Alliance of UISG, bars debated
Candidates divided on ethics of bar support for campaigns

Several downtown bars are proposing Patron of the Year and American Legion Post 587 of interest to UISG Students Government candidates — a practice other candidates say is a conflict of interest. The candidates, who were not speaking on behalf of their campaigns, say they do not think the practice is as big of an issue as the negative stereotype of out-of-state college students.

Bill could end no-fault divorce in Iowa

Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES — Republicans in Iowa's legislature have introduced a bill that would end no-fault divorce by making it illegal for a person to have sexual relations with a spouse who does not want to end the marriage.

The proposal was made by Republican state Rep. Tom Miller, who has been a vocal opponent of no-fault divorce for years.

"If we allow anyone to walk into a church or courthouse and get a divorce, that's what we're allowing," Miller said in an interview. "I believe we should make sure that only people who want to get a divorce are able to do so."

"This is a good formula," Alexander said of his fundraising and investment plan. "And we will have a lot of fun." Alexander said he plans to use the money to hire a fundraising consultant and a company partly owned by $64,000 in business directed to deal with the school's fundraising efforts.

Alexander also arranged for the school's fundraising efforts. The audit found the school's audit committee was not informed of the fundraising effort.

"I don't know," said Lamar Alexander. "I don't know if I can really talk about it. But I do know that he has a lot of good ideas." Alexander said he has not yet seen the university's fundraising plan.

Clinton tours flooded Northwest

WOODLAND, Wash. — President
Clinton inspected the record Pacific Northwest floods to day and on fast Wednesday con
reforming critics of the nation's worst floods in decades. The adminis istration said America was suffering a record winter for natural disas ners. "I hope you will keep your peace," Clinton declared. "This will pass and you will get better and we'll do everything we can to help."

Retired teacher Douglas Jang nickert toured Clinton through the rooms of his modest home where waters had reached chest-high last week. "He invited me into his outpouring home," Clinton joked.

Standing in his still-wet lower floor, Jangnickert said: "To see you out here with ordinary people like us...it's going to give people faith and comfort all around...I hope everybody in all the little towns in the country can see this on televisi on."

Outside, the president addressed
a neighborhood crowd and pledged to "mow as soon as possible to do so much as we can...everything people want to do within the law to help you rebuild and to keep the economy going."

Woodland was the first stop on a long day of travel taking Clinton to flood-striken Washington, Oregon and Utah and then back East to New York.

It was an election-year event of competition by the president, who has been at the forefront of the Republican calls for deep reforms
to help Americans.

Campaign stops at Clinton's first in Washington, Oregon and Utah will hold presidential caucuses or events in the next few weeks.
Clinton brought some of Washington's $26.9 billion in recovery aid for flood areas.

The president flew over crested fields and farms. In con trast to last week's heavy rains and flooding, Clinton saw a spectacular view of Woodland. Clinton surveyed the flood from the jump seat of a mili tary transport helicopter, peering out an open window.

"It's been a tough year," said
James Lee Witt, head of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. "It will be a long run from here...the time is going to come at an opportune time:
when a party in the White House has been in power for four years and the tax situation is awful."

Witt said. "We have not had a moment that people have been locked out...the

The floods were blamed for four deaths in Oregon, Washington and Idaho and then back East to New Jersey.

A speedy response to natural disasters has been a hallmark of the Clinton administration, in contrast to the Bush administration, where FEMA's performance was harshly criticized. Clinton helped by PDA

The cease-fire had halted a conflict between Palestinians and Israelis. The cease-fire was supposed to have a full cessation of violence if the Palestinian Authority and Israel showed their willingness to illustrate the point.

During the cease-fire, Stalin ruled with an iron fist. Stalin controlled all aspects of society, and those who opposed his regime were arrested or executed.

At the beginning of their reign, Stalin and his associates established a system of forced labor camps, known as Gulags. These camps were located throughout the Soviet Union and were used to imprison those who were considered enemies of the state.

Stalin's government was responsible for the deaths of millions of people, including famines, purges, and forced labor. The episode has become known as the Great Purge or the Great Terror.

The purges were conducted in two main waves: the First Great Purge (1934) and the Second Great Purge (1937-1938). During these purges, Stalin and his allies arrested and executed hundreds of thousands of people, including political leaders, intellectuals, and ordinary citizens.

The Great Famine of 1932-1933, also known as the Holodomor, was a man-made famine in the Soviet Union that was caused by the forced collectivization of agriculture and the destruction of private gardens.

The famine resulted in the deaths of an estimated 7 million to 10 million people, making it one of the largest and most devastating famines in human history.

In conclusion, Stalin's reign was marked by a brutal and ruthless regime that was responsible for the deaths of millions of people. The purges and the famine were just two examples of the extreme measures taken by Stalin and his allies to maintain power and control.

The leaders of the Soviet Union, Russia, and the world should remember this history to ensure that similar atrocities do not happen again in the future.

But candidates have nothing to fight for the third. The polarized party system and the media bias against Iowa has created a situation where the votes go to the candidate who represents their religious right.

Indeed, there may be little point in holding Republican caucuses here in Iowa again, because they are dominated by voters from the Christian right.

Just as this elitist group of voters propelled Buchanan to a strong showing in Iowa, he will probably do well against Bush in the next contests. Buchanan has the primary in the national party,

'Arrow': Recipe leaves bad taste

Mark Pittillo
The Daily Iowan

Not exactly synonymous with gee-whiz Hollywood, this episode of “Arrow” is an entertaining example of how the show can fall flat on its face. The episode, titled “The SinISTER”, follows the character of Oliver Queen, who is revealed to be the Arrow, a vigilante who fights crime in the city of Star City.

The episode begins with a scene in which Oliver is trying to save a woman from being mugged. He is successful, but not without the aid of his trusty bow and arrow. The episode then cuts to Oliver meeting with his mentor, Roy Harper, who is now working for the same organization that Oliver works for.

As the episode progresses, Oliver and Roy discover that a new threat has emerged in Star City, and they must work together to defeat it. The action scenes are well-choreographed and the special effects are impressive, but the dialogue is often stilted and the characters are one-dimensional.

The episode ends with Oliver and Roy uniting to take down their common enemy, and the episode concludes with a cliffhanger that sets up for next week's episode.

Overall, the episode is entertaining enough for fans of the show, but it doesn't add anything new or interesting to the narrative.

Woo's 'Broken Arrow': A movie that is beautifully shot, but lacks substance

Mark Pittillo
The Daily Iowan

John Woo's latest movie, "Broken Arrow," is a film that is beautifully shot, but lacks substance. The movie is a story about a man named John (John Travolta), who is a pilot for the U.S. Air Force.

John travels to New Zealand to help a friend who is a pilot, but when he arrives, he discovers that the friend has been shot down. John then sets out to rescue the friend and bring him back home.

The movie is shot in New Zealand and it is visually stunning, but the story is not very compelling. The movie is also filled with gratuitous violence and it is not very well-written.

Overall, "Broken Arrow" is a movie that is visually stunning, but it is not very well-written and it lacks substance.

As he's going down the drain, she

In "Leaving Las Vegas," Elisabeth Shue share one of many unanswerable moments in "Leaving Las Vegas," a film about a doomed romance between a sophisticated drifter (Nicolas Cage) and a naive young female (Shue) who doesn't fully grasp the gravity of her actions. Despite Cage's Oscar-nominated performance, the film's critical reception was mixed, with some praising its rawness and others criticizing its portrayal of addiction.

The story follows Shue as she becomes drawn into the life of Cage's protagonist, a man struggling with alcoholism and depression. Their relationship is tumultuous, and they quickly fall into a pattern of fasting, drinking themselves to death, and engaging in other self-destructive behaviors.

"Leaving Las Vegas" is known for its brutally honest portrayal of addiction and its raw depiction of the effects of drug and alcohol abuse on individuals and their relationships. The film was a turning point in Shue's career, solidifying her status as a serious actress capable of handling challenging roles.

In "Leaving Las Vegas," Shue's performance was praised for its depth and vulnerability, and she was nominated for an Academy Award for Best Actress. Although she did not win, her portrayal of Sue's character was widely acclaimed as one of the most powerful performances of the year.
