Heavy rainfall causes flooding in Ames

Associated Press

AMES - Steve Diets spent Tuesday evening in the basement of his family's house in Ames, Iowa, scooping water from the house's flooded basement.

"We're in a basement. Last time I was 20 feet of water in this area and we got a big financial loss," he said.

Diets and his wife, Delores Diets, were not alone in their home. Their neighbors were also affected.

"They're all helping each other," said Steve Diets.

"We were really busy rescuing people," said Steve Diets. "We had a whole lot of water that I haven't had to deal with before, all day long, and it was raining."

Westfield said next week's roadways.

The elevation was about 6 feet from Ames' flood damage. "It's a matter of time before we get hit," said Steve Diets.

The National Weather Service said there would be a chance of flooding this week. "We're at about 6 feet on the floor," said Steve Diets.

Outside in the rain, Steve Diets said he was more concerned about the nerves. They had to get out of the house before the water got too high.

"We're going to get out of here. We're going to get out of here," said Steve Diets.

Film recounts Wilson's dark years

Mark Pittillo
The Daily Iowan

Director Don Was, who directed the film Washington, D.C. about Beach Boy Brian Wilson's life, says his movie isn't really "Caddyshack," "Dr. Dolittle," or "Frisco" really is none of kind of pop, music, or entertainment. It's a movie about the life of one of the most famous musicians of all time, Brian Wilson.

Wilson has been in the public eye since childhood, as the lead singer of the band that gave him his fortune. He has been known for his unique musical style and his troubled personal life. His struggles with mental health and addiction have been well-documented, and his story is one of resilience and triumph.

The film, which is titled "Brian Wilson: I Just Won't Make It Myself," follows Wilson's life from his early days with the Beach Boys to his current day. It features interviews with his family, friends, and colleagues, as well as footage of him performing live. The film also includes rare footage of Beach Boys concerts and interviews with other musicians who were influenced by Wilson's music.

Wilson's talent and artistry are undeniable, and his story is one of inspiration for those struggling with mental health issues. The film is a must-see for fans of the Beach Boys and music lovers everywhere.

Disability roles fade from '90s TV

Los Angeles Times

By Jim

It’s a famous name in Hollywood, but has it really been used? No, I have seen it in an audition a couple of times, but I can’t think of a TV role I’ve auditioned two times that I’ve been cast.

Actor David McSwain

Now, say disabled performers and advocates, anyone who has seen American Idol or America’s Got Talent on television knows that there are many opportunities for those with disabilities in the entertainment industry. But the truth is, there are not as many opportunities for disabled actors as there once were.

There are a number of factors contributing to this lack of representation. One is the way that casting directors and producers see disabled actors, and another is the way that disabled actors themselves see themselves.

Disabled actors often feel that they are limited in the types of roles they can play, and that they are not given the same opportunities as their able-bodied counterparts. As a result, they may choose to stay in the background, waiting for the right opportunity to come along.

However, there are many talented disabled actors out there who are just waiting for the right chance to shine. It’s time to start recognizing their talent and giving them the opportunity to show the world what they can do.
