Taverns, hotel rooms exempt from smoking bill

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Hours after Maryland's highest court allowed one of the nation's strictest smoking bans to take effect Monday, the Legislature, with the governor's approval, voted overwhelmingly to carve out major exceptions.

The statewide ban on workplace smoking went into effect after the Court of Appeals ordered an end to an injunction obtained by the tobacco industry to delay the ban.

The ban covers almost all workplaces in Maryland, including factories, stores, malls, colleges, prisons, even company vehicles occupied by two or more people.

Originally, the regulations also would have prohibited smoking in taverns, hotel and motel rooms and all restaurants. Worried about the effect on tourism and bars, restaurants and taverns, the Legislature approved a bill exempting hotels and motels and all businesses with a liquor license.

Gov. Parris Glendening threatened to veto that bill, saying it went too far. After weeks of negotiations, the administration and legislative leaders agreed Monday on a compromise.

Under the deal, smoking would be allowed in taverns, hotel and motel rooms.

Simpson trial update

Monday, March 27, 1995

See trial story ..... Page 6A

Prosecutor Marcia Clark suggested O.J. Simpson and his ex-wife argued over the phone while Simpson was at the Riviera Country Club on June 12, 1994, the day of the murders.

Clark asked Judge Lance Ito for permission to treat Brian "Kato" Kaelin as a hostile witness. That would allow prosecutors to cross-examine him. No decision was publicly announced, but Ito told jurors to disregard Clark's request.

Ito told jurors to ignore a question Clark asked Thursday about former Simpson maid Michelle Abudrahm. The defense claimed the prosecution was guilty of misconduct for asking Kaelin about a 1989 incident involving Abudrahm, since Kaelin didn't know the Simpsons in 1989.

Street's family takes stand

Shayla Thiel
The Daily Iowan

MARENGO, Iowa — In emotion filled testimony Monday, Michael and Patricia Street recounted memories of their son Chris, a Hawkeye basketball standout killed in 1993.

Monday marked the sixth day of testimony in the multimillion-dollar suit to determine if Johnson County snowplow driver Charles Pence is responsible for the Jan. 19, 1993 collision that killed 20-year-old Street. Pence has filed a countersuit against the Street family, saying Chris Street failed to yield to the snowplow.

First to take the stand Monday

"I would always kiss him on the cheek and tell him I loved him, and he always said, 'I love you, too, Mom.' The last time I was able to do that was at the funeral when he was in the casket."

Patricia Street, Chris Street's mother was Betsy Street, an eighth-grader in Indianola, Iowa. She said her brother — who was nine years older than she — rocked her to sleep as a baby and shot baskets with her when she grew older.

"He was kind of a little mom to me," she said.

Michael Street testified next and described the closeness of his family and the companionship he had felt with his son when they worked together on the family farm.

"Virtually everywhere I went, he went," he said. "He was always with me, checking the cattle, checking the hogs. He was a very good worker."

Michael Street also recounted how he met his wife, Patricia, in the fourth grade and married her after graduating from high school.

During the Street family's testimony, Pence sat quietly with his hands folded in front of him.

Former fiancée attempted suicide

Shayla Thiel
The Daily Iowan

MARENGO, Iowa — During Monday's segment of the emotional Chris Street trial, Street's former fiancée Kim Vinton stared blankly ahead as her mother and grandmother testified about her suicide attempt on Jan. 19, 1994 — the one-year anniversary of Street's deadly car crash.

Wearing a black cardigan sweater, Vinton listened to testimony in the trial that will determine if Street or snowplow driver

Charles Pence was at fault in the accident. The jury also will decide if Vinton will be awarded money for physical and emotional damages she sustained as a result of being in the car during the collision.

'Gump' dominates at Oscars

LOS ANGELES — Tom Hanks won the Oscar for best actor Monday as the slow-witted Southern hero of "Forrest Gump," becoming only the second performer to win in that category two years in a row. Jessica Lange was named best actress for her role as a frustrated Army wife in "Blue Sky."

Robert Zemeckis won as best director for

"Gump," the surprise blockbuster that also won for best picture.

"I feel as though I'm standing on magic legs in a special-effects process that is too unbelievable to imagine and far too costly to make a reality," said an emotional Hanks, who won last year as a lawyer dying of AIDS in "Philadelphia."

Dianne Wiest, the grandly melodramatic stage star in "Bullets Over Broadway," and Martin Landau — a washed-up, drug-addicted Bela Lugosi in "Ed Wood" — won awards for supporting performances.

"Blue Sky" took an unlikely path to the Oscars: It was shelved for three years because of studio financial troubles; its director, Tony Richardson, died before it was released; and it was a box-office flop despite good reviews.

"This is such a wonderful honor, especially for a little film that seemed to have no

Renters share tales of horror

For some UI students, the ink on the lease is barely dry before the toilets start running over and the roaches come out of hiding.

Jeff Morris, an Iowa City resident and UI graduate, has been plagued with plumbing problems in the last two apartments he has rented.

"I came home one time and found a mound of bubbles in the toilet from someone else's bathtub," he said.

Even though Morris said he prefers his present apartment at 630 S. Johnson St. to his last rental, his bad luck with bathrooms moved with him.

After the toilet ran constantly, Morris and his roommate called the landlord who sent a maintenance man to rip up the bathroom floor and unhinge the door.

Two weeks later, Morris bought his own supplies, replaced the tile and fixed the door himself.

Later, he was compensated for the supplies and said he is still on very good terms with his landlord.

Plumbing is a problem that has bedeviled other renters.

UI freshman Phyllis Hunt once awoke at 6 a.m. in her Coralville apartment to the sound of gushing water.

RACE-BASED SCHOLARSHIPS CONTESTED

Financing education difficult without aid

Sheba Wheeler

One African-American student said UI financial aid mentors had to continually coax her into believing she could afford a college degree despite her economically disadvantaged background.

"Sometimes I'd just be ready to say, 'Forget this; this is just impossible,'" said La Toya Buchanan, a UI freshman from Chicago. "I'd try to apply for scholarships only to find that they had stupid requirements that I couldn't fit. Like for

Whiz kid soars above peers with computer skills

ST. CLOUD, Minn. — With his light blue jeans, Levi's shirt and white sneakers, Jeremy Bruestle looks like most 17-year-olds. He has a girlfriend and enjoys drama and reading science fiction.

But put the Sauk Rapids High

DAY IN THE LIFE

School senior in front of a computer and he no longer acts his age.

It's at the keyboard of an IBM or Apple where Bruestle stands alone in his class.

He writes programs, converts programs from one system to another and says that in some computers he knows what every chip inside does.

Last week, Bruestle was in New Mexico working with a professor who is a top researcher in the field of artificial life — a program in which self-replicating computer programs evolve and compete with one another for memory space. Like Darwin's theory, the strongest programs survive. This summer, Bruestle will work with the same professor on projects in Japan.

Bruestle's teachers say his knowledge of computers is extraordinary for a teen-ager and his intelligence goes further than a unique understanding of computers.

By sixth grade, he was taking high-school math. In junior high, he was studying chemistry and physics.

Now he's got a schedule filled with advanced-placement and independent-study courses. Next year, he plans to take classes at St. Cloud State University.

"We basically have exhausted our supply of material to challenge him," said Joe Gehrtz, a Sauk Rapids High School counselor.

Sauk Rapids High School student Jeremy Bruestle is known as a math and computer science whiz kid. Bruestle, shown in the school's computer lab in Sauk Rapids, Minn., will be working with a research team in New Mexico on a computer program that simulates a living organism.

Bruestle has worked one-on-one with math teacher Jerry Johnson for several years. Using a college textbook, the two meet during the sixth period to study math.

"He's beyond where I could evaluate him at all," Johnson said. "He does things I don't understand. He's been doing that for years."

Bruestle's mother, Linda, said she and her husband, Greg, suspected their son was gifted at a young age. They had witnessed a 3-year-old reciting multiplication tables from memory and an 18-month-old construct alphabet letters from pipe cleaners. They didn't know for sure until their son's kindergarten teacher called and said the boy was advanced for his age.

His father, a computer specialist for the St. Cloud school district, first exposed Bruestle to computers at age 3. He took to them right away and spent much time just playing with them and seeing what they could do. In the summer, he's been known to spend half the day in front of his screen.

In middle school, Bruestle found himself isolated and teased by other students who didn't appreciate his success in school. His mother said she worried because other kids didn't accept him.

"I know he had a lot of self-confidence. He really believed in the things he likes. He knew he shouldn't change to be like other people because that's how he wanted to be," she said.

Bruestle says he drew attention to himself in middle school, but has toned it down in high school.

"In high school no one bothers me," he said. "I'm pretty much free to be myself."

He still sports signs from an act of free expression he committed several weeks ago with a bottle of blue hair dye.

While most people have come to accept his love for computers, Bruestle struggles to find people who can understand his love at the same level.

That's why he looked forward to the trip to New Mexico and plans to try to get into the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he can be around people who know the inner workings of a computer.

"It's nice to talk to people interested in the same things," he said.

1976 Oscar winner finds statue's payoffs minimal

NEW YORK (AP) — Louise Fletcher, who won an Academy Award for playing Nurse Ratched in "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," has a prescription for this year's Oscar winners.

"Just enjoy it; it'll make you wonderfully happy for a night," she said. "But don't expect that it'll do anything for your career."

Fletcher's "Cuckoo's Nest" fame brought her little in the way of good work. She has appeared on numerous TV series, including a recurring role on "Star Trek: Deep Space Nine," and forgettable movies such as "Two-Moon Junction" in 1988.

Fletcher told The New York Times that winning the Oscar in 1976 was "like being thrown an explosive."

"People around you change; they think you have some special wisdom or magic touch," she said. "You become familiar looking. With me it's usually, 'Do you work in my bank?' or 'Do you teach at my son's school?'"

Dutch queen makes visit to Israel

JERUSALEM (AP) — Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands laid a wreath Monday at a memorial to Holocaust victims and dedicated a rose garden donated by the Dutch city of Maastricht.

"Between the Israelis and the Dutch a special bond exists," she said in a speech prepared for a dinner with Israeli President Ezer Weizman. "Our peoples have since time immemorial been linked by friendly feelings."

The queen and her husband, Prince Claus, visited the Yad Vashem Holocaust Memorial and attended a dedication ceremony for the Holland Garden at Wohl Rose Park.

The queen was greeted by Jerusalem Mayor Ehud Olmert at the rose garden. He called the gift one of "love, friendship and true partnership in a future of peace between the unified Jerusalem and the Dutch people."

TV actress raves about new Broadway role

NEW YORK (AP) — "Roseanne" co-star Laurie Metcalf is glad about her Broadway debut. And even gladder it's not in a British import.

Metcalf had acted on stage, performing with the Steppenwolf Company of Chicago, before landing the role as Roseanne's sister Jackie.

She will make her Broadway debut in Alexandra Gersten's "My Thing of Love," which opens May 3.

"One of the reasons I'm so excited about 'My Thing of Love' is it's so well-written, and it's not a British import; it's about contemporary America," Metcalf said in an interview in Liz Smith's New York Newsday column Monday.

Branstad may take stand during insurance hearing

Associated Press
DES MOINES — Gov. Terry Branstad says he may be called to testify at the trial over a fatal accident involving his oldest son.

"This is over a very limited issue. This is just over the fact that the insurance company is filing suit against us personally for the payments they've made over and above what our insurance company paid — basically the policy limits," Branstad said during his weekly news conference Monday.

An insurance company is demanding that the governor and his wife, Chris, reimburse more than $25,000 paid to the estate of a Des Moines couple killed in the traffic accident involving Eric Branstad, then 16, in August 1991. The trial is set to begin today in Polk County District Court.

"I really don't know anything other than basically the information that's on the record. We were in Seattle at a governor's conference when we received word about the accident," Branstad said.

Branstad

Charles McCullough, 65, and his wife Jean, 61, died when their van collided with one driven by Eric Branstad. The teen-ager paid a $15 fine and court costs of $19.50 for improper passing.

The Branstads' insurance company paid a settlement to the McCullough estate. Court documents indicate it was $200,000. The McCulloughs' insurance company, IMT Insurance Co. of Des Moines, then paid the estate an additional $25,636. IMT now is suing the Branstads for reimbursement.

Trial issues will include the question of whether IMT should have paid additional money to the McCulloughs and whether the Branstads were underinsured. They had liability coverage of a maximum $100,000 per individual.

Eric Branstad has had other problems. A year after the accident, he was arrested for intoxication. In January 1993, he was charged with attempting to use an altered driver's license to buy beer. His license was later suspended. In June 1993, he was charged with illegal possession of alcohol after a friend crashed the governor's Jeep Cherokee into a utility pole. Eric Branstad was sent to a military school in Missouri and currently attends Rockhurst College in Kansas City, Mo.

UI STUDENTS ESCAPE RENT

Parents purchase I.C. property

Jami Peterson
The Daily Iowan

UI senior Anne Tyler never has to scrounge up rent money or deal with a grumpy landlord who complains about fixing drippy faucets.

Tyler's parents bought a house in Iowa City five years ago, and she and her two older brothers have all lived there while attending the UI.

"It's nice to have a home here instead of just an apartment or dorm," Tyler said. "My parents decided it would be an investment since all three of us go to school here," she said.

Parents may receive tax breaks for purchasing houses in Iowa City for their children attending the UI.

"If a parent buys a rental property but it has other tenants and their child is the manager and pays rent ... it's like a real rental property," said Bruce Guither, a certified public accountant for McGladrey & Pullen, 125 S. Dubuque St.

Under these conditions, parents can write off expenses for their children's housing, just as they could for any other rental property. However, tax regulations have to be followed closely, Guither said.

"(The parents) have to follow the rules for rental property," Guither said. "Whenever you're trying to mix personal expenses with business expenses, people tend to call it a loophole and the IRS looks at it more closely."

While tax exemptions may sound attractive, some parents

purchase Iowa City housing to avoid future rental costs.

Six years ago, Marlys and Paul Pitzenberger bought a mobile home in Iowa City for their son Troy.

"The first year he was down here we looked for housing," Marlys Pitzenberger said. "Housing (in Iowa City) is so expensive."

Although Troy Pitzenberger is their only child attending the UI, the Pitzenbergers found the idea of being free of rental payments appealing enough to make the $2,000 purchase.

"He had two years of college and four years of medical school left," Marlys Pitzenberger said. "We figured he's going to be down here for a while."

Making an exit from the UI residence halls was a positive move for UI sophomore Chris Hipschen. Hipschen's parents bought a house in Iowa City two years ago for him to live in.

"I have my own room, my own shower and actually have a kitchen of my own to use," Hipschen said.

Although the only tax break his parents receive from buying the house is the property's depreciation, Hipschen said his parents decided to buy the house anyway.

"It gets me free rent," he said. Having Mom and Dad as landlords can also relieve other rental pressures.

"In the summertime I'm leaving, but I won't have to worry about subleasing," Tyler said.

Selections dwindle for those hunting up housing

Jill Groenenboom
The Daily Iowan

Although rental housing in Iowa City is still available, students looking for an apartment close to campus may be out of luck.

At Iowa Illinois Manor, 505 E. Burlington St., located approximately three blocks from campus, tours are not being given because the building is full for the fall, assistant manager Bonnie Biles said.

At Van Buren Village, 614 S. Johnson St., which is about eight blocks from campus, about half of the apartments have been rented for fall. Before the spring break, manager Connie Stellinga was giving about 10 tours a day; she usually doesn't have any.

Luckily, UI sophomore Krista Streepy anticipated the apartment rush. She began her search in November and made phone calls in early January.

"I started looking around Thanksgiving. We found a realtor we liked and January 3 we got on the waiting lists," Streepy said.

A variety of apartments is available now, but as time goes by selection will dwindle, said Michelle Holcomb, resident manager of Westgate Villa Apartments, 600-714 Westgate St.

Part of finding the perfect apartment is being in the right place at the right time. But location, price and quality are factors most students consider while searching for a place.

UI junior Amanda Podraza is looking for housing but said she is unsure about what to look for because she doesn't know who she will be living with yet. She has looked at apartments with two and four bedrooms.

"They're out there, but they're either far away or too expensive," Podraza said.

UI sophomore Jason Briggs and his roommate for next year, UI sophomore Jim Corelis, had an easy search for a place to live. They found their apartment by word of mouth.

"Jim and I kind of had a connection. They told us they'd be moving out. We went to Lincoln Realty and had (the apartment) in nearly a week," Briggs said.

Parking shortage sparks request for meter service

Sara Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

A downtown business owner is asking the Iowa City City Council to install parking meters on the 500 block of Iowa Avenue because the current situation is causing him to lose customers.

Joe Michaud, owner of The Bookery, 523 Iowa Ave., addressed the City Council at its Monday night work session. He said employees of downtown stores are parking in the free spaces in front of his business all day long, preventing vacancies for his customers.

Michaud said the meters on the next block don't provide enough spaces for his business, and the small lot he has behind his business is often blocked by trucks.

Councilor Karen Kubby said she was concerned that residents on the block are actually the ones using the spaces to park their cars.

"It's a balancing act of supporting local small-business owners vs. the use of a public street that everybody owns and has the right to park on whether they live there or not," Kubby said.

The meters would only need to be on one side of the street because the UI Community Credit Union, 500 Iowa Ave., occupies most of the other side, Michaud said.

The City Council will conduct a survey of residents on the block to find out if they are using the parking spaces and if they support the installation of meters.

GOVERNOR ADVOCATES MEASURE

Legislature pushes work for prisoners

Mary Neubauer
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Gov. Terry Branstad said he'd have no problem with bills the Legislature might send him that would require some Iowa prisoners to work on chain gangs.

"I think there ought to be a provision for the prison officials within the hard labor requirements so that they can utilize the prison labor in the way that makes the most sense, both in terms of getting the work done but also in terms of protecting the safety of the citizens," the governor said during his weekly news conference Monday.

The Iowa House and Senate have both passed a measure that would require inmates at Iowa prisons to work while they're behind bars. The House measure called for prisoners to work or go to educational and treatment programs for about 40 hours a week and for those working outside the prison to be part of a "highly secured work force."

The Senate took that bill a step further, changing it to require that prisoners work at least 40 hours a week with school and treatment programs in addition to that. Under the Senate bill, prisoners working outside the prison would be part of a chain gang.

The Senate's vote Thursday sent the bill back to the House for further consideration. But House leaders said they're not happy with the Senate's version of the measure.

House Majority Leader Brent Siegrist, R-Council Bluffs, said his chamber will consider the bill

but called its chain gang sections "politically incorrect."

"House Democrats had a fit about using such terrible language, but the Senate seemed to like that," Siegrist said.

Branstad said Monday that prison ought to be tough.

"I think most Iowa citizens and taxpayers believe prisoners ought not be watching color television. They ought to be working," he said. "I'd have no problem with that."

Branstad said he knows some estimates show that prison work programs could cost the state millions, but he countered that, saying, "If we have them doing the right kind of work, there's some things that could be accomplished as a result of that work."

City Council turns to public for opinions on sidewalk cafés

Sara Kennedy
The Daily Iowan

Eating lunch, drinking coffee or just chatting with friends at an outdoor café may appeal to the Iowa City community, but at least one downtown business owner says there are downsides to a proposed ordinance that would ease regulations on the cafés.

The first draft of the sidewalk café ordinance, which would allow restaurant owners to set up tables on the sidewalk outside their businesses, is currently being examined by a committee of business owners and city employees. A public hearing on the proposal will be held at the Iowa City City Council's April 11 meeting.

Jim Clayton, co-owner of The Soap Opera, 119 E. College St., said he is concerned about the cafés and their effect on downtown businesses. He has addressed the City Council twice on the issue.

"Before the council votes, we need to find out what it's going to do to downtown," Clayton said. "I see the cafés as having a big downside risk for downtown. This has been done in other towns, but the staff hasn't taken time to look at their ordinances."

City Attorney Linda Newman Woito said the city has received copies of ordinances from cities like Minneapolis; Boulder, Colo.; San Antonio; and Ann Arbor, Mich., that the committee will review.

The City Council originally wanted the ordinance passed this spring, but the whole process has been slowed due to City Council and area business owners' concerns, Woito said. She said she has no idea when the first vote on the ordinance will be.

The proposal to revise the existing sidewalk café ordinance was brought up late last year by Councilor Bruno Pigott, Woito said. The council asked city staff to look at existing regulations and decrease them so more restaurants could take advantage of the cafés, Woito said.

Some of the reasons why the City Council wanted to make it easier to

"I don't know if it will help business a lot, but it would help add to downtown."

Steve Harris, co-owner and operations manager of The Java House, 211½ E. Washington St.

set up sidewalk cafés were to enhance the ambiance of the downtown area, provide areas for people to gather and get people to spend money downtown, Woito said.

"Most of the council thought it would be a nice touch for the downtown area — to add to the vigor and excitement of gatherings of people," he said. "It would add to the festive mood of Iowa City."

However, Clayton said he is concerned that cafés could have a negative impact on other businesses in the area. According to the proposal, the cafés must be a sectioned-off area directly against the restaurant they belong to. Clayton said this would change shoppers' walking patterns and would deter window-shopping.

"The cafés would force people away from the windows and destroy the purpose of being on the plaza," he said.

Iowa City resident Sonia Ettinger disagrees with Clayton. Her daughter attends school in Ann Arbor, and Ettinger said the sidewalk cafés there attract shoppers and enhance the atmosphere of the area. She said it's a shame Iowa City hasn't already implemented cafés.

"It brings people to the city center if there's a place for them to sit around," Ettinger said. "They'll spend more time downtown and won't pass by the shops so quickly."

Steve Harris, co-owner and operations manager of The Java House, 211½ E. Washington St., said the coffee shop would definitely take advantage of sidewalk tables.

"I don't know if it will help business a lot, but it would help add to downtown," he said. "It would help spice it up a little bit. Everyone will take advantage of it on a nice day."

The proposed ordinance requires that an employee monitor the area at all times to deter underage drinking and public intoxication. But Clayton said he is still concerned about outdoor consumption of alcohol.

"I'm not convinced the city can prevent the sidewalk cafés from becoming sidewalk bars," he said. "The city won't be able to regulate that. What's to stop people from just sitting on the plaza and drinking?"

Longu said the hours the cafés will be allowed to operate — 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. — would curb the problem of public intoxication.

"In Iowa City, people don't go out to the bars until 11:30 or midnight," he said. "And most people are doing their drinking in their dorms or at home before they come downtown."

Chauncey's Fine Food & Spirits, 210 S. Dubuque St., has shared an outdoor patio with Swan's, 210 S. Dubuque St., for at least three years.

a rope or some other type of barrier to section off the café area. Businesses eligible for sidewalk cafés also must be classified as a restaurant and be in the CB-2, CB-5 or CB-10 zone, all of which are in the downtown area.

Longu said the city would have to make the ordinance even less restrictive for it to be worthwhile for restaurant owners. He said he would like to have more tables than the four or five he could fit outside his business under the sidewalk restriction.

The committee evaluating the ordinance is currently researching the sidewalk restriction and the possibility of not having the cafés directly next to the buildings. It is also looking into revising the definition of a restaurant to include coffeehouses and ice-cream shops, City Clerk Marianne Karr said. A restriction against excessive serving of alcohol, such as two-for-one specials, will also be put in the code, Woito said.

Clayton, a member of the café committee, said he is willing to compromise with the city even though he's not sure restaurants will even use outdoor tables.

"I thought from the get-go it was a bad idea," he said. "There are lots of things to work on to improve downtown that are higher on my list than this. We have to remember we're in Iowa. It rains in the summer. It's windy. It gets hotter than the blues. Idealistically it sounds really good, but realistically I don't think it's going to work."

Group faces breast cancer fears

Michele Kueter
The Daily Iowan

Daughters of mothers who have had breast cancer will be the focus of a new support group which begins meeting tonight at the Women's Resource and Action Center.

WRAC director Monique DiCarlo co-developed the program called "Surviving Our Mother's Breast Cancer." It will meet for six weeks from 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays at WRAC, 130 N. Madison St.

Changing the fear of getting breast cancer or having a mother with the disease into a positive force is one of the program's goals, DiCarlo said.

"Part of it is that just the fear daughters live with and wanting to provide an empowering experience to women to take back control of their lives," she said.

DiCarlo said prevention, personal fears and coping will be some of the topics discussed as well as discussion of how families have responded to the disease in the past.

A breast cancer survivor who also had a mother with breast cancer will speak to the group as well, DiCarlo said.

The idea for the program came from UI sophomore Lindsey Aikin, a trained volunteer at WRAC who surveyed community interest in and need for the issue. Aikin also has a personal interest in the disease.

"My mother and grandmother both had breast cancer and both had mastectomies," she said. "It was never really discussed in my family."

Aikin said she was about 6 years old when her mother found out she had breast cancer. Her mother had a mastectomy and has since been healthy. Aikin's grandmother died when she was 13, and Aikin said she never dealt with her death.

"(The program) was something I wanted to do," she said. "I think a big problem is that it's not something talked about. I don't know if it's breasts or what. No one even sat down with me and told me what was going on."

The fear of getting breast cancer is real for Aikin, and she said the thought of possibly having part of her body removed scares her.

"I think it helps just to know there's other people out there and you're not alone," she said.

Another problem involved with breast cancer is lack of self-confidence, Aikin said. She said when she was in the seventh grade, she experienced depression due to her fear of getting breast cancer and was very emotional.

"It can also do something to your confidence," Aikin said. "I think talking about it and getting it out in the open will help that."

Jana Egeland of the American Cancer Society said an estimated 182,000 new breast cancer cases will be diagnosed in 1995.

"Breast cancer incidence rates have increased 2 percent a year since 1980 for women," she said.

The risk of getting the disease increases with age and personal and family history, Egeland said, and one in nine women will get it. About 46,000 women will die from the cancer this year.

There is no fee for the meetings, but donations will be accepted.

Alert provides time for diabetes testing

Michele Kueter
The Daily Iowan

More than 150,000 Iowa residents have diabetes and don't know it, but today Iowans will have the chance to get checked at local hospitals during the American Diabetes Association's annual diabetes alert.

Diabetes is a disease that affects the body's ability to produce and respond properly to insulin, a hormone allowing blood sugar to enter cells and be used for energy. There is no cure, but diabetes can be controlled with proper treatment.

A new risk test this year that weighs answers to various questions about a person's health and family history of diabetes is available to the community, said Beth Fisher, eastern field representative for ADA's Iowa affiliate.

Obesity and family history are the biggest factors in contracting the disease, but those aren't the only ones, Fisher said.

"Those are the two things if it had to be narrowed down, but it's still much broader than that," she said.

Others at risk include those over 45, those who do not exercise regularly and women who have had a baby weighing over 9 pounds at birth. Fisher also said African-Americans, Hispanics and American Indians are at higher risk.

But people of all ages are at risk of getting diabetes, she said.

"You can develop it at any point in your life," Fisher said.

Mercy Hospital, 500 E. Market St., will offer the free risk test as well as $3 glucose screenings today from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. and from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. A program titled "Diabetes Alert: Are You at Risk?" will be given by Dr. Jennifer Neahr at 7 p.m.

Joni Werle, senior program coordinator at Mercy Hospital, said the program will include information about symptoms of diabetes, the importance of early detection and complications of the disease.

Werle said this is the first year the hospital has done something in conjunction with the alert day.

"We're anxious to see the turnout," she said. "We just felt it was time to offer some screening and the program because (diabetes) occurs more often than people realize."

Nearly 14 million Americans have diabetes; more than 7 million don't know they have it. Fisher said there are a lot of complications associated with the disease and blindness occurs in 15,000 diabetics each year.

Ten percent of diabetics will develop kidney disease, and diabetics are also two to four times more likely to develop heart disease and five times more likely to suffer a stroke.

Doctors remove lesions from Clinton as precaution

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctors removed precancerous skin lesions from President Clinton's face during his annual physical examination on Friday, the White House said Monday.

"They are not cancerous," press secretary Mike McCurry said.

He said doctors removed several actinic keratoses from Clinton's forehead and one ear.

Actinic keratoses are common skin lesions among middle-age people, usually caused by overexposure to the sun. The lesions generally are removed as a precaution because there is a chance they can become cancerous.

The lesions were removed by freezing with liquid nitrogen, and the treatment left a large red blotch on Clinton's forehead.

Jordanian king seeks debt relief from U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — King Hussein of Jordan is appealing to the White House and Congress for greater economic support, testing whether peace with Israel pays off in cash.

Having formalized an unofficial peace with Israel last October, Hussein already had strong administration support for writing off $480 million in debt over two years before his meeting with President Clinton Monday.

Budget-cutters in Congress will have to be persuaded, though, and the king was trekking up to Capitol Hill during a four-day visit to try to reverse the House's slashing of the relief to $50 million. The king also met with House Speaker Newt Gingrich Monday night.

Postal Service performs on time in test despite winter setbacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The post office delivered 85 percent of local mail on time during the winter, the best showing since the agency started measuring its performance five years ago.

"These are dramatic results delivering the mail," said Postmaster General Marvin Runyon, noting the 6 percentage point improvement over the same period a year earlier.

The Postal Service's performance standard calls for overnight delivery within varying distances of each major city. The accounting firm Price Waterhouse monitors performance by sending out test mailings.

Poachers slay 4 endangered gorillas in Uganda

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Four rare mountain gorillas were killed in a southwestern Uganda park in the first known incident of poaching in 10 years, officials said Monday.

The bodies of the four primates, which had been speared, were found March 18 by staff of the Bwindi Impenetrable National Park, according to a statement released by the International Gorilla Conservation Program.

There were signs of a struggle and of poachers with dogs, the statement said. One of the dead was a nursing female, and it was feared that at least one infant was captured.

Japanese police raid uncovers cult details

David Thurber
Associated Press

TOKYO — In the cult's most holy building, a secret door behind a huge statue of a Hindu deity leads to a hidden chemical lab. From there, an underground passage connects to a storeroom filled with all the chemicals needed to make nerve gas.

The discoveries Monday are among the many chilling details that police have revealed in raids against the secretive Aum Shinri Kyo sect — or "Supreme Truth" — the chief suspect in last week's nerve gas attack on the Tokyo subway.

Ten people were killed and 5,000 suffered side effects in the March 20 attack. Hundreds of people remain hospitalized.

Inside or near several of the sect's drab concrete buildings gathered around the foot of Mount Fuji, police found rooms or underground containers that they believe were used to confine people who tried to flee.

Police documents obtained by Japanese media say the group, which claims 10,000 followers in Japan, is directed by a severe governmentlike network of about 20 "ministries."

A "ministry of defense" guards the group's facilities and searches for followers who attempt to escape, and a "ministry of health treatment" stockpiled large amounts of drugs and syringes, the reports said.

A "ministry of science," which runs the chemical lab, was researching advanced weapons for a "final battle" against outside enemies, the Mainichi and other newspapers reported.

The functions of some of the agencies — such as a "ministry of DNA" — were unclear, and police have not commented on the reports.

Police believe the group may have regularly given stimulants to followers and may have used stimulants in initiation ceremonies for new members, the Mainichi said.

Former members say the sect also administered psychiatric drugs and "cleansing" treatments in which followers were forced to drink salt water until they vomited.

Police reportedly found 40 kinds of chemicals at the group's facilities. Japanese reports said the chemicals included ingredients of sarin, the nerve gas used in the Tokyo attack; chemicals that can be used to make illegal drugs; and glycerine compounds that can be used to make explosives.

Police have focused on the first category but are now beginning to investigate the other two, the Mainichi said.

Nearly a week of intense searches has turned up tons of chemicals, millions of dollars worth of yen and piles of gold bars.

In Monday's raids, police focused on a windowless building with a 15-foot statue of Shiva, the Hindu god of creation and destruction, and a separate statue of the god's hand.

Behind the statue, police found a secret door leading to a room that several media reports described as a virtual chemical factory.

SIMPSON'S ANGER EVALUATED

Clark receives scolding for questions to witness

Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Reprimanded by the judge for asking one inflammatory question, prosecutor Marcia Clark quickly popped another one Monday, asking whether O.J. Simpson argued with ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson by phone the day she and Ronald Goldman were murdered.

Simpson's former house guest Brian "Kato" Kaelin insisted in his fourth day on the witness stand that he knew nothing about such a phone conversation between the Simpsons.

Kaelin acknowledged Simpson was "upset" when he arrived home from a dance recital including his daughter Sydney the evening of June 12. But under Clark's stern questioning, Kaelin had a difficult time explaining in his words the degree of "upsetness."

Asked by one of Simpson's lawyers to give jurors a better idea of Simpson's demeanor that evening, Kaelin, an aspiring actor, tried to play the role.

He spoke in the first person as if he were Simpson, saying, "Nicole didn't let me see Sydney. I want to see my daughter. Oh, boy."

He spoke in a soft voice that he said reflected Simpson's demeanor. "The degree of upset, it's such a hard thing," Kaelin explained.

Clark apparently startled the defense and Kaelin with the question about a cellular phone conversation she suggested occurred while Simpson was at the Riviera Country Club the morning before the murder.

Clark offered no evidence such as a conversation had taken place and the defense objected to the question, setting off one of many long conferences at the judge's bench.

"Isn't it true, Mr. Kaelin, that Mr. Simpson told you he'd had a conversation with Nicole on his cell phone while he was at the Riviera Country Club in which he had had an argument with her?" Clark asked.

"No," Kaelin replied. After the bench conference, Clark posed her question about the phone conversation again, in two different phrasings, but raised no objections from the defense.

Kaelin was told to return today after his testimony was abbreviated by a bomb threat and a shortened court day. Court was recessed early so a juror, accompanied by a guard, could attend a funeral.

At the start of the court day, Clark drew a sanction for an improper question asked last Thursday, in which she suggested Kaelin knew that a maid had opened a door for Simpson to beat his wife in 1989, three years before Kaelin met the Simpsons.

Superior Court Judge Lance Ito told jurors Monday that a lawyer may not ask a witness questions without "a good faith" belief that the witness has the information sought. "You should not assume to be true any implication given by the question," the judge said.

Clark, whose anger with her own witness was obvious from the outset, sought Monday to have Kaelin declared a hostile witness. The judge did not announce a decision in court, but UCLA law Professor Peter Arenella said it was obvious he granted Clark's request because she was allowed to ask more leading questions and the defense stopped objecting to them.

MAN COULD FACE LIFE IN PRISON

Doctor says paranoia to blame for White House shooting

Cassandra Burrell
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The man who opened fire on the White House with a semiautomatic rifle in October decided to act after seeing visions of a mist hovering over the president's mansion, a psychiatrist said Monday.

Francisco Martin Duran, 26, of Colorado Springs, Colo., is a paranoid schizophrenic who believed the mist would gain control over President Clinton's thinking and lead him to do things that would cause worldwide devastation, Dr. Neil Blumberg told a federal court jury.

Duran is being tried on 10 counts, including attempted assassination, which could send him to prison for life if he's convicted. He is accused of pulling a semiautomatic rifle from under his trench coat and firing at the White House from a Pennsylvania Avenue sidewalk Oct. 29.

Earlier in the day, a former FBI weapons expert said videotapes of the shooting showed the gunman wasn't shooting the weapon in the most accurate and efficient way.

The gunman grasped the weapon under his arm — a technique the military has abandoned because "it proved over the years to be very inaccurate," said Robert Taubert, now a consultant.

Attorneys for Duran argue that their client shouldn't be convicted of attempted assassination because he didn't aim his weapon at anyone and didn't intend to hurt anybody, including the president.

Duran vented his anger at the government by firing at a symbol of American government — the White House — defense attorneys A.J. Kramer and Leigh Kenny have said.

Prosecutors, however, have said Duran is an anarchist who wanted a revolution.

majority. Eventually, she was able to obtain a scholarship not based on race within the College of Liberal Arts.

Buchanan said race-based scholarships are necessary means for low-income minorities to attend college. Politicians are currently debating if such affirmative action programs are unconstitutional products of reverse discrimination.

UI junior Darren Aitchison said no scholarships should be given based on group identity.

"I think it's unfair, racist and sexist," Aitchison said. "When applying for jobs or scholarships, a person should be judged on merit, not because they are of a certain race or gender."

Others think the UI should expand its efforts to increase disadvantaged groups' enrollment and retention rates by providing race- or gender-based scholastic awards. However, last year's appeals court decision that found a university's black scholarship program violated nonminority students' rights could challenge minority scholarship programs at other institutions.

In the case Podberesky vs. Kirwan, Podberesky, a Latino student, challenged the University of Maryland's Banneker Scholarship Program, which awarded four-year grants to high-achieving African-American students. A district court supported the university's justification for the Banneker Scholarship because it said African-American students were underrepresented on campus, had low retention and graduation rates and perceived the campus environment as hostile.

However, the appeals court dismissed these arguments and ruled that the school violated the rights of nonminority students. The decision is being appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

UI Dean of Students Phillip Jones doubts anyone would be able to claim that UI scholarships are racially biased and capable of reverse discrimination.

"We do have scholarships that are exclusively for women to study in the sciences, for example, or for a student from XYZ town who is the offspring of a volunteer fireman to study physics," he said. "Most scholarships for minorities are targeted to increase minority participation on campus or are based on need, merit or both. No scholarships on this campus are given to students exclusively based on race."

UI scholarships are consistent with sound equal opportunity principles and Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, prohibiting discrimination in participation of educational programs, Jones said.

In an effort to diversify the UI community, administrators established the Educational Opportunities Program in 1968 for educationally and economically disadvantaged students in order to increase minority participation on campus.

People mistakenly assume that EOP scholarships and grants are only for minority participants, Jones said. Many forget that many nonminorities also lack the means necessary to achieve a college degree, he said.

"All of the low-income people in this country are obviously not minority, but in the case of African-Americans and many Hispanic-Americans, disproportionate numbers of them are from low-income backgrounds and educational systems that are classified as educationally disadvantaged systems (as defined by the 1964 Civil Rights Act)," Jones said.

Opportunity at Iowa scholarships are among the most prestigious awards offered to qualified students of color and are based on academic achievement, high SAT or ACT scores and class rank. For fall 1994, 58 students received scholarships totaling $20,000 over four years. Each award includes a $3,000 scholarship for tuition and room / board and a $2,000 Undergraduate Scholarship Assistantship, for a total of $5,000 per year.

It would be more devastating if federally funded programs based on need were withdrawn because it would affect not only the participation of underrepresented students, but also any student who has financial need, said Rusty Barcelo, interim director of Opportunity at Iowa.

"It would be unfortunate to lose these scholarships which I believe bring a different kind of diversity in terms of students of color who are high-achieving because the myths say these students are not," Barcelo said. "These scholarships prove otherwise."

Tomorrow: affirmative action in local hiring.

business — a gas station and convenience store in Indianola — and she said it contributed to a special closeness.

"I always stressed family," she said. "Anytime we went anywhere, we all went."

Before running from the courtroom in tears, Patricia Street spoke once more about her relationship with her son.

"I would always kiss him on the cheek and tell him I loved him, and he always said, 'I love you, too, Mom,'" she said, beginning to cry. "The last time I was able to do that was at the funeral when he was in the casket."

Sarah Street, a sophomore at Central College in Pella, Iowa, characterized her older brother as a friend.

"I liked to be with him and wanted every opportunity to be with him," she said. "He never made me feel like I was any different. He didn't put himself on a pedestal and he was always the same person I grew up with down on the farm."

In between recounting memories of Chris Street's saving to buy his first car, attorneys interrupted with questions about his driving record.

Defense attorney Tom Riley said Street accumulated four tickets for moving violations in the 2 1/2 years preceding his death. Two were speeding citations, one was a charge for driving through a yellow light and another was for improper passing.

Later, while Michael Street narrated, jurors were shown a videotape of Chris Street playing in numerous basketball games throughout his career. Michael Street described specific game plays and remarked on his son's improvements as a player.

"You can see how his upper-body strength improved," he said. "He made three 3-pointers that game."

Chris Street confided his misgivings as a sports figure to his dad, Michael Street said.

"I really never realized the pressure he felt as a Hawkeye being from Iowa," Michael Street said. "He once said, 'I've got the whole state of Iowa on my shoulders.'"

Michael Street said he thought his son would have made it to the NBA.

"He made a comment to one of our friends, 'Someday you'll see me on that TV,'" Michael Street said. "He achieved that goal, and then he wanted to go on to the NBA, get married, have a family ... and eventually be a college basketball coach."

The trial will resume today when Pence and Johnson County begin their defense.

VINTON

Vinton suffered a separated shoulder, collapsed lung, fractured ribs, back pain and numerous other injuries, as well as severe depression after the fatal accident, according to reports from Dr. John Albright — UI Hospitals and Clinics orthopedic surgeon and UI men's basketball team physician — and reports from various psychiatrists.

Vinton's depression culminated in the 1994 suicide attempt. She was hospitalized for two days after overdosing on pills.

Although Kim had never suffered from mental problems before the accident, Marlys Vinton said her daughter felt guilty about surviving the accident.

"She felt it should've been her and not him (who died)," she said. "She said he had everything going for him — that he had a great future."

To combat Kim Vinton's depression, UIHC's Dr. Maureen McCue prescribed Prozac, an antidepressant drug. According to a deposition written by McCue, Vinton appeared more despondent during appointments as the one-year anniversary of Street's death grew closer.

"She felt like she couldn't get away from the memory of it," McCue said. "She said she thinks she wants to die to be with Chris."

Kim Vinton's grandmother, Mary Sherer of Urbandale, Iowa, said her granddaughter often sounded confused and depressed during their phone conversations after the accident. Sherer was widowed in 1953 when her 30-year-old husband, Henry, was killed in a car accident, and she said experiencing "similar tragedies was a bond between her and her granddaughter."

Kim Vinton called her grandmother the night before her suicide attempt, Sherer said.

"(Before the accident) she was very well-organized and goal-oriented," Sherer said. "But then she said, 'What's the use of having goals?'"

Kim Vinton testified last Monday afternoon, explaining her emotional state following the accident.

As the anniversary of Street's death approached, Kim Vinton said she felt mounting public pressure.

"In front of the basketball team I wanted to act strong, and the media was hounding me," she said. "I didn't want to break down."

Although she was graduating in May 1994 and continuing to work in UI Sports Information, Vinton said she often had suicidal thoughts.

"I was really beginning to feel worthless and didn't understand why I was alive," she said. "It was so hard to build our relationship and it was all taken away from me in one instant."

Vinton periodically wept throughout the questioning.

The attorneys asked her to describe the sequence of events and placement of headlights again Monday.

"I saw Chris' body lying there, and his legs looked limp, motionless," she said. "Somehow I knew he was dead. I turned and just collapsed."

"Now I feel so guilty," she said. "I feel like I could have gone because maybe he was still alive, or say goodbye, but I didn't. I didn't say goodbye. I didn't help him."

Street was stopped at a stop sign when she first saw oncoming headlights from a distance, Kim Vinton said. She said she saw the lights coming directly toward Street's Chrysler LeBaron when Street turned to look at her.

When Riley finished questioning Vinton about the night of the accident, Vinton covered her face with her hands and sobbed.

Vinton is now a graduate student in counseling education at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. A former member of the UI track team, Vinton runs five miles three times a week but said she still feels pain from injuries received in the accident when she exercises.

She also continues to take Prozac, which costs $70 a month, she said. Not an heir to Street's estate, Vinton is suing to help pay for medical treatment and medication as well as punitive damages.

picked on me, my mom always told me to rise above it. So when I was raped, that's exactly what I did. Part of me rose to the corner of the room to watch my best friend writhe on top of my shocked body."

Johnson's shirt, along with more than 500 others from across the country, will hang on clotheslines strung across the Main Lounge of the Union today and Wednesday.

The Clothesline Project is a visual display about violence against women, and each shirt was designed by a woman survivor of violence or by the families and friends of women affected by violence.

White shirts represent women who have died from violence; yellow or beige shirts represent women who have been battered or assaulted; red, pink or orange shirts represent women who have been raped or sexually assaulted; blue or green shirts represent women survivors of incest or child sexual abuse; and purple or lavender shirts represent women attacked because of their sexual orientation.

On the front of the T-shirt Johnson designed is a picture of a bedroom where a man is lying on top of a woman on a bed.

The picture on the back is of a naked woman flying and a bird saying, "Fly high, chick." Underneath this image the sentences read: "I continue to rise, and I'm not gonna stop. I'm as strong as the sky's huge."

Johnson, who is the chairwoman of the arts committee for the Clothesline Project, said the undertaking provides an outlet for women to articulate their experiences with assault.

"I'm an artist, and when I first started to realize what happened to me and classified it as rape, it was important for me to talk about it," she said. "It was also helpful for me to draw and paint — have a creative response to it."

Johnson's shirt and the hundreds of others on display are tributes to women who have survived violence or are still living with it and to women who have died as a result of brutality, said Ashley Sovern, director of education at the Rape Victim Advocacy Program.

"Going to see all the shirts can be an incredibly moving experience," Sovern said. "Each shirt tells a story. It makes me feel honored to be able to listen to their words or to look at the pictures they have chosen to describe their experience."

The Clothesline Project began in fall 1990 in Hyannis, Mass., with 31 shirts. The Iowa City Clothesline Project — which is being sponsored by RVAP, the Domestic Violence Intervention Program and the Women's Resource and Action Center — is a combination of several smaller projects. It is currently the largest clothesline display in the country, Sovern said.

RENTERS

through the vents in our ceiling," Hunt said.

Luckily, maintenance men came quickly and the landlord offered to pay for any cleaning expenses, she said.

Last year, UI junior Nancy Beach waited three weeks for her toilet to stop running and a maintenance man to arrive after she called her landlord.

When a $300 water bill arrived in the mail, the landlord of 32 N. Lucas St. said if Beach didn't pay, she would be evicted. Beach said a feisty battle ensued and in the end she didn't pay a dime for the unruly toilet.

Creatures that crawl on more than two legs also pester renters.

When UI freshman Laura Gross moved into her apartment last fall, she said the place appeared clean. But after a couple of weeks, a cockroach 2 inches long was found under the cushion of a chair.

"No one sat in that chair for the next three months," Gross said.

Gross' apartment has been visited by an exterminator three times since the chair incident, but ants still plague the place during warm weather.

UI sophomore Chad Lambi said everything was fine in his apartment at 115 Woodside Drive until his neighbors sprayed for cockroaches. All the migrant roaches found a haven in Lambi's kitchen.

"My roommates and I aren't the tidiest folks, so there were lots of places to hide," he said.

The exterminators came the next day but were overzealous in their efforts, Lambi said. Poisonous pools of bug spray dribbled out of kitchen cabinets for days.

"We had to wait three days for the stuff to dry," he said. "Three days of complete chaos."

"Gump" had drawn a near-record 13 Academy nominations but was unable to turn the baker's dozen nominations into enough Oscars to challenge the most honored film, "Ben Hur," which won 11 Academy Awards.

"Gump" grossed more than $317 million, which puts it in the No. 4 spot on Hollywood's list of all-time top moneymakers.

"Pulp Fiction" took the original screenplay award for Quentin Tarantino, who also directed the dark gangster comedy, and Roger Avary. "Forrest Gump" brought the best adapted screenplay prize for Eric Roth.

Disney's "The Lion King" won best original score and the animated film's "Can You Feel the Love Tonight?" by Elton John and Tim Rice was named best song.

CHRIS STREET

Lawsuit a shameful token

Two days before his tragic death in an automobile accident, Chris Street's inspired playing led his Iowa team in a nationally televised affair against perennial NCAA powerhouse Duke. Street's performance in his final game firmly established the legacy of determination, heart and spirit that he would leave to basketball fans around the state. Today that legacy is being threatened by the shallow actions of his father and an Iowa City attorney.

Michael Street and Randy Larson have brought a multimillion-dollar lawsuit against both Charles Pence, the driver of the snowplow that collided with Street's car, and Johnson County. By proving the defendants' negligence in the fatal crash, they hope to stake a claim to the millions of dollars that the Hawkeye forward may have earned in the National Basketball Association.

The ongoing trial has served to cheapen Street's legend to nothing more than an argument about his potential earning power. To this end, Larson has marched forth a parade of high-profile experts to testify whether Street possessed NBA-caliber talent. Each has stated that had he lived, Street likely would have been selected in the mid-first round of the NBA draft.

To counter Larson's tactics, defense lawyers have questioned the assertion that Street would have prospered as a professional. Besides mentioning a back injury which may have hindered his progress, the defense has contended that Street was too slow, too thin and not athletic enough to play in the NBA.

In addition, lawyers for Pence have brought to light Street's five traffic violations in the two years prior to the accident, suggesting that Street's aggressive qualities on the court translated into reckless driving habits off it. And in an attempt at assailing public sympathy that he was a perfect character, defense lawyers exposed Street's less than exemplary collegiate grade-point average.

Thus has Street's legacy been reduced to a debate over his qualities: as a person; a player; and most of all, as a dollar sign. Sadly, it is Street's own family which has tarnished our persevering memories of him. While we grieve for them over the loss of a son, the lawsuit brings a question to mind: Was their love for him steeped in a vision of potential millions? While that must not be the case, it is nonetheless the distasteful impression left by this trial.

Larson must be held equally accountable for trivializing Street's legacy. While trying to approximate the monetary value of Street's life, he has claimed that "logic and credibility" are on his side. However, his is an idealistic logic: Statistics show that less than 1 percent of all college basketball players are drafted into the NBA; still fewer land a spot on a roster.

In his life, Street's star illuminated his characteristics as a spirited and relentless competitor. His death reminds us all of the delicacy of existence — that a person can be taken from among us even when their star is shining its brightest. As this trial slowly diminishes the light that Street left for us, may we all make an effort to remember him in terms of his legacy rather than as a posthumous token in a shameful lawsuit.

CLASS WORK OVER SPRING BREAK

Definition not followed

Suntanned faces from the beaches and the slopes mixed with the rested looks of students who spent their spring breaks at home have returned.

The streets of Iowa City — after nine days of spring break — should have people walking around with signs of relief on their faces. Instead, they are filled with students trapped between the unconscious states of relaxation and anxiety. Many students aren't welcomed back to studying, term papers and hundreds of pages of reading because they either spent their spring break doing these activities or thinking how they would handle them the night before classes resumed. Many more students, however, end up paying for the spring break the UI has given them.

According to UI calendars, spring break began at 10 p.m. on March 17 and didn't end until 7:30 a.m. March 27. It is necessary then to define what spring break is in order to comprehend what the UI has given its students. The term "break" has three meanings: an act of breaking, a stroke of good luck or an interruption of continuity. The word "spring" — in this case — does not refer to moving quickly by elastic force, but rather to the season which follows winter. Since our spring break is arranged to start on the first official day of spring, we can conclude that it is not a stroke of good luck which dealt us an interruption from the season. It is reasonable, though, for students to assume it is an interruption of the second semester — a weeklong interruption from reading textbooks, studying for tests and writing papers.

The obvious violations of spring break by a professor would be to schedule a test or require that a paper be due the day classes resume. This requires work to be done during the break when most students feel they are not required to use their brains for educational purposes. Though students may be able to crowd their academic schedules and write papers before break, studying for a test is almost certainly out of the question.

The argument against test-taking the day after spring break also extends to semester reading. Reading for over the break may be listed on a syllabus or suggested during class. Doing the reading before spring break gets the job done, but students already have required reading for those weeks as well as the weeks after spring break. For many students, the second half of the semester becomes a futile effort to catch up for that one week of rest.

According to this definition of spring break, students should not have to pay for a week of resting or partying. This means professors should not be able to give students an abnormal amount of work to do during that week or load them up the weeks before and after spring break with impossible amounts of work. Students give professors the benefit of the doubt by not expecting them to do work during break either, so professors shouldn't be surprised when students do almost nothing from March 18 to March 26. And according to the definition of spring break that the UI has given us, it's the only fair assumption to make.

Project disturbing, upsetting and necessary

I remember when my grandmother had her first stroke. I realized then that things would never be the same as they had been. My grandmother — who so loved to tell stories, joke and laugh — could never again speak. She was far from me — too far to visit — and so I decided to attempt to grieve and to accept this transformation through a ritual of recognition.

I gathered my four closest friends around me. I asked them each to bring two things to this ritual: a story from their lives about a change of some kind and something delicious to eat. They left their foods in the kitchen, and we went upstairs to my room where I played music that my grandmother liked. We sat in the candlelit room, each friend sharing their story of change. One friend spoke about her grandmother, and others talked about breakups or other major life changes.

When they had finished speaking, I began slowly to tell them all about Lenuta, my grandmother. I showed pictures, I told the jokes she loved, I shared stories about her life and about our relationship. I closed the ritual by putting all of her recent cards, letters and photos in an envelope and had each friend write a few words on it. When we had finished writing, we went down to the kitchen to eat the foods that my friends had brought in celebration of life and in the hope that Lenuta's memories would now live on in all of us. I thought it important to end the ritual with a positive and life-sustaining activity and could not think of a better one than eating good food with good friends.

Since then, I have gathered my closest friends around me for other rituals — on my birthday, for example, or at the end of a particularly painful relationship. I find that concrete rituals of recognition help me understand a painful event and to let it pass. Rituals of recognition also help me celebrate a joyous moment like my birthday. I always try to recognize good news thorough some kind of celebration. If I just let these things pass unacknowledged, life seems drier somehow.

More public rituals or sites of recognition are also important when certain events have affected a country or region as a whole. Examples of these kinds of recognition include the Vietnam Memorial in Washington, D.C., Holocaust museums and the AIDS quilt. Creations like these help us grieve, mourn and accept tragedies that affect us. Rituals of recognition can help us integrate difficult, overwhelming parts of our lives and can help us heal.

Today and Wednesday in Iowa City, the Clothesline Project, "a visual display of shirts with written messages and illustrations that graphically demonstrate the impact of violence against women" will be on display at the Union. The impact of this project, like that of the AIDS quilt, can only be experienced firsthand. The shirts in the project have been decorated by women survivors of violence and by friends and family who wish to recognize survivors. Victims of violence who have died are also commemorated in this event. The Clothesline Project's purpose is to "educate, to mourn those who have died as a result of this violence and to bear witness to a woman's courage to survive and heal."

The theme of the project is disturbing and upsetting. Seeing the sheer number of shirts reminds us of how much violence is done to women each day. The display can be quite overwhelming, which is part of its purpose. Hopefully, the project will shock some of us into taking violence against women seriously.

While the Clothesline Project is here, there will be shirts and supplies available for those of us who wish to add our own shirt to the display — either in recognition of ourselves or of somebody we know. These shirts will be added at the closing ceremony Wednesday night.

For those of us who have survived violence, this project can be upsetting at the same time that it is affirming and validating. We have survived and for that we must recognize our own strength. In celebration of survival, there will be "an evening of artistic expression about surviving sexual violence" tonight at 7 in the Union. As with my homemade ritual about my grandmother, this event includes both grief and mourning as well as a celebration of life.

I am grateful to the Domestic Violence Intervention Program, the Women's Resource and Action Center, the Rape Victim Advocacy Program and the UI SAVE commission for bringing the Clothesline Project to Iowa City. This site of recognition and the rituals that accompany it can help us to acknowledge the tragedy of violence against women as well as to encourage healing, growth and integration in those of us who have survived physical and sexual abuse.

On work, Gingrich isn't going by the book

On my office wall, there hangs one lone slogan. It comes from Samuel Johnson and it says, "No man but a blockhead ever wrote except for money."

I don't know if that's entirely true. There are obscure poets and novelists who feverishly write for the sheer joy of putting their thoughts to paper, regardless of what critics say or how little money they are paid. Maybe that is why they are obscure.

But in general, I think Johnson is on the mark. Writing is a form of work, and workers should be paid. If they work for nothing, they are little more than slaves. Or, as Johnson said, blockheads.

So I find myself sort of disappointed by Newt Gingrich, this political season's deepest thinker, hottest idea man and inspirational source of moral standards.

When the news first broke that Gingrich was going to be paid a $4.5 million advance to write a book about his vision for this nation, I didn't plunge into the debate over whether the size of the advance was outrageous.

My view was that if a publisher was eager to pay that much for an unwritten book, the publisher had to be confident that the book would be a money-making best seller.

And I didn't doubt that the book would sell big, since conservatives love to read books that echo what they already believe, so they can look up from the page and declare, "See, Myrna? I've been saying all along that everybody should sweat for a living, and he agrees with me. That Newt is a smart fella."

The plot thickened when the publisher turned out to be tycoon Rupert Murdoch, jour-nalism's prince of darkness. It was suggested that Murdoch was slipping Gingrich the big bucks as a legal bribe because he needed favors from Congress.

I figured, so what? Even if the book advance was a legal bribe, Murdoch never got the short end of any deal, and Gingrich was probably being underbribed.

But many Republicans got nervous about how the $4.5 million looked to grassroots Americans and urged Gingrich to forgo the advance. He pouted but gave in.

Not that it should have made a bottom-line difference. Instead of being paid now, he would just have to wait until the book was written, printed and sold and the money rolled in.

Then he would collect his cut — royalties, as they are called — about 15 percent of the book-store price.

And I figured that by waiting for his loot, Gingrich might do even better, since he and his congressional cheerleaders would have time to lower the tax bracket for best-selling authors who are ranking members of Congress but not a member of a political party that starts with the letter D.

Now, though, I have read a Newsweek item about Gingrich and his book that deeply troubles me. If not deeply, then superficially, but I'm still troubled.

Because he doesn't have the big advance from Murdoch, Gingrich can't find a top-drawer writer who will ghostwrite his book. They don't come cheap and they want to be paid up front. As Johnson might have said, "Ghosts they might be, but blockheads they ain't."

He's going to use a ghostwriter. I'm surprised and disappointed.

Yes, I know that most books by athletes, movie stars, politicians and accused wife-killers are ghostwritten. But who expects a slam-dunker, a script reader, a vote hustler or a wife slayer to know how to type, much less spell?

But Gingrich is more than a politician. He is also some kind of college professor. Besides running for office, he has never been anything but an academic. College professor types are always writing books. Most of them are dull stuff with footnotes that hurt your eyes, but the spelling is good. And in their spare time, some even write spicy novels about middle-age college professors who sleep with coeds. The old scams.

So here we have Gingrich pouting because he couldn't take $4.5 million for a book he wasn't even going to write. That's what's shocking.

The hard part of writing a book or writing anything is the writing. Writing is not yammering into a tape recorder. It is not having your aides bundle up a bunch of disjointed position papers and old speeches and shove them at a hired scribe.

It is staring at a blank piece of paper or empty screen and thinking, "Only 150,000 words and I'll be finished. Get on your mark, get set ..."

That's the real work. Work. Remember that word, Gingrich? You should because you are always talking about how wonderful it is for the soul and how everybody should do it.

And I agree, although I still find merit in the words of Slatko Grobnik, who once said, "If work is so good for ya, how come they got to pay you to do it?"

Now it turns out that our work-loving Gingrich doesn't want to do the work himself. Hired help for the heavy lifting. How Republican of him.

I guess it's nice nonwork if you can find it.

Saga of the Unseen Piano Player continues

To the Editor:

On March 8, The Daily Iowan reprinted an article from the London Observer in a letter to the editor. The article — written by a creationist for the purpose of chastising Evolutionists — relayed a story of mice who live in a piano. They discussed whether it is the strings or the Unseen Piano Player which makes the music. It was an interesting little parable, but it failed to mention what happened next:

One day the Great Piano Player stopped coming to the piano and the music ceased. The scared mice — no longer comforted by the sounds of the piano — desperately developed intricate theories to explain the disconcerting silence. The environmentalist mice hypothesized that the silence of Mother Piano was attributable to mouse-overpopulation and recommended sustainable development and population control.

The mice who believed in the Great Piano Player felt, at first, that the silence was only temporary. The most conservative of the believers argued that every note played by the Pianist held deep meaning and should be worshipped unquestioningly.

Time passed and the Great Piano Player did not return. The memories of the Piano Player's full repertoire faded badly. Eventually, every sect of mice believed that it was the only one that correctly remembered the music. All of the mice became intolerant of the views about the music that differed from their own. Some of the mice were put on trial and executed by rat-poison-injection. Some mice were lynched with piano wire.

Some mice did escape persecution, though. Even though they believed the Piano was probably flat and they were not sure if they could survive beyond it, the boldest mice scurried away from the piano, deftly outmaneuvered the house cat and eventually found refuge throughout the house. (The mice that found their way to the stereo were not sure if they had reached the Tower of Babel or the Promised Land.)

But why did the music stop? What did happen to the Unseen Piano Player? The Great Piano Player left home and went to college to pursue a career in music. After graduation, she could not find a job playing the piano and was forced to wait in a topless bar. Eventually she married a blue-collar drunk whom she had met at work. Sure, he occasionally beat her, but she did not want to leave him because she had become financially dependent on him. Besides, he was an exterminator by trade, and it pleased her parents when he was able to get rid of all the damn mice in the house.

Veggie Fest '95 deemed a success

To the Editor:

March 20 was the first day of spring, a symbol of renewal and regeneration. It is also the day of the Great American Meatout, when thousands of consumers and environmental, animal and rain forest advocates throughout North America asked their spouses, companions, friends and neighbors to "kick the meat habit" at least for the day and explore a healthier, more compassionate and less environmentally destructive diet.

The purpose of the Great American Meatout is to bring to the public's attention the devastating impacts of today's runaway intensive animal agriculture (factory farming) practices on consumer health, food resources, environmental quality, animal suffering and the merits of a meatless diet. It is absolutely vital that consumers receive this information at least once a year to make an informed allocation of their food dollars in the face of the daily barrage of corporate advertisements from the meat industry.

In recognition of the Great American Meatout, a vegan/vegetarian buffet-style dinner — Veggie Fest '95 — was held March 12, which drew a capacity crowd of 200 people. I would like to thank the UI Animal Coalition, UI Environmental Coalition, UI Rainforest Action Group and Tall-grass Prairie Earth for helping to organize Veggie Fest '95 and the Masala, the Great Midwestern Ice Cream Co., the Wok, the New Pioneer Co-Op and the Blooming Prairie Warehouse which supplied foodstuffs. And a special thanks to the band Bev.

Participants had a wonderful time and there was plenty to eat — vegan lasagna, veggie burgers, falafel, tacos, rice, lentils, pasta dishes and many more wonderful vegan (no animal ingredients) desserts like tofu chocolate "cheese" cake, peach pie and chocolate fudge brownies. Many of these dishes are inexpensive and easy to make.

All those who attended Veggie Fest '95 saw the wide range of foods available for vegans and vegetarians, and for those who did not, we hope they will visit some of the local outlets for vegetarian foods.

If you would like to learn more about what effect your diet has on animals, the environment and your health, please read "Diet for a New America" by John Robbins, "Animal Factories" by Jim Mason and Peter Singer and "Beyond Beef" by Jeremy Rifkin.

Embarrassed to cheer for women's basketball

To the Editor:

As a native Iowan, UI graduate and six-year employee of the Iowa women's athletic department, I was pleased and proud to support the Hawkeye women's basketball team at the Big Ten Women's Basketball Championship in Indianapolis. The Hawkeyes represented their school with class, playing hard and with heart to end their frustrating season with a positive flair.

I must admit, however, that I was less than proud to be sitting among some of the Iowa fans in attendance. I know that I am referring to a vocal minority; however, the actions of these dozen or so fans reflected poorly on the entire Iowa contingent. I, quite frankly, was ashamed at the way those fans loudly and obnoxiously yelled and whined and complained to and about the officials. I have been in a lot of basketball arenas and listened to many unfriendly crowds, and unfortunately, the Iowa fans ranked among some of the worst I have experienced. I believe the energy of these fans would have been much better spent on support for the Iowa players.

Iowa has a strong tradition of supporting its female student-athletes. In the two years that I have lived in Indiana, I have heard nothing but positive comments about the Iowa program and its fan support. On this day, however, there were fans wearing the Hawkeye black and gold who dispelled my belief that Iowa has the best fans in the game. I was thoroughly embarrassed. To those who came and cheered and offered positive comments to the players and the efforts they put forth, I commend you. I know Coach Vivian Stringer and her team needed your support this year more than ever. For those who could offer only negative comments, I ask that next year you stay home and listen to the game on the radio. If you don't, I think I'll sit on the other side of the gym.

Medical students less important?

To the Editor:

On March 5, I was again faced with one of the more frustrating paradoxes at the UI. I, a first-year medical student, was unable to park in the lot behind the Hardin Library for the Health Sciences because the gates had been closed for the Iowa vs. Michigan basketball game. Although I enjoy a good game as much as the next Hawkeye fan, on this particular day I had come to the library to study and was in fact unable to because there wasn't anywhere to park.

Normally, I would understand the logic behind closing the lot: simple supply-and-demand economics. Why not charge people to gain access to a limited resource that is in high demand; after all, it's the American way. However, what really irked me in this particular instance was that I arrived at 11 a.m. and the gates were already closed — tip off was scheduled for 3 p.m. Call me crazy, but what fan — no matter how excited — would show up four hours before game time? Unless that fan is in the mood for a leisurely lunch at the hospital cafeteria or an extended self-tour of the medical and dental campuses, they're in for a long wait.

If I could've taken the bus into town, I would gladly have done so, but the Iowa City Transit System doesn't run on Sundays so driving (and consequently access to parking) was necessary. I think it would be a nice gesture on the part of the UI to post a schedule of the days and times during which parking lots will be closed for events so that those of us who want to take advantage of the academic and recreational facilities (which is what I pay my tuition for) will know when we have to arrive to be able to park. A simple sign posted next to the library hours or on the doors of The Field House would be sufficient.

Since academics is what most universities consider their highest priority, shouldn't the UI give some consideration to those of us who work hard to give it its academic reputation?

Clothesline commemorates survivors

According to the U.S. Defense Department, 58,000 soldiers died during the Vietnam War. During that same period of time, 51,000 women were killed by men who supposedly loved them. That statistic became the catalyst for a group of East Coast activists to develop a project that would break the silence of and bear witness to violence against women.

Their commitment resulted in an event they called the Clothesline Project. The concept was simple: Let women tell their own stories in their own unique way and in a format that could be hung out — literally — for all to see.

In the tradition of the AIDS memorial quilt, T-shirts are decorated in commemoration of women and girls who have been victims of abuse. On the clothesline, different colors of shirts represent different types of violent acts: Red, pink and orange shirts symbolize rape or sexual assault; yellow and beige correspond to domestic violence; blue and green express the experience of incest or childhood sexual abuse; purple indicates an attack based on sexual orientation; and white is representative of women and girls who have died as a result of violence.

A yellow shirt hangs in testimony of a woman's experience of being battered. It reads: Where there is fear, there is power. Where there is power, there is hope. Hope cracks open the gate; if you are ready, it will take you through.

The original Clothesline Project event consisted of 31 shirts; today, five years later, national network organizers estimate that there are tens of thousands of shirts being displayed across the country and internationally through local project chapters.

A blue shirt, bearing the wild colors of anger: For every child raped by a parent — It is not your fault; it is not your shame. You are not to blame.

Today and Wednesday, a coalition of area victim service organizations will be hosting a 500-shirt segment of the national touring display of the Clothesline Project. Also on exhibit will be nearly 200 shirts from local clotheslines throughout the state. There will be a T-shirt making area with art materials for those who wish to create a memorial during the event — any women who have been hurt, any friend or family member who has seen and cared may choose to design a shirt for inauguration into the clothesline.

A red shirt — like blood, like rage: This is for my friend Nancy, who was gang raped at her college in 1981 and was told that it was her fault because she was at a party. She still hurts.

The clothesline does more than honor and remember those women and girls who are survivors — or victims — of violence. The project also serves to raise awareness of the issue of such abuse. Those who think that they do not have a daughter, wife, friend, mother, aunt, grandmother, partner or sister who has been impacted by abuse are especially encouraged to attend. During the event, a gong will be struck every 10 seconds to denote the frequency with which women are battered; a whistle will be blown every 60 seconds, based on the fact that in this country a rape is reported every minute; a bell will be rung eight times during the two-day display in remembrance of the four women who are killed each day as a result of domestic violence.

A simple white shirt serves as a reminder that violence against women is as much societal as it is interpersonal: Becky Bell. Age 17. Died in 1988 from an illegal abortion due to a parental consent law.

The shirts which are hung from the clothesline express not only hurt, but also healing; not just survival, but also wholeness. Nowhere is the impact of the Clothesline Project more evident than in the reaction of those who view it: the visual images, the powerful words, the grief and the determination cannot be denied.

A green shirt, the color of childhood sexual abuse, reveals both pain and process: I finally learned to love that little girl myself. But the hardest task of all is to truly say that I forgive you, Dad.

The abuse represented through the Clothesline Project is society's dirty laundry. Don't avert your eyes. Look. Don't ignore the truth. See.

The Clothesline Project display will be in the Main Lounge of the Union today from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. and Wednesday from 7 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Opening ceremonies will be held at noon today.

Reports say Tyson ready to drop King

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Tyson is out of prison. Is Don King out of the picture?

Various published accounts on Monday suggested that promoter King has lost his hold on the former heavyweight champion, released on Saturday from an Indiana prison, where he served time for a rape conviction.

"Today, I don't think Don King is out, but we'll know in a couple of months," promoter Dan Duva said.

"I think King is out," promoter Bob Arum said.

"I don't care that much, except it facilitates a Tyson-Foreman fight."

The 46-year-old Foreman, promoted by Arum, more likely would fight Tyson if King, Arum's archrival, is not involved.

Phone calls to King's office in Florida and his Ohio home, located near Tyson's residence in Southington, were not returned.

There were reports that Tyson sent King away after the former champion returned to his home on Saturday.

Promoter Butch Lewis was quoted in Monday's New York Daily News as saying "I was told that there's some sort of rift between King and Tyson. I was told that Tyson wanted privacy and asked everybody to leave, including Don."

Monday, Lewis told The Associated Press that "all the rumors being circulated are second and third hand. I'm not surprised, nor should anyone else be, after being incarcerated for three years that the kid would want privacy. People are reading too much into it. I don't take it as a sign that Don is on his way out."

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Wisconsin eyes Bennett to fill vacant coaching spot

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Wisconsin-Green Bay coach Dick Bennett met with his players Monday but wasn't saying whether he'll accept the job of head coach of the Wisconsin Badgers.

Bennett, the veteran coach who took the Phoenix to NCAA tournament play the past two seasons, scheduled a news conference for 8 a.m. today.

Wisconsin athletic director Pat Richter fired first-year coach Stan Van Gundy, 35.

Hopes had been high with the team coming off a previous NCAA tournament appearance and boasting a lineup that included two potential NBA lottery picks in Michael Finley and Rashard Griffith.

Bennett, 51, is 361-188 in 19 years as a coach, including 287-109 in 10 seasons in Green Bay. He previously coached Wisconsin-Stevens Point from 1976-85.

Bennett's Phoenix upset California in the NCAA tournament a year ago. This year, they lost 49-48 to Big Ten champion Purdue in the first round.

Richter met with Bennett last week after indicating Bennett was his top choice as coach.

Judge may halt strike Friday

Owners immediately counter with six-year settlement offer

Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A federal judge scheduled a hearing Friday that could lead to the end of the baseball strike, and owners made a new proposal that moved toward the union's position.

Shortly after lawyers left a short hearing before U.S. District Judge Sonia Sotomayor, players and owners returned to the bargaining table for the first time since March 4. Management offered a six-year deal in which the sides would play 1995 under the old rules.

Starting next year, the portions of payrolls above $44 million, or 108 percent of the average, would be subject to a 50 percent tax. That's $3.3 million, or 8 percent, more than the owners' previous proposal.

Owners, using many of the recommendations mediator W.J. Usery made last month, also offered to either keep the current system of salary arbitration and free agency, or to eliminate arbitration and lower the threshold for unrestricted free agency from six years to four. In their last offer, owners wanted to eliminate arbitration in exchange for restricted free agency for those with four to six years of service.

"This offer has got to be accepted by this weekend," acting commissioner Bud Selig said.

The union's last proposal as for a tax of 25 percent on the portions of payrolls above 133 of the average, or $54.1 million.

"I would say to you after a lot of agonizing, that this proposal is much less than the clubs hoped to achieve," Selig said. "But the clubs recognize that we are at the point in this dispute where both sides must swallow hard to make an agreement."

At the courthouse earlier in the day, Sotomayor held a 30-minute hearing. The judge asked owners for a brief by Wednesday and asked the National Labor Relations Board for a response by the following day.

Players say they would end their strike if Sotomayor issues the injunction, and the union's executive board is scheduled to convene Wednesday in New York to formally pass a resolution stating that.

Many owners are in favor of locking out players if the union ends the strike without an agreement. But it is unclear if they can get the 21 votes among the 28 teams need-

HAWKEYE BASEBALL

Ostrom paces Iowa in doubleheader

David Schwartz
The Daily Iowan

The day belonged to Matt Ostrom.

Not only did the senior captain drive in five of Iowa's six runs in a doubleheader Monday against Michigan, he produced either a tying or go-ahead run with each RBI.

The Hawkeyes took the top half of the doubleheader 4-0.

Iowa was clinging to a one-run lead when Ostrom took Wolverine pitcher Matt Perullo deep for a three-run homer, his first of the year.

"It was nice. I don't hit many long balls, so I enjoy all of those," Ostrom said.

Iowa pitchers Matt Austin and Kurt Belger combined for the three-hit shutout.

With the win, Austin's record improved to 2-1. Belger picked up his fourth save of the season.

Ostrom's bat wasn't enough for Iowa (9-7, 2-2) in the second game as Michigan pulled out the win in extra innings.

Michigan (9-13, 2-2) led most of the way until an Ostrom single in the bottom of the sixth drove in junior Jeff Schley. Schley had reached base on a costly sequence of errors.

First, Michigan third baseman Kelly Dransfeldt allowed Schley's ground ball to go between his legs. Left fielder Sean Coston then bobbled the ball and Schley advanced to second.

Two batters later Michigan starter Brian Steinbach's wild pitch moved Schley over to third, setting up Ostrom's Texas-leaguer into right-center field, tying the

Ostrom's game-tying hit was his first against Steinbach, who had struck the Iowa right-fielder out in his previous two at-bats.

"I kept chasing that little breaking ball in the dirt. I couldn't lay off of it," Ostrom said. "I just scooted up in the box and made him see if he could throw me the fastball."

Michigan coach Bill Freehan then brought in his ace reliever. John Arvai, a sidearming flamethrower with nasty breaking pitches, proved to be too much for Iowa.

"When (Arvai's) on and the weather is warm, he'll pop it up there around 90," Iowa sophomore C.J. Thieleke said.

"He comes over the top every once in a while, too, which really screws you up."

Arvai retired nine of the 10 batters he faced and struck out the side in the seventh.

After Michigan's Scott Weaver drove in what proved to be the winning run in the top of the ninth, it was only fitting that Arvai retired the side in order.

"He kind of put it to us last year. Saturday he hung me a curveball and he didn't throw that again to me," Thieleke said.

Thieleke, who connected off Arvai for a three-run shot Saturday, was the only Hawkeye to reach base Monday against the Wolverine hurler.

But despite the loss, Iowa coach Duane Banks said he was pleased with the team's effort.

"We've won games like this all year, we just didn't happen to do it today," Banks said.

"We didn't have many opportunities. Their pitching kept us pretty well in tact."

While it may have been Ostrom's bat that supplied the fireworks, it was Iowa's pitching that kept them in the game, Banks said.

"We didn't swing the bats very good today. I thought our pitching was excellent," Banks said. "I thought we played good defense, we just didn't hit."

Ostrom said with all the defensive troubles Iowa had last year, this year's squad has shown noticeable improvement.

"As a team we're starting to play better defense, but we need to work on our hitting a little," Ostrom said.

Banks said that between Iowa's hitting woes, 40-degree temperatures and tough Michigan pitching, Iowa came out of the doubleheader, for the most part, unscathed.

"It's just one of those days," he said.

"It could be worse."

Eagles, Hokies march to finals

NEW YORK — Anthony Pieper scored a career-high 31 points and freshman Aaron Hutchins continued his late-season heroics with 21 Monday night, sending Marquette to the championship game of the NIT with an 87-79 victory over Penn State.

The Golden Eagles (21-11) will play Virginia Tech, a 71-59 winner over Canisius, in Wednesday night's title game. It will be Marquette's third championship game, its only title coming in 1970. Virginia Tech beat Marquette 57-54 in January at Milwaukee.

Marquette struggled through a rough first half, going 10 minutes with just one field goal in 14 attempts, and the Nittany Lions (20-11) led 36-20 with 2:59 left in the half.

The Golden Eagles scored the last eight points of the half, a run started with Hutchins' first two points of the game, and opened the second half with a 20-4 run with Pieper, a sophomore guard, and Hutchins scoring all the points.

Eight of Marquette's first 11 field goals in the second half were 3-pointers and the Golden Eagles matched their season-high with 15 3-pointers.

The last of them was by Chris Crawford and his first points of the game gave the Golden Eagles a 73-59 lead with 2:59 to play.

The Nittany Lions, who struggled from the free throw line making 10 of their first 23, finally start-

BULLS VISIT NEW YORK TONIGHT

Knicks: Bring on Jordan

Mike Nadel
Associated Press

NEW YORK — In 1991, 1992 and 1993, the New York Knicks didn't represent the Eastern Conference in the NBA Finals. The Chicago Bulls did — and went on to win the championship each year.

The New York Knicks didn't have Michael Jordan. The Chicago Bulls did.

Last year, neither team had Jordan, who was playing minor league baseball for the Birmingham Barons. The Knicks finally overcame the Bulls in an emotional seven-game series and reached the Finals.

"That was their window of opportunity," Chicago coach Phil Jackson said Monday.

The window might have slammed shut. Jordan is back. And if the season ended now, his Bulls would face the Knicks in the opening round of the playoffs.

"Bring him on," was the initial reaction of Knicks president Dave Checketts when Jordan's un-retirement became official last week.

Checketts & Co. get their first chance to check out Jordan, Part II, on Tuesday night when the Bulls visit the Knicks.

Jordan, who lit up Atlanta on Saturday in the best of his four games back, will be playing at Madison Square Garden for the first time since his 29 points led the Bulls to victory in the pivotal fifth game of the 1993 conference finals.

"It's a measuring stick. New York is a contender. We have to see how well we stack up," he said. "It's a tough situation. We have to prepare ourselves for a good battle, physically as well as emotionally. The Knicks team has always rebounded the ball strongly and played solid defense."

The last time the teams met, March 2 in New York before rumors of Jordan's return had surfaced, the Bulls blew a big lead and lost.

Jordan's presence tonight will "bring a renewed effort" from the Knicks, Jackson said. "I think they were rather bored with us the last time; that's one of the reasons we got a lead. This will bring them to a full alert immediately."

Jackson said the Knicks' trip to Chicago on April 16 — one week before the regular season ends — will be a more accurate measuring stick.

"That's going to be a drawn-out battle in which we're going to wage a little bit of playoff spirit," he said. "We're going to be at full strength. Michael Jordan will be conditioned."

Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Quarterback Frank Reich, the backup quarterback for the Buffalo Bills, has signed with the Carolina Panthers as an unrestricted free agent.

The signing was announced today by Panthers president Mike McCormack.

"Frank gives us a veteran who has played on the highest level of the National Football League," Panthers general manager Bill Polian said. "He brings the experience and leadership qualities that are important in developing a young team, and we look forward to having him with the Panthers."

During his career as backup to the Bills' Jim Kelly, Reich completed 222 of 377 passes with 18 touch-

Agassi, Sampras eye French Open

Steven Wine

Associated Press

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. — Pete Sampras and Andre Agassi, eager to add a French Open title to their list of accomplishments, will take different paths to Paris this year.

The top-ranked Sampras plans to spend the next 2½ months on clay, beginning with this weekend's second-round Davis Cup tie between the United States and Italy in Palermo.

Agassi, ranked No. 2, will also play at Palermo, but he'll then fly to the Orient for two hardcourt tournaments before returning to clay.

Both players are pointing toward the French Open in early June, our team will be adapted to his style of play and our chemistry will be back."

If the Knicks want to avoid opening the postseason against Jordan, they might actually be better off losing Tuesday.

Chicago, with the sixth-best record in the East, is only 2½ games behind fifth-place Cleveland. If the Bulls pass Cleveland, they'd face the No. 4 seed, probably Charlotte or Indiana, and the Knicks would get the Cavaliers.

Before Jordan's return became official, Knicks coach Pat Riley said: "It would change the thinking of who and who cannot win."

But Knicks general manager Ernie Grunfeld pointed out that Jordan's supporting cast isn't as strong as it was during the Bulls' championship run.

"What you have to remember is they're a different team," he said. "There's no Grant, there's no Cartwright, there's no Paxson."

The Knicks have changed little. They're still formidable and physical, with Patrick Ewing, Charles Oakley and Anthony Mason. And they're still embattled, with Mason having just returned from a five-game suspension for showing up Rile.

"They've battled with themselves mentally, which is part of trying to be a champion," said Jordan, a master of mind games. "But I think they still have the fundamentals to win."

Jordan will renew his rivalry with John Starks. Since returning, Jordan already has faced top guards like Reggie Miller, Anfernee Hardaway, Nick Anderson and Steve Smith with mixed results.

"A lot of guys are taking advantage of me, attacking me, because they know I'm not really ready yet," Jordan said. "But that's good, because I get the challenge that I need to get myself back to where I want to be."

downs and 12 interceptions. He made eight career starts including the final two regular season games in 1994. He also made two playoff starts for the Bills.

"I'm excited about the opportunity to be involved with a new franchise like Carolina," Reich said.

Reich is best remembered for rallying the Bills from a 32-point deficit to a 41-38 overtime victory over Houston in the 1992 AFC wild card game. Reich played a similar when they might meet for the fourth time this year.

Agassi leads the rivalry this year 2-1, with all three matches taking place on hardcourt, the surface he and Sampras like best. Their latest encounter came in Sunday's final at the Lipton Championships, with Agassi winning 3-6, 6-2, 7-6 (7-3).

"It's disappointing," Sampras said. "I just have to get back on that horse and get ready for the dirt, I guess."

"I feel I needed to play more on clay to play better and hopefully one day win the French Open," Sampras said. "That is the one major I have not won, and the biggest challenge of my career is to win the French."

By winning at Lipton, Agassi cut

Sampras' lead in the computer rankings to 227 points from 470. Sampras has been No. 1 for 81 consecutive weeks, and Agassi — ranked 19th just a year ago — has been No. 2 since Nov. 7.

"Ideally I'd like to be playing him in the final of the French to become No. 1," Agassi said. "You don't experience anything better in this game than a situation like that."

Agassi has one title each at the U.S. Open, Australian Open and Wimbledon. His best finish at the French Open came in 1990 and 1991, when he was runnerup.

"I think Pete would give up his No. 1 ranking if somebody guaranteed him a win at the French," Agassi said. "He wants to win it, and so do I."

UConn concerns opponents

Dennis Georgatos
Associated Press

STANFORD, Calif. — Tara VanDerveer's first order of business Monday was to dispel the notion Stanford might be intimidated by Connecticut in the Final Four.

"Obviously they've had a great season," the Stanford coach said. "They haven't lost a game. They're blowing people out. Their average margin of victory is close to 30 points."

"In a lot of situations, I think everyone is talking about the quote 'rematch' with Connecticut and Tennessee. My attitude is we have a lot of work to do this week but we're going to show up for the game. Records are kind of irrelevant at this point."

Stanford (30-2) will play Connecticut (33-0) in a semifinal at Minneapolis on Saturday. Georgia (28-4) plays Tennessee (33-2) in the other semifinal, with the championship game Sunday.

VanDerveer said Stanford should benefit from having a week to prepare for Connecticut, which showed some vulnerability in a 67-63 victory over Virginia in the East Regional title game last Saturday. Stanford advanced by defeating Purdue 69-58.

"I think Connecticut throws a lot of things at you and having a week is what we need to really break down the tapes, show our team the things we need to do to get ready for the game," VanDerveer said.

"I think that Virginia showed some things that maybe we want to learn from. They'd been rolling through the tournament and Virginia maybe put a little scare into Connecticut and showed you some things you could do that would work against them." Connecticut, the nation's top offensive team, needed a strong performance from Kara Wolters to hold off Virginia. The 6-foot-7 center had a couple of key blocks in the late going and finished with 18 points. Stanford center Anita Kaplan, who is 6-5, had an equally impressive outing against Purdue with 18 points.

Other key matchups include Stanford forward Rachel Hemmer, who shut down All-America Charlotte Smith in the regional semifinal win that ousted 1994 national champion North Carolina, against Connecticut's Rebecca Lobo, the college player of the year. And Stanford guard Kate Paye against Connecticut guard Jennifer Rizzotti.

OKLAHOMA STATE

Defense keys Cowboys' success

Owen Canfield
Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — Last year, Oklahoma State had Bryant Reeves and Randy Rutherford in the lineup, just as the Cowboys do now.

They also had a player who went on to the NBA, yet they lost in the second round of the NCAA tournament.

So what is different this year and has pushed the Cowboys to the Final Four for the first time since 1951?

In a word, defense. The Cowboys (27-9) have always been good defensively during Eddie Sutton's five years in Stillwater.

As long as he's on the bench, his teams will concern themselves most with stopping the other team from scoring.

Last year's Oklahoma State team was good defensively, holding opponents to 41.4 percent shooting. But this year's is even better.

Through 36 games, Oklahoma State has limited opponents to 39.1 percent shooting, the lowest during the Sutton era.

"I think it's mentality probably more than anything," assistant coach Sean Sutton said Monday. "With last year's team, they had more of an attitude of 'If you score on us, we'll score on you.' This team's mentality as far as defense is concerned, they don't like anybody scoring on them."

"When their man scores on them, they really take it personally."

Associated Press

Oklahoma State's Andre Owens and UMass' Dana Dingle scramble for a loose ball in the second half of the NCAA East Regional championship Sunday at the Meadowlands Arena in East Rutherford, N.J.

Oklahoma State opponents in the NCAA tournament have found that out. Drexel made just 25 percent of its shots in a first-round loss. Alabama, a team that had more quickness and athletic ability than Oklahoma State, was held to 36 percent shooting.

Wake Forest shot 40 percent, and star guard Randolph Childress didn't score in the final eight minutes.

The Cowboys secured the victory with a defensive play, forcing Childress to turn the ball over in the waning seconds. The turnover led to a breakaway dunk.

And in Sunday's East Regional championship game, the Cowboys forced Massachusetts into its worst shooting day — 16-of-58, or 28 percent — and its lowest point total of the season.

"Oklahoma State banged us and was physical and did the things they had to do to slow us down," UMass coach John Calipari said.

The Cowboys had an outstanding backcourt last year in Rutherford and Brooks Thompson, now a rookie with the Orlando Magic. And Reeves was the same inside force he has always been.

But neither Rutherford nor Thompson was a true point guard. The Cowboys have one now in Andre Owens, who along with distributing the ball and running the offense has developed into an outstanding defender out front. It was Owens who put the clamps on Childress in the closing minutes of that game.

"I think he's one of the best defensive point guards in the country," Sean Sutton said. "He causes people fits. He's low to the ground, he's strong, he's a bulldog. He just wears you down."

Forward Scott Pierce has also improved his game and gives the Cowboys a much better defender at that position than they had a year ago in Fred Burley.

NORTH CAROLINA VS. ARKANSAS

Former champs square off

Tom Foreman Jr.
Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — Before last week, Les Robinson saw in North Carolina what just about everyone in the nation had seen — great starting five, no backups.

Now the North Carolina State basketball coach sees a whole lot more.

"A week ago, I would have said Arkansas," said Robinson, whose Wolfpack squad was one of the five teams to beat North Carolina this season.

"I would have possibly given them the edge on depth because that's what I felt about Kentucky. But they handled Kentucky without a lot of problems. That changes my whole view."

The Tar Heels (28-5) downed the Wildcats 74-61 in the NCAA Southeast Regional championship game, giving them their 12th appearance in the Final Four, the 10th for coach Dean Smith. He'll be going after his third national championship, starting with a semifinal game against defending national champion Arkansas (31-6), Saturday night in Seattle.

North Carolina began countering its perceived lack of depth with its run through this year's NCAA tournament. This was a quite different team from the 1993 champions, who went up to five deep into the bench.

Coach Dean Smith had three 7-footers, a 6-foot-8 backup who specialized in defense and an experienced point guard to direct the team.

The 1995 team hasn't as many luxuries, so the lack-of-depth theme was played up when the Tar Heels got to the NCAA tournament.

Rasheed Wallace, the 6-10 sophomore, was nursing a bad ankle sustained in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament finals.

That left the middle temporarily to 7-2 Serge Zwikker, who for much of the year had been relegated to giving Wallace a breather in limited action.

It was also believed that Jerry Stackhouse would have to stay out of foul trouble, Dante Calabria would have to stay on his 3-point shooting pace and Donald Williams would have to duplicate his 1993 NCAA tournament performance to keep North Carolina alive.

The bench wasn't factored in, and that was apparent earlier in the season.

Instead of leading to North Carolina's exit, the bench responded. Zwikker opened the tournament with 19 points in the victory over Murray State, and has scored 26 points and grabbed 11 rebounds in the four games.

Point guard Edney dazzles UCLA fans

Beth Harris
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Tyus Edney's campus homecoming wasn't quite fit for a shotmaking king.

Fans cheered him at the Los Angeles airport when UCLA returned from winning the NCAA West Regional final in Oakland, but there was dead silence on a campus deserted for spring break.

For a change, Edney walked peacefully along the palm-lined pathways Monday as he headed for another round of interviews.

He wasn't accosted by well-wishers wanting to discuss his one-handed layup that beat Missouri at the buzzer. Or the amazing 3-pointer he nailed at the halftime buzzer against Connecticut.

Those shots have been the subject of many conversations around Westwood, leading Edney to tease that his next tournament trick might be sinking a halfcourt shot with two seconds remaining.

He acknowledges that a miracle shot in the final seconds isn't as likely against Oklahoma State in Saturday's semifinals.

"It probably will be expected," he said, "but it might be even tougher to get the ball."

Although Edney is being talked about like never before, he doesn't think he's changed.

"I've improved as a point guard in terms of knowledge of the position and being able to play better than I did last year," he said.

"It's just making better decisions, making sure certain people get the ball, a lot of little things."

HETEROSEXUAL CONTACT BLAMED FOR DISEASE

Eazy-E dies shortly after sharing his AIDS diagnosis with public

Niki Kapsambelis
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Eazy-E, whose rap group N.W.A. sold millions of records and angered the FBI by pioneering the hard-core "gangsta" rap sound, died just 10 days after revealing he had AIDS. He was 31.

The rapper, whose real name was Eric Wright, was a former drug dealer who claimed to have fathered seven children by six different women. He probably contracted the virus through heterosexual contact, his doctor said.

Wright died Sunday night at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center with his wife, Tomika, and mother by his side, Dr. William Young said.

He was hospitalized Feb. 24 for what he thought was asthma. Tests showed he had AIDS. He lost his ability to communicate several days ago, Young said.

Wright said he did not have homosexual relations or use intravenous drugs, so he "must have contracted AIDS through heterosexual contact," Young said.

Born in the grim Los Angeles suburb of Compton, Wright brought a brutal vision of Los Angeles-area ghetto life to popular art.

"Eazy made an impact on rap music and hip-hop culture that will always be felt," said Sheena Lester, executive editor of the magazine Rap Pages.

N.W.A., which stands for Niggaz Wit Attitude, scored a hit in 1988 with Straight Outta Compton, which used a thumping beat to tell crude tales of drive-by shootings, drugs and police harassment.

The album's foul-mouthed hard-core themes knocked softer rap off the charts and sold more than 2 million copies despite lack of radio play.

Wright's high-pitched voice anchored the song "Fuck Tha Police," which prompted an FBI protest that it advocated violence against law enforcement. The view of police as racists came years before the 1991 Rodney King beating.

Associated Press

Rapper Eazy-E, whose pioneer "gangsta" rap group N.W.A. brought the rawness of the inner-city to white suburbia, died Sunday night in Los Angeles. He was 31. The rapper, shown in a 1993 file photo, whose real name was Eric Wright, died of AIDS complications at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center.

N.W.A.'s follow-up record, 1991's Niggaz4Life, sold 954,000 copies in its first weeks of release to become the first hard-core rap album to hit No. 1 on the charts, despite being banned by some record stores and seized by English authorities for obscenity.

N.W.A. later broke up amid artistic and money disputes but proved hugely influential. Ice Cube and Dr. Dre went on to successful solo careers, and gangsta rap spread into the white suburban teen-age market to become mainstream, complete with MTV play.

Critics called gangsta rap violent and sexist for its portrayal of police as targets, women as "bitches" and whores, and its celebration of drugs and gunplay. Some claimed it promoted criminal violence.

Supporters argued that the songs merely offered the grim reality of the inner city.

"As long as you got gangstas and people going through all this shit, the music will be around," Wright said in 1994.

Wright also had a solo album, 1993's It's On (Dr. Dre) 187um Killin'. His Ruthless Records produced and supervised several other acts, including Above the Law, Thugs in Harmony, Blood of Abraham and MC Ren.

Like other rappers, Wright occasionally was in trouble with the law. In 1993, a judge ordered him to pay $58,000 a year in child support for a 2-year-old girl he fathered in Nebraska.

Wright and Tomika Wood married recently. The couple shared a 1-year-old son, Dominick, the youngest of Wright's children. Both Wood and the son tested negative for the AIDS virus, Wright said.

Wright said he didn't know how he contracted AIDS but wanted to warn "all my homeboys and their kin" in his March 16 announcement about his condition.

"I've learned in the last week that this thing is real and it doesn't discriminate. It affects everyone," Wright said in the statement read by his attorney.

His hospitalization prompted so many well-wishing telephone calls that Cedars-Sinai needed to hire more operators.

Spokeswoman Paula Correia estimated the hospital was getting 100 calls per hour, something unprecedented in her 11 years there.

"We've never had this number of calls — even when Lucille Ball was here, Kirk Douglas or George Burns — never anything like this, ever."

WIT RUNS RAMPANT IN 'FAWLTY TOWERS'

Cleeese plays upon idea of Britons as straight-laced in series for TV

Ian Corwin
The Daily Iowan

Are the British as terrified of embarrassment as their comedies would have us believe?

Monty Python's John Cleeese invoked the question in his screenplay for the film "A Fish Called Wanda" with varying answers, proving that he's good for more than silly walks and dead parrot jokes.

Although the BBC only produced 12 episodes, "Fawlty Towers" remains wicked, fast-paced and unflaggingly hilarious — one of the funniest and most well-written shows ever produced for television.

In "Wanda," Cleeese escaped the entrapment of English social mores through his chance meeting with a free-spirited American. Imagine the same sharp wit and stuffy presence Cleeese displayed in "Wanda" but with an added twist; there's no escape for him ... and Cleeese becomes a rude boar as a way of coping.

That's the basis for "Fawlty Towers," a short-lived BBC television series which Cleeese co-wrote with his ex-wife Connie Booth a year after he left the Python group in 1975. Although the BBC only produced 12 episodes, "Fawlty Towers" remains wicked, fast-paced and unflaggingly hilarious — one of the funniest well-written shows ever produced for television.

The sitcom revolves around the owner / manager of a hotel on the English Riviera. The proprietor is named Basil Fawlty (played by Cleeese). Uptight, boorish and rude, Fawlty personifies the stereotypical "stuffy Englishman" with the added bonus of pigheadedness in matters of decorum.

Whether he's dealing with his nagging wife Sybil (Prunella Scales), the hotel's Spanish waiter Manuel (Andrew Sachs) or an unruly guest, Fawlty is consistently hotheaded, sharp-tongued and impatient. He lies to conceal his errors and hangs the blame on everyone but himself — and in the end, his screw-ups never fail to come back and slap him in the face.

Consider the plot for "Waldorf Salad," an episode in which Fawlty and the hotel staff must make accommodations for a loudmouthed American tourist. The Yank arrives after the kitchen closes and has to bribe Fawlty to reopen it; the American then sends back his food and finally settles on a plain old Waldorf salad. The problem is the hotel chef has left, and Fawlty — proper Englishman that he is — has no idea what a Waldorf salad is. The lies begin and Fawlty, of course, corners himself.

Although "Fawlty Towers" is much less anarchic than the material Cleeese came up with for the Pythons, elements of silliness do shine through.

In "The Germans" for instance, Fawlty gets a concussion while hanging an old moose head in the hotel lobby, then has to deal with a load of German tourists in his deranged state. He becomes obsessed with telling the Germans that he holds no grudges against them for World War II and that Hitler was really an OK guy, even if he did have a funny walk (picture Cleeese with a bandaged head, goose-stepping through the hotel lobby while the hapless Germans look on, agape with horror).

Although "Fawlty Towers" is much less anarchic than the material Cleeese came up with for the Pythons, elements of silliness do shine through.

All 12 episodes of "Fawlty Towers" run amok with these ideas of inescapable disaster and Cleeese's inability to confront embarrassment. Anyone who has ever held a service job will be able to relate to Fawlty's frustration — and anyone who's ever been to England can judge for themselves whether or not "Basil Fawlty Syndrome" runs rampant in a country where it's still an impropriety to say the word "poo-poo."

SOME CAREERS AREN'T HELPED

Oscars bolster sales, stars' reputations

Bob Thomas
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The gushing winners at Monday night's Academy Awards walked off the stage with more than an 8 1/2-pound gold-plated statuette.

Oscar has the power to raise an actor's salary manyfold and add millions in box office and videocassette sales for the year's best picture or for movies winning more than one award.

Before Marisa Tomei was named best supporting actress for "My Cousin Vinny," she played occasional roles as a fiery Latin. The Oscar gave her star billing and probably tripled her salary.

The Oscar sweep by "The Silence of the Lambs" was estimated to have added $10 million to video sales.

Not that the favorites of this year's 67th annual Oscar ceremony have to worry where their next limo ride is coming from.

Best actor contenders Tom Hanks ("Forrest Gump") and John Travolta ("Pulp Fiction") already command up to $10 million per film.

"Forrest Gump," which was the leading candidate for best picture, has sold more than $300 million worth of tickets in the United States and Canada alone.

And Jessica Lange ("Blue Sky"), who was front-runner for best actress, has been a top earner among female stars for years.

Academy Awards can benefit newer careers, providing a touchstone for lasting stardom.

That happened with Bette Davis, who won her first award in 1935 for "Dangerous." It was a consolation prize for not being recognized for "Of Human Bondage" the year before.

Audrey Hepburn ("Roman Holiday," 1953) and Julie Andrews ("Mary Poppins," 1964) became superstars with their awards for their first American films. Ingrid Bergman's win for "Gaslight" in 1944 signaled her arrival as a top star.

But Oscar hasn't brought the Midas touch to every winner.

"You'd think it a given that an Academy Award will propel careers skyward," observed Leonard Maltin, historian sage for television's "Entertainment Tonight." It doesn't always happen that way.

"Consider the Louise Fletcher syndrome, which is inexplicable. She is a good actress, quite attractive, yet little happened to her after winning for 'One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest' in 1976.

The same with Kathy Bates, who won a best-actress Oscar in 1991 for 'Misery.'

"Her win didn't bring her instant success," Maltin said. "She hasn't had the roles she is capable of, though she has a good one now with 'Dolores Claiborne.'"

"The passage of time dims the luster of having won an Oscar," Maltin said. "Each career follows a different path, and at some point the record of having won an Oscar becomes meaningless."

KNOW: Which off-campus bookstore will buy back your used $45 textbooks for more than 25¢ each.

KNOW: Which "30-minutes-or-it's-free" pizza place always takes exactly 31 minutes.

KNOW: which evil, quarter-eating laundromat machines to avoid.

KNOW THE CODE,<sup>SM</sup>
IT ALWAYS COSTS LESS THAN 1-800-COLLECT.<sup>SM</sup>
