Cooking guidelines:

- Ground beef: When cooking the meat, the juices should be allowed to run clear and there should be no pink in the middle.
- Steak: Single cuts can be pink in the middle — a rarity because you're cooking one piece of meat.
- Chicken: Should be cooked to at least 165 degrees in the middle of the chicken.
- Pork: Should be cooked to 150 degrees in the middle. Pork should be cooked until gray.

Tips for choosing the right beef:

- Make sure it's:
- fresh
- not outdated
- firm to the touch
- not slimy
- Store at 45 degrees or less before barbecuing
- Store at 140 degrees or more after barbecued

Planning the perfect barbecue

Kevin Ho

The Daily Iowan

David Foreman, a UI sophomore, knows exactly what it takes to make a barbecue a full-blown bash.

"The essentials," he said. "Food, frisbees, footballs — things to do while you wait for food."

With the Fourth of July just two days away, Foreman and others like him are making barbecue preparations for the holiday.

Larry Pilkington, who is attending a UI summer engineering camp, said there is only one barbecue basic needed to be the best on the block.

"You've got to have hamburgers ... period," he said. "Mmm ... 8-10 ounces; it's got to be too big for the bun. You also have to have barbecue sauce and all the trimmings, too."

Even if meat isn't on your menu, barbecuing can still be a hoopla this holiday.

UI junior Rachel Perry, who is a vegetarian, said her family grills meat alternatives such as soy burgers.

"You can tell the difference, but it's really good," she said. "You have to have watermelon, though. Spitting out the seeds is a genuine all-American tradition."

"You've got to have hamburgers ... period."

Larry Pilkington, on what it takes for the perfect barbecue

Besides the buffets of food that barbecues are known for, grilling out can offer the opportunity to catch up with relatives and friends, Foreman said.

"I like barbecuing for the whole atmosphere," he said. "Good food, hanging out, talking, seeing people you haven't seen for a while is good."

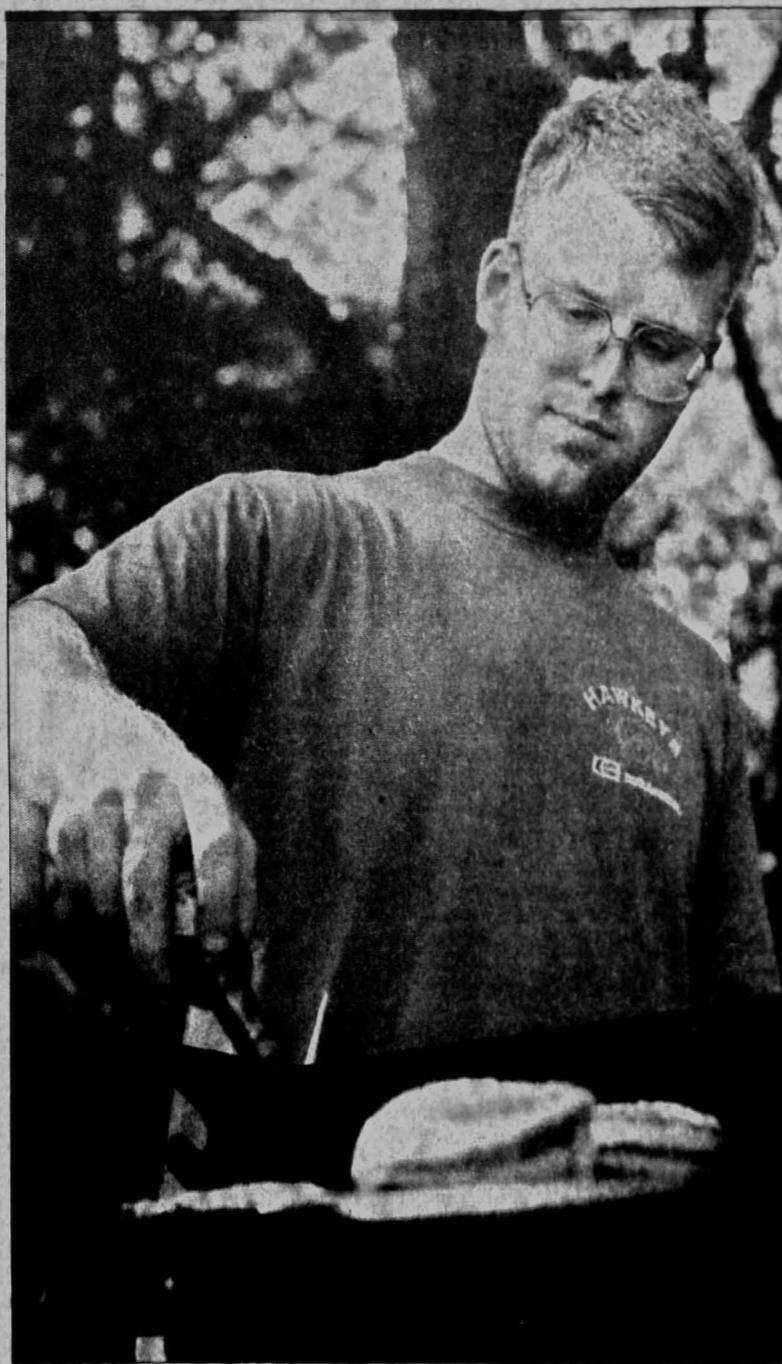

Veterans to barbecuing use this atmosphere to make the occasion more enjoyable.

"It's a big social event," Pilkington said. "We do the standard stuff; it's tradition."

Those in search of the perfect place to prepare food and party this Independence Day may have some problems, as public parks get crowded fast, said Randy Haas, supervisory park ranger at the Coralville Lake & Dam.

"It's extremely crowded," he said. "(Shelters) are open on a first-come, first-serve basis. People are welcome to bring out their own grills."

Even if you decide to beat the crowds by barbecuing in your own back yard, safety should be a first, Haas said.

Bug repellents are flying off shelves of local businesses as students are growing increasingly annoyed, as heavy rains the summer and a recent spell have brought on a monsoon.

Mosquitoes have hit this year than usual, but weather has them swarming in recent weeks, said Lewis, an entomologist at State University.

"Mosquitoes were slow the season because it was Lewis said. "Then it was and they were able to rapidly because of the water. There's a very large monsoon in wet weather."

Alex Sheyko, a store manager at Jack's Discount Store, Riverside Drive, said repellent products have increased in sales recently at his store.

"Considering the current season, we seem to be more," Sheyko said.

"We've been selling OFF and other products to repellents. Definitely, sales have been stronger."

Lewis said the only good repellent bites are to stay in repellent.

"Depending on the 50 mph Iowa, they are most active hour surrounding sunset," said. "Some people are more sensitive to mosquitoes because of different chemical makeup their metabolisms."

"Eliminating standing water in your back yard won't help mosquitoes travel such long distances to feed — about 10 miles. Citronella candles provide very localized repellent. Zapper lights are totally wasteful because they kill harmful beneficial bugs."

They may be the most stolen signs in Iowa City, but since the end of the Cold War, the purpose of the "nuclear-free zone" signs posted on all major streets leading to the city is unclear to most people.

"It's close to the stupidest thing I've ever heard of," Iowa City Councilor Dean Thornberry said. "A nuclear-free zone in an age of nuclear medicine in a university town... what is that all about? It's just ridiculous!"

UI freshman Teri Pomrehn said she likes the signs, even if they're looked at as a joke.

"I think they're pretty cool," she said. "I tried to take one once, but it was too high off the ground."

The signs resulted from a 1985 city ordinance that prohibited the production and use of nuclear weapons or parts within city limits. Iowa City was the 101st city in the United States to declare itself "nuclear free" when the city council passed the ordinance.

The signs are not required by the ordinance, but were seen as necessary to ensure people caught with nuclear weapons within city limits could not claim ignorance of the policy.

"I don't know too many residents that harbor nuclear weapons, so I really don't see a purpose," Thornberry said.

The design for the signs came from the Baltimore-based group Nuclear Free America, which distributed pamphlets in Iowa City during the early 1980s supporting nuclear-free zones.

Because research at the UI was Signs saying "Nuclear Weapon Free Zone" are at every entrance to Iowa City. Although the ordinance affects the rest of the city, the UI is exempt.

exempted from Iowa City's stipulation, the city council's decision was a symbolic act at best, said one local reverend.

"I felt that the nuclear arms race was out of control," said ordinance proponent Rev. Robert Welsh. "It was certainly a valid expression of concern."

Welsh, who was a pastor at First Christian Church, 217 Iowa Ave., at the time, expressed his support of the ordinance to the city council before it passed. He said he would do the same thing again.

"It was mainly of symbolic value, but if every place would have adopted such an ordinance things would have been different," he said.

Welsh said he thinks the policy still is a nice reflection on the city.

"I just read a story in the paper about the Russian-American walk and it said that the Russians who came to Iowa City were very happy to see those signs," he said.

Iowa City resident James Balmer was opposed to the ordinance when it passed in 1985, and still is.

"I felt it was totally unnecessary, just another thing on the books without any validity or purpose," Balmer said. "For most people, it was just a symbolic measure, nothing that would have any influence on the arms race but something that was politically correct at the time."

Balmer was also concerned the policy could harm the Iowa City business community.

"The law could easily be interpreted in a way that would eliminate legitimate business," he said.

For many at the UI, however, the ordinance does not pose a problem. Physics Professor James Van Allen said, while he was not aware of the UI's exemption from the ordinance, it is irrelevant because the UI doesn't do nuclear testing.

"I think it's a non-problem," he said. "We're not building any bombs here. To my knowledge there have never been such activities at this university."

"We work in nuclear physics and some of our people are knowledgeable about atomic bombs but we don't build or develop them here."

Rains leave residents bugged by mosquitos

Kevin Ho
The Daily Iowan

Bug repellents are flying off the shelves of local businesses and UI students are growing increasingly annoyed, as heavy rains early in the summer and a recent warm spell have brought on a mosquito monsoon.

Mosquitoes have hit town later this year than usual, but the wet weather has them swarming Iowa in recent weeks, said Donald Lewis, an entomologist at Iowa State University.

"Mosquitoes were slow early in the season because it was cool," Lewis said. "Then it warmed up and they were able to develop rapidly because of the standing water. There's a very large population in wet weather."

Alex Sheyko, a store manager at Jack's Discount Store, 1101 S. Riverside Drive, said mosquito repellent products have increased in sales recently at his store.

"Considering the current mosquito season, we seem to be selling more," Sheyko said.

"We've been selling OFF candles and other products to repel mosquitoes. Definitely, sales have been stronger."

Lewis said the only good way to avoid bites are to stay inside and wear repellent.

"Depending on the 50 species in Iowa, they are most active in the hour surrounding sundown," he said. "Some people are more attractive to mosquitoes because of their different chemical make-ups of their metabolisms."

"Eliminating standing water in your back yard won't help because mosquitoes travel such long distances to feed — about one to five miles. Citronella candles only provide very localized repellency. Bug zapper lights are totally worthless and potentially ecologically harmful because they kill harmless and beneficial bugs."

Lewis also said "mosquito plants" and eating certain foods haven't been proven to repel mosquitoes either.

Shakir Seals, an Iowa City resident and UI summer camper, said he has noticed an increase in the mosquito population and is annoyed by the pesky bugs.

"Earlier in the summer there were a lot of mosquitoes," he said. "Now that it hasn't rained, they've disappeared. They're still around, but now it's just in the evenings."

"They suck — I have bites all over. But I don't use repellent — just my hands to swat them."

Besides annoying itchiness, mosquito bites also bring a risk of disease. However, Epidemiologist Russell Currier said the chance of contracting encephalitis, a disease commonly thought to be spread by mosquitoes, has yet to be determined.

"It's a little too soon to determine the risk," he said. "We're trying to determine that — it's a bit nebulous now."

"We've placed test chickens around that state and they will tell us more later."

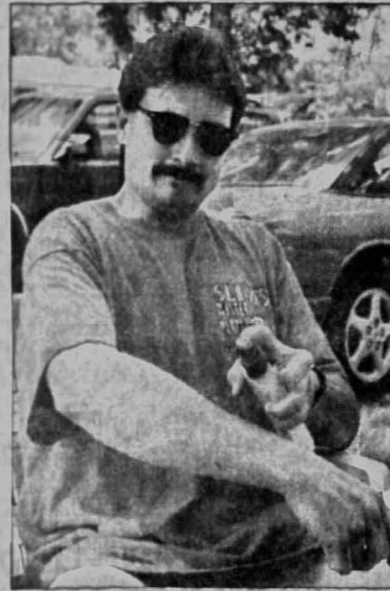

Currier said the chance of contracting a disease is probably low, but people should beware of the risks anyway.

"I think we should be more concerned this year because of last year's viral activity," he said. "The risk of transmission is about 1/100. I just think people should mosquito protect their homes and protect themselves."

Currier recommended repellents with low levels of deet, and said dog owners should be on guard for heartworms in their dogs, as mosquitoes can transmit that virus, as well.

UI junior Amy Caveney shares Seals' disdain for the mosquito population, and is aware of their disease-spreading potential.

"I do hate them," she said. "They're a distraction, but I don't use repellent because it smells bad.

Amy Brant/The Daily Iowan

Mosquitos won't bother Todd Townsend after a liberal application of insect repellent. Bug spray is an important part of summer outdoor activities at City Park.

When I have perfume on they bite, so I don't wear perfume at night."

Lewis said as long as it rains there will be mosquitoes to contend with — probably until late summer.

"It may take two weeks for a drop-off because of the nearly constant overlapping production of mosquitoes, as long as there is water around."

Naked Hollywood

■ “Striptease,” like other recent popular movies, is about the racy topic of exotic dancing. But those who complain about the lack of family values and quality roles for women in movies need to look at the big picture.

Movie critics have panned Demi Moore's new motion picture “Striptease.” Social critics have also stirred controversy because Moore received the largest paycheck ever for an actress ($12.5 million) to star as an exotic dancer. Regardless if “Striptease” is a well-done movie (although the reviews suggest the contrary), it raises some interesting questions about the often rocky relationship between Hollywood and the movie-going public.

To say that “Striptease” proves there are no strong, feminine roles in Hollywood is hardly an original or profound thought. Everyone knows the silicone-enhanced Moore makes more money than, say, Stockard Channing.

In a perfect world, it would not be this way. However, the movie industry comes down to a matter of money, and for better or worse, the adage “sex sells” remains true. Under our capitalistic economy, if adults want to pay money to see movies that are explicitly sexual, they should be able to do so. For anyone, especially the government, to deny them the opportunity to view these films would be un-American.

The criticism about the lack of strong, feminine roles is similar to complaints about excessive violence or lack of family values. If people really believe these criticisms are valid, why don't they better support the few quality films that are made? Wonderful pro-family movies with strong feminine roles, such as “A Little Princess” and “Unstrung Heroes,” bomb at the box office. To paraphrase Shakespeare, “The fault, dear Brutus, lies not within the (movie) stars, but within ourselves.”

It is the actor's personal choice to do a nude scene. If Moore takes a role as a stripper, that is her prerogative. She apparently has no problem with nudity. When an interviewer asked her how she explained her racy role to her children, she interestingly responded they would not be shocked because she normally walks around her house in the nude. She encouraged all women, if they feel comfortable, to try exotic dancing in the privacy of their own home. Again, it comes down to a matter of personal choice.

The fact that recent movies such as “Showgirls” and “Striptease” have come up short as quality films does not mean exotic dancing cannot be the subject of a good movie. Atom Egoyan's “Exotica,” released in 1994, is an artfully well-done movie dealing with this subject.

Issues involving exotic dancing, or any form of what some people find offensive, are often much more complex than people are willing to admit. An episode of the British TV series “Absolutely Fabulous” depicts the two main women perusing a hard-core pornographic magazine while one of the women's prudish daughter vents her disgust.

“I don't see how you can say it is degrading to women,” Patsy, the older woman replies, pointing to a picture in the magazine. “She's the one holding the whip.”

There is truth in all humor.

Change in the church

■ The Dubuque priest who was arrested for allegedly molesting children reflects the need for the Catholic Church to change the celibacy law.

The recent arrest of a Catholic priest in Dubuque for allegedly molesting six young boys is a shameful reminder to all Iowans that the church needs to make policy changes in regards to celibacy. The severity of this problem proves the archaic canon law of the Catholic Church is dated and needs to adapt to a continually changing society. With over 800 priests in the past decade removed from active duty in the United States because of child molestation lawsuits, the church needs to see the numbers and start working to protect children.

Celibacy was not enforced until the 11th century by Pope Gregory VII, primarily to keep priests' families from inheriting church property. Celibacy also conferred authority on the clergy and perpetuated and consolidated the pope's authority. Pope John Paul II is now afraid of relinquishing this control factor because it could mean other issues related to church tradition would fall victim to societal change, such as allowing females to become priests and tolerance for abortion and contraception.

Neither celibacy nor any of these other issues were laws formed from scripture. They were made by the early fathers of Catholicism. The friction began when these archaic ideas of the Catholic Church didn't fit the mold of a quickly changing society.

Since the 1960s, there has been a 26 percent decrease in the number of priests. According to Spin magazine, a poll of U.S. clergy shows more than 1,000 U.S. priests resign each year, most to get married. Of ex-priests, there are over 20 percent now married, and many say if the celibacy law was lifted, they would return to the church. The celibacy rule is causing quality priests to leave the priesthood.

The church enforces celibacy, but then financially protects priests charged with pedophilia. Child molestation lawsuits in the United States alone have cost the church over $400 million, protecting the priests from both public shame and jail time. The money could have been better spent on curbing these crimes by trying to get the celibacy law changed.

It is impossible to know how many children have been molested by priests in the United States. However, victim help groups such as SNAP and Link-Up, with over 6,000 members, give a partial estimate of how many victims are still suffering from abuse.

Priests are admired by parishes for having a spiritual connection with God. Sexual abuse destroys the faith of the people and, worst of all, the children being abused. With an increased attention to the numerous lawsuits against priests committing sex crimes, there is speculation of a change in the celibacy law after the death of Pope John Paul II, say Vatican insiders.

The Catholic Church used celibacy to solve problems in the 11th century that are no longer considered a problem today. Children are being abused because of church laws protected out of respect for a tradition that is over nine centuries old. A change in the celibacy law would protect the children and the faith.

Ah, life — A story for all times

Our miraculous, mysterious planet. After 5 billion birthdays alone in outer space, Earth is alive and growing. How?

The scientific creation myth tells one story: Earth was born of a gaseous, dusty cloud about 5,000 million years ago in the crowded depths of space (at least 10,000 million other galaxies witnessed trillions of similar planetary births at about the same time).

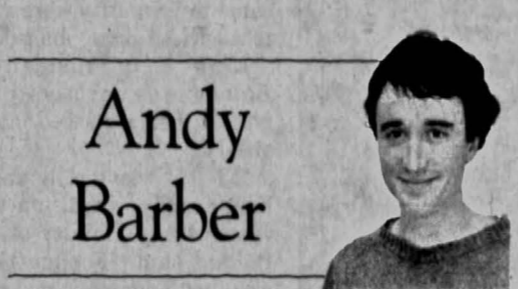

But back to Earth: The gas and dust drew together and formed a ballish, melted rock. Without ozone, which formed later from the respiration of living organisms, the planet was unprotected from space, much like the moon today. So Earth cooled rapidly, until water condensed in the atmosphere and torrential rains fell to cover the planet.

Eucaryotes made good bedfellows on Earth. With the rat race so far off, life just idled for a long, long, while in the warm, shallow seas.

Then, around Earth's 1 billionth birthday, our planet received its first birthday present: a pet.

First life was the prokaryote, a simple organism lacking a cell nucleus. Prokaryotes multiplied in those tranquil seas for about two billion years. They built the ozone layer in the process, crucial to all later life. This event spelled the doom for their head-without-a-brain kind; however: oxygen, to them, was toxic.

So at 2½ billion years, Earth flushed the toilet on prokaryotes — only to receive another phenomenal gift: eucaryotes. Life would now have a nucleus, or a place to store genetic treasures and oversee the formalities common to all present life such as food gathering, respiration, waste removal, sensitivity to the environment and reproduction.

Eucaryotes made good bedfellows on Earth. With the rat race so far off, life just idled for a long, long while in the warm, shallow seas.

Earth, in the meantime, changed. The top layer of rock was now cool, forming rigid plates that cracked, shifted and heaved upward. This exposed rock later weathered to add a little dirt to Earth's past.

Finally, just 550 million years ago, an improvement in biochemical communications between genes allowed unprecedented complexity. Although the fundamental bits of genetic code would never evolve beyond those first sea dwellers, the biological big bang erupted.

About 35 different body plans suddenly appeared, accounting for all the major phyla, or groups, of life today; most of the millions of different creatures now swimming, flopping, flying, rolling and running over Earth look to this period of ancient history for their identity.

Just ask the fossil of Yunnanozoon lividum, an entrepreneur of body designs that 500 million years ago developed a backbone in the spineless world of those early seas. Yunnanozoon is the oldest known ancestor of the vertebrate branch of the animal kingdom — and it even had a heart.

Soon after Yunnanozoon, the first conquistadors of land would climb out of the sea and sunbathe on Pangaea, the great supercontinent that later split to form the seven continents we inhabit today. About 400 million different species evolved over the next several hundred million years.

Sudden, mass extinctions then occurred as Earth underwent climactic change. Evolution, from here on out, gets pretty hairy.

Warm-blooded mammals dominate Earth's recent past. Early mammals evolved 70 million years ago and human look-alikes arose several million years ago. The pop star of this period, Homo sapiens, now numbers 5 billion with the population doubling every 50 years.

In all, 4 or 5 million different species now inhabit Earth. Humans share with these myriad creatures the same basic genetic codes, enzymes and elements — all derived from the crust and atmosphere of primordial Earth — as well as a common heritage on our gloriously green planet. Viva vida!

The Iowans are coming! Some Fourth history

Just days away from July Fourth, the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, thoughts turn to backyard barbecues, parades and fireworks. Few pause to remember that 220 years ago a tall, redheaded Virginian was locked away in his boarding-house room trying to draft a declaration by his July 4 deadline.

Fewer still realize thousands of Iowans were sacrificing on this day more than 130 years ago, trying to keep up with the grueling pace of history.

When the American Civil War sizzled to life in 1861, thousands of Iowans enlisted in the Union army.

Iowa's statehood was less than 20 years old. Despite this, or perhaps because of it, Iowans responded to the national crisis like no other state. Iowa supplied more soldiers to the Union during the Civil War than any other state per capita.

Iowa's statehood was less than 20 years old. Despite this, or perhaps because of it, Iowans responded to the national crisis like no other state.

Iowans served under Maj. Gen. Ulysses Grant in the spring of 1863, when he moved south against the Confederate stronghold of Vicksburg, Miss.

But it was in their first battle together in November 1861 that Grant led his new volunteers, as green as the fields they'd left behind them that summer, to Belmont, Mo.

There the 7th Iowa Regiment saw their first real combat in the face of a Rebel charge. Witnesses said Iowans “swung back like the opening of a double gate” in response to the deadly fire. But they quickly reformed, counterattacked and won their first engagement.

From Belmont, Grant moved further south in his effort to open the Mississippi River to Union traffic. In February 1862, the men of the 12th Iowa Regiment marched in circles at night to keep from freezing in the days before Grant's victory at Fort Donelson, Tenn. When Fort Donelson fell on Feb. 15, the 2nd Iowa Regiment led the final and successful attack.

At first dawn on April 6, Grant's army was suddenly attacked at Shiloh Church, Tenn. An Iowa soldier said the storm of bullets looked like a swarm of buzzing insects. Thousands of Federal troops broke and ran to cower on the banks of the Tennessee River.

In its first fight, the 6th Iowa Regiment tried to hold its ground, despite the dangerous orders of a drunk colonel. The officer was arrested, and after sobering up, later took up a rifle and joined the fight. That night, as the regiment slept on the field of battle, the concussion from the cannons behind them was strong enough to make their ears and noses bleed.

And so it went, the soldiers and their commanding officer gaining experience with each success.

Grant spent the first months of 1863 moving his army south over nonexistent roads deep in enemy territory in the first stages of an attack on Vicksburg.

The going was slow, but by May 19, Grant was able to encircle Vicksburg and dig in for a long standoff. But as the siege dragged on, spring weather gave way to the wilting heat of a Mississippi summer.

Finally, around 10 a.m. on the morning of July 3, a white flag appeared in the Confederate trenches.

Commanding Confederate Gen. John Pemberton was a Pennsylvanian by birth. When the war broke out, the West Point graduate decided to fight with the South he had adopted. “I know my people,” Pemberton said of the Northerners, expecting fair terms of surrender on Independence Day. Grant delivered.

Rather than be transported to a Northern prison, Pemberton's 31,600 men were paroled; they were made ineligible for service until they were exchanged for an equal number of Union prisoners.

To the chagrin of Confederate commanders, and as Grant expected, the soldiers simply went home, and tens of thousands of men disappeared into the delta like an army of weevils into a field of cotton.

In a footnote battle five days later, federal troops under Grant's command took Port Hudson, La., and finally snapped the spine of the Confederacy by opening the entire Mississippi River to Union control. As President Abraham Lincoln wrote, “the Father of Waters runs unvexed to the sea.”

The brilliance of Grant's Vicksburg campaign is recognized by history. But not surprisingly, the Independence Day victory has been overshadowed by a better known (yet less decisive) battle hundreds of miles away on the same day, in a little Pennsylvania town called Gettysburg.

MOSCOW — After missed meetings at campaign appearances, Boris Yeltsin addressed the first time in a week as Russian officials try to calm concerns about the health.

Yeltsin urged Russia to choose freedom — in Wednesday's runoff between Communist challenger Zyuganov. Monday was the day of campaigning vote.

“We have one future, one path to a tired but firm-speech said in a televised address for the new Russian. We will win!”

“You will vote for Yeltsin or Zyuganov. For yourself, your future or your children.”

Yeltsin's campaign marred in the last revival of old worries for a second term.

Despite a schedule before the voting June 16, he visited the country, waded through mud and visited mines and danced at rock concerts.

By a week ago, Yeltsin canceled a short journey, and sent Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin for the G-7 summit.

Yeltsin dispels rumors of poor health

Sergei Shargorodsky
Associated Press

MOSCOW — After a series of missed meetings and no-show campaign appearances, a weary Boris Yeltsin addressed voters for the first time in a week Monday as Russian officials tried to dispel concerns about the president's health.

Yeltsin urged Russians to choose freedom — not Communism — in Wednesday's presidential runoff between himself and Communist challenger Gennady Zyuganov. Monday was the last day of campaigning before the vote.

"We have one Russia, one future, one path to normal life," a tired but firm-speaking Yeltsin said in a televised appeal. "Vote for the new Russia! Only together we shall win!"

"You will vote not only for Yeltsin or Zyuganov. You will vote for yourself, your family, the future of your children."

Yeltsin's campaign has been marred in the last week by a revival of old worries about his fitness for a second term.

Despite a history of heart trouble, the 65-year-old Yeltsin managed to keep up a busy campaign schedule before the first round of voting June 16. He jetted around the country, waded into crowds, visited mines and factories, danced at rock concerts.

But a week ago, Yeltsin abruptly canceled a short campaign journey, and sent Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin to France for the G-7 summit. The president missed a meeting with farmers on Friday, a festival in Moscow on Sunday and a meeting Monday with the presidents of Ukraine and Moldova.

He did tape his televised appeal Monday, according to officials, and held meetings at his country residence with Chernomyrdin and the national security adviser, Alexander Lebed. Russian TV reports showed a slightly pale Yeltsin discussing staff." Yeltsin's lack of visible activity following a whirlwind campaign has sent tremors through Russia's fragile stock market, but its impact on his re-election chances remained unclear.

Russia's major networks and newspapers, solidly pro-Yeltsin, have largely ignored or dismissed new speculation about his health. Many voters across the country are likely unaware of it altogether.

silent? "I don't think he should hide and talk only to his aides, especially at such a time," he said.

The 52-year-old Communist Party leader also met with foreign diplomats who are concerned about his possible victory and insisted his positions were often distorted.

And the attacks on Yeltsin just kept on coming.

"You'll choose not only between Yeltsin and Zyuganov," the Communist leader said in broadcast spots Monday, mocking the president, "but between a powerful and strong Russia and (Yeltsin's) colonial administration."

Zyuganov has capitalized on widespread discontent with Yeltsin's painful economic reforms, the Soviet collapse, the war in Chechnya and rampant crime and corruption. Much of his campaign also has focused on Yeltsin's erratic behavior and reported fondness for drink.

That helped Zyuganov gain a solid lead in the early stage of the race before Yeltsin bounced back with a buoyant campaign that portrayed an alert, vibrant president.

All polls now indicate Yeltsin will overtake Zyuganov on Wednesday, but the president's campaign managers still fear a low turnout against loyal Communist voters will benefit Zyuganov.

"You can't stay home on July 3rd," Yeltsin said Monday. "If you don't vote, you're also making a choice. But that choice is against Russia."

"You will vote not only for Yeltsin or Zyuganov. You will vote for yourself, your family, the future of your children."

elections with the premier.

"Elections are the main thing now," Yeltsin said. "The decisive moment is coming for all of us."

Chernomyrdin, who would take over should the president be incapacitated, said Yeltsin was recovering from a cold. Aides have insisted the president merely lost his voice after giving too many interviews.

Asked at a news conference if Yeltsin suffered another bout of the heart ailment that landed him in hospital twice last year, Chernomyrdin laughed.

"When we met he shook my hand so strongly all doubts disappeared," he said.

Moscow Mayor Yuri Luzhkov, a Yeltsin ally, said the president was "in working condition and holding meetings of his election er. Still, campaign manager Sergei Filatov said advisers "must have made a mistake by not telling the president to appear in public and at least wave his hand to the people to exclude rumors about his illness."

Zyuganov, who trails in the polls, has seized on the health issue, up to the point of inviting journalists to a disco dance and a volleyball game last week.

He has suggested Yeltsin might be indulging his supposed weakness for alcohol — and on Monday demanded a published medical review of Yeltsin's health.

"For the fourth day we haven't seen Boris Nikolayevich Yeltsin," he said before Yeltsin's television appearance. "Why are they isolating him, why are they all keeping

GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS

'Viper Militia' charged with bombing plots

Luna Shyr
Associated Press

PHOENIX — Twelve members of an anti-government group that called itself the "Viper Militia" were arrested Monday and charged with plotting for more than two years to blow up government buildings.

Members of the Arizona group held training exercises in the desert in which they made and detonated ammonium nitrate bombs and rockets, according to a seven-count indictment unsealed Monday in Phoenix.

At a news conference in Washington, Attorney General Janet Reno said the men plotted to use explosives to destroy buildings housing the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the FBI, the Internal Revenue Service, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Secret Service, the Phoenix Police Department and the Arizona National Guard.

All 12 were arrested Monday by agents who then spent much of the day exercising search warrants. An ATF bomb squad evacuated about six homes near the house of one of the suspects while they removed explosive material in special containers Monday evening, the agency said.

A May 1994 videotape made by the group features a member discussing security measures, communications equipment and other features of the targeted buildings, according to the grand jury indictment.

"The voiceover on the videotape gives advice on how to actually collapse the buildings," said U.S. Attorney Janet Napolitano.

The narrator also advises "anti-personnel devices" could be put in mailboxes near the entrance of a building housing the ATF, the FBI and other federal offices, and notes that destroying a water main near the building could hamper firefighters if the building were burning.

The tape also shows the outside of the building housing the IRS while the narrator discusses the shift change schedule of building security guards and other security measures.

Showing the headquarters of the Phoenix Police Department, the tape narrator says it would be difficult to take over but that "it would be a 'major political statement' if it were taken over" and the records and equipment inside "would be invaluable."

Much of the information in the indictment came from an unidentified state police officer who infiltrated the militia as part of a six-month federal-state investigation, according to ATF agent Jose Wall.

The indictment says the group began practicing with the bombs on Nov. 11 in remote parts of the state. The group blew up several devices, creating a crater 6 feet wide and 3 feet deep, and fired an unarmed rifle grenade about 100 feet.

At a Jan. 18 meeting, one member of the group described a rocket he was designing to be fired from a rifle with a range of 550 yards and the ability to "take out a police car," the indictment said.

APRIL 16 FIRE

White teen-agers arrested for black church burning

Associated Press

CHESTERFIELD, Va. — Three white teen-agers were arrested for an April 16 fire that destroyed a black church.

Investigators have no evidence the fire was racially motivated or linked to any other arson, said Bill Dunham, agent in charge of the Richmond office of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

Suspicious fires have hit more than 40 black churches in the South in the past 18 months.

Arson early Sunday scorched a black church near Maysville, N.C. Investigators found remains of Molotov cocktails made of beer bottles and gasoline in the rural St. James AME Zion Church.

A small fire also was set Sunday at a black church under construction in Greenville, Miss., but police suspected juvenile vandalism, not a racial motive.

In Virginia, two men and a 16-year-old girl were arrested over the weekend in the April fire at the First Baptist Church of Centralia's auxiliary building.

Leigh Tatum Odum, 18, of Richmond and Adam T. Sapp, 19, of Midlothian were charged with malicious burning of an unoccupied church and were jailed on $25,000 bail. The 16-year-old was held as a juvenile. Her name was withheld because of her age.

The fire in a rural area 20 miles south of Richmond was not listed among the suspicious church fires the ATF was investigating, apparently because the building had not been regularly used for worship since 1962. That year, the congregation moved to a larger site a few miles away.

establishments are already seeing business fluctuate as smokers migrate toward places where they are welcome.

After the Hamburg Inn, 214 N. Linn St., burned down in 1994, it reopened as a nonsmoking restaurant, bringing different reactions.

"We experienced mixed reactions. The regulars that smoked didn't like it. Other customers, especially the nonsmokers, were more than happy about it," said Lisa Eggers, Hamburg Inn manager. "Our nonsmoking section was previously so small that it was a joke."

Lia Steele, assistant professor of English at Kirkwood Community College and a pack-a-day smoker, said she has quit going to the Hamburg and JC's Cafe, 1910 S. Gilbert St., since they have become nonsmoking and has switched to the Midtown Family Restaurant, 630 Iowa Ave.

"I normally go to The Tobacco Bowl or Ground Zero Coffeehouse for coffee and a cigarette when the weather isn't warm enough to sit outside of the Java House," Steele said.

Some Iowa City residents feel an ordinance like the one in Mesa wouldn't be too disturbing, but some inconsistencies would exist.

Iowa City resident Rick Webber said at first this type of legislation would be an imposition, but in the long run it could help because he is trying to kick the habit.

"It's hypocritical in a way because it was the government who initially got us started and now there are additives to keep us addicted," Webber said. "The best solution would be to outlaw tobacco in general. The greed factor is what needs to be addressed."

UI senior Aaron Eads said smoking bothers him, but the legislation still seems too extreme.

"Five years ago I wouldn't have thought anything of someone smoking near me, but now with the trend toward more nonsmoking establishments, I'm more sensitive to it," Eads said. "At the same time, it should be up to the owner of a business to decide, just as it is the consumer's choice if they want to be there."

"There's a huge difference between Bob Dole and Bill Clinton," Bonte said. "Clinton is more forward-looking and charismatic."

But Dole is not out of the race for young people's votes because they think he's out of touch, Frick said.

"Can you be excited by a 70-year-old man running for president?" Frick asked. "By all means."

Just as important to young voters is their ability to relate to Clinton's personal history, Barber said.

"He's from a broken home, but he made his way to Georgetown, he made his way to Yale," Barber said. "When you're 18, you still have dreams and think you can make it, but after a few years, you know it's not that easy. It really impresses people trying to make it that Clinton made his own way."

As University Democrats prepare for a cutthroat race, Barber hopes Clinton's campaign success will invigorate young Democrats who grew up in a Republican-dominated era.

"During our generation's whole childhood, Ronald Reagan was president. And people had such a negative view of Jimmy Carter; if your parents supported him, they were in the minority," Barber said.

"To now have such an extremely charismatic Democrat like Clinton — it's exciting to get caught up in it."

Alberhasky said his store's main strengths are specialty items — such as an expanded selection of beer and wine — and the expertise store employees provide. Alberhasky also cited the store's close proximity to campus.

"There's no running in' for things in those markets," he said. "You can do 100 laps around our store before you could get to the milk in a Hy-Vee."

Robynn Hergert, marketing director for the New Pioneer Co-Op, 22 S. Van Buren St., said New Pioneer's selection of organic and natural foods keep the co-op in strong competition with larger area supermarkets.

"We get heavy competition from all stores in the area," Hergert said, "but we provide a different twist on things."

Both Hergert and Alberhasky said their businesses are dependent on students and other customers without cars.

"We probably get 30 percent of our business from walking or biking customers," Hergert said, "which isn't the case with the outlying stores."

With the number and size of grocery stores in the Iowa City area increasing, one would think the market would become saturated. But, according to a 1993 USDA study, Iowa City has the most concentrated urban retail grocery market in the United States.

The study shows Iowa City's grocery stores controlled 90.6 percent of food sales in this area. This has remained fairly constant for the past 10 years, which has prompted the expansion of the two Hy-Vees.

Al Dix, store manager at the Hy-Vee located at 501 Hollywood Blvd., said the store being built as a replacement for his store will double its size. And the Hy-Vee slated to be built at the corner of First and Muscatine avenues will be 2.5 times as large as the Hy-Vee currently located at the corner of First and Rochester avenues.

"If the market wasn't there, we wouldn't be spending the money," Dix said.

Travolta journeys into unknown

John Schofer
The Daily Iowan

Long ago, the northern Europeans told tales of a hapless hero who one day left the peaceful village and ventured forth into the dark woods.

There he spotted a magnificent deer that he followed into the deeper unknown, where he encountered magic and monsters, experiencing an incredible adventure.

George Malley (John Travolta) experiments with his newfound powers in "Phenomenon," which will open Wednesday at the Englert Theatre.

On his return to the village he shared his story with his friends, and through his wanderings, both he and his friends became enriched by the mystery of life and the unknown.

It is a classic tale, a model that has lasted centuries and is unbound by time, culture or medium. And it has surfaced again in the movie "Phenomenon."

John Travolta ("Pulp Fiction")

the lives of an old country doctor, played with gusto by Robert Duvall ("Wrestling Ernest Hemingway"); Nate Hope (Forest Whitaker of "Species"), a lonely dreamer with a short-wave band radio broadcasting to (he hopes) Diana Ross; and Lace, played with cool strength by Kyra Sedgwick ("Singles") as a divorced mother eking out a living making hand-carved wicker chairs.

Together they try to understand the strange transformation of Malley. No one is quite certain whether he has miraculous powers that are heaven sent or alien sent, or whether he is evolving into a threat.

As his powers increase, Malley comes to realize the townsfolk around him study him dubiously (as do the requisite government agents and scientists). He comes to realize his newfound gifts are both a blessing and a curse. He is that mythical hero who has ventured into the unknown, the mystery beyond the capability of science to explain, bringing back a message which has the potential for profound change.

And like all such messages, it is greeted with skepticism. For while things may be clear to Malley, the community is still normal, still slow to comprehend.

"Phenomenon" is a beautiful, low-key film. It delivers its message not packaged in flashy special effects or overwrought melodrama. Instead, it chooses the metaphor of the hero's journey into the unknown.

However, this subtly is also a drawback. "Phenomenon" seems like a movie afraid of itself. Writer Gerald DiPigo and director Jon Turteltaub ("While You Were Sleeping") seem wary of stepping too far out on a limb. They play it safe, leaving a few gaps in logic and plot.

Still, these are minor holes in an otherwise beautifully woven story: a story that reaches back across the centuries to tap the

And the message is clear; the path through the dark woods has been charted. It is the call for the viewer to step beyond what is known and to experience and embrace the phenomenon of the mind's potential.

Gore calls for more educational programming on children's TV

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Vice President Al Gore, denouncing shows such as the "Mighty Morphin Power Rangers," told entertainment executives they need to produce better children's television.

"Shows like the 'Mighty Morphin Power Rangers' are just not good for children," Gore said. "Anybody who's seen young children after watching the show go around kicking each other and kicking each other understands why."

Addressing 500 entertainment professionals Sunday, Gore repeated President Clinton's support for requiring the television networks to air three hours a week of educational children's programming.

"If we give our kids potato chips and hot fudge sundaes every morning, pretty soon they'll think that's what breakfast is," he said.

"If we give our children nothing but mayhem and commercialism, then the 'Power Rangers' and 'Barbie's Dream House' will be what they think television is — violence and commercialism."

But Gore brought the criticism straight to the entertainment industry at the Variety ShowBiz Expo.

Gore's comments stood in contrast to those of Sen. Bob Dole, President Clinton's likely GOP opponent this fall. Dole supports industry self-regulation rather than a government-mandated three hours of children's educational TV.

OLYMPICS

Dream Team III guarantees the gold medal

Chris Sheridan
Associated Press

CHICAGO — The best basketball team in the world assembled on the court for the first time Monday, and scoffed at the competition.

"If I told you we weren't guaranteeing a gold medal, I'd be lying to you," Karl Malone said after the U.S. Olympic men's basketball team had its first practice. "That's the only reason we're here.

"Go to anybody in this room, and they're going to say we'll win the gold medal. Anything else and I don't think we'll be welcome in our own country."

So much for humility, but nothing else would be expected from a team that's an absolute lock to win the gold medal game on Aug. 3.

An upset would be front-page news around the globe, and no one on the U.S. team is even thinking that such a career-defining calamity could be possible.

"Obviously I think we're going to win the gold medal, if I said we guarantee it — that's irrelevant," Charles Barkley said. "If you want to write guarantee, go ahead.

"It's the Olympics, man, and just because you're rich and famous like we all are doesn't mean we don't have great pride in our country. We want to prove that we're the best basketball-playing country in the world."

Did any team strike him as worthy competition, Barkley was asked. "The women's national team, that's about it," he said.

Inevitably, the only comparison of greatness that will be made for Dream Team III will be against the 1992 Olympic team that won the gold medal in Barcelona.

Barkley and Malone are two of five returning members of the 1992 team. They are joined by David Robinson, John Stockton and Scottie Pippen.

Shaquille O'Neal, Reggie Miller, Gary Payton, Anfernee Hardaway, Grant Hill and Hakeem Olajuwon are first-time Olympians, and Mitch Richmond returns from the 1988 team of collegians that won a bronze medal.

Olympic rules were changed to allow professionals in 1992, and the original Dream Team won every game in Barcelona by an average of 43.8 points while scoring an Olympic record of 117 points per game.

Back then, Malone said the opposition could take their beatings quietly or suffer the consequences.

On Monday, he reiterated it. "We're not going to discriminate against anybody," he said. "If we have a chance to beat a team by 40 or 50, I promise you we'll try to do that."

"We've already talked about it, and we know 10 points won't do it. It's got to be a bigger double-digit thing."

Aside from pondering the relative merits of beating Argentina by 30 or 50, the Dream Teamers talked Monday about free agency, trades and league gossip.

An eight-day moratorium on signings, negotiations and trades took effect at 12 a.m., and business will be halted until July 9.

Among the free agents on the team, O'Neal was predictably coy about whether he'll re-sign with Orlando or leave for the Lakers; Reggie Miller said he'd consider playing for the Pacers, Knicks, Heat and Lakers; and Gary Payton hinted that the four teams likely to be bidding for his services are Seattle, New York, Miami and perhaps Houston.

"I'd like to be a lot of places, I'd even like to be here with the Bulls," Payton said. "But I've got four teams in mind that I'm going to really deal with. These teams have been coming at me pretty hard."

Payton's agent denied that any talks had already taken place, which would be a violation of the NBA's tampering rules.

"There has been no dialogue, formal or informal, with anyone whatsoever," agent Bill Duffy said.

Payton said Seattle will have a chance to match any offer, as long as the Sonics' first one isn't a low-ball offer.

WBA TITLE ON THE LINE

12-1 favorite Tyson prepares for July 13 fight

Tim Dahlberg
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Just like Bruce Seldon, Mike Tyson dreams about his fights. In his dreams, though, he always gets knocked out.

"That tells you that it's only a dream," said Tyson, who fights Seldon on July 13 for the WBA heavyweight title.

Tyson is not paying much attention to his dreams or those of Seldon as he prepares to fight for a portion of the heavyweight title for the second time since his release from prison.

In a conference call Monday, Tyson scoffed at Seldon's dreams of getting knocked down, then knocking Tyson down in their fight. In Seldon's dream, he wakes up as the bell rings to open the 12th round, not knowing who won.

"I can't imagine that happening," Tyson said. "I'm just here to win, and I'm looking to do well in this fight."

Tyson is a 12-1 favorite to beat Seldon, a little-known fighter who won his share of the heavyweight title April 8, 1995 when he stopped Tony Tucker for the crown that became vacant when the WBA stripped George Foreman of his title.

But he will not take a step closer to his goal of unifying the title because of legal obstacles and a deal promoter Don King made with Lennox Lewis to allow the fight to happen.

Under terms of the deal, Lewis got $4 million to step aside with a guarantee he will fight for the WBC title next. The WBC title Tyson won by stopping Frank Bruno on March 16 will not be on the line against Seldon, and Tyson is expected to give up the title after the fight.

"We have to relinquish the title if Lennox Lewis says he doesn't want to fight Tyson next after he beats Seldon," King said. "Lennox Lewis opted to take $4 million and run like a thief in the night."

Tyson said he is disappointed by having to give up the title, but hopes to eventually unify the three major titles.

"It will be tough for me because my purpose for coming out of prison was to unify the championship," Tyson said. "Now there's a possibility it might not be able to happen. We should be able to unify the title the right way."

Should Tyson beat Seldon, he is expected to fight in the fall, possibly against former heavyweight champion Evander Holyfield.

In the meantime, Lewis and the WBC's No. 1 ranked contender, Oliver McCall, will fight for that vacant title and newly crowned IBF champion Michael Moorer will defend against Francois Botha of South Africa.

come true.

The only reason Settles had to swallow a little pride was because he went into his decision full-steam ahead. He left no shadow of a possibility that he might come back. But a month later, he was left with no choice but to return.

I take that back. Settles' decision to return probably wasn't easy because of his almost legendary determination. When scouts and columnists kept saying Settles wasn't ready for the NBA, I'm sure he wanted to prove them all wrong. But rather than prove his worth by making the cuts and earning 10 to 15 minutes a game for whichever team drafted him in the second round, Settles will prove his worth at Carver-Hawkeye Arena.

Settles had a poor showing at the pre-draft camp in Chicago. What if he had an off-week or two during the pre-season and his pro team decided to let him go? Instead, Settles will work hard for months as a Hawkeye to prove to everybody that he is worthy of a first-round selection. Come 1997, he'll have assured himself a spot in the selection process.

Settles will have another thing going for him after he's waited a year — less competition. This year's draft was incredibly deep. When the Bulls selected power forward Jason Caffey with the 20th pick in 1995, people wondered why Chicago passed on power forwards like David Vaughn, Mario Bennett and Greg Ostertag. Where are they now?

But in 1996, forwards like Georgetown's Othella Harrington, Oklahoma's Ryan Minor and Washington State's Mark Hendrickson dropped to the second round. Maybe next year a player of Settles' caliber will be in greater need.

Whatever the case, Settles is not to blame or ridicule for any reason. Had he never mentioned the NBA, the only difference would be his unspoken curiosity; he would always wonder what might have happened if he decided to go to the NBA.

OK, two differences. Iowa fans wouldn't have realized how fortunate they were to have Settles around for one more year.

WIMBLEDON

wasn't in the happiest of moods despite the victory over the 15-year-old Hings, who beat her in the Italian Open this year. Graf will next meet No. 6 Jana Novotna, who lost to her in the 1993 Wimbledon final.

Conchita Martinez, the 1994 champion and No. 3 seed, stalked angrily around the court in utter frustration at the delays and sloppy play in her 5-7, 7-6 (7-5), 6-3 loss to Japan's Kimiko Date.

It was a soft and strange rain that fell most of the afternoon, stopping play at times on Centre Court but not on the adjacent Court 1, or vice versa. Similarly, the rain targeted some of the outside courts, then shifted to different ones, and the ground crews kept unrolling the tarpaulins and rolling them back up.

"I almost got run over by the tarp puller," said one of the tarp pullers who rushed on when the umpire suspended play in the middle of a point. "They just jumped out there. I think they should have at least let us finish the point."

Pierce went on to reach her first Wimbledon quarterfinal with a 6-2, 6-3 victory over Elena Likhovtseva.

Defending men's Pete Sampras never even had to show up as his match against Cedric Pioline, the third scheduled on Centre Court, was postponed to Tuesday. Three other men's matches also never started.

For British fans who endured the delays, the day ended happily with Tim Henman becoming the first British man to reach the Wimbledon quarters since Roger Taylor in 1973. Taylor went on to lose in the semifinals. The last British man to win Wimbledon was Fred Perry in 1936.

Henman, who upset French Open champion Yevgeny Kafelnikov in the first round, beat Magnus Gustafsson 7-6 (7-2), 6-4, 7-6 (7-4). Though only three sets, the match was interrupted so many times it took 4 1/2 hours to complete.

"He's a guy for the future, and guys for the future have good nerves," Gustafsson said. "You can tell that in his way outside the court and on the court. Give him one, two more years, then you won't be surprised that he will be in the finals of Wimbledon."

Henman's next opponent will be either No. 13 Todd Martin, the only seed left in the bottom half of the draw, or Thomas Johansson. Martin led Johansson 3-6, 6-3, 7-5 before the match was suspended because of darkness.

Like Henman, Jason Stoltenberg also made it to his first Grand Slam quarterfinal by defeating Jakob Hlasek 6-2, 7-6 (7-2), 6-2. Stoltenberg will play two-time finalist and No. 4 seed Goran Ivanisevic, who beat Patrick Rafter 7-6 (7-4), 4-6, 7-6 (9-7), 6-1.

Those who didn't act out their frustration on the court looked weary and bored in the players' lounge.

"It's very frustrating," said edge Neville Godwin, the No. 223-ranked qualifier who benefited from the freak injury to Boris Becker in the third round but never got on court in his scheduled match against unseeded Alexander Radulescu.

"I've been sitting in the locker room, waiting to go on, watching everybody go off," Godwin said. "I got here at 10:30 and had a hit this morning. I've been here too long."

Women's No. 4 Arantxa Sanchez Vicario overcame a slow start and sore right wrist to beat Sabine Appelmans 3-6, 6-2, 6-1 and advance to the quarters against unseeded Judith Wiesner, a 6-4, 6-4 victor over Amy Frazier.

No. 9 Mary Joe Fernandez celebrated her addition to the U.S. Olympic team by rallying from a break down in the third set to beat Ai Sugiyama 6-4, 1-6, 6-3.

Fernandez next plays Meredith McGrath, who reached her first Grand Slam quarters with a 6-4, 6-0 win over Monica Seles' second-round conqueror, Katarina Studenikova.

Darwin comeback too much for Cubs

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Danny Darwin, who nearly retired after last season, continued his remarkable comeback with seven innings of six-hit pitching to lead Pittsburgh over Chicago, 4-1, Monday.

Orlando Merced had two run-scoring singles and Jeff King went 4-for-4 with an RBI as the Pirates won at home for only the 16th time in 39 games. Their home record is the National League's worst.

Darwin (7-7), offered only a minor-league contract by Pittsburgh after going 3-10 with Toronto and Texas last season, gave up one run, struck out and walked one to win for the fifth time in his last six starts.

The Pirates jumped on Jaime Navarro (6-8) for a 3-0 lead in the first.

Reds 8, Cardinals 5 — Cincinnati scored six runs in the first inning off Alan Benes, and Barry Larkin and Joe Oliver each homered for Cincinnati.

Hal Morris and Jeff Branson added two RBI apiece as the Reds won for the seventh time in eight games. St. Louis had its eight-game home winning streak snapped.

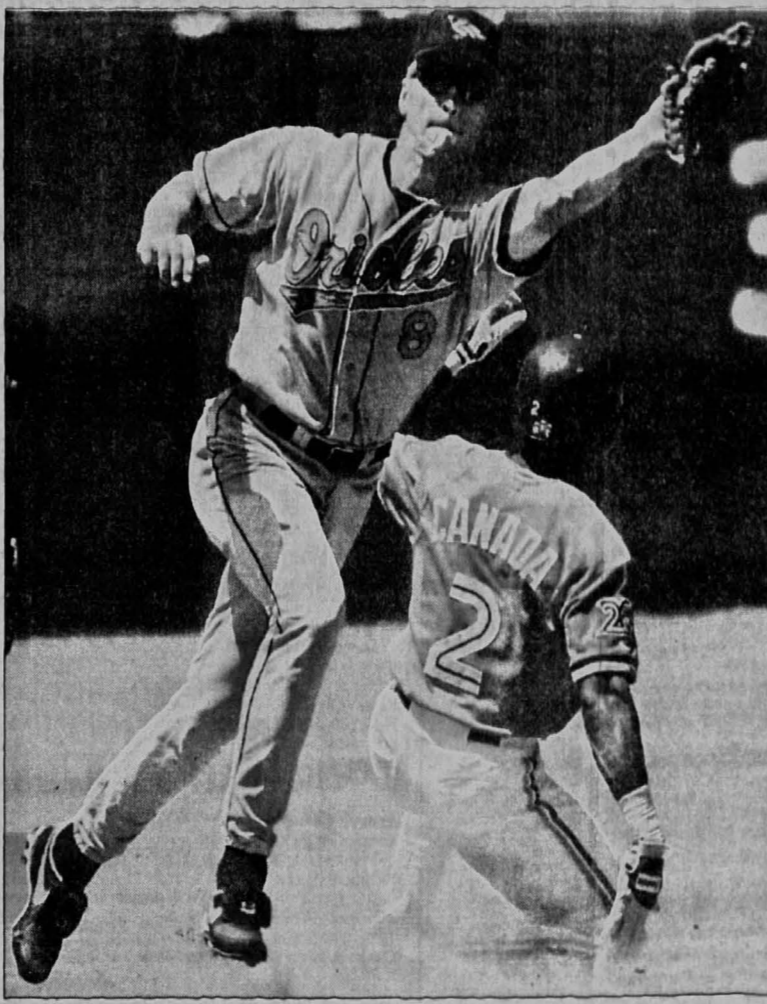

Morris was forced to leave the game in the fifth inning after he was struck on the right elbow by the barrel of Eric Davis' shattered bat while standing in the on-deck circle. He laid on the ground for several minutes before walking off the field unassisted.

Phillies 6, Mets 4

PHILADELPHIA — Kevin Stocker, recalled earlier in the day, drove in two runs and Mike Williams scattered eight hits in seven innings.

Stocker, who batted only .186 in 46 games with the Phillies before being sent down on June 3, doubled home two runs in the fifth inning as Philadelphia halted a six-game losing streak to New York.

Williams (2-6) gave up three runs, struck out three and walked three. Ken Ryan pitched the final two innings for his fourth save.

Associated Press

Astros 6, Marlins 2

HOUSTON — Mike Hampton pitched a five-hitter, and the Houston Astros got their third straight complete game for the first time in 10 years.

Hampton (6-4) outdueled National League ERA leader Kevin Brown, striking out seven with one walk, while retiring 12 of the last 14 batters. Hampton gave up a two-run homer to Gary Sheffield in the fourth before settling down for his second complete game this season.

Braves 7, Expos 2

MONTREAL — Steve Avery pitched seven strong innings for his first win in a month and also hit a two-run homer as the Atlanta Braves beat Montreal.

Jermaine Dye hit a two-run homer in the second and Marquis Grissom hit a solo shot in the seventh as Atlanta increased its lead over second-place Montreal in the NL East to four games.

Avery (7-7) allowed only five hits in winning for the first time in six starts since May 31.

Giants 9, Rockies 6

SAN FRANCISCO — Mark Carreon hit a two-run home run, and Barry Bonds homered and drove in three runs as San Francisco ended a 10-game losing streak.

The Giants avoided their worst losing streak since the 1944 New York team lost 13 straight. San Francisco also lost 10 straight games in 1985.

Trailing 6-5 in the sixth, the Giants rallied against Lance Painter (4-2). Stan Javier doubled, and Carreon followed with his ninth home run of the season, a drive into the left-field bleachers.

Twins 10, White Sox 7

CHICAGO — Rick Aguilera threw a six-hitter for seven innings and four Minnesota players drove in two runs each as the Twins held on for a victory.

Chuck Knoblauch had an RBI double and an RBI triple; Paul Molitor hit a pair of RBI singles;

Toronto's Otis Nixon steals second base as Baltimore shortstop Cal Ripken leaps for the errant throw Monday afternoon. The Jays were wearing uniforms with "Canada" on the back to celebrate Canada Day.

Matt Walbeck had a sacrifice fly and an run-scoring single; and Matt Lawton added a two-run single for the Twins.

Yankees 2, Red Sox 0

NEW YORK — Mike Aldrete's opposite-field homer started a two-run seventh inning that carried Jimmy Key and the New York Yankees over the Boston Red Sox.

Key (4-6) allowed only six hits in seven innings, walking three and striking out five for his third win in four decisions.

Roger Clemens (3-7) held the Yankees hitless until Ruben Sierra singled leading off the fifth.

Royals 4, Indians 2

CLEVELAND — Mike Macfarlane homered twice in a game for the second time in five days, and the Kansas City Royals handed Charles Nagy his first loss since April 27.

Macfarlane hit his eighth and ninth homers of the season, both solo shots, off Nagy (11-2). The Royals catcher has seven homers in 14 games.

Brewers 2, Tigers 0

DETROIT — Knuckleballer Steve Sparks and three relievers combined for Milwaukee's first shutout of the season, leading Detroit to seven hits.

Sparks scattered six hits with two strikeouts and no walks in seven innings for the Brewers, who evened their road record at 20-20.

The Tigers lost their fourth straight after winning five of six.

Orioles 7, Blue Jays 4

TORONTO — Brady Anderson hit his major league-leading 28th homer of the season and Roberto Alomar had two hits and scored two runs for Baltimore against Toronto.

Rocky Coppinger (3-0) allowed two runs on four hits in six-plus innings. He allowed solo homers to Sandy Martinez in the fifth and John Olerud in the seventh.

Top vote getter Griffey will miss All-Star Game again

Tom Withers
Associated Press

NEW YORK — For the second straight year, Ken Griffey Jr. was voted to start in the All-Star game. And for the second straight year, a hand injury will deny fans a chance to see him play.

The Seattle Mariners' center fielder was the top vote getter in the final fan balloting announced Monday for the July 9 All-Star game in Philadelphia.

Sidelined with a broken right hand, Griffey received 3,064,814 votes — more than 500,000 more than the next closest player, Baltimore shortstop Cal Ripken.

But after injuring himself while fouling off a pitch June 19, Griffey underwent surgery and is expected to miss at least a month. He had to sit out last year's All-Star game in Texas after fracturing his left wrist making a spectacular catch.

"I'm really disappointed," Griffey said before Monday night's game with Oakland. "Last year I didn't play. Now I'm going through it again."

Griffey disputes a report contending he asked permission to play a half inning as a way of thanking fans.

"You're watching too much TV," he said. "Because you're on the DL, you can't play in the All-Star game. If you looked at the rule book they give you every year, you might know that."

With Griffey out, it's up to AL manager Mike Hargrove of Cleveland to choose another starter. The likely pick is the fourth-place finisher, Baltimore's Brady Anderson, who leads the majors with 28 homers.

"I just hope I make it," Anderson said following Baltimore's 7-4 win at Toronto on Monday. "It would have been nice to be voted in, but I can't actually say I expected it. If I make the team and they choose to start me, that would be great."

Mike Piazza finished third to Griffey and first among NL players in the voting. Piazza, leading the league in hitting, was named on 2,272,115 ballots. The Los Angeles Dodgers catcher will be making his fourth All-Star appearance, and third as a starter.

Joining Griffey in the AL's starting outfield were Cleveland teammates Albert Belle and Kenny Lofton. Belle, the temperamental slugger, received 1,692,409 votes and Lofton had 1,337,262.

Hargrove and NL manager Bobby Cox of Atlanta are to announce their reserves and pitchers today.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Two Miami football players suspended indefinitely

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — Two University of Miami football players suspended for taking part in the assault of a track star were arrested Tuesday, police said Monday.

Linebackers James Burgess, 25, and Jeremy Taylor, 22, surrendered to police and were ordered by a judge to wear electronic bracelets until the trial so authorities can monitor their movements.

The two men were arrested on one count of burglary with battery, according to a police statement.

Burgess and Taylor teamed up with receiver Jammi German for the June 19 attack on track team captain Maxwell Voce, authorities have said.

Coach Butch Davis suspended German for the 1996 season, while Taylor and Burgess were suspended indefinitely.

Phoenix hires Calgary Flames assistant as head coach

PHOENIX (AP) — The Winnipeg Jets officially became the Phoenix Coyotes on Monday and finally selected Calgary Flames assistant Don Hay as head coach.

Hay, who had two years remaining on his three-year contract with Calgary, was considered a leading candidate for the Coyotes' job from the start.

However, it appeared he wouldn't get it after Phoenix balked at the Flames' compensation demands prior to the NHL entry draft June 22.

Calgary reportedly wanted to swap first-round draft choices with the Coyotes and also get Phoenix's second-round pick in next year's draft.

Phoenix offered a third-round pick either this year or next year.

Last week, the Flames finally agreed on a third-round pick in 1997 as compensation for losing the 42-year-old Hay.

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Los Angeles Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda, looking healthy and joking, was released from a hospital today after surgery for a clogged artery and treatment of an ulcer treatment.

Lasorda, 68, will continue his recuperation and not manage the team until "milestones" of recovery are achieved, said the Dodgers' team physician, Dr. Mickey Mellman, who gave no target date for Lasorda's return.

Cipollini wins tour stage, Zulle retains overall lead

WASQUEHAL, France (AP) — Italian Mario Cipollini won the 153.4-mile second stage of the Tour de France on Monday, 24 hours after judges bumped him off the podium.

Meanwhile, Switzerland's Alex Zulle retained the overall lead he earned in the opening prologue Saturday. Five-time Tour de France champion Miguel Indurain finished 49th Monday, in the same time as the winner.

PTL action: It's FAN-tastic

Chris James
The Daily Iowan

What could possibly make someone want to sit in a stuffy gym for three hours watching a sport that usually takes place in the dead of winter?

How about an opportunity to see Jess Settles, Andre Woolridge, Russ Millard, Guy Rucker and Acie Earl in action, free of charge.

Those five, along with a number of other local heroes, take the court three times a week in the Prime Time Basketball League, usually in front of a packed house at the City High gym.

"It's something different," Iowa City resident Tom Stenn said. "You work all day and when you come home it's either park yourself in front of the T.V., or do nothing. I'm a basketball fan, so I enjoy coming over here just for a change of pace."

Iowa City's Prime Time League is a way for college, high school and pro players to hone their skills during the off-season. But on Sunday, Wednesday and Friday nights, it's also a way for basketball junkies to get their fill.

"I love basketball," UI junior Todd James said. "It seems like I'm either playing it or watching it all the time. Plus it's cool to come over here and see former and current Hawkeyes play."

While seeing Millard or Earl throwing down a dunk or swatting away a shot is exciting, some fans also are out to see some of the younger talent.

Every Prime Time team has at least two current high school basketball players.

Coralville resident Elise Wortal said it's a good way to see what talent the local high schools have to offer.

"Some of the high school guys play harder than the veterans. A few of these kids play for local teams so it's kind of neat to see a preview of the top players that play in the Iowa City and Cedar Rapids area," Wortal said.

Stenn also pointed out that local Iowa City businesses probably enjoy the advertising.

"Every team is sponsored. The businesses get the benefit of having their logo on an athlete people can identify with. Plus it's a great way of advertising. So the league, in a way, benefits the community too," Stenn said.

Sometimes, though, the motive for watching basketball comes straight from the heart.

"I like to watch the dunks and the three-point shots." Eight-year-old Kevin Locken said. "My mom said maybe we'd see Jess Settles. My dad told me that Jess was gone but now he's back. I didn't know what that was all about but I'm glad Jess is back. He's my favorite player on Iowa."

NO HARM DONE

Settles should have no regrets

Last Tuesday the headline read, "I'm back." One week later, Iowa forward Jess Settles hasn't elaborated.

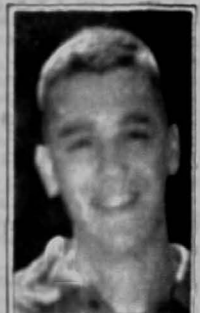

Since he announced his return to the Hawkeyes with that brief statement, Settles has remained silent and elusive. He isn't quite ready to talk to the media yet. I guess that's understandable.

It would make sense for Settles to be a little embarrassed after proclaiming he felt he would be drafted somewhere between 15 and 25, then reading in paper after paper that he wouldn't.

But the media isn't against Settles. Unfortunately, when Settles wasn't talking, reporters had to search for those who would talk. And, again unfortunately, those who were talking didn't have many glowing things to say.

I'm thrilled that Settles is coming back and I don't consider what he did to be a mistake in any way, shape or form. Why should he be embarrassed? A month ago he thought he could be drafted in the middle of the first round. When he discovered that wasn't the case, he made the wise decision and returned to school.

There is no way Settles would have discovered his pro value had he not decided to declare himself eligible for the draft. He went to the NBA pre-draft camp, worked out for teams and heard some feedback. Not good feedback, but no harm done. He's still in an Iowa uniform and he knows what he has to do to make his NBA dream

Rain can't stop Graf in straight-set victory

Steve Wilstein
Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Steffi Graf beat one Martina and took a swipe at another at Wimbledon on an irritating day of testy tempers, too much rain and too little tennis.

Graf turned in one of her best performances of the tournament Monday in a 6-1, 6-4 rout of Martina Hingis to reach the quarterfinals, then turned on the Swiss teen's namesake, Martina Navratilova, for implying that Graf exaggerated her injuries.

"She's lucky she doesn't have to live with them," Graf said icily. "I think she should know better than to say these things."

Relations between Graf and Navratilova have been frosty since Wimbledon last year, when they were scheduled to play doubles together before Graf backed out at the last minute. Navratilova was left without a partner and no chance to tie Billie Jean King's record of 20 overall Wimbledon titles. Navratilova came up one short when she won the mixed doubles with Jonathan Stark.

Their tiff continued recently when Graf won the French Open for her 19th Grand Slam singles title, surpassing Navratilova's total, and reportedly felt miffed by not receiving a congratulatory note from her.

While commenting for HBO last week, Navratilova said Graf's latest problem, a swollen tendon in her left kneecap, was "an excuse ahead of time just in case she needs it."

"If you read the newspapers, you'd think she belongs in the hospital," said Navratilova, who owns three more Wimbledon singles titles than Graf's six. "If you look at her today, she's running like a gazelle."

Graf, who has been wearing a brace in practice and a small white bandage on her knee in matches, said "I wish the things she says were true. I don't like to talk about injuries, or use it as an excuse."

Graf said she confronted Navratilova about the comment in

DIVAC AGREES TO DEAL

Lakers snag Bryant, make room for Shaq

Joe Macenka

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Vlade Divac has backed away from his retirement threats and consented to a trade that could give both the Charlotte Hornets and the Los Angeles Lakers the big man they covet.

Divac's agent said Monday that his client has agreed to a deal that would send him from the Lakers to the Hornets for the rights to first-round draft choice Kobe Bryant.

"Vlade has decided to go ahead and not stand in the way of a trade to Charlotte," Marc Fleisher said. "He's looking forward to moving on and playing for the Hornets."

The Hornets, one of the worst defensive and rebounding teams in the NBA, would get a mobile center solid in both areas during his seven seasons in the league.

The Lakers, in addition to getting a chance to develop the 17-year-old Bryant, would free some room under the salary cap to pursue Orlando free-agent center Shaquille O'Neal.

In the days immediately following Wednesday's draft, it appeared neither Charlotte nor Los Angeles would get what it wanted.

The Hornets used the 13th pick in the draft to select Bryant with the specific intent of trading his rights to the Lakers — who had the 24th selection — for Divac.

But Divac surprised the Hornets by saying he would retire before he would agree to a trade that moved him from Los Angeles.

Divac's wife, Ana, is an aspiring actress, and feels her best chance to succeed in the industry would be for her to stay close to Hollywood.

Fleisher said Divac's position on retirement appeared to soften after he spoke by telephone Saturday night with Bob Bass, the Hornets' vice president of basketball operations, and Dave Cowens, Charlotte's new coach.

The Hornets would not comment Monday on the deal, which cannot be finalized until July 9, when a moratorium on all negotiations and trades expires.
