Herpes lands Rodman in court

Leonard Pallats Associated Press

ATLANTA - Dennis Rodman had unprotected sex with a former Atlanta Hawks cheerleader a day after a Detroit woman went to his home and told him he had given her genital herpes, a lawyer said Monday.

But an attorney representing the San Antonio Spurs star in a federal lawsuit brought by the Atlanta woman said there was no evidence Rodman has ever had a transmittable form of the incurable disease

Lisa Beth Judd, 24, is suing Rod man for unspecified damages. She claims Rodman, with whom she had an on-and-off relationship since 1991, gave her herpes Jan. 14, 1993, when he came to Atlanta while then playing for the Detroit

Her lawyer, Mark Trigg, said Rodman had told her the night he gave her herpes he was ready to get serious about their relation-

"That was exactly what Lisa had hoped he would say," Trigg said in pening arguments to the eightwoman, two-man jury. "Lisa loved Dennis Rodman. Lisa trusted Dennis Rodman.'

The usually flamboyant Rodman, who came to court wearing a green jacket and dark slacks, had given herpes to two other women about wo weeks earlier, Trigg said.

Richard Hines, representing Rodman, told the jury there was no medical evidence the 26-year-old Detroit woman who accused Rodman of giving her herpes actually

He said that while a 1993 blood test showed Rodman had herpes, there was no evidence it was eve in an active, transmittable form.

Another Rodman lawyer, Taylor Daly, said Judd became pregnan three times between ages 17 and 20. "She should have understood the risks of unprotected sexual

GENEVA (AP) - Pushing themselves to the brink of a trade war, the top American and Japanese trade officials talked into the night Tuesday but reported no progress in the dispute over U.S. access to Japan's car market. The Clinton administration says that with no agreement by midnight EDT tonight, it will impose 100 percent tariffs on Toyota's Lexus, Honda's Acura and other Japanese luxury cars. That would price them out of the U.S. market. The Lexus LS480, for instance, will rise in price from $55,000 to well over $80,000.

COURT ORDER DEFIED

Wanted cat held at local pet clinic

Lisa Blaney The Daily Iowan

Cabo, the 20-pound pet Asian jungle cat that attacked 2-year-old Alice Mintz, causing the toddler to need 200 stitches, is being held by the All Pets Veterinary Clinic, 512 S. Dubuque St.

The feline became a fugitive when his owner, the bitten child's aunt, Sari Mintz, transported him from Chicago to Iowa - where he was purchased - in defiance of a court order to have the cat destroyed and tested for rabies.

"The niece had even been bitten before. She didn't get rabies then — a few months earlier — so why would this time be any different?"

Frank Howard, Sari Mintz's attorney

But Mintz's lawyer, Frank Howard, said he is going to ask today for the dismissal of the court order requiring the animal's death.

If the cat is not destroyed and immediately tested for rabies, Mintz's niece will have to continue a series of rabies inoculations. The toddler was already given the first round of shots in her head.

The cat has bitten several people, Howard said, including Mintz and her fiancé, a neighbor and one of Mintz's co-workers.

Sperm shampoo: 'Penetration' is the secret

At least that's the idea we all get from watching Sy Sperling on latenight television.

If you don't have loser; if your nairline is receding before age

21, you are destined for failure. And besides being bald, if your hair is thin and lifeless, things aren't any better. But luckily, for all the losers, a new product is on the market.

else?) company has developed a sperm-based shampoo. Eeew, gross! Who wants sperm in their hair? According to Kevis, everyone from doctors to movie stars.

Penetration is the key to thicker, fuller hair. As you use the shampoo, the active sperm ingredient penetrates the hair and absorbs up to 1,000 times its weight in water, expanding the hair shaft.

Interesting concept. I don't know about your hair, but mine doesn't doesn't go into hair. stretch too much. Grab your own

My theory is that Kevis, "the world's most expensive shampoo," gets your hair pregnant. Check it out: sperm, penetration, getting bigger, more hair - wink wink, nudge nudge, say no more.

I got a sample of the shampoo in the mail. No, I didn't try it, but it looks sort of normal. It's a clear liquid in a tube, and I'd probably try it if it weren't for the milky white blob in the middle of it.

The blob is sperm. Japanese sperm to be exact.

Hmmm. Are there no other places in the world where men create extra Kevis, a Beverly Hills (where sperm? Or is Japanese sperm the only kind making hair fuller?

A press release from Kevis quoted New Woman magazine as saying, "You can't make this stuff up yourself." In the famous words of my friend Al, "Uh, what?"

Why not? Nearly every man alive creates sperm, and those who don't can usually be cured. And I've heard that 5 percent of men masturbate, and 95 percent lie about it. Where does all that sperm go? I'd guess it hair and pull it really hard. Did it see why - it's sperm. Just because get longer? It went from Japan to Beverly Hills, it's the newest sensation, so Kevis can charge an arm and a leg (or a testicle) for it.

But it could. Kevis is really expensive (4 ounces for $25). I don't know is it works.'

My girlfriend, who is intelligent and has great, sperm-free hair, asked, "Why not eliminate the mid-

What if people began using other sperm shampoos?

If you used Canadian sperm, would your hair grow into a monkey cut? Or if you used Jamaican sperm, would your hair become dredlocks? Or if you used Ronald Reagan's sperm, would your hair grow like the Big Boy hamburger

In any case, who the hell decided sperm would be a great thing to put in hair? Did some porn star notice her hair was more healthy right after filming a movie?

In any case, it creates a new twist on an old tired cliché: "Do you shampoo or swallow?'

The people at Kevis are really proud of their shampoo and have a lot of confidence in their product. An anonymous celebrity hairstylist at Paramount studios said, "Stars don't care what's in Kevis; all they

And we all know movie stars are the most dependable representatives for new products - especially anonymous stars. But when you make your living looking good, I guess the more pregnant your hair is, the better. Someone ought to tell Patrick Stewart.

The guy managing Kevis said the sperm shampoo fixed his bald spot. "Every day was a bad hair day," he said. Now every day is a day you've got sperm in your hair, sir.

In case pregnant hair isn't enough, Kevis also makes a face lotion, which is supposed to get rid of wrinkles. Guess how? Penetration of the facial skin cells. It gets your face pregnant, too. Watch how you use the shampoo in the shower, ladies — if you don't want to end up with a half-Japanese baby.

They say everyone has their price. Just last week, I read an article on how bald heads are the cool thing to have. But remember, sperm isn't for everyone.

Use your head when you put sperm on it. Condoms can prevent the spread of sexually hair-transmitted disease, but abstinence from sperm shampoo is the only way to prevent unwanted hair pregnancy.

Hay said he participates in the studies because of his interest in the biomechanics of sports. He said his main goal is to deduce the optimum techniques athletes should use when performing.

"We don't want to win gold medals," Hay said. "Our reason for participating is to understand the scientific basis for the movements the athletes are making. They want to shave off time. It's a marriage of two different groups that want different things.

Hay, who has been with the USOC for about 13 years, was asked to work with the Olympic kayak team two years ago. He received a $32,000 grant for his current project that will last through the year, he said.

By that time, Hay said he hopes to have a good understanding of the key elements of good kayaking technique

"Very little has been done in this country on analyzing the kayak stroke," Hay said. "Little is known about how the kayaker should move the arms, shoulders (and) legs to propel the boat."

Hay recently returned from the Olympic Training Center in San Diego, where he videotaped 15 male and female kayakers. Units measuring acceleration were also placed in the boats. Hay and several research assistants will begin analyzing the tapes frame by frame to see which techniques produced the most acceleration. Hay is currently analyzing the techniques of Olympic jumpers, a project he has been pursuing since 1982. He said he is taking a different approach to the two sports' analyses because of the amount of previous research done

They're very different in that the research being done on jumping is quite extensive," Hay said, "whereas researching on kayaking is in its infancy by comparison. Jumping research is much more involved, so we're looking at much eeper questions than kayaking."

With both sports, Hay said he will find no set technique improvng every athlete's performance. Instead, all athletes are compared to themselves, he said.

"Anyone who tells you they know what the optimum technique is, you should be very suspicious of," Hay said. "One technique for one person is unlikely to be the optimum technique for another. It became very clear early in my work that the ways to improve their technique were very different. For example, with Mike Powell we may focus more on a certain body position than with Carl Lewis."

UI Professor Jim Hay shows a video used for analyzing Olympic kayakers. Hay recently received a grant from the United States Olympic Committee.

Although the USOC is implementing projects like Hay's to improve performances, Hay said it's impossible to know how much a suggested change improves an athlete's performance.

"The athletes are training several hours a day and doing a whole host of things that can affect their performance," Hay said. "So pinning down exactly what accounted for any improvement is impossible. The best we ever get - or are likely to get - is feedback from the athletes or coaches saying, 'That thing you said about my elbow or knee really helped."

Resistance not issue in violent rape cases

Mike Glover Associated Press

DES MOINES - The law doesn't require rape victims who have been threatened with violence to "physically resist" during a sexual assault, the Iowa Court of Appeals ruled Tuesday.

The court said a lack of resistance during an assault doesn't amount to consent and upheld Woodbury County kidnapping and sexual abuse convictions against Michael Sanders.

Court records said Sanders was charged with first-degree kidnapping and second-degree sexual abuse after an incident on Oct.

During the trial, a 17-year-old girl testified that she was walking home when Sanders forced her into his car and threatened to kill her if she "screamed or anything."

The girl testified that he drove her to an abandoned apartment, told her to undress and engaged in sexual acts. The girl said she hadn't offered resistance because she was afraid.

"Sanders made no threats to (the girl) once they were inside the apartment and the two never struggled," the court said.

After the incident, the girl reported the attack, police were called and she was treated at a local hospital.

Sanders said the sexual acts were consensual. He said her lack of resistance was evidence of

DES MOINES - The Iowa Court of Appeals sided Tuesday with the father in a Johnson County custody case that included charges of sexual misconduct by both parents.

GRADUATE STUDENTS BENEFIT

UI child care program to undergo expansion

Robyn Rappaport The Daily Iowan

Graduate students participating in a new UI child care program can expect changes this fall, including increased reimburse-ments and more benefits.

The committee in charge of the funding of the UI Graduate Student Child Care Assistance Program is also hoping to expand the program to include more families.

The program offers a supplement for child care to qualifying graduate assistants, with its funding being administered by the graduate college. The program began last fall, following a request from the Graduate / Professional Student Senate for more benefits for graduate assistants. A committee was formed and began a pilot study in which $20,000 was allocated for child care assistance.

After two successful semesters, the committee heading the program has decided to expand, in order to double the number of participants this year.

Mary Jo Small, associate vice president for Finance and University Services, said the committee asked the Legislature to provide additional funding for the spring of '95, but the request was denied.

"We've had a plan to improve our supplement in this area," Small said. "This is a high priority at the university."

Qualifying graduate assistants, who took part in the pilot study, were reimbursed $65 per month for child care and were encouraged to employ a child care provider being trained by the Community Co-ordinated Child Care, 202 S.

The child care center, located in the Old Public Library and supported by the UI, trains infant care providers and also serves as a referral agency for families seeking in-home child care.

Participants had the option of having the child care provider come to their homes or taking their children to the home of the provider, and were reimbursed for do at sexual contact between an the child care upon presentation of

DES MOINES - A life of crime becomes considerably more difficult Saturday, even as a life devoted to politics grows more lucrative. Drunken drivers, sex abusers

Deadbeat parents who decide against supporting their children also could find it more difficult to make a living or make their way around town, courtesy of the Legislature and Gov. Terry Branstad.

Legislators and Branstad wrapped up their work this spring, but much of what worked its way through the Legislature will go on the books Saturday as the state begins a new fiscal year.

Given the tenor of the last election, it's not surprising that much of the legislation that was approved this year makes life more difficult

Virtually every poll taken during the last election showed voters deeply worried about crime, gangs and violence. The politicians who won those elections followed that blueprint in their votes in the Leg-approached $1,000. All that's still the case, but there's now much

Beginning Saturday, authorities can seize the vehicles of repeat offenders, forcing them to look elsewhere for transportation. For those under 21, "zero tolerance" will go into effect.

Motorists with a blood-alcohol level of 0.10 percent are automatically convicted of drunken driving. For those under 21, that drops to 0.02 percent. That's one beer in an hour for most

Officials allowed any level of alcohol at all because some medications have a minuscule alcohol concentration, and some religious services include small quantities of wine.

"I think it will have an impact," said House Majority Leader Brent Siegrist, R-Council Bluffs. "I'm not sure how much more you can do, short of locking people up for a considerable period of time."

That, of course, is also possible under the new drunken driving laws, with time in jail a possibility even for first-time offenders. Most caught the first time don't spend time in jail. Legislators also took aim at young criminals. They combined a safe schools" package with a new uvenile crime plan to give far less leeway to youngsters who commit crimes, particularly violent crimes. Lawmakers made it much easier to deal with violent young criminals in adult court rather than juvenile court and allowed some of the juveniles' names to be made public.

New laws also give school officials new ways to control students, giving them freedom to search school lockers without advance notice. Carrying a weapon to school now carries an automatic one-year

In addition, school officials now have the explicit authority to ban students from wearing gang-related clothing and other artifacts. Legislators also included some help for crime victims, expanding slightly the ability of victims to collect from a victim restitution fund. Angered by complaints from some rape victims, legislators also adopted a law prohibiting police from requiring a rape victim to take a lie detector test as a condition of investigating a complaint.

That same law allows a victim to obtain a written statement from police when they decide not to pursue an investigation, detailing their reasons for doing so. The Legislature and the governor also entered into a competition on who could get tougher on sentencing criminals. The Legislature approved a law requiring that violent criminals serve at least 85 percent of the sentence they were given by a judge.

Branstad vetoed it, saying it didn't go far enough. He vowed to come back next year to ask for an even tougher plan.

Almost routinely, lawmakers also approved a new, 750-bed mediumsecurity prison at Newton. They already are talking about where to put the next new prison.

Lest some inmates find their time in the slammer enjoyable, the Legislature told prison officials to require "hard labor" from inmates, including chain gangs. Recognizing that's not easy, however, they gave officials two years to figure out how Legislators also decided elected officials ought to have a pay raise. They set Branstad's salary at $98,200, an $18,400 raise, or 23 percent. That begins rolling in Sat-

Clinton and Vice President Al Gore convened the daylong Pacific Rim Economic Conference as the second in a series of regional meetings meant to be a follow-up to the marathon economic summit he held in Arkansas before taking office.

Clinton said the goal of the sessions was to stay in touch with the ways in which national economic policies affect ordinary Americans.

"Too often ... the further you get away from the grass roots in America, the more theoretical and the less practical the debates become," he said.

He said that while economic growth is improving nationally, "it is not enough to produce impressive numbers. It must be manifest in the lives of the people of America.

Some 200 business people, working families, academics, economists and others from California, Oregon, Washington, Hawaii and Alaska gathered for the conference. In three sessions around a semicircular table, they offered the president diverse ideas and concerns. A union leader spoke of the stresses of job insecurity and workers' limited time with their families; an electronics industry executive lamented "weird and / or stupid" government regulations; an Indian leader worked in a pitch for continued federal assistance to tribes.

Scott Boley, chairman of the Oregon Salmon Fishermen, told Clinton and Gore he had wondered whether the conference participants would be able to communicate with "you aliens from the East Coast," but found all sides eager to find balanced solutions on tough issues such as protecting salmon populations and the fishing industry.

Clinton struck the same theme on the difficult environmental issues facing the Pacific Northwest, saying his policies on forestry and salmon fishing were designed to balance economic and environmental needs. He said the Endangered Species Act needed to be reformed to make it less onerous but that those who want to "throw it out the window" were going too far.

Clinton's visit to Portland was the final stop on a six-day trip that included two $1 million fund-raisers, a weekend of relaxation in Arkansas and a U.N. 50th anniversary ceremony in San Francisco.

Teen-agers fear acquiring HIV from physicians

CHICAGO - Many teen-agers are afraid of getting the virus that causes AIDS from doctors or other health professionals, according to a survey that found what one researcher called a frightening misconception among youngsters.

Only six of the estimated 1.5 million people who are HIV-infected in the United States are believed to have gotten the virus from a health professional — and all six from the same dentist.

"It surprised all the experts, because the experts did not know that teen-agers had this misconception," said the lead researcher on the survey, Dr. Kenneth Ginsburg, a specialist in adolescent medicine at the Children's Hospital

After the survey, researchers learned from 215 youngsters in small discussion groups that the preoccupation with cleanliness was related to the fear of acquiring diseases - particularly AIDS.

FOURTH AMENDMENT PROTECTS ATHLETES

Drug tests unreasonable

The Supreme Court struck a blow to the rights of all American high school students Monday when it ruled public schools have the right to randomly test student athletes. The 6-3 decision was led by Justice Antonin Scalia and will seriously damage the Fourth Amendment rights of high school athletes.

Scalia, in writing the decision, deemed the Fourth Amendment = guaranteeing the individual's right to privacy - does not extend to minors. "Central in our view to the present case is the fact that the subjects of the policy are (1) children who (2) have been to committed to the temporary custody of the State as schoolmaster," wrote Scalia for the majority.

The decision overturns last year's federal appeals court decision making it unconstitutional for Veronia, Ore. to subject its student athletes to random drug testing. It was the first-ever ruling by the high court on a drug testing matter concerning students and only the third-ever on a matter involving drug testing at all.

Scalia's decision comes as a surprise considering he was a dissenter on the two other drug cases, both of which upheld drug testing in tightly defined parameters.

The most damaging part of the decision is it allows random testing. As such, school officials need not explain themselves when choosing students for testing. Also, it excludes the general population of America's students from this random testing. Anyone who has been to high school in the last 30 years knows that the least likely place to find high school drug users is in the locker room.

Scalia wrote, "As elsewhere in small town America, school sports play a prominent role in the town's life, and student athletes are admired in their schools and in the community." Nothing evokes admiration like seeing a quarterback trudging to the bathroom with a sample cup in his hand.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote the dissent and was joined by Justices Stevens and Souter. "The population of our nation's public schools, grades 7 through 12, numbers around 18 million," wrote O'Connor. "By the reasoning of today's decision, the millions of these students who participate in interscholastic sports, an overwhelming majority of whom have given school officials no reason whatsoever to suspect they use drugs at school, are open to an intrusive bodily search."

O'Connor repeatedly evoked the Fourth Amendment in her decision and continually referred to the Framer's intention of keeping all individuals free from unreasonable searches. "Protection of privacy, not evenhandedness, was then and is now the touchstone of the Fourth Amendment."

The majority decision is a wrong-headed attempt at stemming the tide of drugs in our schools. Despite endorsements of the decision from coaches around the country, random testing of athletes will not stop the infiltration of drugs in schools.

The ruling will make students paranoid and unwilling to participate in activities that require unreasonable bodily searches.

CREATING A NEW LABOR FORCE?

Branstad takes on welfare

Lowa Gov. Terry Branstad wants to reform welfare and has been one of the loudest voices demanding the current federalized system be replaced with block grants. Since these grants (as the proposal how stands) would come with virtually no strings attached, one has to wonder what this governor has in mind.

Cynics might argue Branstad will use the money for one of his pet projects - to hell with the poor - just as he has used lottery money slated to support education for some rather questionable economic "development" projects. Thanks to Branstad, we now have some of the lowest paid meat-packing jobs in the nation.

But it could be the governor is thinking of something more sophisticated than starving the destitute. Welfare reform involves getting the poor to work, and Branstad wants to privatize public services. These two things offer an intriguing possibility. If the system can be rigged so welfare recipients are forced to work for less than minimum wage, and if these people replace state workers, Branstad will have killed at least two birds with one stone.

He will have gotten everyone off welfare. He will have dumped virtually all state employees on the welfare rolls. Branstad will have busted their union, AFSCME, which has been a vocal opponent of the governor since day one. And since these people would end up doing their old jobs for welfare pay, Branstad could also save the taxpayers lots of money.

This is not as far-fetched as it sounds. New York City and nearby Westchester County are already replacing city and county employees with unpaid welfare recipients. The primary side effect, however, has been putting even more people out of work. Taken to its logical conclusion, "workfare" fails to prove viable for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is slavery is rather noxious.

Welfare recipients do not need to be forced to work, because it is a lack of opportunity - not their laziness - keeping them on the dole. But allowing people to stay on the dole lowers the unemployment rate and raises wages.

Perhaps that is Branstad's real agenda. By reducing options, he can create exactly the kind of labor force business thinks it wants meek, subservient, ever ready to work harder and harder for less and less, because the alternative is to starve to death. Such was the "welfare" system in 19th century New England, where destitute families were literally sold by the counties to the lowest bidder. And this could happen here.

People on welfare - never mind the vast majority of them are children - could be turned into a virtual slave labor force, one that companies could use to replace permanent employees, break strikes, bust unions and underbid non-welfare workers. The possibilities are endless and rather nasty.

Iowa could find itself transformed into a vast slave labor camp not unlike an old-fashioned plantation - where cheap and readily available welfare workers displace regular employees who then become cheap and readily available welfare workers.

The motto of Iowa reads "Our Liberties We Prize and Our Rights

We Will Maintain." Let's keep it that way.

First Henry Foster — is Roe v. Wade next?

entertainment. Nobody grabs a beer and a bag of chips and sits in front of the tube to watch C-Span. Even the Clarence Thomas hearings, which were supposed to be the high water mark in government entertainment, didn't keep me on the edge of my seat.

The stuff about the pubic hair and the pornography with animals was kind of cool, but could see that on FOX any night of the week. No, for pure entertainment, Senate inquests don't exactly float my boat. That is - until

I guess entertained is the wrong word. I wouldn't say I was "entertained" by the Senate's decision to deny the confirmation of Dr. Henry Foster for the position of surgeon general. I think I was a little more confused and intrigued by it than entertained.

Frankly, I just didn't understand the decision. I figured there had to be a little more to it than what came out in the news. So, I decided I was going to get to the bottom of it. I was going to crack the case like some demented Hardy

I locked myself in the library for four days and four nights, eating nothing but Snowballs and Big Slam Mountain Dews. I piled through roughly 6,000 journals and books. I called everyone from President Clinton to musician George Clinton. (I even spoke to Deep Throat, but I couldn't understand a word the guy said - he mumbled a lot.) Nothing. I came up with general because he had performed abortions. Weird, huh?

I just don't get it. I know I'm just a dumb college kid, but when I woke up this morning, Roe v. Wade still stood. Abortions are still legal. So this guy didn't get the job because he didn't break the law. That's a little strange.

I could understand it if he was some gun-running psychopath who killed people simply to watch them die. Or worse - if he watched "Full House" and liked it. But this guy performed legal medical procedures and was punished for it. I know all the mumbo jumbo about how it's murder and fighting for the unborn and all of that other crap. Frankly, I don't really know where I stand on the whole thing, but I do know this - it isn't against the law.

Some people may say abortion is immoral, and Republican Sen. Phil Gramm may ride all over the country saying the decision not to confirm Foster is a victory for the American soul or whatever other kind of political B.S. he can come up with - but morality is subjective.

What's immoral to me may be perfectly fine to someone else. That's why we have laws gets rid of the subjectivity. It makes things more black and white. Foster didn't do anything wrong. He did what he believed in - by the book - and he was still punished.

The number of abortions he performed shouldn't have been any more relevant than the number of exams he gave or the number of tests he conducted. As of right now, they are all medical procedures — nothing more, nothing less. It shouldn't have been an issue, but it always is.

Senate confirmation hear- a big, fat goose egg. Finally, I had to realize Abortion has already become the hot topic ings aren't exactly block- Foster was denied the appointment of surgeon (doesn't it seem like it's always the hot topic?) of a presidential campaign still a year away. Clinton is charging the Republican Senate with bowing to the pressure of the radical right, and Senate leaders are saying Clinton nominates radical candidates for positions and then criticizes the Republicans when they are not confirmed. The gloves are off, and the bell hasn't even been rung.

> I know all the mumbo jumbo about how it's murder and fighting for the unborn and all of that other crap. Frankly, I don't really know where I stand on the whole thing, but I do know this - it isn't against the law.

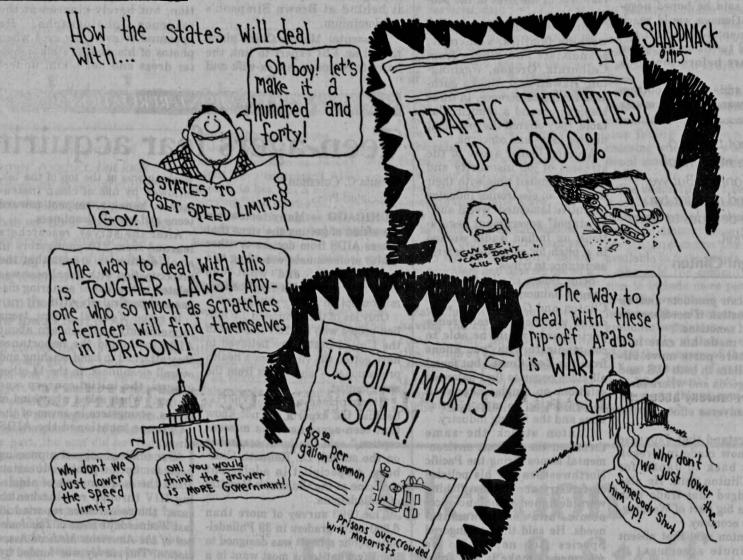

More important than this issue's effects on the next election is the effect the controversy has on the validity of the Roe v. Wade decision. The most controversial Supreme Court decision of our time looks like it's headed for another battle. It seems to me Clinton stated his position by his nomination of Foster, and the Senate stated theirs by his denial.

It's only a matter of time before this makes it to the Supreme Court. And the odds are Foster won't be anywhere in sight when the battle between the anti-abortion and pro-choice positions is waged in the highest court in the land but I'd be willing to bet that he'll be on everyone's minds.

Lack of understanding revealed in column To the Editor:

I'm not surprised that Duane Nollen doesn't like the idea of the New Party ("New Party has flawed vision ... " DI, June 19.) I am surprised he chose to voice such an opinion without any attempt to understand the New Party or its (potential) local role. First, Nollen scores us for trotting out "the same old complaints." I hope he is not suggesting these complaints low voter turnout, the constraints of the two party system, etc. — are not important or they are any less important because they are "old."

Second, Nollen seems to distrust any political movement in which concerns are rooted in the aspirations and anxieties of ordinary people. Yes, we "let the audience babble a lot" — although I would hesitate to dismiss the input of concerned citizens attending a public forum as "babble."

Would Nollen rather we simply dictated a plan of action to those attending? One of the central lessons of our current political crisis - and the alienation we see around us - is how we come to decisions is often as important as the decisions themselves.

Third, Nollen completely misses the point regarding the Christian Coalition. The far right has made inroads by targeting local elections; we are doing the same - although we do so openly, not with "stealth" candidates. That is the only point of comparison.

Fourth, Nollen trots out Boss Tweed as evidence of the inherent corruption of ward politics. This is a remarkable misreading of historical evidence. Progressive reformers took aim at both municipal corruption and the voting power of working-class wards - their goal was to effectively throttle what they saw as the source of corruption: the political participation of ordinary

It was the Progressives, after all, who also disenfranchised African-Americans via the "Jim Crow" laws. A return to ward politics (which the New Party has accomplished elsewhere) does not invite corruption; it invites people to participate in the political life of their neighborhoods and communities.

Fifth, Nollen completely misunderstands our "running to win" strategy as a failure to stand up for what we believe. Quite the opposite is true: we confine our energies to those races in which we can play a constructive role, because we take people's votes seriously and will not waste them on quixotic "protest" campaigns. We won 80 of the 120 races we have entered since 1992, a remarkable record for a political culture notoriously hostile to third parties.

'Sorry' isn't enough for gays and lesbians

To the Editor:

I'm glad the Southern Baptists are finally - after 150 years - apologizing and asking for forgiveness for their "acts of evil" in supporting slavery and for their historic institutional racism. The statement is long overdue, but nonetheless welcome. There are far too few apologies by Christians for unloving behavior.

However, I couldn't help but wonder if it will take another 150 years for them to apologize to gays and lesbians for the "acts of evil" which have been and are today perpetrated by Southern Baptists — and in particular by prominent leaders in the denomination.

The vilification, dehumanization, discrimination and psychological torture in the form of so-called "cure" ministries for gays and lesbians will in time — be viewed with the same. horror with which we now regard slavery. The only question is how many young people will suffer the effects of such practices, and how many will overcome the abuse to live with honesty and dignity and hear the eventual "For what it's worth, we're sorry."

Japan says the U.S. demands violate free trade - even though the World Trade Organization, which mediates such disputes, has criticized Japan for maintaining the world's most closed auto market. Japanese officials contend American automakers haven't tried hard enough to win over Japanese con-

Both sides, saying their arguments are based on principle, insist they won't back down. Political concerns at home have

President Clinton is under pressure from Republicans in Congress to stand firm and is also mindful of votes from car workers in key states at next year's presidential election.

Marge Searing, a negotiator with the U.S. commerce department, met Tuesday in Geneva with Japanese automakers, indicating possible movement in the discussions.

David Baum, sales manager for Betts Lexus, Des Moines, said business is steady, but the tariff has raised employee-related concerns.

"We're most concerned with the effect (the tariff) will have on our employees," Baum said.

The government's goal of boosting American luxury car sales may fall flat as well, experts said. Since the tariff covers only Japanese luxury automobiles, potential customers may turn from the Lexus or Acura to the Mercedes or BMW.

"I think the tax will steer buyers toward German luxury cars," Man-

Despite objections from other area dealers, Hill said he supports the move and believes most other dealers do as well. "I think overall it's a good thing," he said. "I think it'll work, because it's a pretty small effect overall."

Government officials may not have expected negotiations to get this far, Hill said. If the tariff passes, it will likely bring retaliation from the Japanese government and auto makers, Hill said.

"This is just the first shot of the war," he said. Akin agreed, saying there is no

SHUTTLE

"Very few people get to see their dreams come true, but today I'm seeing it in living color," said Goldin, who watched the launch on television from an air base in Portland, Ore. He was en route to Moscow with Vice President Al Gore for talks with Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin.

Thagard, Vladimir Dezhurov and Gennady Strekalov have been aboard Mir since March 16.

Atlantis will bring eight people back — the first time a U.S. spacecraft will return with more people than it left with.

Thagard is the first American to be launched on a Russian rocket ship. If Atlantis returns to Earth as planned on July 7, he and his comrades will have been in orbit 115 days, a U.S. endurance record. A Russian cosmonaut holds the world record - 439 days.

Many space officials, including Goldin, consider the docking the most challenging task since landing men on the moon.

Atlantis' commander Robert 'Hoot" Gibson will have to steer the shuttle to within a few inches and degrees of the docking ring on the huge Mir station as the two spacecraft zoom around Earth at 17,500 mph. He will have to do this within two minutes of the appointed time and at a creep of one-tenth of a foot per second.

Such large objects have never docked before in orbit. Mir has a mass of 123 tons in orbit, Atlantis 100 tons. The two spacecraft will be joined for five days.

"The specialists from the two countries have a lot to learn from each other," said Yuri Semenov, president of the Russian aerospace company RSC Energia. "Together, we can do much more than individually, and we hope that politicians will not interfere with our work and will actually assist us rather than be in our way."

CAT ATTACK

Mintz is currently being charged with contempt of court and Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar has publicly stated Mintz should be fired from her job as a spokeswoman for the Illinois State Toll Highway Authority.

Mintz's lawyer said Mintz wants the cat to go to a zoo if found rabiesfree after a 10-day observation peri-

If the order isn't reversed today, Howard said Mintz will cooperate by having the cat put to sleep.

Although rabies is a concern with any biting incident, cases are rare because most domestic animals are vaccinated.

"Last year, a cow tested positive in Johnson County, but the disease is not a common happening," said Chris Whitmore, an animal control officer at the Animal Control Licensing & Shelter, corner of Kirkwood Avenue and South Clinton However, rabies vaccines have not been proven effective in exotic animals.

"Even with wolf-breed dogs, they can't say if the vaccines will be effective," Whitmore said. "If the dog bit someone, most likely it would have to be destroyed, even if it had had the shot."

Howard said no family rift has arisen over the incident, but admitted he would not be as benevolent to the feisty cat as Mintz.

Exactly where did this jungle kit-ty come from? Speculation is high.

"I heard something about an exotic pet breeder," said Kot Flora, disease prevention manager at the Johnson County Health Department. turtles and iguanas, are in stock at many pet stores, cougars and buffaloes take a little more effort. These animals are found at pet auctions, like the one held in Kalona.

Joe Ziegler, book department manager at the bookstore, said the store would soon offer textbooks on CD-ROM.

"Some textbooks already come with a CD packaged with the text," he said. "Everyone in the industry is talking about offering textbooks on CD-ROM, and it will happen

Although it is cheaper to copy a CD than produce an 800-page chemistry textbook, Ziegler said prices will probably start out high-

"I think a book and CD will come as a package, but eventually CDs will drive prices down," he said.

For now, most titles on CD are reference books. Jenkens said his favorite is Microsoft Corporation's "Encarta," an entire encyclopedia on CD-ROM.

"It's just amazing," he said. "In addition to text, it's got sound and video clips. You can get an entire encyclopedia for only $80. In fact, it's pretty much killing the traditional encyclopedia business."

Jenkens said CD-ROMs can save people a trip to the library.

"We've got all kinds of things -The Mayo Clinic Family Health Guide, dictionaries, encyclopedias,' he said.

CD-ROMs have become so popular about 80 percent of the computers the UI sells are equipped with them, said Les Neu, sales manager at Weeg Computing Center.

"Five years ago, almost no computer systems came with CD-ROM players," Neu said. "Now everyone wants one. The industry is just going to keep on growing."

CD-ROM drives cost between $200 and $300, Neu said, and can also play audio CDs.

Wendy E. Lane Associated Press

TORONTO - Even though the calendar says 1995, Wednesday's NBA draft is really a draft for the 21st century.

Among the players likely to be Johnson gained 931 yards on taken in the top five are three 20-240 carries last year, a 3.9-yard year-olds and two 19-year-olds, average. In 1993, he gained 821 players who may not be fully yards on 198 carries, a 4.1-yard developed pros until the year average. He scored three touchdowns in each of the last two sea-

Perhaps they'll get there sooner, and a couple may not get there at all. It's hard to tell, say scouts and general managers.

Maryland's would-be junior Joe Smith, the probable top pick, is 19, as is Kevin Garnett, the Chicago high schooler who's trying to become just the fifth player to play in the NBA without appearing in a college game. North Carolina's Jerry Stackhouse and Rasheed Wallace and Alabama's Antonio McDyess are all 20 and turning pro after playing just two seasons in college. While many kids their age are working minimum-wage summer jobs and spending their free time skateboarding or playing video games, these five are preparing to step into the big-dollar, high-gloss world of the NBA and face onand off-court demands their peers couldn't imagine.

"It's going to be a challenge for everybody to make an adjustment," Stackhouse said. "Some guys will make the adjustment in training camp. Some guys will take until February."

Or even longer. In the opinion of Duke's Cherokee Parks, another top-10 pick, Stackhouse, who averaged 19.2

super sophomores.

"He's the most explosive," said Parks, who had to guard him a few times. "He's got an unbelievable first step. Physically, he's there. As far as being an impact player, he's the one.

Stackhouse, who doesn't yet have an agent and was rumored to be considering returning to North Carolina if the Clippers selected him, acknowledged he'd rather play elsewhere but denied he would refuse to play for the

NBA's worst team. "God tests strong people," he said. "It will be a test. The one facing the biggest test will be Garnett, the 6-foot-11 leaper whose talent has Minnesota and Toronto, among other teams, eyeing him. Garnett could either turn out to be Moses Malpoints for the Tar Heels last year, one, who came to the pros out of is the most ready among the high school in 1974 and is still in the league, or Bill Willoughby, a second-round pick out of high school whose career lasted eight mediocre seasons.

Wallace thinks Garnett, who averaged 26 points and 18 rebounds last year at Farragut Academy, may be getting in over

"Kevin's a good ballplayer. I'm not knocking that," Wallace said. "But he hasn't really experienced that real physical battle down low. This year in high school, he probably went up against two guys that were his height. So it's definitely going to be a big

What a dilemma!

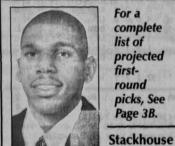

Anyway, what the Warriors should do is trade the top pick to Philadelphia for the third pick and anything the 76ers are willing to offer. That way they can take power forward Antonio McDyess (who they need) and Philadelphia can grab Stackhouse (who it really wants).

Or Golden State can keep the first pick and take power forward Joe Smith (who it needs) and the Clippers can grab Stackhouse (who they want).

But Golden State just can't help themselves. They'll take Stackhouse (who they love) and they'll try to trade Sprewell for a quality power forward (which they won't find).

"I think they had us outgunned with just four of them," Purdy said. "They've been playing together a long time and all four are great athletes. They're obviously proba-

"They're just out there to make people smile. This kind of entertainment is much better than going to a movie. It's too bad they don't have too much of this kind of family entertainment anymore."

"The King and His Court" are currently playing in their 50th season. The team also puts on programs warning youngsters about drug and alcohol abuse.

time since straining a hip muscle in the French Open earlier this month, Agassi showed how ready he was on the second point of the match. He drilled a backhand return up the middle that Painter lunged for and missed while skidding to the ground.

"I've grown to love it here," Agassi said after bowing to the whistling and cheering crowd and waving to all corners of the Court One stadium. "I enjoy being a part of history here ... Every time I come back here, the emotion and the excitement seems to bring out some great tennis."

Graf, a five-time Wimbledon winner unbeaten in 26 matches this year, won 6-3, 6-1 in 49 minutes and made 14-year-old Martina Hingis look as if she belonged back in the juniors.

"I don't have to leave in panic, and I don't have to clean up the house, like I did last year," Graf said after avoiding the first-round trap that snared her a year ago when she fell to Lori McNeil. McNeil made the early exit this time, losing to No. 14 Naoko Sawamatsu, 4-6, 6-0, 6-3.

On a day when seven former Oscar Martinez 6-3, 6-3, 6-4, and Wimbledon champions strode the courts, two of them lost - ninthseeded Michael Stich and unseeded Pat Cash.

Stich, the 1991 winner who also lost in the first round last year, fell to 27th-ranked Jacco Eltingh, 6-4, 7-6 (7-3), 6-1. Cash, who won in 1987 and entered as a wild card this year, quit with an ankle injury after losing the first set 7-6 (8-6) to No. 176 Dick Norman.

Other former champions fared better, with No. 3 Boris Becker beating Emilio Alvarez 6-2, 6-2, 6-1, No. 13 Stefan Edberg beating defending women's champ Conchita Martinez beating Asa Carlsson

Arantxa Sanchez Vicario, mixing her strong baseline game with occasional forays to the net in an attempt to get past the quarters for the first time at Wimbledon, needed less than an hour to beat Katarina Studenkiova of Slovakia, 6-2, Mary Pierce, making her Wimbledon debut, took 57 minutes to dispose of Sandra Dopfer 6-1, 6-2.

Also winning in straight sets was No. 4 Jana Novotna, who defeated Karin Kschwendt 6-4, 6-4.
