Medical professionals reminded to wash up

CHICAGO (AP) — Physician, wash thy hands.

In a world of dangerous viruses and drug-resistant bacteria, many doctors fail to do just that.

So says an expert on preventive medicine who wants the American Medical Association to remind doctors to use a little soap and water between patients.

"The valuable lesson of hand-washing before and between examining each patient is today honored mostly in the breach," Dr. Duncan W. Clark, an AMA member, said in a presentation to AMA policy-makers this week.

Studies indicate that doctors wash their hands only 14 to 59 percent of the time before seeing patients, said Clark, a professor of preventive medicine at the State University of New York Health Science Center.

FBI Special Agent William Bodziak said O.J. Simpson's size 12 foot matches bloody shoe prints found at the crime scene. Bodziak said the prints were left by Bruno Magli shoes manufactured in 1991 or 1992.

Police have not located any Bruno Magli shoes at Simpson's estate. Bodziak said police used Simpson's Reebok athletic shoes to check his shoe size; he said that was a fair comparison.

Prosecutor Christopher Darden will likely continue trying to link the infamous bloody gloves to Simpson. He told Judge Lance Ito the prosecution has seized more gloves, sizes large and extra large, from Simpson's estate.

Drowning victim remembered

Christie Midthun
and Tom Schoenberg
The Daily Iowan

As the sun set over the Iowa River Monday evening, a group of about 12 people gathered by the water that claimed the life of their friend, drowning victim Jonathan Vogt.

The group members held their own memorial service for Vogt after being forced by Vogt's family to leave his funeral in Wilton, Iowa, earlier Monday.

Vogt, 19, drowned Thursday after bridge-jumping from the Hancher Auditorium pedestrian bridge around 5 p.m. After rescue crews scoured the waters near the bridge during a day-long search, Vogt's body was recovered around 3:18 p.m. Friday.

At Vogt's funeral Monday, Vogt's biological family told their son's friends they were not allowed to stay for the services at the eastern Iowa church, the gathered group members said.

"They (Vogt's biological family) segregated all of Jon's friends and who he considered to be his family," said Iowa City resident Ronna Hildebrandt, a friend of Vogt.

"He was really bright, kind and hard working."

Delphia Nelson, friend of drowning victim Jonathan Vogt

Those gathered by the Iowa River Monday evening said Vogt had been estranged from his biological family for several years. Vogt had lived with Delphia Nelson of Iowa City for more than a year before moving to Hannibal, Mo.; Nelson said he thought of her as family.

To Nelson, Vogt was gentle and kind. She said she especially liked the way he would take the time to play with her children. Nelson also said Vogt loved art and poetry, and would write poems in his free time.

"He was really bright, kind and hard working," Nelson said.

For Vogt's friends, the memorial was a vital part of their grieving process and gave them a sense of closure, Hildebrandt said.

"Everything is important to me that has to do with getting Jon where he's going," said Iowa City resident Todd Woodburn.

Woodburn had known Vogt for about two years and said he was "irate" at not being allowed to stay at Vogt's wake Sunday in Wilton. Woodburn said Vogt's biological family was depriving his friends from saying their goodbyes.

Nelson said she believes it was a difference in lifestyle between the two families that provoked the conflict at Vogt's funeral.

"(The difference) was real obvious when (the biological family) had suits and church-type dresses, while we came in Harley (Davidson) shirts and jeans — the way Jon would have wanted us," Nelson said.

"I've jumped off here before — everybody has. It's a rush."

Nathan Cox, who was with Vogt when he drowned near the Hancher Auditorium pedestrian bridge

The main reason for the memorial service Monday night was to say goodbye to Vogt the way he would have liked it, Nelson said.

"The boy in the casket didn't even look like Jon," Nelson said. "When I looked at him, I saw they had cut his hair and put him in a suit. It hurt me because he couldn't go out the way he wanted to. He should have been wearing blue jeans and a Jim Morrison T-shirt because that was Jon."

Vogt's tragic death, however, did teach his friends a lesson about the dangers of the Iowa River and bridge-jumping. One of Vogt's friends, Nathan Cox, 15, who was with Vogt when he drowned, said bridge-jumping used to be a sport among their friends.

"I've jumped off here before — everybody has. It's a rush," Cox said.

But when asked whether he and his friends would bridge-jump again, Daniel Garringer, 17, shook his head.

"It's out of the question," he said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court rejected a free-speech challenge Monday to the year-old federal law that protects access to abortion clinics.

Crayon enterprise relies on recycling

Jen Dawson
The Daily Iowan

Who would have thought a box of old Crayolas could save the planet?

One creative mother of three did, and she has enlisted the help of an Iowa City business in her crusade to get children to recycle their piles of broken crayons into colorful dinosaurs, trolls and clowns.

LuAnn Foty started making Crazy Crayons five years ago out of her Oregon home when times got so tough for her family that she couldn't afford Christmas presents for her children.

Instead of leaving her kids' stockings empty, Foty went to their toy box to find a creative solution to her problem. Foty collected their broken crayons, melted them down and poured them into an old candy mold — creating brand new crayons for her children.

Bald is beautiful

Michael Jordan shaves his locks and lets his scalp shine. So do "Star Trek: The Next Generation" actor Patrick Stewart, supermodel Eve Salail and R.E.M. singer Michael Stipe. And now several UI students and Iowa City residents are also going for the chrome-dome look by shaving their heads.

Having no hair is no reason to hide your head under a hat anymore — baldness is in.

While walking across campus, it's not uncommon to see shaved heads. In fact, if you pass through the downtown Pedestrian Mall this summer, you might see more cue balls than hairballs. These people aren't the unfortunate sufferers of hair loss; they choose to sport hairless heads.

People have different reasons for shaving their heads, but

People, pets cautioned against heat

Patricia Harris
The Daily Iowan

With temperatures expected to climb into the 90s for most of this week, young children, older people and furry friends are warned to take special precautions to keep safe and healthy.

So far this summer, UI Hospitals and Clinics' emergency room has not seen many heat-related illnesses, UIHC associate surgeon Harlo Hove said.

"This heat wave has been rather mild and it came on slowly," Hove said. "It gave people time to adjust to it."

But now that the mercury has risen and seems ready to stay there, Hove said people need to be aware of physical dangers caused by heat.

• Senior citizens
"Older people are more affected (by the heat) — it's difficult for their bodies to handle the higher temperatures," said Betsy Tatro, site director of the Johnson County Office of the American Red Cross, 328 S. Clinton St. "Also, medications they may be taking make their bodies more prone to the heat and humidity."

Older people often are reluctant to discard excess layers of clothing and have other factors counting against them in extreme heat, Hove said.

"Older people don't like to take off garments; sometimes they can't afford air conditioning or they live in upstairs apartments," he said.

Older people should stay inside if their homes have air conditioning or go to a place that is air-conditioned if possible, Tatro said.

• Small children
Children — like older adults — are particularly prone to overheating, so leaving children locked in a hot car is a very dangerous move. Hove said many cases of heat-related illnesses in young children are the fault of their parents.

"The cases of sickness in the very young are usually caused by parents leaving them in the car," he said. "We haven't had any yet this summer, but it usually seems to happen annually."

On June 13, Jennie Bain, 20, left her two boys — Devin, almost 2, and Dustin, 1 — in her car with the windows rolled up in McMinnville, Tenn. The boys died of hyperthermia — or overheating — after spending up to 10 hours buckled in their car seats while their mother partied in a motel room. The temperature inside the car had reached at least 120 degrees. Bain was arrested on murder charges.

Most children sweat profusely when outside and can take off layers of clothing and drink fluids when they exercise, Hove said. Also, kids tend to slow down as they get tired, and relaxation is another good defense against succumbing to heat.

Overprotective parents of newborns can also do more harm than good when attempting to shield kids from the sun, Harlo said.

"In infants, they might be bundled up in blankets when they really shouldn't be," he said.

• Pets — especially dogs and cats
Most everyone has seen it: a dog yapping loudly from behind the closed windows of a car parked in a shopping mall or store. It's not just cruel — it can be deadly to the animal, said Lisa Goodman, director of Coralville/Iowa City Animal Control.

"Even with the windows open, if the car is 80 degrees, in five minutes the car can reach over 100 degrees," Goodman said. "Vehicles are a heat conductor. It's not safe to keep a dog or cat in the car."

Dogs can sustain major injuries in a very short period of time as a result of the heat, Goodman said.

"It takes a dog seven minutes of overheating to become brain damaged," she said. "Even if the dog survives the incident, it probably will be brain damaged."

Cats are more susceptible to overheating than dogs, Goodman said. Cats sweat through their mouths and a little bit through their paws, and they tend to dehydrate quickly.

Goodman said it's fine to leave animals outside as long as they have shade and clean water to drink. Pet owners may be tempted to trim their dog's or cat's fur during hot summer months, but this can also be a hazard to a dog if it is a particularly furry breed, such as a chow or sheepdog. She said trimming can help some breeds, but trips to the groomer should be limited and your formerly furry friend should not come out looking like a new army recruit.

Goodman said walking a mile in your pet's shoes (or paws) can be invaluable.

Signs to watch for when the heat's got you down

Heat exhaustion:

- Pale or flushed skin that's cool and moist
- Headache, nausea and dizziness
- Weakness and exhaustion

What to do:

- Get out of the heat.
- Loosen tight clothes.
- Apply cool, wet cloth to skin.
- Remove perspiration-soaked clothing.
- Drink cool water slowly.
- Call for an ambulance if the person loses consciousness.

Heat stroke:

- Red, hot and dry skin
- Dizziness and fainting
- Rapid, shallow breathing
- Rapid, weak pulse

What to do:

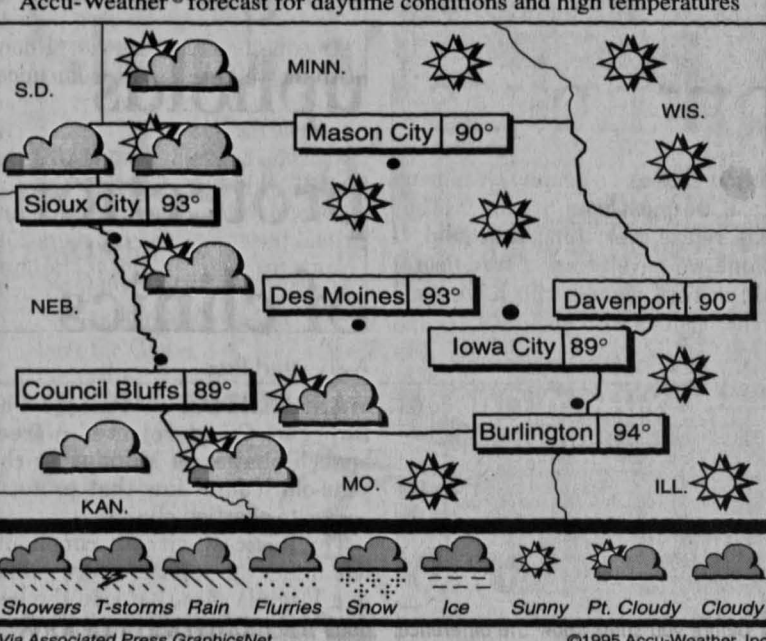

- Follow heat exhaustion tips.
- Do not give fluids if the person is unconscious.
- Call an ambulance if the person refuses water, vomits or loses consciousness.

"Look at yourself and think about how hot you are and then remember your dog or cat is twice as hot," she said.

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Norman Lear may not be an expert on matters of the spirit, but he knows a thing or two about the working-class struggle.

The creator of "All in the Family" and other blue-collar TV fare told 3,000 Unitarians on Sunday that churches aren't doing enough to reach out to the working class.

Donning a Pittsburgh Steelers cap and putting on a working-class accent, Lear transformed himself into "Bill," a struggling factory worker looking for spiritual meaning in his life. Lear, who is said. "They still have the innocence to pass on."

"Don't let him be shamed or coerced out of the conversation," Lear said.

Rahni Spencer, an alumna of City High School, 1900 Morningside Drive, went through three days of conflict management and other training procedures with teenage instructors. She said she predicts the next two weeks will stay on track.

"It looks so magical with all the kids driving and obeying safety laws," Spencer said. "You don't see grown-ups doing the right things like the kids are doing."

The class won't spend all of the 10-day session driving pedal cars on the pretend downtown streets, though — half the time will be spent in the classroom.

"The biggest thing we are doing is making a mural dealing with all the different things we learn," Hillebrand said. "We are also keeping journals — they can write or draw pictures of anything they pick up on during that day."

The program reinforces the safety information further by having the children watch Disney videos, sing songs and role-play.

The first day of class was considered a success by all involved. Olivia Weihe, 5, said she "had lots of fun by being good."

Michael Shaw signed his 5-year-old son, James, up for the program after watching the town being built earlier this year.

"He has safety skills already, but this is a fun way to get it locked in his head," Shaw said.

The village was constructed through private contributions and volunteer efforts of local contractors and members of the Home Builders Association.

Wood Elementary is eager to take advantage of the village and plans to implement it into the curriculum, Principal Paul Davis said.

"It's super to have something like that right here," he said. "We are going to put our kindergartners through it. We have a 20-hour unit on safety."

Safety and prevention definitely needs to be taught in school, Sibyl Liedtke said after dropping her 4-year-old son off at the school.

"I don't think a parent can teach everything," she said. "This is for reinforcement."

With the attention on learning, Coralville Police Officer Bill Searls said he wasn't sure what he would do if a tot decided to ignore a stop sign and plow through an intersection on a peddle car.

"We'll attend to the situation," he said. "No tickets yet."

Although an exact schedule has not been determined, the group searching for a new UI president will begin off-campus interviews for UI presidential candidates within the next several weeks.

Steve Collins, chairman of the UI Presidential Search and Screen Advisory Committee, said

"I do expect to be adding people to this list, so it will be an ongoing process. But it is time to begin to schedule and conduct off-campus interviews."

Steve Collins, chairman of the UI Presidential Search and Screen Advisory Committee

Monday night the group would soon be ready to begin interviewing about 10-12 people off-campus. However, Collins said there was no absolute ceiling on the number of candidates to be interviewed.

"I would be surprised if we decided to interview less than 10 (prospects)," Collins said. "I don't think we have a particular upper limit in terms of how many people we'll talk to."

The 22-member committee was still whittling down the pool of candidates Monday night. Collins said the entire pool numbers 296, but up to this point he has refused to say how many people have been cut from the entire group. Collins stressed the nomination procedure can be an ongoing process and has repeatedly said the best candidates often enter the search near the end.

"I do not expect at the end of the night to have identified all of the people on the shorter list who we will be talking to off-campus," Collins said. "I do expect to be adding people to this list, so it will be an ongoing process. But it is time to begin to schedule and conduct off-campus interviews."

The off-campus interviews will all be closed-session meetings and the date for completion of the interviews is also uncertain, Collins said. He also said the committee is on schedule to have the search process completed by the summer, but the issue of on-campus interviews during the summer session is still to be resolved.

Collins said the off-campus interviews will evaluate candidates on how they meet the list of criteria developed at the beginning of the search and other qualities the candidates might (or might not) possess.

"The questions will cover the range of issues related to the basic criteria," Collins said. "Certainly we'll want people's views on the vision for the University of Iowa. We'll be asking questions about their specific experience. We're very much interested in questioning people about what they've done rather than what they would do. That's because we'd have a greater confidence in what a person says if it's based upon actual experience."

Women compare work environments

Pressuring a woman to quit her job because she married someone in her company and harassing her if she doesn't resign would seem an impossibility in today's post-feminist corporate America. But Junko Sakoh, a reporter for the Nishi-Nippon Shimbun, said the practice is widespread in Japan.

Sakoh and three other Japanese women — in the United States to share their experiences with American women — will join Iowa City non-governmental organization workers today in a forum titled "Models of Empowering Women: Japan and U.S." The forum will be held at 2 p.m. in room 230 of the International Center.

The forum, sponsored by the UI Labor Center, will concentrate on issues of environmental health, workplace rights and political empowerment of women.

Kazuko Sakamoto, a chairwoman in a Hiroshima-based trade union, said she sees a lot of discrimination in Japan.

"Although there is a law for equal opportunity, the reality is quite different," she said. "If a man and a woman have the same educational background, the woman will be given a clerical assignment while the man enters the corporate track."

Sakamoto has already learned a lot from her trip, she said, and hopes it will help her cause in Japan.

"The most important difference is that the Japanese women aren't aware of (women's issues) like American women are," she said.

"The Japanese women should learn to be more forceful."

Sakoh, one of only two women on the 27-member city news desk of the Nishi-Nippon Shimbun, said although her workplace is much more progressive than most in Japan, misperceptions still affect women.

"The physical difference is a big problem for us," she said. "If there is a disaster, the boss will send a man, claiming that covering a disaster is too difficult for a woman to do."

However, she said things are improving.

"Ten years ago, it was almost impossible for a woman to enter the professional workplace," Sakoh said. "Since the equal opportunity law, they have passed three more laws designed to prevent discrimination."

Not all women said they feel discrimination, however. Hisako Kunitomi, a board member of an exchange organization, said she has been treated "like royalty."

"I've never felt like I was treated inferior or discriminated against because of my gender," she said. Kunitomi also said she has a different outlook on dealing with men.

"If we push men too much, they will refuse everything," she said. "I think we have to use a trap door. I think that women can have good relationships with men."

Wilson charts course for campaign

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — California Gov. Pete Wilson on Monday said he's "running flat out" for the Republican presidential nomination and vowed to be competitive in each primary and caucus along the way.

"You will not be safe anywhere," Wilson said. "I don't believe in running for exercise. I believe in running to win."

Wilson cut a ribbon formally opening a Des Moines campaign office that's actually been open about a month and tried to place other Republicans on notice that his silence is over.

Wilson said he'll use an appearance on CNN's "Larry King Live" later this week to underscore his intentions to seek the GOP nomination. He plans appearances in New Hampshire as well.

Wilson has been silent because his voice was weakened by throat surgery.

In interviews, news conferences and appearances Sunday and Monday in a state where precinct caucuses next February launch the presidential season, Wilson sought to get back into the campaign mix.

"My throat surgery has kept me quiet the last two months," Wilson said. "I have been saying to people 'enjoy it while it lasts.'"

He rejected suggestions he's starting out behind others who have been on the campaign trail for months and vowed an intense campaign.

"I've always found that the way to place highest is by running flat out," Wilson said.

Wilson said he's been frustrated with the doctor-imposed absence from the campaign trail even while he said his campaign hasn't suffered because voters haven't been paying much attention to any of the candidates.

"I think what's going to happen is at some point in the next six months people will begin to focus on the actual positions and records and differences," he said. "At that point, I think I've got a better story to tell."

Associated Press

Some Republicans say Wilson's rivals are far ahead in organizing for early campaign tests, but Wilson brought along a small group of Iowa activists backing his campaign.

Though Wilson sought to portray

"I don't believe in running for exercise. I believe in running to win."

California Gov. Pete Wilson

himself as eager to hit the campaign trail, there were clear signs his recovery isn't complete. His voice was raspy at a news conference and in remarks to a civic club in Waterloo on Monday.

At the Waterloo appearance, Wilson aides handed out prepared remarks that were to be read by his wife, Gayle, but Wilson then spoke for about 11 minutes to the group and answered questions for another 25.

During the question and answer period, Wilson was asked if he supported a Clinton administration proposal to place a 100 percent tariff on Japanese luxury automobiles.

"I am a free trader," Wilson said. "I'm fervently opposed to protectionism. But I must tell you, there is a legitimate and justifiable distinction between protectionism — where we seek to exclude people from our markets — and the kind of justifiable retaliation we must take when we do not in fact get reciprocal treatment."

"My rule is very simple. I call it Wilson's golden rule: You let me into your market, I'll let you into mine. If you exclude me from yours, I'll break both your kneecaps."

"We have got to insist upon fairness. We've got to be very tough," Wilson said.

In Des Moines, Wilson had dismissed polls showing him trailing in the race and even some showing him behind Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole in California.

"I think there will be a lot of time with which to get the message out," Wilson said. "Our experience has been that when people hear it, we make converts."

While some have said Wilson will have trouble devoting time to presidential politics because of the pressures of governing the nation's most populous state, Wilson said he will be a familiar presence on the campaign trail.

"I enjoy retail campaigning," he said. "I've done a great deal of it. I am going to be back in Iowa many times."

"About 2 percent of Iowans know who Lamar Alexander is, and they love him," said Dick Redman, Alexander's state campaign chairman.

Redman said Alexander has been out of the limelight largely because he's been quietly raising money but said he's looking to raise his profile relatively quickly.

Alexander has set aside four days to campaign in Iowa during July and 10 days in August, Redman said. The television commercials are timed to coincide with that schedule, he said.

In Iowa, the 60-second spots will initially run in the Des Moines, Cedar Rapids and Sioux City markets. They were made by consultant Mike Murphy, who did the media for Gov. Terry Branstad's last campaign.

Murphy said the typical primary voter will see the ad 10 times over the next eight weeks.

GOP election ad blitz begins with unknown candidate

DES MOINES — Aides to Republican presidential candidate Lamar Alexander on Monday showed off a $300,000 television advertising campaign aimed at Iowa and New Hampshire.

The commercials began airing Monday, with the ads divided roughly equally between the two states. Iowa's precinct caucuses mark the first test of strength in next year's presidential election season, and New Hampshire's opening primary is eight days later.

The spots are the first television blitz of the caucus campaigning. Alexander aides rejected suggestions the ads were prepared because Alexander trails in polls.

But they conceded that other candidates have been getting the lion's share of attention.

WITNESS REVITALIZES PROSECUTION

Shoes may link Simpson to murders

Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — An FBI expert who followed a tip from Tokyo to Italy in search of clues about expensive designer shoes gave jurors his conclusion Monday: O.J. Simpson's size 12 foot matches bloody shoe prints found at the scene of a double murder.

Prosecutors, trying to recover from their flawed efforts to match Simpson's hands to a pair of bloody gloves, shifted the order of their evidence and brought on the shoe testimony instead of their planned domestic violence witnesses.

Their effort to forge the link between Simpson and the shoe prints was extraordinary — illustrated with huge charts showing how Italian designer shoes are made and how liquid picked up on shoe soles is transferred to pavement.

Special Agent William Bodziak testified that photographs of some 30 full and partial shoe prints at the murder scene could have been made only by a size 12 Bruno Magli shoe, which was manufactured in 1991 and 1992 and sold for about $160.

The shoe identified by Bodziak was a soft leather lace-up shoe with a rubber, grid-like sole that was made in two styles. One style, the Lorenzo, was more like a boot and enclosed the ankle; the other, called the Lyon, was cut below the ankle.

As with most circumstantial evidence in the murder case, there is a missing link. Police have never found the killer's shoes and never located such a Bruno Magli shoe in Simpson's wardrobe. Bodziak said the shoes provided for comparison were Reebok athletic shoes worn by Simpson.

Associated Press

FBI agent William Bodziak testifies while holding one of O.J. Simpson's white tennis shoes — comparing it with a sample Bruno Magli shoe in a size comparable to Simpson's — during testimony on shoeprints found at the Bundy Drive murder scene in the double-murder trial Monday.

"For all practical purposes, (the shoes are) identical in the size and shape features," Bodziak said, holding the Italian shoe sole against the shoe seized from Simpson's house.

Asked if a comparison of the Reeboks and the Magli shoes was sufficient to include Simpson as a candidate to have worn the crime-scene shoes, Bodziak replied, "Yes."

The expert witness told jurors about high-powered sleuthing that led him around the world. He said the shoe prints found near the stabbed bodies of Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman were so unusual they could not be found in his FBI database, which includes prints of footwear going back to 1937.

He said he sent pictures of the prints to eight international laboratories around the globe and only one came back with a tip.

"The National Police Agency in Tokyo said they had a shoe of this design ... made in Italy," he recalled. With that information and samples from a Bruno Magli retailer in New Jersey, Bodziak said he began to develop a theory.

The agent said he flew to Italy and visited the manufacturer, Silga Shoe Co., and picked up molds used to make the two Magli models.

Bodziak said the shoe was a European size 46, which translates to an American men's size 12. He cited studies showing that only 9 percent of the American population wears size 12 shoes and that a person with size 12 feet would be 5-foot-11 to 6-foot-5 in height. Simpson is 6-foot-2.

Back from Italy, the agent said, he visited the Brentwood murder scene to orient himself with where the prints were found. Some shoe prints were found around the bodies, and others led up a walkway to the back of Brown Simpson's condominium, he said.

At one point, Simpson was seen breathing heavily, swallowing hard, taking gulps of water and covering his eyes briefly with one hand when he accidentally viewed bloody close-up pictures of his ex-wife's body. The pictures, flashed on a 7-foot-high courtroom screen, showed some of the prints Bodziak identified.

Simpson usually looks away when such images appear. Defense attorney Johnnie Cochran Jr. said the display caught Simpson by surprise.

Deputy District Attorney Hank Goldberg passed to jurors the shoe molds and pictures of the bloody shoe prints, which had transparent overlays showing the match with the Magli patterns.

Trying to head off a defense claim that two or more killers were at the scene, prosecutors had Bodziak methodically describe every complete and partial shoe print. The witness said the prints could have been made by no other shoe than the size 12 Bruno Magli.

Prosecutors also tried to show that the Magli prints were traceable to carpet on the floor of Simpson's Bronco, a heel impression on Brown Simpson's back and a heel print on the front of her black dress. Bodziak said that although some marks were consistent, they were not extensive enough to match with the Magli soles.

Caped Crusader beats dinosaurs at box office

John Horn

LOS ANGELES — "Batman Forever" delivered at the box office in its opening weekend after a marketing campaign that budgeted a dollar to promote the movie for every dollar spent making it.

But the next few weeks may be the true test for the Caped Crusader's third adventure on the big screen, and for the $60 million Warner Bros. plans to spend turning it into the "must-see" movie of the summer.

"The way pictures open these days, they burn through the audience interest quickly," Hal Vogel, an industry analyst at Cowen & Co., said Monday. "It's very deceptive: You don't know how strong strong is until you get to the second weekend."

"Batman Forever" sold about $52.8 million in tickets over the weekend, breaking the 1993 "Jurassic Park" record of $50.2 million for a debut, Warner Bros. said.

"Batman Forever" debuted in a record 4,300 North American movie theaters and was accompanied by Warner Bros.' most diverse marketing effort yet, the studio said.

The studio started running a sneak preview trailer in theaters in December, bought significant television advertising over the last 10 days and joined with McDonald's in a promotion that includes 30 million tray liners and a new triple-patty Super Hero Burger.

The record opening and related media attention also help, but a marketing campaign can only create awareness. The movie must deliver when paying customers take their seats.

"I don't think it's just about (marketing) money in this case," said Mitch Goldman, head of distribution for New Line Cinema. "I thought the film was brilliantly produced."

D. Barry Reardon, Warner Bros.' president of distribution, said next weekend's receipts will show whether "Batman Forever" has positive word of mouth and is on a pace to match the first two Batman movies.

The first two made $251.2 million and $162.8 million, respectively.

The sternest test for the latest Batman flick will come June 30, when "Apollo 13" — starring Tom Hanks — premieres.

During the last several years, marketing costs for movies have surged. Major studios spend about $14 million advertising an average movie, up from $5.2 million a decade ago.

Although the average movie costs close to $30 million to produce, many are made for about $10 million.

The summer season is always competitive.

Disney spent more than $1 million for its June 10 Central Park screening of "Pocahontas." The publicity and awareness the free premiere generated was worth much more.

In its first weekend of limited release, playing in a half-dozen theaters, "Pocahontas" grossed a staggering $448,000 per location.

The numbers tell the story: with that kind of turnout, "Pocahontas" became what Hollywood calls "an event." It opens nationwide on Friday.

Schumacher and production designer Barbara Ling have given Gotham City and its warped denizens a major facelift. They've scrapped all the "Citizen Kane" nods and "Blade Runner" design rip-offs in favor of a Gotham that looks more like a raver's wet dream than an art student's nightmare. Gotham's skyline has become a neo-Egyptian city of kings. Buildings are held up by gargantuan statues of human figures and neon lights and lasers creep over their surfaces, giving the film a weird sense of inside illumination.

Schumacher provides a perfect stage upon which all of the mayhem in "Batman Forever" 's chaotic plot can explode, as he's made the new Gotham a revamped, laser-scribbled wonderland.

Val Kilmer brings depth, subtlety and humor — traits which Michael Keaton possessed but was seldom allowed to show — to Bruce Wayne/Batman for the first time. Nicole Kidman's Chase Meridian, a psychologist who specializes in split personalities, succeeds where Kim Basinger and Michelle Pfeiffer failed.

Meridian's intricate mindgames go far beyond the thin comic book caricatures of women in the first two films and whip both Batman and Bruce Wayne into libidinous frenzies. (Having a woman on the

And "Batman Forever" 's rogues gallery? Jim Carrey's Riddler and Tommy Lee Jones' Two-Face are vile and funny but are never allowed the free reign given to Jack Nicholson and Danny DeVito, who overpowered the stories — and the heroes — of the first two films. Carrey is frantic and Jones is sleazy.

Both are formidable but uncomplicated. Their only mission is to kill the caped crusader because he embodies "Batman Forever" 's major theme of double identity crisis; Bruce Wayne finally is forced to confront that crisis, and it drives his evil twins insane with jealousy.

It's this theme and the skill with which it's handled that allows "Batman Forever" to soar where its predecessors failed so miserably. "Forever" isn't just an excuse to keep a dying man afloat but a resurrected vision of a dead hero.

And judging by the film's power and Val Kilmer's contract option for four more Batman movies, the caped crusader's screen image is now immortal — for better or for worse.

"Batman Forever" is now showing at the Coral IV theatre. Check listing for show times.

Writer's life distorted in flat 'Mrs. Parker'

Alan Rudolph — the director who made even Paris seem dull in the Roaring '20s-set flick "The Moderns" — returns to the decade and once again works his bland revisionist magic with "Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle."

A bio-pic about mediocre writer Dorothy Parker, "Mrs. Parker" delivers scene after scene of Parker and her cronies — including playwrights Edna Ferber, George Kaufman and

Campbell Scott and Jennifer Jason Leigh portray drunken writers in "Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle."

Robert Sherwood, as well as humorist Robert Benchley — who dubbed themselves members of the Algonquin Club Roundtable. The circle of writers drank, cavorted and generally wasted its rich wealth of talent hanging out at a table in the Algonquin Hotel in New York.

Today, Parker is known primarily as a sloshy wit — a romantic anti-hero whose quips ("Brevity is the soul of lingerie") bespoke a fiery intelligence lost in a depressed nightmare. She was an artist who gained fame with an abundance of personality and a modicum of talent.

Parker's life included a number of slants that are the stuff of which great movies are made: how she and her fellow artists wasted their moment in the sun, how their talents were stifled by Hollywood's and New York's corporate demands for banality.

How the heroine could never consummate her love for Benchley. These stories should have been told in "Mrs. Parker" and such a film should have been a good one.

However, while Rudolph can be evocative — even intelligent — when he sticks to conveying the present time period, as he did in "Mortal Thoughts" and "Equinox," his highfalutin' reverence to the faux 1920s of his imagination undermines "Mrs. Parker."

Rudolph waxes nostalgic on this less vitriol and 20 percent more morose.

As played by Jennifer Jason Leigh, Parker seems to have recently beamed down from Mars, where — presumably — inhabitants speak in a lock-jawed mumble. She barely pronounces consonants in such rich dialogue as this bit to her alcoholic husband: "You don't want to be the town drunk, dear. Not in Manhattan."

An audience member would be excused for hearing this sentence as "You own a trunk, dear otter hat."

Jason Leigh's performance does — for all of its surface showiness — add spark and life to the proceedings. For all the personality the performers display, Kaufman and Benchley could have traded lines and few audience members would notice.

"Mrs. Parker" can't seem to decide whether to indulge in every person's fantasies about the writer's life or debunk them. It begs the question of whether we believe that writers get drunk and depressed and still remain as witty as ever, shooting off one-liners as they stumble to the toilet.

What is perhaps the finest scene in "Mrs. Parker" comes near the movie's end. Through no fault of her own, a washed-up Parker has reached old age. She still sits at a table and drinks — now alone. Her witticisms are no longer funny or sharp. All of the earlier romanticizing of writers' hedonistic lives is gone from the movie, and the audience can see the pain and waste in her life.

Had more of "Mrs. Parker" contained the honesty of this one scene, Rudolph could have presented the grim tale he so teased audiences with in the title — how writing and drinking and depression were indeed a vicious circle that destroyed brilliant minds of the past and continue to squelch geniuses today. Instead, audiences are simply left to loathe Parker and her lifeless friends — glad the pundits did themselves in so Rudolph wouldn't have to add a 1920s-esque mobster to do it for the good of future generations.

"Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle" is showing June 21-25 at the Bijou Theatre in the Union. Call 335-3041 for show times.

Kendra Smith
Five Ways of Disappearing

One need not venture very far into Five Ways of Disappearing to get the impression Kendra Smith must be the strange child of Peter Murphy and Danielle Dax. From the first song to the last, Smith exudes the gothic essence of Murphy and the mystic spirit of Dax — invoking a musical pantheon that makes her music seem alternately ancient and post-modern.

Smith takes bright, approachable rhythms and darkens them, creating a sound both murky and distant — but entirely grounded. On "Aurelia" and "Temporarily Lucy," she sounds rather like an angel too disillusioned to fly; on "Drunken Boat" and "Judge Not," she is a soul too weary to remain on the earth. Her inclusion of spacey synths adds to her cosmic stew, while swatches of folk and jazz keep the direction of Five Ways constantly in motion.

Unfortunately, that shifting structure is one of her album's primary shortcomings. Smith's hunger for variety prevents her from touching down in any particular place long enough to get a proper feel for her surroundings, and the result sounds more flighty than well-traveled. Without the otherworldly presence or solid foundation of her mentors, Smith's Five Ways may add to the richness of the music world, but her effort is unlikely to make more than a few ripples on its surface.

Niagara Falls survivor
plummets again with friend

NIAGARA FALLS, Ontario (AP) — Steve Trotter must have thought it was a real barrel of laughs the first time he took a tumble over Niagara Falls and survived.

What else could have compelled him to do it again — this time with a friend?

"Nobody was going to talk him out of this," said Trotter's brother, Dan, wearing a T-shirt bearing the logo "Falls 95, The Real Dive."

"We talked about dying for about two minutes and spent the rest of the time getting ready," he said.

Trotter, 33, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and Lori Martin, 29, of Columbus, Ga., were treated for minor injuries and jailed Sunday after their 180-foot roll down the Canadian Horseshoe Falls in a foam-wrapped fiberglass barrel.

The pair, who previously worked together at a Ft. Lauderdale bar, were charged with trespassing, criminal mischief and violations of the Niagara Parks Act, police said.

After its roughly 15-second plunge, the white barrel got snagged on rocks at the base of the falls. It took police and rescue workers about an hour to pull the pair out.

Their 10-foot, 1,110-pound capsule was wrapped in Kevlar, a bullet-proof material, and a 2-foot layer of plastic foam, friend Gina Hall said. The $25,000 barrel was even equipped with air tanks.

Trotter had arranged for five still and video cameras — including one in a helicopter — to film the event as hundreds of tourists looked on. Trotter went over the falls in a plastic barrel in 1985.

Young Albanian shepherd slain by Serbian soldier

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia (AP) — A Serbian guard shot and killed a 10-year-old ethnic Albanian boy who was herding sheep in Kosovo province, local sources said Monday.

Ethnic Albanian human rights groups said Isa Berisha was killed while trying to retrieve his sheep, which had strayed into an army camp near Serbia's border with Macedonia late Sunday.

The boy had often entered the camp before to cut grass for his sheep, an ethnic Albanian activist said. The activist spoke only on condition of anonymity.

The army has not officially acknowledged the incident, but informed the boy's family that his body was at Pristina's main hospital.

Ethnic Albanians make up to 90 percent of Kosovo's 1.9 million people. The province has been under direct rule from Serbia's capital, Belgrade, since President Slobodan Milosevic abolished the province's autonomy in 1989.

Plane ferrying Angolan soccer club crashes into hillside

LUANDA, Angola (AP) — A private plane carrying an Angolan soccer team and supporters crashed near the country's southern coast, killing 33 of 39 passengers and the entire crew, state radio reported today.

Six members of the Maboque Sports Club survived after the Spanish-made Casa-212 aircraft crashed late Sunday into a hillside near Catumbela, 250 miles south of Luanda, capital of the southern African nation.

Four were reported in critical condition, one had minor injuries and the sixth was believed to be alive but wandering lost in the Angolan bush, state radio reported.

The team was en route to a play-off game when the plane was reported missing by air traffic controllers.

No cause was as yet given for the accident. Although the plane crashed near the government's Catumbela Military Air Base, there was no mention of possible sabotage or rebel attack.

More than 1,000 U.N. peacekeepers are based in Catumbela to supervise the peace process ending a 20-year civil war between Angolan government forces and the UNITA rebels.

Rebels return to Chechnya

Sergei Shargorodsky
Associated Press

BUDYONNOVSK, Russia — Chechen rebels and as many as 150 people acting as human shields rode a slow convoy of buses down winding steppe backroads toward Chechnya on Monday. The gunmen gained passage by freeing most of the 1,500 hostages held for six days in a hospital.

The buses, most of their curtains drawn, were joined by police cars, an ambulance and a refrigerator truck carrying the bodies of Chechens killed in Russian raids on the hospital.

The Chechens had been holed up in the hospital since they invaded Budyonnovsk in southern Russia on Wednesday to demand an end to Russia's war against their separatist republic.

The rebels released most of the hostages after Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin agreed Sunday to declare a cease-fire in Chechnya, resume peace talks and give the gunmen safe passage to their homeland. But there were reports of continued fighting in Chechnya.

After about seven hours on the road, the seven red-and-white buses were sent on a circuitous route that left them far closer to Budyonnovsk than to Chechnya, 90 miles to the south.

They were stopped by troops a few hours into the journey at the border of North Ossetia — which borders Chechnya — and told to take a different, longer route through Daghestan, the ITAR-Tass news agency said. No reasons were immediately given, and the road then wound in the opposite direction from Chechnya. The new route covers about 120 miles, the report said.

After the buses pulled away from the hospital early Monday, hundreds of hostages emerged to waiting crowds of relatives and friends. Loud arguments soon broke out between many former hostages who were sympathetic to the Chechens and angry residents who recalled the Chechens' storming of the city in which more than 100 people were killed.

"The Chechens treated us well," said one former hostage,

TALKS DEMANDED

Sinn Fein cease-fire may falter

Shawn Pogatchnik
Associated Press

LONDON — Discord between Britain and the Irish Republican Army's political allies has mired Northern Ireland peace talks and put the IRA's 10-month-old truce under severe strain.

Britain reaffirmed its determination Monday to disarm the outlawed IRA, its goal in six months of painstaking talks with the IRA-allied Sinn Fein party.

Sinn Fein has responded with increasing stridency: stop asking us to surrender, it said, and start treating us like a normal political party — or watch our cease-fire unravel.

Threats to renew violence against British rule of Northern Ireland came last weekend from the two most prominent Sinn Fein figures, party leader Gerry Adams and chief negotiator Martin McGuinness.

But neither camp suggests negotiations have collapsed. Sinn Fein specifically dismissed the idea that it had broken off talks with Britain. Adams, on a tour of South Africa, and McGuinness, speaking near Dublin at the graveside of an 18th-century rebel leader, said the so-called "exploratory" stage of their talks was over. Britain said these talks are principally to lay the ground rules for the handover or destruction of IRA guns and bomb-making materials.

McGuinness, a former IRA commander, said Monday that Britain knows "there isn't even the remotest possibility" the IRA would disarm now.

He told the British Broadcasting Corp. that demands for IRA disarmament provided "a lame excuse to prevent Sinn Fein involvement in all-party talks."

The longer Britain delays joining Sinn Fein in broader talks with other parties, he said, the more likely that bombings and shootings will resume.

The competing claims — whether IRA arms "decommissioning" must precede multi-party talks or comes as a consequence of those talks — will be hard to resolve without one side losing face.

Buses carrying Chechen rebels, volunteer hostages leave a hospital Monday in the southern Russian city of Budyonnovsk, where the Chechens were holding hundreds of hostages. Most hostages were released under an agreement between the rebels and the Russian government.

33-year-old pediatrician Natalya Serebryakova, who wore a torn and dirty white doctor's smock.

"If the Chechens promised something, they did it. When (the Russians) started to fire shells ... into a maternity ward, the Chechens jumped on the bed and covered infants with their own bodies," she said.

The government launched two attacks Saturday on the hospital but failed to free the hostages, and those inside said dozens were killed or wounded. The rebels freed more than 400 hostages — mostly women and children — over the weekend as talks continued with the government.

About 50 bodies of civilians killed during the six-day drama were left behind in the hospital, local officials said.

Authorities said troops found and defused three mines in the hospital, ITAR-Tass said.

During the negotiations, Chechen commander Shamil Basayev had demanded "volunteers" to assure safe passage from the hospital.

"All hostages must be left in the hospital," Chernomyrdin told Basayev by telephone at one point. "The volunteers — that is another story."

According to Alexander Korobeinikov of the regional government, there were at least 73 Chechen rebels on the buses and 114 volunteers, including local officials, parliament members, journalists and other civilians. News reports put the number of volunteers at about 150.

"The term 'hostage' ceases to exist the moment you board the bus," said Vladimir Vorozhtsov, an Interior Ministry spokesman. "From then on, you are voluntarily accompanying the terrorists."

Russian soldiers lined the route out of Budyonnovsk. Several cars and vans followed the convoy, presumably carrying relatives of the volunteers, authorities said.

In past hostage incidents, Russian authorities have capitulated to terrorists' demands only to attack later — often with disastrous results.

In response to the Chechens' demands, the Russian military declared a cease-fire Sunday night and high-level peace talks began early Monday in the Chechen capital, Grozny.

But Russian soldiers repulsed two rebel attacks late Sunday and early Monday, and dozens of rebels and four Russians were killed in the skirmishes, ITAR-Tass reported.

Peace talks ended inconclusively Monday and more talks were scheduled for Tuesday.

Clinton officials contemplate nuclear weapons experiments

Associated Press

STANFORD, Calif. — The Clinton administration is considering resumption of nuclear weapons tests, Defense Secretary William Perry said.

The United States and other nuclear powers will soon discuss whether a moratorium should remain in place or testing should resume, Perry said Sunday.

"The administration has certainly not taken a position. They are still in the course of debating it," he said. "The president has said he considers it of supreme national importance for the United States to retain the integrity and reliability of the (nuclear) stockpile."

Discussion with other nations with nuclear weapons will focus on whether testing is necessary and if so, what kind of tests should be conducted, Perry said. Among alternatives to full-scale weapons testing are experiments with lower levels of explosive power.

"The Defense Department has not taken a final position on which of those it is going to support. (It) will probably do that in the next week or two," Perry said.

"Our appeal raises the free-speech issue, but also argues that Congress lacked the authority to enact such legislation because no interstate commerce was involved," said Marion Harrison, an American Life League lawyer. "We think that's a hot-ticket issue with the Supreme Court right now." The high court in April struck down a federal law that made it a crime to have a gun within 1,000 feet of a public school. The court said Congress' power to regulate interstate commerce didn't stretch that far. Abortion rights advocates welcomed Monday's action. "FACE has been a highly effective tool against abortion clinic violence," said Deborah Ellis of the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund.

From 1977 through the spring of 1993, more than 1,000 acts of violence against abortion providers were reported. They included at least 36 bombings, 81 arsons, 131 death threats, 84 assaults, two kidnappings, 327 clinic invasions, 71 chemical attacks and one murder. Last summer, abortion opponent Paul Hill fatally shot a doctor who performed abortions and the security escort who had accompanied him to an abortion clinic. Hill later was sentenced to death for the murders.

"When you're a candidate for something you'd like to do and you don't get picked, that's disheartening," he said. "On the other hand, you have to look at it as there being a number of good institutions that are interested in you."

Nathan indicated that it's a natural progression for a provost to look for a presidential position. The new UI president, whoever it will be, will probably want his or her own circle of administrators, he said.

"The new president should be able to appoint his own cabinet — the people with whom he or she will work," Nathan said.

Nathan's is — by far — the most commonly dropped name when the topic of the UI's interim president is discussed, but the cross-country hunt for Nathan by other schools doesn't seem to have members of the Iowa state Board of Regents worried. The board is scheduled to meet by telephone June 28 and the naming of the interim president is expected to occur then.

Regent Tom Dorr said he was unaware of any other searches in which Nathan is involved other than the one recently concluded in Washington. Dorr said Nathan is still a viable candidate for the interim presidency of the UI.

"I'm sure we would take it into consideration if he were involved in any other searches now," Dorr said. "But to the best of my knowledge he isn't, and I don't think it will affect his position when we choose the interim president."

Dorr said the regents are aware of the numerous schools pursuing Nathan.

"I think it's a credit to Dr. Nathan's reputation that other institutions are interested in him," Dorr said.

Regent Tom Collins said the departure of Rawlings may have prompted Nathan to actively search for another position.

"When a president leaves, it's customary for the provost to leave, too," Collins said. "It all sort of fits together."

Because of the temporary nature of the interim presidency, Collins said he isn't worried about Nathan's various job searches.

"It doesn't concern me," Collins said. "We're looking for a temporary president and if he was looking for another job, I'd certainly hope we'd have the permanent replacement in there before he left. It's not at all conflicting with a short-term position. He should be free to look for another job if he wants."

Nathan is a psychologist by training and is considered an expert in the study of alcoholism. He said he would consider returning to a faculty position and has discussed with other faculty members what courses he might teach. Nathan said he has been weighing his career options in the past months but still feels a connection to the UI.

"I feel a lot of loyalty to the university," he said. "It's a good place and it's treated me well."

"I turned it into a cause to get kids to recycle," she said. "If they're recycling something they use, it means more than recycling a milk jug."

Foty's Crayon Recycle Program caught the eye of the earth-conscious proprietors of Alternatives Conserve, Preserve, et al., 323 E. Market St., who placed a cardboard box and tin can inside their door for collection of broken crayons.

"We went directly through the company because we liked their recycling program," said Janelle Rettig, co-owner of Alternatives, which has been selling the recycled crayons since January.

Rettig and her business partner, Robin Butler, have been busy spreading the word about the recycling project throughout Iowa City's elementary school and day care system.

"We mailed press releases to every elementary school and every day care school," Rettig said. "We mailed to 45 schools."

Some of the crayons delivered to the store have been in such good shape Rettig and Butler have saved them to give to schools and day cares that bring donations to the store.

"This man brought in a bag of crayons that were perfect, so when the day care came in we just switched (the broken crayons for the good ones)," Rettig said. "We've got a bag back there that are good, but we're waiting for the next group to come in that we think should have them."

The women, who opened their store in December, said their experience with starting their own business was one reason they were eager to help Foty's venture.

The coolness factor is what drove Iowa City resident Al Guzman to have his friend shave his head three weeks ago.

"Summer was coming and I didn't want to deal with sweaty hair," Guzman said.

Despite the appearance that shaved heads are a new fashion, those who have done it deny that they are part of a new trend.

"I don't think that it's popular; I think that it's self-expression," said Iowa City resident Matt Show, who has his head shaved.

Trendy or not, many Iowa Cityans are sporting Telly Savalas hairdos. Many employees at Iowa City salons said they shave heads every day.

People can successfully shave their heads at home, but even with shaved hair there is a certain amount of shaping that should be done, said Krista Goldsberry, co-owner of Transitions. A cosmetologist can also treat any kind of scalp condition the client may have, she said.

Once a person has a shaved head, it must be trimmed every three to four weeks for maintenance, said Tammy Bredman, manager at Cost Cutters, 105 E. College St.

Although a shaved head reveals the distinct shape of a person's scalp, most cosmetologists said people's reactions when they first see their bald heads are positive.

"I was surprised that my head had an OK shape," said UI sophomore Rebecca Harris.

It's mostly men who have shaved heads, but there are some women who choose to shave their tresses.

"I've gotten called 'sir' a couple of times," Harris said. "I've also had people call me Sinead (O'Connor), but most comments are positive."

Those who have shaved heads should remember to put sunscreen on their bare, tender noggins before they go out in the sun.

Boston Celtics' M.L. Carr smiles during a news conference where he was named coach of the NBA team in Waltham, Mass., Monday.

any point during my tenure, we won't hesitate to move."

He added that he offered to give Gaston a letter of resignation on which Gaston could fill in the date when he no longer wants Carr.

"I think I have all the tools in the world to make this thing happen," Carr said, but "there's no way in the world you can know."

Carr said the Celtics contacted a number of potential candidates, including colleges coaches Mike Jarvis of George Washington, Roy Williams of Kansas, Rick Pitino of Kentucky and John Calipari of Massachusetts. He also talked with former Detroit Pistons coach Don Chaney and San Antonio Spurs assistant Dave Cowens, who coached the Celtics for part of the 1978-79 season.

Grizzlies hire Winters

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — Brian Winters, an assistant with the Atlanta Hawks and once one of the NBA's top shooters, was hired Monday as the first coach of the expansion Vancouver Grizzlies.

Winters

Winters, 43, signed a three-year contract. He was an assistant for nine years in Cleveland and Atlanta under Lenny Wilkens, the winningest coach in NBA history.

"I'm looking forward to the challenge of shaping an NBA franchise in a brand-new market," Winters said.

"I take a lot of pride in what I do, and hopefully that will be transcended to the players."

Vancouver general manager Stu Jackson said he wanted to hire a coach before Saturday's expansion draft for the Grizzlies and Toronto Raptors, who will begin play next season.

"I feel strongly he's somebody I can work with," Jackson said of Winters. "That has to be the main ingredient in the relationship within an organization."

Grizzlies chairman Arthur Griffiths presented Winters with a team jacket, hat and basketball in welcoming his coach to Vancouver.

"The hiring of Stu Jackson and now Brian are the footprints for success," Griffiths said. "As we grow, people will reflect on these decisions."

Detroit faces must-win at home

Mike Nadel
Associated Press

DETROIT — Forget the neutral-zone trap. The New Jersey Devils' patient, offense-from-defense system is more of a mental trap.

It messes with the minds of opposing players, gets them to second-guess their own roles.

It happened to Boston, it happened to Pittsburgh, it happened to Philadelphia. And it happened to the Detroit Red Wings in Game 1 of the Stanley Cup finals.

The Red Wings, who had a season-low 17 shots in losing 2-1, are determined not to let it happen again when the best-of-7 series resumes Tuesday night.

"I'm not trying to take anything away from them, but we did a terrible job," Detroit's Paul Coffey said.

"We've got to get back to playing the way we know we can, the way we should. Because if we play the way we did in that last game, we're going to lose in four straight."

Four straight losses? The mighty Red Wings?

"Detroit's a good team," New Jersey's Claude Lemieux said. "We've beaten a lot of good teams in the playoffs."

How they've done it has stirred considerable debate.

Detroit coach Scotty Bowman accused New Jersey's players of snatching sticks from his players' hands.

"I don't think so," Devils defenseman Bruce Driver said. "I can name more than a few teams that hold sticks a lot more than ours does."

"Despite what Bruce Driver says — and I'll give him the tape when the series is over — they do it very discreetly," Bowman said. "Instead of crying about it, we have to com-

'Super Mario' says he'll return to Penguins in '96

Alan Robinson
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Mario Lemieux has told friends and family he's returning to the Pittsburgh Penguins. He'll tell the world on Tuesday.

Lemieux's return to the sport he dominated will be announced in a news conference that may detail how many games he plans to play next season.

Lemieux, who will be 30 in October, sat out the 1994-95 season to rest up following five years of persistent back problems, a bout with Hodgkin's disease and anemia. He laced up his skates only once all season, for a charity game in March.

Lemieux has told Penguins chairman Howard Baldwin he will play again, but the terms of his return have not been entirely worked out. It is expected that:

—Lemieux will skip some long road trips that would require him to sit for hours on planes, a situation that has previously aggravated his back problems.

—He may skip either the first or second nights of back-to-back games.

—As in the past, the condition of his back will most likely determine his status on a game-to-game basis. Lemieux said his back now feels better than it has in years, but he is uncertain how returning to hockey after a year off will affect it.

Lemieux hasn't played a full NHL season in five years, averaging barely a half a season over his last four seasons before sitting out the 1994-95 season. However, he won the NHL scoring title in 1992-93 despite missing a quarter of the season to combat Hodgkin's disease, a cancer of the lymph nodes.

He missed nearly three-quarters of the 1993-94 season, the last before his layoff, due to back problems and fatigue. One of the best postseason players in NHL history — he is a two-time Stanley Cup MVP — he was visibly off his game last year as the Penguins were eliminated in the first round by the Washington Capitals.

"When Mario is healthy, there's nobody better," teammate Kevin Stevens said. "There also aren't too many better than him when he's hurt. ... He was the best player in the game before and he can be the best again."

bat it. I told our team, 'If a player has his hand on your stick ... let the referee know it.'"

Devils coach Jacques Lemaire has complained to the NHL that opponents have done the same to his players throughout the playoffs.

"Now I just laugh at it," he said. "Because if they would call all the holding and grabbing in this series, we'd be playing 3-on-3 the whole time."

Stick-stealing is only one of the complaints that critics have about New Jersey's system.

The Devils like to bottle up opponents between the blue lines, wait for turnovers and strike quickly when given the opportunity — tactics many consider unimaginative and dull.

"Some people call it boring. We call it smart," Driver said. "All I know is nobody complained until the playoffs."

Besides, he said, "I read a lot about the neutral-zone trap in the papers, but I didn't see a lot of it in the game. That was probably the least amount of trapping we've done. But we did a good job in our zone. We kept them outside, along the boards, where they aren't as dangerous. And we blocked a lot of shots."

Lemaire said most of his players like the system.

"Everyone plays," he said. "They're not there to just go one or two shifts. Everyone is part of the team. Not many teams can say that."

Detroit can't. Bowman often double-shifts his best players, especially in tight games. He might be forced to use more players Tuesday if Keith Primeau, the team's top postseason center, can't play because of injuries to his back and side.

Primeau or no Primeau, Bowman said the Red Wings must "have a lot more determination and desire to fight through" New Jersey's trap.

Blackhawks coach Darryl Sutter has decided to spend more time with his family.

Sutter: Sayonara Chicago

Rick Gano
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Darryl Sutter's passion for hockey, as a player as an assistant and as a coach, ruled his life for many years.

But when it came time to choose between his sport and his family, he knew what he had to do.

"I didn't agonize over it. It was reality, it was the right thing. I had put myself ahead of my family for 17 years," Sutter said Monday after a news conference announcing he was quitting as coach of the Chicago Blackhawks.

"My responsibility is as a father, first and foremost."

"Sometimes you're not dealt the hand you want. It's a lot easier to make the decision (now), than in 15 or 20 years say I didn't make the right decision," Sutter said.

He will remain a special assistant to Blackhawks general manager Bob Pulford.

"I'll never work for another club," said Sutter, who turned down an offered contract extension. He's been with the Blackhawks since they drafted him in the 11th round in 1978.

NO. 1 PICK?

Stackhouse

Dennis Georgatos

Associated Press

ALAMEDA, Calif. — Jerry Stackhouse Monday for being the top pick in the NBA draft.

The Warriors own the top pick in the draft, and the 6-foot-6 guard worked out for team officials in the School gymnasium, where Jason Richardson career.

"I came in and I just tried to house, who led the Tar Heels in rebounds (8.2) and steals (1.5). "It's a situation when you have the pressure of ownership and everybody here watching."

"For the most part I came out, they asked and hopefully it will pay."

Club owner Christopher Cohens general manager Dave Twardzik said a man were on hand, along with a who stumbled onto the show.

The Warriors brass then took Stackhouse before he flew back to North Carolina.

"I liked him a lot," Adelman said with the way he worked out, the way Maryland's Joe Smith visited week. The team also has scheduled with North Carolina's Rasheed Wallace with Alabama's Antonio McDyess.

Stackhouse, who also has worked with Washington, said Adelman did about the Warriors' draft plans.

"He's being real diplomatic about the way everyone has been," Stackhouse said.

will join the Yankees "as soon as he becomes eligible under baseball rules." He is eligible to play Sunday.

"I personally want to thank Mr. Steinbrenner for the faith he has shown in me," Strawberry said in a statement issued by the club. "The fans in New York are the best in baseball and I will do everything I can to justify Mr. Steinbrenner's confidence in me and the trust of the fans."

In November 1990, when he agreed to a $20.25 million, five-year contract with the Los Angeles Dodgers, Strawberry's view of the Big Apple was different.

"I think a lot of the fun was taken away because of the pressure and the situation in New York," Strawberry said then.

Strawberry has 14 home runs and 54 RBIs in his past three seasons in the majors — a total of 104 games. And he's been bothered by nagging injuries and a bad back.

NO. 1 PICK?

Stackhouse impresses Warriors

Dennis Georgatos
Associated Press

ALAMEDA, Calif. — Jerry Stackhouse made his pitch Monday for being the top pick in the NBA draft. And the Golden State Warriors liked what they saw.

The Warriors own the top pick in the June 28 draft, and the 6-foot-6 guard from North Carolina worked out for team officials in the St. Joseph's High School gymnasium, where Jason Kidd spent his prep career.

"I came in and I just tried to relax," said Stackhouse, who led the Tar Heels in points (19.2), rebounds (8.2) and steals (1.5). "It's really a tough situation when you have the pressure of the coaches and owners and everybody here watching you."

"For the most part I came out today and did what they asked and hopefully it will pay off."

Club owner Christopher Cohan and newly hired general manager Dave Twardzik and coach Rick Adelman were on hand, along with a group of youngsters who stumbled onto the show.

The Warriors brass then took Stackhouse to dinner before he flew back to North Carolina late Monday.

"I liked him a lot," Adelman said. "I was impressed with the way he worked out, the way he did things."

Maryland's Joe Smith visited the Warriors last week. The team also has scheduled workouts Tuesday with North Carolina's Rasheed Wallace and Thursday with Alabama's Antonio McDyeess.

Stackhouse, who also has worked for Philadelphia and Washington, said Adelman didn't drop any hints about the Warriors' draft plans.

"He's being real diplomatic about it but that's the way everyone has been," Stackhouse said.

will join the Yankees "as soon as he becomes eligible under baseball rules." He is eligible to play Sunday.

"I personally want to thank Mr. Steinbrenner for the faith he has shown in me," Strawberry said in a statement issued by the club. "The fans in New York are the best in baseball and I will do everything I can to justify Mr. Steinbrenner's confidence in me and the trust of the fans."

In November 1990, when he agreed to a $20.25 million, five-year contract with the Los Angeles Dodgers, Strawberry's view of the Big Apple was different.

"I think a lot of the fun was taken away because of the pressure and the situation in New York," Strawberry said then.

Strawberry has 14 home runs and 54 RBIs his past three seasons in the majors — a total of 104 games. And he's been bothered by nagging injuries and a bad back.

"It's kind of an unknown where

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

Reds fall victim to 10-run rule

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — John Smoltz pitched a five-hitter and Fred McGriff homered twice Monday night to lead the Atlanta Braves to their sixth straight win, 10-0 over the Cincinnati Reds.

Smoltz (6-3) dominated in his first victory over the Reds in more than two years. He retired the first 12 batters — only one got the ball out of the infield — before Reggie Sanders' broken-bat single up the middle in the fifth.

Smoltz allowed three more singles and a ninth-inning double, struck out seven and didn't walk anyone in his second complete game and first shutout of the season.

Pirates 8, Giants 2

PITTSBURGH — Steve Pegues hit his first two major league homers after reliever Steve Mintz replaced injured San Francisco starter Trevor Wilson, leading the Pittsburgh Pirates past the Giants 8-2 Monday night.

Denny Neagle (7-3) was again the cure for a Pirates' losing streak, shaking off a two-run first inning to pitch seven scoreless innings before being lifted. Six of his seven wins have come following Pirates' losses.

Pegues, homerless in 98 previous at-bats, started a pair of three-run innings with solo homers in the fourth and fifth innings. The fifth-inning shot, estimated at 434 feet, traveled into Three Rivers Stadium's rarely reached third level.

Phillies 6, Mets 3

NEW YORK — Andy Van Slyke hit a two-run homer in his debut for the Phillies and Paul Quantrill avenged his first loss of the season as Philadelphia beat the New York Mets 6-3 Monday night.

Van Slyke, acquired Sunday from the Baltimore Orioles, singled in his first at-bat and homered off the score-keeper in right-center in the third inning.

The five-time Gold Glove winner also made a nice shoestring catch in center field.

Charlie Hayes broke a 2-2 tie in the sixth with an RBI single to left against Dave Mlicki (4-3) that extended his hitting streak to nine games. One batter later, Jeff Kent made a throwing error on a potential double play, allowing Jim Eisenreich to score from second.

Astros 6, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Darryl Kile scattered seven hits over six innings and Orlando Miller hit a tiebreaking two-run single in the sixth as the Houston Astros rallied past the Montreal Expos 6-3 Monday night.

Kile (3-5) struck out six, walked two and hit three batters, raising his league-leading total to 10. Todd Jones pitched three-hit relief over three innings for his third save.

With the score tied 3-3, Jeff Fassero (7-4) walked Tony Eusebio and Luis Gonzalez with one out in the sixth. The runners advanced on a groundout and both scored on Miller's single.

Brian Hunter also drove in a pair of runs with a triple in the fifth and scored the tying run on Craig Biggio's sacrifice fly as Houston handed Montreal a third straight loss.

Dodgers 5, Cardinals 2

ST. LOUIS — Hideo Nomo won his fourth straight start and Delino DeShields had three hits and an RBI as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the St. Louis Cardinals 5-2 Monday night.

Nomo (4-1) wasn't as overpowering as in his previous start, when he struck out 16 in eight innings in a victory over Pittsburgh June 14, but he gave up just three hits and allowed

Associated Press

Montreal's Wil Cordero falls to the ground after being hit in the head by a pitch from Houston's Darryl Kile in first inning action in Montreal Monday.

only one runner to reach second base before faltering in the ninth. Chris Sabo's two-run double in the ninth chased Nomo, and Todd Worrell finished up for his 10th save.

Nomo struck out eight and walked three, lowering his ERA to 2.62.

DeShields led off the game with a double and scored, singled in the third and had a run-scoring single in the fifth as he extended his hitting streak to eight games. Raul Mondesi and Roberto Kelly each had two hits and an RBI.

Orioles 5, Yankees 4

BALTIMORE — Cal Ripken broke out of a 2-for-24 slump with four hits and two RBIs as the Baltimore Orioles snapped a seven-game losing streak Monday night with a 5-4 victory over the New York Yankees.

Ripken had two doubles, a single and a triple and barely missed becoming the first Orioles player to hit for the cycle twice in his career. Ripken, who did it on May 6, 1984, and Brooks Robinson are the lone Baltimore players to hit for the cycle.

Needing a homer in the seventh inning, Ripken lashed a line drive to right-center that hit the wall on one hop for a double.

Right-hander Scott Klinglebeck (2-1) allowed three runs on five hits in six innings for the victory. Doug Jones pitched the ninth for his eighth save.

Mike Stanley and Randy Velarde homered for the Yankees, who won four of their previous six. Yankees right-hander Melido Perez (4-4), was the loser, allowing five runs on 10 hits in eight innings, with a season-high nine strikeouts.

Rangers 6, Tigers 4

DETROIT — Kevin Gross ended a five-start winless streak with his first victory since May 17, and Texas ended Detroit's four-game winning streak.

Gross (2-6) benefited from the Rangers' three-run rally in the sixth inning and survived home runs by Chad Curtis, Cecil Fielder and Bobby Higginson, which put the Tigers up 4-2 after four innings.

Gross went 5 1/3 innings, giving up four runs on five hits, and left after the Rangers used three straight two-out singles to take a 5-4 lead in the sixth.

Tigers starter Pat Ahearn (0-2) left the game with a 4-3 lead in the sixth after giving up an RBI single to Benji Gil. Joe Boever then gave up run-scoring singles to Otis Nixon and Mark McLemore to put Texas ahead 5-4.

Indians 4, Red Sox 3

CLEVELAND — Manny Ramirez led off the 10th inning with a home run, Cleveland's third of the game, giving the Indians a victory over the Boston.

It marked the 12th time this season the Indians won a game in their last at-bat. Winners of 18 of 22 games, they improved baseball's best record to 35-13, including 20-6 at Jacobs Field.

Albert Belle and Jim Thome also homered for Cleveland, which is 5-0 in extra innings.

Ramirez hit a 3-2 pitch from Ken Ryan into the stands in right-center for his 14th homer. Ryan (0-3) struck out five in the previous two innings.

Boston, which has lost six of eight games and is 1-4 against Cleveland this year, put runners at first and third with no outs in the top of the 10th.

But two strikeouts and a fly ball ended the threat.

White Sox 8, Mariners 6

CHICAGO — Frank Thomas' two-run homer in the eighth inning keyed a three-run eighth inning that lifted Chicago over Seattle, snapping a four-game losing streak.

With the game tied 5-5, Tim Lincecum opened the eighth with a walk off loser Dave Fleming (1-5). Bill Risley relieved Fleming, and Thomas hit a 1-0 pitch over the center field fence for his 14th home run.

Mike Devereaux hit his fourth home run later in the inning to pad the lead to 8-5.

Kirk McCaskill (3-2) pitched one inning for the victory, and Roberto Hernandez got the last three outs for his 11th save. The Mariners scored on a bases-loaded groundout by Edgar Martinez before Hernandez retired Rich Amaral on a bases-loaded pop-up to end the game.

Trailing 5-0, the Mariners rallied to tie the game with five runs in the fifth off starter Alex Fernandez.

Alex Diaz got the first run in with a fielder's choice grounder, then stole second and continued to third on catcher Mike LaValliere's throwing error.

After Joey Cora's RBI single and a single by Edgar Martinez, Tino Martinez hit his 11th homer, tying the game.

The White Sox scored in the first on Robin Ventura's run-scoring double and made it 3-0 in the second on Ozzie Guillen's RBI triple and Lance Johnson's punt single.

The White Sox added two more runs in the fourth inning on RBI singles by Ventura and John Kruk, who was activated off the disabled list earlier Monday.

The buzz: Hornets like B.J.

The Chicago Tribune reported Sunday that former Hawkeye B.J. Armstrong is being shopped around by his prospective future owner, the Toronto Raptors.

Toronto, which has the first pick in Saturday's expansion draft is talking about selecting Armstrong, then trading him to the Charlotte Hornets for the Hornets' No. 1 pick (No. 22 overall) and forward Darrin Hancock.

The Tribune also explained that since Charlotte traded its No. 1 pick in last season's draft, it would not be allowed to trade this year's No. 1 pick.

Therefore, the Hornets would have to make a selection at the No. 22 spot, then trade that selection, along with Hancock, to Toronto.

Iowa's Gooden, Bowen help travelling teams

Iowa's Tiffany Gooden hit the boards but couldn't keep a Big Ten women's all-star basketball team from losing for the second time in three games in Japan.

Gooden grabbed a team-high eight rebounds and scored six points on 3-for-5 shooting in a 100-65 loss to the Japanese National Team.

The Big Ten team never recovered after shooting just 27 percent (12-for-44) in falling behind 58-30 at halftime.

Gooden, the 1994-95 Big Ten Freshman of the Year, is expected to play power forward for the Hawkeyes next season.

Indiana's Lisa Furlin led the Big Ten with 15 points.

Iowa's Ryan Bowen had six rebounds and two points as a men's all-star team from the Big Ten went to 3-0 with a 94-86 victory over the Japan College All-Stars.

Michigan's Willie Mitchell led the Big Ten players with 19 points.

Agassi named top men's seed at Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Two-time defending Wimbledon champion Pete Sampras will have to settle for the No. 2 seed behind Andre Agassi at this year's championships.

The Wimbledon championships committee decided Monday to stick with the world rankings and made Agassi, the 1992 champion, the top men's seed when play begins at the All England Club next week.

In the women's draw, five-time champion Steffi Graf, who lost in the first round last year, is again top-seeded among the women.

Sampras is coming off his worst clay-court season since his emergence as a top player, but again proved his dominance on grass by winning the singles title Sunday in the Queen's Club warmup tournament.

Rutgers denies reported Stringer agreement

David Schwartz
The Daily Iowan

A rumor that Iowa women's basketball coach C. Vivian Stringer was leaving for Rutgers University came closer to reality Monday.

At least that's what the Home News, a newspaper in East Brunswick, N.J., wanted people to believe.

A report in the Home News stating a general agreement had been reached between Rutgers and Stringer is incorrect, Rutgers athletic director Fred Gruninger said Monday.

body." While Gruninger would not rule out the possibility of Stringer becoming the new Rutgers' coach, he said a final decision has not yet been reached.

"We've done the screening process," he said. "We've interviewed the people and now we'll take a step back."

"We'll review some of the conversations and interviews we had. They're all good and they're all quality people."

Stringer will not comment on the Rutgers position at this time, the Iowa Women's Sports Information Department said.

Celtics hire Carr; Heat pursues Riley

Associated Press

WALTHAM, Mass. — M.L. Carr has never coached before. His boss doesn't know if he can. Yet the Boston Celtics director of basketball operations took the coaching job Monday after a long search.

The enthusiastic Carr is devoted to changing the somber mood surrounding the once proud franchise. He is committed to installing a running game and will rely on his assistants to help him do it.

"It's an open question as to whether or not M.L. can coach," Celtics chairman of the board Paul Gaston said at a news conference. "I think we're all going to have fun finding out."

Carr, 44, had one year added to the three seasons remaining on his contract and will handle both jobs.

Chris Ford, fired May 17 after five years as coach, had received a contract extension from Carr last summer. But Boston was the only playoff team this year with a losing record and was eliminated in the first round. Shortly afterward, Ford was dumped.

Carr showed no concern about the possibility his tenure might end before his contract expires.

Asked if his appointment is just a short-term move until another candidate he and Gaston would like becomes available, Carr said, "If there is someone that we deem better suited at

NEW YORK — After a trip to the Betty Ford Center, a guilty plea for tax evasion that led to a $350,000 fine, two positive cocaine tests and a 60-day baseball suspension, Darryl Strawberry is returning to New York.

Strawberry, who left the New York Mets after the 1990 season to sign with the Los Angeles Dodgers, agreed Monday to a one-year contract with the New York Yankees that will guarantee him at least $850,000.

He enters the gymnasium with the posture and grace of an ancient Greek statue, welcoming old friends and shaking hands.

Several moments later, provoked only by the tip of a basketball, James Winters becomes a tempest-like fury, swirling around the court with the intensity of an army fighting for its very survival.

"Nope, you can't do that," Nike player-coach Randy Larson said after Winters' opponent lost a step on him in the paint Sunday in the Prime Time League. "Once he's got his shoulder down you can't stop him."

Winters buries his head, drives the lane and attacks the rim with the ferocity of a wrecking ball ready to take its first swipe at an unsuspecting run-down warehouse.

Big Ten Conference coaches and commentators once called Winters, an ex-Hawkeye who finished his tenure after the 1993-94 season, the biggest small man in the Big Ten.

During his senior season, Winters, just 6-foot-5, had to play the five-spot for an Iowa team without a true center.

He tangled in the paint with Wisconsin's 7-foot Rashard Griffith, Michigan's 6-foot-10 Juwan Howard and Indiana's 6-foot-11 Alan Henderson.

Still, Winters averaged 18 points and 6.6 rebounds in just 27 minutes per game.

"Damn, he's a monster on the boards," Larson said as Winters hauled down one of his 12 rebounds Sunday.

Relentless off the glass, smothering on defense, irrefutable driving the lane; that is James Winters.

Winters' 1994 farewell tour was cut short after he suffered a severe ankle sprain during an 80-74 home loss against Northwestern, dashing his chances at a tryout with an NBA club.

He played this past season in France, where he averaged 20 points and seven rebounds.

Winters said the experience at Iowa helped in the evolution of his game.

In France, Winters is asked to play everything from off-guard to power forward, so playing center in the Big Ten has paid its dividends.

"I'm a versatile player," Winters said. "I can choose to come outside or put the ball on the floor and go to the hole and defend some of the bigger guys. They put me wherever they need me."

Winters has remained optimistic about his chance at a professional career, but realistic that it's his education that will benefit him in the long run.

"Right now I'm three hours away from my degree (in communications studies) and that's why I'm back here this summer," Winters said, "so I can finish up because I do know it's important to get my

all this week degree.

"I can't play basketball forever." Having played professionally in Europe, it's easy for Winters to notice differences between his past and the PTL. Most notably, the absence of defense.

"This league is a little easier to score in," Winters said. "In my league the play's a little better."

"But then again this is summer league. Over there guys play with each other every day, and here they hardly ever get to play with each other."

Does that mean that Prime Time is a walk in the park for the former Iowa MVP?

"Nah. Once the gym opens up a lot of egos walk in here and you don't want to look bad, so I'm pretty sure they play hard," Winters said.

Winters plans to return to France at the beginning of next season, still pondering the NBA camps.

"As of now I don't know (about the NBA). I got injured coming out of last season and I'm not 100 percent right now," he said. "It's coming along and I'm playing pretty good right now, but it still feels a little tender."

"So that kind of made for bad timing for me. You don't know what happens until the end of the summer," Winters said.

But until then, Winters will keep plugging away on the hardwood of City High.

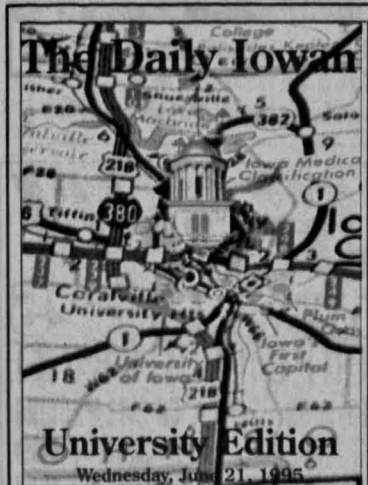

And as sure as he'll bury a 5-foot turnaround in the lane, Winters will be the first to sign an autograph or shake hands with awe-struck children, naive to the specimen of poise and talent perched right in front of their noses.

Overabundance of sex can blur vision

CHICAGO (AP) — If love doesn't blind you, sex might.

Vigorous sex can cause tiny blood vessels to break or delicate tissues at the back of the eyeball to tear, suddenly causing blurry vision, researchers say.

The researchers saw half a dozen patients with the problem and reported the findings in the June issue of the Archives of Ophthalmology, published by the American Medical Association.

"Maybe this gives us a physical explanation as to why there were some old wives' tales that certain sexual activities could result in blindness," said a co-author of the study, Dr. Neil Bressler of Johns Hopkins University.

"If that is true, it's temporary, and the prognosis is excellent," he added by telephone Tuesday from Baltimore.

Prosecutors believe they can wrap up their case by the end of next week. They have dropped plans to call more witnesses to discuss domestic violence in the Simpson marriage, and they won't present testimony on the blood preservative EDTA.

A buyer in the shoe department of Bloomingdale's in New York testified he sold shoes to O.J. Simpson several times, but did not specifically remember selling him Bruno Magli shoes, which match the bloody footprints found at the crime scene.

Wednesday, testimony will involve cellular phone calls made from Simpson's Bronco.
