Athletic department vows to stop 'unruly conduct' in student section

By Kevin Larson

A net has come to be known as a bad idea.

"Our staff will spend more time in the next 10 days in preparation for the home games in November. This is a very serious issue that we have to get our arms around," Bob Rodes, UI athletic director.

ABC gets Muppets started again

Los Angeles (AP) — Jim Henson Pictures and Walt Disney Co. said Monday they are teaming up in a character-merging deal that will help fund development of the Muppet franchise.

The agreement is the first of its kind between the two studios, which both have a stake in the Muppets.

Under the agreement, Disney will take a controlling interest in the franchise, while Henson Pictures will retain a minority stake.

The deal includes a new Muppet studio that will produce new Muppet films and television shows.

The Muppets are a popular character franchise that has been on television for decades.

Henson Pictures was founded by Jim Henson in 1976 and produced the original Muppet series, "Jim Henson's Muppets Country Music Hour.

Disney, which acquired Henson Pictures in 2010, has been working to revitalize the Muppets franchise.

The new Muppet studio will be based in Burbank, California.

Disney will also be responsible for the worldwide distribution of the new Muppet projects.

Henson Pictures will continue to develop and produce content for the franchise.

The deal is expected to close within the next few months.

In other Muppet news, Disney announced that a new Muppet movie is in the works, tentatively titled "Muppets Beyond the Screen." The movie is expected to be released in 2024.

The film will follow the Muppets as they navigate a world that has changed drastically since the original Muppet movies were released in the 1970s and 1980s.
Volunteers work full force for Hospice race

Josh Hart
The Daily Iowan

About 4,000 people will take to the streets to raise about $180,000 for United Way agencies as the 30th annual Hospice Road Race series kicks off this weekend.

A huge contribution has been made this year by the University of Iowa, primarily by UI students and staff coordinator Lori Riley. "We had over 3,000 volunteers for the race by the first day," she said. "It has never been this kind of early Student interest pouring into the office to volunteer."

The funds raised by the race go to United Way, which in turn contributes to a significant number of Johnson County's human services agencies. "People, schools, judges for anything in the race," Riley said. "Between UI and 1,600 people in the Iowa City area make up a great amount of these pledges. It is phenomenal how much they raise."

The race will be hosted by about 30 businesses in the Iowa City area, including the Delta Delta Delta sorority house. Five-year participant and Iowa City resident Joan Knopper said it is a great community activity. Knopper said it is a great opportunity to give back to the community. "We are more than happy to give the community something," she said. "As the sorority, we are happy to give the community something."

The seniors run in the race if they choose and it is a huge fund-raising event," Riley said. "It is a big community event for the Iowa City area and a huge fund-raising event."

The second prize will go to the person with the worst costume, which, like other local bars, don't give out any prizes. A power and technical crew will be all-out for a longer time, thing. may get a little out of control downtown, Leyva said. With more students out drinking for a longer time, things may get a little rowdy downtown.

"We're just expecting one more hour of drinking," he said. "They have another hour to drink now."

The idea for reviving rail passenger service between Cedar Rapids and Iowa City was dismissed, but a vintage trolley service between Iowa City and North Liberty could be on track.

"Something like that would be great for the area," said Chad and O.J. Sidis, directors of public transportation for Wilmar Smith Associates, which did study the concept. Rails passenger service from Iowa City to Cedar Rapids would also serve as a social attraction as well.

"That study found the average number of people it would take to ride the trolley daily simply doesn't exist," said "Auntie," a passenger. "People don't just walk in from work to home, and vice versa. People don't take the trolley for pleasure; they take the bus or Brown Line. That kind of schedule doesn't really accommodate a rail service.

The combined population of Iowa and Johnson counties is 360,000 people, according to Wilmar Smith Associates. The smallest urbanized area in the United States with rail service has a population of about 1 million. The study found it would take more than 15 years for the population in the region of the Charnley to grow that much.

There were 977 people involved with the study.

We were disappointed that the numbers weren't there," said "Auntie." "But a lot of people were really excited about this, but if the numbers aren't there, there's nothing really you can do about it. It's not like we can make the numbers."}

Ideal woman continues to be unrealistic

From hourglass hips to walking sticks, women are bound by the popular images of beautiful bodies. Watch any movie or television show from the late '50s and '60s. Drawing all over the film screen are pop—women with lean flesh and breasts that hang their waists when they walk. Think of Zsa Zsa Gabor in "Z and Z," or "Mata Hari". Think of Patsy Kensit in "Brigadoon", or "The Blue Bird". Think of Elizabeth Taylor in "Cleopatra," or "Butterfield 8." Think of Cheryl in "Teresa's Company." Think of "Charlie's Angels." "Alone in love and life", how would SarahJessica, Kelly, and Keri Steeler divide under that door to catch the bad guy if they had birthing hips?

Well, now there's a trend in the media to feel and feel and feel. We are bound by the ideal body image of a fit and slight outdid of non-corrosive metal, with no visible cancerous tissue formations and a waiflike stomach to bounce Benecky stick-

Women’s beauty shouldn’t be measured by the roundness of their hips or the length of their legs.

This new fitness mania, despite being hidden beneath the phrase of "health," will create the physical expectation that women can change the look of their bodies with dieting and exercising. Some diets are dangerous and it still gladdens me to see such trite nonsense for women.

"Just take a look at any of today’s top models," Gabrielle Revse, says in a difference that shows the extremes on the other. "Most top models have a figure of women’s magazines."

The United States has as much on the body as anywhere in the world continues to be. The body is the largest body in the world. We hold the world. The top models are something and something in the world. The United States has been and was drawn. It’s too easy to move. Nothing moves more than a top model.

But people continue to feel a drift of report by the World Food Program of the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organisations in October that the U.N. Friday, and that other signal to be the one that killed seven people in a train crash in Iowa.

The train's engineer saw the bus enter the intersection and stop with the end of the bus protruding onto the road. The bus driver, Patricia Hall, was killed when the accident occurred. The train was traveling at 20 miles per hour into the intersection, according to police. At the same moment, the traffic signal began to change, and the train stopped. The train then continued on its way.

The accident occurred at a level crossing, and the bus driver, who was approaching a major intersection, was killed. The bus driver was not wearing a seat belt, and the bus was not equipped with any safety devices.

The train had stopped at the level crossing, and the traffic signal was green. The bus driver was seen to be slowing down, but then accelerated suddenly at the last moment.

The train never slowed down, and the police chief and an engineer on board the train tried to play down that attack, claiming it was only a minor ailment.
Selena killer gets life

Democrats fed up with Clinton's waffling

Democrats are still wringing their hands over the Clinton administration's lukewarm response to the shooting death of the popular Tejano music star Selena.

A decade ago, President Clinton was lambasted for his response to the murders of civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. and Senator Robert F. Kennedy. In recent years, Democrats have been criticized for their response to the attacks on the World Trade Center in New York in 2001.

Democrats are concerned that their response to the shooting death of Selena, a Mexican-American singer, is not strong enough. They are concerned that the attack could spark a rash of violence against Hispanics and that the administration is not doing enough to address the issue.

Democrats have called on the administration to do more to prevent such attacks in the future. They have also called for stronger measures to prevent similar attacks in the future.

In response, the White House has announced a series of measures to address the issue, including increased security at public events and increased law enforcement efforts to prevent similar attacks in the future.

However, many Democrats are still concerned that the administration is not doing enough to address the issue.

The shooting of Selena has sparked a growing sense of anger and frustration among Democrats. They are concerned that the attack could spark a rash of violence against Hispanics and that the administration is not doing enough to address the issue.

Sanders picks

Cowboys in debut
Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

"This is MY season," Deion Sanders said last week after coming back to the Georgia Dome with the San Francisco 49ers, returning an interception for a touchdown and getting into a scuffle with Atlanta's Michael Haynes.

There is no doubt that Sanders is in Cleveland now as Bills' scouts make his debut, with the Dallas Cowboys in perhaps the most fitting locale he could have.

His house, of course.

That the Cowboys are favored by 10 points in the perfect reflection of the supremacy of the NFC East, which is only a game better than the NFC West, any standing on the field and yet... They're considered at least 10 points better by the people who are supposed to know.

COACHES: 3-1.
