Dazed and confused: Xers look for identity

Devon Alexander

The Daily Iowan

Generation X: A single word and a capital letter, all of the 37 million people born between 1965 and 1980 are known simply as Xers. They have long been described as a generation of restless, alienated young men and women who don’t trust politicians or care about the world. Xers, also known as the Baby Boomers, are the era’s most affluent and successful generation. They are the only generation that has grown up with the commercialized experience of childhood, the generation that saw the emergence of the Space Age, the generation that witnessed the rise of the media.

There is a suspicion, a certainty, about the good old days of peace, love and grammar because the people who were spending those years in the 50’s are the same people who brought the ’60s greed.

Anthony DeCurtis, senior features editor at Rolling Stone,

"There is a suspicion, a certainty, about the good old days of peace, love and grammar because the people who were spending those years in the 50’s are the same people who brought the ’60s greed."

I am no one that resembles this 1960’s generation, nor do I have a relationship with the group. I am an Xer that looks and acts like my peers.

The report includes statistics of Xer’s and statistics of the Baby Boomers. It includes information about the Xers and information about the Baby Boomers.

Today’s population of people between 1980 and 1990 is the largest ever. The Baby Boomers live in the suburbs with their families, and the Xers live in the cities without families. The Baby Boomers have more money than the Xers. The Baby Boomers are the generation that saw the rise of the media, and the Xers are the generation that saw the emergence of the Space Age.

"It is my opinion that many of the 1960’s generation are acting like Xers and are taking on the role of the older generation in this generation."

There are many people that resemble the 1960’s generation and the Baby Boomers. There are many people that resemble the Xers and the Baby Boomers. There are many people that resemble the Xers and the Baby Boomers.

In my opinion, the people that resemble the Xers and the Baby Boomers are the people that resemble the Baby Boomers.

"It is my opinion that many of the 1960’s generation are acting like Xers and are taking on the role of the older generation in this generation."

There are many people that resemble the 1960’s generation and the Baby Boomers. There are many people that resemble the Xers and the Baby Boomers. There are many people that resemble the Xers and the Baby Boomers.

Study: Number of women in traditionally male careers skyrockets

By Greenhous
The Daily Iowan

When elementary school teachers asked their students, "What do you want to be when you grow up?" far fewer female students, especially those in kindergarten and first grade, answered male-dominated careers, such as lawyers or doctors. However, despite the progress women have made breaking into traditionally male-dominated careers, there is still a high disparity among women entering the workforce and men who work in the same field.

"We observed traditional activities, female jobs in wage, and there were mostly gender traditional positions such as wife, male jobs," said Charlotte Nelson, executive director of the Program for Women in Science and Engineering, who has been encouraging women to go into careers in science and technology for the past 30 years, the figure has jumped markedly.

"There are now far fewer students who want to be in science and technology," she said. "And there is more opportunity for women in science and technology."

In the field of industrial engineering, the percentage of women who part in the workforce has increased in the past 15 years. By 1990, 27 percent of those workers were women.

"There has been an identifiable increase in the percentage of women in professional fields such as medicine, law and dentistry," she said.

"Affirmative action has helped women break into such fields," Nelson said.

"Most women are identifying themselves as feminists now. But many women have done work in the humanities and social sciences.".

The chance to see six-time world champion Jackie Joyner-Kersee run 17.5 in the women's 100 meter hurdles Wednesday at the U.S. Olympic trials, one day before she threw her second fit and demanded her immediate withdrawal at the trials, had its momentous moments at the U.S. Olympic trials Wednesday.

Richard Riordan, tournament director of the U.S. Olympic trials and track and field at the University of Iowa, said he had heard a lot of talk in Iowa City recently.

"Even during the meeting, a handful of people came up to us with comments," Riordan said. "I'm sure there were those who would have liked it to have been a little better."

Riordan had a number of calls adding advertising placements, distribution, media and educational purposes.

"It is a real concern that there aren't a lot of Women in sports right now. They are constantly working to remove the barriers in ways that are not just financial but also legal.

"Many women are still being paid less on par with their male counterparts.""}

Clinton changes his mind, permits Cubans to enter U.S.

WASHINGTON — In a sudden about-face, President Clinton has decided to permit up to 20,000 Cubans to be turned away at the U.S. border, subject to a future and unspecified decision on whether to allow them entry.

Clinton, who had previously said he would not permit Cubans to enter the United States, has been under pressure from members of Congress and political groups to change his mind.

The move is expected to be announced later today.

In a statement, Clinton said: "I have listened to the concerns of many Americans, and I have decided that we should allow Cubans into the United States on a limited basis."

CHESA PEGLOW

Some time ago, I came across a piece of advice to graduate students that

When you ask for a favor, never state the full request.

"You want a favor?" said the professor, "Don't ask for too much. Start with something small."

I thought about it for a week and then asked the professor to publish a viewpoint piece in our college newspaper. He did, and I doubt I would have been able to publish it without his permission.

Since then, whenever I have asked for a favor, I have followed Professor Perglow's advice. It has worked every time.

You may not believe me, but it's true. If you have ever asked for a favor and been rejected, try following Professor Perglow's advice. It may just work for you.

I hope you find this advice as useful as I have. And if you have any other tips for getting what you want, please share them with me.

Yours truly,

Chesape Perglow

Iowa’s homecourt crowd roared Monday night as the Hawkeyes took down the Illinois State Redbirds, 9-3.

For a team that has had its share of ups and downs, Monday night was a night to remember for Iowa catcher Ryan Sienko.

Sienko, who has been in and out of the Iowa starting lineup throughout the season, delivered a key hit in the third inning that sparked the Hawkeyes to their 9-3 win.

In the third inning, Sienko drove in two runs with a bases-loaded single, helping Iowa take a 2-0 lead.

Generation X lacks voice in current box-office fare

20 percent box-office showing; Hollywood-deployed Generation X couldn't handle film as cultural discourse.

Generation X is at a pivotal point in its cultural evolution. The media has been catering to this generation's need for instant gratification and immediate access to information. However, the film industry has yet to fully embrace the cultural impact of Generation X.

The movie "Singles," for example, was marketed as a major Hollywood release. However, the film failed to connect with the target audience due to its lack of relevant content and its failure to address the unique issues facing Generation X.

Generation X is a generation that is intensely aware of its history and its place in the world. This awareness is reflected in the movies that have been produced, as they often attempt to capture the essence of the times in which they were made.

Despite the efforts of Hollywood to appeal to Generation X, the generation is still being overlooked. The media has yet to fully understand the needs and desires of this generation, and as a result, they continue to be ignored.

The lack of attention from Hollywood is a missed opportunity, as Generation X is a generation that is eager to engage with the world around them. By ignoring Generation X, Hollywood is missing out on a large and talented audience that is ready to be tapped into.

In conclusion, Hollywood has yet to fully grasp the importance of Generation X. The industry needs to take note of the trends that are shaping Generation X, and work to create films that are relevant to this generation's unique circumstances.

Singer Tori Amos, quoted in Rolling Stone

"They say we're Generation X, but I say we're Generation Fuck You."

Larry Muggerud, lead singer for Cypress Hill

"What I have seen is not a generation of slackers, but a generation of seekers."

President Clinton, quoted in The New York Times

"Even World War II doesn't make 19-year-olds read the paper."

David Schoenbaum, UI professor of history

What the hell is Generation X?

"The only X I know is Malcolm X."

Dr. Dre, rap star quoted in Newsweek

"It's vague, it's unformed and frankly it doesn't say anything."

Hunter Rawlings, UI president

"These kids today, They're soft. They don't know how good they have it. Not only did they never have to fight in a war ... they never even had to dodge one."

Michael Kinsley, quoted in Newsweek

"I think it's an assumption of our time that we're busy naming ourselves before we're even done. It just seems very self-conscious to think of yourself making history right then."

Dave Zollo, lead singer for High & Lonesome

Xers battle AIDS, divorce; seek unity

Editor's note: Generation X has its slackers (like every generation before it). It has some whiners, but statistics show whining may be justified. And Xers have been known to wear combat boots and flannel and drink Coke for breakfast, which helps buoy that rebellious mystique. In search of misconceptions in the Gen X stereotype, our special report staff found there's really no way to label 37 million people, but the public continues to try. Whether you think you're an X or not, the next time you flannel around your waist or turn your bandana into a bandanna, someone will label you as one.

Like it or not, Generation Xers are considered representative of the '80s of the world, drug culture and the Big Guns.

At least that's what caricatures are, existing among those born between 1965 and 1980 - the undefined, disillusioned generation, who learned about life from the breakup of their parents' marriages.

I.Unlike other generations, Xers were more to work outside the home, and men became a focus of Bamboozle.

Pop culture and available homes lose also shaped who they are and with an X label.

No faces that bind

While many factors played a part in shaping Generation X, there is one defining event that binds it together, said UI history Associate Professor Kenneth Cook, a social historian in Iowa City.

"For my mother, Dec. 7, 1941, was a huge defining catalyst for her life. For us, Vietnam was a huge defining catalyst for everybody," Cook said. "I asked my mothers what shaped their generation together. For a long time nobody said anything. Then somebody said diversions. About 40 years ago, but that helped determine the lack of one defining moment that makes this generation more epitaphic toward just about everything ... whether it be politics, world issues or local and community events, and UI student politics in particular," President Tim Williams.

"Our parents had to grow up at an earlier age because of the war and because of the Vietnam war," Williams said. "We were never as privileged to deal with things that forced us to grow up. I think we've had a easier life."

Not experiencing a major war, economic depression or political movement but left Xers without a distinguishable identity to say.

"People are more confused - it's a more free-floating generation. There's nothing to shape us that we can identify with," Williams said. "There are a lot of little things, but there's no one thing..."

Kurt Cobain: spokesman for the generational gap

The national rumor is that Kurt Cobain, the lead singer of Nirvana, was assaulted, but he said, "It's all part of the fun."

"I think it's a unique time in our history. It's the first time that we're not living in a society that's been dominated by one group. It's the first time that we're able to define our own culture." Cobain said.

"And that's what makes it so exciting." Cobain added.

Retirement Planning: Generation Xers are the product of a baby boomer generation that spent too much. Their focus forward is to have a stable job, pay Social Security even though they probably won't need it and will most likely inherit a mountain of national debt.

Maybe there's a reason they have been labeled whimsical, self-centered, egotistical. The youth have produced a third percent of the nation's economic future and leaders. The Xers are determined to work hard and save money so they can be as prosperous as their parents.

New opportunities in business and employment should brighten the fiscal outlook, said Gary Feltke, dean of the UI College of Business/Administration.

"There's a lot of opportunity opening up and we shouldn't be so depressed," he said. "The U.S. has diversified its savings and investments and has bailed out a huge debt and hope to the next generation. However, the world is opening up in ways not possible before."

Instead of relying on a保障ing retirement, this generation will have to rely on themselves for economic security, Feltke said.

"The up-and-downs of the past are over but they will have to look in other directions."

The outlook on future employment shows that the "new economy" will have to be ready for all types of employment, he said. College graduates need to be flexible and look at opportunities other than the "status quo." By the time the economy will play this out, the "baby boomer" generation's labor force will be reduced and the "Xers" will be entering the workforce with more education and in more flexible and growing careers.

"People need new skills or computer skills will have to be taught to the workers," Feltke said.

And next will have to be prepared to move around to order to find their dream job, said Joe Hunt, director of the UI Business and Liberal Arts Program Office.

"We have to be successful, so need to look at opportunities other than the "status quo.""
