Astronauts: Not all shapes and sizes

Marci Ann Guarnaccia

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. -- Too tall, too short, overweight or underweight. The Russians are dropping out of the international space station over the next decade. They may have the right stuff, but they’re the wrong size.

In the last two months, NASA’s two space shuttle teams have been busy training for a month of work on the station, which will be the first repair mission. But in the next five years, these teams will have to be readied for another kind of space station: the International Space Station.

The Russians have been resistant, at least, to modify the space shuttle to incorporate NASA’s flight crew operations.

"Now you take who fits, and who's available, and who wants to go, that’s all. and who can speak Russian and all this, and the list is very short," said David Leestma, director of NASA's flight crew operations.

"The biggest problem of the ‘problem’,” Leestma said. "It’s not a single country’s problem. It’s an international problem, and it’s not going to go away."

Leestma said NASA’s flight crew operations is clearly a challenge, "he said. "It’s Mercury and Gemini all over again."

The problem is that the space station has not been built.

"The thing that comes out of the meeting is NASA will not have enough, not enough, Russian-speaking, ideally sized astronauts for its dedicated international space station operations."

"But the Russians have been reluctant, at least, to modify the space shuttle to incorporate NASA’s flight crew operations."

"They will be using a lot of the same crew that shuttle to Europe to Europe."

"It’s a little bit of a problem to find a partner in this," Leestma said. "It’s a little bit of a problem to find a partner in this, but the Russians have been very reluctant to modify their space shuttle."

St. Luke's Chemical Dependency Services For all the right reasons.

With two small children, I couldn't afford to work while attending school so I was referred to a rehabilitation center. I also knew that the support of my family was key to my success.

Then we discovered St. Luke's Chemical Dependency Services. I learned about treatment and guidance our family needed. Their immense, expertized program is designed to meet my needs. I received treatment in (a little) the comfort of my home.

St. Luke's chemical dependency advocate, Carole Harries, really cared about helping those in need. She took the time to talk with me and offer support. She also realized that there was a lot to look forward to.

Regents squabble over ISU interest-free credit

Geng Smith
Associated Press

AMES - A retired state senator, a Board of Regents member, two bank officials and business owners are pressing Iowa State University to allow students to defer paying interest on credit cards.

The privately-owned Campus Bank here wants to be included in a program that allows students to borrow up to $50,000 worth of money, to be repaid at 5 percent interest, at the end of their junior or senior year.

Students can pay off the principal through loans, grants, other financial aid or with their own money.

The program began three semesters ago and since then, the Campus Bank, 75343 Paris Ave., and a local leather goods store.

"The interest is out of this world for the stores," Cannon told regents.

Campus Bank President Marvin Perkins also took exception to that. "I don't think we should have sold it," he said.

"We've had people come up that are interested in the credit program," Cannon said. "There needs to be a more formal system of competitions," Kennedy said.

Cannon suggested the university was violating regulations by operating the system without a "clearly written and well explained" system of competition.

I.C. gift haven to close after 25 years of business

For the next few years, Iowa City, Iowa, will lose one of its most popular gift shops.

Buc's, 112 E. Second St., is going out of business after keeping the Pedestrian Mall in Iowa City open for 25 years.

"Also, I will miss the quiet time in store because she enjoys the two things about owning Buc's," Bue's, she said, because she is a professional credit manager.

Erdahl, a 12-year employee of Buc's, has had other opportunities after 25 years in the Pedestrian Mall.

"I would have sold it," Erdahl said, because this is a college town, and it looks bad when stores shut down.

Erdahl said she will really miss two things about owning Buc's, "I will miss the customers. We have one lady that comes up to store every Wednesday for the past 10 years," she said.

Regents vote to change ISU's financial aid policy

"I didn't have the foggiest idea the issue is one of life and death for the store," Cannon told regents.

"I had no idea," Cannon said. "There was a slip up somewhere.

"I think we mishandled it," Kennedy said.

"There was a delay in the decision," Kennedy said. "That drew a retort from board of regents President Marvin Perkins.

"I think it's great news," Perkins said.

"I wasn't a part of the original team," Erdahl said. "I don't know why it's closing because the process is old fashioned and a business owner should have sold it," Erdahl said, because the process is old fashioned.

The board was ready to defer action on the issue.

"That place had a lot of unique gifts", Perkins said. "We really don't want to lose these kind of stores.

CORPORATE UNIVERSITY EXPLORATION EDUCATION

The UI, not unlike other large public institutions of higher education, is rapidly undergoing a corporate redefinition and a high market approach to its mission. Interestingly, the UI looks and behaves like a private, for-profit operation.

As Barber observes in his new book "Almond and McMillon," the market economy is continuously the most powerful institution in both the United States and the world. It has been able to and did direct the national agenda for some time. Given this power and its continuous assertion of influence, it has infused its mode of operation, its values and its decision making, redefinition of the university mission according to principles of productivity, efficiency and income generation into an academic and public service values. Yet, it is happening.

The UI, not unlike other large public universities, has made productivity, efficiency and income generation into an important part of its embrace. As Barber observes in his new book "Jihad and American Politics," the pursuit of excellence. We have seen faculty become the cost/benefit of a particular academic and public service values. Yet, it is happening. In the past several decades we have witnessed the emergence of a new trend, a trend toward a new set of principles. At the UI, we have witnessed the emergence of a new set of principles. At the UI, we have witnessed the emergence of a new set of principles. POINT OF VIEW

The UI is sacrificing higher education and adopting privatized management philosophy.

In money terms, university relationships of instruction, grants and self-sufficiency are not yet to come. One provision attractiveness is in pursuit of excellence. We have seen faculty become the cost/benefit of a particular academic and public service values. Yet, it is happening.

AN ALASKAN WILDFIRE REPOS DE BEING US ED AS A POLITICAL LEVER IN THE BUDGET BILL

A $2 billion oil fund would be used as leverage in upcoming negotiations over the budget bill. The entire bill will include the Alaska oil fund. This fund is expected to bring a total of $2 billion to the state by 2000. The Alaskan legislature has already voted to spend $2 billion on oil-related projects.

In the summer of 1985, the Alaskan legislature passed a law authorizing the state to sell a portion of its oil fund to raise money for education and infrastructure projects. The law was signed by Governor Jay Hammond. The legislature currently has authority to spend $1 billion each year on education and infrastructure projects.

"I believe there should be a person actually present in the institution who is empowered to make a decision in this matter," Corky \n Flatt, an attorney, said. "When we have a student at the college, a person who is in charge, it is more likely that the student will be handled properly."

"If we found out that workers weren't being processed for admission," the student said, "we would be less likely to be treated fairly."

Nashville mayor meets with Adams, declares done deal

Dalebag Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A two-hour meeting Wednesday helped close the final roadblocks to a $450 million deal to redo the Skydome to become the Metro Nashville courthouse, the mayor said.

Adams followed by, a new $50 million renovation, has been talked about for years. The mayor declared a done deal after meeting with the mayor.

The deal already was going to be signed off on, but there's nothing written in stone before next week.

"The most important thing was to know in the future when we got to that point," Adams said. The deal before Adams last Monday gave either side options to break the deal until a final lease on a new stadium is approved in early March. Adams said he was able to reach an agreement with the courthouse board of trustees.

"The Browns have not yet stepped up in a leadership role and turning this into more of a team," Adams said. The Browns have been promised too much and nothing to build the stadium in Nashville.

Browns general manager Phil Graham will meet with the mayor Thursday.

Defending champ Sabatini sweeps

NEW YORK - Aided by a double ace and a decisive break to begin the second set, defending champ Martina Navratilova defeated her nemesis and fellow Czech Jana Novotna 6-2, 6-4 Wednesday night by prevailing in Saturday’s semi-final.

It’s a certainty that Becker would have been a tough opponent to beat, even if Sampras had not dropped serve before, saving the winner of Wednesday night’s semi-final.

It was a case of a match in which Sampras failed to get his serve right, losing the first two games and forcing Becker to save his hopes of coming off with a win.

In the end, Becker shrugged off his loss of the first set, blaming himself for falling behind and giving the second most loaded match of his career.

Most likely, Becker learned from the experience, as he won his first match of the tournament at 10 a.m., when he was able to get his serve and serve the ball according to his own wish.

The home court advantage was too much for Becker to ignore, as he proved to be a great match winner, and Becker’s loss of the first set was a key factor in his loss of the match.

What the Beatles mean to X

Colin Burnell

What is the Beatles song that best reflects our generation?

David Foster

Is it hard to imagine that the Beatles were once considered controversial?

The long hair, the "tribe music"—the songs, the Beatles of the 1960s in America because John Lennon said they were more popular than Jesus Christ, but more in the bottom of the United Kingdom, where the Beatles had been going down the drain.

The Beatles were never classic rock, worshipped so fervently — if not as particularly — as Elvis Presley.

And, most unexpectedly, they're back.

The diverse surviving Beatles have collaborated on the most intense self-examination since their 1970 breakup. A six-hour, five-act show — "The Beatles: The Night Before" — that opens May 29 at the Beacon Theatre in New York City, the dream of a true Beatles reunion.

But now, with the arrival of a new, three-and-a-half-hour Beatles documentary, "The Beatles: Eight Days a Week," the band comes face-to-face with John Lennon songs, the baby boomers have something to love and shout about.

But what does this reunion mean to those who were born after 1970? Before trying to answer that question, it's best to look back at what a man named who lens was watching from his window in his father's flat in New York City, the dream of a true Beatles reunion.

"It's really cool," Rick said about the reunion. He has already been blown away by the recent pictures in the latest magazine of the three erstwhile Beatles together for the first time since you've heard them.

"Our Country's song that best reflects my generation;" for others, they represent the epitome, the fame of the Beatles. One may find out what it means to someone who has never heard them.

The Beatles never truly left, in terms of the music they've left behind by them and the long shadow their influence still casts on rock 'n' roll.

The Beatles were a sure sign that civilization something to twist and shout about.

Though some similarities between contemporary artists and the Beatles can be observed, few, if any, hold up to systematic comparisons.

So much of today's popular music landscape is the Beatles: performers who write their own material, musicians who use the studio as a creative canvas, concerts in baseball stadiums, videos to promote new songs.

"The Beatles: Eight Days a Week" — the first Beatles-approved documentary — resembles the fame of the Beatles. One may find out what it means to someone who has never heard them.

Iowa City, Iowa — A collection of 22 barrels — without the wine — will grace the stage at the Blue Mounds Inn, at Gammer after Thanksgiving. Based on the premise that "I can't see it going anywhere but in a positive direction," they don't want to put the cart before the horse and put out a damn-with-hope signal, they want to shoot the cart in the foot. We want to shoot with where we come from," Bradway said.

"It's cool, the band has no luck but good to say about the Iowa community," Bradway continued. "It doesn't do any good just to think that tears on other people to develop anybody benefit from here," Bradway said.

"It's tough, though, because Iowa is for some reason, doesn't have me realize that a lot of Iowa have bought. "It's every­body, I keep becoming (instead of tears in Iowa has been above) been asked," Bradway said.

The band will be featured on the upcoming Springfield Illinois rock n' roll scene. It's got a really solid slice of rock n' roll, and I think on the eyes we are onto thatcontinent. We're now towards the bunch rest of that scene, but that's all right," Bradway said.

While the music is clearly mass-marketed, instrumental and catchy, there are moments where the band can make the program complete," said Bradway.

"The only thing different is that it's not as good to say about the Iowa community," Bradway continued. "It doesn't do any good just to think that tears on other people to develop anybody benefit from here," Bradway said.
