Changes brewing at Fieldhouse

Evelyn Lauer
The Daily Iowan

After closing down Thursday afternoon, The Fieldhouse bar reopened its doors at 9 p.m. with new owners and a new attitude.

"We're coming downtown with a happy-go-lucky, friendly attitude," new owner Dave Moore said.

After 20 years of owning The Fieldhouse bar, 111 E. College St., Mark Eggleston handed the key to Moore, who has owned Soho's, 1210 Highland Ct., for six years, and Lew Converse, owner of Country Kitchen in Oskaloosa, Iowa.

"Mark's been running it for 20 years," Moore said. "He's wanted to get out for a while. He had a great last year and a half, but the big thing is he's been in it for 20 years. Twenty years is a lot of time in the bar business. He wants to pursue other interests out West."

Eggleston could not be reached for comment Thursday night.

Moore and Converse have been interested in purchasing the bar since November and a cash exchange took place Thursday evening between them and Eggleston. Moore said the amount was more than $100,000 but less than $1 million.

Despite the change in ownership, The Fieldhouse will keep its name and stay relatively similar to the way it is now, Moore said.

"We're going to continue the 20-year tradition of The Fieldhouse," he said. "We're going to turn the key, but keep The Fieldhouse the way it is. We're going to just improve upon it."

The Fieldhouse will offer the same drink specials on weekends and will play Top 40 and dance hits, Moore said. The bar will continue to allow patrons 19 years and

Satellite boosts UI research into orbit

Cary Jordan
The Daily Iowan

The northern lights never interested three UI space-physics research teams as much as they will today, as NASA's Polar Spacecraft — launched at 5:30 a.m. — is carrying instruments developed by them.

The Polar Spacecraft will carry a package of 11 scientific instruments — developed to monitor the northern lights and wave particle interactions in space plasma — into an elliptical orbit passing some 32,000 miles above the north pole.

Having three scientific instruments from the same research institution on one space mission doesn't happen often, and shows the world the technological innovations being produced at the UI, said Donald Gurnett, UI physicist and developer of one of the instruments.

"When you consider there are hundreds of proposals, it's extraordinary to have such a concentration of expertise at one university," Gurnett said.

Gurnett, along with UI physicists Louis Frank and Jack Scudder, headed the three research teams. The three sent in their individual proposals in 1980, and each was accepted in 1981. Since then, NASA has invested more than $30 million in the three projects for instrument development, mission operations and data analysis.

The Visible Imaging System, a set of three cameras designed and built by a team led by Frank, will capture visible light images of the northern lights. Two of the cameras will look at the Earth in visible light, capture images of auroras and lightning and measure ozone concentrations.

DIVERSITY CELEBRATED

'Round the world in a day

Ann Haggerty
The Daily Iowan

At this year's Cultural Diversity Day participants can travel around the world without packing any suitcases.

The seventh annual festival, Saturday in The Field House from noon to 5 p.m., will feature cooking demonstrations, dance performances and art displays by about 200 UI students from more than 60 foreign and domestic cultures.

Participants also will be able to practice their foreign languages in rooms with native speakers, who will be speaking with students about videos and pictures from their countries.

The free event includes a welcome address by UI President Mary Sue Coleman, an international fashion show, a performance by UI Voices of Soul, a sari-wrapping demonstration, a step show and dances from Zaire, Palestine and Venezuela. Food and crafts will be sold.

Liz Pearce-Burton, co-chairperson of the festival organization committee, said the event — which draws thousands of people — is a unique opportunity for participants to learn about cultures to which they normally are not exposed.

CAMPAIGN WEEK IN REVIEW

GOP strife opens door for Buchanan

Jay Dee
The Daily Iowan

Pat Buchanan says the Republican primary campaign is a battle for the heart and soul of the party. But if congressional Republicans had been more successful in passing "Contract With America" items, they might have avoided this battle.

Republicans were not able to muster enough votes to overcome Clinton's vetoes on contract items.

When nothing happens on one set of issues, voters tend to lose interest and look for other solutions to their problems.

Issues of the contract — tax cuts, term limits and balanced budgets — have been replaced on the political agenda by protectionism, abortion and immigration.

Many Americans are frustrated by Washington's lack of progress. Dissatisfied by politicians and anx-

Swearing: A helluva habit for some to break

UI religion Professor Jay Holstein swears by profanity to get his students' attention.

"The problem faced by everyone is how to get students interested and keep them interested," he said. "One of the ways to get people to listen, as long as you don't do it too often, is to shock students."

People are more likely to swear now than in the past, UI linguistics

Professor Robert Wachal said. This affects expletives' social utilities, as insults and for emotional release.

"It's a sign of societal change, and I sort of wonder where it's going to end," he said. "If all the taboos are lifted, what do you use when you're really angry? 'Heavens to Betsy' just doesn't do it, and soon 'shit' might not either."

Have you loved your potato, lately?

Chad Graham
The Daily Iowan

Go to hell, Cupid.
Some think February is the month of love between two people, but actually it's the month of love between people, hash browns, french fries and twice-baked potatoes.

Yes, it's National Potato Lover's Month, according to the Idaho Potato Commission.

Jan Temple, an ISU extension service field specialist on family nutrition and health, said potatoes have plenty of good qualities to celebrate.

"They're low in calories," she said. "They have a lot of potassium and a lot of vitamin C."
Potatoes also have other exotic uses — like in the commercial where the guy breaks part of a light bulb in a socket, and you find out he can twist the rest out by sticking a potato in there.

When piercing ears, you can put a potato behind your ear to direct the pin. I also have heard reports of Iowa City joggers being hit by flying potatoes from potato launchers (tubes that fire potatoes when ignited by hair spray and a flame).

What about eating the part of the potato everyone hates — the skin? Temple encourages people to chow down on that, too. She suggested making it crunchy by spraying it with vegetable oil and baking it.

"Some people like it if the skin is crunchy," she said. "Potatoes that are cooked in aluminum foil are mushy. The skin is where the fiber is."

That could explain why I was more regular than a container of Metamucil as a child. I had this odd habit of eating the potato skin off everyone's plates when we went to a restaurant.

Doug Wong, a statistician at the Idaho Department of Agriculture, said 13.8 million pounds of potatoes were produced in Idaho in 1994.

As a side note, I asked Wong why the heck a statistician counts Idaho potatoes. Does he sit in his office, eating French fries and calculate the buckets of spuds coming in from the field?

"It's a part of the national Agriculture Statistics Service," he said. "We do all the agriculture commodities, not just potatoes. We survey, and then send the numbers into the national headquarters in Washington, D.C."

What about those flaky potatoes that permeate residence hall food? I bet Idahoans make fun of us for those.

Tom Ownings, department manager for Sunspiced, Inc., said potato flakes, which are made from reject potatoes, aren't shunned in Idaho, they're good for business.

"They're the small potatoes that can't be shipped out of state," he said. "We then dehydrate them. Idaho people probably don't buy as many potato flakes (as the rest of the country)." University of Idaho junior Dawn Casey, who is from Oregon, said she doesn't eat any more potatoes than usual when she's in Idaho.

"The ones I've gotten in restaurants in Idaho are considerably bigger than usual — they seem to be abnormally large" she said. "In every restaurant you go to, there's a baked potato on the menu. People joke about how our potatoes are grown next to nuclear power plants."

The myth that all Idaho residents eat, sleep and breathe potatoes is wrong, Casey said. She's never seen a potato field and doesn't know any potato farmers.

"I think Idahoans are unfairly stereotyped about potato eating," she said. "Overall, we're pretty normal people."

Casey said the University of Idaho is finding ways to make plastic out of potato waste.

Imagine it — a Mr. Potato Head action-toy figure being made out of an actual potato, yet another reason to celebrate National Potato Lover's Month.

UI freshman Rachel Farley, who eats five servings of potatoes a week, said though she didn't know it was potato lover's month, she had some good potato party ideas.

"You could have a potato pot luck with spicy fries and baked potatoes," she said. "You could have a potato sack race, play hot potato and pin the tail on the potato."

Farley said she would have had a better time celebrating potato lover's month than Valentine's Day this February.

"I didn't get a Valentine's Day present," she said.

In that case, I wish her many scalloped and/or boiled potato memories before the month ends.

Iowa high school students chosen for national competition

Five high-school student presenters at the 34th annual Iowa Junior Science and Humanities Symposium Feb. 16-17 at the UI earned a trip to the National JSHS in San Diego, Calif., and a $500 scholarship from the UI.

The symposium was hosted by the Iowa Secondary Student Training Office for 210 Iowa high-school students and teachers.

Sean Murphy of Bettendorf High School took first place with his presentation, "PAGE Protease Analysis for Potential Fungal Inhibition," earning him a $4,000 scholarship to a college of his choice. He will present his paper at the national JSHS convention in April. Murphy will compete with 47 other student researchers for a chance to participate at the World Symposium in London and a chance to receive either the London International Youth Science Fortnight Award or Academy scholarships totaling more than $100,000.

Murphy's school will be given a $300 award to be used for books, supplies or equipment.

The other finalists are Justin Wilhelm from West Central High in Stuart, Adam Hohl of Central Lee High in Donnellson, Monisha Shah from Waterloo West High and Kelly Weirather of Central Lee High in Montrose.

The JSHS has been sponsored for more than three decades by the U.S. Department of the Army and by the Academy of Applied Science. This is the Office of Naval Research's first year of sponsorship.

'Jacko' interested in beast of a chateau

PARIS (AP) — The King of Pop may be thinking about reigning in a castle in central France.

Michael Jackson is interested in buying a chateau that bears a striking resemblance to the Sleeping Beauty castle he loves to visit at Disney's theme parks, Europe 1 radio reported Thursday.

The 15th century Chateau de Chabennet has 82 rooms, seven towers and a moat. It's on the market for a mere $5 million.

Rumors have persisted that Jackson is preparing to make a bid for the Chateau de Chabennet in Pont-Chretien, about 120 miles south of Paris.

Owner Philippe Marec would neither confirm nor deny that Jackson had contacted him. Jackson's Los Angeles-based publicist, Lee Solters, said Thursday he wasn't aware of Jackson's reported interest.

If Jackson were to buy the castle, he'd join a growing list of luminaries who have purchased chateaus in the French heartland, including Mick Jagger.

Celebrity restaurant makes career move

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Wolfgang Puck's flagship Spago restaurant, the Sunset Boulevard eatery famous for celebrity clientele and Oscar night soirees, is moving to Beverly Hills.

Spago will take over the site of the Bistro Garden this summer, Puck said in Thursday's Los Angeles Times. He had been considering renovating Spago.

"But then this opportunity came up and I decided I'd rather move Spago than renovate. And with the Bistro Garden's outdoor area, it will be much more California," Puck said.

Christopher Niklas, son of Bistro Garden owner Kurt Niklas, confirmed that his family planned to move their restaurant in the next six to eight months.

'Superman' still has super sex life

NEW YORK (AP) — Christopher Reeve says his sex life still soars.

In an interview with CNN's Larry King, Reeve, who suffered a crippling fall last May, said his "beautiful, extraordinary" wife, Dana, makes him feel "like a high school senior."

Reeve's cheerful revelation came in response to King asking whether he can still have sex. Seated in a ventilator-equipped wheelchair, he appeared on King's Wednesday night telecast.

The stage and screen star best known for his four Superman films also confessed he misses acting.

"I think I was just getting the hang of it," he said.

But the 43-year-old Reeve, paralyzed from the neck down since his horseback riding accident, voiced a steely resolve to get back on his feet.

O.J. collaborator pens post-trial 'Post Mortem'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lawrence Schiller, who worked with O.J. Simpson on his jailhouse book, "I Want to Tell You," has a new book in the works with the working title, "Post Mortem."

Schiller, who collaborated with Norman Mailer on the Pulitzer Prize-winning "The Executioner's Song," got Simpson's close friend, Robert Kardashian, to give him a series of exclusive interviews.

Kardashian was at Simpson's side in the days after Nicole Brown Simpson was slain along with her friend Ronald Goldman. Simpson left Kardashian's house to begin his infamous odyssey in a Bronco.

"It doesn't take a point of view on Simpson," Schiller said this week. "It doesn't rehash the evidence."

Abdul-Jabbar slam dunks Nation of Islam

MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, known for his sky hook, had a brash comment or two for Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan.

"I am an Orthodox Muslim," Abdul-Jabbar said. "I am not a part of Minister Farrakhan's little group."

"He is part of the problem, not part of the solution. He is a demagogue taking advantage of misery in the black community.

He's not doing a lot to change things," the NBA career scoring leader told about 600 people Wednesday night at Ball State University.

Abdul-Jabbar, who majored in history at UCLA, was there to promote a book that he's co-writing called "Profiles In Black Courage."

Just when you thought Iowa City water was safe ...

Stacy Forrest
The Daily Iowan

Environmental groups are releasing a report to warn the public of the threat of nitrates in drinking water and the possibility of increased levels, which can cause infant deaths.

The Environmental Working Group has released a report that identified nitrate contamination as a danger in the public water supply. The Clean Water Act and the Safe Drinking Water Act are up for review by Congress, and the Environmental Working Group wants the public to know about these hazards.

"The purpose of the report is to let the public know there is a possibility of Congress having intentions to weaken the acts when they review them," Ed Moreno, superintendent of Iowa City Water Division, said.

The report stated that nitrate concentrations over the federal standard of 10 parts per million in drinking water can cause methemoglobinemia, or blue baby syndrome, a potentially fatal condition caused by oxygen deprivation in infants under 6 months old.

"By informing the public of the hazards and letting them know who is at a risk of nitrate contamination, we are giving them information that is useful," Moreno said. "This allows them to safeguard infants who are at the most risk."

The EWG released a list of different communities that violated standard nitrate levels or had an excessive amount of nitrates in their water supply, Moreno said.

"They asserted that Iowa City has not had problems, but in fact we have," Moreno said.

In 1990 and 1991 Iowa City had occurrences when the nitrate level in drinking water exceeded the standard. Moreno said the drought of 1988 and 1989 brought high

"By informing the public of the hazards and letting them know who is at a risk of nitrate contamination, we are giving them information that is useful."

Ed Moreno, superintendent of Iowa City Water Division nitrate levels to the drinking water.

"Excessive use of nitrogen fertilizer in agriculture has been identified as a primary cause of elevated nitrates in surface water," Moreno said. "The Iowa River is the primary source of public water for Iowa City, which contained high levels of nitrates from the run-off of unused fertilizer."

Moreno said if plants don't take up the fertilizer and then it rains, the rain will flush the fertilizer into the surface water, which in Iowa City is the Iowa River.

"In the 1988-89 drought we were measuring nitrate levels of zero. And then when it started to rain, the levels increased significantly,"

Moreno said.

Due to those high levels, the water division took measures to prevent future occurrences. One measure is a daily test of the nitrate level.

"Right now the nitrate level ranges between two to three, which is relatively low considering the EPA standard is 10 parts per million and the International Health standard is 5.6 parts per million," Moreno said.

Introducing more groundwater and looking at new sources with no nitrates or low levels of nitrates are other precautionary measures, Moreno said.

Father pulls son from day care for 'cross-dressing'

BALTIMORE (AP) — Henry Holmes went to his son's day-care center thinking he'd find the boy painting or playing with blocks. Instead, he found 6-year-old Gerald wearing a dress and playing house.

"There he was with this long dress on that a little girl wears. One of those long white silk dresses with sequins in it," said Holmes, who removed the boy from the day-care center.

Holmes believes the Social Secur-A-Kiddie Child Care Center was, possibly unwittingly, encouraging his son to be homosexual. "I'm from the old school," Holmes said. "Some 6-year-old child does not need to be exposed to wearing dresses."

Day-care center officials, however, said the dress was Gerald's choice, picked out of a selection of dress-up costumes kept for the children.

And education experts insist there was nothing to be concerned about.

"When a child at 3 or 4 puts on a dress they're not cross-dressing. It's simply play," said Barbara Willer, spokesperson for the Washington-based National Association for the Education of Young Children. "There's absolutely no research evidence that non-traditional gender behavior creates homosexuality."

Holmes said a staffer told him Gerald was just participating in the "housekeeping" part of the curriculum.

"I said: 'Miss, I know how to sew, cook, iron — and I never wear a dress to do it,'" Holmes said.

Holmes removed Gerald from the center, where the boy was enrolled in a $95-a-week alternative kindergarten program, and on Monday enrolled him in kindergarten at a public elementary school.

Satellite on a string

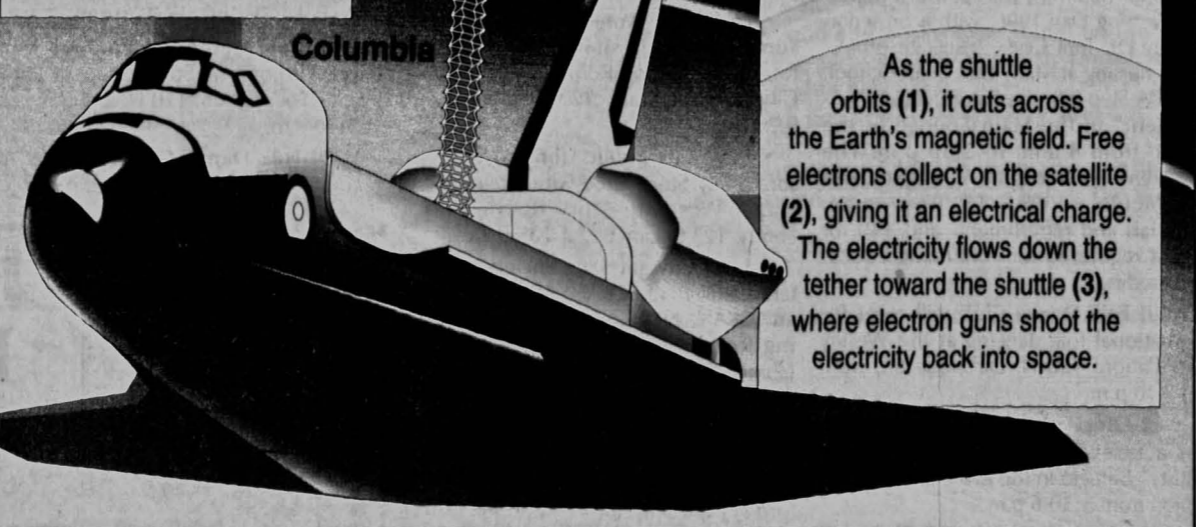

A tiny satellite, anchored to the space shuttle Columbia by a thin cord, is reeled out 12 miles into space. As the shuttle/satellite combination orbits the Earth at an altitude of 185 miles, thousands of volts of electricity are generated along the tether.

Potential uses of space tethers:

- As a method of generating power.
- To move satellites to and from a space station.
- When dropped downward, as a method of studying the upper layers of the Earth's atmosphere.
- To tie together spacecraft so that they can be spun, to generate artificial gravity.

Shuttle crew begins electrifying test

Marcia Dunn Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Seven shuttle astronauts blasted into orbit Thursday to attempt a Space Age version of Benjamin Franklin's kite experiment — unreeling a satellite on the end of a 12.8-mile cord.

On Saturday, in a risky maneuver, the international crew will reel out the satellite and try to generate electricity from the half-ton metal ball and its slender cord as they sweep through Earth's magnetic field at 5 miles per second. The same U.S.-Italian experiment flopped four years ago; the tether jammed on the reel and the satellite got no farther than 840 feet from the shuttle, producing hardly any electricity.

The four Americans, two Italians and one Swiss on board will unreel the satellite nearly 200 miles above Earth. For two days, the ball is supposed to soar above Columbia on the end of the tether, which looks like a white boot lace and is made of copper, nylon and Teflon.

Scientists hope to generate 5,000 volts of electricity with the tethered satellite and produce some 1,000 watts of power as current flows down the tether to Columbia. Electron guns on the shuttle will shoot the electrons back into space and thereby close the electrical circuit.

"We're going to work and discover the properties of electricity in space very similar, very analogous to Benjamin Franklin sending up the kite with the key at the bottom," Allen said.

The hardest part — and most dangerous — will be the release and retrieval of the satellite.

Oil cleanup begins in North Sea

Sue Leeman Associated Press

MILFORD HAVEN, Wales — The tanker Sea Empress has stopped leaking crude oil after discharging 19 million gallons near one of Britain's most important wildlife preserves, authorities said.

The company that manages the Sea Empress said human error was probably to blame for the spill, which occurred after the ship ran aground off southwest Wales Feb. 15, rupturing cargo tanks.

Now that oil flow has finally been stanchied, cleanup work can begin on a spill that nearly doubles that of the Exxon Valdez in 1989. Oil already has surrounded two islands that are home to seals and thousands of guillemots, razorbills, shags, gannets, puffins and other sea birds.

"You have ... poison spilled into one of Europe's premier wildlife sites ... It is not just what you can see, like seals and porpoises, but sponges and other life. This must be a disaster in anyone's terms," said Phil Rothwell, head of policy operations for the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds.

Brian Pawson of the Countryside Council for Wales, said 545 birds had been sighted with evidence of oiling, but so far only four dead birds had been found.

Bottle-nose dolphins and harbor porpoises also inhabit the area.

The Sea Empress was carrying 36.7 million gallons of light North Sea crude when it ran aground Feb. 15 on St. Ann's Head, at the mouth of Milford Haven estuary.

Bad weather thwarted rescue efforts for six days until late Wednesday, when 12 straining tugboats finally pushed and pulled the tanker free of the rocks that stopped it. Officials said the ship was towed to Milford Haven harbor and berthed at a jetty.

Chris Harris, chief executive of the Coast Guard Agency, said Thursday that the oil leak had been stopped, and the tanker "is in a stable state and firmly secured."

Campaign '96

New negative ads widen GOP division

John King
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It was two days before the New Hampshire primary and Pat Buchanan was pacing his hotel room, shaking his head in bewilderment at a Bob Dole television ad labeling Buchanan "too extreme" to be president.

"Why is my old friend doing this to me?" Buchanan asked a visitor. "Go back over this entire campaign. I have never said anything harsh about Bob Dole. But he left me no choice."

The wisdom of the decision to cast Buchanan as an extremist is being hotly debated within the Dole campaign and in broader GOP circles, where many believe that it is Dole who went to extremes with his criticism.

Since Dole launched his ad, Buchanan has dropped any reluctance to attack the Kansas senator, even though he has told close associates he still believes Dole is most likely to emerge as the Republican nominee.

In the final days of the New Hampshire campaign, Buchanan launched ads criticizing Dole for supporting billions in tax increases and said the Senate majority leader had sided with big banks and corporations on trade and foreign aid deals that Buchanan says cost American jobs.

And as Buchanan campaigned Thursday in Arizona, he suggested Dole and others who say Buchanan risks dividing the party ought to look in the mirror.

"I've always supported the Republican nominee," he said. "But I tell you, the name calling is making it very difficult for my people and my movement to support someone who's called me a lot of names."

Publicly, Dole aides defended the strategy. "None whatsoever," Dole campaign manager Scott Reed said when asked if he had any doubts about the anti-Buchanan ad and subsequent attacks.

Dole has stuck to the script, framing the race as "between mainstream conservatism and extremism." A radio version of the New Hampshire ad is being aired in South Carolina.

Several top Dole advisers have opposed the strategy from the outset. Some believe the ad cost Dole a victory in New Hampshire by motivating Buchanan voters and feeding into his rivals' complaints that a desperate Dole was going negative.

Some outside strategists warn that in labeling Buchanan extreme, Dole is casting aspersions on Buchanan voters, a constituency that will be critical to whoever carries the GOP banner against President Clinton in the fall.

Even if Dole ultimately emerges as the nominee, Buchanan's early success has virtually assured him of a major role at the GOP convention. Given that, many social conservatives now believe it would be almost impossible for any nominee to suggest changes in the party's anti-abortion platform plank or pick a running mate who supports abortion rights.

"From here on out, the party's soul cannot be for sale," Gary Bauer of the conservative Family Research Council wrote in an analysis of Buchanan's early strength.

WORLD REACTS

Buchanan-Hitler comparisons fill European media

Hilary Appelman
Associated Press

The victory of "America-first" presidential candidate Pat Buchanan in New Hampshire's Republican primary set off alarm bells worldwide.

A Norwegian newspaper compared the Republican candidate's rhetoric to 1930s Europe, and the Edinburgh Scotsman said bluntly: "Heil Buchanan."

From Mexico to Japan, people worried aloud what Buchanan's protectionist and isolationist policies might mean for the rest of the world — even if he doesn't win the GOP nomination or get elected president.

In Israel, concern focused on Buchanan's perceived anti-Semitism and on his influence on the eventual Republican Party platform. In Turkey, where the anti-Western, pro-Islamic Welfare party won general elections on Dec. 24, the newspaper Hurriyet wrote that "a fascist bomb" had fallen on the American election scene.

Not all was negative abroad for Buchanan, who disclaims any notions that he is racist or anti-Semitic. Russian ultranationalist Vladimir Zhirinovskiy, a candidate in June presidential elections, congratulated Buchanan Thursday as "a comrade and brother-in-arms."

Zhirinovskiy, who has made no secret of his own anti-Semitism and disdain for foreigners, said Buchanan's "slogans are close and understandable to us. Especially your words, 'America for Americans.'"

But through most of the world, the reaction to Buchanan's win in the United States' first 1996 primary was one of fear.

In Mexico, a frequent target of Buchanan's speeches, many were afraid his success would feed racial hostility in the United States. Buchanan has said he would use troops and build walls along the Mexican border to stop illegal immigration.

"His attitude should worry every person who has analyzed his actions and statements," Mexican congressman Carlos Reta Martinez said.

In Japan, where Buchanan's proposed 10 percent tariff on Japanese goods and isolationist defense and anti-free trade policies have not gone over well, commentators treated his win with as much humor as concern.

Television anchor Hiroshi Kume could barely suppress his laughter after a report on Buchanan's conservative views.

"It looks like a whole lot of people in New Hampshire don't accept the theory of evolution yet," he said.

In most countries, the strongest fear was not that Buchanan would be elected, but that his views are taking root among Americans.

"Even the most reactionary financial barons consider Bill Clinton a blessing compared to the man who would build a wall around the entire U.S.A. to 'secure' American jobs," Norway's largest newspaper, Verdens Gang, said in a commentary.

The paper called Buchanan "hate's spokesman" and said his message was "frighteningly reminiscent of the brown wave of 1930s Europe: hate, dissatisfaction, racism and anti-Semitism."

"In another time and another country, Buchanan would be defined as 'national socialist,'" the Rome newspaper La Repubblica said in a reference to Hitler's party.

Buchanan contends that many of his statements are resurrected "golden oldies," often taken out of context from his commentary career. When he ran for president in 1992, he noted he had been called "an anti-Semite, a homophobe, a racist, a sexist, a nativist, a protectionist, an isolationist and a beer-hall conservative." But, he said, "I am none of the above."

Pat's going

■ Republican candidate Pat Buchanan did well in Iowa and New Hampshire because his message reaches groups who haven't been addressed until now.

It's time for the Republican establishment and President Clinton to raise the drawbridges because the "peasants are storming the castle." And they are not led by William Wallace, as in "Braveheart," but by Pat Buchanan. His populist message of keeping America's jobs at home and traditional values has propelled this outsider to stellar performances in Louisiana, Iowa and New Hampshire. The reason for Buchanan's success is that the other two major Republican contenders' messages are intellectually bankrupt.

As Buchanan said a few days ago, "I feel like I'm in an echo chamber."

In the wake of his less than awe-inspiring performance in Iowa, Sen. Bob Dole has used a "me too" approach to Buchanan's crusade against corporate greed. Lamar Alexander, the "piano man," has also felt the urge to mimic Buchanan's conservative agenda.

In the past, Dole has been forced to take a stand against affirmative action and bash Hollywood in an effort to appease the social conservatives — the driving force of the Republican primary electorate. After the Iowa wake-up call, The New York Times reported Feb. 14 that Dole blasted corporate profits and layoffs at the New Hampshire Legislature in an appeal to blue collar voters, a key Buchanan power base. But, alas, Buchanan fires back: The Washington Times quoted Buchanan on Feb. 15 saying, "His (Dole's) campaign contributions come from the same corporate interests that he is now supposedly criticizing."

Human Events ran a story in its Feb. 23 issue analyzing Alexander's record. Although he supports stemming the tide of illegal immigration, eliminating the Department of Education and bashing the teachers' union, Alexander is hiding from his advocacy of America 2000, a plan which would spend more than $500 million on 535 "New American Schools." These schools would be little more than Soviet gulags where students would spend 12 hours a day, 12 months a year under the direction of the same teachers. Further, America 2000 advocated a de facto national education standard through "voluntary" national exams. Alexander's dirty little secret is that his America 2000 program is the fore-runner of the Clinton Administration's Goals 2000, which imposes national standards on education.

In short, the tune Alexander plays on his piano sounds a lot like "Happy Days Are Here Again."

Though Buchanan is a lightning rod for criticism, he is doing the Republican Party a big favor by reaching out to groups that feel shunned by big money Republicans: Reagan Democrats and blue-collar voters. This move broadens the party's appeal to help kill the Democrats' New Deal coalition once and for all, and undercuts a possible Ross Perot insurgency which would surely give Clinton the dreaded second term.

Stoic society

■ In today's world showing emotion has become stigmatized as a sign of weakness. We need to rely more on our senses than our sensibilities.

Jane Austen's beloved England has been playing at Englert Theatre in Iowa City in the form of "Sense and Sensibility," a Hollywood version of one of her novels. We are shown the picture of a glorious England. We are — more importantly — shown a picture of a society far different and, in many ways, far richer than ours.

There was a time when people's emotions and feelings were not drained by television, their jobs, or rush-hour traffic. There was a time when people experienced emotions which were raw, intense and heartfelt. There was a time when a person's sensibility was, in fact, controlled by his or her emotions.

In today's society, we are expected to always act based on logic and self-interest. Expression of emotion is often taken as a sign of weakness. For instance, women entering jobs formerly dominated by men are asked — and most readily accept — to discard some of their more tender emotions in pursuit of profit and promotions.

We have created a virtual world where we see others in a detached manner acting out their emotions on pages of novels, television screens, or computer terminals. People no longer have time to experience more simple and meaningful emotions of what it means to be a human. They spend more than half of their waking hours at work.

Some may say there are many feelings exchanged at work. Yet, such feelings consume us long after we have left work and are often petty. Work-related feelings are meaningless because such feelings are often dominated by economic motivations. In contrast, Austen's England was a world where people expressed feelings of longing, loneliness and love for other human beings, not dollars.

With more information and entertainment at our disposal, we are spending less time interacting with our fellow human beings. More time is spent watching television or "cruising" the Internet than talking to the person sitting next to us.

We should stop this madness.

We should turn off our television sets, radios and computers. We should, instead, seek other humans. We should let ourselves become vulnerable; expose our emotions to others. Only then can we find who we are and who our friends or lovers are.

We should get away from this virtual world. We should re-enter the real world. It is only then when we can be free in our spirits, as were Austen's tender characters. It is only in the real non-materialistic world of humans where we can express and expose our emotions. It is only in that world — long lost but not unreachable — where we can permit our sensibilities to be controlled and even dominated by our emotions.

Buchanan: Canada isn't that cold

This year has provided us with the who's who in scary Republican candidates for president. Bob Dole. Steve Forbes. Lamar Alexander. Nobody, however, is scarier than Pat Buchanan. If Buchanan earns the nomination, the Canadian population is sure to rise.

Amazingly, Buchanan has pulled into a dead heat with Dole for the lead. He sees himself as a populist of some sort, and says he is preaching to the peasants.

Of course, the peasants Buchanan is preaching to do not include African-Americans, Hispanics, Jews or homosexuals.

Buchanan is a manipulator who uses a not-so-subtle form of racism as his political weapon.

Of course, the peasants Buchanan is preaching to do not include African-Americans, Hispanics, Jews or homosexuals.

At the 1992 Republican Convention, his speech was so blatantly racist, he would have been right at home in Nazi Germany.

Buchanan's co-chairperson of his presidential campaign has been linked to white-supremacist groups and to an anti-Semitic newsletter. According to the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, Larry Pratt is a contributing editor to a newsletter which sells extremist materials such as the "Protocols of the Elders of Zion," an anti-Semitic text.

Pratt has also spoken alongside several members of the extreme-right hate movement. The Chicago Tribune cited Pete Peters, the head of Christian Identity, a group which advocates violence to promote white supremacy; Louis Beam, a former Ku Klux Klan leader; and Richard Butler, the pastor of the Aryan Nation Church.

Jon Bassoff

Despite all of these rising allegations, Buchanan has refused to criticize or disassociate himself from Pratt. He prefers to be associated with the racist attitudes than to be seen as a disloyal person.

Buchanan's latest pledge is to stop the teaching of evolution in schools, calling it "godless evolution."

When asked if he believed in the Bible's literal description of the creation of the world, Buchanan said, "God did it according to the Bible. You may believe you are descended from monkeys, I don't believe it."

Buchanan has naturally gained a strong backing from conservative Christian groups and different extremist groups. His backing from former Ku Klux Klan member David Duke has helped him in Louisiana.

Buchanan is ready to tackle issues conservative Christians want to hear. He will put prayer back in schools. He will abolish abortions of any kind. He will stop the teaching of evolution. He will end affirmative action and welfare. He will put power back into his version of the peasants (white, Christian males).

Buchanan claims to be speaking for individual liberties. Yet, he opposes free trade, advocates a five-year moratorium on all immigration and is an isolationist even if national interests are at stake. The question is: Who's individual liberty is he fighting for?

There is no doubt Buchanan has effectively done what he has wanted to do. More so than Ross Perot four years ago, Buchanan has taken the nation by surprise. He understands who he is appealing to. He does not try to appeal to everybody as President Clinton has been known to do. Buchanan knows he is not going to get the minority vote. He knows he is not going to get the vote from homosexuals. And he probably doesn't care since his followers are well-organized and sure to vote.

It will certainly be difficult for Buchanan to win the Republican seat without the backing of his party. Already, former candidate Phil Gramm has thrown his support to Dole, and most members of the Republican Congress are doing the same. But Buchanan's hateful messages may be powerful enough to draw in enough voters.

Most experts don't feel Buchanan would have a shot at defeating Clinton in the November elections. But when it comes down to a pair of candidates, anything can happen. With Clinton's history of scandals, Buchanan would be alive in the race. And then it would be time to move to Canada.

Recognizing our revolutionaries

"The greatest role ever created by Western man has been the role of Negro. One of the greatest actors has been the Nigger."

"Natural Knees," a play written by Keith Josef Adkins, a 1995 MFA graduate in playwriting, appeared in the 1995 Playwrights Festival and was then selected for this year's University Theatres Mainstage.

The play depicts the life of Henry Dumas, an African-American poet and fiction writer who is virtually unknown to the general public. Dumas' life began in 1934 in Arkansas and ended abruptly in 1968 in New York City by the bullet of a white police officer. His work encompasses the great spiritual and social movements that began during his time. From the Civil Rights Movement to the Women's Movement, Dumas incorporates struggle, pain and survival into his work.

The parallels between Adkins and Dumas are profound. Adkins has produced two full-length plays while at the UI and neither has been given proper attention. Like Dumas, Adkins has been controversial in his scripts, poetry and other writings and many people are out to silence those who make waves in this calm, gentle river we call America.

Tysie McDowell

"Natural Knees" was a powerful and educational play; it had all the elements of great art: vivid imagery, soulful music, poetic language, excellent dialogue and an extremely talented cast. It is a disgrace more people did not attend. It sickens me that stories about slaves, gangs and gun-toting thugs sell out, while works like Adkins' are given minimal recognition. Most whites, as well as people of color, are only comfortable with entertainment that plays out common stereotypes. Blacks in gangs, on basketball teams or in rap videos get much publicity. When will we start congratulating artists who not merely restate problems, but construct solutions to them?

Far too often we don't recognize revolutionaries when they are alive. Many artists and scholars have been pushed aside, and then "discovered" by later generations. Dumas was a revolutionary. He said things that made people question their whole existence. His work expresses the passion and the rage that is felt by people of African descent all over the world.

For example, we now know Billie Holiday wasn't singing just for the sake of singing, or worse yet, singing for the white folks who exploited her. Holiday sang to release anger, bitterness and frustration. John Coltrane blew vehemence into his horn and out came the resentment, the pain and the agony of being black and not being able to love being black.

Adkins is also a revolutionary. He creates a world in his work, where African people can admit their confusion without being embarrassed to do so. He wants people to come to his plays, totally surrender themselves, take everything they can from his work and apply it to their own lives. Adkins has an imaginative determination and through his art, allows his listeners to reconnect their spirit, their mind and their soul.

Loretta Dumas, Henry's widow, has viewed "Natural Knees" and was completely satisfied with the script and the performance. She feels that her husband would be equally satisfied because Adkins captures how Africanism and blackness are universal, a belief Dumas himself deeply espoused.

We must acknowledge, praise, and support artists like Adkins, who are brave enough to express their true feelings, especially if it is what the majority of people are afraid to hear.

Adkins' multiple talents are carrying him to New York where he will be working in the Shakespeare Festival for the New York Public Theatre. He plans to continue in theatre and also venture into film and television. He has recently completed his first poetry collection titled "Alligator Skin."

Dumas has many inspirational works that need to be acknowledged. Likewise, Adkins has influential and revolutionary art that needs to be supported. Let's listen to Adkins' messages today, for they may save us from repeating the malicious cycle of history to which we've all grown accustomed.

Tysie McDowell's column appears Fridays on the Viewpoints Page.

Union works for quality

By now, most graduate-student employees on campus have heard of the Campaign to Organize Graduate Student (UE Local 896, COGS) and its five basic goals: adequate health care and child care, a tuition waiver, fair working conditions, an effective grievance procedure and improving the quality of education.

Notice the fifth goal: "improving the quality of education." Graduate student employees are by definition people who have committed themselves to quality education. Of course, our current lives as professional educators can only be enhanced by improved working conditions.

Adequate health coverage, clear workload guidelines and an effective grievance procedure enhance productivity — happy, healthy employees are productive employees. So it's easy to see that the organizing efforts of COGS are not a distraction from the work of quality education. Rather, COGS is a part of that work. Insofar as it's reasonable to separate the "employee" from the "student," doing so in a clear, consistent manner with the active involvement of the employees can only enrich all aspects of graduate-student life — and the life of the university as a whole.

Training is crucial to the contributions graduate students make in furthering the UI's teaching mission. As a rhetoric instructor, I have benefited from excellent training and advising. Part of my motivation for supporting a graduate-employee union comes from this experience. Other graduate-employee unions have fought to safeguard existing training programs and expand their ability to all TAs. The University of Michigan has instituted such a policy through the efforts of their union, and so has the University of Wisconsin at Madison. The idea, of course, is to safeguard what already works, and to improve what doesn't — with the invaluable input of graduate students contributing our perspective from "where the rubber meets the road." The university works because we do. COGS is about making it work better.

COGS means more than simply the pursuit of benefits. The issue of quality education is important to all of us, and COGS gives us a forum to come together from all disciplines, all departments, to address the future of higher education and to explore constructive ways of improving the UI. It's exciting to think about what could happen if graduate employees began to compare teaching methods across disciplines — not to eliminate differences, but to share experience and learn from each other.

As organized graduate employees strive to enhance the quality of their work and their working conditions, the community we create also provides an opportunity to advocate higher education in the political arena.

COGS sponsored a trip to Des Moines Monday to lobby for education. On this trip, state legislators heard about the realities of university life from those who live it every day. As graduate students, we can effectively respond to the recent barrage of criticism of higher education. After all, graduate employees are the university in a unique way, given our multiple roles as students, teachers and researchers.

When graduate employees cross departmental boundaries to come together, we enhance the quality of education by reaffirming our role in the university's mission to educate. Enhancing the quality of higher education in inextricably bound up with our efforts to be taken seriously as professional workers. Voicing our common concerns to lawmakers, we go even further toward realizing our collective power and responsibility to strive for better quality education. After all, isn't that an essential element of what higher education is about — encouraging active participation in public life by informed individuals?

I encourage all graduate employees to get involved with COGS and help build an organization committed to real health coverage, a tuition waiver and improving education for all.

Doderer's comments offensive to Iowans

To the Editor:
Minnette Doderer's recent comments regarding House File 2181, a bill that would allow state officials to collect data on abortions performed in Iowa, were offensive to all Iowans. Doderer called the bill an "anti-woman, anti-girl, anti-female bill." She also said it was a "male thing" because males "want to know how many abortions are going around." Yet, the final vote showed that more women supported the bill than did not, and 13 men voted against it.

House File 2181 will enable the Iowa Department of Public Health to learn about important statistics regarding abortions in Iowa. The department would be required to keep the information confidential to protect the provider and the woman. Officials would also be required to enter the information within 30 days of the receipt and then would have to destroy that receipt within that 30-day time period.

This June, voters in House District 45 will finally have a chance to vote for a Democrat who is concerned about bringing people together, not dividing people. As a pro-choice woman, this year I am supporting Terrence Neuzil.

EDITOR WANTED

An aggressive, talented individual is sought as editor of The Daily Iowan, Iowa City's largest newspaper, with an editorial staff of more than 50 young professionals, an editorial budget exceeding $200,000 and circulation of 20,500. The Board of Student Publications incorporated and the publisher of The Daily Iowan will soon interview candidates for the position of editor for the term beginning June 1, 1996 and ending May 31, 1997.

The editor of The Daily Iowan must have strong journalistic abilities, skills in management and a clear sense of editorial responsibility. The board will weigh heavily scholarship, previous newswriting and editing experience (including work at The Daily Iowan or another daily newspaper), and proven ability to lead, organize and inspire a staff.

Applicants must be enrolled in a UI undergraduate or graduate degree program. Candidates must submit completed applications and supporting materials by noon, Friday, February 23, 1996.

Sensitivity needed

To the Editor:
I am writing in regard to the articles about the former UI student who reported mind controllers were inserted into his teeth during a visit to an Iowa City dentist between 1988 and 1991, "UI grad: U.S. bugged my teeth" and "DI reporter gets to the root of tooth-bugging." I was especially surprised by this sensationalist coverage, given the excellent series of articles about mental illness by the DI last fall.

I am a mental-health professional who has worked for the past 13 years with individuals who have severe mental illnesses. Symptoms of mental illness such as the paranoid delusions discussed in this article are extremely distressing and absolutely real to the person experiencing them.

The symptoms of prolonged mental illness often appear in a person's late teens or early 20s. Symptoms are caused by an imbalance of brain chemistry and are often treatable with a combination of medications and supportive therapy. These symptoms may be very disruptive of the lives of sufferers and their families. Because mental illness is a frightening and stigmatizing illness, many people try to distance themselves from the possibility of having it by making fun of it, as in your articles.

Your article was stigmatizing, disrespectful and blaming of those individuals who are innocent victims of severe mental illness and their family members who love and support them. Such articles perpetuate the stereotype of mental illness and may prevent those who need mental-health treatment from pursuing the support they truly deserve.

I ask that in the future you be more sensitive in your coverage of mental illness. There are many mental-health professionals in Iowa City who would gladly serve as consultants to your staff.

Private life invaded

To the Editor:
The recent caucuses really brought the wind into Iowa and on that wind was Christian Coalition propaganda. Republican legislators are bringing forth a variety of useless invasions on personal issues — assuredly to use them against defenseless persons in the future. The sudden concern about assisted suicide, no-fault divorce and same-sex marriages shows one thing: they all involve personal freedoms. I thought Republicans wanted government out of our lives.

The constant chant of the "impending/complete moral decay" in America becomes numbing and believable. But as I look around, I see people acting very moral — like performing random acts of kindness to strangers in need during this last snow flood. (You know who you are and we thank you!)

Moreover, I don't think people even care why someone they don't know is getting divorced, or about adding extra trauma to a pregnant teen-ager's life, or whether strangers want to end their cancer pain or the genders of a couple in love.

To lighten the mood, National Organization for Women is having our second Annual Talent Show fund-raiser at Gabe's March 18 at 7:30 p.m.

We also will be sending a bus to Chicago in August for the Democratic National Convention. Anyone interested in performing or the bus trip may call 354-7290. (Last year was quite diverse and this year will be no exception.) In the meantime, I hope Republicans learn how real people live and what is really important: self-respect, self-reliance, and self-control.

Mel Dauremont
president, Iowa City chapter of NOW

Doderer off the mark

To the Editor:
How disappointing it is to see that Minnette Doderer is once again doing whatever she can to get in the press by returning to her old familiar stand-by: making a male-female issue out of nearly any bill proposed. This time it was the Iowa House's vote on a bill that would allow the Iowa Department of Public Health to gather statistical information on abortions while guaranteeing confidentiality of the woman and the provider. The bill passed 76-20, with more women voting in favor than not.

Doderer complained that House File 2181 was an "anti-woman, anti-girl, anti-female bill." On the contrary, the bill will help the Iowa Department of Public Health. By learning the statistical facts about abortions, the state will be able to cooperate with proposed federal welfare legislation that may provide additional funding for Iowa. Our state is only one of four in the country that do not have a law like this.

Doderer's argument is silly, mean-spirited and irrational. We are all getting tired of her paranoid outlook on laws being made in the Iowa Legislature.

FIELDHOUSE

older into the bar and will charge cover.

"Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights can't be beat," he said. "It's the busiest bar downtown. We're going to keep doing the same thing."

However, the bar no longer will offer free beer on Tuesday nights, Moore said.

"It's just an irresponsible drink special," he said. "As long as (the customer) has to reach into his pocket and pay for it, there is responsibility on them."

Free beer night will change into a "quarter draw night" like the bar offers on Thursdays. Employees of the bar told the new owners about the need for change, Moore said.

"They think that free beer nights bring in the wrong crowd," he said.

Despite this conception, UI freshman Kim Falat said free beer night will be missed.

"People know of it," she said. "People go to The Fieldhouse more during the week for free beer and 'quarter draw night.' There are better bars with better drink specials to go to on the weekends."

The Fieldhouse also will introduce new menu items, beginning with hot wings, to increase business during lunch and dinner.

"Hot wings are every college student's desire," he said. "We want to benefit the customers and ourselves by adding to the food selection."

The kitchen will remain open until 1:30 a.m. The bar will offer burger baskets and hot wings during bar hours and eventually pizza by the slice as well, Moore said.

After classes end in May, The Fieldhouse will undergo renovations, Moore said.

There will be more seating available in the front bar and the front of the building will have glass windows. The famous yellow wagon wheel will move inside and hang on the wall that will separate the front and back bars.

By summer, there no longer will be a cover charge to get into the front bar, but patrons will be charged to get into the back bar. It will also install more air conditioning.

In addition to renovating, the new owners want to make the bar a safer, more responsible place for UI students to hang out, Moore said.

"The Fieldhouse will be a more fun place to be at," he said. "We're going to run a tight ship and anyone who's causing trouble will be asked to leave. We're going to stop the problems before they start."

The bar will monitor the entrance and exit more strictly to keep those under 19 out, and police will patrol the alley. Four additional employees will be assigned to patrol the floor and two additional assistant managers will be working, Moore said.

CULTURAL DIVERSITY DAY

"Iowa is a pretty homogeneous state, unlike the coasts where there is a flow of people from other countries," she said. "We are among the states with the smallest minority populations. So many people haven't been exposed to the richness of diversity."

The day also will be an opportunity to combat stereotypes about certain cultures, Pearce-Burton said, such as the ones some people have about Muslims.

"Muslims, when they are seen on TV, are only terrorists," she said. "It will be good for people to see

"You cannot just do cultural diversity in one day. We really want to get away from the idea that you can do cultural diversity in one day and for the other 364 days of the year forget about it."

Liz Pearce-Burton, co-chairperson of Cultural Diversity Day that they are not terrorists, but kind, compassionate people like the next person."

Warren Slebos, co-chairperson of the festival organization committee, said domestic cultures are a part of the event. Native Americans will present the inaccuracies of the Disney movie "Pocahontas" and a video of the Million Man March will be shown.

Most people, when they hear the word culture, don't think of the sub-cultures within America.

"This day is to make people aware that they exist," Slebos said. "People tend to think we're all Americans so we're all alike, but there is diversity among us."

Pearce-Burton said she hopes the day will encourage UI students to respect diversity all year long.

"You cannot just do cultural diversity in one day," she said. "We really want to get away from the idea that you can do cultural diversity in one day and for the other 364 days of the year forget about it."

POLAR MISSION

"The third camera," Frank said, "will take pictures of the entire Earth in ultraviolet light wavelengths, at speeds 60 times faster and with 10 times better resolution than the camera we flew aboard the Dynamics Explorer spacecraft in the 1980s."

UI physicist Jack Scudder and his colleagues developed an instrument called HYDRA, which will measure electrons and ions as they flow outward from the sun and interact with the Earth's atmosphere.

HYDRA will measure the electrical current resulting from the interaction between the sun and the Earth, Scudder said.

"Most of us are familiar with electrical currents flowing as electrons through wires," Scudder said. "But in space, electrical currents are carried by ionized plasmas, or charged particles in a gas. When the particles lose energy in the upper atmosphere, they agitate neutral atoms in the Earth's upper atmosphere which, in turn, radiate visible light that we see as the northern lights."

Gurnett said his piece of equipment, the Plasma Wave Instrument, will be used to study radio emissions related to the northern lights and other phenomena. He said Thursday's launch was the culmination of nearly two decades' work.

"We did some pioneering research in the early 1980s," Gurnett said. "We found that the Earth is known to be a very intense radio source, placing it in a league with Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune. It is difficult to study radio emissions at distant objects, but much easier to study such phenomena right in our own backyard."

The Polar spacecraft, which weighs 2,200 pounds with antennas up to 420 feet long, is part of the International Solar-Terrestrial Physics Program, a four-spacecraft investigation. Previous spacecraft launched include WIND and GEOTAIL, and the Equator-S spacecraft is scheduled for launch in 1997. The Polar is also the first time a NASA spacecraft has carried three UI instruments on the same mission.

it's common for most people to swear.

"But my friends and I don't do it a lot, unless we're really pissed off about something," he said.

Holstein said less than five students write on their class evaluations they find his swearing offensive.

Using swear words can signify one of two things, Holstein said.

"It either shows a lack of ability to use language, when 'fuck' becomes everything under the sun," he said. "Or it underlines one's depth of feeling."

Holstein said the first time he said "fuck" in class he meant to say "pluck."

"But the students exploded in laughter, and of course, I immediately started to overuse it," he said.

Using too many expletives in class decreases the value of swearing as a rhetorical tool, Holstein said.

"If you use it six or seven times in 15 weeks, it's of some value," he said. "Usually I've got it in my notes. Every time I do it I'm not sure I'm doing the right thing."

Very low and very high socio-economic classes can swear all they want, Wachal said.

"They have no reason to impress anybody," he said. "If Steve Forbes weren't running for office, and he wanted to go around saying 'fuck' all day, he could. He has tons of money. It's usually the middle class that drives these social conventions."

Swearing might be becoming a more accepted part of American language, but not all UI students view that change as positive.

Last year, UI junior Karen Bodensteiner gave up swearing for Lent.

Bodensteiner said her goal in giving up swearing was to try to clean up her everyday conversation.

"I don't think it's real attractive," she said. "Since we're getting older and looking for jobs, it's more professional."

Bodensteiner and her roommate assigned monetary values to every word they wanted to stop saying and then gave the money to a church when Lent was over.

Some words were 5 or 10 cents, and the worst words were 25 cents. That price got to be a little too steep, Bodensteiner said.

"After a while, we had to knock it down to 15 cents," she said.

By Easter, Bodensteiner said they had collected about $7 in change. Bodensteiner spent about $2 each of the first few weeks of Lent, but went down to about 25 cents per week near the end, she said.

"At first it was hard, but then we became more conscious of it," she said.

UI freshman Cindy Ahrens said she doesn't like to swear.

"It's connected to the way my parents raised me," she said. "It is not part of who I am."

The 2-, 3- and 4-year-olds at Melrose Day Care Center, 701 Melrose Ave., do not swear often, Director Beth McNutt said.

"We really don't have that big of a problem with swearing here," she said. "The few times the kids do swear, they do it when they're angry."

WEEK IN REVIEW

ious about their economic futures, voters are looking for reassurance and new solutions.

Buchanan speaks to their anxieties. Building trade barriers and border fences comforts workers who fear losing their jobs.

Those who believe Buchanan's rise is due solely to the power of Christian conservatives miss a key trend in U.S. politics — Buchanan is tapping into America's economic fear in spite of economic growth.

During the Clinton administration, 8 million new jobs have been created. Unemployment and inflation rates are low, but according to Labor Secretary Robert Reich, families are working more and earning less.

Meanwhile in Washington, Clinton and Congress cannot agree on a budget. Voters were expecting change but received government shutdowns instead.

Whether Clinton or congressional Republicans are to blame is not the issue. If voters felt either were following through with their pledges for change, Buchanan's candidacy would not be drawing nearly the level of support it now claims.

Short and not too sweet

Most of the Republican primaries will be held in the next five weeks. A process which used to run through June will now conclude in late March.

The rapid-fire primary season works against lesser known candidates. In a longer primary season, a long-shot candidate could do well in Iowa or New Hampshire, gain momentum, raise more money and finish strong in the primaries. No longer is that possible.

Lamar Alexander, with strong third-place showings in Iowa and New Hampshire, has emerged from dark horse status to potential front-runner. But he is almost out of money. While Bob Dole has $5 million in the bank, Alexander has less than $500,000.

Although he is furiously raising cash, Alexander cannot match Dole's bankroll. This will force Alexander to focus his campaign on only a few key states, whereas Dole can afford to campaign nearly everywhere.

Therefore, when Alexander loses a primary, it is more damaging than when Dole loses. Dole simply has more opportunities to make up for it.

Can Buchanan win?

If winning the Republican nomination means receiving a majority of GOP primary votes, Buchanan cannot win. His support tops out around one-third of the electorate.

But he does not need a majority of votes to win the nomination. He needs a majority of Republican convention delegates to become the party's candidate.

If the number of Republican candidates in the race stays high — eight of them are still running — Buchanan can still win primaries with less than one-third of the vote.

By winning one-third of the vote, Buchanan can win more than half of the delegates.

Many states — California, Ohio and South Carolina — hold winner-take-all primaries. Whoever wins the primary wins all of the state's GOP delegates. So Buchanan can win 30 percent of the vote and 100 percent of the delegates.

Thirty percent still wins primaries when eight candidates are slugging it out. Republicans who fear having Buchanan as their nominee will be urging Steve Forbes and the rest of the "also-rans" to drop out of the race. But Dick Lugar, Alan Keyes and Robert Dornan all vowed to keep going after New Hampshire, and Forbes is planning another massive TV blitz for the Arizona primary.

As long as the field stays crowded, Buchanan has a shot.

Moon acquitted of charges

RICHMOND, Texas (AP) — A jury took just 27 minutes Thursday to acquit Warren Moon of assaulting his wife, in a verdict that catapulted the couple into each other's arms.

Felicia Moon, 39, had been forced under a new Texas law to testify against her husband and had insisted she started the July 18 fight that led to the charges.

"The women who think I betrayed them were not in my bedroom on July 18," Mrs. Moon said, referring to criticism over her refusal to press the charges.

Hardaway leads list of Heat acquisitions

MIAMI (AP) — Pat Riley reinvented the Miami Heat for the second time this season Thursday, acquiring Tim Hardaway and Chris Gatling from Golden State, Walt Williams and Tyrone Corbin from Sacramento and Tony Smith from Phoenix.

The struggling Heat sent Kevin Willis and Bimbo Coles to the Warriors, Billy Owens and Kevin Gamble to the Kings and Terrence Rencher to the Suns.

The Chicago Bulls play at Miami on Friday night and Riley admitted the Heat would have only eight players in uniform.

T'Wolves send Laettner, Rooks to Atlanta

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Minnesota Timberwolves badly needed a physical center. Perhaps more importantly, they needed one who wouldn't spend so much time complaining.

The Wolves sent disgruntled centers Christian Laettner and Sean Rooks to the Atlanta Hawks on Thursday for center Andrew Lang and guard Spud Webb.

Bullets will become Wizards in 1997

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — The Washington Bullets will have a new name — the Wizards.

The nickname takes effect for the 1997-98 season. Other names considered were the Sea Dogs, the Express, the Dragons and the Stallions.

Hawks in unkind territory

David Schwartz
The Daily Iowan

A fractured bone in the left hand of forward Ryan Bowen will keep the sophomore out indefinitely, the team announced Thursday.

The injury was suffered late in the second half of Iowa's 83-47 win over Michigan State Wednesday.

Now the Hawkeyes travel short-handed to Champaign, Ill., Saturday, for a battle with the Fighting Illini.

Tipoff is scheduled for 1:15 p.m.

The two teams last met Jan. 18 at Carver-Hawkeye Arena with Iowa coming out on top, 82-79.

But then Illinois was without its most potent weapon, point guard Kiwane Garris. When the two teams meet again, the Hawkeyes will have to approach the game completely different from a defensive standpoint.

"He's a scoring threat," Iowa guard Mon'ter Glasper said. "I don't think he's at the top of his game, but for some reason when teams play Iowa away, it seems like they get real fired up offensively.

"If we can get on (Garris) early in the game and shut (Richard) Keene down, I think we have a shot."

Iowa coach Tom Davis said preparing for Illinois with and without Garris are completely opposite situations.

"Last time we played them, Garris didn't play," Davis said. "And of course that is a totally different

Championship bound

Iowa needs one win to secure title

Wayne Drehs
The Daily Iowan

The No. 7 Iowa women's basketball team holds its Big Ten Conference fate in its own hands.

With a win in one of the Hawkeyes' two remaining games this weekend, they will win the Big Ten Conference Championship outright. The title would be Iowa's first unshared championship since it was 25-4 in the 1991-92 season.

Both games this weekend will be at Carver-Hawkeye Arena, where Iowa posts a 10-0 record thus far on the season. The first opportunity for Iowa to claim the Big Ten crown comes tonight at 7 p.m. when it hosts Michigan (7-17, 1-13). Following that contest, the Hawkeyes will face a more difficult challenge in Illinois (12-12, 6-8) Sunday at noon.

Illinois is a team on the rise in the Big Ten. Despite having just one senior and three juniors on the roster, the young squad is seventh in the Big Ten, an improvement on last year's 10th-place finish.

"Next year, I think Illinois will be in the upper level of the Big Ten," Iowa head coach Angie Lee said. "They have really made great progress and (Coach) Theresa (Grentz) really has that team believing in itself, much like Vivian Stringer did here."

Illinois is led by forward Ashley Berggren, the Big Ten's top scorer at 24.5 points per game. The sophomore from Barrington, Ill. notched her 14th double-double of the season last weekend against Purdue with a 36-point, 12-rebound performance.

"Ashley Berggren is the world to Illinois," Lee said. "She has put that team on her shoulders and carried them as far as she can."

The matchup with Illinois will be an interesting one because the way the standings are now, the two teams could square off in the second round of next weekend's Big Ten Tournament in Indianapolis.

"I'm uncomfortable that we might have to play Illinois twice close together," Lee said. "It's the

If there was one date the Iowa men's gymnastics team circled on its calendar, it is Feb. 23.

Penn State gets back on the winning track

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Pete Lisicky scored 18 points and No. 14 Penn State broke a two-game losing streak Thursday night with a 67-57 victory over Michigan.

Michigan (16-10, 6-7 Big Ten) had a chance to cut the lead to four points in the final minute, but Louis Bullock missed a layup and Lisicky made two free throws to put Penn State up 63-55 with 42.1 seconds remaining.

The loss was the first for Michigan since four players and a recruit were involved in a car accident Saturday. Robert Traylor is out for the season with a broken arm, but the other Wolverines played despite being placed on probation by coach Steve Fisher.

No. 14 Penn State (19-4, 10-4) trailed for nearly 20 minutes before Lisicky scored 8 straight points, including two 3-pointers, for the Nittany Lions to cut the lead to 40-38 with 12 minutes remaining.

On Penn State's next possession, Glenn Sekunda got the ball down low, pumped faked and scored while being fouled by Travis Conlan. The free throw put Penn State up 41-40, its first lead since the opening nine minutes.

The two teams exchanged baskets before Calvin Booth hit two jumpers to put Penn State ahead 47-42 with 8:35 remaining. The Wolverines never got closer than five minutes again.

Michigan actually shot better on 3-pointers than Penn State, the nation's most accurate 3-point shooting team. The Wolverines made 9 of 17 3-pointers, including four by Louis Bullock, who had 17 points.

The Nittany Lions made 5 of 18, well below their 43 percent average.

POOR ATTENDANCE

Maybe the 'Hey' song would've helped

Still reeling from a bout with bronchitis, I'm unable to focus for long periods of time. Thus, some random thoughts from the world of sports:

• The world needs more people like Val Wolfe. In case that name doesn't ring a bell, Wolfe is the alert DI reader who was outraged by the low attendance at last week's women's basketball game against Penn State.

David Schwartz

More than 6,000 seats remained empty as the Hawkeyes beat the Nittany Lions by 12 on their way to a weekend in which Iowa secured a share of the Big Ten title.

In a letter to the editor Wednesday, Wolfe took note of the low attendance at women's basketball games.

"As fans, we can't expect more from them than they've given, but we can give them more," Wolfe wrote.

Last week's game against Penn State was the first time I ever felt embarrassed to be a Hawkeye. To the 9,000-plus who attended the game, I salute you. To those who didn't bother ... well ... I hope you had fun watching Family Matters."

• One fan called the DI office with the following question: "Do you want to know how to sell out the women's basketball game?"

Figuring he also had a cure for AIDS, I asked him his plan.

"Tell the pep band to play the 'Hey' song."

Oh, gee, we never thought of that one. Actually, we appreciated the call, but unfortunately, there's very little we can do to weather the current situation.

The Iowa Athletic Department still hasn't lifted the ban on the crowd pleaser, fearful those in attendance may actually enjoy Hawkeyes Hugh Lau and Matt Thurber, hail from the Cornhusker state and will have more family and friends in attendance than usual on Friday. Lau said there really isn't any added pressure.

 "I hope we can perform well on Friday, especially with all the people in the stands cheering for us. But as far as any added pressure, I don't think there's any. They've seen us at numerous other meets and we perform the same if they're there or if they're not," Lau said.

cards we've been dealt and we'll take it, but we won't hide anything Sunday because we'll need it all to beat them."
 Tonight's match-up against Michigan appears on paper to have a huge Iowa victory written all over it, but so did the team's last meeting Dec. 29th in Ann Arbor. In that game, Iowa didn't control until midway through the second half.
 "There is no way we can overlook Michigan," Lee said. "The team has an uneasy feeling because we didn't play well and it wasn't an easy win at Michigan."
 The Wolverines enter the game second in the Big Ten in rebounding behind Iowa, but in 10th place in the conference. Sophomore center Pollyanna Johns leads the Michigan rebounding attack, with her 10.1 rebounds-per-game average, best in the Big Ten.

better on the defensive end," Davis said after the Michigan State win. "Anytime you score a lot of points, they don't consider you a good defensive coach. I think a good defensive coach is one where scores are 40 or 50."
 The Illini last played Tuesday, when they hosted the Big Ten's top team, No. 7 Purdue. Illinois lost, 74-71 in Champaign, but gave a strong effort.
 Davis said Illinois' Tuesday loss will push the Illini even harder homa and New Mexico.

 Iowa's Jay Thornton is doubtful for today's meet. Thornton has been bothered by a back injury for the last two weeks and hasn't competed with the team since the win over Minnesota. Dunn said while having Thornton would make Iowa even more potent, he is not a necessity for a Hawkeye victory.
 "We don't want to rush things with Jay," Dunn said. "Frankly, with our depth, we have people that can come in and fill that void."

themselves. No offense — actually, plenty of it — but those two guys masquerading as The Blues Brothers at halftime of basketball games have as much energy as an 85-year-old with mono.
 • Do you ever wonder how Michigan State basketball player Mike Respert (averaging 2.2 points per game before Wednesday's 12-point fluke) managed a scholarship?
 • It was nice to see UI president Mary Sue Coleman on the Hawkeye bench at last week's women's basketball game. She's been in attendance at both men's and women's games — a nice gesture by the new president who must be swamped with other obligations.
 I saw former president Hunter Rawlings once in an elevator when I was a freshman. I got so excited when I actually thought he might say hello, but then I realized he was just holding back a sneeze.
 • What can you say about former Hawkeye Jenny Spangler? She's over 30, gone through a divorce and injuries, then she came out of nowhere to qualify for the Olympics.
 For the first time in a century of the modern Olympic games, the people of Iowa will actually have a reason to watch the marathon, an event traditionally as exciting as ... well ... the UI Blues Brothers.

WOMEN'S SWIMMING

Hawks start slow at Big Ten meet

Mike Triplett
The Daily Iowan

After one day and six events at the Big Ten Championships in Minneapolis, the Iowa Hawkeyes stand in a disappointing 10th place.

Michigan won four events to pull out to a dominating lead with 264 points. Iowa received just 51 points. Behind the Wolverines are Wisconsin (166.50), Minnesota (159), Northwestern (135), Purdue (86), Indiana (77), Illinois (70.5), Ohio State (61), Penn State (55), Iowa and Michigan State (43).

Iowa performed well in the one-meter diving competition, where Kelly McCreedy placed fifth, followed by Hawkeyes Kelly Tellschow (14th), Jess Riccobono (17th) and Jen Smith (21st).

The Hawkeyes finished eighth in the 200 freestyle relay with a time of 1:36.87. They finished 11th in the 400 medley relay with a time of 3:55.58.

No Iowa individuals placed in the top 16 in the 500 freestyle, 200 individual medley or the 50 freestyle.

MEN'S TRACK

Hawkeyes head into Big Tens

Chris Snider
The Daily Iowan

The Iowa men's track and field team travels to Columbus, Ohio, this weekend for the Big Ten Championships.

Competition begins on Saturday at 9 a.m. and continues throughout Sunday.

"The goal this weekend is that each guy go in and come out with a PR (personal record) and with as many points that those PRs can bring, get us in the top six," Iowa head coach Ted Wheeler said.

The Hawkeyes have already provisionally qualified one individual and one relay team for the NCAA Indoor Championships. Dion Trowers has a personal best of 7.33 seconds in the 55-meter hurdles. The provisional time in that event is 7.39 seconds. Automatic qualifying time is 7.24 seconds.

Iowa's 4x400 relay team has also provisionally qualified with a time of 3:11.55. Provisional time is 3:12.21 and automatic qualifying is 3:08.20. Provisional qualifiers will run in the meet March 9-10 if there is a minimal amount of automatic qualifiers.

Amy Brant/The Daily Iowan

Iowa heads to the Big Ten Championships this weekend in Columbus.

The Hawkeyes will look to improve those times and add more qualifiers this weekend.

"Our main goal is to place higher than we did last year," team captain Dion Trowers said. "Guys have individual goals of personal bests. Some are still trying to qualify for nationals and things like that."

Iowa, who finished ninth at the meet last year, may have the services of George Page this weekend for the first time this season.

Page, a member of Iowa's 4x400 relay team that placed fourth in the nation outdoors last year, has been out with an injury, but hopes to run the 55-meter dash and possibly the 4x400 at this meet.

Iowa will also look for points in the field events from shot-putter Steve English and long jumper Bashir Yamini. English leads the team with a throw of 50' 8" and Yamini jumped a season best 24' 0".

WOMEN'S TRACK

Iowa wants better finish in '96

Chris James
The Daily Iowan

It's put up or shut up time this weekend when the Iowa women's track team travels to Madison, Wis., for the 1996 Big Ten Indoor Track Championships.

This two-day meet starts at 9 a.m. on Saturday with the pentathlon, while all other events get going at 2:15 p.m. The Big Ten's finest will look to tear it up on the new track surface at Wisconsin's Camp Randall Memorial Sports Center. Iowa assistant coach Allan Wirth said the new conditions can only help the Hawkeye runners.

"With the way we've been running the past few weeks, I wouldn't be surprised to see some records fall," Wirth said. "I just hope we improve over last year's finish. That would be the best sign of how far we've come since the beginning of the year."

The Hawkeyes finished seventh overall at last year's meet. Illinois, the defending Big Ten champion, is expected to repeat. Michigan and the host Badgers are tabbed to give the Illini a run for the money. Wirth said Iowa seems to be peaking at the right time.

"All of our past meets haven't been scored, so you really can't get an idea of how you stack up against other teams but I think we're hitting Big Tens at the right time," Wirth said.

Several Hawkeyes are in the hunt for individual titles — junior Ellen Grant and sophomore Wynsome Cole in the 400-meter dash and junior Briana Benning in the 800 meters. The distance medley relay team of Benning, Ruqayya Raheem, Ann Paré and Becky Coleman will look to make a strong showing in Madison. Hawkeye sophomore Meg Maurer hopes to make noise in the field events. Maurer placed fifth overall at last year's championships.

Wirth said it's just another chance for the Hawkeyes to prove how far they've come.

"We accomplished a lot already," Wirth said. "This is where we wanted to be before Big Tens and I think as a team we are. It's a good sign when you have to improve and you're still a solid team."

Hawkeyes hope to serve up road wins

Jon Bassoff
The Daily Iowan

After a two-week layoff, the Hawkeyes are set to hit the road.

The Iowa men's tennis team is prepared for a pair of non-conference matches this weekend. Saturday, Iowa battles Indiana State. On Sunday, Iowa takes on Marquette.

The Hawkeyes haven't competed since Feb. 10-11, when they lost a pair of Big Ten battles at home.

Iowa fell to a tough Minnesota team 4-3, then dropped a match to Purdue 5-2.

The Hawkeyes had several chances to stop Minnesota, but couldn't pull it out. Iowa had seven match points throughout the contest, but the Gophers held on for the victory.

Iowa coach Steve Houghton said the Hawkeyes are playing well at times, but haven't put it together as a team yet.

"We're a good team, but we've learned that everybody has to play well every match for us to win," Houghton said.

Iowa is led by Tom Derouin, who is the team's No. 1 singles player.

Derouin has been hobbled by a leg injury, but is expected to play this weekend.

Derouin recorded his first singles victory in almost a year last weekend by beating Purdue's Cris James.

The Hawkeyes are also paced by seniors Marcus Ekstrand, Mattias Jonsson, sophomore Ryan Johnstone and junior Damir Seferovic.

The matches against Indiana State and Marquette both are scheduled to start at 10 a.m.

WOMEN'S GYMNASTICS

Focused Hawks prep for Minnesota battle

Jon Bassoff
The Daily Iowan

Despite setting team scoring records in two of the last three meets, Hawkeye coach Diane DeMarco swears her team isn't a result-oriented team.

The Iowa women's gymnastics team travels to Minnesota this weekend, content on focusing on the process of the meet.

"We've established our goals, but we just want to continue concentrating on the things that have to happen on the way to those goals," DeMarco said. "We're ecstatic with our recent performances."

The Hawkeyes are coming off a record team score, but still were edged by Illinois 193.925-193.375 last weekend. Iowa also set a team record in the floor exercise with a 48.725.

"The team feels very confident in themselves," DeMarco said. "It's being reinforced every week. They have confidence in each other as tough-minded competitors."

Kim Baker continues to awe in her senior season. Last weekend Baker finished first in the all-around (38.950), the vault (9.900) and the floor exercise (9.950).

Iowa will be a little short-handed, as sophomore standout Grace Lee is hindered by a sprained ankle. She is expected to see limited action this weekend.

"We're planning on having her compete on just the bars," DeMarco said. "It would be a pleasant surprise if she could do more."

Saturday's meet begins at 7 p.m.

Cyndi Griggs/The Daily Iowan

The UIHC Medical Museum exhibit of Order and Disorder features a psychograph that was used in the early 20th century. The psychograph was used to measure bumps on the head based on the theories of Franz Joseph Gall, the founder of phrenology.

Exhibit recreates 'order, disorder'

Erica Gingerich
The Daily Iowan

Before there was Prozac, some psychologists used a 1,000-watt lighthouse bulb and colored glass plates to treat mental illness. A clunky contraption called the Spectro-Chrome is part of a new exhibition at the UI Hospitals and Clinics Medical Museum. "Order and Disorder: An Exploration of the Mind and the Brain" is an exhibition which museum Director Adrienne Drapkin hopes will be a good mix of history and medical information. "We usually borrow a few quack devices," she said, "because they are so interesting and because the art of quackery goes on and on and on." Perhaps falling easily into the quack category, the Spectro-Chrome is seemingly a far and distant predecessor of modern light therapy for sufferers of Seasonal Affective Disorder.

Some of the less arcane aspects of "Order and Disorder" include preserved brains donated to the exhibition by the UI Department of Anatomy, a lithium rock and photographs and anatomical drawings of the brain.

"You were supposed to sit nude in front of this machine, and according to the illness you had, you got a booklet which told you exactly what colors to use, and you would be bathed in colored light. You would sit in front of this machine which contains a 1,000-watt lighthouse bulb in it," said Drapkin, who admitted she hasn't yet tried Spectro-Chrome therapy herself. Not all the items on display are quite as innocuous. In the center of the exhibition sits a wooden cage reminiscent of fishermen's crab traps. It's reminiscent of human-sized crab traps. A reproduction of a "Utica Crib" (named so because it was used often in a Utica, New York, sanitarium in the last century), the cage is actually a single bed enclosed entirely in wooden bars. Locked with three locks, the Utica Crib allows only about two feet of space above the mattress for the occupant to move. A mannequin lying in the bed shows how cramped the space is and might make even nonclaustrophobics squirm a bit.

"It was used both to protect a patient from himself and also to protect others from him," Drapkin said. "We have personal accounts from some patients who said that it was great, that they got a lot of rest. I think they felt safe. No one could touch them." Some of the less arcane aspects of "Order and Disorder" include preserved brains donated to the exhibition by the UI Department of Anatomy, a lithium rock and photographs and anatomical drawings of the brain.

Drapkin and her staff drew on more than 200 sources for this show and treat the subject from a historical viewpoint, with a strong emphasis on the 19th century. Because so many sources were used, Drapkin and her staff were putting the finishing touches on the exhibition just days before its opening. With a new exhibition every year, the mantling and dismantling is almost a continuous process.

"It takes us about a year (to put an exhibition together). We have this window of about 10-and-a-half months to generate another exhibition, generally," Drapkin said.

"Order and Disorder" opens Friday and is expected to run through the end of 1996 at least, according to Drapkin. "Mainly, we want people to learn about the diseases because unless you have someone in the family or a good friend with one of these disorders, usually you won't take the trouble to find anything out about that," Drapkin said.

"Also, we want people who have the disorders or know people who have disorders to be able to recognize the list of symptoms we have," she said. "Maybe a person who has panic disorder, for example, and doesn't realize that there's something wrong can be helped. There's a huge number of people who go around with these disorders who never realize they can be helped," Drapkin said.

"Order and Disorder: An Exploration of the Mind and the Brain" runs through the end of 1996. The Medical Museum is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Admission is free. For information, call 356-7106.

CREATIVE CREATURES

'X-Files' writers know how to scare

Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Chris Carter, creator of "The X-Files" and television's reigning horror merchant, has the rapt attention of his writing staff as he describes a vivid little scene.

A man sits in front of his TV set. In the attic above him, a rotting corpse begins to silently shed the vermin which infest it.

"They crawl down into the ceiling ... and it's drip, drip," Carter intones. "The maggots are dripping into my den." This, it turns out, is no "X-Files" plot; it's Carter's own woe-tale of a dead rat in his house.

This is what passes for light banter during a script session for Fox TV's sleekly morbid drama about a pair of FBI agents, Fox Mulder and Dana Scully, who probe UFOs, government conspiracies and freakish crimes.

Obviously, being in the right frame of mind helps to craft the dark and clever stories that have turned many Friday night TV viewers into "X-Files" junkies and made stars of lead actors David Duchovny and Gillian Anderson.

Attention to detail also helps. The focus of the meeting is a 4-by-5-foot bulletin board covered with a couple dozen index cards noting, succinctly, the plot points of each of an episode's four acts — as separated by commercial breaks — and the opening "teaser" scene.

The person with the task of delivering a completed script talks through the story, using the cards as reference points. In this session, writer Jon Shibban is telling the tale of a vengeful Army veteran turned killer.

Every twist and turn is up for debate, including the injuries that make the character an improbable murder suspect. Shibban has described him as a quadriplegic who uses an out-of-body trick, astral projection, to kill. "It's not quite enough for Carter. I think you should go all the way," the creator-producer says; he wants to see the character turned into a quadruple amputee, a more helpless and haunting figure.

One plot twist in the astral projection drama, an abortive suicide, draws an approving nod from Carter. "That's a cool scene," he said, betraying his roots as a native Californian who spent five years editing Surfing magazine.

"There's no creepy boo scene here," he comments at another point.

(His droll sense of humor pervades the series: "Would you say your hair is normal or dry?" a serial killer asks captive Scully in one episode as he prepares a bizarre ritual bath.)

After Carter and the group weigh in on a story, the main writer heads for the seclusion of office or home to create the finished 43-minute, 11-second script.

That, according to staff writer Darin Morgan, is when the pressure kicks in.

"You have so many production people up in Vancouver waiting for your script so they can begin work. If you're late, you're causing enormous production problems. You've got $1 million riding on you," he said, the approximate price tag for each "X-Files" hour.

Locations must be scouted, costumes created and the limits of special effects — for a show rich with masterful monsters and convincing spaceships — explored.

"You have to know what you can do," Morgan said. "You can't just write 'There's a huge explosion.' If there's going to be a big effect like that, they (the production crew) need to know in advance."
