UI student dies at age 44

The flag over the Old Capitol will be at half-staff today in honor of James McLaughlin, a UI doctoral student who died at age 44 Saturday. The cause of death was unreported.

A student in the UI communication studies department, McLaughlin had resided in Iowa City for 10 years and had been on the board of directors of the Bijou Theatre.

Josh Golin — UI graduate student, research assistant in the communication studies department and co-director of the Bijou — said McLaughlin was always promoting the theater by posting fliers around the city.

"When he was healthy, he was active, and he was very enthusiastic about the Bijou," Golin said. "He was always going out of his way to get people to see the films."

Memorial services will be held today at Donohue-Lensing Funeral Service, 605 Kirkwood Ave., at 7 p.m. Memorial donations may be made to the James McLaughlin Scholarship Fund through the UI Department of Communication Studies.

Detective Mark Fuhrman said a glove he found behind O.J. Simpson's house was moist, sticky, right-handed, and a mate to a glove found at the crime scene.

Fuhrman said a large plastic bag found in Simpson's Bronco was standard equipment, often used to hold used tires.

In cross-examination, defense attorney F. Lee Bailey alleged Fuhrman took the glove from the crime scene and planted it at Simpson's house to frame him.

Committee looking for diversity

Affirmative action will play a role in the selection of the new UI president, according to search committee Chairman Steve Collins.

Shayla Thiel
The Daily Iowan

The bottom line of the UI Presidential Search and Screen Advisory Committee's help-wanted ad reads, "An Equal Opportunity and Affirmative Action Employer" — and search committee Chairman Steve Collins said the words are more than a catchy slogan.

"I, the search committee and the firm are working together to do our very best to make sure the pool of candidates is a diverse pool," Collins said. "In our ads, we are portraying the UI and the state of Iowa as a place where people can

As the hunt for the next UI president continues, the chairman of the UI Presidential Search and Screen Advisory Committee is vowing to keep candidates' names under wraps as long as possible.

The Iowa Open Meetings Act, Chapter 21 of the Code of Iowa, outlines the so-called "sunshine laws" referring to meetings of public bodies. Although the laws are intended to keep meetings as open to the public as possible, they do allow for exceptions. The search committee is covered under these laws.

The ad for a UI president has appeared in newspapers across the nation and will be publicized more in coming months, Collins said.

Members of the committee are in firm agreement that affirmative action is a necessity in the search for president, Collins said.

"There are no differences of opinion on the committee about the importance of diversity," he said. "This is something we're going to do — period. It's not a matter of discussion."

Although Susan Mask, director of the UI Affirmative Action Office, is not directly working with the presidential search committee, she has met with the committee and Collins to explain the importance of affirmative action when choosing a pool of candidates and examining the candidates' ideals.

"First, there is a concern the person selected must show a commitment to working in a diverse environment and, second, that the pool of candidates be reflective of diversity," she said.

Health officials warn of spring break evils

Joseph Kim
The Daily Iowan

While some UI students are hoping to drink some beer, get a buzz and catch a few rays over spring break, these are not the only things spring break revelers might end up catching.

While students relax and enjoy themselves, they should take precautions against the health hazards that often go hand in hand with popular spring break resorts.

Cathy Barnett, health educator at Student Health Service, said students need to be aware when they head out for the week. "The biggest things that students should be aware of are sexually transmitted diseases, alcohol abuse and sunburns," she said.

Part 2 of 5

Barnett said many travelers who spend long hours basking in the sun underestimate the problem of sunburn.

"The first day of sunburn can ruin the whole trip," she said.

Barnett said in addition to sun block, sunbathers should wear shirts and hats while roaming the beaches.

UI freshman Meridyth Andresen is trying to avoid sunburn by tanning before her trip to Boca Grande, Fla.

"Me and my friends have been going to the tanning salon during the last couple of weeks, so we won't get burned. I am also getting a flu shot before I leave," Andresen said.

Dr. Mike Curley, family practitioner at Student Health Service, said remembering to get out the sunscreen once during the day isn't enough. Sunscreen of SPF 15 or greater should be applied up to three times a day, despite what the directions on the bottle say, Curley said.

UI freshman Steve Hefel said

GENDER DIFFERENCES EXAMINED

Women's brain activity up during depression

Malcom Ritter
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Women activate much more brain circuitry during sadness than men do, which may help explain why women are more prone to depression, a government study suggests.

Brain scans of women found that when they were sad, they turned on brain circuits in the left-front part of the brain and also deep in the brain, said researcher Dr. Mark George of the National Institute of Mental Health.

The area of the brain activated in women was eight times the amount in men, even though both sexes reported themselves about equally sad during the brain scans, said George.

The left-front part of the brain is underactive or abnormally functioning in people with depression, he said. Depression often strikes after a period of sadness caused by events like death of a loved one, and maybe in susceptible people during this prolonged sadness "you burn out this brain region; you burn out of overuse it, and it shuts off," George said.

The deep brain area also is underactive in depressed people, perhaps because of overuse, he said.

Nurses in psychiatry displaced by UIHC

Shayla Thiel
The Daily Iowan

In a move that has provoked some professional nurses to consider union representation, UI Hospitals and Clinics axed all of its administrative nursing positions in the psychiatry department and moved the nurses to new jobs.

The job shuffling was part of an attempt by UIHC to accommodate its growing medical centers, said Dean Borg, UIHC public affairs director. He said much of the hospital staff would be "reclassified" into new positions, but there would be no layoffs.

"Nobody is being laid off. They're just changing positions within University Hospitals," Borg said. "We're adapting to the changing needs within a growing hospital, adapting to changing patient needs."

In the first of many relocations that will take place throughout the spring, Borg said seven profession-

Scharnberg named new DI editor

The Daily Iowan

UI junior Kirsten Scharnberg was named 1995-96 editor of The Daily Iowan at a Monday night meeting of Student Publications Inc.'s board of directors.

Scharnberg

Scharnberg's enthusiasm and goals for the paper were what put her over the top, said DI Publisher William Casey.

"Kirsten is a young woman who's full of energy, has a pretty clear vision of what she wants to do with the newspaper, and I think that's why she won out," Casey said. "It was probably one of the most difficult decisions we've had in years because we had three really excellent candidates, which I think speaks to the strength of the paper right now."

Other applicants were DI Managing Editor Holly Reinhardt and Graphics Editor Matt Ericson, both UI sophomores.

"I know the board hopes that both Holly and Matt will be integral parts of the newsroom next year because they're very, very impressed with those candidates, too," Casey said.

Scharnberg, currently a DI Metro editor, will assume the position of editor June 1.

UI curator keeps house for fossil collections

Jen Dawson
The Daily Iowan

Man's best friend may be a playful little puppy, but Julia Golden prefers older animals — up to 600 million years older.

an. But instead of organizing books, Golden is in charge of more than 1 million specimens of fossilized creatures.

"We have an outstanding collection," Golden said. "People from all over the world and all over the country use this collection like they do a library. My job is to take care of (the fossils), to make sure they're housed properly."

The most noticeable decoration in Golden's office in Trowbridge Hall is a fishbowl filled with green algae-ridden water. At first glance, it seems Golden is guilty of neglecting her fish, but floating through the murky water are a number of tiny animals called ostracods. These animals, which feed on the algae, are Golden's preference over traditional fish-bowl communities.

Across the hall from Golden's office is the geology repository, the department's version of a library.

Large white cabinets that stretch from floor to ceiling line the walls of the repository and jut out into the middle of the room. Each cabinet contains several wooden trays filled with fossil specimens.

The fossils were obtained and identified through research projects of UI faculty and students and others who donated their findings.

Aside from the cabinets, the only other items in the room are a desk, several tables topped with fossils, a microscope and a computer. This is the environment Golden submerges herself in daily.

Golden's current project is cataloging the repository's collection on the computer.

"My ideal day is to sit and work entirely on one area of a collection," she said.

While engrossed in her work in the repository, Golden is surrounded by the remains of such uncommon specimens as melocrinites, brachiopods and ammonoids.

She said she is regularly visited by faculty and students involved in research. A part-time work-study student was recently hired to assist Golden with cataloging.

Occasionally, Golden works with two or three other professors to determine which collections will be accepted by the repository.

The department's collection also includes the remains of a giant sloth and a mammoth and the skull of a giant beaver, which is on display at the UI Museum of Natural History.

Golden is currently assisting in cataloging the research projects of Nancy Budd, a UI geology professor who has traveled to the Caribbean in search of coral specimens.

Budd said her job would be much more difficult without Golden's assistance.

"I make the identifications, and she gets them into the computer," Budd said. "She's incredibly conscientious; she's always doing things for other people."

Golden's arrival at the UI in 1980 brought a number of organizational changes to the repository.

"Before, the fossils were arranged hodgepodge across the repository," Budd said. "She's made it so we're on the same level as other natural history museums across the country."

The department's collection has earned national recognition at the level of institutions such as the Smithsonian Institution, the University of California, the University of Michigan and the Chicago Field Museum, Golden said.

"If you're looking at the invertebrate paleontology collection, we are in the top 10," she said. "We're right there at No. 9."

Although Golden could have used her bachelor's and master's degrees to join the faculty of a university, she opted to assist in organizing the research of others.

"I like my job; it's a challenge," she said. "The collection was not very well-organized when I got here."

UISG MEETING TONIGHT

Less money forecasted for student groups

Sara Teasdale
The Daily Iowan

Class III student groups — which represent special interests of UI students — will receive less funding than last year if proposed budgets are approved at a UI Student Government meeting tonight.

More Class III student organizations exist at the UI this year than in previous years, and recommended budgets for fiscal year 1996 were based on the mandatory student fee of $18.95 per student. Therefore, most UI student groups were recommended to receive less money this year, said Gina Falconio, chairwoman of the UI Student Assembly Budgeting and Auditing Committee.

"We based our estimate on the $18.95 per student that we used last year," Falconio said. "There was no increase in mandatory student fees, and there were more groups to support. There wasn't as much money to work with."

Some groups complained that since many other fees seem to go up every year, the student activity fee should increase as well.

"I think it's unfortunate that tuition and other fees are raised on a percentage basis over the years, but some of the money can't go to agencies on campus which increase educational programming," said

Melissa Dillings, a representative of the Rape Victim Advocacy Program

Melissa Dillings, a representative of the Rape Victim Advocacy Program.

On Feb. 24, Class III groups were allotted money by SABAC for office supplies; long-distance phone calls; answering services; and a first-priority program, such as a newsletter or activities week, Falconio said.

The appeals process for Class III organizations was March 6-9, and 11 Class III groups appealed their proposed budgets. Last year, about 20 groups went through the process, said SABAC member Rakhi Roy.

"(The appeals process) went rather well," Roy said. "Basically, groups just came in with questions. A lot of them were confused, and we tried to answer their questions."

Most of the groups that appealed understood why they will not receive the money they requested, and some have tried to raise more money themselves.

West Side Players, a student-run theater group, does not charge admission to its productions, treasurer Paul Chakrin said. However, the group has tried other ways to raise money.

"We got by this year by selling concessions before our productions and during intermission," Chakrin said. "We also encourage our directors to contribute money to their own productions."

RVAP also tries to work as well within its means as possible, Dillings said.

"We're doing our work whether we have the money or not," she said.

Roy said SABAC explained to groups the reasons why they received less funding than last year, and the groups were empathetic.

"After we explained the situation they were more understanding, and if they still had complaints, we told them that it was up to them to make an appeal to the whole student body tomorrow at the meeting," she said.

PASSAGE EXPECTED NEXT WEEK

House weighs merits of listing sex offenders

Kathryn Phillips
The Daily Iowan

A bill requiring convicted sex offenders to register their names at local law enforcement agencies after they are released from jail will go before a House committee today.

The bill, which is expected to be passed by the House next week, states serious sex offenders must register their names and addresses in their community of residence for 10 years after they are released from jail. The bill will return to the Senate if the amendments are approved by the House.

The list of sex offenders would provide law enforcement officers with a way to keep tabs on offenders and would act as a deterrent to repeat offenders. Members of the community also will have limited access to the list.

Rep. Brian Coon, R-Waukee, and Rep. Minnette Doderer, D-Iowa City, are on the House subcommittee that drew up several amendments to the bill that will be presented today.

Doderer said she has been working on sex offender-awareness bills for the past four years. The previous bills were shot down because they were too harsh.

"The idea is, the offenders have already served their time," Doderer said. "But there is nothing in prison that discourages criminals from doing it again. We are doing what we can; at least with this bill the police will know where offenders are, even if they are moving in and out of different communities."

There are three major amendments to the bill, Coon said. The first requires sex offenders who do not serve jail time to be included on the registry.

"Quite a few sex offenders do not serve jail time," Coon said. "Those that don't serve will be required to be registered by the courts. At the time charges are brought against the criminal, they pay a $200 fine. Ten percent of the fine will go for list administration costs."

The second revision requires the inclusion of the offender's Social Security number and exclusion of the victim's name on the list.

"The Social Security number will be useful when identifying the person," Coon said. "So you know if Mike Smith, the man coaching your Little League team, is the Mike Smith, convicted rapist."

The last revision also states a fee is required by all criminal justice agencies when using the list to curb "vigilante justice."

When members of the community want to see the list, they are required to give their own names and addresses to the police. Their names will be kept in separate police records so the offender would not know who has requested access.

"For the public to get to see the list, they must also give their own name and address and know the name and address of the person in question," Coon said. "They cannot go in and see the whole list."

Doderer said this provision keeps the list from acting as a public notice.

"When the lists are made public, people go to (the sex offenders') doors and tell them to get out of town," Doderer said. "This has happened in other states. But we have to remember the victim is still serving time. If I had a cure for sex crimes, I'd put it in the bill."

"I want to make sure that the needs of kids, in terms of their nutrition, are met in our state," Branstad said.

During his weekly news conference, the governor was asked about a Republican proposal to overhaul the nation's welfare system, including the school lunch program. The GOP plan would cut public assistance programs by at least $50 billion over five years. The U.S. House is scheduled to debate the issue later this month.

Under the proposal, funding for school lunch and breakfast programs would be lumped into one block grant to the states. Republicans say funding would increase from $4.6 billion in 1996 to $5.3 billion in 2000.

BRANSTAD DEMANDS END TO LEGISLATIVE SYSTEM

Governor holds out on school finance plan

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Legislative bargainers agreed to let local school budgets grow by 3.5 percent next year, but Gov. Terry Branstad demanded legislators scrap the system for setting school finances before he'll approve.

Branstad

In Monday's rapid-fire developments, a House-Senate conference committee agreed to a growth figure that would allow schools to get $65 million more next year.

The Senate quickly ratified that plan 47-2; House approval is expected today.

Branstad said he could agree to that much spending but only if legislators agree to a multiyear plan that would set school budgets for two more years.

The governor's proposal also would scrap the current system, which requires legislators to set school finances in the first 30 days of a session.

It was not clear if the developments would break the two-month logjam that has snarled efforts to write a new state budget.

"We are going to sit down over the next day or two and work with the governor and the Democrats, hopefully, and see if we can make this whole thing come together," said House Majority Leader Brent Siegrist, R-Council Bluffs.

Branstad and other Republicans have been pushing a proposal to allow school budgets to grow by 3 percent; Democrats in the Senate have been arguing for 4.5 percent growth.

On Monday, Republicans agreed to compromise on the 3.5 percent figure if Democrats would approve a plan setting long-term school budgets.

They want agreement to increase school budgets by 3 percent in each of the two succeeding years. Branstad threatened to veto the higher spending level unless Democrats agreed.

Democrats initially balked at the long-term funding and that set the stage for more gridlock.

Instead of setting a 3 percent growth rate, Democrats were pushing a plan that would tie school funding increases to a growth in state tax collections.

Senate Education Committee Chairman Sen. Michael Connolly, D-Dubuque, said the "common denominator" between legislative negotiators and the governor is that they all want to make the school-funding process easier.

"Everybody wants to get out of the mess we've been in," Connolly said.

"Governor Branstad is serious about this," said House Speaker Ron Corbett, R-Cedar Rapids. "I don't think, at this point in time, the Senate Democrats believe how serious he is."

Senate Majority Leader Wally Horn, D-Cedar Rapids, called Branstad's proposal "a step forward" in solving the school finance deadlock but was leery of approving a long-range school finance plan.

"We just need to go to a think tank and see how to go about it," Horn said.

Democrats and Republicans retreated to private meetings to discuss what to do next.

"We're trying to move the session along," Siegrist said.

Branstad started the latest exchange at his regular news conference Monday morning when he sent the first signal he was willing to compromise.

Under his system, the Legislature would set school finances for two years at a time and eliminate the 30-session day deadline to act on the issue.

"What I'm willing to do is try to resolve this thing on a permanent basis," Branstad said. "Implicit in that is that we look at all of those issues."

Miguel Amaya is comforted by California Highway Patrol officer Daniel Mota as the bodies of his mother, sister, brother-in-law and niece are removed from a mud-covered car near the collapsed Interstate 5 bridge Sunday in Coalinga, Calif. At least 12 deaths have been blamed on the storms that pounded the state over the weekend.

California vs. rain: Round 2 hits hard

David Klugman
Associated Press

MONTEREY, Calif. — A single highway into the cutoff Monterey Peninsula reopened Monday, but a new round of storms hit northern California, swamping the nation's "salad bowl" and keeping thousands from their homes.

"It's going to be kind of yucky all week," National Weather Service forecaster Miguel Miller said.

Rain returned after a dry Sunday that marked a break from the storms, which have been blamed for at least 12 deaths statewide. James Bailey, assistant chief of the state Flood Operations Center, put the damage at $2 billion.

Floodwaters that closed all roads into and out of the scenic Monterey Peninsula for nearly 24 hours receded enough on Monday to allow the reopening of Highway 68. A 14-mile backup formed during the morning rush hour. The other main route, Highway 1, remained closed.

About 100,000 people live on the 20 or so square miles of the hilly, wooded Monterey Peninsula, long one of California's most popular tourist attractions. It juts into the Pacific Ocean about 80 miles south of San Francisco.

Growers inland, in one of the world's richest farming regions, expected huge losses. The Salinas River washed away about half the area's spring lettuce crop, a loss of $500 million or more, said Mike Antle, vice president of harvest for Tanimura & Antle. Strawberries and artichokes were also damaged.

The coastal Salinas Valley is often called the nation's salad bowl because more than half the nation's vegetables are grown here. The annual harvest is worth about $2 billion to growers.

"At this point, we can't even get into the fields and see what damage there is," said Ed Angstadt of Grower-Shipper Vegetables Association.

Just up the coast, Castroville and a portion of Moss Landing were evacuated Sunday night as floodwaters forced raw sewage to back up and flow onto streets. More than 1,000 people were taken by bus to emergency shelters.

Resort towns around the swollen Russian River and the wine country community of Napa, drenched last week, took another pounding Monday. Residents of Guerneville were still trying to clean up from a January flood.

"I'm really tired of this. My place has been flooded twice. You'd think we were going to fall off into the ocean," said Danae Hayworth, who sent her two young daughters to stay with friends until she finds a new place to live.

Rick Kretsinger, whose Guerneville Wash and Dry laundry was swamped, said, "We just finished fixing it all up from the first flood. Now the second. This is devastating. Over the weekend, I started thinking where I'd like to move."

A power failure in the Lake Tahoe area along the Nevada line knocked out electricity to a pumping station, and some 8,000 gallons of untreated sewage poured into the pristine lake Sunday.

Repair work began on Interstate 5, California's main north-south route, which was cut near Coalinga after rushing water collapsed a bridge. State officials expect Interstate 5 to be closed for weeks.

Doctors ease blood pressure drug anxiety

Paul Raeburn
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Patients concerned about a report that certain blood pressure drugs might raise the risk of a heart attack by 60 percent should continue taking their medication and consult with their doctors, researchers said Monday.

The report, presented Friday at an American Heart Association meeting, prompted thousands of calls to researchers and doctors from patients taking the drugs, called calcium channel blockers.

The generic names of the drugs are nifedipine, diltiazem and vera-pamil. They are sold under such brand names as Adalat, Calan, Cardizem, Dilacor, Isoptin, Procardia and Verelan.

Dr. Bruce Psaty, the report's author, said the drugs pose little risk over the short term and patients should not stop taking them without seeing their doctors.

"The instantaneous risk to individuals is exceedingly small. From the point of view of public health in the United States, the long-term safety and efficacy of these drugs is an important question," Psaty said.

He presented his findings at the heart association's annual epidemiology meeting.

Psaty explained the numbers this way: In the course of a year, heart attacks might strike about 10 of every 1,000 people being treated for hypertension with other drugs.

His study found that the risk might rise to 16 of every 1,000 people being treated with calcium channel blockers. That's a 60 percent increase, although it is still small.

Nevertheless, he estimated that 6 million Americans are taking these drugs, and many are likely to take them for many years.

"If the results of our case control study are correct, that's a lot of heart attacks that you would want to prevent," Psaty said.

Psaty's study was a statistical look at 623 people who had suffered heart attacks and a control group of 2,032 who hadn't. Such epidemiological studies do not provide definitive answers, but they do provide important clues for further research.

The government has launched a study to administer these drugs to randomly chosen groups of patients in a controlled way to get a precise estimate of the risks or benefits.

ABOLITION OF AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Country will be set back

Let us wax nostalgic for a moment: Remember "Alf," the inane TV series about an alien who arrives on Earth and takes up residency in the home of a droll yet lovable character? Before fading into the notorious abyss that is 1980s lore, this program was somehow a huge hit with U.S. viewers.

Now, try to recall "Star Wars" — not the movie, but the nuclear defense initiative. Star Wars was also inane, an alien idea that took up residency in the mind of a droll yet lovable president. Before ballooning the national deficit by wasting billions of dollars, this program was also a huge hit with U.S. citizens.

So it goes that the American public sometimes embraces stupid concepts in the programs presented to them. In the case of bad television, this practice of ours is relatively harmless. In government, however, it can be extremely harmful — as evidenced by the monumental debt accumulated in the '80s. Recent calls for the abolition of affirmative action show that the tendency to embrace damaging concepts has not yet been lost on us.

Affirmative action programs were instituted to give minorities and women opportunities for education and jobs. For the first two centuries of this country's existence, such opportunities were emphatically denied to minorities and women as slavery, segregation and the notion of male superiority prevailed. The fact is, 20 years of affirmative action has done relatively little to even out the balance of power, particularly when compared to 200 years of white male dominance.

Nonetheless, today's white males — faced with strict competition from minorities and women for school admissions and job openings — are decrying that affirmative action programs foster discrimination against them. The charge against affirmative action is being led by a powerful trio of white men — House Majority Leader Bob Dole; Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas; and of course, House Speaker Newt Gingrich — and the growing swell of folks jumping on the bandwagon is startling.

This declaration that affirmative action represents reverse discrimination smacks of shortsightedness. In order to even be in consideration for admissions and jobs, minorities and women must traverse a lifelong obstacle course mined with racism and sexism. Many also have fewer luxuries afforded them because of a low-income status. White males, meanwhile, generally come from middle-class backgrounds and have reached the point of contention with few barriers in their way. Because this discrepancy in paths traveled is so pronounced, any dispute that a lesser candidate is receiving a position is misplaced.

However, as shortsightedness prevails, those benefiting from affirmative action are stigmatized and subjected to tension and resentment. While misplaced, these tensions need to be rectified. The answer is not abolition of a positive idea, but streamlining it to ensure that justice prevails for all parties.

Americans need only to look at the economic havoc wrought by Star Wars (and its parent concept "Reaganomics") to understand that fast acceptance of novel ideas in government can lead to disaster. Hasty abolition of affirmative action will set this country back in terms of both equality and balance of power.

A MODEL FOR OTHER STATES

Iowa welfare a success

The Republicans have taken over the House of Representatives and next up on their agenda is welfare. Their solution is to give the states financial control of their welfare programs because the people closer to the situation can monitor how programs should run and how much money each program should receive. The problem is that some programs such as Aid to Dependent Children aren't working. The United States has one of the highest poverty rates of developed countries and transferring control from the federal government to the states will do no more than change who hands out the money. The objective of the welfare system should be to help receivers become productive citizens rather than giving them money to live at a subsistence level.

Welfare became a federal issue in the 1960s when Lyndon B. Johnson began the war on poverty. ADC is used to prevent children from growing up in poverty, but the mothers who receive benefits become trapped by the system. For these mothers, receiving ADC is easier than getting a job. While the aid given to the disabled has helped them give something back to their communities, ADC doesn't help mothers get a job. If they get a job and are taken off ADC, often they are financially unable to live.

In October of 1993, a new program became effective in Iowa for ADC receivers. Under this program, dependent parents must make a plan to become economically independent in a set amount of time. The program encourages families to live together because, unlike other ADC programs, benefits are not lowered if they do. The program also gives incentives for parents to get jobs. One of the major arguments against welfare is that it encourages receivers to be unproductive. Under the program contract, the parent has a certain amount of time — varying with each individual — to become self-sufficient.

The third part of the program — responsibilities with consequences — holds the recipient up to the contract. If they do not follow their plan to become self-sufficient, they are taken off welfare. The program teaches responsibility by helping parents become self-sufficient rather than dependent. In July 1993, the employment of ADC recipients in Iowa was at 18 percent but has now risen to 33 percent. Iowa has more people on the program and is giving out less money.

If Republicans get their way, the money that the federal government gives Iowa to enforce this program would be decreased. The welfare system needs to be in the control of the federal government to ensure that each person needing aid receives it.

Republicans need to take a look at programs that are making changes and showing results — such as ADC in Iowa — and apply the model to the rest of the country instead of giving the states control of ineffective programs.

Islamic Salvation Front strongly supported

Things have gone from bad to worse in Algeria.

Last October, the country's ruling party — the National Liberation Front (FLN in its French acronym) — inexplicably terminated its talks with the Islamic Salvation Front (FIS), the party which was ousted from power three years ago despite having won the first democratic election in Algeria's history. With dialogue stonewalled, violence has escalated and the future for this north African country looks decidedly bleak.

The Algerian situation exploded on Jan. 11, 1992, when the FLN-controlled army displaced the Muslims and declared the elections null and void. This action threw Algeria into a bloody civil war with the FIS and the FLN clashing over political ideology, economic reform, religious doctrine and women's rights. Both sides have been responsible for brutality, terrorism and general mayhem.

Among other ethical transgressions, the FLN has squelched the flow of information out of the country, primarily by killing journalists. Mass media in the Middle East are a somewhat different enterprise than in the United States. Where American reporters are taught to maintain the appearance of objectivity, Arab journalists are encouraged to take a strong political stance in the midst of upheaval. The result has been more controversial reporting, often of higher quality; the downside has been the shortened life spans of the reporters. Algeria is no exception.

Given the lack of firsthand information, it is not surprising that the American media have depicted the Algerian civil war as a battle over women's clothing. The feminist press in the United States has expressed concern that an FIS victory could result in mandatory veiling for Algerian women, as if this were the central issue in this conflict where more than 20,000 civilians have been killed.

In the United States, Muslims have been compared to Christian fundamentalists, both being conservative and generally anti-women. Such thinking easily lends itself to the equation of the Algerian government with the American government, both being secular, democratic and favoring gender equity — at least in principle. This comparison is a fallacy, however, for the Algerian government has its own history of misogyny. The FLN has restricted women from public space and squelched their participation in political affairs.

Algerian women are not just oppressed because of their gender either. The Algerian economy under the FLN is among the worst in the Arab world, and women have borne the brunt of the hardship. Therefore, many Algerian women have supported the FIS, believing the party will bring economic reform or, if nothing else, seeing it as the lesser of two evils. For a mother struggling to feed her children, being told to wear a head scarf is of minor importance.

Despite frequent misunderstandings of the situation, American feminists at least have focused their attention on the future of human rights in Algeria, which is more than can be said for the American government. The United States was conspicuously silent after the 1992 coup d'etat despite its rhetoric supporting democracy abroad. Its official statement — that an Islamic government is inherently undemocratic — masks other more concrete concerns.

It is the threat to American economic hegemony, not to Algerian democracy, that fueled the American reaction to the elections. After all, the belief that an Islamic government is inherently undemocratic has not stopped the United States from selling arms to Saudi Arabia, bailing out Kuwait or doing business with the United Arab Emirates. The United States is hesitant to legitimize the FIS because its anti-Western rhetoric has the potential to create an unstable backdrop for American-based companies doing business in north Africa. The United States is also worried that an FIS victory could also mean writing off Algeria's $26 billion debt, though this fear is probably unfounded.

On the other hand, the broad-based popular support for the Muslims is too large to be ignored. The United States has therefore advocated "reconciliation" between the warring factions. A precise definition of "reconciliation" in this context remains elusive. Certainly the United States would not support a regime hostile to American interests, even in the unlikely case that everyone in Algeria agreed to a compromise. Yet the American policy is still a step up from that of France, whose minister of interior, Charles Pasqua, has close ties to FLN generals and favors a policy of "eradication" of fundamentalists rather than reconciliation between the parties.

Of course, the virtues of the Algerian Islamic parties should not be exalted, for their actions can hardly be considered exemplary. The leaders of the movement have grown more interested in seizing political power than in being true to Islamic principles, and their perpetuation of violence has continued unabated. Nevertheless, the FIS enjoys massive support among the Algerian population (yes, even the women) and, therefore, deserves a stronger vote of confidence from the international community.

Knee-jerk reaction makes perfect sense

At first glance, it seems like a terrible abuse of legal power — a man sent to prison for 25 years to life for stealing one slice of pizza.

Yes, only one thin slice of pizza. And it didn't even have everything on it.

But that's what happened to a mope named Jerry Dewayne Williams in a Los Angeles courtroom.

It was Williams' misfortune to have stolen the pizza slice after California put in one of those tough "three strikes" laws.

This meant that because Williams had four earlier felony convictions — including robbery and attempted robbery — a judge could whack him with the 25-to-life stretch on another conviction.

But why would stealing one slice of pizza be considered a serious crime?

Because after too much drinking with his buddies, Williams, 25, grabbed the pizza slice from a group of children in a restaurant. And one of the kids testified that Williams frightened him.

Williams is unhappy. So is his lawyer. And many California liberals say that the three-strikes law was not intended to punish a pizza thief as harshly as a murderer, bank robber or sex fiend.

They have a point. Some killers, robbers and fiends receive lighter sentences than 25 to life.

On the other hand, the sentence could be a step toward mending a glaring gap in our justice system. It is the question of what to do with jerks.

The fact is, most people are not murdered or robbed or attacked by a fiend. The average bank teller will never see a bank robber.

But hardly anyone in our society can get through even one day without being tormented by a jerk.

They are everywhere, and they multiply faster than the general population.

We entered the Age of the Jerk sometime in the 1960s. That's when screamers decided they could dominate any public discussion, slobbs decided that all the world was their litter box and droolers began forcing their boom box noise on innocent ears.

All you have to do is get out in rush-hour traffic. Within seconds a jerk will tailgate or cut you off. Or white-knuckle merge at 5 mph in a high-speed zone.

Turn on your radio and hear the grunts and "ya knows" of the jerks who dominate the call-in shows.

A large segment of the population believes that chicken bones should never be put in a garbage can. Instead, they should be taken to the nearest park and scattered on the softball diamonds or in the grass.

Drive through some neighborhoods and you get the inner-city strut from young men who slowly jaywalk and dare you to hit them so they can sue and ruin your life.

If your phone rings with a wrong number, it's likely that the person on the other end will get mad and blame you for their stupidity.

In a checkout line, the jerks wait until the entire purchase has been tabulated before slowly taking out his wallet or opening her purse.

So basically, stealing a slice of pizza from children was the act of a jerk, not a criminal. Similar acts of jerkism are committed every day. And nothing happens to the hairy-browed perpetrators.

But now the word might go out, maybe on radio talk shows, where most jerk info is exchanged: "The jig is up; a jerk got 25 years to life."

Why not? Why should jerks get away with a lifelong commitment of shredding society's delicate fabric of common courtesy and civility? Why should society just heave a sigh when made miserable by these gap-toothed primates?

A bully who would steal a slice of pizza from children would talk loudly in a movie theater, pick his nose in a restaurant, blow black smoke out of his exhaust pipe and let his dog doo-doo on someone else's front lawn.

A few years ago, after a record-setting weekend of litter in Chicago's Lincoln Park, I made a simple proposal for teaching people not to litter.

A few of them would be seized and strung up by the neck on trees in the park. Their bodies would be left to dangle and decay with signs on their chests saying, "I Littered. Now I Am Dead. Mend Your Ways."

The bleeding-hearts said I was sadistic. That's what they said more recently when I suggested that those who use their car stereos to jolt entire neighborhoods with the noise of cha-cha or rock music should have their ears sliced off and the ear canals filled with Krazy Glue.

Cruel and unusual punishment, the do-gooders said. OK, I'm not a monster. I'm open to compromise.

So on the first offense, maybe we cut off and plug only one ear.

After that, we get tough.

Wal-Mart loses to Wells Fargo

DESTIN, Fla. (AP) — A man wearing a Wells Fargo uniform, bulletproof vest and a pistol walked into a Wal-Mart store to collect the store's cash and walked off with $100,000 before employees could stop him.

The man appeared in the store's parking lot after the store closed for business, carrying a canvas satchel and a police-style radio.

"He walked right to the office and said for the money," a spokesman Rick H. day. "They did not think anything unusual until the Fargo guy showed up."

Workers then called the Fargo Armored Security Co., which confirmed the man was an employee.

No immediate arrest was made. Neither the store nor the department said if the man was taken in cash.

Erratic Russian almost hits nuclear

MOSCOW (AP) — A Russian nuclear power plant fired from a Russian nuclear power plant complex, near Moscow, Monday.

The missile launched from the Novovoronezh Power Station and from some apartments during the missile test, about 100 miles from Moscow, the Russian government said.

"We have reported that the missile test was moved, but the test was negative," Alexander Lebed, regional governor, said.

He said one missile was launched but gave no details.

BOSTON (AP) — A school band played Spangled Banner and Anchors Aweigh at Memorial Day.

But when band leader Harris had his student Willie Nelson's "Mammy" song, he was free speech battle seven years.

Two weeks ago, he was demoted because the former president of the A.T.C. district didn't match the parade in Athol, west of Boston.

"I believed that an appropriate song was that those who served our country were our minds on Memorial Day," Harris said Sunday.

Frog experiment raises hopes of reproduction in space

WASHINGTON (AP) — A giant leap for frogdom — and maybe people, too?

A space shuttle experiment that shows frogs can reproduce in orbit has proven that embryo development common to all vertebrates, including humans, can take place in the absence of gravity, said Steven Black, an embryologist at Reed College in Portland, Ore.

"These frogs showed that embryos can go through the early landmark stages of development OK," Black said Monday. "Humans go through these same stages."

Kenneth Souza of NASA's Ames Research Center in Moffett Field, Calif., said the study supports the idea that one day humans will be able to reproduce in orbit. But he cautioned that much more study is needed before that could ever be attempted.

"We don't see any reason to suspect that fetal development could not be accomplished normally in the absence of gravity," said Souza. "That includes humans."

Wal-Mart loses thousands to Wells Fargo fake

DESTIN, Fla. (AP) — A man wearing a Wells Fargo-style uniform, bulletproof vest and holstered pistol walked into a Wal-Mart to collect the day's receipts and walked off with thousands of dollars before employees realized he was an impostor.

The man appeared Sunday afternoon, carrying a two-handled canvas satchel and wearing a police-style radio on his shoulder.

"He walked right in and went to the office and said, 'I'm here for the money,'" sheriff's spokesman Rick Hord said Monday. "They did not suspect anything unusual until another Wells Fargo guy showed up at 5 p.m."

Workers then called the Wells Fargo Armored Service Corp., which confirmed the second man was an employee.

No immediate arrests were made.

Neither the store nor the sheriff's department said exactly how much was taken in cash and checks.

Erratic Russian missile almost hits nuclear plant

MOSCOW (AP) — A missile fired from a Russian attack jet went astray, narrowly missing a nuclear power plant and an apartment complex, news reports said Monday.

The missile landed 2.7 miles from the Novovoronezhskaya Power Station and only 660 feet from some apartment buildings during the mishap Friday in Voronezh, about 350 miles south of Moscow, the reports said.

"We have repeatedly asked that the missile testing range be moved, but the answer was always negative," Alexander Kovalyov, the regional governor, told national television.

He said one man was injured but gave no details.

Settlement in song lawsuit ends six-year battle

BOSTON (AP) — The high-school band played "The Star-Spangled Banner," "Taps" and "Anchors Aweigh" for the 1988 Memorial Day parade.

But when band director Robert Harris had his students strike up Willie Nelson's "Always on My Mind," he became embroiled in a free speech battle that lasted nearly seven years.

Two weeks ago, Harris accepted $78,000 to settle his claim that he was demoted and harassed because the former superintendent of the Athol-Royalston school district didn't think Nelson's song matched the military theme of the parade in Athol, about 60 miles west of Boston.

"I believed (the song) expressed an appropriate sentiment, which is that those who have died in service of our country are always on our minds on Memorial Day," Harris said Sunday.

Los Angeles police Detective Mark Fuhrman faces prosecutors and defense attorneys during his testimony in the O.J. Simpson double-murder trial Monday in Los Angeles.

Defense constructs racist officer theory

Linda Deutsch

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — F. Lee Bailey began his much-anticipated dissection of Detective Mark Fuhrman's testimony Monday, promising jurors he would show that Fuhrman planted a bloody glove at O.J. Simpson's estate out of racial hatred and a lust for personal glory.

A clearly cautious Fuhrman held his ground and made only one concession at the outset of his cross-examination: He was unsure if he'd ever been in the same room with a woman who accused him of uttering racial remarks so virulent they sent her fleeing in tears.

"I do not recognize this woman as anybody I have ever met," Fuhrman said as a photo of Kathleen Bell was flashed on a 7-foot-high screen in the courtroom.

But he acknowledged he had frequented a Marine recruiting station where Bell says the encounter occurred. And once a woman was present, but he didn't pay any attention to her, Fuhrman said.

Asked if he was sure that woman and Bell are not the same person, Fuhrman answered, "I'm not sure. I just do not know Miss Bell."

"So you may have seen Miss Bell, and you're now unable to recollect that? Is that so?" Bailey pressed.

"No," Fuhrman replied. "I didn't pay any attention to the female that came into the recruiting office."

Under questioning by Deputy District Attorney Marcia Clark last week, Fuhrman denied ever meeting Bell and said he didn't recognize her when he saw her interviewed on CNN.

At the start of his cross-examination, the forceful, often dramatic Bailey appeared to be calmly and methodically stalking prey. Fuhrman, cool but rigid in the witness chair, refused to be cornered.

The courtroom was hushed until Fuhrman, under persistent questioning about the woman, unintentionally broke the tension by saying, "The name of Bell does not ring a ..." and then laughing unabashedly. Spectators laughed, too, almost in relief.

Fuhrman's discovery on the Simpson property of a bloody glove that matched one found at the crime scene has made him a lightning rod for allegations about his demeanor and purported misconduct.

At Simpson's preliminary hearing last July, Fuhrman spoke of how "my heart started pounding, and I realized what I had probably found."

On Monday, he played down the drama of the discovery, telling jurors on direct examination that he wasn't immediately sure of its significance.

"I was somewhat alarmed ... of finding something such as this and not knowing if a suspect or a victim had left something back there," Fuhrman testified, noting that the glove was found outside a bedroom where Simpson house guest Brian "Kato" Kaelin had heard loud bumps the night before.

Clark showed jurors a photo of the glove but did not produce the actual item in court for Fuhrman to identify.

Before his cross-examination began, Bailey lost a bid for more latitude in questioning Fuhrman but previewed the thrust of the defense attack.

"Ultimately, (the jurors) are going to have to evaluate that question as to whether this officer, incensed at being kicked out of the biggest murder case in the history of this state, decided to keep himself in it by becoming an indispensable witness as he surely has done," he said.

SEARCH

mative action is that employers hire only on the basis of race and gender, Mask said.

"It's not about quotas," she said. "It should never compromise qualifications. Sometimes people get confused when race and gender are at issue, but I think there are a good number of women and minorities out there who are qualified for the position of president at this university."

Mask and Collins said candidates will be considered on individual achievements — not by race or gender.

Collins said the list of candidates is very short because the presidential search has hardly begun. However, a number of women and minorities are on the preliminary list, he said.

The second paragraph of the employment listing reads, "The University of Iowa is a diverse institution and is proud of the fact it was one of the first universities in the United States to admit women on the same basis as men."

The advertisement clearly reflects the committee's position on affirmative action, Collins said.

"That tells them about the diversity of the institution, which is a part of our history we are particularly proud of and which we hope to continue being proud of," he said.

Some misinterpret the premise of affirmative action and have the mistaken idea that the policy allows unqualified candidates to be hired for positions, Mask said.

"A lot of people misunderstand and overstate affirmative action," she said. "It's about providing equal access and opportunity, and those are things we still need to work for."

Despite the large number of minorities already hired as UI staff, Mask said the UI must continue making a commitment to affirmative action.

"When women and minorities can access on an equal plane with other people, those preventative steps won't be necessary. But we can't toss the fundamentals of affirmative action out the window without consequence," she said. "I don't think we're at that point yet in this country."

COMMITTEE

want their names kept secret during the process. Committee Chairman Steve Collins said candidates are being asked to submit their requests for confidentiality in writing and most will do that.

"It's clearly going to be the case that a great, great majority of the candidates will insist on confidentiality," Collins said. "A lot of folks who have very good jobs at the present time are very, very reluctant to jeopardize their current position and become one of a large number of people publicly acknowledged to be considered for the position."

Although he is trying to comply with the open-meetings laws, Collins said the committee will disclose as little information as is legally possible to ensure confidentiality for candidates.

"Our view is that the process will be as open as is possible to make it, but we will stop short of identifying candidates and making applications and other materials related to those candidates public," he said. "The reasons for that are largely related to our desire to conduct a successful search and to have people — who would not otherwise be willing to be considered — allow us to persuade them to be a candidate for president of the UI."

Chapter 21 of the Code of Iowa lists 10 situations in which a meeting can be closed — one referring specifically to discussion of hiring and firing of personnel.

The exemption applies to situations that "evaluate the professional competency of an individual whose appointment, hiring, performance or discharge is being considered when necessary to prevent needless and irreparable injury to that individual's reputation and that individual requests a closed session."

The current "sunshine laws," enacted Jan. 1, 1979, are meant to guarantee citizens access to public information, said Rep. Minnette Doderer, D-Iowa City, who was in the House when the laws were passed. "There have been incidents when people tried to close meetings when the press isn't there or end meetings quickly so the press can't get there in time," Doderer said. "I think the law we have now works."

Presidential searches often cause friction between search committees and the media. The 1991 search that resulted in the appointment of Iowa State University President Martin Jischke caused The Des Moines Register to file a lawsuit — which it eventually lost — against ISU claiming meetings should be open.

The lawsuit also contended the media should have access to all names of candidates for the presidency, even if candidates do not know they have been recommended for the position.

The lawsuit was "frivolous," and the search for the ISU president would have been hindered had the Register won, said David Holger, chairman of the 1991 ISU presidential search committee. "I think it's better to have the search closed because good people may not want to participate if their names are made public early in the search," Holger said.

Although the Register was unsuccessful in its attempt to have the process completely open, two Michigan colleges were sued by newspapers because of the confidentiality of presidential searches.

In 1988, the Michigan Supreme Court ruled the University of Michigan violated the state's Open Meetings Act and Freedom of Information Act in its presidential search. The suit was filed by Booth Newspapers and The Detroit Free Press.

Michigan State University is currently embroiled in a lawsuit filed by The Detroit News and The Lansing State Journal because the MSU board of trustees did not serve the required 18-hour notice before having a presidential search meeting.

NURSES

al nurses will be moved from the psychiatry department to other UIHC departments by July 1.

Robert Robinson, head of the UIHC psychiatry department, declined to comment on the situation.

As a result of the nurses' uncertain position in the UIHC, a number of union organizations are courting them.

Steve O'Donnell — president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local 12 — said the United Nurses of America, the AFSCME's organization for professional nurses, and the Minnesota Nurses Association are both vying to represent the Iowa City nurses.

"I've talked to a number of nurses, and they hate what's going on," O'Donnell said. "If you have outside representation, you can prevent layoffs — or reclassifications — from happening."

There are 1,558 professional nurses at UIHC. The nurses — along with 1,296 physicians — are currently represented on the UI Staff Council.

Borg said it would be impossible to tell how many job switches will take place.

"This is a continuing thing," he said. "There were reclassifications before last week, and there will continue to be more."

The newly classified positions are equal in title to the previous jobs the employees held, Borg said. The amount of pay employees receive depends on how much seniority employees carry, he said.

"Generally, they will keep the same job title and pay for a specified position, but it depends somewhat on how much seniority they have," Borg said.

Although it is early, O'Donnell said interest among nurses in forming a union seems favorable.

"We've done one mailing and are planning a meeting in the next couple of weeks," he said. "The response is good so far, and there is interest here — to what extent we don't know yet."

No registered nurses who were contacted would comment on the possibility of unionization.

Borg said he had heard nothing about nurses hoping to unionize.

"I know of no union-organizing activity in psychiatry or in any department," he said. "From time to time, there is always talk about it. But when you have 1,500 or 1,600 nurses, there is always some discussion about whether they should be organized."

Nurses must first vote on whether to pursue joining a union, O'Donnell said. At least 50 percent of the UIHC nurses would have to vote affirmatively in order to form a union.

Which union the nurses will belong to is also decided in the initial vote. Next, the nurses would meet with union representatives to draft a contract, O'Donnell said.

he's already taking precautions for his spring break trip to the Florida Keys.

"I am going to pack condoms, 2 gallons of our own water and sun protection," he said.

Hefel said he is even going to keep a close eye on the booze he consumes. "We are not going to order any mixed drinks with their ice in it," Hefel said.

Booze — and its uninhibiting effects — can be a bigger problem than burns as spring breakers do keg stands on the sandy beaches and slam piña colodas.

"Be aware of your environment, be careful of your situation; alcohol lessens the awareness," Barnett said.

Alcohol dehydrates the body, which is especially dangerous after spending a day in the blistering sun, she said.

"Many harmful incidents of injury as well as harmful sexual misadventures are caused from blurred judgments and decisions made from the overconsumption of alcohol," Barnett said.

Curley recounted a life-threatening incident during which an inebriated student fractured his neck while jumping from a balcony to a swimming pool.

Sexual activity is also common on spring break, and Barnett said condoms should be worn during sexual activity. While HIV is a serious risk with most sexual activity, Barnett and Curley both said chlamydia, genital warts and hepatitis B are the most frequent sexually transmitted diseases contracted during spring break.

Van Gundy is in the hot seat

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Wisconsin athletic director Pat Richter met Monday with basketball coach Stan Van Gundy and scheduled a news conference Tuesday amid reports Van Gundy will be ousted after just one year as coach.

"It is Stan's and my preference to honor the student-athletes at our annual banquet (Monday) night without added speculation and distraction," Richter said.

Van Gundy's team finished with a disappointing 13-14 record last weekend and failed to reach postseason play.

A news conference was set for Tuesday on the coaching "situation," Richter said.

Before Van Gundy met with Richter, he already had advised his players he would be fired, according to a report Monday in The Wisconsin State Journal.

The Wisconsin State Journal point guard Darnell Hoskins as saying Van Gundy broke the news to the team on the bus following the 97-72 thrashing at the hands of Michigan State Saturday.

"He said the reason he told us was that he wanted us to hear it from him before we might read it in the paper," Hoskins said. "He wants the focus of the banquet to be for us and whatever we might have accomplished this year."

Jordan keeps reporters guessing

DEERFIELD, Ill. (AP) — There was no announcement. The news conference, so zealously anticipated, never came.

The only sign Monday that Michael Jordan really is planning to resume his basketball career came at practice, his third with the Chicago Bulls in less than a week.

"He just said, 'Do you think I should come in and work out?' And I said, 'Yeah, if you think you're gonna play ball, you probably should come and work out.' He said, 'Well, I'll be there.'"

Bulls coach Phil Jackson said. So, does Jordan's attendance mean that the world's most famous ex-minor league ballplayer is ready to return to roundball?

"No," Jackson said. "That means he's still pursuing whatever his decision is to make on this."

In other words, the only game Jordan is playing these days is the waiting game. And the rest of the world is playing along.

NFL

Rams may have to stay in Anaheim

PHOENIX (AP) — The Rams' road to St. Louis from Southern California is liable to be long and tortuous. In fact, it may not happen.

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue made that clear Monday when he restated his opposition to the relocation.

Then he emphasized it by saying he agreed with Rams president John Shaw, who said if no vote is taken on the move at these meetings, the Rams would interpret that as disapproval of their plans.

And it is indeed possible there could be no vote.

Iowa's season is far from over

Hawkeye sophomores earn all-Big Ten honors

Patrick Regan
The Daily Iowan

Still hurting because of their omission from the NCAA tournament field, the Hawkeyes found minor relief Monday in the fact that their trio of sophomores earned all-Big Ten Conference honors.

Andre Woolridge, Jess Settles and Chris Kingsbury were among the top players in the Big Ten as voted by the media and conference coaches.

Settles was named third-team all-conference by both the coaches and the media. Woolridge joined Settles on the media's third team and earned honorable mention by the coaches.

But the coaches and media disagreed on Kingsbury's status. The Associated Press put the Hawkeye guard on their second team while the coaches did not recognize Kingsbury for even an honorable mention.

"Those things are just an honor and they don't always work out," Settles said. "But I'm surprised that (Kingsbury) didn't make a little higher than that."

Kingsbury's absence means not one coach other than Iowa's Tom Davis voted for the Big Ten's second leading 3-point shooter as an all-Big Ten player.

"I think the (sports writers) like my (shooting) range more than the coaches do. That's what it is," Kingsbury said.

"As far as the coaches not respecting me, that's fine. The Big Ten's over this year and next year by the end of the season I think they'll probably respect the Hawkeyes."

Davis said the fact that Kingsbury is just a sophomore probably kept him off the coaches' teams.

"I'm going to guess you're going to find the coaches are going to favor the upperclassmen. They'll put more seniors and more credence on the seniors of the different teams and give them more credibility," Davis said.

For the season, Kingsbury averaged 17 points and 3.6 three-point field goals per game.

Earning honorable mention by the coaches ahead of Kingsbury were Doug Etzler of Ohio State, Shelly Clark of Illinois, Jayson Walton of Minnesota, Porter Roberts and Matt Waddell of Purdue and Woolridge.

Woolridge had a 13.7 points per game average and was second in the Big Ten with 5.6 assists per contest.

Settles' numbers were hampered with mid-season injury problems but finished with 15.7 points and 5.8 rebounds per game.

The Hawkeyes returned to practice Monday at the Fieldhouse North Gym. Carver-Hawkeye Arena, Iowa's normal practice facility, was unavailable due to the NCAA wrestling championships which begin Thursday.

But if there was any question if the Hawkeyes could get motivated to play DePaul in the NIT, assistant coach Rich Walker quickly erased any doubt.

Walker erupted into a tirade during pre-practice drills with Greg Helmers, Russ Millard and the grey team.

After Walker's voice died down and the echo through the gym disappeared, Kingsbury said Walker was simply trying to light a fire under the Hawkeyes as he has all season.

"He's taking this seriously," Kingsbury said. "He told me after the Indiana game, I was laying on the floor and he said, 'We're in (the NCAA's)' and not to worry about it."

He's trying to keep us up. You've got to remember that we've still got a tournament to play. We're disappointed, but the coaches are going to get us ready and it's going to be up to us to win it."

HAWKEYES AWAIT DEPAUL

Davis: I'm not complaining

David Schwartz
The Daily Iowan

Iowa coach Tom Davis is obviously disappointed at not making the NCAA tournament, but he's not going to gripe about it.

Iowa was overlooked by the tournament selection committee after getting hammered by Indiana on Sunday and finishing .500 in the Big Ten Conference.

Davis said since the decision of the selection committee is final, complaining about its choices would be pointless and detrimental to the team.

The Hawkeyes (19-11, 9-9) face DePaul Wednesday night in a first-round NIT matchup. Losing perspective against the Blue Demons (17-10) because of whining about the NCAA's could be a costly mistake, Davis said.

"Let's just assume that they did the best possible job and that we fell short..."

Tom Davis on the NCAA selection committee

"One of the things that I wanted to do was not put myself in a position where I'm looking at or questioning those last picks," Davis said.

The selection committee thought long and hard about who earned a place in the field of 64 and who to didn't, Davis said. Since Iowa was excluded, something must have stood out to the committee that set the NCAA tournament teams apart from the Hawkeyes.

"We've got to go on, and let's not worry about it," Davis said. "Let's just assume that they did the best possible job and that we fell short and we're gonna do the best with what we have."

Davis said that this year's NIT

NCAA POLL

Top 25 mirrors NCAA seedings

Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

College basketball's season of parity couldn't have been presented any clearer than in the weekly rankings.

When the final Associated Press poll was released Monday with UCLA on top for the third straight week, it capped a season that had six No. 1 teams, including a five-week period with a different one each week, and 45 schools from 14 conferences ranked at some point.

The six No. 1s was one off the record set in 1982-83 and the 45 schools was three off the record set in 1992-93.

EDITOR'S TOURNAMENT PICKS

Michigan State will bring honor back to Big Ten

Well, I guess I was wrong.

One week ago, I wrote that a victory over Michigan State would ensure Iowa an NCAA tournament berth.

But the tournament selection committee put me in my place.

How could I have been so stupid as to overlook quality at-large teams like Manhattan, Miami of Ohio and Santa Clara. After all, Manhattan won a whopping 25 games. Never mind the fact that the Jaspers did not face a single team in the nation's Top 50.

And then there's Florida. With a 17-12 record, the Gators are a major threat to romp to the Final Four.

Yes, I was dead wrong. All this time I thought the Big Ten was a superb conference.

But the selection committee opened my eyes when it put Illinois as a 11th seed. Meanwhile, third place in the Big Ten is obviously worthy of only a No. 9 seeding. Just ask Indiana and Michigan.

And how about Purdue. Victories at Michigan State, Illinois, Minnesota, Iowa and Penn State during conference play, 14 wins in their last 15 games and the Big Ten Championship was only good enough for a third seed in the Midwest, the most difficult region of the tournament.

Like Tom Davis says, there's no use complaining about the selection committee. Instead just concentrate on what lies ahead.

For the Hawkeyes that's the NIT and for me that's another set of predictions.

third.

That's where the NCAA selection committee and the poll broke ranks.

The NCAA field has Kansas as the fourth of the No. 1 seeds, but North Carolina (24-5) held fourth in the poll, its lowest ranking of the season.

Kansas (23-5) was fifth, dropping from second after losing in the semifinals of the Big Eight tournament.

The Jayhawks were followed by Arkansas, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Villanova and Maryland.

Four contenders in this region and, after winning the ACC tournament, Wake Forest is playing as well as any team in the nation, except perhaps Villanova.

The Wildcats knocked off Connecticut to win the Big East tournament and 6-foot-5 Kerry Kittles, averaging 21 points per game, is just the type of player that can carry a team to the Final Four.

The most intriguing matchup of the region could come in the second round where Tulsa, if it gets by Illinois, would most likely meet Villanova. The Golden Hurricane are capable of making a run similar to last season when they beat UCLA and Oklahoma State in the NCAAs before losing to Arkansas.

Look for Villanova to squeak by Tulsa on the way to Seattle.

WEST REGION

Watch out for what may be the most lopsided blowout in tournament history when No. 1 UCLA wallops 11-18 Florida International. Games like these should never be played. It's a waste of the NCAAs' time.

The Bruins biggest challenge should come from Maryland. The Terps made an improbable charge to the Sweet 16 last season as a seventh seed and now have the tournament experience to take it one step further.

UCLA and Maryland will be the best game of the Big Dance with the Bruins surviving to reach the Final Four.

SOUTHEAST REGION
The NCAA champion will come out of this region and it isn't Kentucky or North Carolina.

Shawn Respert will be the Danny Manning of this year's tournament, leading Michigan State to the NCAA title as Manning did for Kansas in 1988.

All Respert needs is a little support from his teammates and he can take it from there. He can and will amaze hoops fans everywhere as he buries 30-foot jumpers and heats up for 40-point games.

Michigan State will restore respect to the Big Ten Conference and show those nimrods on the selection committee they made a grave error in underestimating the Big Ten.

Kansas, Villanova, UCLA and Michigan State in Seattle with the Spartans going home as champions.

That's how I see it.

Of course, I've been wrong before.

Cyclones face difficult draw

Associated Press

AMES, Iowa — Sitting on a bus parked alongside Interstate 35 in southern Iowa, the Iowa State basketball team learned its fate in the NCAA tournament.

The good news for the Cyclones was that they did indeed make the 64-team field, getting the No. 7 seed in the Southeast Regional. What wasn't so good was that Iowa State has to play Florida on Friday in Tallahassee, Fla. — 150 miles from the Florida campus in Gainesville. And if the Cyclones win, they'd no doubt face North Carolina in the next round. North Carolina plays Murray State on Friday.

"Well, I think you can assume that they'll have some home court advantage," Iowa State coach Tim Floyd said. "But we have played in some tough places and I think beating Kansas 40 miles from Lawrence has shown that our team will play hard no matter where the game is."

Iowa State knocked off second-ranked Kansas in the semifinals of the Big Eight tournament in Kansas City on Saturday, then lost to Oklahoma State 62-53 in Sunday's championship game.

"I think beating Kansas 40 miles from Lawrence has shown that our team will play hard no matter where the game is."

Tim Floyd, Iowa State basketball coach

The Cyclones were returning from Kansas City on their chartered bus when the NCAA selections were announced on television. Their eight-team grouping at Tallahassee was the last one shown.

"I kept telling myself that there was no reason to be worried," Floyd said. "We had pulled the bus over in Osceola so we could watch it because with all the peaks the valleys on the road, our reception kept going in and out."

Iowa State (22-10) made the NCAA field for the seventh time in 11 years. Florida (17-12) is coming off a Final Four trip in 1994 and is coached by Lon Kruger, formerly the head coach at Kansas State.

"We're playing a team that is experienced, that has several players back from a team that made it to the Final Four," Floyd said. "I have a lot of respect for Lon Kruger."

The Cyclones rebounded from a slump in which they lost seven of nine games to beat Nebraska in their regular-season finale. Then, after a poor first half against Missouri in the opening round, Iowa State played well in the Big Eight tourney.

KANSAS JAYHAWKS

No. 1 seed may not be blessing

Craig Horst

Associated Press

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Kansas coach Roy Williams can only hope he is wrong.

The second-ranked Jayhawks were made a No. 1 seed in the NCAA tournament despite a disappointing loss Saturday to Iowa State in the semifinals of the Big Eight tournament.

Williams repeated what he had been saying for weeks — that second-seeded Arkansas is the best team in the regional tournament.

"I'm not just saying it because they are in the same bracket,"

Williams said after Kansas was made the top seed in the Midwest and was matched against Colgate in a first-round game in Dayton, Ohio, on Thursday.

"I said it three weeks ago and I'll say it again. I still think Arkansas is the best team," Williams said.

Williams said he was a little surprised that the Jayhawks were made one of the four top seeds after the disappointing loss to Iowa State in overtime.

"What I think the committee does, I think they go 1, 2, 3, 4 and I think we were probably fourth in that seeding," he said. "I think they are probably going 1, 2, 3, 4 with the No. 2 seeds and then they're going to put the strongest No. 2 with us."

And that, according to Williams, is Arkansas.

Williams said he knew little about Colgate other than the freshman he tried to recruit to Kansas — Adonal Foyle. The 6-foot-10, 260-pounder has averaged 17 points and 12.3 rebounds per game while blocking 148 shots.

He is, Williams said, a presence. "Obviously, you haven't seen him play," Williams said when asked what was good about Foyle. "He can run, jump, he's big. He's a big fellow. He passes the look test."

INDIANA-MISSOURI

Veteran coaches prepare for battle

Finally, two of the NCAA's grandmasters will meet.

Norm Stewart of Missouri and Bobby Knight of Indiana are tied for fifth overall on the career victory list entering their first-round matchup Friday in the West Regional in Boise, Idaho. Stewart, whose team is the No. 8 seed, is 659-318 and Knight, coach of the No. 9 seed, is 659-234.

"We've never played, all these years," Stewart said. "Bobby and I talked about it seven or eight years ago and I thought at one time we had it set."

"We wanted to. Something happened, and it just never came about."

Stewart was coaching at Missouri (19-8) in 1969 when the teams last met, but Knight had not yet arrived at Indiana (19-11). Of course, Knight long ago passed Stewart in terms of prestige with his three national championships.

"He's a great coach," Stewart said. "I've watched his team play two or three times this year and they showed all the same qualities that all of his ballclubs do."

Indiana assistant coach Norm Ellenberger said he didn't know much about Missouri.

"We've got some film on them," Ellenberger said. "Give us two or three hours and we'll know a lot more. Norm Stewart always has basic fundamentally strong teams."

Stewart is pretty happy about the way the season has gone for the Tigers. A year after going unbeaten in the Big Eight, Stewart had to mold a team that had only one senior, guard Paul O'Liney.

"Last year we played ourselves into a No. 1 seed," Stewart said. "This year, we've played ourselves into a position that by appearances' sake is a pretty tough hand."

"But you take the hand you were dealt and get ready to play."

The winner gets top-seeded UCLA in the second round.

1968 film suffered similar Oscar slight

Ian Corwin
The Daily Iowan

What does a largely forgotten film like "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter" (1968) have to say about this year's Oscar charade?

Taken in context — as a bridge between two and lasting greatness and simple recognition for popularity — the film whispers blessed wisdom from beyond its premature grave.

"Heart" has a lot in common with two of this year's Academy Award nominees: the self-important, overrated "Forrest Gump" and the quiet, wise Jodie Foster vehicle "Nell."

Like these films, "Heart" is about an outsider to our world who brings his simple wisdom to bear on the problems of the people he touches. The film also shares with "Nell" and the equally unnoticed "Pulp Fiction" the honor of having been passed over at Oscar time in favor of bubble-gum entertainment and popularity polls.

Sitting in the gray area between these two hopefuls is a film like "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter," which still haunts filmgoers even after 27 years. It proves that long after this year's ceremony has ended and "Gump" 's statuettes are squirreled away in a studio vault, films like "Nell" and "Pulp Fiction" will be speaking clearly to future generations.

Alan Arkin — nominated for an Oscar for his effort, although it was Cliff Robertson who took home the gold for the forgettable "Charly" — stars in "Heart" as John Singer, a stoic, wise deaf-mute whose heart is bigger than his head.

After moving to a small Southern town to be close to a deaf friend who has been committed to a mental hospital, Singer befriends a budding teen-ager (Sondra Locke), the town drunk (Stacy Keech) and a cancer-stricken African-American doctor whose bitterness against whites leads him to betray his only daughter (Cicely Tyson).

Through Singer's simple and sensible guidance, these misfits learn much about love, loneliness and loss. But although his presence helps these people through troubled times, Singer's own heartache and helpless exile are ignored until it's too late. Happiness reigns for some but only through the tragedy of others.

The Washington Ballet, the internationally renowned dance company that represents the nation's capital, will perform at Hancher Auditorium tonight at 8.

THREE PIECES ON THE BILL FOR TONIGHT

Washington Ballet makes stop at Hancher for one performance

Molly Faulkner
The Daily Iowan

Live at Hancher Auditorium for one night only, the Washington Ballet, hailing from the nation's capital, will present three different works — two by an internationally acclaimed choreographer, the late Choo-San Goh, and one by Monica Levy.

If Goh's work seems familiar to some, it is because it was featured prominently in the early 1980s when the Joffrey II was in residency in Iowa City.

Goh, born in Singapore, catapulted into the ballet limelight in 1983 when he won a choreographic award at the International Ballet Competition in Bulgaria for his amorous pas de deux, "Momentum," which will be featured in this evening's performance.

He then went on to become the resident choreographer and assistant artistic director of the Washington Ballet. His work "Fives," which is also on the bill, has become the ballet's signature work. Set to Ernest Bloch's Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra, this work is a master of musical counterpoint, using 15 dancers in continually shifting planes and configurations.

"Overstepping," a contemporary ballet by Monica Levy will round out the evening's performance. This work has been hailed as "the most exciting addition to company repertory since Goh's last efforts" by Alan Kriegsmann of The Washington Post.

The 22-member Washington Ballet has been in existence since 1976, under the direction of Mary Day and has won numerous international awards — including the Excellence in Partnering award at the New York International Ballet Competition, first prize at the Prix de Lausanne in Switzerland, the gold medal at the Moscow Ballet Competition and Goh's choreography award at the Varna International Ballet Competition.

Known for its standard of quality, the Washington Ballet and the Washington School of Ballet have become internationally acclaimed, both in performance and education.

Tickets for the Washington Ballet's performance this evening are $23 and $20, $18.40 and $10 for U1 students, $18.40 and $16 for senior citizens, and half-price for people under 18.

AWARD-WINNING 'MADAME ROSA' FEATURED

Bijou offers restrained movie before spring break kicks in

Tasha Robinson
The Daily Iowan

This week, the Bijou heads into spring break not with a bang, but with a whimper. "Madame Rosa," which plays through Thursday, is an understated, quiet film that only briefly drops its placid facade.

"Rosa," which won the best foreign film Oscar in 1977, deals mostly with the warped mother-son relationship between an aging Jewish prostitute and her Arab adoptee. The eponymous Madame Rosa spent 35 years peddling herself in France, achieving some measure of renown before being shipped off to internment at Auschwitz. On her return to France, she's aged far beyond her years and can't take up the old trade, so she becomes a glorified baby sitter and den mother for an unwieldy mob of young children of other hookers.

The oldest of the pack is a tightlipped young troublemaker named Mohammed, Momo for short. Petulantly curious about his past, he harasses Rosa intermittently, leading her other charges in an angry chant of "You're not my mother; I want my mother." But when it becomes obvious that she's getting too old to manage her clan of toddlers and their parents spirit most of them away, Momo steadfastly supports and cares for her, no matter how intimidating her demands become.

The relationship between Momo and Rosa is an odd one full of blunt realism and confusing undercurrents. Rosa calls Momo names, telling him there's something seriously wrong with him, that Arabs are syphilitic by nature and prone to insanity. But she also tells him that she loves him more than any of her other charges.

Momo, not to be outdone, paints unflattering verbal portraits of Rosa, telling complete strangers that she's the ugliest, loneliest woman he's ever seen. He lies to Rosa, sometimes heading directly from one of her lectures to do whatever he's been told not to do. But he also cares for her with a wisdom beyond his years, standing faithfully by her as she slowly sinks into a dangerous and sad senility.

It's often unclear whether either of the two is acting out of love or merely a selfish need for support or company, and Israeli writer-director Moshe Mizrahi offers few clues either way.

Instead, he seems to suspend all judgment against either until the very end of the film, when Momo's actions show the depth of his mind-set clearly for the first time.

Wry sentiment and sad humor produce a series of steppingstones across the film's bulk, keeping it from becoming either dull or maudlin. But without an emotional attachment to any of the characters, it's hard to reach the movie's heart.

"Madame Rosa" may not be the kind of film students want to mentally carry with them into spring break. It's sad, demanding and occasionally ponderous. But for those few who don't see the time off as a chance to rest their brain cells and put heavy cogitation on hold, "Rosa" may be just what the doctor ordered: a film that will keep viewers thinking until the Bijou reopens March 27.

"Madame Rosa" plays at the Bijou Theatre in the Union at 7 p.m. Tuesday and at 9 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday.

The Poppuns
Love Junky

The Poppuns' third, long overdue release, Love Junky, is a sweet and wispily bit of summer, like the taste of cotton candy while strolling along the midway at a carnival.

The group's previous releases, Eugenia and Snog, set The Poppuns up as purveyors of straight-laced girl pop in the tradition of The Primitives, Blondie and The Go-Gos. What puts The Poppuns a notch above such comparisons is the songwriting of Simon Pickles and the irresistible, overpowering presence of vocalist Wendy Morgan, whose very toenail clippings contain 10 times the essence of pop star as Dolores O'Riordan of the Cranberries, Bjork and Tanya Donelly of Belly combined. Pickles builds simple, effective song structures around driving, instantly memorable hooks and exhibits a remarkable mastery over the creation of moods.

"Someone To Dream Of" turns fairly mundane lovelorn lyrics into a spectacular, rending guitar epic reminiscent of Joshua Tree-era U2. "A Miserable Boy" rocks along to a circa 1978 Joan Jett-like beat, while its lyrics both poke fun at and pay homage to The Smiths. The highlight, though, is "So Cold," the acoustic closer. The track is an almost impossibly bittersweet dream of lost loves, guaranteed to keep anyone with half a soul wide awake and lost in memories for at least a week.

While The Poppuns follow very much the same avenue that a thousand other bands have explored, they manage to make the experience fresh and powerful by writing excellent songs and honest, moving lyrics.

This is music with far more to say to twentysomething Generation Xers than anything on the "Singles" soundtrack. For all those who grew up in the '80s, The Poppuns' Love Junky is a chance to spend an hour as an awestruck, wide-eyed teen-ager waiting to be driven home after that first perfect concert.

Unfortunately, Love Junky is currently available only on import but is well worth the effort of obtaining.
