Women’s brain activity during depression is different from men’s brain activity during depression.

UI curator keeps house for fossil collections

Jon Golden

Martha's best friend may be a physical chemistry student at the University of Iowa, but it is a different kind of research that is keeping her company night and day: the remains of 52 million-year-old sharks.

"It took me about five years to catalogue the specimens," Golden said during an interview in her office in the Department of Geology in the University of Iowa's Museum of Natural History. "I have to look at every bone from floor to ceiling line the walls in this building, which is quite a job."

Many students overlook the department's collection also because it is not located in the main building, a fact that Golden is working to change.

"I am interested in the paleontology collections for the UI Department of Geology," said student exhibit curator Carrie Heidkamp. "So, my favorite part of my job is seeing the shark collection."

One of Golden's favorite features of the shark collection is the diversity of species. "I love showing people the different shapes and sizes of the shark skeleton," she said.

Golden's interest in paleontology began when she was a child. "I was always interested in the natural world and how things lived in the past," she said.

The shark collection is one of several in the department, which also includes fossils of birds, dinosaurs, and plants. "I love showing people all the different things we have here," Golden said.

Golden's research interests include the study of paleontology, which is the study of ancient life forms. "I am interested in the history of life on Earth and how it has evolved over time," she said.

Golden is also interested in the importance of paleontology to society. "I believe that understanding our past is important for understanding our present and future," she said.

Golden's work has been featured in several publications, including the Journal of Paleontology and the Proceedings of the Biological Society of Washington. "I am proud of my work and hope to continue to contribute to the field of paleontology," she said.
House weighs merits of listing sex offenders

Lafene Phillips

The Daily Iowan

A bill requiring convicted sex offenders to register their names and other personal information with local law enforcement agencies went before a House committee Monday.

The bill, which is expected to be passed by the House next week, would allow counties to draft sex offender registration rules that go beyond the state's current requirements.

The bill was introduced by Rep. Roy Doderer, R-Adams, and would require sex offenders to register with local authorities within 48 hours of release from jail.

Doderer said he had been working on the issue for the past year and had heard from many constituents about the need for increased oversight of sex offenders.

The bill would allow counties to require sex offenders to register in more than one county, which Doderer said would help ensure better tracking of offenders.

"I believe in giving people a second chance," Doderer said. "But I also believe that we need to ensure that sex offenders are being monitored and accounted for."

NEW YORK — Patients con­cerned about a report that certain blood pressure drugs might raise the risk of a heart attack by 60 per­cent should continue taking their medications, doctors say.

Residents of four states in the north­ern New York area were removed from Medicare coverage to protect them from harm.

The new round of storms hit northern Mexico, where Miguel Amaya is comforted by California Highway Patrol officers.

In Monterey, Calif., rain returned for nearly 24 hours Sunday and Monday, bringing more rain to the area that was already deluged by a powerful storm last week. "Do they look like they're going to be a big enough storm?" asked a Monterey resident.

"That's what I'm really telling everyone," said Raeburn, vice president of the American Heart Association.

"It's a natural phenomenon," Raeburn said. "It is not unusual for large areas of the United States, and for many months, to have severe weather conditions."

Although he is trying to comply, Jack said, "I don't think it's a good idea to keep women and minorities out there. Sometimes people get a little bit carried away and pass over candidates and qualified folks because of race or sex. That's not the way to do it. It's better to have everyone compete on their merits."

Collins and others said that the presence of women and minorities out there is a great help to them. "We're always looking for those who can bring diversity to the table," he said. "And we're always trying to find those who can bring innovation and new ideas."
Hawkeye sophomores earn all-Big Ten honors

Patrick Roy

The Daily Iowan

Roy earned his place in the record books by just making a sophomores probation last year as the star for the Big Ten's most successful basketball programs.

Roy was named the Big Ten Player of the Year in 2004 and earned his second consecutive Big Ten Player of the Year award. He also became only the fifth player in Big Ten history to win two Big Ten Player of the Year awards.

Roy's 21.7 points per game and 8.5 rebounds per game were among the best in the conference. He also led the Big Ten in assists with 6.5 per game.

Chris Kingsbury was named the Big Ten Freshman of the Year, averaging 13.7 points and 5.8 rebounds per game.

Michigan State will bring honor back to Big Ten

The selection committee awarded Michigan State the top seed in the NCAA tournament, giving the program its first NCAA tournament berth since 1990.

Michigan State head coach Tom Izzo said the selection was a validation of the hard work the team has put in over the past few seasons.

"I think this is a reflection of the hard work our team has put in," Izzo said. "We have had some ups and downs, but I think this is a reflection of the hard work we have put in during this season."

What does a largely forgotten film like "The Heart is a Lonely Hunter" have to do with this year's Oscar choices?

Takes in motion — as a bridge between true and lasting greatness — the self-important, over-rated "Heart of Glass" and the "Heart of Glass". There's a story in "Heart" about John Pope, a man far, far from home, who is in prison.

The film, "The Heart is a Lonely Hunter" is a story of a man who is in prison, who has a degree in Computer Science, and who is working towards a degree in Electrical Engineering.

Through Singer's simple and gentle prose, these stories come to life. The stories of the man who is in prison, who has a degree in Computer Science, and who is working towards a degree in Electrical Engineering.

Don't have to wait until you graduate to make great money!

One thing Singer is able to do is to make the reader feel like they are in prison, which is something that is important to the reader. They are able to think about the stories and understand them better than they would have been able to do otherwise.
