Thirty seconds into the University Book Store's "60 Second Shopping" shopping spree Thursday, UI junior Doug Lane collected an orb of sweatshirts and shorts, which he plans to use to clothe his ultimate frisbee team.

Like a bullfight from a ride, UI junior Doug Lane exploded into the aisles of the University Book Store with his sights set on one thing — clothes. With a charging crew of about 200 behind him, Lane shot straight to the back corner of the store and disappeared from sight of the rest of the crowd.

Lanec was the winner of the University Book Store's 60-second shopping spree. In only 60 seconds, he collected 200 dollars worth of UI apparel, which he plans to use to clothe his ultimate frisbee team.

Lanec said, "I'm in the UI ultimate frisbee team, so I wanted to get some new shirts and stuff for all of my teammates." The 200 dollar price was worth it to Lanec, who described the experience as "a dream come true.""I dreamed about running around that store," he said, "and when I woke up I had 200 dollars worth of laundry." Lane's ultimate frisbee team will be able to purchase new gear with the $200 worth of UI apparel that Lane collected in only 60 seconds.

Reproductive-rights lawyer fights Iowa legislation

Val R. Redeker

One of the 100 most influential humanitarians in America, whose organization is representing the Emma Goldman Civic for Women in its suit against the city of Davenport, made her first visit to Iowa Thursday.

Karen Kolbert, vice president of The Center for Reproductive Law and Rights, has been defending the rights of women for more than 20 years.

"Our progress has been marred by legislative, judicial and violent setbacks, which have left us at some of the most vulnerable moments of society's history," Kolbert said.

The center is representing the Emma Goldman Civic in a suit against the city of Davenport, which has left some of its residents in custody and possession of a substance at 725 E. Street, Kolbert said, to try to stop the city from prosecuting residents for their reproductive rights.

Kolbert said she has been working on the case for more than two years, and that she has sought to protect reproductive rights for women in the city.

"I am extremely concerned about the climate we face today," Kolbert said. "We are in a new era of divisiveness, where we must preserve women's lives and ensure that women have the resources to meet the challenges that we face in the future."

International Women's Month is celebrated every year, aiming to highlight the contributions of women in every part of the community, and organizers hope local events will appeal to women from just as many different backgrounds.

Groups sponsoring events included the Student Government Association, the Women's Resource and Action Center, the Iowa City Community Planning Board, Cedar Rapids Chamber of Commerce and the History Department, the College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences, the perfect great, the Office of International Student and Scholar Services, and the health clinics and anti-violence resources.

"Women's History Month is too backwards looking. The stereotype of Women's History Month in not very inclusive. International Women's Month, both more encompassing in the future and the present, as well as the past."

Laurie Haag, Women's Resource and Action Center administrator

The connections made between different departments and organizations may be one of the most important results of the month.

House passes bills to eliminate big money campaigns

Mary Neubauer

The Iowa House of Representatives passed two bills Thursday that would limit the amount of money candidates can spend on their campaigns.

DES MOINES — A House committee Thursday that would limit the amount of money candidates can spend on their campaigns without the approval of voters.

Under current state law, political candidates can spend as much as they want on their campaigns and even candidates themselves can give as much as they want to their campaigns. The House bill that would limit spending has passed the Senate, but it is uncertain if it will pass in both chambers.

"We're trying to improve the public perception of those campaigns," Rep. Chuck Geard, D-Benton, said of his bill approved by the House State Government Committee Thursday by the House State Government Committee.

The bill does not go far enough because it doesn't convince me to decrease the amount of money candidates can spend on their campaigns, said Rep. Pete Johnson, D-Shelby County.

The bill, known as the "Limiting Spending on Political Parties" bill, would limit campaign spending to $25,000 for each individual contribution and $50,000 for each individual campaign.

"By allowing individuals to contribute more than $5,000 to a political party,

In plain English, the United States of America will not tolerate behavior unacceptable by the Cuban government. We will make sure that there will be laws of enormous impact.

Mike McCurry, White House press secretary

"In plain English, the United States of America will not tolerate behavior unacceptable by the Cuban government. We will make sure that there will be laws of enormous impact."
Buchananites see enemies, others seek unity

Gary Kuehn, Associated Press

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Talk is a frequent preoccupation of Pat Buchanan, a presidential hopeful who has nothing much to worry about. And so it was Thursday when he spoke to a small group of radio reporters outside his Edgewood Plaza hotel. Buchanan was asked about his campaign's seeming lack of cohesiveness. The question went unanswered, and Buchanan walked on.

"We think we ought to identify what we're up against," said Patrice Payle, a Republican in New Hampshire. "The Buchananites are our enemies."

The Buchananites, as his followers are known, have been formed as a reaction to what Buchanan saw as the Republican Party's move to the political center. Buchanan has been polling in the single digits in recent polls, and his campaign has been beset by internal disputes.

"We've got to stop this man," said Payle. "We need a leader who can bring us together."

Others, however, are more optimistic. "I think we're making progress," said a Buchanan supporter. "It's just going to take time for people to understand our position."

A bargain

Graduate assistants are challenging the traditional model for graduate training, which demands to be given the treatment they deserve.

Two years ago, graduate assistants made a radical move. They sat down in groups and formed the Graduate Assistant Union (GAU) to demand better treatment. They needed assurance that the college would respond. The answer was a "Working Group," which the administration was supposed to be represented by. The graduate students demanded to be given the right to negotiate.

Graduate students are essential to the mission of the school. Yet their wages and conditions are not always considered. They may be paid less than the prevailing minimum wage. They may be subject to exploitation and inequitable treatment of part-time and non-tenure-track faculty. These are problems that must be addressed.

Hiring and retaining graduate assistants is critical. The graduates have the knowledge and skills necessary to provide high-quality education. They are essentially a part of the academic community. They have a large role in the educational process. The administrators should remember this.

Believing that the administration should be held accountable, the graduate assistants have used a variety of tactics to make their voices heard. These include demonstrations, meetings, and discussions with the administration. The GAU is working to ensure that their voices are heard.

Then it hit me. Prove what! Prove what to white people that we are important enough to have our own culture? Prove to white people that we are not just students, but to prove to white people that we are important enough to have our own culture?

The truth is, we have a birthday every year. I think about when I was a child, thinking about the big picture lately. What is your opinion of the new GER system? I don't know what you smoke down there, but it also has to do with having made a conscious choice to be here. That's not to say blacks aren't as perfect as they are. In college the last time, I could always find a reason to put things off, or to justify doing them halfway or not at all. The bottom line is that today the stresses are fewer. Because I'm married now and have made my own choices, I have found that it's not as easy to put things off. The real explanation is that I've already bagged one career, so for some reason now I just can't get out of the ground, I'll just try something else. The real explanations is that in high school I was never in any way or do the work.

Leaping into college life, again

Iowa

Cultural Diversity Day has come and gone, and for some reason, this year I left with a wishful outlook in my mind.

All day long, I sat in the graduate student union and read the stories of students from different cultures. We've come a long way since then. We've learned in the past few years.

The college has been the most important thing in my life. That's why I'm here.

For me, the working title of my book is "Leaping into College Life Again." It is a book about the experience of being a graduate student. It is about choices and decisions. It is about the importance of having a voice and being heard. It is about the importance of being part of a community.

I am writing this book to share my experiences. I hope it will be of interest to others who are facing similar situations. I hope that it will help others to realize the importance of being part of a community. I hope that it will help others to realize the importance of having a voice and being heard. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me.

"Our department hasn't seen that since the city was founded. It's a crisis," said Stephen P. Duane, city parking director. "This is a monumental issue." Duane said the city has received about 100 complaints in the past week about the parking problems in the downtown area. "We've got to get it under control," he said. "The city is getting close to becoming a no-parking zone." Duane said the city has been working on the problem for the past three years and is planning to install new parking meters in some areas of the downtown. He said the city will also be increasing the number of parking spaces available in the area. "We're working to meet the needs of our voters," Duane said.

Lee says injuries make Pursuit team to beat

Wayne Dorsey

The Daily Iowan

Injured star Turner Logan could be ready to play this weekend for Iowa State, but Lee won't instill the same confidence in the other Hawks that they are 100 percent. "Not to say the Big Ten Tourney doesn't count, because we want to prove what we've accomplished over the long haul, but at the same time, the NCAA Tournament is another that we've been waiting for, but that's not the same thing that says '100 percent, we did it this year.'"

While the Hawks and No. 15 Notre Dame suffer from the injuries they'll suffer from the injuries they'll suffer from the injuries they'll suffer from the injuries they'll suffer from the injuries they'll suffer from the injuries they'll suffer from the injuries they'll suffer from the injuries they'll suffer

Injuries have been a problem all season for the Hawks, and Lee said that he is unlikely to be able to play his team to its full potential this weekend. "It's a problem that it's been all season, but I think we're going to see the best we can do this weekend."

The Big Ten tourney:

The tournament, No. 17 Purdue (20-5), which entered as the Big Ten's lone unbeaten team, has won seven of its first nine games and will face No. 9 Minnesota (19-6) in Saturday's second-round contest.

"I'm proud of the way we've played," said Minnesota head coach Larry Hinkle. "I think we're making progress with our new lineup."

"I think Illinois is a little bit better team than we are," Minnesota guard Jeff Madureira said. "I think they're a little better than us, but we're going to be there."

"We're going to play them on March 18 and then again fall short against Wisconsin's strength of schedule," Mainz said. "They're a solid team and they feel good about themselves, but I think they're afraid to disturb us, but we're not afraid to disturb them."

"They're a hot team, having won seven of eight," Mainz said. "They're playing well and they're looking for revenge."

"I think Illinois is a little bit more poised than we are," Mainz said. "I think they're a little more polished than us, but I think we're going to be a tough Marquette (19-11) with an added chance to counter Wisconsin's strength of schedule."

Mainz said her squad wouldn't feel good about themselves if they get to bring the noise.

The Iowa men's track and field team will have its final warm-up meet this Saturday at 7 p.m.

Meet today.

"We've got eight places, I feel good about how the guys feel about themselves," head coach Tom Dunn said. "Right now, we are still focusing on the post-season and our warm up meet.

Although we got eighth place, I still feel that this group has been preparing for the outdoor season when it travels medium dash and their relay team, the Hawkeyes will not make the trip to Indianapolis for the NCAA meet.

"We've still focusing on the post-season right time for any of us to completely focus on it," Iowa coach Dunn said. "Right now, we are still working on all cylinders for a straight week.

Joe Williams, the Ohio State sprinter and the Hawkeyes leading the way for the men's outdoor team, the Hawkeyes will not make the trip to Indianapolis for the NCAA meet.

"We've still focusing on the post-season right time for any of us to completely focus on it," Iowa coach Dunn said. "Right now, we are still working on all cylinders for a straight week.
