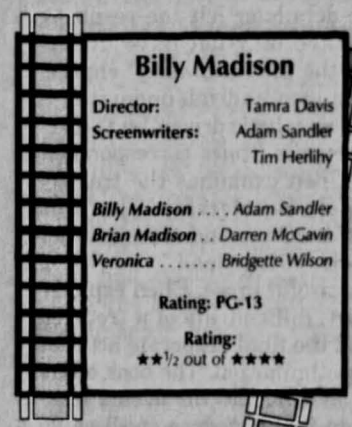

Billy finds out about this and vows that he can prove himself. He promises his father that he will finish grades first through 12th in 12 weeks. His father agrees that if he can do it, he gets to keep the company.

"Billy Madison" comes very close to being a one-joke wonder film. A grown man parading around the halls of a grade school, falling for his third-grade teacher and rethinking his life views could have gotten old very quickly. Sandler's oddball sense of humor is all that stands in the way of failure.

Yes, Billy falls for his teacher. But to get some cheap laughs and add a few minor complications, writers Tim Herlihy and Sandler have the school principal fall for Billy. Never mind that the principal's a man (and an ex-pro wrestler) — it's funny.

And yes, maybe Billy does learn a little about life: like the fact that if you call that kid you were mean to in high school, he might cross you off of his "People To Kill" list, while he's cleaning his rifle scope and wind up saving your life.

Gags like this keep "Billy Madison" breathing long after the basic plot and characterizations have failed. Steve Buscemi ("Reservoir Dogs") and "Saturday Night Live" 's Chris Farley each have juicy cameos, with Farley doing his best embittered old man impersonation while driving a school bus. And when Billy shows up to retake high school in a blue Trans-Am and wearing an REO Speedwagon T-shirt, the reactions of the '90s teen-agers are a hoot.

Sandler's twisted wit and surefootedness make up for "Billy Madison" 's many crippling defects. Maybe an A-list director sitting on a decent script somewhere will see Sandler's potential in this film and give him a shot at showing audiences what he can really do.

PERFORMANCE TONIGHT AT HANCHER

UI orchestra hits high note with Mahler piece

Teri Bostian

Special To The Daily Iowan

The University Symphony Orchestra will perform Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3 under the direction of internationally renowned conductor James Dixon at Hancher Auditorium tonight.

Dixon, recognized worldwide as an interpreter of Mahler's music, was awarded the Mahler Medal in 1963. He believes it is Mahler's energetic music, as well as the depth and the quality of this year's orchestra, that will give pleasure and joy to the Hancher audience.

Dixon, a UI music professor and conductor of the University Symphony Orchestra since 1954, is very cautious about using the term "interpreter" for what he does.

"Mahler, like Beethoven and Mozart before him, is very accessible," he said. "The music is so expressive it doesn't need to be interpreted."

Tonight's performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 3 carries with it a mark of enthusiasm. Dixon has not conducted the piece anywhere before. He decided to program it into this year's schedule early in the fall, though generally orchestra schedules are made up a year in advance. Along with this change, Dixon added more rehearsal time.

"The Third is a real challenge — the kind of difficulty these people can handle," he said. The people Dixon is referring to are the UI students who constitute the orchestra, many of whom — graduates and undergraduates both — already play for professional orchestras like the Cedar Rapids, Quad Cities and southeastern Iowa symphony orchestras.

In fact, there are a number of musicians in this year's orchestra who hold or have held principal and assistant principal positions in these and other orchestras.

"When you have this kind of depth and quality to your personnel, you must take advantage of it," Dixon said.

Though large audiences have already taken advantage of UI concerts held previously this season, Dixon said this Mahler performance will be the highlight. He expects to greet a packed auditorium tonight — one full of young people.

Mahler's work, Dixon said, "is a music young people find interesting because of its energy and repose. It is a very personal world that Mahler inhabits — and it is to those who wish to enter it that I am playing."

While Dixon enjoys his long-standing reputation for bringing the music of the late 19th- and early 20th-century composer to wide public acceptance and into the standard repertoire of many orchestras, he shies away from questions about what the music might mean.

"It is very dangerous to assign emotion to music because it means something different to every listener," he said. "Music is not like literature. Words have specific connotations; music does not."

He said it is important that young audiences not be intimidated because the music may at first seem too complicated.

"What's there is not necessarily universal, and it does not lend itself well to words," he said. "You just have to make up your own mind."

Throughout his career, Dixon has brought Mahler's music to Iowa audiences — most memorably by playing Mahler's Symphony No. 2 at the dedication of the new Hancher Auditorium in 1972.

Tonight's University Symphony Orchestra concert at Hancher Auditorium begins at 8. Admission is free.

BOOK GIVES IN TO SENSATIONALISM

'Deadly Scholarship' delves deep to find sense for Nov. 1 murders

Paul Ferguson
The Daily Iowan

Anyone reading this should undoubtedly recall the events that took place Nov. 1, 1991.

Gang Lu, 28, a Chinese doctoral candidate in physics, went on a shooting rampage that took the lives of three UI physics professors, his archrival and the associate vice president for academic affairs. He also permanently crippled a secretary before turning the gun on himself.

What most of those who read the horrific details or felt the resulting shock wave may not have understood is the intricate web of chance, circumstance and misunderstanding that may have driven Lu to kill.

Los Angeles Times correspondent Edwin Chen examines the tragedy in "Deadly Scholarship: The True Story of Lu Gang and Mass Murder in America's Heartland."

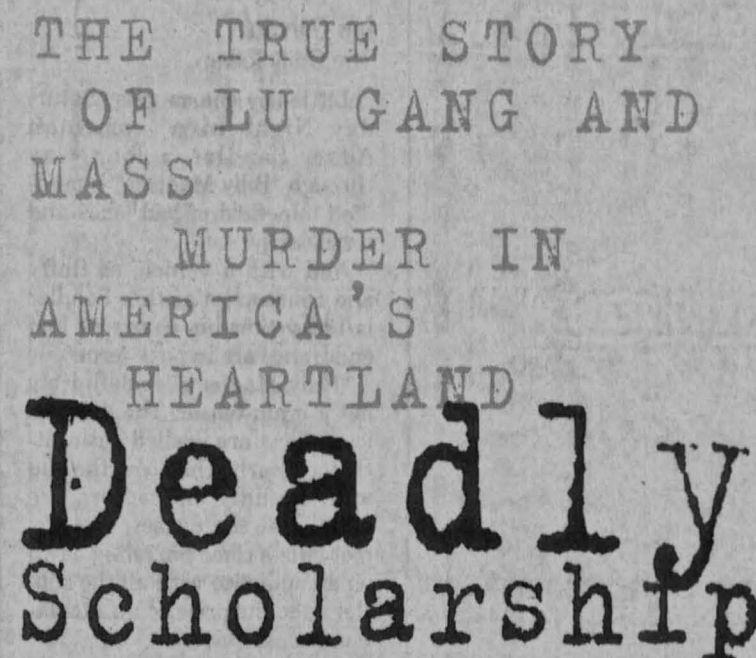

With careful prose, Chen explores the short, difficult life of a troubled soul and the final desperate act that was its culmination. The book offers a keen insight into the events leading up to the tragedy, as well as its implications, and is essential reading for anyone interested in the story behind the senseless killings.

"Deadly Scholarship" recounts the highly publicized details of the incident, but more important are the aspects that didn't follow the flurry of headlines. Chen meticulously describes the circumstances that led Lu to America, his struggle for companionship and the crushing anxiety that — according to Chen — led him to believe his academic problems were the result of a conspiracy against him.

Through the words of those who were a part of his short life in America, as well as letters Lu wrote and his own research, Chen pieces together a portrait of a tortured but ambitious man who succumbed to almost unimaginable pressure. It is a situation all too common in the highly competitive world of academia, and Chen warns that Lu's downfall could easily happen to anyone in his situation.

Though a number of academic setbacks — including the initial rejection of his dissertation, being eclipsed by his rival Linhua Shan and his failed job search — made Lu desperate, his failure to be nominated for the D.C. Spriesterbach Award, an annual award given to an exceptional dissertation, seemed to have been the turning point.

Lu believed the nomination — which was announced before his dissertation was complete — was made unfairly, and he filed numerous complaints to several UI offices to no avail.

Whether or not Lu had a legitimate complaint, it is unclear why he was so concerned with the award. Chen suggests that Lu was merely desperate for money, but the $2,500 cash prize would not have sustained him for long, even with his meager lifestyle. Besides, Lu had at least $25,000 in savings at the time of his death.

Given the extension of his visa, due to his involvement in protests against the killings in Tiananmen Square, Lu could probably have found work sufficient to sustain himself until finding a job in his field. As one of the brightest new physics doctoral recipients in the country, Lu would likely have found such a position eventually.

Chen spends little time exploring this mystery, which could be considered one of the chief questions behind the killings.

"Deadly Scholarship" occasionally succumbs to the allure of sensationalism, casting the characters of this story in neatly defined roles (Shan as the popular jock, Lu as the socially inept nerd). It makes the outcome seem inevitable through hindsight, when it could probably have been prevented had anyone seen it coming. Nonetheless, Chen's even, thorough account illuminates many of the lingering shadows that shroud the incident.
