Dole today political reporter

The Big Dance is only a week away and the most exciting thing on the news is that the political tournaments are about to begin.

For a student who isn't a basketball fan, it can be a confusing and frustrating experience to try to keep track of all the teams and scores. But for those who are avid fans, the excitement builds as the tournament progresses and the prospects of seeing a team advance to the final four become a reality.

One of the advantages of the cold weather is it makes for brilliant sunsets over the campus. Thursday evening's clear skies created the perfect environment — from the steps of the Old Capitol — to see a spectacular display of colors.

Dole was in town for a fundraising event and arrived with his wife, Sarah Lueck, who is also a political reporter. They were attending a fundraiser for the National Republican Committee, which is scheduled to take place later in the evening.

According to the schedule, the fundraiser will feature speeches from Dole's running mate, Pat Buchanan, and Republican National Committee Chairman Haley Barbour. Attendees will also have the opportunity to participate in a silent auction and bid on items such as tickets to events and other political memorabilia.

Before the fundraiser, Dole and his wife met with local Republican party officials and discussed campaign strategy. They also took a tour of the University of Iowa campus, visiting several buildings and meeting with students and faculty.

Overall, it was a busy day for Dole as he continued to campaign in Iowa and other key states leading up to the Super Tuesday primaries on March 1.

Former University of Iowa basketball coach Bob Dole has reached a plea deal with prosecutors in a case involving his former assistant, Jon Grutzmacher. Grutzmacher was charged with first-degree murder in connection with the 1992 death of a student athlete.

However, in a surprise twist, Dole will now enter a plea of guilty to a lesser charge of reckless homicide. He will then serve a sentence of 2 to 5 years in prison with credit for the time he has already served.

Clinton arrived Thursday at Riyadh Military Hospital, where he is expected to stay until he returns to Washington. He will also speak to the nation at 8 p.m. Thursday.

One million miles away...

In the left side of my eye are rows of photographs on the window of the airbus. All of them have been taken by the same person, a professional photographer, who has been flying for many years and has captured moments of history and culture around the world. The photographs are in black and white, which gives them a timeless quality. They range from landscapes to portraits of people, from cityscapes to rural scenes, and they all tell a story of their own.

I am sitting in the middle of the cabin, looking at the photographs and feeling a sense of awe. I am not sure if it is the distance or the beauty of the scenes that is making me feel this way, but I am grateful to be able to see them.

As I continue to look at the photographs, I notice that there is a particular photograph that stands out. It is of a group of people in a small village, and they seem to be smiling. I wonder what their story is, and I hope that someday I will be able to meet them and learn more about their life in that village.

The plane continues to fly, and I am left with a sense of wonder and respect for the world we live in. The million miles away do not seem so far when I am able to see the beauty of the world from the window of the plane.

"The Department of Environmental Science and Technology at the University of Hawaii would like to bring to your attention a letter we received last week from the Department of Environmental Science and Technology of the University of Hawaii. The letter was written by a member of the Hawaii State Legislature and addressed to the editor of the Daily Iowan, the student newspaper of the University of Hawaii at Manoa. The letter is as follows:

"Dear Editor,

I am writing to express my concern about the recent increase in hate crimes against homosexuals in our state. As a member of the Hawaii State Legislature, I am committed to fighting hate crimes and ensuring that all members of our community feel safe and protected.

Last month, a hate crime occurred on the University of Hawaii campus, where a student was attacked for being gay. This is just one of many incidents that have occurred in our state in recent months. These attacks are unacceptable, and we must do everything in our power to stop them.

I am writing to urge all members of the University of Hawaii community to stand together and fight against hate crimes. We must support each other and work together to create a safer and more inclusive environment for all.

Sincerely,

Gallery tour spotlights local artists for International Women’s Month

The Daily Iowan

An exhibition of International Women’s Month, ARTS Iowa City Gallery and Gallery 129 E. Washington St., is featured exhibit in the art gallery. The new exhibition opened March 6 and will run through March 30.

The exhibition features the works of two women, Naomi Wyrick and Karin Connelly.

They present opposing sides of the impact of pollution on the river. Connelly, president of ARTS Iowa City, says, "It's very important to bring awareness to the river."

Wyrick is a nationally known artist from South Africa who has exhibited her work in Johannesburg and a number of places around the country.

"She is the former president of the Johnson County Arts Council, "Duffy" was a student of mine who has taken on the theme of women's bodies."

"They present opposing sides of the impact of pollution on the river. One is very beautiful, and the other seems to bring awareness to it."—Shirley Wyrick, president of ARTS Iowa City

Wyrick's works range from a cultural worker rather than an artist.”—Wyrick said. "She likes dealing with social issues. She says, 'It's not so much about the quality of life, but the quantity of life.'"

Also featured at the gallery is a video installation by Mara McCann titled "On My Body." McCann is a UI master's graduate student who has taken on the theme of women's bodies.

"The exhibit is a reflection of what has been known as the traditional form of art," said Dianne Kaufmann, coordinator of ARTS Iowa City.

The artists are Mary Gaill, Francine Scholz, Ann Sayre, Dorothy Dornberger, Ann Hell and Ruth Mort.

"We all have enjoyed working together for many years," Bentz said. "Over the years we have gradually developed into different aspects of art."

ARTS Iowa City wants to give people an opportunity to view their work annually, Kaufmann said.
