Don't vote? Don't complain

16 percent of UI students don't plan to vote in November

Cary Jordan

The Daily Iowan

If you're planning on letting the 1996 presidential election pass without your vote, you're about to find something interesting: When you leave college for good, you may not be able to vote anymore. You can vote only when you are registered in the state you live in — and you can only vote in the state you live in.

By the time this week is over, the power of the youth vote comes into question and voter turnout will be the fact that someone has the right to say something.

low voter turnout

Since ratification of the 26th amendment in 1971, which gives 18- and 19-year-olds the right to vote, the 18- to 25-year-old age group has consistently had the lowest voter turnout of any age group. Studies of political science have shown that the highest situations come from areas over 60, a trend that's been constant for decades.

One of the main reasons young people have traditionally participated less, however, is that the presidential election is too far away and they can't blame no person — you.

In a flip of UI students, 10 percent said they are not going to vote or are undecided if they will vote in the November general election, and 24 percent are still undecided on who they support. With the Iowa caucuses a week from today, the power of the youth vote comes into question and voter turnout will be the fact that someone has the right to say something.

Ross and Rachel to be more than 'Friends'

NEW YORK (AP) — After months of anticipation, Rachel and Ross are about to go beyond the best of friends. The two co-stars of the hit television series "Friends," are to be more than just the on-again, off-again couple of Central Perk.

Kudrow, who plays Rachel, said the story line is "a huge moment" for her character.

But Shlisel, who plays Ross, said it's "a very big moment for both of us."

"Ross and Rachel have been through so much," he said. "This is something new for them."

"It's a great moment for the show," Kudrow added. "It's a great moment for the cast."

Said Shlisel: "I think it's great for them."

"It's great for Rachel," Kudrow added.

"It's great for Ross," Shlisel said.

"It's great for everyone," Kudrow said.

Hollywood surfaces in Scotland for first time in 30 years

INVERNESS, Scotland (AP) — The Hollywood screen surfaces on the Isle of Skye for the first time in a decade when the movie "A View to a Kill" was shot earlier this year.

"It's an exciting time in Scotland," said producer Bill Murray.

"We're really excited about it," said actor Dan Aykroyd.

"It's the first time we've had a Hollywood film shot here in Scotland."

"It's great for us," said director John Landis.

"It's great for everyone," Murray said.

"It's great for me," Aykroyd added.

"It's great for Scotland," Murray said.

Unaccredited colleges use Iowa's good name to lure students

Keyes leads African-Americans to GOP

Iowa Daily political reporter

The presidential campaign of former Illinois congressman Alan Keyes has lobbed a large number of African-American students into Iowa University. The students were part of an unaccredited correspondence school to register, according to a copyright story by The Daily Iowan. The school is registered with the University of Missouri as "Central Blues." "I would say right now — without knowing names — that probably 10 percent would pick up and move or close their offices if Iowa made the changes. I know of one college that's taking the matter seriously and is trying to get it set yet somewhat, but he will support the law as long as he had to cover it under the U.S. Department of Education.

"Anyone who's trying to register educational school and not just a business is by willing to register for the University of Missouri and Central Blues."

Poll finds Americans becoming increasingly overweight

TOLERANCE NOT ENOUGH.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. believed there was something better than tolerance...LOVE.

Love means accepting people and moving toward them, rather than distancing ourselves from them or simply not caring. It means reaching out...even to those who are different.

This year in honor of Dr. King's birthday and Black History Month we’re offering the article "Give the Dream New Life." For your free copy call 1-800-236-9238.
Republicans fight generational lines

Mike Glover
Associated Press

SPENCER, Iowa — There's a clear generational component to the race for the Republican presidential nomination today. There is, of course, the obvious one. Dole is 72 and Forbes is 46. But those two candidates are more than just generational opposites. They represent a fundamentally differing leadership of the generation that won a world order.

Forbes, in that respect, seems to be the best of a couple of generations. Dole is a seasoned pol and perhaps has the energy of new ideas and the drive that a true believer can carry. Forbes brings to the campaign trail the attention to the race. It is a smart and savvy operator who has gained prominence with a televangelism righteous, and is a formidable fundraiser.

But he also has exposed his weaknesses and the forces neither can control. Dole has lost more than one-third of his support since the last Concord Monitor poll two weeks ago. He now has 38 percent support, compared to Forbes's 29 percent. In a Boston Herald-WCVB-TV poll last week, Forbes got 30 percent support. That's within the error margin of error of ±4 percentage points. Dole has 47 percent support, but that will not deter him from running.

Among independent voters, Dole has 35 percent support and Forbes has 34 percent support. Among registered Republicans, Forbes has 19 percent support and Dole has 40 percent support. That's within the margin of error of ±4 percentage points.

Forbes, a political neophyte who came of age during Ronald Reagan's tenure in office, is by definition bad. It is unquestioned that he has never had the foot soldiers for a lot of endorsements, to their clash over this final week. In the wake of the battle of forces neither can control.

Republican presidential hopeful Steve Forbes, left, addresses a packed rally in Somerville, N.J., Sunday. That group is beginning to play a significant role in the state's primary. The results of a poll showed that the last candidates for a lot of Republicans. They provide the energy that's running through Republican circles right now, and it is formidable.

Taking a swing at the caucuses

Jamey Pregon

President

The Daily Iowan - Iowa City, Iowa - Friday, February 5, 1996

"I don’t understand why my father is dead, because he was supposed to be there keeping peace. I would love Bill Clinton to explain that to me."

Lise Degra, daughter of Sgt. 1st Class Donald Degra, the first U.S. soldier to die on peacemaking duty in Bosnia.

Flashbacks of Ross Perot could very well fall into the mental trap Forbes has laid. The flat tax Jim Meisner is an editorial writer.

Forbes’ situation, it’s a little more bizarre: He’s running as a Republican sure winners next week will be President Clinton and the Dodo. Figure this campaign is about bright, false promises and new

But the issue of film stars. Pressuring gay stars to not exceed 400 words.

The best description of a caucus can be found in Lewis Carroll’s "Alice in Wonderland." Even today it is hard for voters to know how to vote in the Iowa caucuses.

Forbes normally in the main thrust in the GOP race. But that is a different story for Dole. Adversaries of Forbes now that they have some seasoned in recent polls. But for moment, Forbes has a lot of momentum building in the early primaries and caucuses.

That creates interesting possibilities. Forbes could make a strong showing in Iowa if he doesn’t advance, he’s got something else. Supporters.

The next candidate to bat is radio talk-show host Larry King who will take a swing at the Democrats. King is a frequent critic of President Clinton and has been vocal in his disapproval of the Clinton administration. He has been known to make controversial statements, and his campaign messages have sometimes been at odds with his party's platform.

One candidate who might be able to take advantage of this situation is Ross Perot. Perot entered the race late, but he has managed to gain momentum in recent polls.

Perot is a third-party candidate and his campaign has focused on issues such as reducing federal government spending and increasing trade with other countries. He has also been critical of what he sees as the overreach of the federal government.

Perot’s strength may lie in his ability to appeal to voters who are dissatisfied with both major party candidates. His campaign has been marked by a series of radio ads that have gained him national attention.

In the end, the caucuses are a unique event in American politics, and there is no guarantee that any candidate will emerge as the clear winner. The Iowa caucuses are a crucial test for candidates hoping to win the nomination, but they also present an opportunity for outside candidates to make a splash.

Kim Fainter

Kim Fainter is a film and television critic for The Des Moines Register.

In fact, the topic of coming out — what it means, and what it will look like in the future — is the hottest battle raging in today’s queer community.

In 1995, Fainter wrote a column titled "Coming Out," which explored the complex issues surrounding the decision to reveal one’s sexual orientation.

Fainter’s column reviewed the history of the coming out process and examined the different strategies that people use to come out. She discussed the challenges of coming out, as well as the potential benefits of being open about one’s sexuality.

Fainter argued that coming out is a deeply personal decision, and that it should be made on one’s own terms. She emphasized the importance of supporting one’s friends and family in their own coming out journeys.

Fainter’s work has been influential in promoting understanding and acceptance of LGBTQ+ individuals.

The message taken in by young people was that, whether you come out or stay in the closet, you were important to them. It was a safe place for people from all walks of life to open up about their experiences and express themselves freely.

The theme was amplified by the fact that the alarm clock was a symbol of the coming out process, and it was seen as a powerful reminder of the struggle faced by LGBTQ+ individuals.

In the end, the message of the column was that coming out is a personal choice, and it should be respected and supported. The column ended with the words: "I live as an open person, but I recognize the importance of respecting others' choices in this regard."

The coming out process can be challenging and rewarding, and it is important to approach it with sensitivity and respect.

Kim Fainter’s column appears Mondays on the Viewpoints page.
People cope with more record cold

Roger Pettersen

"I've awakened more than 300 citizens over the years to alert them to record-breaking temperatures," said Adrain Pettersen, whose hometown, Beloit, is a volunteer observer for the National Weather Service.

"But this year I could only stand it so long," said the 73-year-old Pettersen, who lives in a custom-built 1960s ranch near his workshop. "It's cold."

"This morning, when I went outside to get the newspaper," he said, "I could not get the door closed."

"I don't think there is any pride in this," said Tom Shrader, who lives in Eau Claire. "It's just cold."

"We don't have a lot of people in the community who are living in towns like this," said Adrain Pettersen, who has been observing weather since he was 8 years old. "But all 56 golfers who entered for the Carnival's annual tournament were able to play."

"It's hard," said Gene Fish, waiting to tee off. "But all 56 golfers who entered for the Carnival's annual tournament were able to play."

"Nothing shuts us down," said Tom Shrader, who lives in Eau Claire. "It's just cold."

Hawks fall in overtime

Iowa dips below .500 in Big Ten

Mike Dejtert
The Daily Iowan

The Penn State Nittany Lions forced Iowa into overtime Saturday afternoon with a tremendous three-point shooting. Then they won.

Before forward Matt Gaudio scored the Lions' first seven points in the extra period and the last four of regulation, and Penn State went on to beat Iowa 73-69 in the Bryce Jordan Center.

Penn State (16-7, 7-7 Big Ten) made a school-record 13 three-pointers in 17 attempts, including a career-best 10 by senior guard D.J. Newbill. Iowa (16-11, 3-11) had 10 three-pointers, with most coming in the final 14 minutes.

Iowa leads (154-63) kept in all. Penn State's outside shooters (five different Lions made threes), Penn State just started shooting.

"We had a really good game at defense down low, but after the other great Iowa run Matt said, "And obviously the three-point shooters, if you hold too much of them off, you're going to have to go from the man.""

Despite Iowa's jump-shooting troubles, the Lions went up 14-6 in 3:35 until overtime. After a 1-4 run gave the Hawkeyes a 1-1 advantage, they were up 9-3 in 11:17 mark of the second half.

When it came down to crunch time, the Lions showed a greater degree of mental toughness.

"For our team, that's kind of been our weakness in the past, when we're down and we believe in each other," Gaudio said. "I think last game the ones I made -- and even the one I made -- were all tough shots," Liskay said. "Our defense was really good. It was a well-defended game. Everyone was doing their jobs."

Another weekend, two more victories

Chris Jones
The Daily Iowan

The shortest part of Iowa coach Street's approach has nothing to do with the outcomes of games.

"With 4:34 remaining in the game, sophomore forward Angel Goodrich tied a career-high with 17 field goals. She also tied a career-high with 17 made three-pointers."

"We felt that was something we needed to do to win the game," Street said. "I think we've done a better job of doing that in the last three games."

"We had trouble guarding Gaudio all day and she just hit a big shot to win."

Penn State wrestling coach John Sparger wasn't sure what went wrong.

The Nittany Lions had just fallen to the top-ranked Iowa Hawkeyes 20-6, but the loss didn't really sink in until a reporter told him that his team had been taken.

"Wow, if I don't tell you that before, I would have been really embarrassed," Sparger said. "And yes we did."

Hawkeyes reound Sunday for split

The Iowa men's tennis team rebounded from a season-opening upset at the hands of Mainz to win their second singles match of the season, 7-5, 6-4, 6-1, on Sunday at the University of Iowa Recreation Building.

Senior Marcus Ekstrand steadied Iowa's singles fortunes in the initial match of the day with a 6-4, 6-3, 6-0 victory over American Dave Abelson. Abelson's upset of Ekstrand on the tennis courts of the University of Missouri last weekend was the lone blemish on a season-opening tour that had generated much early optimism for the Hawkeyes.

"This guy didn't even play on our team last year," Ekstrand said of Abelson, "so I was looking forward to how he would react to my game, and he played very well. I think he's got a very good future, and I think we both learned a lot from this match.

"I was sort of looking at the beginning of the year and thinking about how I played at a tournament and how I was feeling. I didn't have any rhythm and I wasn't getting my shots in, so I started to play my game more and it started to come together."

Ekstrand's win set the tone for the day and helped carry Iowa to a strong overall victory. The Hawkeyes' 16-0 win over the Bears was Iowa's seventh straight over SMU and their first straight over Texas State, in which they picked up their first singles wins of the season.

Iowa had two out of three doubles matches, and Abelson and five other singles won.

"I think this is a very good match for our team right now," said co-captain Dan Cleary. "I think this was a very good step forward for us."

Iowa College claimed third with 31. Iowa junior Jerry Host said he felt Iowa had lost momentum going into the singles matches, but the Hawkeyes still won.

"I think it would have helped if we had won both doubles matches," Host said. "But we'll never know."

After Abelson, Iowa junior Marcus Ekstrand struggled early but was able to win the next two matches on his way to an overall win.

"I was just starting to play my game more and it was starting to come together," Ekstrand said. "I think I really played well in the second set."

Iowa junior Ryan Johnstone returned the favor late in singles action. Ekstrand was the Hawkeyes' lone singles winner early on, and Jonsson returned the favor late with a win.

"I really didn't feel good in the first set," Johnstone said of his match against Alexandre Bums. "I think I really played well in the second set."

Iowa had seven singles matches, and claimed eight victories.

"I think that gave us a lot of momentum for the singles," Johnstone said. "I really thought I was playing well there and that was the difference."
Hawkeye divers key narrow victory

With a 1-0 finish in the final race on Saturday, the 49th annual Big Ten Championships came to a close at the University of Iowa Aquatic Complex.

The only problem was the weather and the water, said team co-captain Marco Minone. "We didn't know how we were training," Minone said. "We had no idea what we were working on...it was just the last month she's gotten a lot of work done in the pool with a lead and they were excited for the big thing, the next day." Minone said they are pleased to sneak the win in the final race after coming into the season with some high expectations.

The junior diver pushed her way into the lead after the third dive, Minone said. "We're really pleased to sneak the win," Minone said. "We've been working hard and they were really pleases with the win." Minone said the win is really exciting for the women's team and they are looking forward to the future.

Iowa: The race starts here

The Iowa caucuses are the first test in the presidential nomination process, and the results can have such power because of its first-in-the-nation tradition. Iowa voters have been deciding presidential candidates to the state for more than 20 years.

Ever since an unknown Southerner named Jimmy Carter practically moved in town, won the nomination and then the presidency, the path to the White House has gone through Iowa. Because of its first-in-the-nation tradition, it’s the first stage in sorting out the candidates, said Gary Covington, UI associate professor of political science.

Covington said the caucuses can do two things. The first is to boost them to their party’s nomination or send them packing up their campaign offices. The second is to allow individuals to air their views and see if their candidate will move in the right direction. The Iowa Caucus Project, a media information clearinghouse, has been keeping track of coverage to cover, the satellite trucks stayed.

Previous Iowa Winners

- 1984 Carter 34.4%, Bush 33.2%, Dole 11.4%
- 1980 Carter 54.9%, Mondale 28.3%, Reagan 16.9%
- 1976 Carter 65.0%, Ford 22.2%, complic.
- 1972 Ford 68%, Carter 28.6%, complic.
- 1968 Humphrey 57.5%, Nixon 39.7%, complic.
- 1964 Johnson 64.9%, Goldwater 34.1%, complic.
- 1960 Kennedy 57.1%, Nixon 39.7%, complic.
- 1956 Stevenson 55.9%, Taft 39.7%, complic.
- 1952 Eisenhower 44.9%, Stevenson 41.8%, complic.

- 1924 Coolidge 55.9%, Warren 44.1%, complic.

But the Iowans had another motive. To raise money for the state parties, they decided to hold the caucuses on the same day as the New Hampshire primary. The candidates and the cash began to flow to Iowa.

In 1988, Iowa Republicans decided to hold caucuses a week earlier, and a media event was born. In 1996, when both parties were looking for a nominee, more than 900 satellite trucks parked on the campus of Des Moines to broadcast the results worldwide.
Countdown to the Caucuses

Facts at a glance:

Iowa Electronic Markets

The state of the presidential situation on the Iowa Electronic Markets:

1. THE EM, which treats the presidential nominating process as a market, is now in session for the 1996 election.

2. The Iowa Electronic Market (IEM) is an interest-organization market based in Iowa City.

3. The IEM is a computerized trading service that allows traders to buy or sell candidates' futures for the 1996 election.

4. Participants can place bets on candidates at any point prior to the Nov. 5, 1995, deadline.

When Forbes finally made his move in Iowa, the system was already trading at about 30 cents. Forbes was a long-shot candidate, but the market made him a favorite. Students and faculty at the University of Iowa, for example, can participate in the Feb. 12th caucuses - even if they are not registered to vote. Five students and three faculty members have already placed bets on Forbes. Forbes' campaign manager, Charles Squire, said. "The market is a way for people to get together that might not have a neighborhood-type feeling." In Iowa, caucuses will take place in each of the 2,143 precincts in both the Republican and Democratic parties. People can go to their precinct and talk about who they want to vote for. They can also talk about who they want to vote for in the primaries.

Republican Caucuses

Countdown to the Caucuses

Facts at a glance:
- Number of registered Republicans in Iowa: 500,000
- Number of Iowans who attended the 1980 Republican caucuses: 110,000

What is a caucus, anyway?

A caucus is a meeting of party members at each polling place in Iowa to hear candidates present their platforms. The meetings are held in each of the state's 99 counties. Participants cast their votes for a candidate in a secret ballot, and the candidate with the most votes is declared the winner. The winner then goes on to the general election, where they compete against the winner of the other party's caucuses.

Conclusion

Forbes, the Republican front-runner, has been traded at 30 cents. The market is a way for people to get together that might not have a neighborhood-type feeling. In Iowa, caucuses will take place in each of the 2,143 precincts in both the Republican and Democratic parties. People can go to their precinct and talk about who they want to vote for. They can also talk about who they want to vote for in the primaries.

The Candidates on the Issues

The candidates' answers on a variety of issues:

Lamar Alexander

Pat Buchanan

Bob Dole

Bob Dornan

Steve Forbes

ELECTIONS

BOB DOLE

Steve Forbes: National health care is a "false issue," in his view. "If you're rich, you have the best health care. If you're poor, you have the worst health care." Forbes has called for a "tax and subsidy" program for health care.

Bob Dole: Has publicly endorsed the idea of refundable credits, a type of voucher program, to help low-income families pay medical bills, arguing it is more fiscally conservative than a national health care program.

Lamar Alexander: Supports a mixed system where states and individuals can establish health care plans.

Pat Buchanan: Outlines a plan to give every American "equal access to health care" in his "health freedom" plan.

ECONOMY

Steve Forbes: Forbes has often said he would bring in a "Goldwater-style" tax cut, reducing the highest income tax rate to 15% and eliminating all taxes on first $50,000 of income, among other changes.

Bob Dole: Dole advocates a tax cut with emphasis on reducing the burden on small businesses.

Lamar Alexander: Proposes a tax cut that would benefit those in the middle-income range.

Pat Buchanan: Supports a flat tax on all income, with credits for the poor.

ECONOMY

Bob Dole: Dole supports a "voters' bill of rights," legislation that would protect the rights of the voting public.

Lamar Alexander: Advocates a "voters' bill of rights" that would protect the rights of the voting public.

Pat Buchanan: Supports a "voters' bill of rights" that would protect the rights of the voting public.

Steve Forbes: Forbes supports a "voters' bill of rights" that would protect the rights of the voting public.

FOREIGN POLICY

UI students help get out the vote

It's long till the "conviction stage?" to make the semester finish on UI campuses, but with the increasing number of candidates running for public office in the state, students are making their voices heard.

According to the UI, there are one or more political campaigns on campus. The student vote is a major factor in determining the outcome of elections.

Fact! The student vote is crucial to the success of candidates. The young voter is a key demographic because they are more likely to vote than other age groups.

Lamar Alexander, a candidate for the U.S. Senate, has been campaigning on campus. He is running against incumbent Bob Dole, who has held the seat for many years.

Alexander has been making appearances at the UI, speaking to students and discussing his platform. He has also been visiting other universities in the area.

Says Alexander, "The UI is a key voting block because of its size and because of the young voter. The UI is a swing state, and I believe we can make a difference in this election."
