Greeks self-impose alcohol ban

Sarah Lueck
The Daily Iowan

Though UI administrators will lift the ban on alcohol at fraternity parties today, Greek community representatives announced at Sunday's town meeting Greeks will temporarily remain under a self-imposed ban.

"The self-imposed ban is a time for education," Panhellenic Association President Cari Tarnowski said.

After fulfilling certain alcohol-education requirements, the houses then will be allowed to hold social functions, said Matt Ross, Interfraternity Council president.

"The presidents decided that representatives must fulfill a four-week risk-management training course, and individual chapters must hold educational workshops to make new members aware of new policies and responsibilities," he said.

Two fraternities on campus, Sigma Alpha Epsilon and Alpha Tau Omega, have already gone com-

UI alcohol-related death spurs local action to prevent excessive drinking

John Hunter
The Daily Iowan

Drinking at UI football games is out of control in UI Public Safety Director Chuck Green's eyes, but the problem is not just with unruly UI students.

"We have 35 year olds punching out each other in the stands," Green said. "I assure you that on football Saturdays, things are going to change — they need to change."

About 200 people who attended Sunday's town meeting, a three-part forum titled "The Effects of Alcohol Abuse in a Learning Community," joined Green in open discussion between community leaders and the public about the role of alcohol at the UI and in the community.

The town meeting was prompted by the Sept. 8 alcohol-related death of UI sophomore and Lambda Chi Alpha associate member Matthew Garofalo.

Alcohol use and abuse is not simply a UI problem, and the entire community has a stake in controlling negative behavior, said UI President Mary Sue Coleman, who addressed the forum first.

"One of the things that has impressed me about the UI is the willingness to be open about this issue," Coleman said.

Afterward, the town meeting resembled a jazz band for Dean pletely dry.

Along with educational programs, IFC-Panhel will be tougher on underage drinking, Ross said.

"There will be a birthday list at the door of the parties, and everyone will be issued a wristband," he said. "And chapters still have to register social events with the IFC."

Attending a party without a wristband will be a direct violation of the new policy, Tarnowski said, and penalties for breaking the rules will be stiffer than in the past. IFC-Panhel party checkers also will make an unlimited number of visits to social events, up from their usual two appearances, Tarnowski said.

"They have been expected to come twice," Ross said. "People have understood they're not going to get checked again."

The UI placed the temporary alcohol moratorium on the fraternities in response to the alcohol-related death of UI sophomore Matthew Garofalo on Sept. 8 at the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity house.

On a national level, leaders of Greek organizations are trying to get rid of their wild reputations, Ross said.

"There are freshmen coming in who have seen 'Animal House' five times, and they think it looks like the most fun in the world," Ross said. "That's why they're joining, but they have a misconception of what we're really about."

JONES NOMINATED FOR POSITION

UI Dean of Students up for Illinois post

Cary Jordan
The Daily Iowan

UI Dean of Students Phillip Jones has been nominated for the position of vice chancellor of Student Affairs at the University of Illinois, and after first withdrawing himself from consideration, he has changed his mind and is now willing to be a candidate.

"I owe it to myself to explore the possibilities," Jones said.

Illinois first nominated Jones for the position for the 1994-95 school year, and this time, after initially declining the nomination again, Jones reconsidered and accepted.

Nothing happened to change his mind, Jones said, only that his deep conviction and emotional ties to Illinois needed to be recognized.

"You must realize that Illinois is my alma mater," Jones said. "I've got very deep ties there. I'm not at all unhappy here at Iowa. I have very deep feelings for the University of Iowa. But if it wasn't for Illinois, I wouldn't be who I am today."

The position of vice chancellor of Student Affairs at Illinois is relatively similar to Jones' present position as UI Dean of Students; both deal closely with the conditions of student life on campus.

It would be difficult to sum up the responsibilities of the position in simple terms, said Pat Askew, interim vice chancellor of Student Affairs at Illinois.

Hawaii mulls legalizing gay marriages

Bruce Dunford
Associated Press

HONOLULU — A thorny issue facing Hawaii's reluctant legislature has the potential to affect laws in all 50 states: whether to allow men to marry men, women to marry women, and thereby grant them the social, legal and financial benefits afforded married heterosexuals.

Prodded by a special commission's 5-2 vote last month urging legalization of gay marriage, Hawaii's lawmakers — who just over a year ago voted to ban same-sex unions — face fresh debate on the question in this high-profile election year.

There is good reason one vote in distant Hawaii is carefully watched by 49 other state legislatures — and anticipated hopefully by hundreds of thousands of gay Americans. Heeding a clause in the Constitution, states generally agree to recognize each other's statutes — from driver's permits and vehicle registrations to court decisions and marriage licenses.

UI graduate instructor of Afro-American studies Brett Beemyn said, at the very best, such a law will allow gay couples in Iowa to take vacations to Hawaii to be married. But Beemyn said he was not optimistic Iowa lawmakers would be willing to recognize such a marriage.

"A number of people in the Iowa legislature are closed-minded when it comes to sexuality," Beemyn said.

In theory, two women or two men legally married in Hawaii would be considered legally married in any other state. Several states are already mulling ways to sidestep such recognition.

Hawaii legislators convened their 60-day session last Wednesday and promptly predicted the issue might take another year to resolve.

Complex issues like this take time, said Senate President Norman Mizuguchi. He also said the Legislature was more likely to consider the commission's secondary recommendation — to devise a comprehensive domestic partnership law.

This also seems to be the path favored by Gov. Ben Cayetano, who appointed the seven members of the Commission on Sexual Orientation and the Law last August.

Cayetano last week suggested the state should establish legal rights and obligations for domestic partners of the same or opposite sexes. Weddings would be religious matters, he said, and the government should quit the business of issuing marriage licenses altogether.

"The institution of marriage should be left to the church," Cayetano said. "The government needs to explore its role in marriages ... (and) should not be in the role of sanctifying marriages. That's when they run into problems."

Lamar Alexander: GOP's man in plaid

When Lamar Alexander made a guest appearance on "Saturday Night Live" last October, actors played the parts of Bob Dole and Phil Gramm. Lamar Alexander played Lamar Alexander.

Alexander has been introducing himself to Iowans for more than a year now in his drive to become the Republican presidential nominee.

While Iowa Republican activists are now familiar with his trademark red-and-black plaid shirts, they have not flocked to support his campaign. Alexander is struggling to hit double digits in Iowa polls.

"Neither his personality nor his stand on the issues have excited voters," said Brian Kennedy, chairperson of the Republican Party of Iowa.

However, Alexander supporters cite his Tennessee background as a reason he can defeat President

'KIDS' SELLS OUT

Risque film draws capacity crowds

Kristen Mullin
The Daily Iowan

The gritty, emotional movie "KIDS," which ended its six-day run in Iowa City Sunday, left heavy hearts and record ticket sales in its wake.

The film, which ran Tuesday through Sunday at the Bijou Theatre in the Union, sold out every show — an unprecedented record for the 175-seat theater.

"People were waiting in line yesterday when we opened at noon," said UI sophomore Tom Pringle, an employee for the UI Box Office. "We were sold out in approximately 15 minutes. I even saw some people scalping tickets."

The movie, which loosely follows the sexual exploits of a teen-age boy who has infected a young girl with AIDS, was shut out of mainstream theaters when it was released last year. Its in-your-face look at teen sexuality, violence and drug use made it the topic of debate for censors and filmgoers.

The general reaction of people after the film was one of shock, Pringle said.

"Most people came out with their mouths open," he said.

The Bijou was the only theater in Iowa City to play "KIDS." Bijou

Residents in missing TV anchor's hometown cling to hope

Associated Press
LONG PRAIRIE, Minn. — The weekly prayer services for Jodi Huisentruit's safe return have been reduced to once a month.
 Pink banners, though, still flutter from buildings and residents still wear pink ribbons on their coats seven months after one of their own was apparently abducted.
 The banners and ribbons are evidence residents of this central Minnesota town haven't forgotten Huisentruit, who grew up here. Huisentruit is the 27-year-old TV anchor who was apparently abducted last summer from outside her apartment building in Mason City, Iowa.

 Police and private investigators say they have uncovered nothing to build a case against anyone. Mason City's police chief said he hopes continued media exposure will provide a lead to help solve the case. Huisentruit's older sister will be on an upcoming episode of TV's "Sally Jessy Raphael."
 "I think about her every day, and I pray for her every day," said John Stefanich, the elementary school principal who was Huisentruit's high school golf coach. "It'd sure be nice to get a break."
 For many in Long Prairie, the frustration of knowing so little after waiting so long only compounds the anger, sadness and loss.

 "It's just the unknowing," said Mayor Art Rowan, a high school math teacher who taught Huisentruit. "That's the worst part of the whole thing — you can't put anything to rest."
 Mason City Police Chief Jack Schlieper said investigators have pursued more than 1,000 leads or tips since June. "To date, none provide us with information that would lead us to a solid suspect," he said.
 Four to five investigators from his department, the state of Iowa and the FBI continue to work the case, he said, but "leads are coming in very slowly."

 Private investigators hired by Huisentruit's family, Patrick McCarthy of Minneapolis and Doug Jasa of Omaha, have theories on what happened, but they admit those scenarios are based only on instinct and interviews.
 "There's no real evidence, no apparent motive, no eyewitnesses to speak of," McCarthy said.
 Huisentruit disappeared about 4 a.m. June 27 from the parking lot of her apartment building while on her way to work. Co-workers called police about three hours later, when she didn't show up at the TV station. Authorities say they believe she was abducted, largely because personal items were found near her car, including a pair of women's shoes, car keys, earrings and a hair dryer she would have taken to work to prepare for her morning news broadcast.

 Several people apparently heard screams that morning, Jasa said, although no one responded or called police. Authorities initially wondered whether Huisentruit could have snapped and skipped town. But the private investigators and friends dismiss that theory, saying she was too responsible to leave loved ones wondering about her whereabouts.

Police have said they believe the abductor knew Huisentruit, largely because she was so active, friendly and social. Perhaps, one theory goes, she was harmed by someone who had a romantic interest in her. Or maybe she was stalked, the victim of foul play at the hands of an obsessive fan whom she may never have met. McCarthy said investigators have tried to track every tip from the obvious to the obscure.
 "The infuriating part is, the answer is there somewhere," McCarthy said. "It's in the soup somewhere; it's just a matter of pulling it out."

NEWS DIRECTOR ASPIRATES BEFORE OPERATION

KCJJ on-air vasectomy falls through

Chad Graham
 The Daily Iowan
 KCJJ news director Anthony Weller's vasectomy didn't go quite the way the station planned — in fact, it didn't go at all.
 Weller's vasectomy was to air live from UI Hospitals and Clinics Friday morning during "The Captain and Anthony" morning show. The station had planned on having Jim "The Cable Guy" give a play-by-play account of the procedure.
 The show was airing live until about 9:40 a.m., when Weller aspirated before the operation could take place.

"I vomited about a half a cup of vomit into my lungs," Weller said from his room at UIHC. "I spent a day in the Intensive Care Unit and yesterday downstairs — I'm OK now."
 Stomach acid was the culprit, he said, and he doesn't know how much of the show's play-by-play was broadcast before he aspirated.
 "I didn't wake up until 4 p.m.," he said. "They informed me of what happened and they updated me on my condition. I aspirated because the pH levels were too high."
 The broadcast of the operation had many at the UIHC in an uproar, including the attending physician, UI urology Professor Dr. Jay Sandlow, who refused to let the station broadcast from his operating room.

 Weller said the station's plans to air his vasectomy are sketchy.
 "My vasectomy is going to take place on Feb. 2," he said. "I don't know if we're going to air it."
 Eldean Borg, information director for UIHC, said the procedure was inappropriate and the broadcast of the vasectomy was not going to happen.
 "It was never going to be aired," he said. "The radio station did not consult with UI Hospitals. There was never a plan to do that."

'KIDS' REACTION

 director Sally Shafto said they decided to bring the movie to town to serve the UI community.
 "The Bijou has the responsibility to bring diverse programming to the UI," she said.
 One of the reasons the film did so well was because of the publicity surrounding its showing, Shafto said. Two articles were run in the DI, and the Bijou had its calendars printed a week earlier than usual so the public would know the film was coming.
 "The people were primed for the film," Shafto said. "They were ready and waiting."
 UI junior Donna Stinehart said

"The film was very blunt about sex with kids who were quite young. A lot of people I went with got sick to their stomachs."
 UI junior Donna Stinehart though she couldn't closely identify with the film, she was sad to see women falling into traps of seduction — especially such young women.
 "The subject matter was very disturbing, but really well-done," she said. "The film was very blunt about sex with kids who were quite young. A lot of people I went with got sick to their stomachs."

 One of Stinehart's male roommates said he was ashamed of his gender after viewing the movie.
 Stinehart said she could see why "KIDS" has stirred up controversy, but felt it was a necessary film.
 "People shy away from talking about controversial material," she said. "If you don't talk about it, it feeds (conservatism)."
 On Thursday night, Shafto had intended to cancel the show because of the hazardous weather, but let "KIDS" run because it had sold out by 4 p.m.
 "KIDS" will not extend its run this semester because the theater's calendar is already booked, Shafto said.

Stormy weather brings deaths, disaster across U.S.

Flooding on the Ohio River forced hundreds of people from their homes Sunday, while residents of flooded towns upstream in Pennsylvania and upstate New York scraped mud from soaked homes and businesses.

The past week's burst of flooding, snow, ice and cold had been blamed for at least 35 deaths from the Plains into New England.

President Clinton on Sunday declared Pennsylvania a disaster area because of the flooding.

"I told everyone I got a flood for my birthday," Wheeling, W.Va. resident Thelma Schramm said. "It's sad. My husband and I (are) retired, and I think maybe it's time for an apartment."

Family heirloom bought by Boston museum for nearly $1.2 million

NEW YORK (AP) — As a homework assignment in 1750, Hannah Otis sewed stitches of fine silk and metallic threads into a snapshot view of Boston. Saturday, her descendants sold the needlework for nearly $1.2 million.

The large embroidery, designed to hang over a fireplace mantle, was bought by the Boston Museum of Fine Arts at an auction at Sotheby's. It had been on loan to the museum since 1954.

Her work was passed down through six generations of the Otis family. "I cherish the fact that Hannah — as a young woman — had the independence of spirit to express herself beyond the conventions of her time," wrote Martha Gray Otis, a direct descendant of Hannah's brother, Samuel, in the auction house's catalog for the sale.

Hannah, the daughter of a prominent patriot family, was about 18 years old when she stitched the 24 1/2-inch by 52 1/2-inch sampler as part of her curriculum at a Boston boarding school.

George Burns' 100th birthday marked with national celebration

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — After years of poking fun at his age in the spotlight, George Burns spent his 100th birthday Saturday at home with a private audience — his family.

No celebration was planned, said the comedian's manager, Irving Fein. "George is the same as he was a week ago. He is weak, and he's not eating much. He'll just take it easy today."

Still, the century mark wasn't going by unnoticed.

In Las Vegas, Caesars Palace planned to display an hourlong "Happy Birthday" message on its 70-foot-tall electronic marquee to its longtime headliner. Burns had to cancel birthday performances at Caesars because of frail health.

On cable, the American Movie Classics channel showed comedy shorts of Burns and his late wife, Gracie Allen. Burns' movie, "Oh, God!" was shown on superstition WGN.

Birthday wishes also came from the White House.

"George Burns' knowing smile and dry wit have touched the hearts and funny bones of three generations," the Clintons said.

Armed: Congress won't raise debt ceiling

WASHINGTON — Contradicting other Republican leaders, House Majority Leader Dick Arme said Congress will refuse to raise the federal debt ceiling next month unless President Clinton agrees to GOP budget-cutting measures.

Arme's statements on NBC's "Meet the Press" put Republicans on a collision course with the White House which could bring the fiscal integrity of the country into question.

House Republicans in particular have been reluctant to pass stopgap funding measures for the 1996 budget and raise the debt ceiling until the White House moves closer to the Republicans' seven-year balanced budget plan.

Talks on the balanced budget broke down last week, and it's unlikely there will be any progress in settling the differences before President Clinton delivers his State of the Union address on Tuesday. Congress returns from a two-week recess today.

"Let's not play games with the future of this country or the economy of this country," White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta said later on "Meet the Press," warning that Clinton would not accept a debt limit extension with strings attached.

Last week on the same news program, House Budget Committee Chairman John Kasich, R-Ohio, gave assurances that Republicans would extend the government's borrowing authority before Feb. 15, when interest due to bondholders would push the debt beyond the current $4.9 trillion limit.

"John Kasich's willingness to vote for it to the contrary," said Arme, R-Texas, "it's not coming through the House unless it carries with it something that is a substantial share of our agenda of decreasing the size and the intrusiveness of government."

"We have a House that is committed to getting this job done, and we're going to use every instrument we can to move the ball forward," he said.

Arme said he would support linking the debt limit increase to language terminating the Commerce Department, a top priority of the Republican Congress, and preventing the Treasury secretary from "ever again raiding the trust funds of federal workers' retirement programs."

After Clinton last November vetoed a debt ceiling measure with similar restrictions, Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin twice tapped government trust funds to avoid exceeding the borrowing limit.

Rubin said last week that he would be forced to take further actions so the government can avoid default after Feb. 15 and suggested that this time finding appropriate accounting maneuvers might be more difficult.

Arme said Congress would probably agree to another temporary spending bill when the current measure expires on Jan. 26, avoiding a third government shutdown. He said those government programs that haven't had their budgets approved would be funded at about 75 percent of 1995 levels.

Panetta said the president would sign such a bill.

But he predicted that a GOP attempt to use the debt ceiling to force Clinton's hand on the balanced budget would fail. "Raising these kinds of blackmail approaches to try to get their agenda adopted just has not worked. It's been a disaster."

The Senate has been less eager than the House to confront Clinton on 1996 spending and the debt ceiling, but Senate Majority Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss., asked about Arme's comments, agreed that the debt ceiling bill will not be "clean."

"There are two branches of government here and we have to have our role in developing that action" to extend the debt limit, he said.

House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., responded, "I thought what Dick Arme said this morning was the height of irresponsibility."

88 PERCENT OF VOTE

Election triumph gives Arafat mandate for peace

Donna Abu-Nasr Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — Winning 88 percent of the vote, Yasser Arafat emerged Sunday from the first Palestinian election with a resounding mandate to complete peace with Israel and lead his people to independence.

Final results of the race for presidency released by the Central Election Commission late Sunday gave Arafat 88.1 percent of the total vote and his opponent Samiha Khalil 9.3 percent. Officials said 2.6 percent of the ballot slips were invalid.

Arafat loyalists will also control the newly elected 88-member Palestinian parliament, though he may have to share some power with uprising activists, outspoken women and other independents who until now were shut out of decision-making.

At least 50 of the legislators were members of Arafat's Fatah faction, including 10 who had served in his appointed interim Cabinet, according to unofficial results released Sunday night.

Despite the historic event, the mood in the West Bank and Gaza Strip was subdued Sunday as Palestinians began to observe the Muslim holy month of Ramadan with dawn-to-dusk fasting.

Winners postponed celebrations until after the "iftar," the festive meal which breaks the fast after sundown.

Arafat will convene the legislature for the first time after Ramadan ends, said spokesperson Nabil Abu Irdeineh. That date was not yet set.

Arafat joked Sunday about his landslide victory, suggesting a lower rate of approval would probably have looked more democratic. "I was looking for 51 percent," Arafat said after meeting with former U.S. President Jimmy Carter, who led a 40-member election observer team.

The voting was marred by reports of fraud, violations which ranged from stuffing ballot boxes to voting more than once to illiterate voters having their ballots filled out for them by Arafat loyalists.

Russian attack ravages village

Chris Bird Associated Press

PERVOMAYSKAYA, Russia — This quiet farming village in southern Russia has been pulverized.

Patches of gray ash are all that remain of the village's winter hay. Most of the houses, made of mud and reeds, have been obliterated. Blood darkens the snow around the bodies of dead Chechen rebels.

One cow stands quietly, still alive, with her stomach hanging out from a gash in her side.

Dazed villagers huddle in small groups, asking one another if they should rebuild or move on after a massive Russian assault last week that came out of the blue.

"Nothing's left — no animals, nothing," sobs 65-year-old Patimat Gadzhieva, lifting her arms in despair. "What am I going to do? I'm old."

"Two buckets — that's all I have left," cries Sukaymat Yakhayeva, 39, holding them aloft next to the charred walls of her house.

Magomed Makhmudov just stares dumbfounded at the remains of his home. "It's winter," the 65-year-old said simply. "Where will I go?"

What's left of Pervomayskaya stands on the snow-blown steppes of Russia's mainly Muslim republic of Dagestan, near the border of breakaway Chechnya. Before last week, its main assets were farm animals.

Then it became a battleground when the Chechen rebels, trying to escape back to their separatist homeland after raiding nearby Kizlyar for hostages, were stopped at Pervomayskaya by Russian troops.

The town and surrounding villages were sealed off to reporters after the troops assaulted Pervomayskaya last week with heavy artillery, helicopter gunships and rockets following a five-day siege.

Nearly all the rebels were wiped out or taken prisoner. The death toll among the 120-odd hostages and the villagers is still not clear, although President Boris Yeltsin has claimed most hostages were saved.

The village was finally reopened to outsiders last weekend. An AP reporter who drove into town on Sunday was one of the first foreign correspondents to survey the destruction.

Everything in Pervomayskaya changed between Monday and Thursday, when Russia declared the four-day assault over. Not much had changed, apparently, between Thursday and Sunday.

Cows and sheep lay dead and bloated in the frozen streets. Timbers that once had been roofs loomed like ghastly skeletons in the icy fog. Not one house escaped the hail of metal that ripped through the town.

Trucks drove out of town laden with furniture, rugs and any other belongings the inhabitants could save.

Shrapnel lay strewn next to Pervomayskaya's new mosque. It stood roofless, the iron structure of the minaret blown flat onto the ground.

Four male corpses lay unclaimed in the streets, one wrapped in the parachute from a flare. They were almost certainly dead Chechen guerrillas.

One wore a bloodied green headband, the symbol of the rebels' willingness to die in the "Gazavat," or holy war — their 13-month-old struggle for independence from Moscow.

A young man from the village pulled back the blanket covering one dead guerrilla, spat away in anger and swore. "Why did he have to come and fight here?" he said.

"Mercenaries," cursed another man. An explosion rent the still air — Russian sappers detonating a mine.

"I nearly walked into a trip-wired mine yesterday," said Sasha, a major from Russia's Emergency Situations Ministry, who led a team clearing away bodies. He did not give his full name.

His men, dressed in red overalls, worked near a pile of rubble crowned by an iron chimney stack. It was all that was left of the village school, where some hostages allegedly had been held. Russian authorities had denied the school had been targeted.

They said Saturday 26 Russian soldiers and 153 Chechen guerrillas were killed, and 30 guerrillas were captured. The guerrillas' leader apparently got away with some fighters and some hostages.

Authorities said 82 hostages were freed and the rest were unaccounted for. At least 40 more people had died when the rebel raid began in Kizlyar.

"The disinformation here has been awful," said Sasha, the emergency worker, shaking his head.

Relatives of hostages still missing from Kizlyar, where the crisis began Jan. 9, wandered the streets in search for signs of their loved ones.

"We don't know what happened to my cousin," said Magomed Magomedov, 29, who was looking for his relative, police officer Gadzhikurban Gadzhikurbanov. "We remain hopeful that he is alive, that he escaped into the hills with the fighters," Magomedov said. "There has to be hope."

CREDIT CARDS SAFE ON NET

Consumer mistrust stifles sales on the Internet

Elizabeth Weise Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — You're hopping around the World Wide Web checking out cool sites and you stop in at one of the shiny new on-line malls sprouting up everywhere. There's that CD you've been meaning to get. You pull out your credit card, and you —

Stop. Technology hasn't stopped you; the technical part of making a purchase by computer was worked out long ago. The gods of commerce haven't stopped you; they're eager to sell through cyberspace.

What has stopped you is your own mistrust — the fear that by inputting your credit card number into a computer, you are opening yourself up to fraud. Perhaps, you think, some hacker will take my number and buy himself a new skateboard.

In fact, public fear of security risks on the Internet is stalling the boom many companies anticipated. But experts say sending your credit card number over the Internet to buy something is as safe as calling up L.L. Bean and ordering a sweater.

It's not that the computer security flaws being discovered every other week by bored graduate students — and trumpeted by the media — aren't problems. They're just not problems for the average user.

"If a person's standards are that they're not willing to send their credit card over the Internet, they probably shouldn't order anything by phone or from a store where they don't know the proprietor," said Rod Kuckro of Information and Interactive Services Report.

Said Douglas Barnes, who helps build secure computer systems for Electric Communities in Los Altos, Calif.: "Credit card information is given out to hundreds of thousands of low-paid clerks all over the country every day — it would be hard to imagine a less secure approach."

Security problems have been overhyped, even according to Simon Garfinkel, author of a book on one of the strongest publicly available encryption programs, Pretty Good Privacy.

Scares about security loopholes on the Internet only really affect large corporations who use computers to transfer sensitive information. Individuals buying a few CDs on line aren't at risk, Garfinkel said.

President eulogizes Barbara Jordan

Lawrence Knutson
Associated Press

HOUSTON — President Clinton honored former Congresswoman Barbara Jordan Saturday as a tower of spiritual and political strength who fought passionately for her race and her nation.

"Wherever she could and whenever she stood to speak, she jolted the nation's attention with her artful and articulate defense of the Constitution, the American dream and the common heritage and destiny we share, whether we like it or not," Clinton said.

Jordan, a former Democratic representative from Texas, died last week at age 59 of pneumonia and complications of leukemia.

Clinton recalled her 1976 speech to the Democratic National Convention, in which Jordan noted that when the Constitution was originally written, the words "We the People" did not apply to herself and other black Americans, most of whom were slaves.

"Well, if Barbara wasn't in the Constitution when it was first written, she made sure that once she got in it, she stayed in it all the way," the president said.

Clinton looked out over the flag-draped coffin and into the congregation of more than 1,500 people and said "Barbara, 'We the People' will miss you."

Good Hope Missionary Church, which Jordan attended, was filled for the two-hour funeral. Scores more people stood outside in a fine mist under umbrellas, listening to the service on loud speakers.

The congregation was studded with recognizable faces and figures from Jordan's long career in Texas and national politics. Several flew to Houston with Clinton aboard Air Force One, including Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros, Education Secretary Richard Riley, Attorney General Janet Reno and several Congress members.

The casket was open as Clinton entered the sanctuary, and he noticed the Presidential Medal of Freedom was pinned to her dress. Clinton presented Jordan with the medal, the nation's highest civilian decoration, in 1994.

"I noticed her wearing it today," he said. "And it touched me so to know that she is now going to a place where her rewards will be greater."

In 1972, Jordan became the first black person to be elected to Congress from the South since Reconstruction.

DUBBED WORST ALLEGED WAR-CRIME

Serbs may have massacred up to 7,000 Muslims

Terrence Petty
Associated Press

GLOGOVA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — New evidence that Serb militias massacred up to 7,000 Bosnian Muslims will be handed over to the Yugoslav war crimes tribunal, a top U.S. official said Sunday.

John Shattuck, the assistant secretary of state for human rights, was in eastern Bosnia collecting evidence, interviewing survivors and checking conditions war crimes investigators will face in the coming weeks.

"We believe there are up to 7,000 missing, and I'm afraid their fate could very well be very clear from the mass graves and mass executions we've heard about in the area," he told reporters.

Shattuck said survivors have named the abandoned, bombed-out village of Glogova, nestled among snowy hills, as the grave of those killed in one of the worst of the alleged war crimes.

"Up to 2,000 people were herded into a warehouse and then fired upon by grenades and other weapons, and anyone who was left was shot when they left" the town of Kravice, just up the road, Shattuck said.

Kravice was part of the eastern Muslim enclave of Srebrenica that was overrun by the Bosnian Serb forces on July 11, 1995. Shattuck did not explain how or why the bodies were moved from Kravice to Glogova.

Shattuck said he could see blood spatters and massive holes in the warehouse from the heavy weapons and grenades.

"Two thousand missing people very nearby could mean that up to 2,000 people could be buried in this mass grave," Shattuck said, standing in a desolate, snow-covered field in front of a gutted house.

He predicted diggers would begin work at Glogova with the spring thaw.

The war crimes tribunal in The Hague and other human rights investigators have been worried evidence of graves and possible war crimes could be tampered with the longer the sites are left outside international control.

NATO officials promised Sunday to do their best to protect investigators at alleged mass graves around Bosnia and watch for any attempts to tamper with the sites.

Until now, Bosnian Serbs had blocked outsiders from visiting sites where they are accused of burying thousands of bodies.

But on Sunday, Shattuck commended his Bosnian Serb hosts as being a "model of cooperation."

"We have had security provided by Bosnian Serb and Serbian authorities," he said. "I have had no restrictions on the places I've gone."

Shattuck also toured Nova Kasaba, another reputed mass grave, and Konjevic Polje, where witnesses say 200 people were shot as they tried to flee along the road.

In the town of Karakaj, Shattuck said his team looked at a school house and gymnasium where Muslims were reportedly held before being taken out in groups of 30 and shot before open pits.

"This is the evidence many eye-witnesses have provided," he said.

Other reputed sites are at nearby Bratunac and an abandoned mine near Prijedor in the northwest.

ALCOHOL FORUM

of Students Phillip Jones — little formal presentation and a lot of spontaneous discussion.

"If any of you can swing, we'll be here all night," Jones said. "To complete the metaphor, Peter Nathan will serve as Duke Ellington."

Nathan, a noted alcohol expert and UI psychology professor, moderated the discussion, and told the audience that between 12 and 18 million Americans have a diagnosable alcohol problem.

"In this room, half of you have had a problem with alcohol — or an immediate nuclear experience with an alcohol problem," he said. "Student alcohol problems come from somewhere, often from the drinking model at home."

Getting tough on drinking

The Iowa City Police Department is overwhelmed by problems linked to alcohol use in Iowa City, according to Iowa City Police Department Chief R.J. Winkelhake, who said public intoxication arrests could multiply by five or six times if the Iowa City police enforced the law beyond just those who are engaging in stupid behavior.

"My main concern is the downtown," Winkelhake said. "We can arrest someone, but what happens afterward? We see the same people time and time again. We have done several things, but nothing seems to work."

Mary Howard, a computer consultant at Weeg Computing Center, described how she was assaulted one morning by an intoxicated UI student who jumped into her truck when she was out delivering papers. Howard supports allowing a greater budget to support the efforts of the police.

"People need to see that there are consequences for their actions," she said.

In addition, Iowa needs to get tougher with its laws in order to fight the problem, said Johnson County Attorney J. Patrick White. White suggested lowering the present intoxication level from .10 to .08, and raising the current $15 penalty for underage consumption — a penalty White said came about due to the Legislature's resentment of federal pressure to raise the legal drinking age to 21.

"When the majority of people choose not to follow the rules, law enforcement will not be effective," White said. "Matthew Garofalo's death is an exception, but the factors that lead to it happen daily."

Since UI students are still going to frequent the bars, UI junior Kristen Eberhart told the panel Iowa City should change its policy of towing downtown vehicles between 2 and 6 a.m. Eberhart suggested this policy traps motorists who go downtown and end up drinking more than they intended.

"They are left with two choices: to drive drunk or get towed," Eberhart said.

Challenging the drinking norm

The pressures of making new friends make people drink so they don't feel left out, said Gerry Stone, director of UI Counseling Service. When combined with drinking messages in the media and alcohol's association with college life, like tailgating at football games, alcohol use at the university level becomes the norm, he said.

"This is a long-term, complex problem," Stone said. "It's like smoking — secondary effects changed the norm. How are we going to challenge the norms of alcohol abuse so it will not be tolerated?"

BAN NOT LIFTED

than just places to party, Tarnowski said.

"Chapters are responsible for participating in a philanthropic event, and there is a lot of internal chapter programming," she said. "Many people don't know about all of the things that go on within chapters. It's a special place to get leadership opportunities."

At the town meeting Sunday, UI Dean of Students Phillip Jones commended IFC-Panhel on their efforts to improve their events policies.

"We've been trying to get them to teach themselves," he said. "Today they are demonstrating that they are models."

UI Ombudsperson Nancy Hauserman said she supported the Greek community's decision.

"Many of the people onstage and in the audience today are willing and committed to help in any way. ... It's a way to take the idea of this town meeting and keep it going."

"No. I just think their violence is better-publicized than other people who commit violence."

ALEXANDER PROFILE

Clinton in November.

"As a former governor, he knows how to run a state," said Charles Denniger, a local Alexander backer. "He wants to give power back to the states."

Alexander's roots in small-town Tennessee appeal to Iowa voters, Denniger said.

"Our strongest nominee will be someone from the real world," Alexander says on the campaign trail. "It's very hard to change the culture of Washington if you are the culture of Washington."

In contrast to Dole and Gramm, Alexander says he's a Washington outsider.

"I'm the only one here who's ever balanced a government budget," he said at the GOP debate in Iowa Jan. 13. "We need new Republican leadership."

Although Alexander was a two-term governor, private businessman and president of the University of Tennessee, he did spend time as a Washington insider. He was legislative assistant to Sen. Howard Baker, R-Tenn., worked in the Nixon White House and served as secretary of education during the Bush administration.

Alexander now wants to abolish the Department of Education. He says he would return power over education back to the states and parents. As governor, Alexander initiated the nation's first merit pay system for public school teachers. As president, Alexander would create a "GI bill" for inner-city children, which would allow their parents to choose a higher-quality school.

Alexander also touts his achievements in creating jobs. He helped lure the Nissan and Saturn auto plants to Tennessee, bringing thousands of jobs to the state.

His state government experience has impressed Iowa legislators — so much so that Alexander has received more endorsements from the Iowa Statehouse than Dole.

Iowa House Speaker Ron Corbett, R-Cedar Rapids, and House majority leader Brent Siegrist, R-Council Bluffs, support Alexander. Lieutenant Governor Joy Corning and Iowa state Board of Regents President Marvin Pomerantz have also joined "Alexander's Band."

But endorsements seldom translate into more votes in the Iowa caucuses. Iowans have the opportunity to see the candidates in person and decide for themselves, Kennedy said.

So Alexander has taken up an attack on publisher Steve Forbes and his flat tax proposal. Forbes, who has risen to second place in most Republican nominee polls, stands between Alexander and a second place finish in Iowa. Most activists concede a Dole victory in Iowa.

Alexander bashed the Forbes flat tax for eliminating the deduction for home mortgage interest and charitable contributions.

"The Forbes plan is bait and switch politics," he told New Hampshire voters. "An avalanche of slick TV ads tell voters that their taxes will magically go down, while hidden in the fine print is a real estate crash and a middle-class tax increase."

Attacking the flat tax has earned Alexander additional media coverage.

"That helped Alexander," Kennedy said. "It helped get him noticed, and that's what he needed."

Alexander used to rely on those plaid flannel shirts for attention — he often hands them out at press conferences. But the shirts weren't the idea of a slick Washington media firm — they were the idea of his wife, Honey.

In 1978, when he was planning his second attempt to win the governorship, Honey suggested he run a more personal campaign. Even though the anti-Republican mood after Watergate probably had more to do with Alexander's 1974 defeat than his campaign style, Alexander took her advice and took his campaign to the people.

He walked across the state, wearing plaid shirts and meeting voters face-to-face. The shirts became a symbol of his campaign, and he dug them out again when he decided to run for president.

Iowa caucus voters will be the first to decide whether Alexander will get to wear his shirts in the Oval Office.

"The position includes 10 different departments, all varying from one another," Askew said. "It ranges from management of the student housing division all the way to directing student affairs. It's a very broad scope of responsibility."

Askew is also a candidate for the position, but declined to comment on her nomination. John Halsted, vice president of Student Affairs at the University of Maine, is the only other candidate besides Jones and Askew.

Even though Jones has accepted the nomination, he said right now no commitment has been made between him and Illinois.

"Illinois hasn't made any commitment to me, and I haven't made any commitment to them," Jones said. "We've agreed to explore the possibilities, that's all."

Jones said he has never actually sought the Illinois position.

"This isn't something I've pursued — it isn't something I went looking for," Jones said. "I was honored that Illinois considered me, both times. It's a great honor. But right now it's just a very intriguing possibility."

SAME-SEX MARRIAGES

Hawaii was pitched into the push-and-pull of one of the nation's most contentious social dilemmas May 27, 1993, when its Supreme Court agreed with three gay couples that they had been unconstitutionally denied marriage licenses in 1990.

The justices said the state had to show a compelling interest to ban such marriages and sent the case back for trial in a lower court.

Trying to bolster the state's court case by establishing legislative intent, lawmakers in 1994 clarified the somewhat vague Marriage Law to spell out that marriage was solely the union of a man and a woman.

Dole raps for vote in MTV interview

Curt Anderson
Associated Press

HANOVER, N.H. — Sen. Bob Dole reached across the generational divide Saturday, appearing at the original "Animal House" and taking a magical mystery tour of sorts aboard MTV's "Choose or Lose" campaign bus.

"It's not the age of the man. It's the man for the age," Dole, at 72 the oldest presidential candidate, told MTV's Tabitha Soren in an interview on the bus. "I find age has not been an issue."

Dressed in his usual crisp white shirt and dark suit, Dole sat for an hour in the leopard-patterned interior of the bus as it rolled across the New Hampshire countryside, bouncing to match MTV's jerky video style. The music network is using the vehicle for its 1996 political coverage.

But the on-board interview wasn't about lightweight topics like boxer shorts, the infamous question President Clinton once got at an MTV forum. Dole calmly answered a series of questions about rap music, violence and sex in films, abortion, the budget and education among other issues.

He also took part in an MTV-sponsored question-and-answer exchange on the Internet, another youth-oriented venue.

"Every generation has its own set of problems, its own temptations," Dole said. "It's all about the future."

The future was the message of the day for the Senate majority leader from Kansas. He began with a rally at the Alpha Delta fraternity at Dartmouth College, where the idea was born for the hit film "Animal House."

With about 400 students gathered outside the frat house and the beat of James Brown's "Living In America" blasting from speakers, Dole paraphrased a movie line about drinking: "My advice is to start voting heavily."

He reminisced about his own college days at the University of Kansas, where as a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity he recalled once "taking somebody's motorcycle up on the third floor."

But Dole's college days were cut short by World War II, and he reminded his youthful audience that their generation faces its own set of serious challenges, even if war is not now one of them. And he sought to portray himself as interested in healing divisions in society.

"I'm not a polarizer. We don't have to all think alike," he said. "We're not an old America, we're not a young America. We're one America."

Dole's rivals, especially former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander, portray the front-runner as too old to lead the nation into the next century.

Dole's answer to that Saturday was to board the splashy MTV bus, festooned with quotes — from rapper Ice Cube to President Eisenhower — about getting involved.

Several questions in the MTV interview — scheduled to air today — dealt with Dole's statements against raunchy rap lyrics and sex and violence in films. Dole insisted it is proper to speak out against such art.

"If they (youngsters) have this repetition day after day after day, I think it does have an effect," Dole said. "But you can't insulate young people. You've got to let them out to take their risks."

GROUP ATTACKS 'WASHINGTON VALUES'

Behind Forbes: A team known for bare-knuckled politics

John King
Associated Press

MANCHESTER, N.H. — At Forbes for President headquarters, there was a sudden sense of urgency: Bob Dole had launched the first attack ad against their candidate. Naturally, they had to respond, and quickly. But they also wanted to send a message.

So instead of answering with one ad, the Forbes campaign last week simultaneously launched four, three of them scathingly critical of the Republican presidential front-runner.

"The idea was not only to respond but to make them think twice next time," said Bill Dal Col, the Forbes campaign manager.

Forbes, the multimillionaire publisher and surprise of the 1996 presidential race, comes across as a genteel, almost shy campaigner. But behind the candidate is a team with considerable, sometimes controversial, experience in rough-and-tumble politics, a group formed from connections made in GOP skirmishes in North Carolina and New York. The major players:

• Dal Col. He met Forbes four years ago through Jack Kemp, for whom Dal Col worked at the Department of Housing and Urban Development and later at Empower America, a conservative group. When Forbes decided last summer to enter the race, he turned to Dal Col to build a campaign team.

• Carter Wrenn, chief strategist. A legendary figure in North Carolina politics known for hard-hitting direct mail and work on often racially tinged campaigns of conservative Sen. Jesse Helms. Past work includes the infamous Helms "hands" ad in which a white man's hands are shown crumpling a letter that says he was rejected for a job because of racial quotas. Helms' opponent was black.

Wrenn runs the day-to-day

Forbes operations from the headquarters in Bedminster, N.J., and is a major strategic force. He consults frequently with longtime partner Tom Ellis, an unpaid adviser to the Forbes campaign asked to keep a low profile because he once supported segregation.

• John McLaughlin, pollster. He is the link between Dal Col and Wrenn, having worked with Dal Col in several New York GOP races and Wrenn in North Carolina. Fresh from work on several 1994 House races, McLaughlin advocates an aggressive anti-Washington message. It's anchored on calls for term limits and a defense of Forbes' flat tax plan, not only as a tax cut but also as a way of taking power to write loopholes out of the hands of politicians.

• Gretchen Morgensen, press secretary. A top writer at Forbes magazine, she is working for the first time as a press secretary, and in her first political campaign.

Like any candidate, Forbes says he sets the pace and tone of his campaign himself. And aides describe a hands-on approach which includes, usually after consulting his brother, Tim, approving every campaign advertisement and mailing. "Steve is an editor by trade and it shows," Morgensen said.

But much of Forbes' strategy is a reflection of his team.

After months promoting the flat tax, Forbes' advertising has turned decidedly negative; his ads attacking Dole are now being aired more than those promoting his flat tax.

Rival campaigns say this is beginning to take a toll on Forbes' negative ratings, particularly in Iowa. But this is a Wrenn and Ellis trademark, honed in Helms' races: they are willing to trade higher negative ratings for their candidate as long as their target fares even worse.

From the outset, the Forbes team recognized that rivals, once they got around to taking Forbes seriously,

HIS CLAIM: MOST ANTI-ABORTION CANDIDATE

Buchanan touts pro-life stance

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DAVENPORT — Commentator Pat Buchanan courted social conservatives with an anti-abortion theme, saying he's the only Republican who can carry the message to the White House.

Speaking to about 2,300 anti-abortion activists Saturday, Buchanan said he's the only major candidate "that actually has an active pro-life agenda."

Candidates such as Alan Keyes and California Rep. Robert Dornan — both ardent abortion foes — have little chance of winning the nomination, and better-known rivals are suspect on the issue,

Buchanan argued. Buchanan argued his agenda was: "First to keep our party pro-life and, second, to appoint Supreme Court justices who will overturn Roe vs. Wade."

The anti-abortion rally where Buchanan spoke was one of many around the nation marking the 23rd anniversary of that Supreme Court decision. The anniversary is today, and Buchanan was spending most of the weekend hammering on the theme.

Muster set to take No. 1 ranking

MELBOURNE, Australia — For those who thought Muster doesn't deserve the No. 1 ranking, it's got nothing to do with the Australian Open.

All it takes is point to whether they can win over the No. 1 ranking in the middle of Wimbledon, which didn't dare to tread.

Muster will jump to No. 1, leapfrogging Andre Agassi, in the next week if Agassi loses to Jim Courier on Tuesday in the Australian Open.

No matter that Muster is in the fourth round shortly after Agassi's victory by Sampras to Mark Philippoussis in the third round, Muster knocked him out and left it up for Muster and Agassi.

Haskins, 65, was hospitalized for three days in the hospital. Haskins, among active college coaches with more than 600 victories, was hospitalized during Saturday night's 64-56 New Mexico game.

While in the hospital, Haskins complained of chest pains. He walked to the hospital to seek treatment and they took him to the hospital.

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — For those who think Thomas Muster doesn't deserve to take over the No. 1 ranking, deserve's got nothing to do with it.

All it takes is points, regardless of whether they came from clay courts in the middle of nowhere or Wimbledon, where Muster didn't dare to tread.

Muster will jump from No. 3 to No. 1, leapfrogging Pete Sampras and Andre Agassi, in the rankings next week if Agassi doesn't beat Jim Courier on Tuesday to reach the Australian Open semifinals.

UTEP coach goes down with heart attack

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Texas-El Paso coach Don Haskins, a Basketball Hall of Fame nominee, was hospitalized Sunday after suffering a mild heart attack during a game.

"He's resting comfortably and says he feels great," SID Eddie Mullens said.

Haskins, 65, was likely to spend about three or four more days in the hospital, Mullens said.

Haskins, among the winningest active college coaches with more than 600 victories, was taken by ambulance to Providence Memorial Hospital during halftime of Saturday night's 64-60 loss to New Mexico.

While in the locker room, Haskins complained of chest pains. He walked to emergency personnel to seek treatment and they took him to the hospital.

Gable's squad fends off adversity

LINCOLN, Neb. — Iowa wrestling coach Dan Gable had a lot to be concerned about as his Hawkeyes prepared to face Nebraska in the finals of the Cliff Keen National Duals.

Jeff McGinness didn't make weight at 126 pounds, Mark Ironside was wrestling with a bad back at 134 and heavyweight Erik Stroner had asked to be removed from the lineup.

In the end, it didn't matter. Iowa rolled to its second consecutive National Duals Championship with a 20-15 win over the Cornhuskers. Nebraska had beaten Iowa 24-20 when the two teams last faced each other in the 1993 National Duals semi-finals. However, Nebraska coach Tim Neumann said there was no doubt that the Hawkeyes were the champions this time around.

"This is the National Duals," Neumann said. "This is where you saw if your 10 is better than their 10 and today their 10 was better than our 10."

Neumann said his team wasn't intimidated by Iowa like they were in 1993, but said his team lost because it failed to come through with victories at 126, 134 and 150.

"We were awestruck when we beat them in 1993 but here we didn't lose any of those matches because they were Iowa," Neumann said. "You could have put Central Missouri uniforms on them and it would have been the same situation."

Brad Canoyer got things started for Nebraska with an 11-5 victory over Iowa's Jesse Whitmer at 118 pounds. But the upset-minded Cornhuskers weren't prepared for what came next. Mike Mena quickly rectified his team's 3-0

LINCOLN, Neb. — Jeff McGinness got more than he bargained for when he collided with Clarion's Bob Crawford in the second round of the Cliff Keen National Duals last weekend.

McGinness (12-1), the defending national champion at 126 pounds, saw his 43-match winning streak end as the 11th-ranked Crawford (13-4) pulled off an 11-7 upset victory.

The match marked the first time the Iowa junior had been beaten since losing a 5-3 decision to Penn State's Sanshiro Abe in the 1994 NCAA Championships.

Crawford looked to be in trouble early in the match as he danced around the edge of the mat trying to avoid any serious entanglement with McGinness.

But Crawford persevered and got the break he needed, down 3-1 in the second period. With 1:33 on the clock, Crawford came within inches of pinning McGinness' shoulders to the mat and received three near fall points to take a 4-3 lead.

Crawford struck again at the end of the second period, scoring a takedown and his second near fall for a 9-4 lead.

McGinness had a chance to come back but did little to help his cause until it was too late. A frustrated McGinness slammed Crawford to the floor as the pair tumbled off the mat, receiving a one-point penalty for unsportsmanlike conduct. A late takedown and a riding-time advantage made the final score more respectable.

Crawford was thrilled with the victory saying that he just tried to wrestle a smart match in his first match against McGinness.

"I was just going out to wrestle, not to expect anything," Crawford

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Six games into the Big Ten Conference season, this much is evident about Iowa's basketball team: If the Hawkeyes don't rebound, they don't win.

Iowa has been outrebounded in three Big Ten games and lost all three. The Hawkeyes outrebounded three other opponents in league play and defeated all three.

So there you have it. A not-so-promising 3-3 start for a team expected to contend for the Big Ten title.

On Saturday, Michigan State outscrapped Iowa on the boards all afternoon and upset the 16th-ranked Hawkeyes 62-60. The Spartans owned a 38-26 rebounding advantage and the last one was the killer — Quinton Brooks' tip-in with 5.6 seconds left.

"We did a lousy job starting with me and going all the way around," Iowa's Jess Settles said.

Settles had a woeful game, getting just two points and two rebounds and fouling out with 57 seconds left. Guard Mon'ter Glasper was Iowa's leading rebounder with five. Season-leader Russ Millard grabbed only four rebounds.

Nittany Lions join ranks of the defeated

Associated Press

Penn State was nine seconds from a big victory on the road, a win that would have left the No. 14 Nittany Lions as one of only three undefeated teams in the country.

However, Maurice Taylor and Maceo Baston had other ideas, and No. 20 Michigan escaped with a 67-66 victory Sunday.

The loss left No. 1 Massachusetts and No. 3 Cincinnati as the nation's only undefeated teams. It also created a three-way tie atop the Big Ten with Penn State, Michigan and Purdue.

On the winning sequence, Michigan guard Dugan Fife set a screen and Travis Conlan found Taylor alone for the slam with nine seconds to go.

"Two of their players went with Dugan," Taylor said. "I've never been so wide-open."

Penn State came back up court, and Dan Earl tried a jumper from the lane. But Baston blocked it and the ball bounced away as time expired.

"For a little guy, he (Earl) took it to the hole a lot, but he wasn't going to score on me like that," said Baston, a 6-foot-9 sophomore. "I

Before the season started, the Hawkeyes were considered somewhat of a mystery team. They are a mystery no more.

The ninth-ranked Iowa women's basketball team cruised to a pair of Big Ten road wins over the weekend and now finds itself all alone at the top of the conference.

Led by Tiffany Gooden's season-high 27 points, the Hawkeyes (16-1, 7-0) defeated No. 17 Northwestern, 64-51 Sunday at Welsh-Ryan Arena. Iowa snapped the Wildcats nine-game home winning streak in the process.

Gooden rebounded from a tough shooting night on Friday at Indiana to hit five 3-pointers in eight attempts. She was 10 for 20 overall from the field.

Gooden opened up the game with a three-pointer as the Hawkeyes raced out to a 14-9 lead over Northwestern (15-3, 5-2). The Wildcats then went on a 21-10 run to close out the half, leading 30-24.

Iowa shot just 24.3 percent from the field in the first half, while Northwestern hit half its shots. In the second half, however, the Hawkeyes turned the tables to take over the game.

"I don't know how many teams will beat them," Northwestern coach Don Perrelli said. "The sec-

"To be beaten on a second shot was kind of reflective on a day when they beat us on the boards," Iowa coach Tom Davis said.

Rebounding is essential for the Hawkeyes because it triggers their fast break from the defensive end and gives them second-shot chances on the offensive end. The offensive rebounds often turn into points, and that enables Iowa to set up its press.

But Michigan State used its

"I can't tell you how happy I am for this team," Iowa head coach Angie Lee said. "They have come of age. They have stepped up after a disappointing season last year."

Nadine Domond chipped in with 14 points for the Hawkeyes. Amy Herrig and Tangelia Smith did the job on the boards for Iowa, grabbing 11 and 10 respectively. The Hawkeyes outrebounded Northwestern by an astounding 55 to 28 margin.

deficit at 126, scoring 10 points in the final period on his way to a 12-7 triumph over Nebraska's Jeremie Welder.

Then the Hawkeyes reinforced their claim to college wrestling's No. 1 ranking, as they churned out five straight victories to take a commanding 20-3 lead.

The feature match was at 158 where Iowa's Jill Williams (18-1) knocked off top-ranked Temoor Terry (15-1). Williams dominated early, sending Terry to the mat only 33 seconds into the match. Despite the early deficit, Terry wasn't about to quit. Down 5-1 in the third period, Terry recorded an escape and a takedown to draw within one point with 58 seconds remaining. But Williams escaped and recorded a late takedown to capture an 8-4

ALL-STAR MVP

Bourque outshines NHL best

Jimmy Golen

Associated Press
BOSTON — Imagine what Ray Bourque, who has never won a Stanley Cup, must have felt like when Wayne Gretzky, who has won four, complained that the Kings weren't doing enough to get him another.

The 35-year-old defenseman knows these Bruins aren't likely to compete for the title any time soon, either. And as his age grows so does the likelihood that he will never carry the Stanley Cup around the ice.

And that makes what happened in Saturday night's NHL All-Star Game all the more special. "This will be the one, I'm sure, I'll remember forever," he said after scoring the winning goal with 37 seconds left and earning MVP honors in the Eastern Conference All-Star's 5-4 victory over the West.

"Especially being here in Boston, winning at the end like that, scoring the winning goal and just having the crowd go crazy," Bourque said. "It's been a great relationship for 17 years. To have it happen here, it's extra special, I've got to say."

It was an exciting end to an otherwise drab game in which the only buzz was about the Fox network's SuperPuck, a computer-enhanced puck designed to help TV viewers see what was going on.

The jittery blue dot that followed the puck, along with the red streak that appeared during a slapshot, may or may not be the secret to attracting new fans. But reviews from long-standing hockey fans were mostly negative.

All in all, though, it was better than last year; the 1995 All-Star Game was canceled because of the owners' lockout. Early in Saturday night's game, there was even some good goaltending, a rarity in the high-scoring showcase.

"This type of game probably doesn't show how good Ray is," Bruins teammate and fellow all-star Cam Neely said. "He's so solid. He can come up with the big play and he's done it time and time again."

Even so, this hasn't been the best year for Bourque. Although his numbers — 14 goals and 29 assists — are as solid as ever, the Bruins have been mired at or below .500 most of the season.

Neely was benched for a game, a coaching decision that threatened to tear the team apart. And in the skills competition, Bourque's showcase in years past, he had a disappointing showing.

The five-time Norris Trophy winner confessed to being nervous going into the All-Star Game, saying he didn't want to embarrass himself.

He didn't. After Felix Potvin saved Pat Verbeek's shot from the left circle, the puck skittered to the other side, where Bourque was racing in. He fired a 15-foot backhand over Potvin's left shoulder.

Bourque raised his arms to the air, the crowd roared and his Eastern Conference teammates surrounded him. What's surprising, though, was the reaction of the Western squad.

When Bourque accepted his MVP award after the game, his opponents banged their sticks against the ice in a hockey player's salute. Afterward, they lauded the man who beat them.

"If anybody's going to score a goal for them," West defenseman Chris Chelios said, "it should have been Ray."

Three are victorious in women's tune-up

Mike Triplett

A fourth-place finish at the eight-team Missouri Invitational wasn't outstanding and it wasn't bad. But it really didn't matter either way.

For the Iowa women's track team, the season opener was just a way to measure where the team is and what it needs to work on.

"Initially we wanted to finish in the top three," Hawkeye senior Shawn Fleck said. "But this meet was really to see where we are in our training and what we need to improve on."

"Right now the distance runners are running shorter events. It's part of our training. We're not into our specialty events at this point."

One of the Hawkeyes' distance runners, junior Briana Benning, had no problem dropping down to the 600.

She took first place in the event.

"I was pretty happy with it," Benning said. "I had never run the 600 before. It was a strange distance; I was not really sure how to run it."

"I just kind of went with the flow of the field."

Benning said she will be concentrating on the 800 in the future.

Iowa freshman Ellen Grant was victorious in two events. She finished first in the 200 and was part of the 4x400 relay squad.

Grant's teammates in the 4x400 were sophomore Wynsome Cole, senior Maria Philip and freshman Stacey Leigh-Bynoe.

"Our 4x400 team killed the field," Fleck said. "It was great."

Kansas won the team competition at the invitational.

The Hawkeyes will compete again this weekend and return home Feb. 3 to host the indoor Iowa Invitational.

MEN'S TRACK

Trowers tears up track in Missouri

Chris Snider
 The Daily Iowan

For Pickering, Ontario, Canada native Dion Trowers, the road to Atlanta runs through Iowa City.

Trowers, a sophomore captain of the Iowa men's track team, added another victory to his season totals this weekend, taking first place in the 55-meter hurdles at the Missouri Invitational Saturday.

Trowers' personal-best time of 7.41 seconds, ranks as the sixth-fastest time in Iowa history.

"The Olympics is in the back of my mind right now," Trowers said. "My future goal is the Olympics, but my goal right now is the Big Tens and maybe the NCAAAs."

Iowa men's track coach Ted Wheeler has been impressed by Trowers' performance early in the season.

"Last year he ran 14 (seconds) flat (in the 110 high hurdles) outside, so this time and his victory on Saturday is a sign of his commitment to the University of Iowa and to representing his country at the Olympic games," Wheeler said.

While Trowers said helping coach some of the younger hurdlers on the Hawkeye squad has benefited him, he also gives credit to those coaching him.

Former all-American and current Hawkeye assistant coach Pat McGee holds the Iowa 55-meter hurdle record of 7.14 seconds.

Overall, Iowa finished fourth at the meet, coming in behind Missouri, Kansas and Indiana State.

"I thought (our performance) was very good," Wheeler said. "Monte Raymond, Dion Trowers and Ed Rozelle were outstanding and the rest are catching up. We took 21 athletes and I think 12 or 13 scored. I feel very positive at this point and time."

Three Hawkeyes brought home second-place finishes Saturday: Chris Davis in the 400-meter dash (49.26), Raymond in the 600-yard run (1:12.5) and Chad Feeldy in the one-mile run (4:18.87).

A few key athletes were held from competition due to injury, but Wheeler said all of the injuries should be recovered from.

Iowa's next competition will be at the Northern Open on Friday, Feb. 2, at UNI, where the Hawkeyes will look to take one more step toward the Big Ten indoor meet.

"We'd like to move everyone up a notch," Wheeler said. "Our leg speed will be just a bit faster."

NBA ROUNDUP

Shaq's layup secures revenge

Associated Press
HOUSTON — Shaquille O'Neal's layup with 4.7 seconds left after snaring a rebound lifted Orlando to a 97-96 victory over Houston Sunday in a rematch of the teams that made last season's NBA Finals.

O'Neal, who finished with 29 points and 16 rebounds, then blocked Sam Cassell's layup attempt at the buzzer to seal the victory.

Anfernee Hardaway had 13 of his 28 points in the final quarter as the Magic turned away a Houston rally. The Rockets, losing for the fourth time in seven games, had gone ahead 86-78 with six minutes to go before O'Neal and especially Hardaway took over.

Bulls 111, Pistons 96
AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — The Chicago Bulls extended two streaks Sunday, winning their 11th straight game and beating the Detroit Pistons for the 13th time in a row.

Michael Jordan scored 36 points and Scottie Pippen added 22 as the Bulls rolled to a 111-96 victory over the Pistons, who had won five in a row at home.

The Pistons, led by Grant Hill's 24 points, were no match for the Bulls, who began their streak against Detroit on March 14, 1993.

Raptors 97, Celtics 95
TORONTO — Rookie sensation Damon Stoudamire scored Toronto's final eight points, including a baseline jumper with 11.8 seconds remaining, lifting the Raptors to a 97-95 victory over the Boston Celtics Sunday.

Stoudamire's game-winning basket came after Boston's Dino Radja had tied the score 95-95 with two free throws.

Pacers 106, Bulls 96
INDIANAPOLIS — Rik Smits scored 24 points and Reggie Miller added 23 Sunday as the Indiana Pacers withstood a pair of second-half comebacks and beat the Washington Bullets 106-96 for their NBA franchise-record 12th straight home victory.

The Pacers led by 13 points in the first half, when Smits had 16 points, but Chris Webber scored seven of his 23 points in a two-minute stretch of the third quarter, and the Bullets tied the game at 69-69 on a basket by Rasheed Wallace.

SuperSonics 108, Mavericks 101

scored 29 points, outdueling Jason Kidd in a battle of point guards Sunday as the Seattle SuperSonics continued their domination of the Dallas Mavericks with a 108-101 victory.

Shawn Kemp had 26 points and 13 rebounds for the Sonics, who have beaten the Mavericks 17 times in the past 19 meetings and five straight times on their homecourt. Dallas beat Seattle 112-101 in their first meeting of the season on Dec. 12.

Spurs 118, 76ers 88
PHILADELPHIA — David Robinson scored 23 points and Brad Lowhaus added 18 as the San Antonio Spurs snapped their two-game losing streak with a 118-88 rout of the Philadelphia 76ers.

Robinson hit 10-of-12 shots as the Spurs won their seventh straight game at the Spectrum. Philadelphia's last victory at home over San Antonio was March 23, 1992.

just followed the ball. I knew time was running down, so he had to put it up."

It marked the third time this season Boston made a decisive block in a Michigan home victory. He also did it in December against Duke and Washington.

"He's got a knack for doing that," said Michigan coach Steve Fisher. "Earl penetrated and Maceo did what he did against Washington and Duke. He had another great block today."

Boston scored 13 points and had four blocks — all in the second half for Michigan (14-4, 4-1). Glenn Sekunda scored 16 points to lead Penn State (14-1, 4-1).

WOMEN'S SWIMMING

Hawks fall just short of Illini

Wayne Drehs
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa women's swimming team continued its preparation for the upcoming Big-Ten Conference championships this weekend with a strong performance at the Illini Classic.

The Hawkeyes finished second at the meet with 989 points, 88 points behind first-place Illinois.

"We finished a lot closer to Illinois than we thought we would," Iowa coach Patricia Meyer said. "That made the meet a lot more fun because it was more competitive."

Leading the way for the Hawkeyes was junior diver Kelly McCready, who again dominated the competition, finishing first in both the one- and three-meter competitions.

"Kelly is doing very consistent in her performances and I know Bob (Rydz, head diving coach) is real pleased with her performances," Meyer said. "Her and Jessica (Ricobono) will both be ready for the Big Ten meet."

Additional strong performances were turned in by freshman Jessica Knippenburg, who finished first in the 100 butterfly (:58.13) and classmate Kara Schmitz, who was tops in the 100 backstroke (:59.83).

"The team is really feeling good about its performances and where they are at in this point of the season," Meyer said. "Being more competitive will really help improve our confidence for the rest of the season."

MEN'S GYMNASTICS

Chicago unlucky for Iowa

Chris James
The Daily Iowan

Chicago wasn't the Hawkeyes' kind of town.

The Iowa men's gymnastics team was edged out by Ohio State and finished runner-up at the Windy City Invitational last weekend. Iowa tallied 219.875 points while the champion Buckeyes rang up 223.550.

Hawkeye senior Aaron Cotter paced Iowa by winning on the horizontal bar, placing third in the all-around, and fourth on the still rings.

Junior Tyler Vogt was solid for the Hawkeyes, finishing second on the horizontal bar. Vogt also placed sixth in the all-around. Senior Hugh Lau was the top Iowa finisher on the parallel bars, taking second place.

Iowa coach Tom Dunn said even though Iowa didn't win the event, he was very pleased with his team's performance.

"I'm very happy with the effort and the results of this weekend," Dunn said. "I thought some people really stepped up and performed well. Especially since we weren't at full strength."

Hawkeye all-American Jay Thornton only competed in the pommel horse and vault, due to a shoulder injury. Iowa sophomore Travis Rosen didn't even make the trip due to a knee injury. Dunn said these injuries were unfortunate but added that his team's depth helped the Hawkeyes to the strong finish.

"It's tough to compete with out your top guy. But I was very pleased, especially with the younger guys, to see people come in and get the job done," Dunn said.

Iowa's Adrian Johnston didn't perform like a freshman. In his first college meet, Johnston was the top Hawkeye finisher in the floor exercise with an 11th place finish. Sophomore Chris Camicioli was strong for the Hawkeyes on the still rings, snagging third.

Dunn said after seeing the rest of the Big Ten at the invitational that the conference was the best in the country.

"It was good to see us place high against some of the best teams in the nation. It shows that we are ready to face that kind of competition and do well," Dunn said.
