Seven years of hard work by a team of UI professors went up in flames over French Guiana early Tuesday morning.

A European Space Agency (ESA) Ariane-5 rocket, carrying a $6.6 million payload of four identical research satellites that contained instruments designed by professors from the UI physics department, exploded shortly after liftoff.

"Well, obviously I'm disappointed after all the work we put in," said project engineer and UI Professor Don Kirchner. "We have to recog-pens."

Kirchner said the project was contracted by NASA to ESA in 1989 and all project funds came from NASA and ESA.

Launch officials said the unmanned rocket was deliberately blown up 40 seconds after takeoff at a height of 13,120 feet because it appeared the rocket was veering off course and might crash to Principle investigator and UI Professor Donald Gurnett said the goal of the project was to study plasma in the Earth's atmosphere.

European scientists, too," Gurnett retry." said. "The mission was to study what I might refer to as space weather. Specifically the plasma surrounding the Earth — the stuff that causes the Northern Lights and geomagnetic storms.' Gurnett and Kirchner said there are spare parts for one satellite and they are uncertain of what will happen to the project.

We only have the spare parts for one (satellite)," Gurnett said. "They would have to build four satellites. The project was unique because there were four satellites taking "Well, it was a very important measurements. It's entirely up to

Cold and rain have deterred beach bums, but Coralville Park Manager John Castle says park facilities are ready for visitors

"The cold has really reduced our use," Castle said.

"Memorial Day is usually our busiest holiday. This year we never filled up; we had 25-30 percent of (the people who) would normally be here.

Additionally, high water levels have swallowed at least two-thirds of the beach at the Coralville Lake & Dam, leaving only a strip of sand for sun-seekers. Despite the cloudy weather, a few people still make the journey out to "the Res" to use the park for fishing, hiking and

New HIV tests raise concerns

The Coralville Lake & Dam has been hit hard by low attendance due to the uncharacteristically cool late-spring temperatures.

Two new tests that diagnose HIV and AIDS could improve treatment of infected patients, said Dr. Jack Stapleton, head of the HIV clinic at the UI Hospitals and Clinics.

However, he also thinks the drugs, which were approved by the Food and Drug Administration on Monday, also might harm postdiagnosis counseling procedures.

One of the tests, Orasure, is an oral-based HIV diagnosis test that uses saliva samples, rather than blood samples, to test for HIV antibodies. Orasure's makers, SmithKline and Epitope are seeking to have a similar home-test version approved by the FDA.

This raises some concerns for Stapleton, because home testing doesn't provide the information about the disease that a clinic

"I think it's going to be interesting to see (if Orasure) will be important," he said. "We think it's important to find out test results with counseling. If it's positive or negative that doesn't mean that someone is not infected.

Laura Hill, director of the Iowa Center for AIDS Resources & Education (ICARE), 320 E. College St., agrees follow-up work is necessary for patients who undergo AIDS

"With the home testing, I think Dr. Stapleton has some valid concerns," Hill said. "In the state of Iowa it is required to have counseling for a very important reason. People need medical referrals and emotional support.

Although there has been speculation that the privacy of the athome tests will increase the likelihood of testing by some people, UI junior Jason LeMar said he would rather have a professional test.

"I'd go by blood work," he said. "I would go to the doctor, because you're talking about your life here. I might take a home test every so often, but I probably wouldn't take it at all if I was with one person."

"The RNA (Amplicor) test has been shown to be among the best single test for measuring the progress of HIV," Stapleton said. "The advantages of the test are if you have someone who is healthier (they have very low HIV in their blood) you can treat them differ-ently, or not treat them at all." He said with the Amplicor test and the existent CD4 test, which measures the strength of the immune system by counting Tcells, physicians can get an accurate idea of the progress of the HIV virus in patients. Patients in therapy can also find out the effectiveness of their treatments by using the Amplicor test.

The UIHC has been using tests like the Amplicor test since 1992 in its clinical research of AIDS drugs for the National Institutes of Health.

"I think that we have a better marker for disease," Stapleton said. "We will still use the old test, the CD4 count. It's also an important test because it gives us an idea of the state of the immune County Auditor Tom Slockett, who won his primary race over Denise Shannon with about 70 percent of the vote, said while the turnout was not a record low, it was still discouraging.

"It's hard to be very pleased at all," Slockett said. "When 84 percent of the registered voters didn't go to the polls, that says something.

"Those who did vote should be congratulated."

Don Kerf, a Johnson County poll chairperson, said Tuesday's polls were anything but busy.

"Turnout was light, very light, Kerf said. "Probably the lightest turnout we've ever had down here."

Incumbent Minnette Doderer won her ninth nomination for the state representatives against Terrence Neuzil. Doderer won with about 55 percent of the vote. She said while some may have expected a larger margin of victory, she was not at all surprised at Neuzil's performance.

"He ran a hard race, and he worked hard," Doderer said. "I'm very pleased with the outcome, for a grassroots campaign." In the Johnson County Board of Supervisors race, only one incumbent was unseated.

Medical miracles start with research

What exactly is being done?

What you see: orange fences, yellow bulldozers and a brown structure full of math graffiti. But what's really going on inside the walls of Schaeffer Hall may make the two-year project worth the wait.

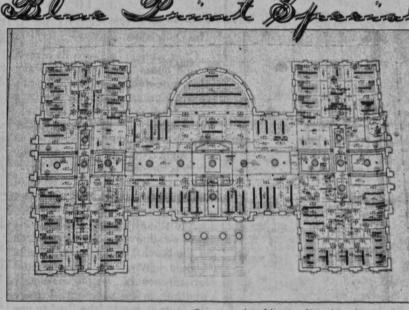

Plumbing system

The plumbing in Schaeffer is unacceptably old and in need of an upgrade. Restrooms are also being installed at both ends of the building, a change from the previous single faculty restrooms at one end of the upper floors.

Classroom modifications

On the first floor of Schaeffer, the former Language Media Center is being remodeled into a large, modern classroom. Walls are being removed and new duct work is being installed.

Courtesy of Architectural/ Engineering Services First-floor blueprints of Schaeffer Hall indicate plans for a renovation of classroom 121 into classroom 140, which will make it much larger. Marble columns will be placed in addition to the existing supports. The rest of Schaeffer's classrooms will now be concentrated on this floor and the ground floor, instead of scattered throughout the building. A communication closet, which will contain new telephone and computer wiring, will be added as well.

Air intake

This is the new air intake for Schaeffer's new air-handling system. In order to install this system, Schaeffer's foundation had to be lowered several feet in some areas.

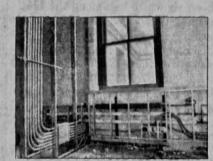

New offices

When Schaeffer was built, it contained an auditorium on the first floor with a balcony on the second floor. The brick arch shown is the entrance to the balcony. When the auditorium was removed after Macbride Hall's auditorium was built, a floor was added, closing the balcony and the auditorium. The second floor is being renovated into a new Liberal Arts Administration office in the semicircular shape of the original auditorium and ringed with offices also in this shape. This will restore the area to the original architectural design.

Wiring updates

The wiring in Schaeffer was not designed to handle the electrical load of modern technology. New wiring is being installed to equip two ITCs and other additions. And, according to architect Steve Buckman, "The wiring is upgradeable for future technology."

Heating ducts

The air-handling system at Schaeffer is one of the remaining features of the original 1899 architecture. The new system will provide central air conditioning, as well as heat, to all of Schaeffer.

What could be more dramatic for Hawkeye football fans than seeing Nile Kinnick's own F-4 Wildcat fighter plane suspended 100 feet in the air over the southeast corner of the stadium named in his honor? That is the vision of Al Couppee and Richard Tosaw.

Six Iowa City men were arrested Monday night after one man was assaulted, and gunshots were later

A gendered exception

■ Though gender segregation in classrooms could be construed as unlawful, an exception should be made because it works.

nother good experiment is mixed up with politics. In May of 1995, a school committee in Des Moines recommended the district establish a pilot program for single-gender instruction in certain classrooms. The private Maharishi School of the Age of Enlightenment already had separate classes for male and female students, and a Mount Pleasant, Iowa, school has been considering this tactic for more-effective teaching in math and science.

Nationally, separating students according to gender for certain subjects is a common practice. In California, 10 school districts are planning to separate boys and girls in middle school. Baltimore and New Jersey communities also have separate classrooms. Detroit has allmale schools teaching an Afrocentric curriculum.

Separate-gender classes in these communities are seen as an answer to some problems faced by the schools. By separating the boys from the girls there isn't as much goofing-off and discipline is more

Like these school districts, the group in West Des Moines was also hoping to increase students' participation and interest. By separating students by gender in math and science classes, gender inequities might be corrected.

Unlike other states, Iowa school districts have been advised to stop teaching boys and girls separately. The Iowa Department of Education director recently sent letters to the schools advising them to discontinue the practice of gender-separate classes. This advice, although not a formal legal opinion of the attorney general, is considered serious enough to deter the Mount Pleasant school. They say they won't continue with their plan without the Department of Education's bless-

Why the political concern? Segregation in the classroom violates a series of rulings passed by the Supreme Court that say legal distinctions based on gender (and race) are generally forbidden ... but not

There must be exceptions. If there were no restrictions on the basis of gender, shelters for battered women would no longer be able to exclude men. Women could not legally be separated from men in pris-

Some schools that have tried separation in math and science classes have found inhibitions lowered and disruptive behavior less common. Results are difficult to measure, but if test scores are an indication of success then this plan works: Scores improved up to 58 percent in one New Jersey school.

Gender separation is an issue that varies by case and needs to be treated accordingly. It is one of the "exceptions."

Guest Opinion

 Waiting for a verdict in the Rev. Dewayne Byrdsong case, one UI student places blame on the media and Coralville ccused 11 months ago of defacing his own car with racial slurs, Rev. Dewayne Byrdsong awaits the judicial verdict in his trial. It is important to consider that the public has received information through newspapers, television and radio that strongly contradict the image of the case.

Over and over, the press announced the paint can used to vandalize Byrdsong's Mercedes Benz was found in the dumpster near his house. The claim has been that this directly implicated Byrdsong in vandal-

But is this really the case? Byrdsong has always admitted he disposed of his paint can in the dumpster. However, that would only be natural because Byrdsong was doing paint work on the exhaust system under his car. There is no necessary connection between the paint in the dumpster and the paint used to vandalize the car unless they were found to be the same paint.

The police, in fact, did claim the paint thrown into the dumpster and the paint used to vandalize the car "matched." However, in testimony the prosecution's expert said no other paint was used to create a test sampling. He testified the paint on the car was only "similar" to the paint found in the trash and it is possible it was similar to several other paints, as well.

Byrdsong's defense provided evidence that the so-called paint "match" was next to irrelevant by producing a number of other paints that were found to be at least similar to the paint Byrdsong had thrown away in the dumpster. The prosecution's claim that the dumpster paint and the vandalism paint were a "match" was really only a claim they were not "dissimilar," just like other commercial brands are not "dissimilar."

Finally, when the defense cross-examined the Coralville detective assigned to the case as to why a man who admitted to accosting Byrdsong because Byrdsong is black was not considered a suspect, the detective gave two reasons. First, the man already had an alibi; he was home alone sleeping at the time the crime was committed. And second, since the man had told the truth when he admitted to accosting Byrdsong, then he must be telling the truth when saying he didn't vandalize Byrdsong's car with racial slurs. These two explanations are clearly inadequate. They are so inadequate they seriously question the motivation of the Coralville police to find out what really happened.

The only case the prosecution could make was that Byrdsong had visited garages before the crime was committed. The press has played into the prosecution's strategy by circumstantially insinuating Byrdsong had done this secretly. However, as a car enthusiast who regularly enters auto-customizing competitions, Byrdsong has been acquiring estimates for years for work to be done on his cars. Not only does he use his own name, but he makes return visits, and enjoys talking about cars with garage owners. Byrdsong even turned over the names of a number of garages he had visited that the police hadn't discov-

Clearly, there is a double standard being maintained by the Coralville Police Department with regards to hate crimes when they believe the word of a white man who is an admitted racist and don't believe the word of a black man who was the victim of a hate crime.

Riding the train to change

Editor's note: This summer, The Daily Iowan will devote space on Wednesdays to two columnists corresponding from abroad: Rima Vesely from Cape Town, South Africa and Jeffrey Katz from Tel Aviv, Israel.

iding on a third-class train to Cape Town, South Africa, early one morning, I was Labruptly awakened by the strident voice of an impassioned Christian preacher. He was speaking in Afrikaans - a derivative Dutch language - quite loudly.

The preacher's 40-minute tirade hurt my eyes. It rocked my head. I was TIRED. My job as a news reporter at Cape Town's largest daily paper, the Argus, forced me out of bed in the dark. I commuted to the city for an hour to be at the office by 8:30 a.m. Morning naps were already becoming a routine.

But this man was speaking, and he wanted EVERYONE to listen. Walking up and down the train car, gesturing wildly, alternately weeping and praying, I didn't have to know Chicago, where I grew up, this man would have been literally ignored.

Living in a First World and a Third World at the same time has left me in a continuous emotional state, with questions upon questions and no answers.

But here, people paid attention.

Not everyone, of course, but the majority of the car was listening. Fully awake and equally disgusted, I looked at the brown and black faces around me (whites don't ride third class) for in agreement. My annoyance began trickling with a vortex of emotion so intense I weep and away. This incident began to represent what South Africa was becoming in my one-and-ahalf week stay in Cape Town. People getting off the train at each stop patted him on the shoulder and said thank you. They shook hands with him. They smiled.

And it began to make sense to me. While the world expressed horror during the years of apartheid (a policy of separating the races legally instituted in 1948 and effectively divid-Afrikaans to know what he was saying. And I ing blacks, whites and coloureds from one was annoyed. I hate being preached at. In another), stronger, deeper currents were continuing to move people. There was a certain amount of respect directed at the passersby. Despite the harshness of the system, people continued to be warm.

There is a warmth here I have never experienced in the United States. Chicago is cold and isolated; people never look each other in the eye. Iowa City has such a homogeneous population that people who look different often feel different, not because they are, but because of how they're questioning intent. But South Africa is up-front, to say the least. My coloured and female colleagues in the newsroom were told flat out that they were hired because of affirmative action.

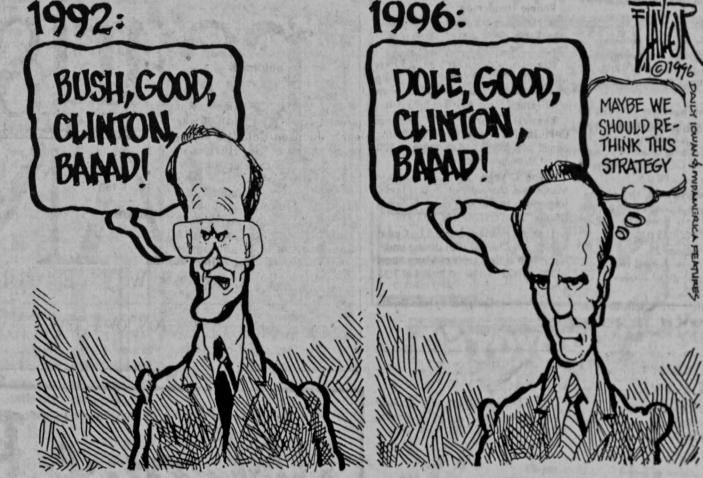

I won't claim to understand South Africa. I'll support. Most were staring at the man, nodding be the first to admit the confusion has left me laugh often in a short period of time. It's complex as hell and just as crazy. Whites, who make up 13 percent of the population, have the highest living standard in the world. And they all have black maids and servants. Coloureds, in an economically comfortable middle, have recently elected the apartheid-instigating National Party into local government offices. Blacks live in sprawling townships and squatter camps, in appalling conditions. Plumbing and electricity are just starting to be built. The first time I went to Lando and Khayalitsha, two massive ghettos east of the city, I wept. Living in a First World and a Third World at the same time has left me in a continuous emotional state, with questions upon questions and no

And I am certainly not the only one confused. The changes, which seem slow to me but rapid to South Africans, are prompting the wealthy to flee Europe and the Africans to challenge their past. There's a lot of fear here. The former government (the National Party) played on it, and it worked. With the change in government two years ago, more than just economic status has changed. A new identity is being formed. It's coined "the New South Africa," a slogan which has taken over billboards and television ads. But it's not new - just transforming. Beneath the racial lines are religious ones; beneath them, gender; and beneath that, language. The government has legalized affirmative action, which challenges traditional tribal statuses for women. It has officially recognized 11 different languages. This is only the beginning of the

And people are listening. The train pulled into Cape Town Station and people flooded the walk paths. The preacher got lost in the crowd. But his passion remained.

tarting today and continuing indefinitely you are going to hear and read about efforts to salvage the World War II fighter plane of Nile Kinnick from the waters of the Caribbean. His former teammate is spearheading an effort to have it restored as a monument to the man and his fellow veterans. Whether this idea will find support and ultimately succeed or be widely disparaged remains to be

His character, discipline, and compassion were what made Nile Kinnick a hero who deserves to be remembered.

Initial response has ranged from bemused skepticism to just plain amusement. As efforts proceed, especially those of raising funds, opinions will likely shift toward downright opposition. In the current climate of "cutbacks" and "downsizing," a complex, costly effort to memorialize a man from so long ago about which so little is remembered can only be expected to generate resistance.

Cold fiscal reality and general apathy will

Promise unfulfilled is as great a tragedy as this world can witness, and reading the letters and diaries of Nile Kinnick, throughout which examples of his oratory and leadership skills are legion, one begins to understand his promise was greater, and its loss more tragic,

Kinnick a hero who deserves to be remembered.

His own words from the 1940 commencement speech demonstrate the values of a man that today are so preciously rare and so desperately By now we should realize that the battle is life itself and that our joy and happiness should lie most likely triumph in this, as in every other as much in the struggle to overcome as in the fruition of a later day. So let us carefully take courage in what we deem to be right and no matter what our line of endeavor may be, cling to its concomitants of persistence, desire, imagination, hope and faith. Injustice, oppression and war will ultimately bring on their own destruction ... now is the time for these problems to be solved by enlightened thought and understanding. We can accomplish much if we implement mental discipline and inspiration with real mental courage. The task is not easy ... we shall struggle to be sufficient to the need. The fate of the memorial efforts will hinge on the ability of those involved to raise enough money and support to facilitate the retrieval and restoration of the plane, and then convince UI administrators the plane should rise in a tribute to Kinnick over Kinnick Stadium. It is doubtful that both of these objectives will be achieved. If these efforts fail, the tragedy will lie not in their defeat, but rather in the disheartening indifference toward an American hero so many have forgotten and so many more will never know.

Even if the plane is never raised from the sea, the mere attempt is inherently valuable if it stimulates in Iowans, as well as in all Americans, a renewed interest in the legacy of Nile Kinnick.

This idea deserves a chance.

Japan quickly apologized for the accident, which happened at 12:15 a.m. CDT Tuesday as the U.S. Navy's A-6E Intruder was towing a gunnery target 1,600 miles west of Hawaii. Government sues Chrysler over unsafe seat belts

Catherine O'Brien Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The government told Chrysler Corp. Tuesday to recall more than 91,000 Chryslers and Dodges because of unsafe seat belts, then went to court to enforce the order after the company refused to go along.

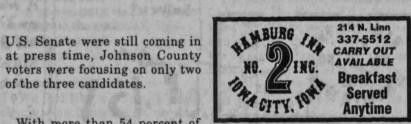

Chrysler told the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration months ago it would not comply with any recall of the 1995 model cars. That prompted the Justice Department to file a federal civil lawsuit to force the company to notify owners and fix the Chrysler Cirrus and Dodge Stratus cars for

This is the first time the government has taken such action based on its own safety tests, though the traffic safety agency has taken manufacturers to court on eight previous occasions for alleged defects based on accidents and engineering analysis. The government has lost only one of those cas-

In January, the government determined the cars' rear seat belt system was not strong enough because a weld nut anchoring the belt pulled out of the floor of a 1995 Chrysler Cirrus during a routine test. The same system is used in the Dodge Stratus.

Chrysler lawyer Lewis Goldfarb said the court battle has implications for all automakers because the testing procedure wasn't clear on what the company had to do to

Chrysler officials also said in a statement that on the road, as opposed to a government test, "there has not been a single incident of rear seat belt anchor failure, injury or complaint."

Go To Blazes to ignite Gabe's

The Daily Iowan

The Iowa City Fire Department better be on full alert tonight because Gabe's is bringing the scorching sounds of Go To Blazes, with special guests The Bludgers and Tom Jessen.

Formed near Washington, D.C., in 1987, Go To Blazes is an alternative country band, blending a steamy rock 'n' roll style with the honesty of country.

After relocating to Philadelphia a year later, the band became one of the city's most popular acts by sticking to its bar-band basics of over-amped guitars, rock-solid rhythms and an in-your-face delivery from singer/guitarist Ted Warren, lead guitarist Tom Heyman. bassist Ted Pappadopoulas and drummer Keith Donnellan.

What sets Go To Blazes apart from other bar bands is an unmatched devotion to superb songwriting. Sticking to age-old country themes of love and alcohol, Go To Blazes takes an unapologetic and unromantic approach when dealing with these issues

Go To Blazes' self-titled debut was released on Skyclad in 1988, followed by Love, Lust and Trouble on the French label Skyranch. East Side Digital soon caught wind of the band and signed them to a record deal, leading to the release of 1994's Anytime ... Anywhere. Last year, Go To Blazes recorded a live, limited-edition acoustic album, ... And Other Crimes, covering songs by Lou Reed, Lee Hazelwood and Hank Williams Jr.,

When you enter the fascinating, macabre worlds of Stephen King, always expect the unexpected. With a unique blend of realism and the supernatural, King has created some of modern day's most memorable and chilling novels. His lat-THE GREEN MILE 🕷 est horrific adventure is a six-part

The latest part of "The Green Mile," "Coffey's Hands" was released last week and is definitely the strongest of the three books of the series released so far.

The opening mini-novel, "The

Two Dead Girls," brilliantly set the darkened stage with detailed descriptions of the death-row setting, leaving enough uncertainty to inspire readers to purchase the next installment. "The Two Dead Girls" introduced readers to the amiable, interesting narrator Paul Edgecombe, the man in charge of this section of the prison who is suffering from a burning urinary track infection.

When enormous convicted murderer John Coffey arrives under his supervision, strange occurrences begin to take place in E Block with odd regularity. Exciting and thought-provoking, "The Two Dead Girls" is a nearly perfect introduction to the series.

To many avid readers, however, part two, "The Mouse on the Mile," turned out to be an extreme disappointment. Instead of advancing the linear storyline, "The Mouse on the Mile" spends the majority of its time chronicling the immediate history of E Block before John Coffey's appearance.

While King tries to remain deliciously ambitious about the series' underlying message, this chapter gives insight with a gruesome practice run-through of an execution. King delicately attempts to balance on the issue of the moral correctness of the death penalty, but, as evident in this episode, readers are subjected to increasing amounts of subtly placed sympa-thy. In the lackluster "The Mouse on the Mile," King seems only to be biding his time, leaving faithful readers to fend for themselves.

Fortunately, the third installment, "Coffey's Hands," provided a tremendous payoff for the wait. Easily the best in the series, "Coffey's Hands" provides readers with what they have been desperately wanting. King first lends insight best-of-7 playoff format, the Game 1 winner has gone on to win 45-of-57 Stanley Cup championships.

STANLEY CUP

The Panthers, making the Cup atmosphere getting to a team that finals in only their third season of existence, weren't supposed to be here and in Colorado's fatal and near flawless second period, they weren't.

Maybe it was the mile-high stockpiled canisters of oxygen in their dressing room. Or maybe it was effects of playing a third critical game in a six-day span in which the Avalanche only relaxed.

But the Panthers fell as flat as the McNichols Arena ice midway through the second period after its defense dictated the early tempo and playoff star Tom Fitzgerald's goal at 16:51 of the first period gave them a 1-0 lead.

NBA FINALS

meet those expectations." The plaudits come one after another for a Bulls team that is unlike any other the league has seen in its 49-year history.

An unprecedented 72-win season. An 11-1 romp through the Eastern Conference playoffs. Another MVP ch of the year award for Jackson. An executive of the year award for Jerry Krause. All-defensive team honors for Jordan, Rodman and Pippen. A sixth man of the year award for Toni Kukoc.

All of it has led up to this, the final act in the drama.

Four more wins will stamp the 1995-96 Chicago Bulls as arguably the greatest ever, better than Wilt Chamberlain's 1971-72 Los Angeles Lakers, who went 69-13 in the regular season and 12-3 in the postseason, better than Wilt's 1966-67 Philadelphia 76ers, 68-13 in the regular season and 11-4 in the playoffs. Even the staunchest naysayers season for Jordan. Another may have to relent if the Bulls can rebounding title for Dennis Rod- pull off a sweep. It would give them chance even though we're playing a 15-1 postseason record and a .938 winning percentage.

The current record is .923 (12-1) by the Philadelphia 76ers in 1983. "I just want to get four wins, and I don't care how we get them. If it's 15-4, I'd be happy with that," Jordan said. The supposed patsy in all this is the SuperSonics, no slouches themselves after a 64-win regular season, a sweep of the two-time defending champion Houston Rockets and a tough seven-game victory over the Utah Jazz in the conference finals.

The Sonics laugh at the talk of a sweep, bristle at the suggestion they're not worthy of being on the same court with the Bulls.

"We feel like we have a good the best team in the history of the league," said Hersey Hawkins, who will start Game 1 with the defensive assignment on Jordan. "We're not thinking they're going to sweep or can we push it to seven games. We're thinking we can win."

Not many people agree. Oddsmakers bumped the line up to 91/2 points Tuesday, 21/2 points higher than where it opened Sunday night.

The fact is, though, the Bulls can be beaten. The Knicks did it in the third game of the second round, the Sonics did it in November when the Bulls made their annual trek to Seattle, the Pacers did it twice, the lowly Milwaukee Bucks almost did it on the night Chicago got win No. 70 and even the expansion Toronto Raptors did it back in late March.

Doing it four times in two weeks, however, is another matter. Consider that it took 45 games and 94 days for the Bulls to lose four during the season, and it took overtime for the Knicks to put that single blemish on Chicago's postseason record.

BACK TO SCHOOL

about their schooling in private. Some, like Smith and Juwan Howard, hope their commitment to education will encourage other young athletes to follow their example and not think they don't need a degree just because they're rich right now.

"Obviously, I don't need the money," said Smith, a 20-year-old who signed an $8.5 million three-year contract a year ago with the Golden State Warriors. "But I just want to get that degree to fulfill a promise to myself and my mother. I want to have that paper on my wall. That'd be up there like winning the championship."

Michael Jordan didn't need the money when he went back for his degree at North Carolina a few years after he turned pro. Bo Jackson certainly wasn't hard up for cash when he went back to Auburn for a degree last year. And Emmitt Smith wasn't worried about his financial future when he persevered for six years and finally got his degree from Florida last month.

Regardless of income or star power, nearly every athlete going back to college cites one of three reasons for doing so: to fulfill a promise to a parent, to show his children the importance of education, or to prepare for a second career after sports.

"Those are powerful motivators," said David Stein, a psychologist and career counselor in San Francisco. "If you feel as a parent that you really want to be a good role model for your kids, and you say, 'I better practice what I preach,' that's pretty strong. Or if you have a close tie to your family and say, My mother worked hard so I could go to school, and if I don't finish I'd really be letting her down,' those are powerful factors. I'm more skeptical of the people who say, 'I want to do it because I want a better education."

At the steps to Brown Hall at Norfolk State, Joe Smith paused and smiled nervously, pressing a blue spiral notebook against his chest.

"It feels like my first day in kindergarten, like I'm starting all over," he said, looking like a giant version of a schoolboy in a T-shirt, baggy blue jean shorts and size 17 sneakers.

About 70 percent of the players who enter the NBA and NFL each year do not have college degrees, regardless of how many years they stayed in school.

Some people might draw a quick conclusion and blame that lack of a degree on coming out early, but that's a fallacy," said Lem Burnham, director of the NFL's player programs. Of the 1,400 players in the NFL this past season, more than 1.000 didn't have college degrees. But early-entry players accounted for less than 10 percent of those.

Nearly a quarter of incoming NFL players each year, Burnham said, are within a semester of earning degrees. Nearly a third are a year or two away, or up to four full semesters.

"Then there's a group, roughly 14 percent, that aren't even in striking range," Burnham said, "and this is not comprised of the players coming out early. It's a reflection of players who were in college who really didn't do anything significant. They may have been taking classes just to stay eligible, and their classes really didn't mean anything toward earning a degree. "If they went to school every semester while they were in the NFL, they probably wouldn't complete a degree. Some of them are like starting over again as freshmen."

Some players can't read or do simple arithmetic, even after four years of college ball, Burnham said.

"You wonder how that could be," he said. "Somewhere along the line someone let them down and became uninterested in them as people who needed those remedial skills and focused simply on what they could provide as athletes. In a lot of ways, I have a hard time blaming that on the athlete solely, but I think the athlete does have some responsibility for his own condition."

There are about 4,500 NCAA Division I basketball players each year, another 10,000 in Divisions II and III, and 60 percent to 70 percent leave without a degree. Only about 30 to 40 college players reach the NBA each year. By their second year, some of those are gone. That's a lot of ballplayers with no degree and no NBA career.

Seven of the 49 early-entry players drafted into the NBA since 1990 are no longer in the league. Another 41 early-entry candidates during the same period were bypassed in the draft. Essentially, they gave up school for a pro career that went bust.

Smith would have stayed at Maryland if he hadn't had indications he would be among the top three picks. He wasn't a brilliant student, just getting by with a 2.2 grade point average, but he was happy there and working toward a bachelor's degree in criminal justice with the vague idea of a law career someday.

Now, he's switched to a broadcasting major, and is taking six credits this summer in sociology and African-American studies. He plans to transfer back to Maryland next summer and continue working toward a degree there for however long it takes.

People-to-People tour finishes 8-2

People-to-People Sports, a team of college players coached by Iowa assistant Gary Close, ended its tour of Spain and Czechoslovakia with a record of 8-2.

The People-to-People team, which features Hawkeyes Ryan Bowen and Kent McCausland, won just one of its final three games against the Czechoslovakia National Team.

The team opened the tour May 28 and 29 in a tournament at Malgrat de Mar, Spain. The final six games were played in Czechoslovakia, concluding June 2.

Joining Bowen and McCausland on the team were Chase Metheney of Virginia, Serge Zwikker of North Carolina, Brian Cardinal and Alan Eldridge of Purdue, Roshown McLeod of Duke, Bryan Taueg of Virginia Military and Andy Markowski and Chester Surles of Nebraska.

Last summer, Close guided a People-to-People team to a 4-1 record on a tour in the Netherlands.

Camby admits to taking gifts from agents

HARTFORD, Conn. AP) -Marcus Camby, who entered the NBA draft after winning college player of the year honors last season, has admitted accepting cash from one agent and jewelry that another agent bought, according to a newspaper report.

In a tearful interview with his hometown newspaper, The Hartford Courant, Camby admitted accepting the money and expensive gifts while still a player for the University of Masschusetts.

Camby is attending the NBA predraft testing in Rosemont, Ill., and is projected as one of the first three picks in the June 26 draft.

His eyes swollen with tears, Camby made the admissions from his airport hotel room.

"I know that's wrong," he said. "I really wasn't thinking. The opportunity was just there and I took it."

Accepting such inducements from prospective agents is against NCAA rules and could result in penalties against UMass, which reached the Final Four this season for the first time. NCAA enforcement officials could not be reached for comment. BASEBALL

Pirates take Clemson pitcher with first pick

NEW YORK (AP) — Kris Benson, a Clemson pitcher selected by the Pittsburgh Pirates as the top pick in the baseball draft Tuesday, probably won't pitch in the major leagues until 1998 at the earliest.

"I haven't really set any timetables for myself. I just want to be up there as fast as I can," the 21-yearold right-hander said. "I don't want to be rushed, and I know they don't want that, either. From there, it's just how I perform. I'm going to have to let my arm do the talking."

While the first four picks were from colleges, 19 of the 30 players drafted in the first round were from

Avalanche bury Florida with 3 goals in 4 minutes

DENVER — The Florida Panthers had surprised three consecutive playoff opponents with Game 1 victories. This time, there was no surprise — except on the Panthers.

The Colorado Avalanche finally solved Florida's suffocating defense and super-steady goal-tender John Vanbiesbrouck with a three-goal flurry in 3:49 of the second period and won the Stanley Cup opener 3-1 Tuesday night.

Patrick Roy, who already owns two Stanley Cup rings and is try-ing for a third with a team that was still the Quebec Nordiques a year ago, preserved the lead with 25 saves in his record-setting 133rd playoff start. He broke the record set by Billy Smith, formerly of the New York Islanders and now Florida's goaltending coach.

Scott Young swung the momentum to the Avs and their pompomwaving fans with a seemingly soft goal that defused the importance of several early Florida defensive stands. Mike Ricci and Uwe Krupp quickly followed with goals as Colorado seized what history shows is often a series-swinging victory.

"We came out a little hesitant in the first period," Ricci said. "They played very solid hockey, they work very hard. We didn't come out with our best effort. We picked it up a little bit, got our forecheck going and we caught a couple of breaks." Since the NHL switched to a

Seles ousted while Sampras squeaks by

Stephen Wilson Associated Press

PARIS - After five sets and 31/2 hours of bruising power tennis against old sparring partner Jim Courier, Pete Sampras looked like he could barely stand up.

Then he banged his 28th ace, cap-ping a comeback from two sets down Tuesday to reach the semifinals of the French Open for the first time.

After the ball whizzed past Courier to complete the 6-7 (7-4), 4-6, 6-4, 6-4, 6-4 victory, the top-seeded Sampras looked to the sky and held up his arms like a boxer signaling a knockout.

"I was very tired," Sampras said. "In the last set, my mind was kind of a blank. It was just adrenaline ... just trying to guts it out."

There was no such reprieve for Monica Seles, who was ousted by 10th-seeded Jana Novotna 7-6 (9-7) 6-3. Seles, a three-time champion who shares the top seeding with Steffi Graf, was unusually tentative.

"I just played very scared," said Seles, playing in her first French

Open since her stabbing in 1993. "I played really defensive which is not the style of my game."

Graf, the defending champion, swept past No. 5 Iva Majoli 6-3, 6-1. Also advancing to the women's semis were No. 3 Arantxa Sanchez Vicario, who was jeered while resorting to moonballs in her 6-1, 6-7 (7-4), 10-8 victory over Karina Habsudova; and No. 3 Conchita Martinez, a 6-1, 6-3 winner over No. 9 Lindsay Davenport.

Sampras will next face No. 6 seed Yevgeny Kafelnikov, the hard-hitting Russian who beat No. 13 Richard Krajicek 6-3, 6-4, 6-7 (7-4), 6-2.

NORFOLK, Va. - A year after he left Maryland as a stone-broke sophomore to become the NBA's

No. 1 draft pick, Joe Smith tooled through his hometown in a $50,000 Land Cruiser to Sociology 110 at Norfolk State's summer school.

Rap music from his CD player blasted out of torpedo-shaped bass tubes and nine speakers as Smith sang along. He left his Mercedes parked in the garage of on a college degree the new lakeside house he bought his mom, next to her Lexus.

On the way to the campus this first day of school, Smith passed the concrete courts and run-down neighborhoods he used to roam in search of pickup games before he went off to the University of Maryland

"Never had my own ball," he said. Now he has it all, except his name on a college degree. That, too, will come in time.

As 41 college and high school players make an unprecedented exodus into the June 26 NBA draft, Smith is part of a quiet, almost secretive, but equally large pilgrimage - back to school to get a degree.

Cynics snickered when Stephon Marbury, Marcus Camby, Allen Iverson and others declared their intentions to return to college. But no one should doubt their sincerity too

At least 40 NBA players, including other rookie standouts Damon Stoudamire, Jerry Stack house, Michael Finley, Antonio McDyess and Rasheed Wallace, are going back to school this summer. More are expected to go next year. Shaquille O'Neal is amons the more prominent veterans working steadily toward a degree. In the NFL, 351 players went
