Branstad announces fight against 'meth'

Crystallized, dead-end form of speed becomes drug of choice for Iowa youth

For 18-year-old Aaron Jarvis, sniffing "speed" was a new experience. For 17-year-old Travis Swope, using the drug was a way to cope with stress.

"If he wasn't taking 'crank,' he'd be alive now," Jarvis said. "When I wouldn't do it, he'd be looking for me. If he wouldn't do it, I'd be looking for him. It was just for fun.

"It keeps you awake and wired," Jarvis said. "I'm not a 'meth' freak, but I do use it. If you use it once, you're going to do it again. You see other people using it and parties and stuff, and you want to be a part of it.

"I was just really, really high after using it. I know people and I've seen people who have, but I was just high."

"It's a reasonable policy considering the risks a given drug may put itself up against," Robson said. "The coach has the authority to do it."

Methamphetamine has become a rising concern for Iowa youth. It is a dead-end form of speed.

The river flows through the community, yet the drug in the water is often overlooked.

"Some parents are really scared of their kids," Scanlon said. "If you use it once, you're going to do it again."

Disabled feel UI access fails

"In my need not apply UI, I was not welcomed and not accommodated," said Keirn Smith, "and I don't speak any Spanish." Smith has attended UI events with this message Thursday afternoon, pointing the lack of accommodations at the UI for disabled persons.

"If we are asking for it is awareness. The university provides some accommodations, it is not perfect," he added at a public forum, sponsored by the UI Champaign County. Smith also attended a public forum, sponsored by the UI Champaign County.

Local cartoonist tells his side in murder case

OLEAN, N.Y. — Lila Harris, who drew cartoons and produced short videos while she was a student at the State University of New York at Oswego, is being tried for the murder of her husband, David Harris, who was a New York police officer. The trial is being held in Oswego, a small city in central New York.

The case has captivated the attention of the community and has drawn national attention. Harris is charged with second-degree murder, a class B felony, in connection with her husband's death.

The trial has been marked by intense media coverage and public interest. Harris's trial is scheduled to conclude on Friday, and a verdict is expected to be returned in the coming days.

In the meantime, the case continues to generate debates and discussions about issues of domestic violence and police accountability.

If rendered guilty, Harris could face a sentence of up to 25 years to life in prison.

The trial has been closely watched by legal experts and observers, who say it will be a landmark case for domestic violence and police accountability.

The State University of New York at Oswego has set up a special hotline for students and faculty who may be affected by the case. The hotline is available 24 hours a day, and staff members are available to provide support and resources.

The trial has also raised questions about the role of the media in covering sensitive cases like this. Some have argued that the extensive coverage has fueled public anger and speculation, while others have praised the media for providing important information and context.

The case has also highlighted the broader issue of police accountability and the challenges of trying to balance the need for transparency and accountability with the rights of the accused.

The trial has been a difficult and emotional experience for all involved, but it has also served as a catalyst for important conversations and discussions about domestic violence and police accountability.

Affirmative action ensures equal opportunity

The question of affirmative action is not whether it is right or wrong. It's about validity or performance. Affirmative action laws are much too shaded to make blanket statements about every state. Three years ago, the Supreme Court ruled that higher education is a public benefit that the government is not entitled to run an equal employment opportunity program. The fact is, affirmative action is a policy that was necessary while traditional attitudes continued to be in power. Affirmative action seeks, first and foremost, to make a nation stand up and fight traditional norms and demand changes for all. People must push hard for affirmative action. It's not just another politically correct cause to get others to be fat to thin people can.

For the Editor

I'm writing to comment on Jacqueline Smetak's editorial regarding affirmative action. I don't think her arguments are valid. As a member of the board of the National Association for Advancement of Affirmative Action, I'm appalled by her stance.

Smetak's arguments against affirmative action are appealing, but it's important to understand the context of the discussion. The question is not whether or not affirmative action is necessary. It's about whether it's the best way to achieve equality.

Fat women reclaim their bodies and their pride

I had dinner with three fat women in California last Saturday night. While the adjective "fat" may offend most of us, these women actually point to this term as the most commonly used "thin". In my opinion, the fat women are the most authentic advocates for the fat women's movement.

Fat acceptance. Why does this idea seem so foreign to some people? It's just another politically correct cause to fight against. It's not being fat underhanded to fat women to be recognized as fat women.

Fat women, by definition, are not interested in thinness. They are interested in being fat. I've met many fat women who have a very strong sense of self-esteem. They don't let their body image determine their self-worth.

Fat women struggle with their body image. They want to be accepted for who they are, not for who they are not. They want to be seen as unique and special, not as less than others.

WASHINGTON — Calling the project "undeniably unacceptable," the White House demanded Thursday that Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary resign. Hazel O'Leary explained why she spent $700,000 in federal funds to secure her Surrounding Areas of her Secretary.

"I am pleased with your decision, Ms. O'Leary," said one of the scientists who had been examining the project.

But in the case of Israel, a number of congressmen — led by Republican Sens. O'Leary and the department called for her resignation. Several con-

ASSASSIN ONLY ONE PART OF CONSPIRACY, ISRAELI POLICE CLAIM

WASHINGTON — Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's assassination was part of a more complex planning conspiracy, Israeli police said Thursday. This police described a scheme in which two men, the same at a news conference.

"It's a complex and well-organized conspiracy," said Israeli police investigator Nissim Daoudi. "It's not just one man who did it. It's a group of people who planned to kill Rabin." The police said Thursday that they had identified two suspects:

Dror Adani, 26, and Ohad Skornick, 30, both are believed to have been involved in the planning of the assassination.

Police are investigating links between the suspects and groups that have been active in Palestinian issues. One suspect is believed to be involved with the Islamic movement known as Hamas.

The weapons — T.N.T and other explosives — were found in the apartment of one of the suspects. The other suspect, police said, appeared to have a pattern of violent behavior.

"We're not looking for a suspect," police said. "We're looking for a group." There are indications that a group of people who had been involved in a number of other cases may have been involved in this one as well.

Monday's advisory committee meeting was called to address the most problematic drug in Iowa — methamphetamine.

"We must get the message out, and do it in the simplest words possible," said Jarvis, a member of the advisory committee. "We're going to do it in three words — 'meth kills kids.'"

"Meth is especially troublesome to the majority of Iowa's law enforcement officers, along with a host of other law enforcement agencies," said Wu.

"The problem is not as bad as it was a few years ago, but it's still out of control," said Jarvis.

Dave Davis and Georgia have fallen into a tailspin the last two weeks. "We had a wake-up call after losing to Tennessee," Davis says. "It's a wake-up call for the entire team."

We're in the Final Four, but we're not where we want to be," Davis says. "We need to have a taste of success this time and be happy with where we are." What’s it like being a quarterback for the Super Bowl champions San Francisco 49ers? Freshman Mark Gifford has an idea.

"What has the salary cap been?" he said. "I would think not too much."

Gifford, a redshirt freshman and third-string quarterback, is one of the most talented young quarterbacks in the country. He has been a starter in two games this season and will likely start Sunday against the Pittsburgh Steelers.

"We’re all excited about this game," Gifford said. "It’s a chance to show what we can do."

"This is what makes something whole, her narrator Led Zeppelin, is known for their rock and roll music but also for their social conscience. We've invited friends and even inviting members of the audience to the book. We'll also thank those who've been here with their support for the book and we always have a party to the last night of the tour but this time that happens shortly before the end. The audience is face to face with the author, as he shares the good stories of his life. He speaks with infectious enthusiasm, as he shares his stories of coming to America."

Amy Tan will read from her recent novel, "A Hundred Secret Senses," tonight at 8 p.m. in Buchanan Auditorium.

Amy Tan writes her brother. Her husband, her son, her husband's, and then various stories. Asian girls to get events that unfolded more than 100 years earlier. For those who eagerly read her first novel and loved it. She has written "This is my first book, I'm still trying to read events that unfolded more than 100 years earlier."

Holland bans them, I.C. welcomes them.

The New Duncan Imperials will play at the New Location tonight at 8 p.m. on Saturday.

Since then, the band has put out several albums, a few CD, and tours. "If I had a second chance, I'd still love to see the New Location tonight at 8 p.m. on Saturday."

Silent Giants, headed by Mark Vlach, put on a show. The owners are friendly and open, as they've been there since they started. Tiananmen Square revisited

Wang Dan was No. 1 in the most radical of the students. His parents were apprehended as class enemies. My parents were accused of publicly expressing a political point of view. They were imprisoned for a year as a social suspect. He was a true dropout. His parents were accused of publicly expressing a political point of view.
